annorum vetuſtiſſimis, aliiſque reverendæ antiquitatis & indubitatæ veritatis rebus maximo labore & fide oculata depromuntur, & ad perpetuam rei memoriam hoc ordine deſcribi curantur. Anno Incarnationis Dominicæ MDCXXXIIII." This noble MS. which ſir Kenelm cauſed to be collected at the expence of 1500*l.* out of public hiſtories, private memorials, and records in the Tower, relating to the Digby family in all its branches, as his ſon John informed Wood, "conſiſts of 589 vellum leaves; the firſt 165 ornamented with the coats of arms of the family and its allies, and of all the tombs of the Digbys then extant, illuminated in the richeſt and moſt exquiſite manner. The reſt of the book is compoſed of grants, wills, and variety of other pieces, ſerving to illuſtrate the hiſtory of the family; drawn from the moſt authentic records, as the title ſets forth." Pennant's Journey from Cheſter, p. 328.—No ſmall pains have been taken to obtain a ſight of this ſplendid pedigree, for the uſe both of the preſent work, and the Hiſtory of Dorſetſhire, where the ennobled branch of the Digbys makes ſo conſpicuous a figure. But all my efforts have been ineffectual; as applications to the preſent owner from friends of the higheſt reſpectability have been peremptorily refuſed. Numerous as the plates already are in theſe volumes, and conſiderable as has been the expence; I ſhould not have ſcrupled adding the monuments of the Digbys of Leiceſterſhire and Rutland to the embelliſhments of the pariſh of Tilton.

[1] The original has the ſeals of Dalyſon, Skeffington, Darby, Kirkby, and Northampton; and the probate bears date at Lambeth, 12 Feb. 1508-9.

[2] Vol. I. p. 23.

[3] See the inſcription in vol. II. p. 262.

Kenelm Digby, the next owner of Dryſtoke and Tilton (by ſome erroneouſly ſtyled a knight), was ſheriff of the county of Rutland for the years 1541, 1549, 1554, 1561, 1567, and 1585, and repreſentative thereof in parliament from 1547 to 1572. He married Anne, daughter to ſir Anthony Cope, of Hanwell, in the county of Oxford, knight, vice-chamberlain to queen Catharine, wife of Henry VIII; and deceaſing in 1590, was buried in the chancel of Dryſtoke, adjoining to the partition-wall of the chapel where his father lay [1].

Their iſſue were three ſons and one daughter: Everard; Anthony of Aſton, who died childleſs; John of Seaton, both in Rutlandſhire; and Anne, married in April, 1567, to ſir Edward Watſon, of Rockingham-caſtle; and ſhe deceaſing February 17, 1611, was mother of Lewis the firſt lord Rockingham.

Everard, the eldeſt ſon, being educated in St. John's College, Cambridge, took the degree of M. A. and was fellow of that houſe; a perſon of learning, and publiſhed ſeveral books on various ſubjects. He died at Dryſtoke in or about the year 1592; having iſſue, by Mary [2], daughter and coheir to Francis Nele, of Preſtwould, eſq. three ſons and two daughters; ſir Everard, his heir; George; John; Mary, married to ſir Robert Wright, otherwiſe Reeve, of Thwaite, in the aforeſaid county; and Elizabeth. George, the ſecond ſon, was ſeated at Sandon; and his only ſurviving child, Jane, was firſt married to Charles the fourth lord Gerard, of Gerard's Bromley, and had an only ſon Digby, the fifth lord; 2dly, to ſir Edward Hungerford; and died in November, 1603 [3].

Sir Everard Digby, the eldeſt ſon, born in 1581, was knighted by king James I, at Belvoir, April 23, 1603. He was one of the moſt beautiful men of his time, and, by the accompliſhments of his mind, reputed one of the fineſt gentlemen in England.

"To him Maria, daughter and ſole heireſs of William Mulſho [4], eſq. of Gothurſt, Bucks, reſigned herſelf and great fortune; but,

Eumenides tenuere faces de funere raptas:
Eumenides ſtravere torum.

She had not been married three years before her huſband was ſnatched from her by an ignominious and merited death, for his deep concern in the plot, which, thanks to the charity of the times, is execrated by each religion. It is very probable, that a mind ſo tinctured with bigotry as his was, ſoon devoted itſelf to the moſt deſperate reſolutions for the reſtoration of the antient church. He foreſaw the certain conſequences of ill ſucceſs, and, preparing againſt the event, took every method to preſerve his infant ſon from ſuffering from the fault of the father. Before he committed any acts of treaſon, he ſecured to his heirs his eſtates in ſuch a manner as to put it out of the power of the crown to profit by their confiſcation [5]."

"Before any treaſon by him committed," Mr. Burton obſerves, "he conveyed this manor to his ſon and heir in tail; concerning the wardſhip of which heir, a queſtion after came in 7 Jac. Whether it belonged to the king or no? The caſe is ſet down by my lord Coke, in this manner:

"Sir Everard Digby, ſeiſed of the manner of Dryſtoke in the county of Rutland, and of the manor of Tilton in the county of Leiceſter, held of the king by knight's ſervice, by act executed in his life-time, and before any treaſon by him committed, conveyed the ſaid manors to the uſe of himſelf for life, and after to the uſe of his ſon and heir apparent in tail, with divers remainders over to his other children. And after the ſaid ſir Everard Digby was attainted and executed for the ſaid Powder-treaſon, committed after the ſaid conveyance made, his eldeſt ſon then being within age. The queſtion was, whether the wardſhip of the body of the heir, or of the third part of the ſaid manors, ſhould be in the king, by force of the Statutes of 32 and 34 of Henry VIII. And it was reſolved, by the two chief juſtices, the chief baron, and the whole court of wards, that the king ſhould not have the wardſhip of the body, or firſt ſeiſin, but where there was an heir-general or ſpecial, which here was not, by reaſon of the attainder and corruption of the blood thereby: for the Statutes of 32 and 34 of Henry VIII. give wardſhip and firſt ſeiſin to the king where there is no deſcent; as, if the king's tenant conveys his land for advancement of his wife or preferment of his children, or payment of his debts, but doth not give wardſhip or primer ſeiſin where there is neither heir-general or ſpecial; becauſe the wardſhip or firſt ſeiſin ought to be of land of ſome anceſtor whoſe heir he is. And the words in the writ of Diem clauſit extremum, or Mandamus, as well before as after the ſaid Statutes, are, Et quis propinquior eſt; and alſo livery ought to be ſued in the name of the heir. But it was agreed, that (in ſome caſe) the king ſhould have wardſhip and firſt ſeiſin of the ſon and heir, although that the father were attainted of treaſon, and the blood corrupted thereby. As, if tenant in tail by knight's ſervice of the grant of the king be attainted of treaſon before the Statute of 26 Henry VIII. and die, his heir within age, in this caſe, though the blood be corrupt, yet for that by force of the Statute of Weſtminſter, 2. cap. 1. De donis conditionalibus, the land (notwithſtanding the attainder) doth deſcend to the heir, he ſhall be in ward to the king; for that in this caſe he is an eſpecial heir, that is proved by Holland earl of Kent's Caſe in 7 Henry IV. where the caſe was, that king Richard II. by his letters patents granted divers manors unto Thomas Holland earl of Kent, to him and the heirs of his body begotten. After, this Thomas Holland making an inſurrection againſt king Henry IV. was in the ſame ſlain without judgement. Edward his ſon and heir (within age, but after his deceaſe) was by parliament attainted of high treaſon; by which act all his lands in fee ſimple only, and no other, were enacted to be forfeit; by force whereof the king ſeized all the ſaid manors, and were in the king's hands during the nonage of the ſaid Edward the ſon. After the ſaid Edward, at his full age, ſued out of the Chancery a writ of Mandamus, by which the ſaid gift and tenure, and that he the ſaid Edward was heir by form of the ſaid gift, was then found; and thereupon the ſaid Edward came into the Chancery, and prayed to have liberty. And there it was reſolved by all the juſtices, Norton, Tremaine, Huls, Hankford, and Thirming, that in this caſe the ſon ſhould be in ward; and although that the king have made ſeizure as a forfeiture for treaſon: yet, when the king is in poſſeſſion, the law will adjudge him in by reaſon of the wardſhip; for becauſe that is his beſt right, for the law doth more reſpect a little eſtate (during the minority of the heir by right) than a great eſtate in fee ſimple by wrong [6]."

Being drawn by a falſe notion of religion, inſpired by his unhappy education under popiſh prieſts after his father's death, as Camden ſays, into the popiſh plot, was much pitied for that it was his ill fortune

[1] See the inſcription in vol. II. p. 262.

[2] Of whom, ſee p. 467.

[3] "This accompliſhed lady," ſays Dr. Plot, in his Natural Hiſtory of Staffordſhire, "by her moſt exquiſite ſagacity, and perſpicacious inſight into the moſt hidden receſſes of Nature, firſt diſcovered the reſtorative virtues of the well in Willoughbridge Park (where no leſs than threeſcore ſprings lie within the ſpace of ten yards ſquare), and, at her charitable expence, incloſed ſeveral of the ſprings with ſquared ſtone, to preſerve them pure and fit, both for bathing and drinking; and divers apartments were built for lodging the poorer ſort of diſeaſed impotent people; ſo that 'tis hard to determine whether the world ſtands more indebted to her ladyſhip's philoſophical or theological virtues; whether to her knowledge as firſt finder, or her piety as founder of thoſe ſanative wells."

[4] William Mulſho, ob. 20 Oct. 44 Eliz. ſeiſed of the manors and advowſons of Gothurſt and Stoke = Alice, ob. 20 June, Golding; Inq. 1 Nov. 19 Jac. Cole's Eſcheats, vol. V. (Harl. MSS. 760.) p. 427. 44 Eliz.

Mary, dau. and heir. æt. 39 ann. = Everard Digby, ſon and heir of Everard Digby, of Stokedry, ob. 6 Feb. 3 Jac.

Kenelm.

[5] Pennant, p. 327.

[6] Coke's Reports, Part VIII. fol. 165. b.

to ſuffer for it, being convicted the 27th of January, 1605-6, and executed the 30th at the Weſt end of St. Paul's church, æt. 24. A paper of his, written in the Tower, was printed at the end of the proceedings of the popiſh plot 1678. Wood's ſilly ſtory of his giving the executioner the lie after his heart was plucked out is well confuted in the Biographia Britannica [1].

Lord Clarendon ſays, "He was a perſon very eminent and notorious throughout the whole courſe of his life, from his cradle to his grave; of an antient family and noble extraction, inhabited a fair and plentiful fortune, notwithſtanding the attainder of his father. He was a man of a very extraordinary perſon and preſence, which drew the eyes of all men upon him, which were more fixed by a wonderful graceful behaviour, a flowing courteſy and civility, and ſuch a volubility of language, as ſurprized and delighted; and though in another man it might have appeared to have ſomewhat of affectation, it was marvellouſly graceful in him, and ſeemed natural to his ſize, the mould of his perſon, to the gravity of his voice and delivery. He had a fair reputation in arms, of which he gave an early teſtimony in his youth, in ſome encounters in Spain [2] and Italy, and afterwards in an action in the Mediterranean. In a word, he had all the advantages that Nature and Art and an excellent education could give him; which, with a great confidence and preſence of mind, buoyed him up againſt all thoſe prejudices and diſadvantages, which would have ſuppreſſed and ſunk any other man, but never clouded or eclipſed him, from appearing in the beſt places and the beſt company, and with the beſt eſtimation and ſatisfaction [3]."

He left two ſons, ſir Kenelm and John Digby, knights; the latter of whom very readily ſerved king Charles I. in whoſe army he was a colonel, and a major-general in the Weſtern parts of England, and was killed in his majeſty's ſervice. In the perſon of ſir Kenelm, the family emerged from its misfortunes, and was reſtored to its former honours, by the uncommon merits of the ſucceſſor. He was ſeated at Gothurſt, his mother's inheritance, where he was born June 11, 1603; and about 1618 (ſays Anthony Wood) was ſent to Glouceſter Hall, Oxford, after he had been trained up, under the direction of abp. Laud, then dean of Glouceſter, in the Proteſtant religion (which, in 1636, he left for that of Rome), and committed to the care of Mr. Thomas Allen, one of the moſt learned men of thoſe times, who, diſcerning the natural ſtrength of his faculties, directed him in the right method of applying his wonderful capacity, which he frequently compared to that of the celebrated wit of Italy, Picus de Mirandula, by ſaying, that "he was the Mirandula of his age." He continued there a gentleman commoner above two years; and then travelling for a time in France, Spain, and Italy, received the honour of knighthood at his return, Oct. 28, 1623, from the king at Hinchingbroke. In the beginning of king Charles's reign, he was made a gentleman of the bedchamber; was a commiſſioner of the navy; and ſome diſputes having happened with the Venetians, in the Mediterranean, by which the Engliſh trade ſuffered, as well as by the depredations of the Algerines, he was appointed, in 1628, commander of a ſmall ſquadron deſtined to the Levant (at which time he was ſtyled "à ſecretiori Conclavi ad Carolum I. et in rebus maritimis adminiſtrator præcipuus"), and acquired great honour by his gallant behaviour at Algier, in taking ſeveral armed veſſels, redeeming many Engliſh ſlaves, and, June 16, by bearing up ſo bravely, in the reſolute attack of the Venetian fleet, with a very inferior force, in the Bay of Scanderoon, whereby he brought the Venetians alſo to reaſon. When the civil wars broke out, he ſhewed himſelf active for the king; and in 1639, with the abbot Walter Montagu, was employed by the queen to prevail with the Roman Catholicks for a liberal contribution to raiſe forces againſt the Scots; for which, and other ſervices, he was impriſoned by the parliament, in Wincheſter houſe, London, until releaſed Auguſt 3, 1643, upon certain conditions, at the interceſſion of the queen-dowager of France, who wrote a letter with her own hand in his favour; whereupon he retired to that kingdom; but returning afterwards to England, in order to compound for his eſtate, he was (notwithſtanding his compoſition) voted by the parliament, to depart the Commonwealth, and not return without leave, under pain of death and confiſcation of his eſtate; and during his exile, being chancellor to Henrietta-Maria, the queen-mother of England, ſhe ſent him her envoy from France to pope Innocent X; after which he is ſaid to temporize with Cromwell, and promote his intereſts. This Magazine of all Arts, or (as Edward Leigh, in his Treatiſe of Religion and Learning, p. 180, calls him) "the Ornament of England," wrote ſeveral learned books [4]; was a great benefactor to the Bodleian library, by preſenting to it, in 1633, a large collection of MSS; recovered the reputation of his family, and rendered it famous through the Chriſtian world. He returned to England in 1661; was appointed one of the council on the firſt ſettlement of the Royal Society; and formed a kind of literary ſociety at his houſe in Covent Garden, where, four years after, he died of the ſtone, June 11, 1665, æt. 62; and was buried in a vault, built at his own charge, under the Eaſt end of the South aile of Chriſt church, within Newgate, London, with his wife Venetia, daughter and coheir to ſir Edward Stanley; to whoſe memory he had erected a ſtately altar-monument of black marble, with her buſt of copper, thus inſcribed:

> "Inſig. præclariſſ. dominæ D. Venetiæ Digby, > è familiâ Stanleyorum, co. Darbiæ, ex parte > patris; et Perciorum, co. Northumbriæ, > materno jure; aliiſque quamplurimis Chriſtian.
> orbis principibus oriundæ."

The year after his burial the monument was defaced, when the church itſelf was burnt in the great fire; and the following lines were compoſed by way of epitaph:

> "Under this tomb the matchleſs Digby lies,
> Digby the great, the valiant, and the wiſe;
> This age's wonder for his noble parts,
> Skill'd in ſix tongues, and learn'd in all the arts;
> Born on the day he died, th' eleventh of June,
> And that day bravely fought at Scanderoon;
> It's rare that one and the ſame day ſhould be
> His day of birth, of death, of victory. R. FERRAR."

Sir Kenelm had four ſons; ſir Kenelm, John, George, and Edward; and a daughter Margery, married to Edward Dudley, of Clopton, co. Northampton, eſq.

---

[1] Sir Everard Digby lent 1500*l.* to the Powder plot; and after the diſcovery, the conſpirators got down to Dunchurch in Warwickſhire, ſir Everard's ſeat. Oldmixon's Hiſtory of the Stuarts, p. 26.—Religion was the only motive of his engagement in the plot, as he acknowledged at his trial; to introduce which, he reſolved to hazard his life and eſtate; proteſting, that if he had thought there had been the leaſt ſin in the plot, he would not have been of it for all the world; and the reaſon why he kept it ſecret was, becauſe they who were beſt able to judge of the lawfulneſs of it had been acquainted with it, and given way unto it; and therefore, afterwards, he calls it the beſt cauſe.

[2] Amongſt the rare pamphlets in the Britiſh Muſeum (31. N° 9.) is one, intituled, "Sir Kenelme Digby's Honour maintained by a moſt courageous Combat, which he fought with the Lord Mount le Ros, who by baſe and ſlanderous words reviled our King; printed at London, for T. B. 1641."

[3] Clarendon, vol. I. p. 33.

[4] The principal of his many writings are thoſe relative to the philoſophy of bodies, which, for thoſe times, he very well underſtood; though his notions were in general new, and his proofs extraordinary. His pieces on this ſubject are intituled, "A Treatiſe of the Nature of Bodies, Paris, 1644," fol. Lond. 1658, 1665, and 1669, 4to; "A Treatiſe declaring the Operations and Nature of Man's Soul, out of which the Immortality of Reaſonable Souls is evinced, Paris, 1644," fol. Lond. 1645, 1657, 1669, 4to; "Inſtitutionum Peripateticarum, lib. V. Paris, 1651," fol. He vindicated his return to the religion of his father in ſome "Letters to Lord George Digby, London, 1651," 8vo; and "A Conference with a Lady about choice of Religion, Paris, 1638," Lond. 1651, 8vo. In his exile he wrote "Obſervations on ſir Thomas Browne's Religio Medici, Lond. 1643," 8vo; and "Obſervations on Spenſer's Fairy Queen, b. II. ch. ix. ſt. 22, Lond. 1644," 8vo. His "Treatiſe on the Cure of Gunſhot Wounds by the Powder of Sympathy, a Speech in French at Montpelier," was printed at London, 1558, 8vo, and with the "Treatiſe on Bodies 1669." His "Diſſertation on the Vegetation of Plants," 1661, 8vo, 1660, 4to.

The following lines on Venetia are by Lord Digby:

"Fair broken model of perfection, reſt;
Reſt here incloſed in a marble neſt;
And in thy beauty's ſweets embalm'd remain
Free from corruption, as it was from ſtain,
Till that laſt glorious marriage-day, inviting,
Which calls bleſt matters to their forms uniting,
Shall thence to Heaven on angels wings unfolded Return thy body, where it ſure was moulded,
And that metamorphoſe day to creatures, (when
By Nature coarſely kneaded, men
Shall be transform'd to perfect ſhape, unknown
I doubt our ſouls will ſcarce our bodies own)
Can nothing add to thine; it ſtill ſhall find
The ſame divineneſs that it left behind
When in thy ſleep it ſtole out of thy breaſt,
To ſee whether it or Paradiſe was beſt,
And ſtill doth doubt Heaven ſcarce a bliſs would be,
Were it not ſure even there to dwell in thee."

Kenelm, the elder ſon, a young gentleman of great hopes, appeared for the king, July 7, 1648, with the duke of Buckingham and others, under the earl of Holland, near Kingſton in Surrey; but, being attacked before they could well form, they were obliged to retreat; and being ſurprized at St. Neot's in Huntingdonſhire, by colonel Adrian Scrope's regiment of horſe, were, after a gallant defence, totally routed, and he was killed on the ſpot[1].

John Digby, eſq. his brother, ſucceeded at Gothurſt; and married, firſt, Catharine, eldeſt ſurviving daughter to Henry, earl of Arundel, Norfolk, and Surrey, ſiſter of Thomas Howard, reſtored to the dukedom of Norfolk; and 2dly, Margaret, fourth daughter to ſir Edward Longueville, of Wolverton, co. Bucks, by Margaret, daughter to ſir Thomas Temple, of Stow, baronets, and by her had two daughters.

The eldeſt, Margaret-Maria, married to ſir John Conway, of Boddruddan in Flintſhire; the younger, Charlotta, married to Richard Moſtyn, of Penbedw, in the ſame county, eſq.

"Theſe two gentlemen, in 1704, ſold the manor of Gothurſt, with Stoke Goldington, and the advowſon of both the churches, to George Wrighte, eſq. ſon of the lord keeper ſir Nathan Wrighte, in whoſe poſterity it ſtill remains. By the preceding owners, the reliques of ſir Kenelm's collection came into my country; but the leaving behind the two beautiful buſts of lady Venetia impreſſes no favourable idea of their taſte.

Some portraits, belonging to the former poſſeſſors, ſtill keep a place in the houſe. In the parlour is a full-length of old Mr. Digby, father to the unhappy ſir Everard. He is repreſented in a cloſe black dreſs, a laced turnover ruff, and with lace at his wriſt: his hair black, his beard round, with one hand on his ſword.

His lady, Mary, daughter of Francis Nele, eſq. of Preſtwould and Keythorpe in Leiceſterſhire, and widow to the Staffordſhire antiquary, Sampſon Erdeſwick[2]. Her dreſs is black, pinked with red; has a high fore-top adorned with jewels, a thin upright ruff, round kerchief, a farthingale, with gloves in her hand.

Their ſon, the victim to bigotry, is here at full-length, in a black mantle and veſt, the ſleeves ſlaſhed, and pinked with white, large turnover, and turn-ups at his wriſts: one hand holds his gloves; the other is gracefully folded in his mantle.

A remarkable portrait of a young man of large ſize, in a quilled ruff, white jacket, black cloak, purple hoſe, flowered belt, a bonnet with a white feather in it, flowered belt, with one hand on his ſword. Above him, in a tablet, is repreſented a lady, in a moſt ſupplicatory attitude, with a lute in one hand, and a purſe in the other, offering it to him. He ſtands by her, with averted look, one hand on his breaſt, and with an air which ſhews his rejection of her addreſſes, and horror at the infamy of mercenary love; and as if uttering to her the words inſcribed near to him, HIS MAJORA[3].

This is a portrait of the famous ſir Kenelm, in his youthful days; that prodigy of learning, credulity, valour, and romance, whoſe merits, although mixed with many foibles, entirely obliterated every attention to the memory of his father's infamy. The circumſtance of the lady painted along with him, is a ſtrong confirmation of the truth of the ſtory related by Lloyd, that an Italian prince, who was childleſs, earneſtly wiſhed that his princeſs might become a mother by ſir Kenelm, whom he eſteemed as a juſt model of perfection. It is probable that the princeſs would not have diſobeyed the commands of her lord: but whether the painting alludes to our knight's cruelty on this occaſion, or whether it might not deſcribe the adventure of the Spaniſh lady, recorded in an elegant old ballad[4], I will not pretend to determine.

In the long room above ſtairs is the picture of his beloved wife Venetia-Anaſtaſia Stanley, in a Roman habit, with curled locks. In one hand is a ſerpent; the other is on a pair of white doves. She is painted at Windſor in the ſame emblematic manner, but in a different dreſs, and with accompaniments explanatory of the emblems. The doves ſhew her innocency; the ſerpent, which ſhe handles with impunity, ſhews her triumph over the envenomed tongues of the times[5]. We know not the particulars of the ſtory. Lord Clarendon muſt allude to her exculpation of the charge, whatſoever it was, when he mentions her as "a lady of extraordinary beauty, of as extraordinary fame[6]." In the ſame picture is a genius about to place a wreath on her head. Beneath her is a Cupid, proſtrate: and behind him is Calumny, with two faces, flung down and bound; a beautiful compliment on her victory over Malevolence. Her hair in this picture i light, and differs in colour from that in the other. have heard, from a deſcendant of her's, that ſhe affected different hair-dreſſes, and different-coloured eye-brows, to ſee which beſt became her.

Sir Kenelm was ſo enamoured with her beauty, that he was ſaid to have attempted to exalt her charms, and preſerve her health, by a variety of whimſical experiments. Among others, that of feeding her with capons fed with the fleſh of vipers[7]; and that, to improve her complexion, he was perpetually inventing new coſmetics. Probably ſhe fell a victim to theſe arts; for ſhe was found dead in bed May 1, 1633, in the 33d year of her age[8].

Both the pictures are the performances of Vandyck. In this at Gothurſt are two of her ſons, of a boyiſh age, and in the dreſs of the times.

Here are, beſides, two moſt beautiful buſts of the ſame lady in braſs; whether by Le Soeur or Fanelli, I am not certain. One is in the dreſs of the times: an elegant laced handkerchief falls over her ſhoulders, leaving her neck bare. Her hair is curled, braided, twiſted, and formed on the hind part of her head into a circle; beneath which fall elegant locks[1]. On this buſt is inſcribed,

---

[1] Edmondſon confounds him, as to his death, with his uncle John.

[2] Mr. Erdeſwick was her ſecond huſband; ſhe had afterwards a third, Thomas Digby. See p. 473.

[3] "This portrait is inſcribed on the back John Digby; but, from the romantic circumſtance attending it, and the likeneſs to other pictures of ſir Kenelm, I cannot help ſuppoſing it to be his."

[4] Antient Songs and Ballads, vol. II. p. 231.

[5] Mr. Skinner has a ſmall portrait of her, in which ſhe is repreſented as treading on Envy and Malice; and is unhurt by a ſerpent that twines round her arm. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. II. 2d edit. p. 102.

[6] Clarendon, vol. I. p. 34.

[7] "I am told, that the great ſnail or Pomatia (Brit. Zool. vol. IV. N° 128.) is found in the neighbouring woods, which is its moſt Southern reſidence in this iſland. It is of exotic origin. Tradition ſays, it was introduced by ſir Kenelm, as a medicine for the uſe of his lady."

[8] An engraving of her monument, communicated by Mr. Pennant from his neighbour's famous Pedigree of the Digbys, may be ſeen in the Antiquarian Repertory, vol. II. p. 195. The epitaph was in theſe words:

"Mem. Sacrum.
Venetiæ
Edwardi Stanley equitis honoratiſſ. Ord.
Balnei (filii Thomæ, Edwardi comitis Derbiæ filii) filiæ ac cohæredi, ex Luciâ Thomæ comitis Northumbriæ filiâ et cohærede:
poſuit
Kenelmus Digby eques auratus, cui quatuor peperit filios:
Kenelmum nat. VI Octobr. MDCXXV.
Joannem nat. XXIX Decemb. MDCXXVII.
Everardum (in cunis mortuum) nat. XII Jan. MDCXXIX.
Georgium nat. XVII Jan. MDCXXXII.
Nata eſt Decemb. XIX. MDC. Denata Maii I. MDCXXXIII.
Quin lex eadem monet omnes
Gemitum dare ſorte ſub unâ
Cognataque funera nobis Aliena in morte dolere."

"Uxorem vivam amare voluptas; defunctam, religio."

The other is à l'antique. The head is dreſſed in the ſame manner, only bound in a fillet: the drapery covers her breaſt; but ſo artificially, as not to deſtroy the elegancy of the form.

I know of no perſons who are painted in greater variety of forms and places, than this illuſtrious pair: poſſibly becauſe they were the fineſt ſubjects of the times. Mr. Walpole is in poſſeſſion of ſeveral moſt exquiſite miniatures of the lady, by Oliver, bought from the heirs of Boddrudan and Pembedw, at a very high price. The moſt valuable is one in a gold caſe, where ſhe is painted in company with her huſband. There is another, ſaid to be painted after ſhe was dead; and four others, in water-colours. The ſame gentleman is in poſſeſſion of a beautiful miniature of her mother, lady Lucy Percy, purchaſed at the ſame time. She is dreſſed like a citizen's wife, and with dark hair[2]."

In 1624, a recovery of the manor of Tilton was ſuffered by ſir Kenelm Digby, knt. to the uſe of himſelf and his heirs for ever; and, Dec. 6, 1639, the ſaid ſir Kenelm, in conſideration of £10,000, granted, bargained, and ſold to Daniel, Eliab, Michael, and Matthew Harvey, of London, merchants, and their heirs, the ſaid manor, inter alia, and levied a fine to their uſe.

April 29, 1679, by indentures of leaſe and releaſe between Edward Harvey, of Combe Neville, in the county of Surrey, eſq. ſon and heir of ſir Daniel Harvey, knt. deceaſed, ſir Eliab Harvey, knt. Elizabeth Harvey eldeſt daughter of ſir Eliab, and others, the ſaid Edward Harvey, in conſideration of a marriage to be had between ſaid Edward and Elizabeth, granted and releaſed the ſaid manor to truſtees, to the intent that one or more common recoveries might be had thereof to the uſe of the ſaid Edward for life, and his firſt and other ſons in ſtrict ſettlement, with divers remainders over, with remainder to the right heirs of ſaid Edward Harvey.

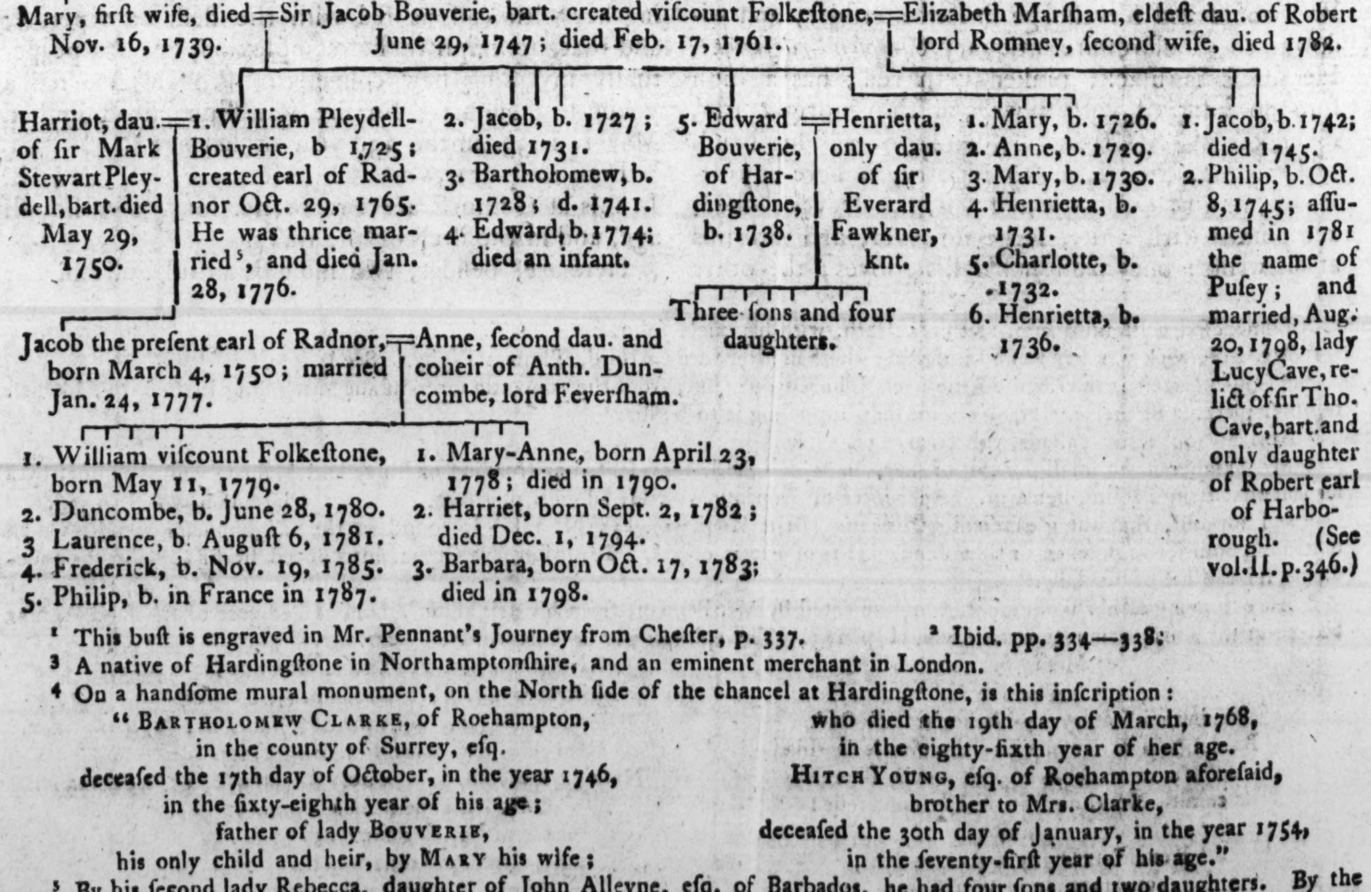
In 1715, by indentures between the ſaid Edward Harvey, and divers other perſons, in conſideration of a marriage to be had between Michael Harvey, only ſon and heir apparent of the ſaid Edward Harvey, with Rebecca, daughter of ſir John Wolſtenbolme, bart. and of her marriage portion, the ſaid Edward and Michael granted and releaſed, inter alia, the ſaid manor to truſtees, in truſt for the ſaid Michael for life; remainder to ſaid Rebecca, remainder to firſt and other ſons, with divers remainders over, remainder to ſaid Michael, his heirs and aſſigns.

In 1738, the ſaid Michael Harvey ſuffered a recovery of his eſtate tail in this manor.

In 1742, the ſaid Michael having no iſſue by hi wife Rebecca, who was ſtill living, and of the age of 55 years, having contracted for the ſale of this manor with Bartholomew Clarke[3], of Roehampton, co. Surrey, eſq. for £28,800. for the ſatisfaction of the ſaid Bartholomew Clarke, "who was unwilling to proceed in and complete the ſaid purchaſe from the apprehenſion of the poſſibility of there being iſſue male between the ſaid Michael Harvey and Rebecca his wife," procured an act "for veſting the ſettled eſtate of Michael Harvey eſq. in the county of Leiceſter, in truſtees to be ſold, and for applying the money ariſing by ſuch ſale for diſcharging the incumbrances affecting his eſtate in the county of Surrey, and for ſettling that eſtate in lieu of the Leiceſterſhire eſtate."

In purſuance of this act, the ſaid manor, with almoſt the whole of the lands therein, was ſhortly after conveyed to Mr. Clarke; whoſe widow died poſſeſſed of them in 1768; when they paſſed to William earl of Radnor (eldeſt ſon of Jacob viſcount Folkeſtone, by Mary daughter and ſole heir of the ſaid Mr. Clarke), whoſe ſon Jacob earl of Radnor is the preſent owner.

Pedigree of CLARKE, of TILTON.



Bartholomew Clarke, of Hardingſtone, co Northampton, died 1667.= . . . . .

John Clarke, of Hardingſtone.=Elizabeth, dau. of . . . . Johnſon, of Grendon, co. Northampton.

Dorothy.=John Wale, of Leiceſterſhire.

1. John Clarke, died ſ. p.=Roſe, dau. of Richard Newcome.

Elizabeth, wife of John Murray, of Northampton.

2. Joſeph Clarke, died ſ. p. m.=Mary, dau. of John Eyle.

3. Bartholomew Clarke, of London, merchant, purchaſed the manor of Tilton on the Hill, died Oct. 17, 1746, æt. 68[4].=Mary, ſiſter and ſole heir of Hitch Young, of Roehampton, Surrey, died March 1768, æt. 86.

4. Benjamin Clarke, of Hardingſtone.=Suſanna, dau. of John Eyle.

Mary, youngeſt daughter.=John Heycock, of Eaſt Norton. [See under Eaſt Norton.]

Elizabeth, wife of James Foſbury.

Anne, wife of the Rev. Cha. Kilpin.

Alice, Rebecca, } died inn.

Mary, firſt wife, died Nov. 16, 1739.=Sir Jacob Bouverie, bart. created viſcount Folkeſtone, June 29, 1747; died Feb. 17, 1761.=Elizabeth Marſham, eldeſt dau. of Robert lord Romney, ſecond wife, died 1782.

Harriot, dau. of ſir Mark Stewart Pleydell, bart. died May 29, 1750.=1. William Pleydell-Bouverie, b 1725; created earl of Radnor Oct. 29, 1765. He was thrice married[5], and died Jan. 28, 1776.

2. Jacob, b. 1727; died 1731.
3. Bartholomew, b. 1728; d. 1741.
4. Edward, b. 1774; died an infant.

5. Edward Bouverie, of Hardingſtone, b. 1738.=Henrietta, only dau. of ſir Everard Fawkner, knt.

Three ſons and four daughters.

1. Mary, b. 1726.
2. Anne, b. 1729.
3. Mary, b. 1730.
4. Henrietta, b. 1731.
5. Charlotte, b. 1732.
6. Henrietta, b. 1736.

1. Jacob, b. 1742; died 1745.
2. Philip, b. Oct. 8, 1745; aſſumed in 1781 the name of Puſey; and married, Aug. 20, 1798, lady Lucy Cave, relict of ſir Tho. Cave, bart. and only daughter of Robert earl of Harborough. (See vol. II. p. 346.)

Jacob the preſent earl of Radnor, born March 4, 1750; married Jan. 24, 1777.=Anne, ſecond dau. and coheir of Anth. Duncombe, lord Feverſham.

1. William viſcount Folkeſtone, born May 11, 1779.
2. Duncombe, b. June 28, 1780.
3. Laurence, b. Auguſt 6, 1781.
4. Frederick, b. Nov. 19, 1785.
5. Philip, b. in France in 1787.

1. Mary-Anne, born April 23, 1778; died in 1790.
2. Harriet, born Sept. 2, 1782; died Dec. 1, 1794.
3. Barbara, born Oct. 17, 1783; died in 1798.

---

[1] This buſt is engraved in Mr. Pennant's Journey from Cheſter, p. 337.

[2] Ibid. pp. 334—338.

[3] A native of Hardingſtone in Northamptonſhire, and an eminent merchant in London.

[4] On a handſome mural monument, on the North ſide of the chancel at Hardingſtone, is this inſcription:

"BARTHOLOMEW CLARKE, of Roehampton, in the county of Surrey, eſq.
deceaſed the 17th day of October, in the year 1746, in the ſixty-eighth year of his age;
father of lady BOUVERIE,
his only child and heir, by MARY his wife;
who died the 19th day of March, 1768,
in the eighty-ſixth year of her age.
HITCH YOUNG, eſq. of Roehampton aforeſaid, brother to Mrs. Clarke,
deceaſed the 30th day of January, in the year 1754, in the ſeventy-firſt year of his age."

[5] By his ſecond lady Rebecca, daughter of John Alleyne, eſq. of Barbados, he had four ſons and two daughters. By the third lady, Anne, relict of Anthony Duncombe lord Feverſham (ſee before, under Old Dalby, p. 255.) he had two daughters.

The lordſhip of Tilton is old incloſure, ſuppoſed to have been incloſed about 200 years; a great part of it is very rich grazing land both for ſheep and oxen, eſpecially on the Weſt and South parts; and on the Eaſt, about Houbank Hill, the land is indifferent, and very cold; inſomuch that I am aſſured, by a reſpectable grazier of the place, that ſnows frequently lie longer upon this land than in the coldeſt North parts of Yorkſhire.

In the town-ſtreet is a fine ſpring, which is the head of the brook which paſſes between Lodington and Eaſt Norton; and, after paſſing by Allexton, divides the counties of Leiceſter and Rutland from that place to Caldecot; a little below which it empties itſelf into the river Welland, near Rockingham.

"Near unto this town, and almoſt oppoſite to Burrow, about two miles and a half diſtant thence, ſtandeth a very high ſteep hill, called by the country people (as it ſhould ſeem by the near ſide) Robin a Tiptoe; upon the very top whereof hath been ſome old Roman fortifications, as well may be perceived by the deep trenches and ramparts very eminent upon the South and Weſt ſides, the North and Eaſt ſides being more level, being naturally well fortified of all parts by the almoſt precipitate ſteepneſs of the hill, which no doubt was a member belonging to Vernometum, or Burrow[1]; of the right ſtation of which I was truly aſcertained by him that viewed it, my learned friend, and true lover of antiquities, Mr. William Beverege[2], bachelor of divinity, and late paſtor of the church of Barrow upon Sore; from whom I muſt thankfully acknowledge to have received much light and ſatisfaction by his many and judicious notes to me imparted[3]."

Mr. Tailby, who examined this place in 1799, ſays, "Houback or Houbank Hill, q. d. Highback or Highbank Hill, alſo called Robin a Tiptoes, Tilton Hill, Burrow Hill, and even by the more noble title of Erd-burrow, is ſeated near the South-eaſt extremity of the lordſhip of Tilton, about a mile South of Whadborough. It is a large eminence, and, in ſeveral points of view, a long way viſible (ſome ſay it may be ſeen on the Lincolnſhire coaſt). It has a ſteepiſh aſcent on all ſides for a quarter of a mile or more. On the top is a level ſurface, encompaſſed (if I remember right) with a ſingle ditch and low embankment, ſuppoſed to have been a work of the Romans; but, by its nearneſs to Sauvey Caſtle, I ſhould conjecture it was connected with that fortreſs. Perhaps both conjectures may be true. On the very ſummit of the hill long ago were planted three trees (aſh I believe) which towered high, and threw their branches far and wide. Two of them are now no more, and the other is faſt going to decay. Theſe trees might be ſeen at a great diſtance, and were diſtinguiſhed miles round by the name of Tilton Three Trees."

The late earl of Radnor took conſiderable pains to have their places ſupplied with young trees; which have been fenced and taken care of, ſo that probably this place will continue a land-mark for many years to come.

The following information reſpecting the huſbandry of theſe parts was communicated to Mr. Young by Mr. Ayre, a conſiderable gentleman grazier:

"In this neighbourhood farms riſe from £40. to £500. a year: but the whole country, on a medium, not more than £100. a year. The ſoil is various, chiefly rich clay; ſome red loams, and loamy gravels. The incloſures let at 14*s.* an acre; old ones at 16*s.* The huſbandry of the open fields (of which there are but few) is much the ſame as that already deſcribed at Quenby Hall. When they break up paſture-land, it is in the paring and burning way, which coſts about 24*s.* an acre; they ſow turnips on it, of which they get great crops; and then oats and barley, all of which are exceedingly good. The application of their graſs is principally to grazing; their cloſes riſe from 30 to 60 acres. They turn their ſtock in, in April or May; and ſeldom change it to any other. The only breed of cattle approved is the long-horned, which they find from long experience will fat better, are hardier, and more profitable: the difference in the hide alone of a long or ſhort-horned beaſt is 15*s.* and in winter they can keep 40 of the former to 30 of the latter. The average quantity of milk given by their cows, three gallons a day; but there are few dairies. The total product £5. a head: the winter food, hay alone. Their ſwine fat on an average to 16 ſcore. The flocks of ſheep are various; ſome perſons have above 1000. The average fleece 8 lb. Mr. Ayre, as well as his father and grandfather, all very attentive graziers, have ever obſerved, that the rot of ſheep has been owing to land uſually wet from ſprings or otherwiſe. In the ſtocking of farms, they reckon that £1000. is neceſſary to hire a farm of £300. a year; but in dear times it will take £1200." —Mr. Young adds, "I ſhall here obſerve upon the Leiceſterſhire grazing in general, that leſs is made of their rich paſtures than might be, on various accounts. Firſt, from the manner in which they lay; which is the high ridge and furrow way; the latter are generally waſte ground, unleſs drained, which is not very commonly done. Mr. Ayre, however, is very attentive to this part of huſbandry, for he drains well, and eſpecially ſome boggy pieces, which uſed to be of little value, but are now quite reclaimed, and more uſeful in a dry ſeaſon than any of his lands. Secondly, the innumerable ant-hills that occupy a very great proportion of the ſurface. Thirdly, the ſuffering weeds to grow in ſuch abundance, thiſtles, nettles, &c. Mr. Ayre, in theſe particulars alſo, is much more attentive than common among them; and has found from experience, that cutting the thiſtle into the ground, with what is called a ſpud, effectually kills them, as appears very clearly in ſeveral of his fields. Theſe circumſtances lower the value of grazing lands much; if all waſte ſpots, and all the growth of ſuch rubbiſh, could be ſeen together in one part of each field, I ſhould apprehend, the farmers would be frightened at the idea of paying rent for ſuch crops. But there is another circumſtance of much importance, and which operates ſtrongly throughout all this country. It is the want of ſome arable land to each farm, and of knowing what to do with it if they had it. The landlords in general will not allow an inch to be ploughed; but ſuch a reſtriction is abſurd, and works againſt their own profit as well as the tenants. We have found, that theſe graziers are all forced to ſell their beaſts at Michaelmas, the cheapeſt time of the year, whether they are fat or not, for want of winter-keeping; and are forced to buy turnips for their ſheep near a hundred miles off. They buy-in their cattle in February and March, and are obliged to fodder them at a great expence with hay till the graſs is ready. Theſe circumſtances ſpeak for themſelves too ſtrongly for the caſe to be doubted of a moment. They certainly ought to be allowed to plough a ſmall proportion of their farms. "But then," ſay the landlords, "begins our danger—we ſhall have our graſs converted to arable, and the heart ploughed out—whereas they cannot damage graſs." There can be no object in letting a farm but permanent profit: this is their motive for keeping all in graſs; but the tenants would undoubtedly give more rent, were they allowed to plough a part, than ever they would for all in graſs. Reſpecting the huſbandry into which they throw the land, I entirely agree with the landlords, that the eſtate would ſuffer if they were left to themſelves. They would ſoon ſee crops of turnips on clays, which is actually the caſe about Quenby; but there cannot be more pernicious management. As arable lands in this country ſhould be abſolutely more ſubſervient to the grazing buſineſs— I ſhould adviſe the landlords to allow of no more land being broken up than was neceſſary to turn that to the moſt profit; which would be of courſe in the raiſing winter-food for their cattle; but, as the culture of turnips is quite unadviſeable on this ſoil, the tenants muſt be confined to cabbages. The want of winter-food is ſo great here, that I am fully of opinion they would cultivate this plant were they allowed. However, if they refuſed it, they ſhould by all means be left in their preſent ſituation—or rather with as great a riſe of rent as any would give for leave to plough for turnips or ſtraw alone. For ſuch blind obſtinacy cannot be too ſeverely puniſhed. The general practice of breaking-up rich graſs-land, is the ſeeing too often the arable land ſo gained kept in tillage till it is quite out of heart, and then perhaps laid down again, as it is called, with clover and ray-graſs: the conſequence of which is a crop of trumpery of all ſorts. Tenants ought never to be allowed to break up graſs, but under minute reſtrictions; the propriety of the meaſure is then indubitable in numerous inſtances. In the method I have juſt ſtated, the new lays would maintain much more and larger ſtock than the old graſs: the ſweet and fattening nature of the white clover is well known in this country; there is no grazier here that would not truſt to it for fattening a beaſt ſooner than an old lay. For the richneſs of this ſoil brings it forward in ſuch a luxuriance of growth, that it yields a noble bite for the largeſt of cattle. Upon the whole, I cannot but recommend to the landlords of this country to allow their tenants of graſs-farms the liberty of ploughing a ſmall proportion of their paſtures for the purpoſe of raiſing a ſupply of winter-food for their ſtock: the profit of their buſineſs will thereby be much greater; and the tillage under proper management will be the means of bringing the whole country into a much ſuperior grazing one to what it is at preſent, not only in utility, but alſo beauty [1]."

---

[1] See vol. II. p. 525.

[2] His name I find ſo written in Florentius Vigornienſis, fol. 403; who there ſpeaketh of an iſle (ſo called) lying in the middle of Severn, not far from Worceſter.

[3] Burton, MS.

In a wood on this lordſhip, belonging to lord Radnor, is an oak of as great ſize, and of as beautiful form, as probably can be found within the county.

In June 1771, the Rev. Edward Brombead, rector of Reepham, married Catharine, only daughter and heireſs of Mr. Ayre of Tilton and Gaddeſby.

In 1719, three freeholders polled from Tilton; Moſes Alſop for a freehold at Smeeton, John Ball for one at Burton, and Nicholas Heycock for one at Froleſworth. The ſame three names occur in 1722; but in 1775 no name appears.

	£.	s.	d.	Halſted.			Whadborough.
Money raiſed for the poor of Tilton within the year ending at Eaſter 1776,	31	10	0	£23	6	1	£1	11	4
Expended in county rates, &c.	3	12	0	3	12	0	0	5	4
———— on the poor,	28	10	0	21	14	1	1	6	0
Rent of workhouſe and habitation,	5	8	3	1	0	0	0	0	0
Expended in litigations,	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Money raiſed for 1783,	62	10	8	40	12	1	1	6	0
———— 1784,	42	18	0	57	15	6	1	6	0
———— 1785,	19	11	1	45	11	5	1	6	0
Medium of theſe three years,	41	13	3	47	19	0	1	6	0
———— of county expences,	6	18	0	6	19	3	1	3	0
———— of expences not relating to the poor; repairs of churches, roads, &c.	2	12	6	0	6	0	0	0	0
———— of nett annual expences,	32	2	9	40	13	9	0	3	0
———— of attending on magiſtrates,	0	2	2	2	3	2	0	0	0
———— of entertainments at meetings,	0	9	0	0	7	6	0	0	0
———— of law expences,	0	3	10	1	17	9	0	0	0
———— of ſetting the poor to work,	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0

The return made to the houſe of commons in 1786, in anſwer to an enquiry reſpecting the charitable donations in this pariſh, may be ſeen in vol. I. p. 55, 56; and the return from Halſted, in p. 46.

The CHURCH,

dedicated to St. Peter, is a coſtly and elegant ſtructure, and conſiſts of an embattled tower (in which are four bells); a handſome ſpire, with eight open windows; over each of which is a ſmall but neat ſtone-croſs; a chancel, nave, North and South aile, both ſeparated by five handſome arches, over each of which is a large and elegant clereſtory window. South porch, North porch, and door-way into the North aile, and South-door into the chancel, which is ſeparated from the nave by a ſcreen of wood.

Over the ſcreen is a fine painting of the Decalogue, in gold letters upon a black ground, upon two tables, on each ſide of which are well-painted four Corinthian pillars, with curious feathered capitals. Theſe pillars, being well ſhaded, have a very natural and deceptive appearance. On the North ſide the pillars ſtands Moſes with the Tables in his hands; and on the South is Aaron in his prieſtly veſtments, with the cenſer in his left, and the budded rod in his right hand; above the Commandments are the Royal Arms; the whole piece is painted brown, and extremely well executed for a country church, and performance, it being the work of a farmer in the neighbourhood.

In the chancel are three ſtone ſeats; Plate LXVII. fig. 3; a piſcina, fig. 4; and a locker.

Near the Eaſt end of the South aile, behind the tomb of Everard Digby, is an arch in the wall; and at the foot of the tomb a ſtone ſeat, with a pointed arch; adjoining which, near the Eaſt end of the aile, is a curious double piſcina; or rather a piſcina and water-ſtoup, as the Weſt part has no baſon, the Eaſt part an eſcalloped one.

A modern deal gallery for the choir at the Weſt end of the nave, blocks up in part a pointed arch between the nave and tower.

In this church is alſo an old ſquare font, on round cluſtered pillars, fig. 5; and the arms of Digby remain carved in wood on the back part of an old ſeat.

The priory of Laund had the church of Tilton, with its chapels, and ten yard-lands, and the meadows called Hereſmore, of the gift of Everard and Waleran, which were confirmed by king Henry II. [2]

In the Matriculus of 1220, Tilton is deſcribed to be under the patronage of the prior of Laund, who held it to his own uſe; and had the chapels of Whatberge and Merdefelde, which were to be ſerved three times in a week from the mother church. Henry was then the vicar [3].

In 1344, the procurations for Tilton, Whatbergh, and Mardefeld, were 7*s.* 6½*d.*; the rectory was taxed at 32 marks, and paid 5*s.* for Peter-pence.

In 1534-5, the procurations and ſynodals were 3*s.* the value of the rectory £12.; and a penſion of 13*s.* 4*d.* was paid to the abbot of Ouſton.

In 1650, Tilton was returned as an impropriation, the rectory worth 100*l.* the vicarage worth 40*l.*; and the incumbent as "no preacher, and a pluralitan."

In 1641, the patrons were the heirs of Mr. Auguſtin Nicolls for two turns; and Mr. Dalſton for the third.

This patronage was afterwards alternately in the Noels and another family.

"Feb. 10, 1645-6. Referred Thomas Silverwood, miniſter to the aſſembly, to the church of Tilton.

"April 9, 1647. Whereas the vicarage of the pariſh church of Tilton, in the county of Leiceſter, is and ſtandeth ſequeſtered, by the Committee of Parliament for the ſaid county, from Dr. Manwaringe, for his delinquency; it is ordered, that the ſaid vicarage ſhall ſtand ſequeſtered from henceforth to the uſe of Thomas Silverwood, a godly and orthodox divine, and appointed to officiate the ſaid cure by the ſaid

---

[1] Young's Eaſtern Tour.

[2] Cart. 4 Edw. III. n. 3. per Inſpeximus.

[3] See the Introductory Volume, p. lx.

Committee

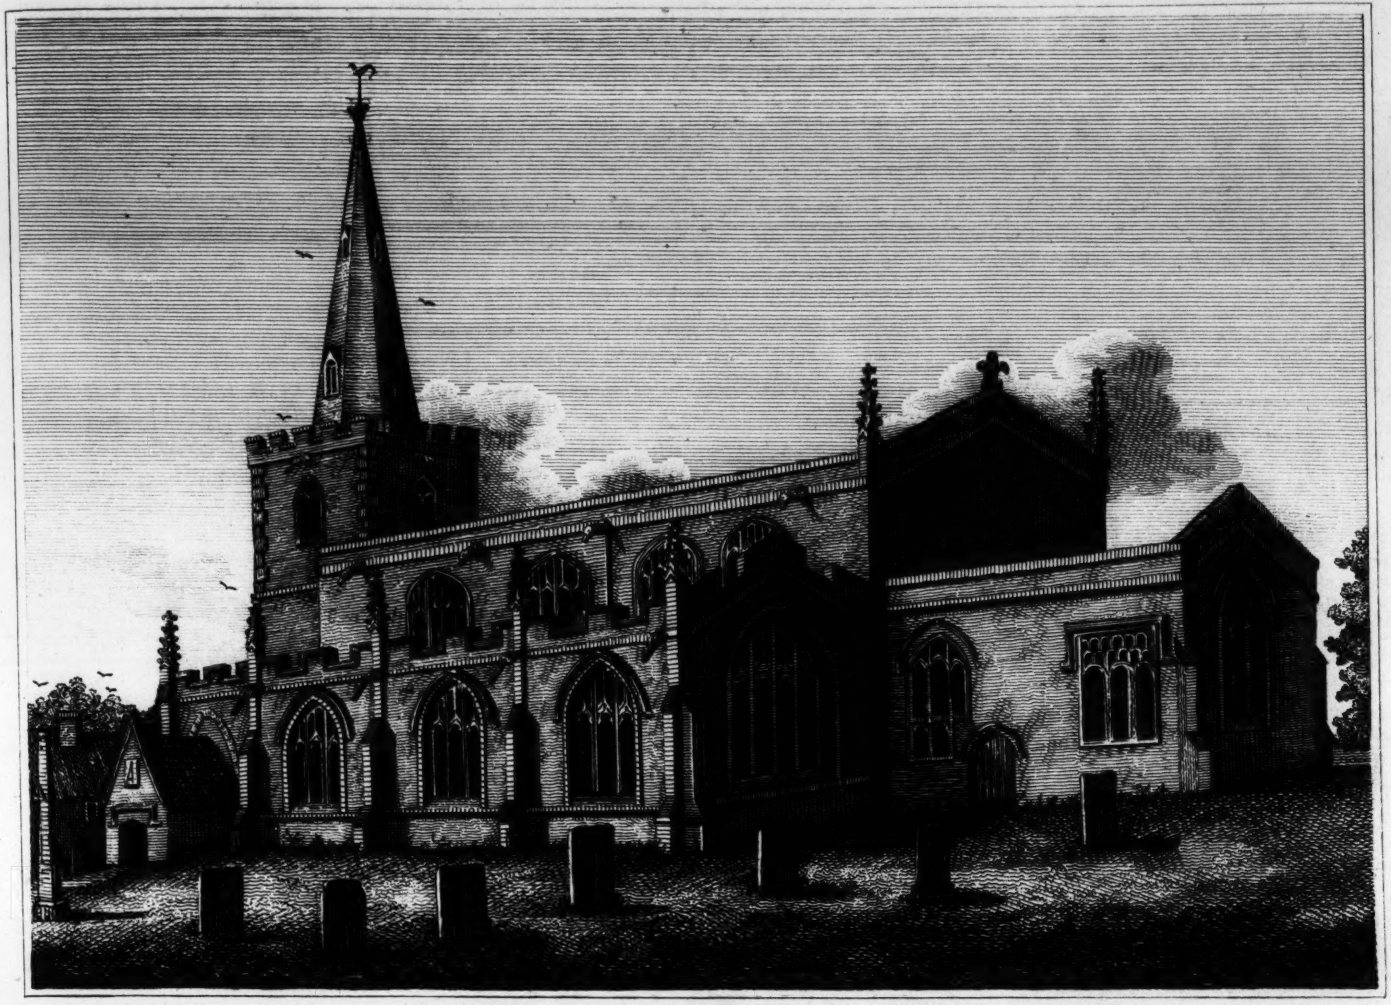

Fig. 6.

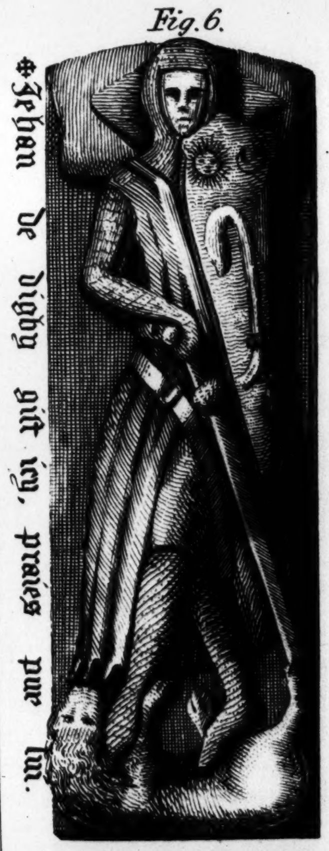

✠ Jehan de Digby gist icy, praies pur lui.

11

Fig. 10.

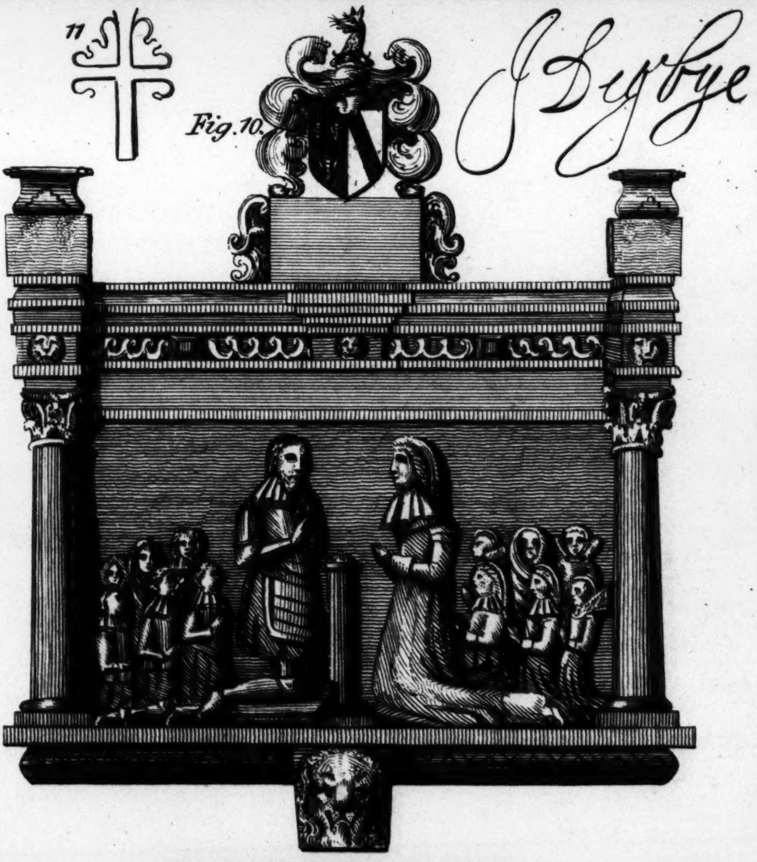

Fig. 7.

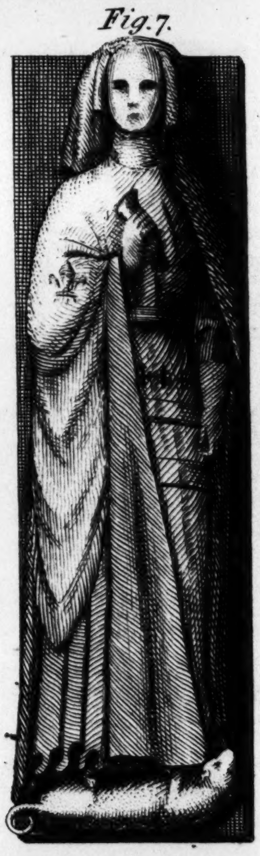

Fig. 1

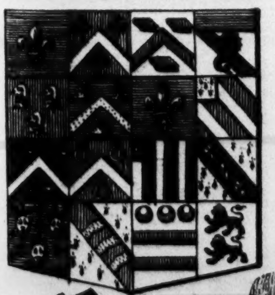
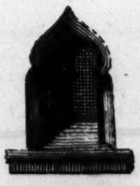
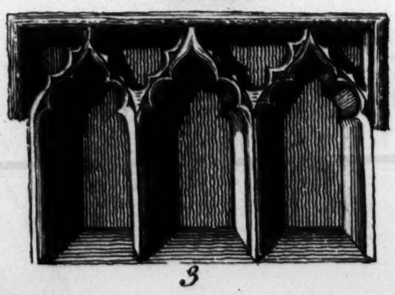


4





3

5

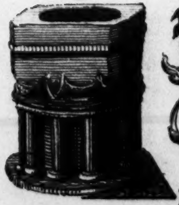


Fig. 2.

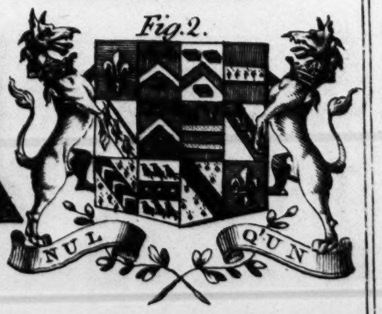

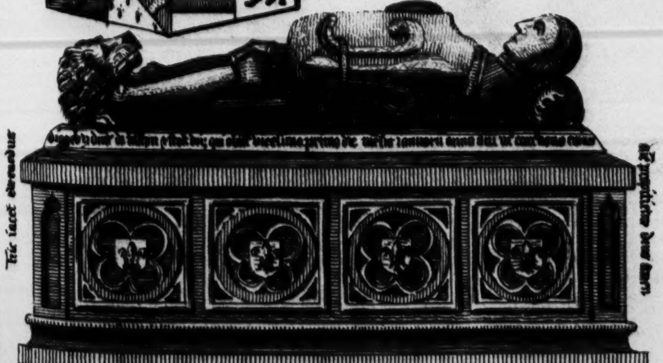

Hic iacet dominus

Fig. 8.

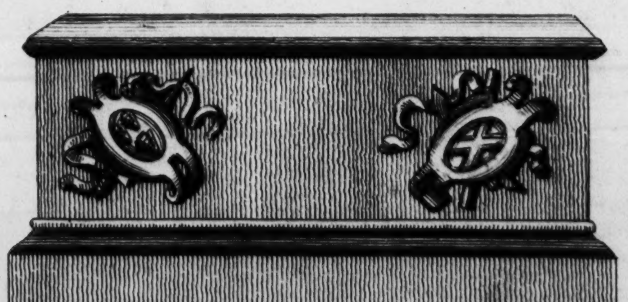

Fig. 9.

Longmate del. & sc. 1792.

Committee of Parliament for the ſaid county; and that he do forthwith officiate the cure of the ſaid church as vicar, and preach diligently to the pariſhoners there; and that he ſhall have for his pains therein the vicarage-houſe and glebe-lands, and all the tithes, rents, duties, and profits whatſoever, of the ſaid vicarage, till further order ſhall be taken in the premiſſes. And all perſon and perſons are required quietly to permit the ſaid Mr. Silverwood to officiate the ſaid cure; and to enter, poſſeſs, and enjoy the ſaid houſe and glebe-lands; and to have, receive, and take to his own uſe, all the tithes, rents, duties, and profits whatſoever, of the ſaid vicarage, as they will anſwer the contrary at their peril. And it is further ordered, that the Committee of Parliament for the ſaid county do, and they are hereby deſired to examine what tithes or profits of the ſaid vicarage are remaining in the hands of the ſequeſtrators of the ſaid vicarage, or any of the pariſhioners of the ſaid pariſh, which have accrued ſince the ſaid ſequeſtrations; and to ſee the dilapidations of the ſaid vicarage-houſe be repaired therewith; and that the ſurplus thereof be paid to the ſaid Mr. Silverwood, for his further encouragement [1]."

In a cauſe in the Exchequer, in Trinity Term, 3 George I, John Smith, clerk, plaintiff, againſt John Freeman, William Brookſby, William Holwell, Thomas Bennett, Samuel Hall, Richard Butler, and Richard Burton, defendants; the bill ſtated, that the plaintiff, being in the year 1713 inſtituted, &c. into the vicarage of Tilton, in the county of Leiceſter, was thereby entitled to all ſmall tithes and dues ariſing therein, and in the titheable places thereof (Whadborough excepted); that the defendants had been inhabitants and occupiers of lands there, and had depaſtured ſheep and ewes, and had lambs and wool; that they alſo had cows, which had milk and calves; that they had bullocks and other young beaſts, and had agiſted ſeveral flocks of ſheep, and barren and unprofitable cattle, and made great profit thereby; but had refuſed to pay the tithes thereof. The defendants Freeman and Brookſby admitted, that the plaintiff was vicar of Tilton, and entitled to receive ſmall tithes; but denied that either he or his predeceſſors had a right to ſuch tithes as he claimed by the bill. They alſo admitted, that from the time of the plaintiff's induction they had ſeveral calves, and had fed divers young improving beaſts; but denied that they had any other titheable matters, or that they had refuſed to pay the plaintiff his tithes according to the uſage and immemorial cuſtom of paying tithes in the ſaid pariſh; for that, time out of mind, there had been a cuſtom, that on Candlemas-day yearly the vicar ſhall count the ſheep in the pariſh; and that, on the tithing-day, which is always by the like cuſtom upon the third of May, the vicar ſhall have tithes of all lambs fallen, as follows, viz. for any number under ſeven, one halfpenny apiece; if ten lambs, then one lamb; and, if ſeven, eight, or nine lambs, then he is alſo to have one lamb; but in ſuch caſe he is to give one halfpenny apiece to the owner for the number it wants to make up ten; that alſo, for ſheep bought in and ſold out between Candlemas and clipping-day, he is to have one halfpenny, in lieu of tithe-wool, for each ſheep; but, for the wool of ſheep wintered in the pariſh, and not ſold before tithing-day, he is to have, if ten fleeces, one fleece; if ſeven, eight, or nine, one fleece, paying the owner one halfpenny apiece for the number of fleeces wanting to make up ten fleeces; that no tithe of milk or of calves had ever been paid in kind, unleſs the occupiers of lands had ten calves in one year, and in ſuch caſe the vicar was to have one, but otherwiſe he was to be paid twopence-halfpenny for each new milch-cow, and for a ſtrapper one penny. They farther ſaid, that John Noel, eſq. was impropriator of the great tithes; and that all the tithe of hay (except of the homeſteads), and all the tithe-corn, belonged to him. They farther inſiſted, that no tithe ought to be paid for any cattle fed on the ediſh or after-graſs of grounds that had paid tithe, either of hay or corn, to the impropriator; and that, ſince the plaintiff had been vicar, they had conſtantly paid their tithes of corn and hay to the impropriator. And by a farther anſwer they ſet forth the quantities and values. The defendant Freeman ſet forth his quantities, and put in nearly the ſame anſwer as to the moduſes. The plaintiff replied; the defendants rejoined; and witneſſes were examined; and upon reading the proof, and upon full debate, It is ordered by the Court, that the defendants do forthwith go to an account, before the deputy-remembrancer, for all the titheable matters and things by them reſpectively had, &c. within the ſaid pariſh of Tilton, and the titheable places thereof during the years in the bill charged.

Tho. Bury, Ro. Price,
Ja. Montague, F. Page.

The preſent value in the king's books, "in decimis majoribus & minoribus, cum exit' manſ', communibus annis," is £12. 16*s*. 8*d*.; certified value £120.

The epiſcopal procurations are, for the rectory 3*s*.; the vicarage, 2*s*. 4*d*.; and the archidiaconal, 3*s*. 6d.

The pariſh-clerk, John Friſby, is now (1799) in the 84th year of his age; and has been clerk here more than 50 years.

VICARS.	PATRONS.
Henry, 1220.	Prior and convent of Laund.
Matthew the chaplain, 1238.
Reginald de Sculthorpe, 1269.
John de Wartnochebi, 1272.
Richard de Lodington, 1273.
Ralph vicar of Weſton, co. Northampton, 1279.
William, 1382.
William Huddleſton [2], 1534; living 1561.
Thomas Bayle [3].
Dr. Mainwaring, ſequeſtered 1647.
Thomas Silverwood, 1647.	Parliamentary Sequeſtrators.
John Gray, April 29, 1629.	Sir William Dalſton, pro hâc vice.
John Smith, 1681; died Aug. 9, 1712.
John Smith, Feb. 4, 1712-3.	John Smith, pro hâc vice.
Thomas Metcalfe, April 14, 1733.	Sir George Dalſton, knt.
Robert Lambert, Dec. 18, 1769.	Thomas Noel, eſq.
Benjamin Barnard, Jan. 21, 1789.	The Biſhop of Lincoln, per lapſum.
Charles Wildbore, April 26, 1796.	George Graves, clerk.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

Under the fourth arch (from the Weſt) which ſeparates the nave from the South aile, lies a man in freeſtone in complete armour, croſs-legged, and at his feet a lion; a large ſhield upon his left arm, on which is a large fleur de lis, on the ſiniſter chief a half-moon, dexter chief (the ſun) obliterated; on his left ſide a ſword, his left hand holding the ſcabbard, and his right in the act of drawing his ſword. Plate LXVII. fig. 6.

This monument Mr. Wyrley thus notices:

"Imago hominis, cum crure ſuper crurem, hac inſcriptione:

✠ Jehan de Digby giſt icy, praies pur lui."

"Et hoc ſcuto quoque ſuper brachium."

---

[1] From the original Minute-books of the Committee of Sequeſtrations, preſerved in the Bodleian Library.

[2] In the Certificate referred to under Allexton, p 8, Mr. Huddleſton is thus deſcribed: "Preſbyter, non conjugatus, mediocritèr doctus; reſidet; hoſpitalis; deget ibidem; non licentiatus, nec prædicat; duo beneficia habet."

[3] See his epitaph at Knoſſington, vol. II. p. 658.

Azure, a fleur de lis, Argent, with a ſun and moon.

Under the third arch (from the Weſt) which ſeparates the nave from the South aile, lies a woman in free-ſtone, largely proportioned, in long, looſe, and flowing robes; her hands joined upon her breaſt in prayer; her left arm broken off; at her feet a lap-dog; her features quite mutilated; fig. 7.

This Mr. Wyrley alſo thus notices:

"Mauſoleum quoddam dominæ, cujus toga ornatur his notis gentilitiis ut hic notavi: [On the upper garment fleurs de lis; on the inner, Or, two bars; three croſslets in chief, Gules; Harcourt.]

Both theſe monuments, which are of the beginning of the fourteenth century [1], are very large; and the inſcriptions on their ledges are hid by pews placed againſt them.

In the South wall, near the Eaſt end of the South aile, on an altar-tomb (on which, in front, the arms of Digby are four times repeated), lies a man in armour; on his ſhield a large fleur de lis; ſhort coat of mail; much hair upon his head, which appears to be curled inwards; his hands upon his breaſt in a ſupplicating poſture; and his feet reſting againſt a lion, fig. 8. The whole figure appears to be a white compoſition-ſtone. Round the ledge is inſcribed in high-raiſed letters:

"Hic jacet Everardus
Diggeby [2], dñs de Tilton et ſtok dri, qui obiit viceſimo primo die menſis Januarii, anno Dñi M°CCCCC nono; cujus a'i'e propitietur Deus. Amen."

A plain tomb in the middle of the chancel floor, with a cover of blue marble, which never ſeems to have had an inſcription, has been generally ſuppoſed to be the tomb of ſir Everard Digby, who was executed for the Gun-powder Treaſon Plot [3]; but is really, as appears by the arms, the monument of William Nicolls, eſq. and Joice Gifford his wife; three pheons quarterly, and a ſaltire engrailed Or; fig. 9.

In the chancel, againſt the North wall, a ſmall old monument of alabaſter, for Auguſtin Nicolls, eſq. with two Corinthian pilaſters of black marble; in the middle a gentleman and lady kneeling before a circular pillar, the hands cloſed in a poſture of devotion; behind them ſix ſons and as many daughters, all in the ſame poſture, fig. 10.

At the top, on a ſmall ſquare black tablet (which has for many years been defaced) the three concluding words alone remain legible:

. . . . . . MORTALES PARTES DEPOSUIT.

The arms: Sable, three pheons in pale, Argent, Nicolls; impaling, Argent, a bend Sable.

On the North ſide of the chancel floor:

"Underneath this ſtone lies interred the body of the Rev. THOMAS CLULOW, who was a native of STAFFORDSHIRE, where he received a claſſical education;
but, after ſome embarraſſment,
he was conducted to this place;
where he was CURATE and ſchoolmaſter four years.
He departed this life
the twenty-fourth day of January, one thouſand ſeven hundred and ninety-ſeven,
AGED 32 YEARS."

In the nave, near the pulpit, on a flat blue ſtone:

"Sub hoc lapide depoſitum eſt corpus rev^{di} Johañ Smith, hujus eccleſiæ vic$^{r's}$ añ 39. Obiit nono die Auguſti, 1712.
Hic etiam depoſitum
eſt corpus Elizabethæ
Smith, uxor' chariſſimæ
Johañ Smith prædicti.
Obiit ſecundo die
Martii 1717.
Juxta etiam depoſitũ eſt corpus Georgii Smith, filius Johañ & Elizab. Smith, predict.
obiit primo die Feb. 1675.
Et corpus etiam Su-ſannæ Smith, filiæ
Johan. & Eliz. Smith, predict.
Obiit decimo quarto die Feb. 1698."

Tempora mutantur,
& nos mutamur in illis.

In the South aile:

1. "Here lieth the body of John Heycock, who departed this life January the 28th, anno Dom. 1721, æt. 83."

2. "Here lieth interred the body of Ann, the wife of Nicholas Heycock, who departed this life March 22, anno Dom. 1747,
in the 64th year of her age.
Here alſo lieth interred Nicholas Heycock, who departed this life the eighth day of Auguſt,
in the year of our Lord 1763,
in the eighty-fourth year of his age."

3. "Beneath are depoſited the remains of Anne Heycock.
She departed this life July 22, 1788,
aged 77 years."

"In memory of George Sharrard, ſon of William and Anne Sharrard, of Knoſton, in the county of Leiceſter.
He departed this life March the 11,
anno Domini 1731-2, aged 37 years."

"Beneath are depoſited the remains of Anne Heycock.
She departed this life July 22, 1788,
aged 77 years."

In the church-yard:

John Scarborow, of Mareſield, died Jan. 29, 1760, aged 72.
John Scarborow, died March 5, 1761, aged 77.
Iſabella his wife, died Feb. 14, 1760, aged 67.
John Hollin, died Aug. 19, 1772, aged 83.
Hannah his wife, died Jan. 4, 1768, aged 73.
Anne Bennett, died March 20, 1731, aged 74.
John Beeſton, died April 21, 1756, aged 75.
Anne Freeman, died June 5, 1773, aged 86.
Thomas Freeman, died Aug. 22, 1790, aged 58.
Margaret Freeman, died May 7, 1772, aged 79.
Edward Fiſher, of Mareſield, died Feb. 8, 1768, aged 78.
Thomas Green, died Aug. 9, 1785, aged 82.
Mary Coward, wife of Thomas Coward, died Feb. 3, 1793, aged aged 87.
William Coward, died Feb. 2, 1747, aged 40.
William Coward, died Oct. 19, 1772, aged 72.
Martha, relict of William Coward, died Aug. 6, 1779, aged 75.
John Tyers, died Nov. 30, 1775, aged 72.
John Needham, died Sept. 3, 1785, aged 72.

In the church-yard is an old croſs; the ſhaft 9 feet 8 inches long; the baſe placed on an old tomb; on which a large croſs has formerly been traced, the top of which only is now viſible, fig. 11.

The following coat of the Digbys, Plate LXVII. fig. 1. is from Harl. MSS. 1364.

1. Azure, a fleur de lis Argent, Digby. 2. Gules, a chevron between three croſs croſslets fitchée Argent, Pakeman. 3. Argent, a chevron between three books Gules, Clarke. 4. Or, a dolphin haurient, embowed Azure, over all a bend Sable; a chief Azure, Ellis. 5. Gules, three hounds' heads eraſed Argent, collared Or, Nele. 6. Azure, a chevron Argent, between [1] Sir John Digby died about 1269; and his wife Arabella Harcourt near the ſame time.

---

[2] See his curious will, p. 464.

[3] See in Gent. Mag. vol. LXIII. p. 391. a letter from Mr. W. M[etcalfe] of Beverley; whoſe father was more than 36 years vicar of Tilton, and rented an antient houſe of the Skevingtons, a mile from Tilton. See p. 439.

three cheſsrooks Or, Rooker. 7. Azure, a fleur de lis Ermine, Palmer. 8. Bendy of ſix, Or and Sable, a canton Ermine, Biſhopſton. 9. Sable, a chevron between three bugle-horns Argent, Slorey. 10. Sable, a chevron between three rings Argent, Nanfan. 11. Paly of ſix, Argent and Sable, on a canton Sable, a roſe Argent. 12. Ermine, on a bend Sable, three goats' heads eraſed Argent, armed Or, Mulſho. 13. Azure, ſemi of croſs croſslets, three leopards' faces jeſſe de fleur de lis Argent, Nevile. 14. Ermine, on a bend Gules, three bends wavy Or, Gotham. 15. Argent, two bars, and in chief three creſcents Gules, Nowers. 16. Argent, two lions paſſant in pale Gules, Stoke Goldington.

And the following (fig. 2.) from the ſame MS. 1. Digby. 2. Pakeman. 3. Clarke. 4. Gules, a feſs Ermine, Wallis. 5. Argent, on a bend Gules, three martlets Or, Danvers of Swithland. 6. Azure, a chevron Argent, between three rowels Or, Danvers. 7. Gules, two bars, and in chief two ſtags' heads caboſhed Or, Chinaucheſall. 8. Argent, on a bend Azure, three ſtags' heads caboſhed Argent, De la Bech. 9. Ermine, on a bend Sable, three chevrons Or, Bruley. 10. Argent, on a feſs Sable, between ſix martlets Sable, three mullets Argent, Parry. 11. Ermine, a bend Sable, Attemore. 12. Digby. Supporters, two herald tigers Azure, ducally gorged Or. Motto, NUL Q'UN.

I. Pedigree of DIGBY, of TILTON.

Ælmar held lands in Tilton, in the reign of William the Conqueror, 1086.=

Sir John de Tilton. Sir Everard Digby, of Tilton, temp. Hen. I. & Stephen.=Amicia Bretton.

William lord of Digby.= Chriſtiana.

1. Walter, of Digby and of Tilton, a monk, temp. Hen. II. 2. Robert of Digby, and of Tilton after the death of his brother Walter, temp. Hen. II. & Ric. I. died before 1224.=Anne, dau. of . . . . Herle, co. Lincoln; living 1240.

1. Robert Digby, of Digby, 1260.=Ida, dau. of John Fitzherbert. 2. Thomas.

1. Sir John Digby, died 1269.=Arabella, dau. of ſir Will. Harcourt. 2. Nicholas. 3. Hugh. 4. William, a clerk.

1. Sir John Digby, of Tilton, 1271 and 1299.= . . . . . Wake. 2. William Digby, of Brantwell, co. Lincoln.

1. Robert.=Sibella. 2. John Digby, living 1339.=Elizabeth, dau. of ſir William Oſevill.

John, 1315. Elizabeth, 1339. 1. Robert Digby, died before 1403.=Catharine, dau. of Simon Pakeman (and ſiſter and coheir of Henry Pakeman) of Kirby, 1391.

1. Simon Digby, of Tilton, co. Leiceſter, and Dryſtoke, co. Rutland, died before 1422.=Joan, dau. of ſir James Beler. 2. Robert Digby, died young. 1. Catharine. 2. Joan.

1. Sir Everard Digby, alias Greenleaf, ſheriff and repreſentative of Rutland temp. Hen. VI. ſlain at Towton 1461.=Anne, dau. of ſir Francis Clarke, of Whiſſendine. Three, ſons ſlain at Towton.

1. Everard Digby, eſq. alias Greenleaf, of Tilton and Dryſtoke, died 1509.=Jaquetta Ellis, died 1483. 2. John Digby, of Preſton.= . . . dau. of . . . . Lee. Robert Hunt, of Lyndon, co. Rutland.=Dervorguilla. Margaret, firſt wife.=Sir William Skeffington, knt. lord deputy of Ireland.=Anne, dau. of ſir John Digby, of Kettleby, ſecond wife. [See p. 448].

Francis Digby, died ſ. p. Chriſtopher Tamworth, of Leake,=Margaret.

1. Sir Everard Digby, of Dryſtoke.=Margaret, dau. of ſir John Haydon, of Norfolk, knt. 2. Simon Digby; ſee Ped. II. 3. Sir John Digby, of Eye Kettleby; ſee his iſſue, vol. II. p. 261. 4. Lebbæus Digby, of Luffenham; ſee Ped. III. 5. Rowland Digby; ſee his iſſue, vol. II. p. 261. 6. Thomas Digby; ſee Pedigree IV. 7. Benjamin Digby; ſee Pedigree V. 1. Alice. 2. Ellen. 3. Catharine, a nun at Sempringham. 4. Darnegold, married Robert Hunt, of Lyndon, co. Rutl.

1. Kenelm Digby, of Dryſtoke.=Anne, dau. of ſir Anth. Cope, of Hanwell, co. Oxon. knt. 2. Anthony Digby, of Aſton, a gentleman penſioner to queen Elizabeth. Katharine.=Anthony Meers, of Kinton, co. Linc.

1. Everard Digby, of Dryſtoke, died about 1592.=Mary, dau. and heir of Francis Nele, of Keythorpe, b. 1513; living 1632.=Sampſon Erdeſwick, of Sandon, co. Staff. ſecond huſband.=Thomas Digby, third huſb. [See Pedigree IV.] 2. Anthony Digby, of Aſton, co. Rutland, d. ſ. p. 4. James Digby, of Luffenham, co. Rutland. Thomaſina.=3. John Digby, of Seaton, co. Rutl. 1618.= . . . dau. of . . . . Palmer, of Leiceſterſhire. Margaret, marr. to Edw. Dudley, of Clopton, co. Northampton. Anne, marr. Edw. Watſon, of Rockingham Caſtle, co. Northampt. by whom ſhe had Lewis lord Rockingham. Four daughters.

1. Kenelm Digby, æt. 20, 1618. 2. James. Urſula. Mary. Elizabeth. Anne, married Tho. Swinglehurſt, of Seaton, co. Rutl.

1. Everard Digby, "de altâ proditione attinctus anno 1605, quia nefandiſſimis illis incendiariis ad principem et patriam uno tartarei fulminis ictu tollendum horrenda conſilia ſcelerate ſociavit."=Mary, only dau, and heir of William Mulſho, of Gothurſt, co. Bucks. 2. George Digby, of Sandon, co. Staff. marr. Mary, dau. of ſir Walter Chetwynd, of Ingeſtre, co. Stafford, knt.= 3. John. 1. Mary, married to ſir Rob. Wright, alias Reeve, of Thwaite, co. Stafford, knt. 2. Elizabeth.

1. Sir Kenelm Digby, of Gothurſt, co. Bucks, knt. died 1665, æt. 62.=Venetia Anaſtaſia, dau. and coheir of ſir Edw. Stanley, of Tongue Caſtle, co. Salop; died 1633, æt. 33. 2. Sir John Digby[1], knt. major-gen. in the king's army in the Weſt; killed at the battle of Longport in Somerſetſhire, July 9, 1645. Jane, married firſt to Charles lord Gerard; ſecondly, to Mr. Edward Hungerford; and died 1603.

1. Kenelm Digby, b. 1611; killed at, St. Neot's in fighting for the king, July 9, 1648; died ſ. p. Catharine, eldeſt ſurviving daughter of Henry earl of Arundel, firſt wife.=2. John Digby, eſq. of Gothurſt.=Margaret, fourth dau. of Edw. Longueville, eſq. of Wolverton, co. Bucks, ſecond wife. 3. George, 4. Edward, both died young. Margery,=Edw. Dudley, of Clopton, co. Northampton.

1. Margaret-Maria.=Sir John Conway, of Bodrythem, co. Flint.
2. Charlotta-Theophila[2], b. 1671.=Ri[illegible]. Moſtyn, eſq. of Penbeddw, co. Flint, died March 17, 1693-4; leaving two daughters, Bridget and Charlotte.

---

[1] He was long bred a ſoldier in the Spaniſh army, owing his accompliſhments to hardſhips; and, on the interceſſion of the queen, was reſtored, with his brother Kenelm, to what their father had forfeited. He commanded a Tertia of the king's army, which he raiſed in Somerſetſhire, with great vigilance, activity, and courage, ſpending £25,000. from the time of waiting on his majeſty at Nottingham, and putting the commiſſion of array in execution in Somerſetſhire, till 1645, where he received his death wound in a gallant action at Longport.

[2] See her epitaph, p. 475.

Pedigree II.]

Simon [1] Digby, ſon of Everard and Jaquetta, anceſtor of the preſent lord Digby, lieutenant of the Tower, died 1519; buried at Coleſhill, co. Warwick. = Alice, dau. of John Walleys.

1. Reginald Digby, ſheriff of Leiceſter 26 and 36 Hen. VIII. died 1549, and buried at Coleſhill. = Anne, dau. and coheir of John D'Anvers, co. Oxford.
2. Thomas Digby, of Mansfield Wodehouſe, co. Nott.
3. William.
1. Agnes. = William Tracy, eſq.
2. Grace. = ... Strelley.
3. Alice, = Robert Clifton, eſq.; died 1540, and buried at Coleſhill.
4. Catharine. = Anthony Worth, eſq.

1. John Digby, died Nov. 15, 1558. = Anne, eldeſt dau. of ſir George Throgmorton, of Coughton, co. Warwick, died 155 . .
2. Ambroſe, died ſ. p.
1. Anne. = Ralph Brome, eſq. of Wodlow, co. Warwick.
2. Margaret.
Two other daughters.

1. Sir George Digby, knighted at the ſiege of Zutphen; died Feb. 4, 1586; buried at Coleſhill. = Abigail, dau. of ſir Anthony Heveningham, co. Norfolk.
2. Simon.
3. Reginald.
Agnes. = ... Villiers.

1. George Digby, died young.
2. Sir Robert [2] Digby, anceſtor to the preſent lord, died 1618; buried at Coleſhill. = Lettice, dau. and coheir of Gerald lord Offaley, ſon and heir of Gerald earl of Kildare, created baroneſs Offaley in her own right; died 1658.
3. Philip, d. ſ. p.
4. John [3] earl of Briſtol, born 1580; died at Paris, Jan. 16, 1652-3. = Beatrix, dau. of Charles Walcot, of Walcot, co. Salop, eſq. widow of ſir John Dive, of Bromham, co. Bedford.
Elizabeth. = Sir Baldwin Wake, bart.

1. Sarah, 2d dau. of Richard Boyle, earl of Cork, died 1633; buried at Dublin. = 1. Robert [4] lord Digby, baron of Geaſhill, 1620; died 1642. = 2. Elizabeth, dau. of ſir Tho. Altham, of Oxhey, co. Herts, died 1662.
2. George.
3. Gerald.
4. John
5. Simon.
6. Eſſex Digby, dean of Caſhel 1661; bp. of Dromore 1670; died 1683; buried at Dromore. = Thomſin, dau. of ſir William Gilbert.
7. Philip, m. Margaret, dau. of . . Forth.
1. Lettice. = Sir Rob. Langford.
2. Mabel. = 1. Gerald Fitzgerald, eſq.; 2. Donogh Obrian Arragh.
3. Abigail, died young. [These daughters omitted by Edmondſon.]
1. Geo. Digby [5], earl of Briſtol, born 1612; d. 1676, æt. 64; bur. at Chelſea. = Anne, 2d dau. of Fran. Ruſſel, earl of Bedford, died 1696, bur. at Cheneys.
2. Sir John Digby [6], born 1617; died in France unmarried.
1. Abigail. = Geo. Freke, ſon and heir of John Freke, of Shrowton, co. Dorſet, eſq. died 1648.
2. Mary. = Arthur Chicheſter, lord Donegal in Ireland.

Kildare, 2d lord Digby, died 1661, buried in St. Patrick's, Dublin. = Mary [7], dau. of Robert Gardiner, of London, eſq. died 1692; buried at Coleſhill.
1. Lettice, died 1656; buried at Coleſhill; married William Dilke, eſq. of Maxſtoke-caſtle.
2. Catharine, died ſingle 1661.
3. Catharine,
4. Mary, } died young.
1. Robert Digby. = . . . Spencer.
2. William Digby. = Anne Newcomen.
Two daughters.
3. Simon Digby, biſhop of Limerick 1678, and Elphin 1690; died 1720. = Elizabeth, dau. of Warner Weſtenra, eſq.
Alice, dau. and heir of Robert Bourne, of Blackhall, co. Eſſex, eſq. firſt wife, d 1656. = 1. John Digby [8], earl of Briſtol, died 1698; buried at Sherborn. = Rachel, dau. of Hugh Windham, knt. juſtice of the Common Pleas, ſecond wife, d. 1708.
2. Francis, killed in the Dutch wars 1672; buried at Cheyneys.
1. Diana. = Baron Moll in Flanders.
2. Anne. = Rob. Spencer, earl of Sunderland.

1. Robert, born and died 1652.
2. Robert, third lord Digby, b. 1654; died unmarried in 1677, æt. 24; buried at Coleſhill.
3. Simon [9], 4th lord Digby, died 1685; buried at Coleſhill. = Frances, dau. of Edward Noel, earl of Gainſborough, died 1684, æt. 23.
4. William [10], fifth lord Digby, died 1752, æt. 92; buried at Sherborn. = Jane, 2d dau. of Edward Noel earl of Gainſborough; died 1733.
1. Elizabeth,
2. Mary,
3. Letitia, all died young.
1. Robert,
2. Simon,
3. Henry,
5. Weſtenra,
7. Eſſex,
8. Gilbert. } died young or unmarried.
4. John, of Landanſtown, eſq.
6. William, rector of Akaſhere, dioc. Elphin. = ...
Simon. Anne.
9. Benjamin, vicar of Geaſhill. = ...
Three ſons and one daughter.
1. Thomaſine.
3. Lettice.
4. Margaret.
2. Elizabeth. = Dr. Marſh, dean of Kildare.
Jeremy.
Arabella-Frances.
5. Abigail. = Joſeph Graves.
6. Mary. = Edward Birtles.
7. Jane. = Patrick French.
8. Rebecca. = John King.

Frances, d. 1729 = James Scudamore, viſcount Sligo, of Ireland, died 1729, æt. 45.
1. John Digby, eſq. died ſ. p. 1747; buried at Sherborn.
2. Robert [11] Digby, eſq. died ſ. p. 1726; buried at Sherborn, aged 34.
3 Edward Digby, eſq. died 1746; bur. at Coleſhill. = Charlotte, dau. of ſir Stephen Fox, knt.
4. Wriotheſley Digby, LL.D. died 1767; buried at Mereden, co. Warwick. = Mary, dau. of John Cotes, eſq. of Woodcote, co. Salop.
1. Mary [11], died 1729, aged 39, buried at Sherborn.
2. Elizabeth, d. 1730. = Sir John Dolben, D. D. bart. fellow of All Souls.
3. Rachel, died young.
4. Jane, died young.
5. Juliana. = Herbert Mackworth, of Neath, in Glamorganſhire, eſq.
6. Catharine, died ſingle.
7. Frances. = James Cotes,
8. Jane, died ſingle.

1. Henry, duke of Beaufort, died 1744. = Frances, d. 1749. = 2. Sir James Scudamore.
A daughter.
1. Wriotheſley, b. 1649.
2. Kenelm, b. 1754.
3. Noel, b. 1756.
1. Mary, died young, 1750.
2. Frances, born 1752.
3. Elizabeth, b. 1758; married 1786 William Mills, eſq.
4. Jane, born 1760.

1. Edward, ſixth lord Digby, died ſ. p. 1757; buried at Coleſhill.
3. Robert, an admiral in the Navy; born 1732; married 1784 Mrs. Janney, eldeſt dau. of Andrew Elliott, eſq lieutenant-governor of New York.
Elizabeth, dau. of Charles Fielding, brother to Baſil earl of Denbigh, firſt wife. = 2. Henry, ſeventh lord Digby, married in 1763; created an Engliſh peer in 1765; and earl 1790; died Sept. 25, 1793. = Mary, dau. of John Knowles, eſq. of Canterbury, 2d wife.
Edward, born 1764; died an infant.
4. William, b. 1733; LL. D. canon of Chriſt Church and vicar of Coleſhill; dean of Durham 1777; died 1788 = Charlotte, dau. of Joſeph Cox, eſq.
Lucy, dau. of Stephen earl of Ilcheſter, firſt wife. = 5. Stephen, capt. in the 5th regiment of foot; married 1771. = Charlotte-Margaret, dau. of ſir Robert Gunning, 2d wife.
1. Stephen-Charles.
2. Stephen-Thomas.
6. Charles, b. 1741; rector of Kilmington, co. Somerſet. = . . . Melyar, of Caſtle-lacey.
Iſſue.
Charlotte, b. 1733; died ſingle 1753.

1. Charlotte, b. 1772; married to William Winefield, eſq.
2. Edward, the ſecond earl Digby, b. 1773; at preſent unmarried.
3. Robert, born 1775.
4. Stephen, born 1776; died 1795.
1. Henry. [d. 1793.
2. William-Sheffield,
3. Charlotte.
4. Sophia, = 1784 to ſir John Sheffield, of Normanby, bt.
5. Juliana.
6. Maria, = 1794 Thomas earl of Ilcheſter.
7. Caroline. = 1791 Thomas Neave, eſq.
8. A ſon, born 1786.

---

[1] See Pedigree I. p. 473.

[2] He was educated at Oxford, knighted at Dublin by the earl of Eſſex, 1596; repreſented Athy, co. Kildare; and was of the council for the province of Munſter 1615. His lady, who was created baroneſs of Offaley in her own right, gallantly defended her caſtle of Geaſhill againſt the Iriſh rebels 1642, and retired to Coleſhill, where ſhe died and was buried.

[3] Gentleman of the privy-chamber and carver to James I. 1605; ambaſſador to Spain 1611, 1612; created baron Digby of Sherborn by patent 25 Nov. 1618; ambaſſador in the Low Countries and to the Empire 1620; in Spain 1622, and the ſame year created earl of Briſtol. He owed his promotion to the good account he gave of the Popiſh plot to ſeize the princeſs Elizabeth; being ſoon after created baron Digby of Sherborn, 25 Nov. 16 Jac. I. He made a great figure in the reigns of James I. and Charles I. and ſuffered greatly in his perſon and fortune during the civil war. He was twice ſent ambaſſador to Spain, 1617 and 1622, to treat of the match between prince Charles and the infanta Maria. His ſignature in Plate LXVII. is from a receipt given by him, whilſt vice-chamberlain of his majeſty's houſhold, 22 Oct. 1619, for 4000*l.* part of 20,000*l.* which his majeſty was pleaſed to allow him for defraying the charge of his ambaſſage, who for his majeſty's ſpecial favour and ſpecial appointment, was to take an extraordinary ambaſſage into Spain; without priſe or accompt, and over and above the ordinary allowance of 6*l.* per day during the time of his ambaſſage. Dugdale ſays, that he had the grant of Sherborn to make him amends for his embaſſy into Spain, the charges of which amounted to £13,000. and it was confirmed to him by act of parliament. His difference with the duke of Buckingham, and their mutual impeachment of each other, may be ſeen in the hiſtory of theſe times. "He worſted (ſays Wood) before the Engliſh parliament the greateſt minion the folly, love, or wiſdom of any king ſince the Conqueſt ever bred in this nation; and through a prodigious dexterity became the confidant both of James I. and Charles I." He ſided at firſt with the parliament; but, ſeeing their deſigns, ſoon quitted them for the king. He died in voluntary exile at Paris, and was buried there in a garden, purchaſed by ſir Richard Browne, clerk of the council, as a Proteſtant burial-ground. See more of him in Dugdale's Baronage, tom. II. p. 436, and in Wood's Athen. Oxon. vol. II. pp. 163—165.

[4] He was governor of King's County 1627, and was a leading man in the Iriſh houſe of peers.

[5] He diſtinguiſhed himſelf greatly in the reigns of Charles I. and II. having early renounced the parliament party, on the impeachment of the earl of Strafford, for which he was forced to quit the kingdom, 1648, till the Reſtoration; after which his change of religion incapacitated him from other offices than high-ſteward of Oxford, though he had before filled the office of ſecretary of ſtate, and lieutenant-general of the counties North of Trent. See more of him, Athen. Oxon. vol. II. pp. 579—581.

[6] General of horſe in lord Hopton's army; and, after the ruin of the royal cauſe, a ſecular prieſt at Pontoiſe in France, and died after the Reſtoration. Athen. Oxon. vol. II. p. 165.

[7] Her epitaph at Coleſhill, compoſed by biſhop Hough, may be ſeen in Archdall, vol. VI. p. 292.

[8] He died without iſſue, and was buried at Sherborn, where ſee his epitaph in Hutchins's Dorſetſhire. On his death, the title of baron of Sherborn and earl of Briſtol became extinct; and his eſtate deſcended to his kinſman William lord Digby, baron of Geaſhill in Ireland.

[9] He was a liberal benefactor to the poor of Coleſhill. His and his lady's characters may be ſeen in their funeral ſermons by Mr. Kettlewell, then vicar of Coleſhill, among his Works.

[10] He ſucceeded to the eſtate of John the laſt earl of Briſtol, and was a nobleman of great honour, virtue, and piety. In 1689 he repreſented the county of Warwick, when he was attainted by king James's parliament. He died 1752, æt. 92, full of days and full of honour.

[11] On theſe two Mr. Pope wrote the beautiful verſes inſcribed on their monument in Sherborn church, and printed in his Works.

III. Pedigree of DIGBY, of Cotes and Luffenham.

Lebbeus Digby, of Cotes. = ... dau. of . . . . Hutt, of Luffenham.

Thomas Digby, of Cotes; died at Uppingham. = Anne, relict of . . . . Greene, of Uppingham.

Anne, dau. and coheir. = John Burton, of Stockerſton. | Margaret, dau. and coheir. = Ferdinando Caldecott, of Ketton, co. Rutland.

Sir Thomas Burton, of Stockerſton, knt. and bart. (ſee vol. II. p. 820.)

IV. Pedigree of DIGBY, of Oulney.

Thomas Digby, of Oulney, co. Bucks, eſquire of the body to king Henry VII. = Dorothy, dau. of Tho. Oxenbrigg, knt.

John Digby, of Oulney, 27 H. VIII. = Elizabeth, dau. of . . . Beke. | Catharine. = John Fiſher, of Packington, co. Warwick. = Simon Whallar, 2d huſb. | 2. Simon. | 3. Everard. | 4. Lebbeus[1], ſon and heir of . . Derbey, of Gaddeſby[2]. = Anne Digby. | Elizabeth, wife of Anthony St. Leger, of Bottesford. | Bridget.

Everard Digby. = Alice, dau. of . . . . . Fulburn. | 1. Sir Clement Fiſher, of Packington, knt. = ... Repington. | 2. Thomas. | Anne. = Edward Eaton, of Gaddeſby in right of his wife.

Sir Robert Fiſher, knt. and bart. | Simon Eaton. = Mary, dau. of Thomas Aſhby, of Loſeby.

Mary, dau. and heir, married to Henry Pilkington, of Gaddeſby in right of his wife.

Thomas Digby, 3d huſb. 1628. = Mary, dau. and coheir of Francis Nele, of Keythorpe. | John Digby, of St. Julian's, co. Hertford. = Mary, dau. of Alexander Zinzaro. | Anne.

Everard Digby. | 1. Elizabeth. | 2. Abigail. | 3. Alice.

[1] He had a younger brother, Everard Derbey, of Walton on the Woulds.

[2] See hereafter under Gaddeſby.

V. Pedigree of DIGBY, of London and Garendon.

Benjamin Digby, of London. =

Henry Digby, of Garendon. = Margaret, dau. of . . . . Trice, of London.

1. Thomas Digby, of Bachley, co. Norfolk. = Joan, dau. and heir of Thomas Aylward, of Bachley. | 2. Jaſper. | 3. Henry. | 4. John. | 5. Andrew. | 6. Benjamin. | 7. Edward.

1. Elizabeth. = ... Wildbore, of Paſton, co. Eſſex. Nottwards
2. Catharine.
3. Dorothy.
4. Margaret. = John Barwick, of London.
5. Elianor. = . . . Mountſteven, of Peterborough.
6. Katharine, wife of William Worſhip.

John Digby. | 1. Margaret. | 2. Elizabeth. | 3. Elianor. | 4. Philippa.

Pedigree of CHAMBERLAINE, of Tilton.

(Signed at Leiceſter, Aug. 3, 1683, by Francis Nedham, in the behalf of his uncle Francis Chamberlaine.)

. . . . . Chamberlaine. = ...

William Chamberlaine, of Tilton. = Bridget, dau. of . . . . Fitzwilliams.

1. Francis Chamberlaine, of Tilton, æt. 83, 1683.
2. Will. Chamberlaine, D. D. prebendary of Windſor, died about 1670 unmarried.
3. Geo. Chamberlaine, D. D. vice-maſter of Trinity Coll. Cambridge, æt. 80 in 1683.
4. Martin,
5. Bryan, died unmarried.

1. Elizabeth. = John Armſtrong, of Wyſall, Notts.
2. Dorothy. = Francis Needham[2], of Gaddeſby, who died in Auguſt 1655, æt. 63; and ſhe in Oct. 1682.
3. Joyce. = Richard Pauly, of Scraptoft.
4. Sarah, } died unmarried.
5. Frizwid, } died unmarried.
6. Mary, living unmarried 1683.

The following inſcriptions in the church of Nannerch, co. Flint, are referred to in p. 473.

On a marble monument.

"M. S.
Charlotta Theophila,
filia è duabus natu minor & cohæres
Johannis Digby, de Gothurſt, in com. Bucks, arm.
illuſtriſſimi Kenelmi Digby, equitis, filii & hæredis.
Nupta eſt, anno 1687, Ricardo Mostyn, Rogeri Mostyn, de Moſtyn equit' & bar^ti filio natu minimo.
Ingenio non minus quam formâ fœlix.
In omnes benignitate, in amicos fide, in paupéres beneficentiâ, in Deum pietate ſpectabilis.
Uxor non magis amata quam amans;
ei ſua omnia lubens dedit cui ſe tradiderat.
Liberos ſuos ſeverè ſimul & ingenuè educavit.
Non blanda magis quàm prudens mater.
Quam ſibi immaturis abreptam dolent.
Brigitta et Charlotta filiæ ſolæ jam ſuperſtites.
Nata eſt an° 1671; obiit Mar. 17, 1693-4.
Optimæ et chariſſimæ conjugi
R. Mostyn P."

On a marble grave-ſtone at the foot of the monument:

"Here lieth the body of Charlotta Theophila (the wife of Richard Mostyn of Penbedw) daughter and coheir of John Digby, of Gothurſt, in com. Bucks (by Margaret his wife, daughter of ſir Edward Longueville, bart.) ſon and heir of ſir Kenelm Digby, knt. by Venetia his wife, daughter and coheir of ſir Edward Stanley, Knight of the Bath (ſon of Thomas; ſon of Edward earle of Derby), by Lucy his wife, daughter and coheir of Thomas earle of Northumberland. She departed this life March 17, 1693-4."

HALSTED,

HALSTED.

At the time of the general ſurvey Elſtede is noticed as a member of the royal manor of Rodelei, containing three ploughlands, all but two oxgangs; one acre of meadow; and a wood, a furlong broad, and the ſame wide[1].

In 1346, the abbot of St. James without Northampton (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 4*s.* for a tenth part of one knight's fee in Halſted, parcel of the honour of Warwick[2].

In 1461, it was found that Everard Digby, attainted of high-treaſon, was ſeiſed of one meſſuage, one toſt, and two virgates of land, in Halſted[3].

March 3, 1465-6, king Edward IV. granted one toft and two virgates of land, with the appurtenances, in Halſted (late parcel of the forfeited poſſeſſions of Everard Digby, eſq.) to ſir Walter Devereux, knt.[4]

The greateſt part of the town formerly belonged to the priory of Laund; and, after the diſſolution, was (with the ſaid priory) in 1539 granted by king Henry VIII, by the name of the manor of Halſted, to Thomas lord Cromwell, afterwards earl of Eſſex; whoſe ſon and heir Gregory, created lord Cromwell in the life-time of his father[5], died ſeiſed of it in 1551[6].

Chriſtopher Tamworth died April 19, 1569[7]; and at an inquiſition taken at Harborough, June 6, 1604, it was found that Colby Tamworth died ſeiſed of the manor of Halſted; alſo eight meſſuages, ſix cottages, four tofts, one windmill, 10 gardens, 1000 acres of land, 100 acres of meadow, 20 acres of wood, and 100 acres of heath and gorze, in Halſted, Tilton, and South Mardefield; alſo of a free-warren in Halſted and Tilton, and a view of frankpledge in Halſted; and of the parſonages of Halſted, Tilton, and South Mardefield; and of the advowſon of the vicarages of Halſted and Tilton; that they were held of the king in capite, by the ſervice of one knight's fee; that he died Oct. 16, 1603; and that Bridget then aged 17 years, Elizabeth aged 15, and Katharine aged 12 years, were his ſiſters and next heirs[8].

Chriſtopher Tamworth, eſq. of Gray's Inn (third ſon of Chriſtopher Tamworth of Halſted), who died Sept. 19, 1624, æt. 70, was a conſiderable benefactor to the poor; and, among other legacies, gave "to the poor people of the pariſhes of Halſted, Tilton, Mardefeld, and Whadborough, where he was born, 20 marks[9]."

Two thirds of the property of the Tamworths in this place appears to have been purchaſed by ſir Auguſtin Nicolls, the learned Judge thus characterized by Dr. Fuller:

"Sir Auguſtin Nicolls was bred in the ſtudy of the Common Law; wherein he attained to ſuch knowledge, that queen Elizabeth made him a, King James his own, Serjeant; whence he was freely preferred one of the Judges of the Common Pleas; I ſay freely, king James commonly calling him 'the Judge that would give no money.' Not to ſpeak of his moral qualifications, and ſubordinate abilities; he was renowned for his ſpecial judiciary endowments; patience to hear both parties all they could ſay, a happy memory, a ſingular ſagacity to ſearch into the material circumſtances, exemplary integrity, even to the rejection of gratuities after judgement given. His forbearing to travel on the Lord's-day wrought a reformation on ſome of his own order. He loved plain and profitable preaching, being wont to ſay, "I know not what you call Puritanical Sermons, but they come neareſt to my conſcience." The ſpeech of Cæſar is commonly known, "Oportet Imperatori ſtantem mori;" which biſhop Jewell altered, and applied to himſelf, "Decet Epiſcopum concionantem mori." Of this man it may be ſaid, "Judex mortuus eſt jura dans;" dying in his calling, as he went the Northern circuit; and hath a fair monument in Kendall church in Weſtmoreland[10]."

In 1611, a writ was directed to Auguſtin Nicolls, Anthony Shugborough, and John Smith, gentlemen, concerning lands in Leiceſterſhire[11].

Sir Auguſtin Nicolls died Aug. 3, 1616, ſeiſed of two thirds of the manor of Halſted, and of two thirds of all the meſſuages, lands, and tenements, belonging to the manor; held of the king in capite by knight's ſervice[12]; and Francis Nicolls, ſon of his elder brother Francis, was his nephew and next heir[13]. Sir Auguſtin, having purchaſed the manor and advowſon of Broughton in Northamptonſhire, preſented Samuel Bolton, M. A. of Brazen-noſe college, Oxford, about 1609, to that rectory; where he died Dec. 17, 1631; and two years after his death were publiſhed the "Funeral Notes" which he had delivered on his patron.

William Nicolls, eſq. third ſon of Francis of Hardwiche, was owner of two thirds of the manor of Halſted in 1619. By Joice Gifford his wife he had three ſons, Auguſtin, William, and Francis; and one daughter.

In 1630 the only freeholder here was Mrs. Nicolls.

Auguſtin Nicolls, eſq. died 8 Feb. 1638-9, ſeiſed of two thirds of the manor of Halſted, with divers lands in that lordſhip, and alſo in Tilton, South Marefield, and Whadborough; and two thirds of the advowſon of the vicarage of Tilton and Halſted; all lately the property of John Tamworth, eſq. and held of the king in capite by the fortieth part of a knight's fee[14].

The lord of the other third part was then ſir George Dalſton, knt. in right of his wife, daughter and coheir of John Tamworth, eſq. late lord of the whole manor.

In 1655, there was collected, in Tilton, Halſted, and South Markfield, for the relief of the poor Proteſtants in Piedmont, the ſum of £1. 4*s.* 4*d.*

The manor of Halſted continues to be divided in three equal parts: one, it is believed, belonging to the late earl of Gainſborough (now to his nephew Gerard-Noel Edwards, eſq.) one part to —— Greaves, eſq. of Ingleby, co. Derby; and the other part, to Holding Shuttleworth, eſq. of Aſton, co. Derby. The late earl of Gainſborough, however, received the whole manerial dues[15].

The hamlet at preſent contains about 30 dwellings.

---

[1] "In Elſtede 3 carucatæ terræ, 2 bovatæ minus; & 1 acra prati. Silva 1 quarentenæ longitudinis, & alia latitudinis." Domeſday, fol. 230. b. 1.

[2] Pat. 5 Edw. IV. pars 2. m. 13.

[3] MS. Chetwynd; from Rot. 5 Edw. VI. n. 13.

[4] Rot. Aux. 20 Edw. III.

[5] See what has been ſaid on this ſubject, and both their portraits, under Laund, p. 323. The name of Gregory lord Cromwell, I ſince find, is entered in a liſt of peers in the life-time of his father, in an antient book in the Heralds' Office, marked H. 13; and in the Appendix to vol. II. of Biſhop Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation, p. 382, William Fulman, rector of Hampton Meyſey in Glouceſterſhire, obſerves, that it was not neceſſary to reſtore the lord Cromwell in blood, for he was made a baron when his father was made an earl, ſo that his blood was not contaminated by his father's attainder.

[6] Eſch. 1 Edw. VI. N° 7. Leic.

[7] Eſch. 10 Eliz.

[8] Eſch. 2 Jac. I.

[9] Will of Chriſtopher Tamworth, eſq. See under the Newark and St. Martin's.

[10] Worthies, Northamptonſhire, p. 288.

[11] 2 Pars Originalia 8 Jac. I. Rot. 54.

[12] Eſch. 14 Jac. I. m. 66. p. 3.

[13] Athen. Oxon. vol. I. p. 561.

[14] Inq. at Hinckley, 21 Aug. 15 Car. I; Cole's Eſcheats, vol. VI. (Harl. MSS. 410.) p. 20.

[15] Mr. Tailby, in a ſecond letter on Robin a Tiptoes (p. 469.) April 7, 1800, adds, "Six or ſeven young trees ſeem, after many contending ſtruggles with the boiſterous winds, now almoſt to bid defiance to their power; though here it is ſometimes exerted with redoubled fury. Snow, it is ſaid, has been known to lay as long upon this hill, in the ſpring, as in the coldeſt Northern parts of Yorkſhire. For my own part, I know it always lays or falls much deeper there, or thereabouts, than it does at Slawſton and its vicinity. Of the three old trees upon this hill in my memory, only one now remains, which appears to have braved the tempeſt for a century or more."

Pedigree

Pedigree of TAMWORTH. (From Harl. MSS. 1429. 23. and Vincent's Lincoln, 150. p. 137.)

Arms: Quarterly, 1. Argent, a feſs dauncetté, between three cocks heads eraſed Sable, armed, creſted, and jalloped Gules a creſcent for difference; Tamworth. 2. Argent, a chevron between 3 garbs Sable, Darby. 3. Argent, a chief Gules ſurmounted by a bend Azure, Leake. 4. Gules, three garbs Argent, within a border Sable bezanty, Clement. 5. Sable a chevron between three church bells Argent, Bell. 6. Azure, ſemé of fleur de lis and a lion rampant guardant Argent, Holland. 7. Gules, two eſtoiles Or, and a canton Argent, Leverton. 8. Ermine, a feſs Azure, fretty Or, Dandelewe. 9. Bendy of ſix Azure and Argent, a ſword in feſs, point towards the ſiniſter, between two lions counterpaſſant guardant Or, Delaronges. 10. Sable three bars Argent, the middle bar charged with three martlets Vert; on a canton Argent a ſaltire Sable, Finch. Impaling, 1. Gules, a croſs couped, checky, Argent and Azure, between ſemé of bezants, Walſingham. 2. Ermine, on a chief indented Sable, an annulet between two trefoils Argent, Bain. 3. Gules, a chevron Argent; in chief a croſs croſslet fitché between two garbs, in baſe a garb between two croſs croſslets fitché, Or, Roiton. 4. Sable, a chevron between three rams heads couped Argent, Ramſay. 5. Sable, on a bend Argent, a bendlet wavy Sable; in the ſiniſter chief point a croſs croſslet fitché Argent, Writtell. 6. as 1. Creſt, a cock Gules, combed, wattled, and legged Or; Plate LXX. fig. 11.

Sir Nicholas Tamworth, knt. was lord of Tamworth in the time of king John. He had iſſue, Sir Giles Tamworth, who was at the ſiege of Acres with king Richard I. had two wives: the firſt called Grace, the daughter of Babthorp, and by her had no iſſue; and his ſecond wife was Elizabeth, daughter of viſcount Tovares, by whom he had iſſue one ſon and one daughter.

Nicholas Tamworth, ſon and heir of ſir Giles Tamworth, knt. married the daughter of —— Darby, of Leverton, co. Lincoln.

Roſa Tamworth, dau. of ſir Giles Tamworth, married to William Kyme, lord of Kyme, of whom the earls of Angus, called Umfravills, and the lord Talboys are deſcended.

Nicholas Tamworth, ſon and heir, married Agnes daughter of ſir Lambard Buſſy, knight, lord of Hagham, in the county of Lincoln; he had iſſue one ſon and one daughter.

Sir Thomas Tamworth, knt. married Elizabeth, daughter of Thymoldby of Poultam, co. Lincoln; and had iſſue, Maud, daughter of Nicholas Tamworth, and ſiſter to ſir Thomas Tamworth, knt. was married to ſir John Rochford, knt. of whom the lords Sheffield and Deware are deſcended.

Nicholas Tamworth, eſq. ſon and heir of ſir John Tamworth, knt. married to his firſt wife Anne, daughter of Gilbert lord Avſley, and had iſſue; and after he married the daughter of lord Cantelupe, by whom he had no iſſue.

Sir Nicholas Tamworth, knt. ſon and heir of the laſt Nicholas, married to his firſt wife the daughter of the lord Willoughby, and by her had iſſue; and after, he married Jane, daughter of —— Cromwell, and by her had no iſſue.

Sir John Tamworth, ſon and heir of ſir Nicholas, married the daughter and heir of ſir Simon Leake, knt. lord of Leake in the county of Lincoln, and had iſſue, John Tamworth eſq. who married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kyme, of Sleford, deſcended of the lord Kyme.

John Tamworth, ſon and heir of John, married Iſabel, daughter of John Ayſcough, and had iſſue, John Tamworth, that married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of ſir John Clement, knt. and had iſſue. This ſir John Clement was ſon of William Clement, who married Cecilia, daughter and one of the heirs of William Leverton. This ſir Clement was the ſon of John Clement, who married Joanna, daughter and one of the heirs of Gilbert Bell, of Boſton; which Bell had married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Richard Holland; and this Richard Holland was lineally deſcended of ſir Ralph Holland, knt. who lived in the time of king William the Conqueror. Of the younger houſe of theſe Hollands, which was of Swinſtead, was deſcended Thomas Holland earl of Kent, and Holland duke of Exeter, and the earls of Huntingdon, and alſo the moſt part of the nobility of this realm, as by deſcent it doth plainly appear.

Thomas Tamworth, ſon and heir of John Tamworth and his wife Elizabeth Clement, had iſſue John Tamworth, that married to his firſt wife Grace, daughter of Robert Cowton, of Brough; of whom is deſcended Chriſtopher Tamworth, as hereafter ſhall appear; and after, he married Katharine, daughter and heir of —— Dandelewe; by whom he had iſſue, 1. William, who died 1521; 2. Thomas, of whom hereafter; and 3. Chriſtopher, a prieſt, who died 1545[1].

John Tamworth, eſq. ſon and heir of John and of Grace Cowton, married Iſabel, daughter of John Barton, of Holme, in the county of Nottingham, and had iſſue,

John Tamworth, eſq. that married Anne, daughter of John Meeres, of Kirton in Holland in Lincolnſhire, and had iſſue, Chriſtopher Tamworth, of Leake, Ryall, and Halſted, in com. Lincoln, Leic. and Rutland; died 13 Dec. 1571.

The ſaid Chriſtopher Tamworth, eſq. married Margaret, daughter and heir of John Digby, of Preſton, in the county of Rutland; and had iſſue John, Henry, and Chriſtopher, Elizabeth and Dorothy.

Thomas Tamworth, ſecond ſon of John Tamworth, begotten of his ſecond wife, which was Katharine Dandelewe, married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Philip Delaronges, who married Elizabeth, daughter and one of the heirs of James Finch, and ſiſter to the counteſs of Kent.

This Thomas Tamworth[2], eſq. had iſſue one ſon, John Tamworth[3], eſq. of the privy chamber to the queen's majeſty. He married Chriſtiana, daughter of William Walſingham, of Kent; and died April 19, 1569.

John[4] Tamworth, eſq. ſon and heir of Chriſtopher and Margaret, married Dorothy, daughter and heir of Thomas Colby, of Suffolk (who was afterwards re-married to ſir Francis Willoughby, knight); had two ſons, Colby and Arthur, who both died ſ. p.; and three daughters, Bridget, Dorothy, and Elizabeth (married to —— Pecke, of Loddington.)

On a white ſtone-tomb in the chancel St. Botolph, Alderſgate, adorned with ſeveral coats of arms, &c.; amongſt which were, Tamworth, impaling, Argent, three bars Sable, on each of the firſt a mullet in bend of the ſecond, Thymoldby; fig. 12; and Tamworth, impaling Sable, a fleur de lis Argent, Digby; fig. 13.

"Mortua Tamworthi ſpectas monumenta, viator?
  Quin potiùs vivus, diſce, quis ille fuit.
Si proavos quæras, generoſo ſanguine ductus,
  Uſque per innumeros invenietur avos.
Si mores, dicam mores? nec amantior æqui,
  Nec patriæ quiſquam, nec probitatis erat.
Si quæ conditio (ſi quid ſit laudis in illâ),
  Vita ſub illuſtri principe clara fuit.
Et ſi principibus laus eſt placuiſſe probatis,
  Laudibus hæc pars eſt annumeranda ſuis.
Jam volucris ſua luſtra novem tranſegerat ætas,
  Quum Mors hunc ſævâ falce cruenta metat.
Hæc ſatis, hoſpes; abi, nec vivere differ in horas,
  Quæ ſua pars hodie, cras tua forſan erit.
Obiit 19° die Aprilis, 1569."

2. On a ſpacious old tomb on the North ſide the communion-table of the ſame church:

"Here lyeth the body of Chriſtopher Tamworth[5], of Graye's Inne, Holborn,
in the county of Middleſex, eſq.
third ſon of Chriſtopher Tamworth, of Halſted,

---

[1] Precentor of the church of Lincoln 1538; and in the ſame year prebendary of St. Martin's in that cathedral, which in 1544 he exchanged for Dunham; and died in 1545. See his epitaph in Willis's Cathedrals, vol. II. p. 86.

[2] Thomas Tamworth, who died about 1504, held the manor of Sandon in Eſſex of the king, as of his caſtle of Dover.

[3] John Tamworth, eſq. purchaſed in 1562 the joint manors of Honeylands and Pentriches in the pariſhes of Enfield and Cheſhunt. He had licence, 1 July, 1564, to alienate Sandon-hall manor; and in 1565 he ſettled the manor of Wendon, in the pariſh of Fulham, on his wife Chriſtiana. Morant's Eſſex, vol. II. p. 26; and ſee Lyſons' Environs of London.

[4] John Tamworth, eſq. late one of the queen's majeſty's moſt honourable privy chamber, departed, at his houſe at Fulham, on Tueſday the 19th of April, 1569; and was buried in the pariſh church of St. Botolph at Alderſgate in London, the 15th of the ſaid month. The ſaid John Tamworth married Chryſtyan, the daughter of William Walſingham; and by her had iſſue a daughter that died young. The executors to the ſaid John Tamworth are theſe: Sir Walter Mildmay, knt. one of the queen's moſt honourable privy chamber; Kellam Digby, of Stokedry, in the county of Rutland, eſq.; Chriſtopher Tamworth, of Tilton, in the county of Leiceſter, eſq.; and Edmund Dennyng, gent. The mourners at the ſaid funeral were theſe: Chriſtopher Tamworth, eſq.; Henry Sackford, one of the queen's majeſty's privy chamber, eſq.; Thomas Sydney, of Lynne, in the county of Norfolk, eſq. The officers at arms that were at the ſaid funeral were theſe: Robert Cooke, eſq. alias Clarenceux king of arms; Edward Atkinſon, alias Somerſet Herald of arms; and William Dethyke, alias Rougecroſs purſuivant at arms. In witneſs, &c. Certificate in the Heralds College, I. 5. p. 196. b.

[5] See ſome former notice of this gentleman, vol. II. p. 624.

in the county of Leiceſter, eſq.
who died the 19th of September, 1624, being of the age of threeſcore and ten yeeres[1].

"He having dealt kindly and liberally with his wife, and many of his kindred and friends, and to the poor of divers pariſhes, hath alſo by his will given £20. of current money of England, to the dean and prebends of the college of St. Peter's, of the city of Weſtminſter, in the county of Middleſex, to be employed by them about the reparations of the ſaid pariſh-church of St. Peter's. And 400 marks, to the intent that with that money there ſhould be twenty marks worth of lands of inheritance of yearly rent to be purchaſed, whereby there may be one in holy orders maintained, to ſay divine ſervice, ſuch as the Church of England ſhall allow of, every work-day in the year, twice perpetually, viz. at or about nine of the clock in the morning, and at or about three of the clock in the afternoon, in the pariſh of St. Botolph without Alderſgate.

"And £400. to the end and intent that there ſhould be £20. of lands, of annual revenue of inheritance by the year bought with it, to allow perpetually to ſix poor men, and four poor widows paſt labour, dwelling and inhabiting within the pariſh of Botolph aforeſaid, 40 ſhillings a year apiece, to be paid quarterly, with this limitation, that the ſaid poor people ſhall be bound to repair every work-day in the year, twice a day, to hear divine ſervice in the pariſh-church aforeſaid, at the hours and terms aforeſaid.

"And 200 marks more, to purchaſe lands of inheritance[2], of the annual value by the year of £6. 3*s.* 4*d.* for the maintenance of one within holy orders, to ſay divine ſervice as aforeſaid, every work-day in the week twice, through the whole year perpetually, in the pariſh-church of St. Martin in Leiceſter, at the hours and times afore-mentioned.

"All which ſums of money he willed ſhould be actually and really delivered into the hands and poſſeſſion of the dean and prebends of Weſtminſter aforeſaid within twenty days next after his death, for the performance and uſe afore-mentioned within the ſpace and time of two years at the uppermoſt after his death.

"And having made Audrey, one of the daughters of Charles Allayne[3], of the Mote, in the county of Kent, eſq. ſon and heir of ſir Chriſtopher Allayne, knt. his dear and loving wife, his full executrix; ſhe faithfully performed the ſame, according to the truſt repoſed in her huſband's will; and, in remembrance of him, hath at her own coſt and charges erected this monument."

The above inſcriptions are no longer to be found in St. Botolph's church; but the following one is placed on a mural tablet againſt the South wall:

"Here lieth the body of CHRISTOPHER TAMWORTH, of Gray's Inn, in the county of Middleſex, eſq. who dieth the 19th of Sept. 1624, aged 70 years; and by will, bearing date the 28th April, 1624, gave to the poor of this pariſh at his death 20 marks. Alſo £33. 6*s.* 8*d.* per ann. for the following purpoſes; for a perſon in holy orders to ſay divine ſervice every working-day in the year in the church of St. Botolph, 20 marks yearly; to 6 poor men, of this pariſh, who are paſt their labour, during their lives; and to 4 poor widows of this pariſh, during their lives or widowhood, 40*s.* apiece yearly, payable quarterly, upon condition that they all ſhall attend the daily ſervice in the church of St. Botolph.

AS FLOWERS FADE WHEN THEY FRESH BEE;
THE TIME WILL COME THAT SO SHALL WEE."

Beneath, a weeping boy reclines on a Death's head with his right hand, and holding an hour-glaſs in his left; behind him ſome fading flowers, &c.

In the chancel of Weekley church, co. Northampton,

"Here lyeth buried Dorothy,
one of the daughters of Chriſtopher Tamworth, of Halſted, in the county of Leiceſter, eſq.
who was firſt married to Thomas Cotton, of Connington, in the county of Huntingdon, eſq.
by whom ſhe had iſſue four ſons[4] and three daughters.
The ſons died without iſſue.
The ſecond daughter Frances was married to ſir Edward Mountague, Knight of the Bath at the Coronation of king James, now lord Mountague of Boughton:
She lived a godly life, and made a faithful end;
departing this world the 7th of January, 1623, being 70 years of age."

In a lozenge at top the arms and creſt of Tamworth.

At Hardwick in Northamptonſhire.

On a braſs tablet on a flat ſtone in the South aile:

Arms: Sable, three pheons Argent, fig. 14.

"Hic jacet Gulielmus Nicolls, generoſus, pater Thomæ Nicolls, armigeri, defuncti, qui obiit ſeptimo die Septembris,
anno regni ſereniſſimæ Elizabethæ reginæ 17°,
anno ætatis ſuæ 96.
Figulus ex eodem luto fracti vaſis fecit vas aliud, ſicut placuit in oculis ejus."

On a braſs tablet in a free-ſtone on the ground in the chancel, Nicolls; impaling, 1. Seymour, two wings conjoined in leure Or. 2. Vaire Argent and Azure. 3. Argent, three demi-lions rampant Gules. 4. Per bend Argent and Gules, three roſes counterchanged. 5. Argent, on a bend Gules, three leopards faces Or. 6. As the firſt; fig. 15. Beneath is this inſcription:

"Shee that of long her countries love poſſeſt,
Lived in God's feare, in Chriſt her truſt repoſed;
And died at laſt his ſervant true profeſt,
Lyes with her body here in earth encloſed:
Retayning that which Death cannot diſſever,
A bleſſed ſoule, and lyving name for ever.
Anne Nicholls, wife of Francis Nicholls, gent.
died the 13th daye of November, in the 32d yeare of the raigne of queene Elizabeth,
in the 37th year of her age, 1591."

On the South ſide of the chancel is a ſmall mural alabaſter monument, with the arms of Nicolls at top; and on a braſs plate under them the portrait of a man in armour, and his wife, in the habit of the times; behind the man a ſon, a daughter behind the woman, and this inſcription on a tablet of alabaſter below:

"HIC JACET FRANCISCUS NICHOLLS,
FILIUS ET FRATER NATU MAXIMUS
THOMÆ NICHOLLS, ARMIGERI,
ET AUGUSTINI NICHOLLS, MILITIS,
QUI, POST VARIOS CASUS ET CONTRARIAS CONDITIONES
VITÆ HUJUS VANÆ ET MISERRIMÆ,
PORTUM TANDEM IN SINCERA ET VERA FIDE CHRISTI PIE ET PERPLACIDE OBTINUIT.
DUXIT UXORI ANNAM COGNOMINE SEMORE,
E QUA TANTUM GENUIT MARIAM ET FRANCISCUM, FILIAM PIETATE, CHARITATE,
ET VIRGINITATE SPECIOSAM,
ANNORUM NOVENDECIM JUXTA SE QUOQUE SEPULTAM, ET FILIUM HORUM OMNIUM MOESTISSIMUM SUPERSTITEM, OBIIT I° DIE APRILIS, 1604, ET ÆTATIS SUÆ 47.
QUI FRANCISCUS, POSTEA BARONETTUS DE HARDWICK, OBIIT 4° DIE MARTIS, ANNO D'NI 1641."

---

[1] Mr. Chriſtopher Tamworth, of Gray's Inn, gent. ſon of Chriſtopher Tamworth, of Halſted, in the county of Leiceſter, eſq. and Margery his wife, daughter of John Digby, of Preſton, in the county of Lincoln, eſq. departed this life at the lady Waller's houſe in the Strand, in the pariſh of St. Martin's in the fields, on the 26th of September, 1624, being Sunday, and was buried on Monday night following in the church of St. Botolph at Alderſgate. He married Audrey, daughter of Charles Alleyn, of the Mote in the county of Kent, eſq. by whom he had two ſons, Henry and Waller, both died young, before the death of their father. He left for his only executrix the aforeſaid Audrey his wife. This certificate was taken by me William Penſon, Lancaſter Herald, on the ſecond day of October, in the year aforeſaid; and the truth thereof teſtified by the aforeſaid Audrey his wife by the ſubſcription of her name. Funeral Certificate in the Heralds Office, I. 22. p. 108.

[2] The eſtate purchaſed lies at Whetſtone in Leiceſterſhire. The rents are paid by the Corporation to the vicar of St. Martin's.

[3] Theſe Allaynes, or Alleynes, had the manor of Greſley too in com. Derb. (bought in again of late from their repreſentatives by the Greſley family of Drakelow.) Mrs. Andrew Tamworth, widow, of Church Greſley, was buried "(there)" 24 Jan. 1656.

[4] The Cotton Pedigree (vol. II. p. 834.) notices but three ſons; and in that pedigree Frances is by miſtake ſaid to be the wife of Mr. Mulſho, inſtead of Mr. Montague.

At Faxton in Northamptonſhire, under a ſtone dial over the gate of an antient manor-houſe, formerly the reſidence of the Nicolls family, is this inſcription:

"MDCXXV, anno primo Caroli primi.
Ne diſpar quid diſpliceat;
nam trium conſanguineorum, tribus ac regnantibus, hoc exiguum opus eſt."

On the other ſide of the gate, fronting the houſe:

"Tres ſucceſſivi poſſeſſores,
Anna, Auguſtinus, & Franciſcus:
Tribus principibus invicem ſuccedentibus,
Elizabetha, Jacobo, & Carolo."

In the Eaſt window of the church are the arms of Nicolls; impaling, Gules, three pair of hands conjoined Argent; fig. 16; and this inſcription adjoining:

"Cujus inſignia hæc loca tenent, is conſecratione hujus capellæ eadem inſignivit."

On a tablet of wood near the altar, under theſe arms; Gules, three pair of hands conjoined Argent; impaling, Argent, a bend between two mullets Sable, Pell; fig. 17.

"Here lyeth the body of Anne B . . . . . . mother of Judge Nicolls, who, the . . . . day of February,
in the 82d yeare of her age;
. . . . a crowne of glory . . . when in the way of Righteouſneſs."

On a tomb of black and white marble, between the two middle arches of the church, is the figure of a Judge in his robes, kneeling before a deſk with a book on it. On the right hand is the ſtatue of Juſtice, and on the left that of Wiſdom. In a ſmall compartment above, containing the arms of Nicolls, with a creſcent for difference; creſt, a wolf's head eraſed Sable, fig. 19; between the figures of Fortitude and Charity, and over the arms a ſmall pyramid:

"What marks in God's law for a Judge requir'd,
What parts in great men of the beſt admir'd;
What gifts of Nature in a private man,
What ſigns of grace in a true Chriſtian;
This ſhadow would decypher if it could,
Yet what but Nature, Love, and Beauty ſhould."

On a black marble tablet [1], under the Judge's figure:

"To the moſt religious and renowned memory of ſir Auguſtine Nicolls, knt. late of Faxton in Northamptonſhire [here buried]: who was ſecond ſonne of Thomas Nicolls, eſq. of the ſame county. He was ſtudent of the laws in the Middle Temple, London; became reader there in the laſt year of Queen Elizabeth, of whom he received his writ of ſerjeant at the law the Michaelmas term imediately followinge; afterwards ſerjeant to Prince Henry of famous memory and the Queen his mother; then one of his Majeſties juſtices of his court of Common Pleas, and keeper of the great ſeal to the moſt illuſtrious and mighty Prince Charles: who, having laboured in the high and painful calling of a moſt reverend and juſt Judge for the ſpace of four years, fell under the heavy burthen of it [here at Kendall], ſitting then Juſtice of aſſiſe; and, coming to give judgement upon others, by his comfortable and Chriſtian departure received (we aſſuredly believe) his judgement with mercy, in the yeare of our Lord 1616, the third day of Auguſt, in the 14th yeare of the reigne of our ſovereign lord king James, and the 57th yeare of his age."

Under the figure of Wiſdom:

"One of the Cardinal Virtues is his name,
The four too few to comprehend his fame:
Which now are but his ſhadow's weak ſupporters,
More then muſt be his ſubſtance true reporters."

Under Juſtice:

"Weak Muſe, that would decypher out ſuch joyes,
That now are endleſs, by paſt fading toyes;
Virtue's his proper and peculiar tombe,
Outlaſting marble, living till day's dome."

Below the great tablet:

"This monument was new adorned by ſir Edward Nicolls, bart. anno Dñi 1705."

Before the Judge are the arms of Nicolls; impaling Pell; fig. 18. Behind, Nicolls, with a creſcent for difference; impaling, Gules, on a feſs between three maſcles Or, three eſcalops of the field, within a bordure engrailed of the ſecond, ſemé de torteaux; fig. 19. At the bottom, the arms of Nicolls ſingle.

On a mural tablet, in the North tranſept of the Abbey-church, Bath:

"Hic ſepelitur corpus Mariæ Nicolls, uxoris Auguſtini Nicolls, de Faxton, in agro North'ton, militis, unius juſticiari-orum dñi regis de banco, quæ ſalutem hic quærendo mortem invenit 4° Maii, 1614, annoque regis Jacobi 12°.
Mors hominem ubique expectat.
Ubique etiam expectet eam homo.
Ad vocem tubæ reſurgent mortui.
Anima moritur per culpam, & reſurget per gratiam:
Corpus moritur ut per pœnam, & reſurget per gratiam."

On a tablet of wood near the altar at Faxton, the arms of Nicolls; impaling, Or, three Gules barbed and ſeeded proper, fig. 20; and this inſcription:

"Here lyeth the body of Mary Nicolls, late wife of Francis Nicolls, of Faxton, eſq.
who dyed the 10th day of July,
in the 47th yeare of her age; 1634 of Grace."

Againſt the North wall of the chancel, on a black marble tablet in a compartment of alabaſter:

"M. S.
EDVARDI NICOLLS, baroneti, ab illuſtri Seimororum ſtirpe oriundi, corpus lapide vicino clauditur:
cujus domus dum vixit univerſis, pectus bonis & literatis, arca egenis ſemper patuit.
In quo præter cæteras virtutes ſuas,
Auguſtini patrui religio probitaſque,
Franciſci patris in homines ſuas humanitas, tanquam domeſticæ & hereditariæ reſplenduere.
Uxores habuit duas;
1m, JUDITHAM ROLANDI ST. JOHN equitis filiam; quæ 7 filias ipſi peperit.
2m, JANAM STEPHANI SOAMES equitis filiam 8m;
ex quâ ſuſcepit filiolum unicum EDVARDUM, filiaſque duas SUSANNAM & JANAM, quos ejuſdem tutelæ moriens reliquit.
Vixit annos 63, menſes 4. Obiit Febr. 28°, 1682°.
Chariſſimo conjugi uxor mœrens H. M. P."

SOUTH MARKFIELD,

formerly written Mardefeld and Mardefeud, a hamlet of Tilton, ſituate within the hundred of Framland, was, at the time of the general ſurvey, a member of the royal manor of Rodelei; and, under the name of altera Merdefelde (to diſtinguiſh it from North Merdefelde in the pariſh of Ouſton) is ſtated to contain three ploughlands and eight acres of meadow [2].

The hiſtory of North Markfield has been already given in a former volume [3]; where ſome particulars of South Markfield have alſo been introduced, it having been at the time extremely difficult to ſeparate the few notices which occurred relative to the two hamlets.

In 1300, it was found that Agnes, wife of John, ſon of John de St. Pierre, deceaſed, held certain lands at Mardefield [4].

In 1310, it was found that South Mardefelde had been given by king Henry III. to the Knights Templars, from whom it came to the Knights Hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem; and alſo that John de St. Pierre held at his death certain tenements in that lordſhip of the king in capite, by the ſergeancy of carrying, together with his partners, at their own expence, the king's writs, for the ſpace of forty days, upon the king's ſummons, "per ſervitium portandi, propriis cuſtis, brevia domini regis per quadraginta dies ad ſummonitionem regis, in Angliâ;" which ſergeancy was rented at 15*s.*[1]; and that Baldwin de Scheſtinton's ſerjeancy, for which he ought to carry the king's writs as above, was alienated; that Henry de Mardefield held ſix bovates of land in Mardefield aforeſaid (which was worth 30*s.* and for which he had paid a fine of 10*s.*) by the ſerjeancy aforeſaid; and theſe two did the ſervice of the twelfth part of a knight's fee; and alſo that Agnes de St. Pierre, ſenior, one of the daughters and coheirs of John de St. Pierre aforeſaid, was then aged 8 years; Alice de St. Pierre, another daughter, was aged 4 years; and Agnes de St. Pierre, junior, a third daughter, was aged 2 years[2].

---

[1] The ſame inſcription, with the addition of the five words here printed in hooks, was alſo placed on an alabaſter tomb againſt the Weſt wall of the North aile of Kendal church. See Dugdale's Weſtmorland, in the College of Arms, fol. 10. b.

[2] Domeſday, fol. 230. b. 1.

[3] See vol. II. p. 765.

[4] Eſch. 28 Edw. I. N° 7. Leic.

This Agnes appears to have been married to Adam de Colſton, who elſewhere is called Clifton[3].

In 1327, it was found that Agnes de St. Pierre, deceaſed, held the third part of one meſſuage, and the third part of two virgates of land, with the appurtenances, containing 10 acres of land, in South Merdefield, of the king in capite, by the ſervice of 3*s.* 4*d.* a year, payable to the ſheriff of Leiceſter; and that Alice, ſiſter of the ſame Agnes, was her next heir[4].

In 1333, it was found that it would be no damage to the king, or any other, if leave was given to Agnes daughter of John de St. Pierre, to give one meſſuage and 25 acres and a half of land, with the appurtenances, in South Merdefield, to Alice Boye, of Wymundham; and that the ſame Agnes might alſo give the moiety of one meſſuage and 40 acres of land, with the appurtenances, in the ſame town, to . . . . .[5]; and that the aforeſaid meſſuage and 26 acres and a half of land were held of the king in capite by the ſervice of 3*s.* 4*d.* a year, to be paid into the king's exchequer; and the aforeſaid moiety of one meſſuage and 10 acres of land were held of the king in capite, by the ſervice of . . . . a year, to be paid into the king's exchequer[6].

In 1364, certain lands, tenements, rents, and ſervices in South Mardefeld, parcel of the manor of Rothley, which had been purchaſed from William de Knoſſington, rector of Barrow, were given to Ouſton abbey, by William de Burgh, rector of Babbeworth[7].

In 1365, it was found that Adam de Colſton was ſeiſed of one meſſuage and 60 acres of land, with the appurtenances, in Mardfield, held of the king in capite, by grand ſergeancy, and the ſervice of 5*s.* 4*d.* to be paid into the exchequer by the ſheriff of Leiceſter[8].

In 1425, Thomas Williamſon and Agnes his wife, having lately purchaſed to themſelves and their heirs two meſſuages and ſix bovates of land in South Mardefield, of William Palmer, of Kayham, without the king's licence, were pardoned of their ſo doing[9].

In 1592, it was found that ſir James Harrington, knt. died ſeiſed of certain lands in Markfield[10].

In 1565, Chriſtopher Tamworth, eſq. was exonerated of 53*s.* 4*d.* for the tithe of Mardefield, by him alledged to be part of the manor of Halſted and Tilton[11]. He died in 1569 ſeiſed of land in South Markfield[12].

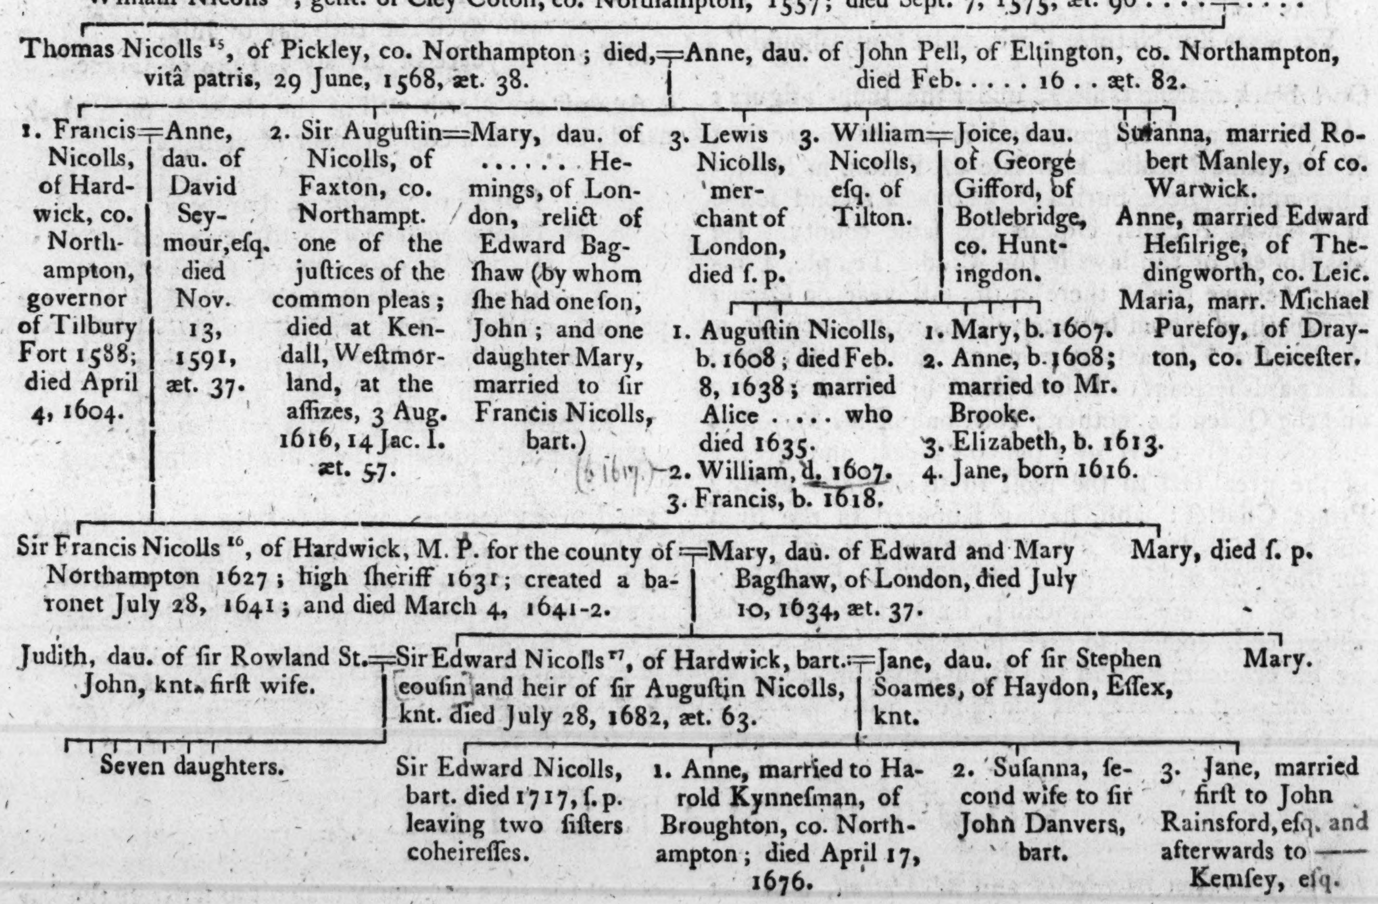
June 6, 1604, it was found that Colby Tamworth died ſeiſed of divers matters in South Merdefield[13].

Thomas Cooper Hincks, eſq. is the preſent owner of the manor; and the hamlet contains three or four well-built houſes, inhabited by reſpectable families; and in the few cloſes belonging to the lordſhip are alſo ſome ſhepherds' cots.

The chapel (where formerly ſervice was performed three days in the week) has long been deſecrated.

WHADBOROUGH, a hamlet partly in this pariſh, has been already deſcribed in p. 332.

Pedigree of NICOLLS, of TILTON; and of HARDWICK, co. Northampton.



William Nicolls[14], gent. of Cley Coton, co. Northampton, 1557; died Sept. 7, 1575, æt. 96 . . . . = ...

Thomas Nicolls[15], of Pickley, co. Northampton; died, vitâ patris, 29 June, 1568, æt. 38. = Anne, dau. of John Pell, of Eltington, co. Northampton, died Feb. . . . . 16 . . æt. 82.

1. Francis Nicolls, of Hardwick, co. Northampton, governor of Tilbury Fort 1588; died April 4, 1604. = Anne, dau. of David Seymour, eſq. died Nov. 13, 1591, æt. 37.

2. Sir Auguſtin Nicolls, of Faxton, co. Northampt. one of the juſtices of the common pleas; died at Kendall, Weſtmorland, at the aſſizes, 3 Aug. 1616, 14 Jac. I. æt. 57. = Mary, dau. of . . . . . . Hemings, of London, relict of Edward Bagſhaw (by whom ſhe had one ſon, John; and one daughter Mary, married to ſir Francis Nicolls, bart.)

3. Lewis Nicolls, merchant of London, died ſ. p.

3. William Nicolls, eſq. of Tilton. = Joice, dau. of George Gifford, of Botlebridge, co. Huntingdon.

Suſanna, married Robert Manley, of co. Warwick.
Anne, married Edward Heſilrige, of Thedingworth, co. Leic.
Maria, marr. Michael Purefoy, of Drayton, co. Leiceſter.

1. Auguſtin Nicolls, b. 1608; died Feb. 8, 1638; married Alice . . . . who died 1635.
(b 1619.) 2. William, d. 1607.
3. Francis, b. 1618.

1. Mary, b. 1607.
2. Anne, b. 1608; married to Mr. Brooke.
3. Elizabeth, b. 1613.
4. Jane, born 1616.

Sir Francis Nicolls[16], of Hardwick, M. P. for the county of Northampton 1627; high ſheriff 1631; created a baronet July 28, 1641; and died March 4, 1641-2. = Mary, dau. of Edward and Mary Bagſhaw, of London, died July 10, 1634, æt. 37.

Mary, died ſ. p.

Judith, dau. of ſir Rowland St. John, knt. firſt wife. = Sir Edward Nicolls[17], of Hardwick, bart. couſin & nephew and heir of ſir Auguſtin Nicolls, knt. died July 28, 1682, æt. 63. = Jane, dau. of ſir Stephen Soames, of Haydon, Eſſex, knt.

Mary.

Seven daughters.

Sir Edward Nicolls, bart. died 1717, ſ. p. leaving two ſiſters coheireſſes.

1. Anne, married to Harold Kynneſman, of Broughton, co. Northampton; died April 17, 1676.

2. Suſanna, ſecond wife to ſir John Danvers, bart.

3. Jane, married firſt to John Rainsford, eſq. and afterwards to —— Kemſey, eſq.

---

[1] To be yearly paid into the king's exchequer, for all ſervices. Lib. de Lovel.

[2] Eſch. 4 Edw. II. N° 20. Leic.

[3] See vol. II. p. 765.

[4] Eſch. 1 Edw. III. N° 19. Leic.

[5] The Record is blank; but I preſume it ſhould be to Alice Boye aforeſaid. F. PECK.

[6] Ad quod dampnum, N° 62. Leic.

[7] See vol. II. p. 765.

[8] Eſch. 39 Hen. III; ex Libro de Lovel.

[9] Pat. 4 Hen. VI. pars 2. m. 20.

[10] Eſch. 31 Aug. 34 Eliz.

[11] Mich. Rec. 7 Eliz. Rot. 31.

[12] Eſch. 11 Eliz.

[13] Eſch. 2 Jac. I. See the particulars before under Halſted, p. 476.

[14] He died poſſeſſed of a meſſuage and lands at Clipſton in Northamptonſhire.

[15] He poſſeſſed, at his death, the manor of Clay Coton, which had been ſettled on him by his father; and alſo the manor of Hardwick, and the advowſon of Great Houghton, all in the county of Northampton; and which he left to his ſon Francis, then a minor, 15 years old.

[16] A Samuel Nicolls (of this family) was admitted of Gray's Inn, May 24, 1648.

[17] The vicarages of All Saints in Northampton, Guilſborough, Moulton, Oundle, Piſford, and Rothwell, received each an augmentation of £30. a year by the will of ſir Edward Nicolls; who gave alſo £10. a year for prayers twice a week at Oundle. He poſſeſſed ſome property at Sulby and at Brixworth.

TUGBY,

TUGBY,

antiently called Tokeby and Thokeby, is ſituated on a dry gravelly eminence on the South ſide of the turnpike-road leading from Uppingham to Leiceſter. From the latter place it is diſtant twelve miles; from the former ſeven. The lordſhip is bounded by its own hamlets of Eaſt Norton and Keythorpe; Goadby, Rolleſton, Skeffington, and Lodington; and, in the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, is within the deanry of Goſcote.

Mr. Wyrley, under Tugby, ſays, "Hic ebullit fluvius qui ad Godebie, & inter Noſley & Halughton, inter Tur Langton & Stanton, ad Glowſton, & inter Langton & Cranhow, & ſic in Weland, currit."

At the time of the general ſurvey, Tochebi was returned as a member of the royal manor of Rodolei, containing ſix ploughlands, two acres of meadow, and a wood two furlongs long, and one broad[1].

The family of Verdun became poſſeſſed of the fee of Tugby very ſoon after the Conqueſt; for, in the reign of king Henry II, Bertram de Verdun gave the church and all his demeſne lands here to the abbey of Croxden in Staffordſhire, which was of his foundation[2].

From Thomas the ſon of Bertram we ſoon after find the following grant:

"Thomas de Verdun omnibus hominibus ſuis Francis & Anglis. Sciatis me dediſſe Henrico de Thokebeâ in feodo & hereditate, pro homagio & ſervicio ſuo, unam virgatam terre in Thokebi, quam Simon & Ailmerus tenuerunt, &c.; iſtam predictam terram dedi predicto Henrico & heredibus ſuis liberè, & quietè, & ſolutè, in boſco, in plano & pratis, in paſcuis, in aquis, in viis, in ſervitiis, & in omnibus libertatibus, per prenominatum ſervicium. Teſtibus; Ernaldo Seneſcallo, Will̄o Fitun, Normano Pantulf, Rad̄o de Biſegiâ, Henrico Manſell, Nich̄o de Edun, Rob̄to de Champayne, Adâ de Aldirletâ, Milone de Verdun, Eliâ de Belleton, Eliâ clerico de Lucterordiâ, & pluribus aliis[3]."

Tugby is not noticed in the Teſta de Nevill, compiled about the year 1240; but Caythorp is therein deſcribed as conſiſting of two ploughlands.

In 1273, John lord de Verdun died ſeiſed of the manor of Thokeby, co. Leiceſter, and of the manor of Coteſbeche in the ſame county; and Theobald de Verdun, next heir of the ſaid John, was then aged 22 and more[4].

In 1274, it was found that John de Nevill, who was outlawed, had given to Theobald his ſon two mills in Tokeby, one whereof was a water-mill, and the other a wind-mill[5].

The lordſhip of Tugby was afterwards divided among ſeveral partitioners; Thomas de Chaworth, John de Brabazon, and William de Sauſton, being ſeiſed of lands here in the time of king Edward III.

In the Itinerary of 1280, Tugby and Skeffington anſwered collectively as one vill.

In 1346, the abbot of Croxden (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 3*s.* 4*d.* for a twelfth part of one knight's fee in Tokeby; and William Sauſton and Thomas de Chaworth the ſame ſum for a like portion of a knight's fee; both parcel of the fee of Verdun[6].

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Tugby was rated at 2*l.* 2*s.* 0*d.*; and in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum; but an abatement was then made of 4*s.*; Keythorpe at 1*l.* 10*s.*; and 10*s.* abated; Eaſt Norton at 1*l.* 8*s.* 0*d.*; and 4*s.* abated.

May 1, 1448, king Henry VI. granted to Thomas Palmer, eſq. and his heirs liberty of free-warren in all their demeſne lands at Tokeby[7].

"This bill, made the firſt day of April, in the 38th year of the reign of our ſovereign lord Henry the Eighth, by the grace of God, king of England and of France, defender of the faith, lord of Ireland, and in earth ſupreme head of the church of England, witneſſeth that I Edward North, eſq. treaſurer of the revenues of the augmentations of our ſovereign lord the king's crown, have received of Rowland Shakelady, gentleman, the ſum of £100. ſterling, in part of payment of £390. due to the king's highneſs for the gift, grant, and clear purchaſe of the manor of Tugby, with the appurtenances, in the county of Leiceſter, and the chapel or parſonage of Eaſt Norton, with all meſſuages, houſes, barns, tithes, oblations, and profits thereto belonging, with their appurtenances, in the county of Leiceſter; which manor, chapel, and parſonage, late belonged and appertained to the late monaſtery of Croxton, in the county of Stafford, now diſſolved; and all other meſſuages, lands, tenements, rents, and reverſions, ſervices, and hereditaments, in Tugby, Eaſt Norton, Burton Overy, and Mountſorell, belonging to the ſame late monaſtery; which ſaid ſum of £100. ſterling was due to the king's highneſs at the feaſt of Eaſter laſt paſt, being in the year of our Lord God 1540, as by a recognizance in that behalf made and acknowledged before the right worſhipful ſir Richard Rich, knight, chancellor of the ſaid court of augmentation of the revenues of our ſaid ſovereign lord the king's crown, bearing date the 10th day of September, in the ſaid 31ſt year of our ſovereign lord's reign; whereunto the ſaid Rowland Shakelady, with others, ſtand bounden, as by the ſame recognizance more plainly appeareth. In witneſs whereof, I have ſealed and ſubſcribed this bill with mine own hand the day and year firſt above-written,

(The ſeal gone.) E. NORTH[8]."

"This bill, made the 29th day of June, in the 34th year of the reign of our ſovereign lord king Henry the Eighth, witneſſeth that I ſir Edward North, knight, treaſurer of the augmentations, have received of Rowland Shakelady, of London, gent. (by the hands of Richard Nele, eſq. the ſum of £$^{\text{xx}}_{\text{iiii}}$X. ſterling, to the uſe of the king's highneſs, in full payment of the ſum of £ccc$^{\text{xx}}_{\text{iiii}}$x. for the gift, grant, and clear purchaſe of the manor of Tugby, with the appurtenances, in the county of Leiceſter; and the chapel or parſonage of Eaſt Norton, with appurtenances, which pertained to the late monaſtery of Croxden, in the county of Stafford, now diſſolved; which ſaid ſum of £$^{\text{xxx}}_{\text{iiii}}$X. ſterling was due at the feaſt of Eaſter laſt paſt, viz. anno Dn̄i M°D°XLII°, as by a recognizance thereof made more plainly may and ſhall appear. In witneſs whereof, hereunto I have ſet my ſeal, and ſubſcribed my name, the day and year firſt above-written. E. NORTH[9]."

This manor came, by purchaſe, to Richard Nele, knt. lord of Keythorpe and Preſtwould, one of the juſtices of the common pleas under king Edward IV; and in 1559, it was found that Richard Nele died in 1558, ſeiſed of the manor and rectory of Tugby, held of the queen by the ſervice of a twentieth part of a knight's fee; and alſo that Francis Nele, eſq. died in 1559, ſeiſed of the manor of Tugby; as alſo of the parſonage of Tugby, and of the advowſon of the vicarage of the church there; and that they were held as above[10].

The heirs general of Nele, being married to Digby and Mackworth (as may be ſeen in the deſcent ſet down in Preſtwould), ſhared this and the reſt of his eſtates.

In 1564, there were 28 families in Tugby.

Henry Skipwith, eſq. of Keythorpe and Tugby, was one of the repreſentatives in parliament for the borough of Leiceſter in 1585 and 1586; and died

---

[1] "In Tochebi 6 carucatæ terræ, & 10 acræ prati. Silva 2 quarentenarum longitudinis, & 1 quarentenæ latitudinis." Domeſday, fol. 230. b. 1.

[2] Seal; himſelf on horſeback, brandiſhing his ſword, about two inches broad (penès Rob. Cotton, bart.) Plate LXVIII. fig. 1.

[3] Cart. Antiq. Lit. Ric. II. n. 26. See this ſeal alſo, fig. 2. from Harl. MSS. 5804. p. 106. b.

[4] Eſch. 2 Edw. I. N° 34. Leic.

[5] Eſch. 3 Edw. I. N° 64. Leic.

[6] Rot. Aux. 20 Edw. III.

[7] Cart. 26 Hen. VI. N° 4.

[8] From the Original, a long ſcript of parchment, in my hands, 1730. F. Peck.

[9] From the Original, a long narrow ſcript of parchment, in the hands of me, F. Peck, 1730.

[10] Eſch. 1 Eliz.

Aug. 15, 1588. He was father of ſir William Skipwith, of Cotes, knt. and of Henry Skipwith[1], of Tugby, gent. who afterwards married Joan the daughter of Leonard Aſton, of Longdon in Staffordſhire; and ſettled at Knight Thorpe near Loughborough.

One moiety of this lordſhip was held, about 1610, by Mary Digby; the other by Henry Hall, from whom it came, by marriage, to Thomas Mackworth, eſq.

The freeholders at Tugby in 1630 were Richard Browne, and Richard Weſſon; and at Eaſt Norton James Oliver, gent.

Sir Henry Mackworth died Aug. 24, 1640, ſeiſed of the manor of Tugby, worth £29; with lands at Tugby, Miſterton, and Burton Overy; and alſo of the rectory and advowſon of Tugby, held of the king in capite by the 20th part of a knight's fee. By Mary his wife he left Thomas his ſon and heir, æt. 16, 1 May; 2. Robert; 3. Henry; 4. Edward; 5. Guſtavus; and two daughters, Margaret and Graia[2].

In 1655, there was collected in Tugby and Keythorpe, for the relief of the poor Proteſtants in Piedmont, the ſum of 16*s.* 2*d.*; and at Eaſt Norton 18*s.* 9*d*.

In 1722, 11 freeholders polled from Tugby; and in 1775, we find 14 names.

The Wilſons (of whom ſee under Keythorpe) have long been the principal landholders here.

Robert Wilſon died owner of it in 1739; and his brother James in 1746.

In an act paſſed in 1784, for dividing ſeveral open fields, called Tugby fields, and Tugby paſtures or buſhes, containing about 1150 acres, the King is deſcribed as patron of the vicarage; the rev. Charles Allen, clerk, as vicar, entitled to all vicarial tithes, except of the field called The Hall Field, or by ſome ſuch name, of about 170 acres, ſaid to have been formerly parcel of the demeſne or hall-lands of the abbey of Croxden in Staffordſhire, to which the vicarage of Tugby belonged; alſo to certain parcels of glebe-land, being about 16 acres, and to a right of common; reputed alſo to be entitled to all vicarial tithes from all the lands of William Wilſon, eſq. within the townſhip or chapelry of Eaſt Norton, except from a certain piece of land in the ſaid chapelry called Ramſhill, or Ramſwood, or by ſome ſuch name, about 71 acres, the property of Mr. Wilſon, and reputed to have been allotted, on the incloſure of the open lands in the ſaid townſhip or chapelry, for the impropriator's glebe there; alſo to a modus of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* a year, payable by Mr. Wilſon, and ſir John Palmer, bart. (in different proportions) in lieu of the vicarial tithes ariſing from all the lands within the lordſhip or chapelry of Keythorpe, their reſpective property; and alſo to certain perſonal payments from the inhabitants of the ſaid chapelry of Keythorpe, called Eaſter dues, chryſomes, holy loaves, and mortuaries, amounting to about 7*s.* a year. The ſaid Mr. Wilſon and Archdale-Wilſon Taylor, eſq. as impropriators of the impropriate rectory of Tugby, were entitled as follows; Mr. Wilſon, to all the impropriate tithes and payments, and to ſundry chief, quit, fee-farm, or other rents or payments, ariſing from certain lands in Tugby; Mr. Taylor, to all the impropriate tithes and payments, and to ſundry chief, quit, fee-farm, mill, or other rents or payments, ariſing from certain other lands in Tugby; and the ſeveral proprietors of the remainder of the lands in the ſaid townſhip were ſeverally entitled to all or the greateſt part of the impropriate tithes ariſing from their ſaid reſpective lands. Mr. Wilſon and Mr. Taylor as entitled alſo, in different proportions, to the whole of The Hall Field aforeſaid, except about four acres belonging to John Abby, and ſubject to the providing bulls and boars for the inhabitants of Tugby; and, with Samuel Darker, entitled to the whole of Tugby paſtures, or buſhes, in different proportions, ſubject to a right of common thereon by the owners of, and perſons intereſted in, the open fields, meadows, &c.; and the ſaid Mr. Wilſon, Mr. Taylor, ſir John Palmer, John Abby, Samuel Darker, and others, were owners and proprietors of the remainder of the ſaid fields, and right of common, and of ſeveral of the houſes, yards, gardens, orchards, homeſteads, and antient incloſures, within the townſhip of Tugby. A compenſation to be ſet out to the vicar for his glebe; with an allotment to the annual value of 50*l.* 10*s.* in lieu of all vicarial tithes and payments, in Tugby; and ſuch farther ſums as ſhould be equal to 1*s.* 6*d.* an acre in lieu of vicarial tithes from every acre of land in the chapelry of Eaſt Norton belonging to Mr. Wilſon, except the incloſed land called Ramſwood; together with a portion of the annual value of 7*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.* in lieu of all moduſes and dues within the chapelry of Keythorpe. Three acres to be ſet out for the repair of roads; and a full equivalent to Mr. Wilſon and Mr. Taylor for all their right to impropriate tithes, and in diſcharge of all manner of chief, quit, fee-farm, mill, or other rents and payments of a ſimilar nature. An allotment to the annual value of ten pounds to be ſet out to the vicar, churchwardens, and overſeers, in truſt, to pay the pariſh clerk 20*s.* in lieu of the rent of an acre of land he formerly enjoyed; and the remainder in apprenticing the children of inhabitants not receiving alms, or otherwiſe at their diſcretion. Tugby Buſhes to be allotted to Mr. Wilſon and Mr. Taylor; and ſurplice-fees reſerved to the vicar.

Tugby was the firſt lordſhip in this part of the country (if not in Leiceſterſhire) where the public roads were formed only 40 feet wide, and bounded on each ſide by quickſet hedges, and without gates croſſing them; and ſurveyors appointed by the commiſſioners, to ſee that they were completely repaired in three years: an excellent plan, now generally adopted; a clauſe being inſerted in the acts for that purpoſe.

The glebe, ſince the incloſure, amounts to 126 acres, and adjoins the parſonage-houſe.

The right to the manor is at preſent claimed both by Mr. Wilſon and ſir William Skeffington.

The village contains about 50 dwellings; and, taking in the poors' cottages, ſuppoſing five in a houſe, the number of inhabitants will be 150, young and old.

Mr. Throſby obſerves of it, "that, in the winter-ſeaſon, this part of the county is not the moſt pleaſant in appearance; but that the ſpring preſents an agreeable contraſt. The hills, which hereabouts abound, and they are favourable to a retention of the ſnow, look delightful, cloathed with verdure, and cattle grazing and the hanging woods which adorn ſome of the ſummits are beauteous with foliage. The little church of Lodington peeping through a grove is a pretty object[3]."

The earlieſt Regiſter at Tugby commences in 1568; and from that period to 1620 is only a fair tranſcript of the older copy of it already noticed under Skeffington as having been preſerved in their church cheſt. It contains, among others, the following entries:

" Regiſtrum for weddings, chriſtenings, and buryings, anno Dñi MDLXVIII, anno regni reginæ Elizabethæ x°.

Weddings.

1576. Everarde Digby and Mary Neell, Feb. 4.
1577. Edward Aſkewe and Urſula Skipwith.
1578. John Smythe and Margaret Ithell, April 1.
1582. Walter Deſberoe, eſq. and Catharine Skipwith.
1587. Harry Smyth, eſq. and Anne Skipwith, Oct. 3.
1593. The right worſhipful Sampſon Eardeſwicke. eſq. and Mrs. Mary Digby, April 24.
—— Mr. John Woodward and Mrs. Dorothy Skipwith, Oct. 1.
1597. Henry Skipwith and Jane Aſton, Sept. 8.
1611. William Elwood, aliter Garret, and Anne Rothely, Nov. 2.
1619. Everard Percevall and Jane Carleton, Nov. 27.

---

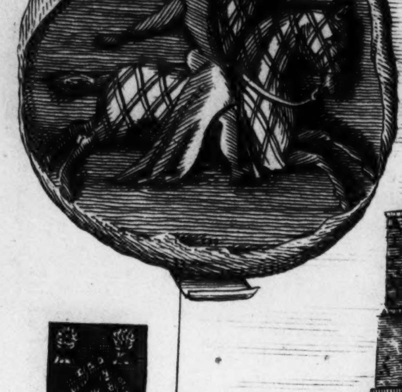
[1] Sir Edward Aſton, of Tixhall, co. Stafford, 21 Eliz. bought the reverſion of Blithe, co. Warwick; and, by his laſt will and teſtament, diſpoſed thereof unto Henry Skipwith, of Tugby, co. Leiceſter, gent. and Joan his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies, the ſaid Joan having been his concubine; but of them did ſir Walter Aſton, knight of the Bath, ſon and heir to the ſaid ſir Edward, purchaſe it again, 5 Jac.; which ſir Walter, afterwards lord Aſton of Forfar in Scotland, ſold it, 1 Car. to ſir William Dugdale; [whoſe repreſentative, Richard Dugdale, eſq. is now the owner, 1799]. Warwickſhire, ed. Thomas, vol. II. p. 1049.

[2] Inq. at Melton Mowbray, 1 Oct. 16 Car.; Cole's Eſcheats, vol. VII. (Harl. MSS. 4611.) p. 151.

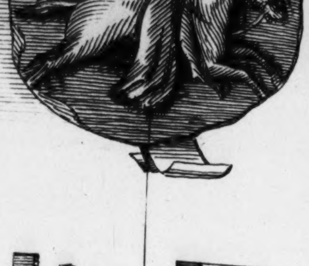
[3] Excurſions, p. 326.

Vol. III. Pl. LXVIII. p. 483.

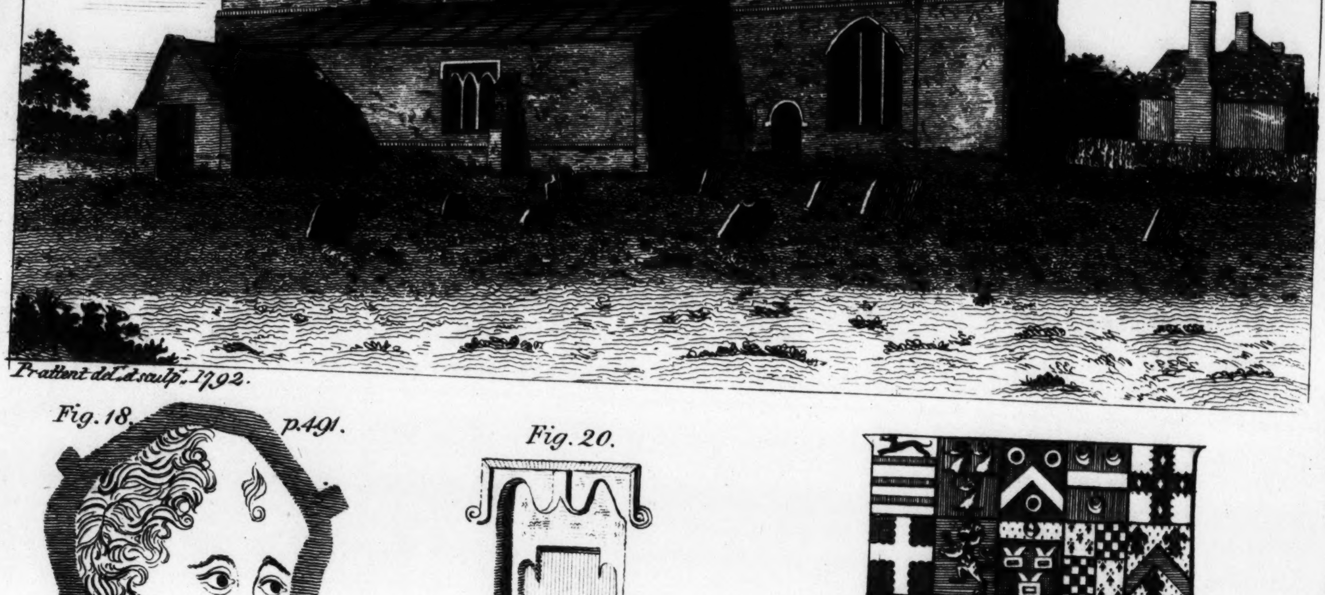
TUGBY, S.E.



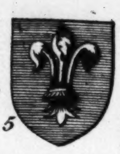
1



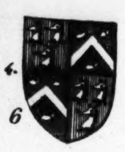
2



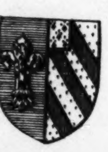
Prattent del. & sculp. 1792.



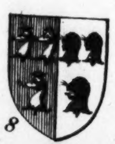
1. 3



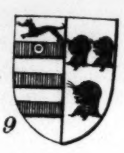
2. 4



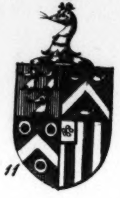
3. 5



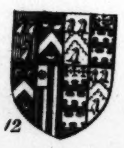
4. 6



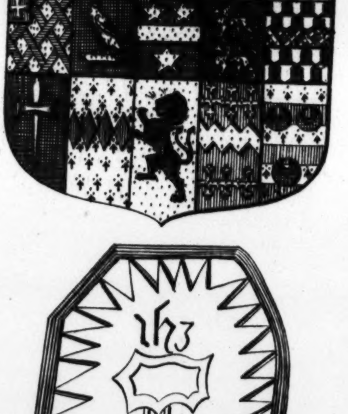
5. 7



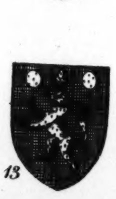
8



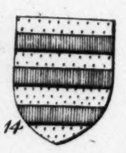
9



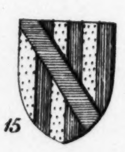
10



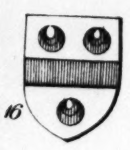
11



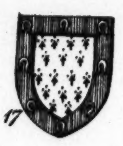
12



13



14

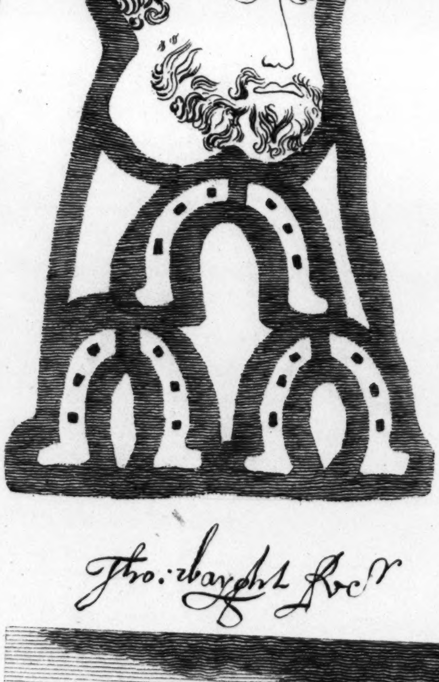


15

16

17

Fig. 18. p. 491.



Thro: baught Rec^r

Fig. 20.

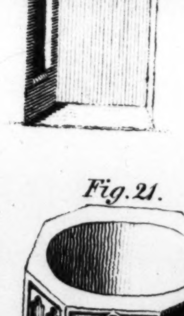


Fig. 21.

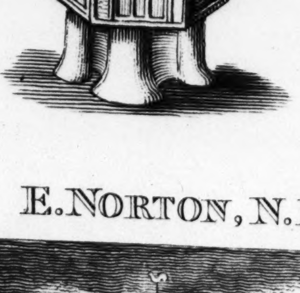

Fig. 19.

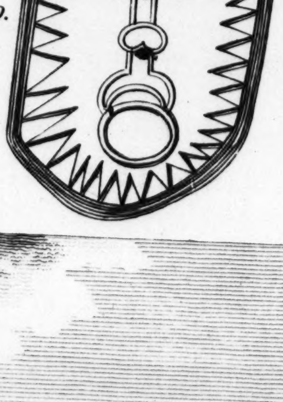
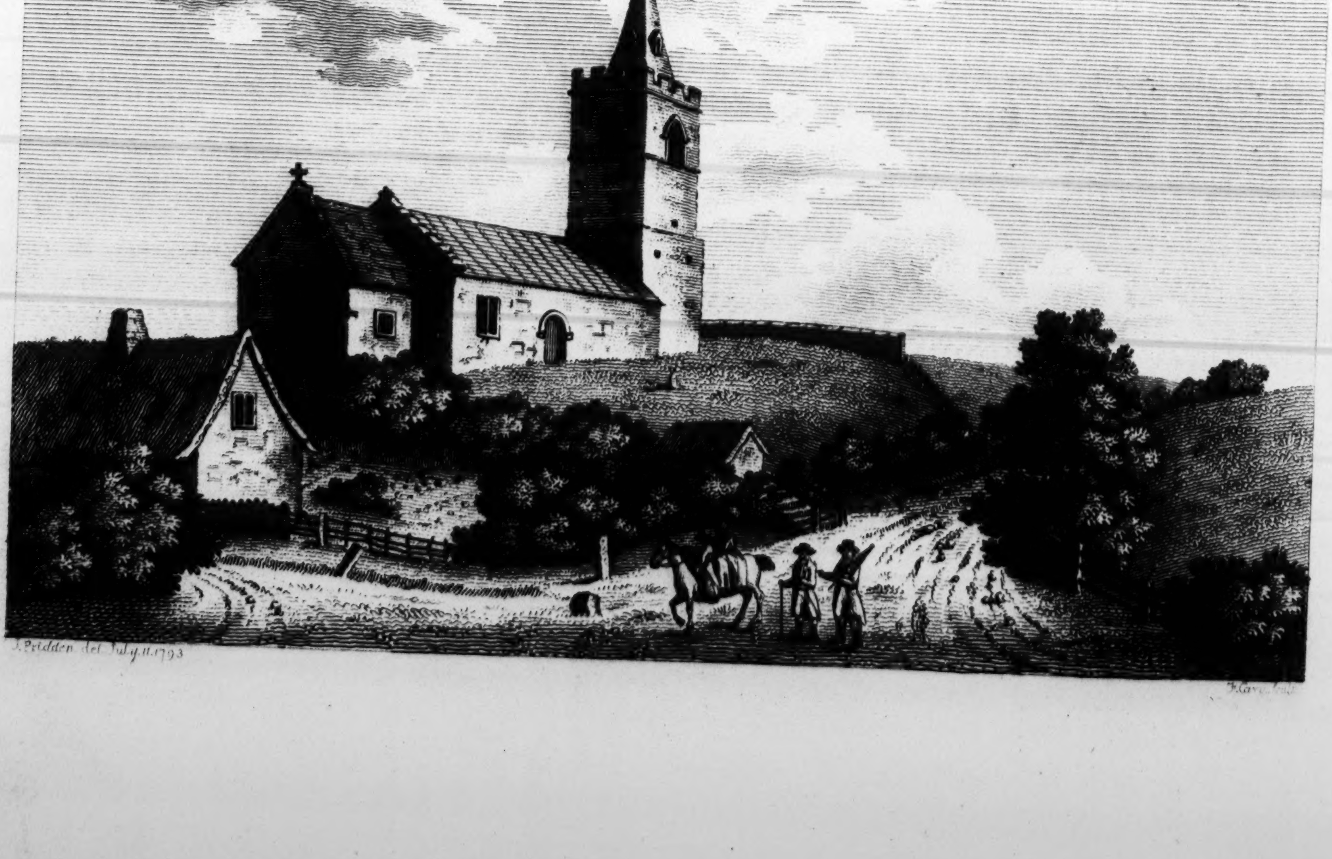


E. NORTON, N.E.



J. Pridden del. July 11. 1793

F. Cary sculp.

Chriſtenings.

1568. Jane Olyver, Feb. 8.

1573. Harry Skipwith, Oct. 16.

1575. Neell Ithell, ſon of Mr. Jeffrey Ithell, Feb. 19.

1576. Urſula daughter of William Newton, May 20.

—— Jane dau. of Mr. Gefferaye Ithell, Jan. 31.

—— Edward ſon of Edmond Olyver, Feb. 10.

1577. Iſabell daughter of Mr. Gefferaye Ithell, bapt. Feb. 27.

1579. Katharine, daughter of Edmond Oliver, Dec. 10.

1580. Two ſons of Thomas Walker, both named John, bapt. May 13.

1580. George ſon of Edward Aſkew, eſq. Sept. 15.

1583. Margaret, daughter of Laneyllott Goodryche, Oct. 14.

—— Anne, daughter of Edmond Olyver, Oct. 26.

1584. Everard ſon of Edward Aſkew, eſq. Feb. 23.

1586. Ales, daughter of Edmond Olyver, April 1.

—— Elizabeth, dau. of Everard Digby, eſq. Sept. 12.

1587. Jane, daughter of Tho. Freeſtone, Apr. 30.

1594. William, ſon of John Berridge, March 23.

1598. Jane, daughter of Henry Skipwith, Aug. 11.

1600. John, ſon of John Berridge, Jan. 5.

1601. Urſula, daughter of William Olyver, Nov. 4.

1603. Margaret, daughter of William Olyver, Aug. 14.

1604. William, ſon of William Olyver, Jan. 27.

1607. Edmond and Grace, ſon and daughter of William Olyver, April 3.

—— Elizabeth, dau. of Robert Reves, eſq. April 17.

1608. Henry, ſon of William Olyver, March 10.

—— Marmaduke, ſon of Marmaduke Moore, gent. bapt. June 11.

1611. John, ſon of William Olyver, Nov. 21.

1617. Olyver, ſon of Mr. Olyver Dyxſon, June 3.

1619. William, ſon of Tho. Jones, a ſinger, Jan. 6.

1622. Conſtantine, ſon of Everard Perſivall, Dec. 1.

—— Frances, daughter of Mr. Oliver Dixon, bapt. Dec. 1.

Burials.

1569. Frances Skipwyth, Dec. 20.

1576. Mr. Thomas Neell, ſon of Mr. Francis Neell, buried Aug. 2.

1579. Mr. James Lax, vicar of Tugby, March 10.

1588. Geffraye Ithell, ſon of Mr. Geffraye Ithell, buried April 27, 1588.

1588. The right worſhipful Mr. Harry Skipwith, eſq. Aug. 15.

—— Mrs. Ales Skipwith, daughter of the right worſhipful Harry Skipwith, eſq. March 11.

1590. William Goodburne, ſervant to the right worſhipful Mrs. Skipwith, Jan. 12.

1593. Urſula, wife of Edmond Olyver, Nov. 16.

1598. The right worſhipful Mrs. Jane Skipwith, May 11.

—— Mr. Jeffrey Ithell, March 11.

1599. Katharine, wife of Edw. Aſcough, eſq. Mar. 5.

1600. William Johnſon, a poor man, brought to our town the night before from Goadby, Jan, 3.

1602. Old Joan Goodriche, ſuppoſed to be 100 years of age, or above, Oct. 18.

1606. John Leyveret, aliter Leveroche, Dec. 9.

1608. Anne wife of Marmaduke Moore, gent. June 10.

—— John Favors, aliter Fathers, buried, Dec. 26, being found dead in the field the ſame day in the morning. He was a poor gathering man.

—— Lawrence Carter buried, Jan. 30, being found dead in our field.

1611. Edmond Olyver, Nov. 21.

1617. Grace, wife of Mr. James Olyver, March 7.

1619. William Olyver, Jan. 27.

1718. Mr. Thomas Robinſon, vicar, Dec. 25.

Baptiſms, 1568—1572, 32——1786—1790, 26[1].

Burials, ———————— 31———————— 10.

On an average, chriſtenings about 6 in the year; buryings 3; marriages 2.

	Tugby.			(Keythorpe, no poor.)	Eaſt Norton.
	£.	s.	d.		£.	s.	d.
Money raiſed for the poor within the year ending at Eaſter 1776, —	23	3	2	————	35	9	1
Expended in county rates, &c.	6	5	8	————	6	13	10
———— on the poor, —	16	17	6	————	28	15	8
Rent of workhouſe and habitations,	2	0	0	————	6	9	0
Expended in litigations, —	0	0	0	————	1	5	4
Money raiſed for 1783, —	66	3	4	————	50	2	0
———————— 1784, —	66	3	4	————	31	9	1
———————— 1785, —	33	0	10	————	50	19	6
Medium of theſe three years,	55	2	6	————	44	3	6
——— of county expences,	4	15	5	————	6	7	7
——— of expences not relating to the poor; repairs of the church, roads, &c.	0	0	0	————	6	11	1
——— of nett annual expences,	50	7	1	————	31	4	10
——— of attending on magiſtrates,	0	1	6	————	1	10	4
——— of entertainments at meetings,	0	6	0	————	0	5	4
——— of law expences, —	0	3	4	————	0	2	10
——— of ſetting the poor to work,	0	0	0	————	0	0	0

The return made to the houſe of commons in 1786, in anſwer to an enquiry reſpecting the charitable donations in this pariſh, may be ſeen in vol. I. p. 56.

The CHURCH, (ſee Plate LXVIII.)

dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, conſiſts of an ordinary low tower (the lower part of which, were it not for the ſtone heads under the parapet, might be ſuppoſed more antient than the upper part), in which are four bells; a large chancel, nave, and South aile, ſeparated by three pointed arches, over which are as many clereſtory windows, and the ſame number in the North wall of the nave.

To the church is a South porch (the church door having an antient, curious, and ſtrong lock upon it), North door into the nave, and a South door into the chancel, in which is a large double baſs viol in a caſe, and a large church coffer whereon is cut the date, "1614. E. M."

Mr. Burton deſcribes theſe arms here, fig. 3—7.

1. Sable, a chevron Or, fretty Gules, between three garbs Argent, Preſtwould.

2. Or, on a bend Azure three fleurs de lis Argent, Poutrell.

3. Azure, a fleur de lis Argent, Digby.

4. Quarterly; 1. and 4. Gules, three greyhounds' heads eraſed Argent, Nele; 2. and 3. Sable, a chevron between three bugle horns Argent, 2. 1; ſtringed Or, Slorey.

5. Azure, a fleur de lis Ermine, Palmer of Holt; impaling, Or, three bends Sable, a canton Ermine, Biſhopſton.

Here are ſtill a few fragments of painted glaſs.

The church is well glazed, and floored with Ketton ſtone.

The font is old, and octagon.

The ſeats are alſo antient.

In the Matriculus of 1220[2], Tugby is deſcribed to be under the patronage of the abbot of Croxden, who held it to his own uſe. It had a chapel at Norton, with a reſident chaplain from the mother church; and having all ſacramental and parochial privileges, paying 18*d.* for ſynodals. It had alſo a chapel at Keythorpe, which was to be ſerved three days in a week.

In 1224, this church was appropriated to the abbey of Croxden by Hugh de Wells, then biſhop of Lincoln.

In 1344, the procurations for Tokeby, Norton, and Keythorpe, were, 7*s.* 6½*d.* The church was taxed at 35 marks, and paid 1*s.* 6*d.* for Peter pence; and the abbot of Croxden then held it to his own uſe.

---

[1] Of this number, one man had five children within the year.

[2] See the Introductory Volume, p. lx.

In 1534-5, the procurations and ſynodals were 3*s.* 6*d.*; and the value of the vicarage, £8.

In 1650, Tugby was returned as an impropriation; the rectory worth £70. the vicarage £40.; and the incumbent as "no preacher."

The clear yearly value in 1716 was £73.

The preſent value in the king's books, "in decimis majoribus & minoribus, cum manſo & terr' gleb', communibus annis," is 11*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*; certified value, £100.

The epiſcopal procurations are, for the rectory 3*s.*; for the vicarage 1*s.* 8*d.*; the archidiaconal 11*s.* 0¾*d.*

Cut on a ſtone placed on the front of the vicarage-houſe:

J. P.
1720.

VICARS.	PATRONS.
Thomas de Gnouſhal, 1224.	Abbot and convent of Croxden.
John de Chebbeley, 1238.
Symon de Billeſdon, 1244.
Thomas de Houton, 1265.
Richard de Bolebrige, 1273.
William Hawberk reſigned 1494.
Thomas Flanderkin, Oct. 12, 1494.
John Henley, 1534.
James Laxe[1], 1562; buried here March 10, 1579-80.
Richard Hill, 1652.	John Robinſon.
Thomas Robinſon, Jan. 22, 1677; died 1718.
Joſeph Peppin[2], M. A. Feb. 6, 1718; died 1761.	The king.
Joſeph Trigg, LL.B. Feb. 1762.
Thomas Middleton, Jan. 20, 1763; died Nov. 1773.
Charles Allen[3], M. A. Feb. 10, 1774; died Oct. 25, 1795.
William Gill[4], M. A. Nov. 17, 1795.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

In the chancel.

Within the communion rails, againſt the South wall, is a handſome monument of alabaſter; and between two pillars voluted a ſquare of black marble, with this inſcription in letters of gold:

"NERE TO THIS PLACE LIETH THE BODIES OF HENRY SKIPWITH, OF KEYTHORPE, ESQ^{r}, AND JANE HIS WIFE, DAUGHTER TO FRANCIS HALL, OF GRANTHAM, ESQ^{r}, AND CONTROULLER OF CALLICE; WHICH JANE WAS WIDDOWE OF FRANCIS NEALE, OF KEYTHORPE AFORESAID; BY WHOM SHE HAD TWO SONS AND ONE DAUGHTER; VIZ.
GEORGE NEALE, WHO DIED YONGE; THOMAS NEALE DIED AT THE AGE OF 18; AND MARIE NEELE, BEING THEN COHEIR WITH A DAUGHTER HER FATHER HAD BY A FORMER WIFE, MARRIED EVERARD DIGBY, OF STOAKE-DRIE, IN COM̄ RUTLAND, ESQ^{r}; SECONDLY, SHE MARRIED SAMPSON ERDESWEEK, OF SANDON, IN
COM̄ STAFF. ESQ^{r}; THIRDLY, SHE MARRIED THOMAS DIGBY, ESQ^{r}. THE AFORESAID
HENRY SKIPWITH, THE 5th SONE OF Sr WILLIAM SKIPWITH, OF ORMSBY, IN COM̄
LINCOLN, K^{nt}, WAS SERVANT TO QUEENE ELIZABETH BEFORE HER CORONATION, AND WAS A QUERRY OF HER HOBBY-STABLE DURING HIS LIFE. HE HAD ISSUE BY JANE 4 SONS AND 9 DAUGHTERS; VIZ. Sr WILLIAM SKIPWITH, OF COATES, IN THIS COUNTY, K^{nt}. HE MARRIED MARGARET, DAUGH^{r} OF ROGER CAVE, OF STANFORD, ESQ^{r}; SECONDLY, HE MARRIED JANE, DAUGH^{r} OF JOHN ROBERTS, ESQ^{r}; FRANCIS DIED IN CAMBRIDGE; HENRY MARRIED JANE, DAUGH^{r}
OF LEONARD ASTON, OF LONGDON, IN COM̄ STAFF. ESQ^{r}; HE CAUSED THIS MONUMENT TO BE ERECTED, AT HIS OWNE CHARGES, IN A THANKFULL REMEMBRANCE AND ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF THE GOODNESS, AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION, THAT HIS FATHER AND MOTHER BESTOWED OF HIM;
GEORGE WAS SLAIN, AT BUMBLE-LEGAR, IN HIS AGE OF 24; URSULA
SKIPWITH MARRIED EDWARD ASKEW, OF NUNS-COTTAM, IN COM̄ LINCOLN, ESQ^{r}; KATHERIN SKIPWITH, MARRIED Sr WALTER ASKEW, OF BLIBROWGH, IN COM̄ LINC', K^{nt}; ANNE, MARRIED HENRY SMITH, OF WITHCOCK, IN
THIS COUNTY, ESQ^{r}; ALICE DIED UNMARRIED; JANE, MARRIED TO S^{r}
WILLIAM SAMUELL, OF UPTON, IN COM̄ NORTHAMPT. KNI^{t}; BRIDGIT MARRIED WALTER ASKEW, UNKLE TO Sr WALTER AFORESAID; DOROTHY MARRIED JOHN WOODWARD, OF BUTLERS-MARSON. IN COM̄ WARR', ESQ^{r}; ELIZABETH MARRIED THOMAS HARRINGTON, OF SOUTH-WITHAM, NOW OF BOOTHBY, IN COM̄ LINCOLN, ESQ^{r}; MARGARET MARRIED Sr MATHEW SANDERS,
OF SHANKTON, KNI^{t}. THESE ARE Y^{e} ISSUE OF Y^{e} SAID HENRY AND JANE HIS WIFE;
W^{ch} HENRY DIED Y^{e} 15th OF AUGUST, 1588; AND JANE DIED Y^{e} 11th OF MAY, 1598.

In ſeveral ſmall pieces of black marble round the inſcription, are theſe names, in letters of gold,

1. GEORGE NEALE DIED YUNGE.
2. THOMAS NEALE DIED UNMARRIED.
3. MARIE NEELE HAD BY Mr DIGBY 14 CHILDREN, AND BY Mr ERDESWICK.
4. Sr WILLIAM SKIPWITH HAD 8 CHILDREN.
5. FRANCIS DIED UNMARRIED.
6. HENRY HAD 2 SONS AND 1 DAUGHTER.
7. GEORGE DIED UNMARRIED.
8. URSULA SKIPWITH HAD 10 CHILDREN.
9. KATHARINE SKIPWITH HAD 6 CHILDREN.
10. ANNE SKIPWITH HAD 15 CHILDREN.
11. ALICE DIED UNMARRIED.
12. JANE HAD 13 CHILDREN.
13. BRIDGET HAD 7 CHILDREN.
14. DOROTHY HAD 3 CHILDREN.
15. ELIZABETH HAD 1, WHEREOF SHE DIED.
16. MARGARET HAD 5 CHILDREN.

At the top, Nele; impaling, Argent, three talbots' heads eraſed Sable, Hall; Plate LXVIII. fig. 8.

At the bottom of the monument, upon a very prominent convex oval ſhield of black marble, which apparently was never painted, is, Argent, three bars Azure; on the firſt bar an annulet; in chief a greyhound courant Sable, Skipwith; impaling Hall; fig. 9.

Within the arch of the monument is the following atchievement of 20 coats, the colours much defaced; fig. 10.

---

[1] In the Certificate referred to under Allexton, p. 8, Mr. Laxe is thus deſcribed: "Preſbyter, non conjugatus; mediocriter doctus; reſidet; hoſpitalis; deget ibidem; non licentiatus, nec prædicat; nullum aliud habet."

[2] Alſo rector of Staunton Wyvile, by diſpenſation dated April 6, 1736.

[3] Of Emanuel college, Cambridge; B. A. 1736; M. A. 1765; rector of Tugby, co. Leiceſter, and of Sutton Bonington, co. Nottingham. A ſon of his is now an eminent ſurgeon at Market Harborough; and a daughter was married, Nov. 27, 1790, to Francis Chambre, eſq. attorney at law, of Oſweſtry.

[4] Mr. Gill reſides at Wilford, co. Notts, where he keeps a ſchool.

1. Skipwith.
2. Nele.
3. Sable, a chevron between three annulets Argent.
4. Gules, a feſs between three creſcents Argent.
5. Argent, on a croſs engrailed Sable, five maſcles Or; Arches.
6. Sable, a croſs engrailed Argent; De la Lind.
7. Azure, a lion rampant Ermine; Ormeſby.
8. Sable, three cheſsrooks Argent, a chief Or; a creſcent for difference; Ormeſby.
9. Quarterly, Ermine and Checky, Argent and Gules; Gybthorpe.
10. Or, a chevron Gules between three fleurs de lis Vert; Hiltoft.
11. Or, fretty Azure; on a canton Gules a croſs moline Argent; Mumby, or Willoughby.
12. Sable, a falcon ſitting on the trunk of a tree Or; Le Muer.
13. Sable, a feſs between three mullets Or; Dymock.
14. Sable, two lions paſſant in pale Ermine, ducally crowned Or; Heronville.
15. Vaire, Argent and Sable, a feſs Gules, fretty Or; Marmion.
16. Sable, a ſword erect, with point downwards Proper; Kilpeck.
17. Ermine, four fuſils conjoined in feſs Gules; Hebden.
18. Or, a lion rampant queué fourché Sable; Welles.
19. Gules, a feſs dancetté between ſix croſs croſslets Or; Engayne.
20. Barry of ſix, Ermine and Gules; over all three creſcents Sable; Waterton.

Oppoſite to the laſt, againſt the North wall, a tomb of free-ſtone; thereon ſix pillars, fluted and voluted, ſupporting pediments, crowned at top; with three pedeſtals, each with a ball at the top; and this inſcription:

"1574.
NON OMNES QUIDEM DORMIEMUS;
OMNES TAMEN IMMUTABIMUR. 1 Cor. 15.
RICHARDI NELI, QUI FLORUIT ARMIGER OLIM, A. D'NI
CORPUS, INOPS ANIMÆ, SAXEA CLAUSTRA TEGUNT. 1558.
FRANCISCUS PATRIS SEQUITUR MOX FUNERA GNATUS; 2d NO-
PER QUEM VIVEBAT, MORTIS HABETQUE DUCEM. VEMBER, SÆVA MANENS OMNES MORS VICTRIX VINCITUR ILLIS 1559.
OMNIBUS IMMUNIS VIVIT UTERQUE MALIS.
VITA EST JANUA MORTIS; MORS EST JANUA VITÆ.

In front of the tomb:

LO! RICHARD NEELL IN FATALL TOMBE IS LAID; 1558.
AND THUS TO GOD HIS SOULE THE SQUIRE HATHE PAID.
TO FATHER'S FATES I FRANCIS ANONE DID HYE, 2 NOVE-
BY WHOM HE LYVED, OF HIM HE LEARNES TO DYE. MB. 1559.
DEATHE CONQUERS ALL, AND YET IS OVERTHROWNE.
THESE LIVE AND REST, THERE CARE IS OVERBLOWNE.
AS FRANCIS WILL'D HIS WIFE THIS WORKE TO FRAME,
SO HENRY SKIPWITH HATH PERFORM'D THE SAME; APRIL
WHO MARRIED JANE, SOMETIME TO FRANCIS WYFE, 1574.
BOTH LIVING NOWE: GOD GRAUNT THEM HAPPIE LIFE!"

On the tablet of the monument, on one ſhield: Quarterly, 1. Nele; 2. Slorey; 3. Sable, a chevron between three annulets Argent; 4. Paly of ſix, Argent and Sable; on a canton a cinquefoil pierced Argent. Creſt, on a cloſed helmet a wreath, on which is a greyhound's head eraſed Argent, collared Or, fig. 11.

Above the inſcription the ſame four coats; impaling, 1. and 4. A chevron engrailed between three ravens' heads . . . . .; 2. and 3, Barry, nebulé, Argent and Sable; in chief three croſs croſslets . . . . ., fig. 12.

On the pedeſtals: 1. Preſtwould.—2. Quarterly, 1. a bend; 2. and 3. Sable, a chevron between three annulets Argent; 4. Paly of ſix, Argent and Sable; on a canton a cinquefoil Argent.—3. Poutrell.—4. Palmer of Holt. 5. Nele; impaling, Or, three heads Sable, a canton Ermine, Biſhopton.—There do not appear to have been any arms on the ſixth pedeſtal.

Below this ſhield, and ſurrounding the inſcription, are ſeveral ſingle ſhields, probably intended for repeating the above 20 coats, only two of which are now viſible; and to all appearance the others never had the charges placed upon them. The two at preſent viſible are, 1. Nele; 2. Skipwith.

Againſt the North wall, at the lower end, a neat monument of grey marble, raiſed on an half tombſtone, with pilaſters, pediment, and urn at top; and in the middle this inſcription:

"In the vault beneath are depoſited the remains of Thomas Wilſon, of Keythorpe, eſq. deſcended from the Wilſons of Didlington, in the county of Norfolk. He died January the 15th, 1699,
aged 63 years.
Alſo the remains of Anne his wife, daughter of Chriſtopher Packe, eſq. of Cotes, in this county, ſometime lord mayor of London.
She died Dec. the 2d, 1722, aged 80 years.
They had nine ſons, and one daughter; viz.
Thomas, Chriſtopher, Robert, Catharine,
Charles, Edward, Joſeph, John, William, and James; of whom the following are depoſited in the ſame vault; viz. Robert Wilſon, of Keythorpe, eſq. who died April the 30th, 1739,
aged 74 years.
Joſeph Wilſon, of the city of London, eſq.
who died Dec. 4, 1720, aged 50 years.
James Wilſon, of Allexton, eſq. who died
May the 9th, 1746, aged 70 years.
Alſo the aforeſaid Catharine, relict of Charles Parker, late of Peterborough, eſq.
She died July the 2d, 1747, aged 81 years.
This monument was erected by the order of the aboveſaid Robert and James Wilſon, eſqrs."

Arms hereon, twice, only Wilſon; Sable, a wolf ſaliant Or; in chief a fleur de lis of the laſt, between two bezants; fig. 13.

On the floor, on a grey ſtone:

"Here lyeth the body of THOMAS WILSON, of KEYTHORPE, eſq.
who departed this life Jan. 15, 1699,
in the 64th year of his age."

On a flat ſtone in the nave:

"Here lieth interred
the body of John Collins, who departed this life the 11th of June, 1720,
in the 63d year of his age.

"Here lieth interred
the body of Roſe, the wife of John Collins;
who departed this life
Feb. 4, 1731-2,
in the 77th year of her age."

On a Swithland ſtone at the Weſt end:

"Beneath lie the remains of Samuel Darker [1].
He died July 23, 1796, in the 54th year of his age."

On a mural tablet in the aile:

"In this aile lyes the body of Frances, daughter of Edward Brudenell, eſq. and Elizabeth his wife, of Barton Seagrave, in the county of Northampton, and wiſe of Joſeph Peppin, vicar of this church.

---

[1] Samuel Darker left by will the ſum of ſeventy pounds for the purpoſes of erecting a gallery for the choir at the Weſt end of the nave over the place of his depoſit, and for putting up a church-clock, the dial-plate of which he ordered to be placed over the gallery.

She was an affectionate wife, a tender parent,
a ſincere friend, and a true Chriſtian.
A general love attended her in her life;
A general ſorrow waited on her to her grave.
She died Jan. 28, 1750, aged 46.
By Frances his wife lyes Joſeph Peppin, vicar of this church 43 years,
and rector of Staunton Wivel 25 years.
He died Sept. 8, 1761, aged 67.
Alſo their ſon Edmond Peppin [1], clerk, died July 13, 1761, aged 35."

On another ſmall mural tablet in the aile:

"To the memory of
the Rev. Charles Allen, M. A. rector of St. Anne's, Sutton Bonnington, Nottinghamſhire, 40 } years.
vicar of Tugby 21 }
Born at Thurcaſton, in this county,
April 28, 1715; died Oct. 25, 1795.
Qualis erat ſuprema dies indicabit."

On a Swithland ſtone in the floor of the aile:
"Here lieth the body of John-Heycock Dawſon, who died March 13, 1780, aged 71 years."

On upright ſtones in the church-yard:
Valentine Ogden died April 25, 1719, aged 59.
Elizabeth, daughter of Valentine Ogden, died Dec. 28, 1785, aged 87.

"Beneath are depoſited the remains of William Ogden, who bore the loſs of ſight and other afflictions with fortitude and Chriſtian patience.
He died the 1ſt of April, 1789, aged 68 years."

Mary, relict of Wm. Ogden, Oct. 17, 1791, aged 84.

BENEFACTIONS to the poor of Tugby:—John Leverack, of Tugby, gave £10; Thomas Talles, clerk, £10; Richard Vittle, of Melton Mowbray, £10; John Collin, late of Eaſt Norton, £10; Catharine Parker, £5; James Wilſon, eſq. £20. The intereſt to be yearly diſtributed at Chriſtmas by the miniſter and churchwardens.—Three poor widows are now relieved by theſe benefactions.

KEYTHORPE,

a hamlet of Tugby, about a mile South therefrom, and about two from Hallaton, is bounded by Glooſton, Goadby, Hallaton, and Tugby.

In the time of king Edward the Confeſſor, Archil held a manor in Caitorp, with ſac and ſoc, then valued at four ſhillings; which, at the general ſurvey, was worth twelve ſhillings, and was then held by Oſbern under the archbiſhop of York. One ploughland was in the demeſne, with one bondman; and one foreigner, with two villans and two bordars, had one plough. There were forty acres of meadow [2].

Another manor here was held, at the ſurvey, by Norman, under Goisfrid Anſelin, conſiſting of one ploughland, which, in the time of the Confeſſor, employed one plough, and was valued at five ſhillings; and at the ſurvey was worth ſix ſhillings; and one ſocman, with two villans and one bordar, had one plough there. There were ten acres of wood [3].

This manor was early poſſeſſed of the lords Verdun of Aulton, co. Stafford; and from them came to Roger le Brabazon, to whom king Edward I, Sept. 23, 1300, granted liberty of free-warren in all his demeſne lands at Muſele, Gormandele, and Caythorpe [4].

"Memorand', quòd decimo die Auguſti, anno Dñi miłło-trecenteſimo-ſeptimo, apud Grobie, d̄nus Wiłłus archiep̄us Ebor' recepit homagium & fidelitatem d̄ni Wiłłi de Sauſton [probably Slauſton] pro terris quas clamat tenere in Caythorpe, in com' Leiceſtr'; qui ibi recognovit, auctoritate juramenti preſtiti, ſe tenere à d̄no tres virgatas terre in Caythorpe. Et dicit quòd quicquid tenet eſt per homagium & ſcutagium, quando currit, ſecundùm quantitatem ten'. Preſentibus, &c." [5] 15 kal. May, 1309, John de Tilton paid homage, apud templum de Wytberne, to the archbiſhop for a meſſuage and two carucates at Keythorpe, held of him by knight's ſervice [6].

9 kal. May, 1309, Margaret the widow of ſir William de Sauſton, knt. deceaſed, paid homage to the archbiſhop, at Weſton near Baldock, for lands which ſhe claimed to hold of him in Caythorpe. Whether ſhe had a right to hold more or not, ſhe declared, on her oath, ſhe knew not [7].

In 1329, Thomas Bardolf died ſeiſed of half a knight's fee in Keithorp, which Alice Davis and others held [8].

In 1334, Margery (wife of John de Tilton) held, at her death, a third part of two carucates of land, and 8*s*. rent, in dower, (being of the inheritance of Roger ſon and heir of Roger Beler), in Keythorp; and the ſaid two carucates were held of the archbiſhop of York, by the ſervice of a twentieth part of a knight's fee [9].

In 1337, it was found that Alice David, deceaſed, held 20*s*. rent, two parts of a meſſuage, and 60 acres of land, with the appurtenances, in Keythorp, of Roger ſon and heir of Roger Beler; which Roger held of John Bardolf, by the ſervice of 3*s*. a year [10].

In 1346, William de Sauſton and William de Tilton (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon,) were aſſeſſed 2*s*. for a twentieth part of one knight's fee in Keythorp, parcel of the fee of the archbiſhop of York [11].

In 1389, William Bardolf, of Wirmgey, knt. held, at his death, the moiety of a knight's fee in Keythorp, which William Gower [12] parſon of Haloughton, Robert Simkinſon, and Idonea de Kaythorpe, held [13].

In 1418, it was found that Thomas Normanby, late rector of Halughton, was ſeiſed of one meſſuage and one carucate of land, with the appurtenances, in Caythorp; that he gave the ſame to John Holt, knt. and John Biſhopeſtre; and that they were held of the archbiſhop of York, as of the right of his church [14].

In 1443, it was found that William Babthorpe, deceaſed, held no lands of the king in capite; but that one John Biſhopeſtre, a capellan, was ſeiſed of three meſſuages and ſix virgates of land, with the appurtenances, in Keythorp; and, in 1420, gave the ſame to William Babthorp and John Marſhal; who accordingly became ſeiſed thereof, and held the ſame of the lord archbiſhop of York [15].

May 1, 1448, king Henry VI. granted to Thomas Palmer, eſq. and his heirs, leave to incloſe and impark 300 acres of land and wood in Holt, or Keythorpe; as alſo liberty of free-warren in all their demeſne lands [16].

"In the reign of king Edward IV. this manor was the inheritance of ſir Richard Nele, knt. one of the juſtices of the common pleas; and, on the death of Francis Nele, in 1559, it paſſed to Henry Skipwith, eſq. who married his widow; and afterwards, by deſcent from the heirs general of Nele, one moiety of this lordſhip came to Digby of Dryſtoke, who in 1641 had aliened it; the other moiety to Hall, and from him by deſcent to Mackworth [17]."

Sir Henry Mackworth died, Aug. 24, 1640, ſeiſed of the manor of Keythorpe, worth £4. held of the king, as of the hundred of Gartre, by fealty and ſuit of court; alſo of 30 acres of meadow, 420 of paſture, 30 of wood, &c. in Keythorpe, called Reywell lands, held under the manor of Haloughton, for 6*s.* 8*d.*[1]

---

[1] Three white ſtones in the floor of the nave mark the depoſit of Joſeph Peppin, Frances his wife, and Edmund their ſon.

[2] "Oſbernus tenet de Archiepiſcopo in Caitorp 2 carucatas terræ. In dominico habet 1 carucam, cum 1 ſervo; & 1 francigena, cum 2 villanis & 2 bordariis, habent 1 carucam. Ibi 40 acræ nemoris. Valuit 4 ſolidos; modò 12 ſolidos. Archil tenuit cum ſacâ & ſocâ." Domeſday, fol. 230. b. 2.

[3] "Normannus tenet de G[oisfrido] in Cheitorp 1 carucatam terræ. Ibi fuit 1 caruca tempore regis Edwardi. Ibi 1 ſochmannus, cum 2 villanis & 2 bordariis, habent 1 carucam. Ibi 10 acræ ſilvæ. Valuit 5 ſolidos; modò 6 ſolidos." Ibid. fol. 235. a. 1.

[4] Cart. 28 Edw. I. n. 6; 8, alio exemp.

[5] Harl. MSS. 358, fol. 100: è Regiſtro W. Grenefeld.

[6] Ib. p. 110. a.

[7] Ib. p. 110. b.

[8] Eſch. 3 Edw. III. N° 66. Leic.

[9] Eſch. 8 Edw. III. N° 39. Leic.; 89, alio exemp.

[10] Eſch. 11 Edw. III. N° 4. Leic.

[11] Rot. Aux. 20 Edw. III.

[12] William Gower and Thomas Normanby may be added to the liſt of rectors, vol. II. p. 603.

[13] Eſch. 13 Ric. II. N° 6. Leic.

[14] Eſch. 6 Hen. V. N° 43. Leic.

[15] Eſch. 22 Hen. VI. N° 3. Leic.

[16] Cart. 26 Hen. VI. N° 4.

[17] Burton, MS.

Thomas Wayte[2], eſq. (who died in 1642) is ſuppoſed to have been the purchaſer of the Digby moiety.

Thomas Wilſon, eſq. of Keythorpe, high-ſheriff in 1684-5, died owner of this lordſhip in 1699; and his numerous family are deſcribed in his epitaph, p. 485.

The death of Mr. Edward Wilſon, one of his younger ſons, in 1694, in a duel with Mr. Law, melancholy as it was at the time, proved eventually the ſource of conſiderable wealth to the family; and the ſtory is too intereſting to be ſuppreſſed.—"This Mr. Wilſon was the wonder of the time he lived in; from low circumſtances [or rather from the moderate fortune of a gentleman's younger ſon] he was on a ſudden exalted to a very high pitch. For gay dreſs, a ſplendid equipage, and vaſt expence, he exceeded all the Court. How he was ſupported, few (very few indeed) truly knew; and thoſe who have undertaken to account for it, have only done it from the darkneſs and uncertainty of conjecture. But, in the midſt of gaiety, he fell by the hand of the then private Mr. Law, and not very fairly neither[3]."—The particulars are thus related:

"In London, Mr. Law's ſuperior beauty of perſon, ready wit, and engaging manner, aſſiſted by proper commendations, and aided by that propenſity to deep play for which he was always noted, procured him admiſſion into ſome of the firſt circles, and particularly attracted the attention of the ladies, among whom he had the reputation of being extremely fortunate. This ſucceſs in affairs of gallantry was, however, attended with very diſagreeable conſequences; involving him in an unhappy quarrel with Mr. Wilſon, a gentleman renowned for a ſimilar pre-eminence in perſonal endowments, which produced a hoſtile meeting between the parties. In this encounter, Mr. Law had the good fortune to come off conqueror, laying his antagoniſt dead upon the ſpot, where they fought[4]."

For this offence, Mr. Law was tried at the Old Bailey; ſentence of death was paſſed on him April 20, 1694; and in the proceedings publiſhed by authority the ſtatement is thus given[5]:

"John Law, of St. Giles's in the Fields, gent. was arraigned upon an indictment of murder, for killing Edward Wilſon, gent. commonly called Beau Wilſon; a perſon which, by the common report of fame, kept a coach and ſix horſes, maintained his family in great ſplendour and grandeur; being full of money; no one complaining of his being their debtor: yet from whence, or by what hand, he had the effects which cauſed him to appear in ſo great an equipage, is hard to be determined. The matter of fact was this. There was ſome difference happened to ariſe between Mr. Law and the deceaſed concerning a woman, one Mrs. Lawrence, who was acquainted with Mr. Law; upon which, on the 9th of April inſtant, they met in Bloomſbury-ſquare, and there fought a duel; in which Mr. Wilſon was killed. It was made appear alſo that they had met ſeveral times before, but had not opportunity to fight; beſides, that there were ſeveral letters ſent by Mr. Law, or given to Mr. Wilſon by him; which letters were very full of invectives, and cautions to Mr. Wilſon to beware, for there was a deſign of evil againſt him; and there were two letters ſent by Mr. Wilſon, one to Mr. Law, and the other to Mrs. Lawrence. Mr. Wilſon's man, one Mr. Smith, ſwore that Mr. Law came to his maſter's houſe a little before the fact was done, and drank a pint of ſack in the parlour; after which, he heard his maſter ſay that he was much ſurprized with ſomething that Mr. Law had told him. One Captain Wightman, a perſon of good information, gave account of the whole matter; and ſaid that he was a familiar friend of Mr. Wilſon; and was with him and Mr. Law at the Fountain Tavern in the Strand; and, after they had ſtayed a little while there, Mr. Law went away. After which, Mr. Wilſon and Captain Wightman took coach, and were driven towards Bloomſbury; whereupon, Mr. Wilſon ſtepped out of the coach into the Square, where Mr. Law met him; and, before they came near togeether, Mr. Wilſon drew his ſword, and ſtood upon his guard. Upon which, Mr. Law immediately drew his ſword; and they both paſſed together, making but one paſs, by which Mr. Wilſon received a mortal wound on the lower part of the ſtomach, of the depth of two inches, of which he inſtantly died. This was the ſum of the evidence for the King. The letters were read in Court, which were full of aggravations on both parts, without any name ſubſcribed to them. There were other witneſſes that ſaw the duel fought; who all agreed in their depoſitions, that they drew their ſwords, and paſſed at each other, and preſently Mr. Wilſon was killed. Mr. Law, in his defence, declared that Mr. Wilſon and he had been together ſeveral times before the duel was fought; and never any quarrel was betwixt them till they met at the Fountain Tavern; which was occaſioned about the letters; and that his meeting with Mr. Wilſon in Bloomſbury was merely an accidental thing; Mr. Wilſon drawing his ſword upon him firſt, upon which he was forced to ſtand in his own defence. That the misfortune did ariſe only from a ſudden heat of paſſion, and not from any prepenſe malice. The Court acquainted the jury, that, if they found that Mr. Law and Mr. Wilſon did make an agreement to fight, though Mr. Wilſon drew firſt, that Mr. Law killed him, he was (by the conſtruction of the law) guilty of murder; for, if two men ſuddenly quarrel, and one kill the other, this would be but manſlaughter: but this caſe ſeemed to be otherwiſe; for, this was a continual quarrel, carried on betwixt them for ſome time before: therefore muſt be accounted a malicious quarrel, and a deſign of murder in the perſon that killed the other: likewiſe that it was ſo in all caſes. The trial laſted long; and the priſoner had perſons of good quality, who gave a fair account of his life in general, and that he was not given to quarreling, nor a perſon of an ill behaviour. The jury, having conſidered of a verdict very ſeriouſly, found that Mr. Law was guilty of murder."—It appears, however, that he received a pardon from the Crown; but that he was detained in priſon, on an appeal[6] from the relations of Mr. Wilſon; whence, in about eight months, he found means to make his eſcape; on which occaſion the following advertiſement was publiſhed in the London Gazette of Jan. 3—7, 1694-5: "Captain J. Lawe, aged 26, a Scotchman, lately a priſoner in the king's bench for murther, a black lean man, about ſix feet high, large pock-holes in his face, big high noſe, ſpeech broad and loud, had made his eſcape from the ſaid priſon. Whoever ſecures him ſo as to be delivered in the ſaid priſon, ſhall have £50. paid immediately by the marſhal of the ſaid king's bench." This advertiſement proved ineffectual; Mr. Law getting clear off; and it was probably about this time that he firſt viſited the continent. The deſcription indeed, conveying no favourable idea of his perſon, and differing from his real portrait, ſeems to have been drawn up to facilitate his eſcape.

The intermediate adventures of Mr. Law (who afterwards projected the Miſſiſſippi ſcheme in France) are foreign to our purpoſe. But in 1721, having found means to pacify the ſurviving relations of Mr. Wilſon, by the payment, it is ſaid, of not leſs than £100,000. and "receiving an invitation from the Britiſh Miniſtry to return to his native country, he embarked on board the Baltic ſquadron, commanded by ſir John Norris, being accommodated in that admiral's own ſhip. Landing at the Nore, Oct 20, 1721, he proceeeded to London; was preſented to king George I. by ſir John; and took a houſe in Conduit-ſtreet, where he was daily viſited by numbers of perſons of the firſt quality and diſtinction. The favourable manner in which Mr. Law was received, occaſioned no ſmall umbrage to the antiminiſterialiſt party, and was judged of importance ſufficient to occupy the attention of Parliament: for, when the Houſe of Lords met on the 26th of October, earl Coningſby repreſented to that auguſt aſſembly how dangerous it might be, on ſeveral accounts, to entertain and countenance ſuch a man as Mr. Law, and deſired that a day might be appointed for taking this matter into conſideration. Their Lordſhips having appointed the 9th of November for the diſcuſſion of this buſineſs, earl Coningſby on that day reſumed his argument; ſaying that, for his part, he could not but entertain great jeaſouſy of a perſon who had done ſo much miſchief in a neighbouring kingdom, and who, being ſo immenſely rich as he was reported to be, might do a great deal more hurt here, by tampering with many who were grown deſperate by being involved in the calamity occaſioned by the fatal imitation of his pernicious projects; that this perſon was the more dangerous, in that he had renounced not only his natural affection to his country, and his allegiance to his lawful Sovereign, by being naturalized in France, and openly countenancing the Pretender's friends; but, which was worſt of all, and weighed moſt with him, that he had renounced his God by turning Roman Catholic; concluding that their lordſhips ought to enquire whether ſir John Norris had orders to bring him over. To this laſt part of the earl's ſpeech, lord Carteret anſwered, in ſubſtance, that Mr. Law had many years ago the misfortune to kill a gentleman in a duel; but that, having at laſt received the benefit of the King's clemency, and the appeal lodged by the relations of the deceaſed being taken off, he was come over to plead his majeſty's moſt gracious pardon; that there was no law to keep an Engliſhman out of his own country; and, as Mr. Law was a ſubject of Great Britain, it was not even in the King's power to hinder him from coming home, if he thought fit. To this lord Trevor replied, that Mr. Law was indeed a ſubject of Great Britain, and therefore, as ſuch, had an undoubted right to come into the kingdom; but that the circumſtance of a perſon of his character being brought on board of an Engliſh Admiral, and at this juncture, might deſerve the conſideration of the Houſe. Earl Cowper ſpoke much to the ſame effect; but the matter was ſuffered to drop; and Mr. Law, on the 28th of November following (being the laſt day of term) pleaded, at the bar of the King's Bench, on his knees, his Majeſty's pardon for the murder of Edward Wilſon, eſq. in 1694, being attended, on this occaſion, by the duke of Argyle, the earl of Hay, and ſeveral other friends; each of the judges being preſented with a pair of white gloves [1]."

---

[1] Inq. 1 Oct. 16 Car. I. Cole's Eſcheats, vol. VII. (Harl. MSS. 411), p. 151.—See before, under Tugby, p. 482.

[2] The famous "Receavour." See his epitaph, p. 488; and his hand-writing in Plate LXVIII.

[3] London Journal, Dec. 3, 1721.

[4] "The particular occaſion of the quarrel is variouſly ſtated: ſome ſay that it aroſe from the preference ſhewn to Mr. Law by Miſs Elizabeth Villiers, ſiſter of the firſt earl of Jerſey (afterwards counteſs of Orkney); a lady whoſe wit and accompliſhments, though unaccompanied with perſonal charms, had power to make an impreſſion in the cold breaſt of king William III." Wood's Hiſtory of Cramond, 1794, p. 164.

[5] From the Proceedings of the King and Queen's Commiſſioners at the juſtice-hall in the Old Bailey; being the 18th, 19th, and 20th days of April, 1694; and in the 6th year of their Majeſties' reign.

[6] If a man be acquitted on an indictment for murder, or found guilty, and pardoned by the king; ſtill he ought not (in ſtrictneſs) to go at large, but be impriſoned or let to bail till the year and day be paſt, by virtue of Stat. 3 Hen. VII. c. 1; in order to be forthcoming to anſwer an appeal for the ſame felony. Tomlins, Law Dictionary, art. Appeal.

The lordſhip of Keythorpe is old incloſure, and excellent grazing land. Major Wilſon (whoſe genealogy will be found in a future page of this volume) is the greateſt proprietor; and ſir John Palmer, bart. owns the reſidue of the lordſhip [2]. The Major's land is wholly occupied by Mr. Joſeph Heycock, a very opulent grazier, who reſides in the manor-houſe, which is now the only houſe in the lordſhip; a neat and commodious dwelling, but much ſmaller than the original manſion.

Oppoſite, and about 100 yards to the North, cloſe by the public road which leads from the manor-houſe to Tugby, is a level ſquare of ground, containing about half an acre, round which a deep and wide ditch, foſs, or moat, has, it is evident, formerly been carried. It is now four or five yards in the inner ſlope, and appears at the preſent bottom of the ditch about the ſame width, though it is certainly much filled up, being completely dry and ſwarded up ſince its original formation. What was its primitive uſe cannot now be aſcertained, unleſs, centuries back, the manſion-houſe ſtood upon this ſpot. Tradition is ſilent on the ſubject.

The CHAPEL

of Keythorpe was given, by Bertram Verdun, to the abbey of Croxden, co. Stafford [3]; but in 1641, as Mr. Burton ſtates, was "decayed and gone." No ruins of it now remain, nor can even the ſite be traced.

At South Witham, co. Lincoln, on a braſs plate:

"Here lyeth buryed Elizabeth, wife to Thomas Harrington, of South Witham, eſq.
and one of the daughters of Henry Skipwith, of Keythorpe, in the county of Leiceſter, eſq.;
who dyed the x of Februarye, 1597."

On a mural monument on the North wall of the old church of St. James, Clerkenwell, near the altar: Arms: Quarterly: 1. and 4. Argent, a croſs between three roſes Gules, ſeeded Or, with a martlet for difference; 2. and 3. Argent, a feſs Gules between three garbs Sable, a mullet for difference; impaling, Argent, a chevron between three bugle-horns ſtringed Sable; Wayte; Plate LXVIII. fig. 22.

"Elizabeth, the wife of Samuel Trotman, of the Inner Temple, eſq. ſonne of Fiche Trotman, of Cam in the county of Glouceſter, daughter of Thomas Wayte, of Keythorpe in the county of Leiceſter, by Barbara his wife, daughter of Edmund Hunt, of Norfolk, eſq.
religiouſly departed this life, in child-birth of her only child, Elizabeth, 8 Auguſt, 1640;
and her daughter alſo died in the ſame month;
and whoſe corps lye
by the body of her mother, Barbara Wayte, under the marble neere the communion-table, expecting a joyful reſurrection."

On an adjoining mural monument, with Wayte's arms:

"THOMAS WAYTE, OF KEYTHORPE IN THE COUNTY OF LEICESTER, ESQ. RECEAVOUR FOR HIS MAJESTIE IN THE COUNTIES OF WARWICK
AND LEICESTER, DEPARTED THIS LIFE 2 JULY, 1642; AND LYETH BURIED, WITH THE BODIES OF BARBARA HIS WIFE, DAUGHTER OF EDMUND HUNT, OF NORFOLK, ESQ. AND ELIZABETH HIS DAUGHTER, WIFE OF SAMUEL
TROTMAN, OF THE INNER TEMPLE, ESQ.
UNDER THE MARBLE NEAR THIS PLACE.
Hither no teares, but garlands bring,
To crowne this good Receavour's duſt;
Who gave accompt to God and King,
And lives, rewarded, with the juſt.
So to his faith and office both gave reſt;
The King, his quittance; God, Quietus eſt."

---

[1] Hiſtory of Cramond, p. 236; from the Parliamentary Regiſter, &c.—A few lines will cloſe the hiſtory of Mr. Law, who continued to reſide ſome years in England. He had received intelligence of the confiſcation of his whole property in France; but, being conſcious of the rectitude of his conduct in the management of the finances, and that the balance would, upon examination, be found conſiderably in his favour, he had good reaſon to flatter himſelf with the hopes of receiving a large ſum, eſpecially as the Regent always profeſſed a more than ordinary regard for him, and continued punctually to remit his official ſalary of 20,000 livres a year. But the death of his Royal Highneſs, Dec. 2, 1723, was a fatal blow to the hopes of Mr. Law; who, in a memorial to the duke of Bourbon, dated Oct. 15, 1724, ſtates himſelf as "bankrupt, not only in France, but alſo in other countries;" and "his children, courted by the moſt conſiderable families in France, as deſtitute of fortune and eſtabliſhment."—"I had it in my power," he ſays, "to have ſettled my daughter in marriage in the firſt houſes in Italy, Germany, and England; but I refuſed all offers of that nature, thinking it inconſiſtent with my duty to, and my affection for, the ſtate in whoſe ſervice I had the honour to be engaged." He bad a final adieu to Britain in 1725; and fixed his reſidence at Venice; where he concluded the chequered courſe of his life, in a ſtate but little removed from indigence, March 21, 1729, in his 58th year; and was buried in one of the churches of that city, where a monument to his memory is ſtill to be ſeen. Ibid. p. 245.

[2] Sir John Palmer, bart. and Major Wilſon pay annually a chief rent of 3*s.* 8*d.* to the Gartre court (held at Tur Langton) for the lordſhip of Keythorpe. See vol. II. p. 673.

[3] Cart. Antiq. Lit. R. n. 16; & Eſch. 6 Hen. V. n. 43.

EAST NORTON,

a hamlet of Tugby, is a ſmall village, ſtanding in a low ſituation on the North and South ſide of the turnpike road leading from Uppingham to Leiceſter, on the edge of the county towards Rutland. From Uppingham it is diſtant five miles and a half, and from Leiceſter thirteen and a half. It is bounded by Allexton, Hallaton, Keythorpe, Tugby, Lodington, and a ſmall part of Belton, co. Rutland. It is ſituate but a very ſmall diſtance South of the brook which riſes in Tilton ſtreet.

A great part of this town belonged antiently to Richard Baſſet and Maud Ridel his wife[1]; who gave five virgates of land here to the priory of Laund, founded by them; which lands were held of the fee of Mowbray, by the ſervice of a fourth part of a knight's fee[2].

On the aid granted to king Henry III. in 1235, towards the marrying of his ſiſter with the emperor of the Romans, half a mark was paid for a fourth part of a fee held at Norton by Alan Coſtein[3].

In 1303, it was found that the prior of Laund held a quarter of a knight's fee in Lodington and Eaſt Norton of Robert de Tateſhale, deceaſed[4].

The property of the abbot and convent of St. Mary de Pratis here is thus ſtated in their Regiſter:

"Norton eſt de parochiâ de Tokeby; habens capellam, que ſecundùm matriculum epiſcopi conſuevit habere capellanum reſidentem per matricem eccleſiam; & habet omnia ſacramenta & jura parochialia, &c.

Habemus in Nortonâ, ex dono & confirmatione Hugonis de Burton, unam virgatam terre, cum pertinentiis; illam, ſcilicet, quam pater ſuus nobis dedit, cum corpore ſuo, &c. ut in primâ cartâ II libri de Chartwary.

Habemus confirmationem ejuſdem virgate terre per Gaufridum le Salvag' & Robertum filium Galfridi de Thorp, ſicut patet in cartâ II^a^ & III^a^ ſecundi libri de Chartwary.

Memorandum, quòd nos conceſſimus, & per cartam noſtram confirmavimus, Hugoni filio Hugonis de Burton, unam virgatam terre in Norton; ſcilt, illam quam pater predicti Hugonis nobis, cum corpore ſuo, dedit, &c. reddendo nobis annuatim v s̄. &c.; ita quidem quòd predicta virgata terre, cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, quieta & integra poſt mortem predicti Hugonis nobis & eccleſie noſtre remanebit, &c.

Memorandum, quòd nos remiſimus, pro nobis & ſucceſſoribus noſtris, Hugoni de Burton, unam virgatam terre, quam habemus in Norton, cum pertinentiis ſuis, in eſcambium pro unâ culturâ juxta villam de Bilſdon que vocatur Biſſopeſcroft, cum uno tofto quod eſt juxta illam culturam, & pro redditu II s̄. in eâdem villâ de Bilſdon per manum Roberti filii Reginaldi hominis ſui recipiend', &c. ut in cartâ vel conventione IX^a^ inter cartas de Bilſdon[5]."

In 1310, Edward-Latimer Bochard died ſeiſed (together with Margaret his wife then living) of the manor of Norton, held of the earl of Warwick[6].

In 1315, Thomas le Latymer and Nicholas le Latymer held a third part of the manor of Eaſt Norton of Guy de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, deceaſed, by the ſervice of three quarters of a knight's fee[7].

In 1324, Nicholas le Latymer died ſeiſed of 6*s.* rent ariſing out of certain freeholds and view of frank-pledge in Eaſt Norton of Thomas de Beauchamp, by the ſervice of half a quarter of a knight's fee; and John le Latymer was his ſon and next heir[8].

In 1345, John ſon of Hugh Nele of Eaſt Norton releaſed all his right in all his lands in Eaſt Norton to Robert Huberd of Eaſt Norton aforeſaid[9].

In 1346, Robert le Bruſter (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon,) was aſſeſſed 6*s.* 8*d.* for a ſixth part of a knight's fee; and Geoffrey Bene the ſame ſum for another ſixth part; both in Eaſt Norton, and parcel of the fee of Huntingdon[10].

In 1350, it was found that Warine ſon of Thomas le Latymer of Braybrok [which Warine died in 1349] held a moiety and a third part of a knight's fee in Eaſt Norton, of Thomas de Beauchamp earl of Warwick[11].

In 1361, John de Mowbray of the iſle of Axeholme died ſeiſed of a quarter of a knight's fee in Norton and Somerby, which the prior of Laund held; alſo one knight's fee in Norton and Withecok, which John de Norton held[12].

In 1382, Thomas de Burton, knt. died ſeiſed of 16*s.* in Norton, ariſing out of one meſſuage and four virgates of land there, which Roger Parmonter held of the aforeſaid Thomas for the term of his life; which meſſuage, &c. were held of Roger Bene, by the ſervice of 9*d.* a year[13].

In 1401, Anne (the wife of Thomas-Latymer Bochard) held, at her death, the manor of Norton for term of life, of the earl of Warwick[14].

In 1421, Margaret wife of Edward Latymer, deceaſed, was ſeiſed of the manor of Eaſt Norton, held of the earl of Warwick[15].

In 1461, John Mowbray duke of Norfolk died ſeiſed of a quarter of one knight's fee in Norton and Somerby, which the prior of Laund held; alſo of half a knight's fee in Norton and Withecok which John de Norton held[16].

The manor of Eaſt Norton, which belonged to the priory of Laund, was given by king Henry VIII. to Gregory lord Cromwell and Elizabeth his wife, and to the longer liver of them, during the king's pleaſure; being at that time valued, all charges deducted, at 8*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* a year[17].

In 1545, ... Elrington granted to Thomas Oliver a meſſuage and certain lands here.

In 1559, Francis Nele, eſq. died ſeiſed of certain lands in Eaſt Norton, with the advowſon of the chapel there, held of the queen in capite[18].

"In 1570, Thomas Oliver died ſeiſed of a capital meſſuage in Eaſt Norton, and certain lands thereto belonging, leaving Richard Oliver, his ſon and heir, of the age of 22 years. Of this family (as I have heard) was that curious artiſan in limning[19], Mr. Iſaac Oliver,

---

[1] Cart. 4 Edw. III. n. 5. per Inſpex.

[2] Eſch. 35 Edw. III. p. 2. n. 10.

[3] Vol. I. p. l.

[4] Eſch. 31 Edw. I. N° 30. Leic.

[5] Charyte's Rentale, fol. cxiii.

[6] Eſch. 12 Hen. IV. N° 14. Leic.

[7] Eſch. 9 Edw. II. N° 71. Leic.

[8] Eſch. 18 Edw. II. N° 80. Leic.

[9] Clauſ. 19 Edw. III. pars 2. m. 20.

[10] Rot. Aux. 20 Edw. III.

[11] Eſch. 24 Edw. III. N° 23. Leic.—See more in Gumley, 23 Edw. III.

[12] Eſch. 35 Edw. III. pars 2. N° 10.

[13] Eſch. 6 Ric. II. N° 19. Leic.

[14] Eſch. 3 Hen. IV. N° 30. Leic.

[15] Eſch. 3 Hen. V. N° 57. Leic.

[16] Eſch. 1 Edw. IV. N° 46. Leic.

[17] Magna Britannia, p. 1364.

[18] Eſch. 1 Eliz.

[19] "Of this art of painting, as alſo of carving and building, Giovanni Paolo Lomazzo, a Milanois, hath written a large diſcourſe in Italian, privileged by pope Gregory XIII. in whoſe time (a) it came firſt forth; which book, in 1598, was tranſlated almoſt all by Mr. Richard Heydock, a fellow of New College in Oxford; and then and there printed at his coſt; at the latter end whereof he ſetteth down a Catalogue of the names of all the famous painters, carvers, and architects, both antient and modern, whoſe works are vouched in the ſaid book; amongſt which he much commendeth his maſter Gaudentio Ferrato di Valdagio, a Milanois, Titiano Vercellino, Leonardo Vincenzo, Polydoro Cabdara di Carvagio, Franceſco Mazzolino, Jacomo Baſſano; but chiefly Michael Angelo Bonarota and Raphael de Urbino (b), two admirable painters, calling them the fathers and maſters of painting; out of whoſe ſchool (ſaith he) almoſt all the famous painters of Italy have attained to the worth of their fame. Their works are famous in Italy; for ſcarce is there any city of note which doth not ſhew ſome piece of their admired handy-work, eſpecially Rome, in the pope's Palace in the Vatican, in his Belvedere, and upon their tombs in St. Peter's church adjoining, and in many other churches, monaſteries, and palaces in that city, as they that were oculati teſtes in the year of Jubilee 1600 have related to me. This art of painting is a delightful and pleaſing ſkill, which, by Lomazzo (c), is defined to be an art,

(a) Gregory XIII. began to ſit in 1572; and died in 1585.

(b) Both commended by Arioſto, 13th Canto of Orlando Furioſo.

(c) Lib. 1. cap. 1.

Oliver, whoſe divers pieces in very ſmall models, drawn ſo exactly to the life, do ſet forth his ever-living praiſe[1]; whoſe maſter in that art, and in the ſame kind, was Mr. Nicholas Hilliard[2], an excellent drawer, deſcended of an antient family in Yorkſhire, who about the middle of queen Elizabeth's reign was the firſt (that ever I heard) that drew pictures in ſuch ſmall proportions, admired even by ſtrangers; who left another expert ſcholler, Mr. Rowland Lockey (one whom I knew very well when he dwelt in Fleet-ſtreet), who was both ſkilful in limning, and in oil-works and perſpectives; at whoſe houſe I once ſaw a neat piece in oil, containing in one table the picture of ſir John More, a judge of the king's bench, temp. Henry VIII. and of his wife; and of ſir Thomas More, lord chancellor, his ſon, and his wife; and of all the lineal heirs male deſcended from them; together with each man's wife, unto that preſent year living[3]."

In 1609, Mary Digby held the manor of Eaſt Norton of the king as of his honour of Hampton-court; and at the ſame time Richard Oliver held a meſſuage and tenements in Haloughton and Eaſt Norton in capite, and more lands under the king in ſocage.

The lord of this manor, in 1641 was Mountjoy Blunt, earl of Newport[4]; and in 1652 the lordſhip was incloſed by conſent of parties.

An indenture quadripartite, made Dec. 17, 1653, between Richard Roberts, of Thorpe Langton, eſq.; the ſon of ſir Richard Roberts, knt. and dame Elizabeth his wife; Thomas Carlton, citizen and mercer of London; Suſanna Roberts, widow, late wife of Thomas Roberts, eſq. deceaſed, father of Richard Roberts; and John Hales, of Stagnoe, in the pariſh of Paul's Walden, Herts; ſettles, to the uſe of Mr. Roberts, and as portions for younger children, all that the manor of Eaſt Norton, with the rights, members, and appurtenances thereof, in the county of Leiceſter; and all that the chapel impropriate of Eaſt Norton, in the ſaid county of Leiceſter, and all the glebe-lands and tithes of corn and grain thereunto belonging; and all and ſingular other the meſſuages, farms, cottages, cloſes, lands, tenements, and hereditaments whatſoever, of him the ſaid Richard Roberts, in Eaſt Norton, Lodington, and Tugby, and every or any which, with proportionable lines and colours anſwerable to life, by obſerving the perſpective life, doth ſo imitate the nature of corporal things, that it not only repreſenteth the thickneſs and roundneſs thereof upon a flat, but alſo their actions and geſtures; expreſſing moreover divers affections and paſſions of the mind. And farther ſaith, that it is an informer of the memory, underſtanding, and will, and a ſign and figure invented to repreſent all things both natural and artificial. It is ſo delightful, that even the chiefeſt princes have been exceedingly taken with it, as Nero (d), Alexander (e), Severus, Theodoſius (f), Valentinian the Firſt, Roman emperors. Of later times, Francis king of France (g), Renate king of Naples and Sicily, and Charles duke of Savoy (as Lomazzo ſaith). In my younger years I was much delighted herewith; and, for my farther content, got together certain pieces of Albert Durer, Lucas of Holland, Hans Sibilebeme; of later maſters, H. Goltzius, Peter Reuben knight, Philip de Galle, John, Hierome, and Anthony of Virix, and others; which I keep yet.

---

The famous German painters were, Albert Durer of Norimberge, Hans Holben, Lucas of Holland, Hans Sibilebeme, Hubert Goltzius, Peter Reuben knight, Anthony Vandike, knighted by king Charles, with a yearly penſion out of the Exchequer, Philip de Galle, John, Hierome, and Anthony of Virix, John de Bruges, Martin de Vos, John Stradane.

Of our own country the moſt famous are John de Critz (h), Mr. Greneborough (i), Mr. Peake (k), Mr. Lockie (l), Mr. Bettes (m) and Mr. Shute (n). Amongſt which I cannot let paſs unremembered the worthy and exceedingly deſerving lady, Margaret (o) ſole daughter of ſir John King, knight, lord of the manor of Nether Whitacre, co. Warwick, now wife of ſir Gerard Lowther, knight, chief juſtice of the common pleas in Ireland; whoſe excellent ſkill is ſuch in this kind, that, not having been a practitioner in the ſcience yet fully five years, ſhe can draw any proportion to the life, either of perſonage, landſcape, or ſtory, or any other thing; who doth ſo much the more challenge all commendation, for that ſhe being of young years, not many above 20; and of ſo rare preſence, feature, perſonage, and beauty; yet giveth way to this her natural genius; whoſe ſkill (no doubt) in ſhort time will come to rare perfection. What I have written is not upon report; myſelf having been in her preſence, and viewed many of her fine and well-wrought pieces.

Of this art have written alſo Leonardo Vincenzo; and of carving, Albert Durer (p), Juſtus Ammanus (q) of Zurich, and Gualterio Florentius, who alſo hath written the lives of the chiefeſt painters in Italy; of the lives alſo of whom Georgio Vaſario Aretino hath written a large diſcourſe.

Carving and painting are both contained under one and the ſelf-ſame art. The chiefeſt of our countrymen which are deemed carvers, in marble, ſtone, alabaſter, and wood, are, Mr. Cooke of Weſtminſter (r); and Gerard Holmond (s), long ſince deceaſed, leaving Elias Almaunza (t), and Samuel Helmutz (u) a painter, Mr. Gerard Chriſmas (x), Mr. Stone (y), Mr. Henſtall (z), Mr. Galover (aa), and my countryman Mr. Hugh Hill of Aſhby de la Zouch and his ſons (bb), and many other excellent artizans unknown to me." Burton, MS.

[1] "Hitherto," ſays Lord Orford, "we have been obliged to owe to other countries the beſt performances exhibited here in painting. But in the branch (miniature) in which Oliver excelled, we may challenge any nations to ſhew a greater maſter, if perhaps we except a few of the ſmaller works of Holbein. Don Julio Clovio, the celebrated limner, whoſe neatneſs and taſte in groteſque were exquiſite, cannot be compared with Iſaac Oliver, becauſe Clovio never painted portraits, and the latter little elſe. Petitot, whoſe enamels have exceeding merit, perhaps owed a little of the beauty of his works to the happy nature of the compoſition: we ourſelves have nobody to put in competition with Oliver, except it be our own Cooper, who, though living in an age of freer pencil, and under the auſpices of Vandyke, ſcarce compenſated, by the boldneſs of his expreſſion, for the touch of nature and delicate fidelity of the elder maſter. Oliver's ſon, Peter, alone approached to the perfection of his father. Of the family of Iſaac Oliver I find no certain account; nor is it of any importance; he was a genius; and they tranſmit more honour by blood than they can receive. He died at his houſe in the Black Friers, London, in 1617, aged 61, or 62. He was buried in St. Anne's church in that pariſh; where his ſon erected a monument to his memory, with his buſt in marble; which were deſtroyed in the great fire of 1666. By his will, proved in October, and executed in the preceding June, he bequeathed to his wife the third part of his effects, and the leaſe of his houſe in Black Friers; excepting only to his eldeſt ſon, Peter, all his drawings, limnings, hiſtorical or otherwiſe, finiſhed or unfiniſhed, of his own handy-works; or, in caſe of Peter's death, to any of his other ſons that ſhould follow his profeſſion. All the other two parts of his eſtate to be ſold, and equally divided between his ſons and a daughter.—"Miniature," adds the noble Writer, "makes a great figure in this reign [that of James I.] by Peter Oliver, the eldeſt ſon of Iſaac Oliver, and worthy of being compared with his father. In ſome reſpects the ſon even appears the greater maſter, as he did not confine his talent to ſingle heads.—The fineſt work of Peter Oliver, in my opinion, is the head of his own wife, in the cabinet of the dutcheſs of Rutland: it is life itſelf. I doubt whether his father ever excelled this piece." For farther particulars of theſe eminent artiſts, father and ſon, the reader is referred to the late ſplendid edition of Lord Orford's Works, in five volumes quarto, 1798, vol. III. pp. 130—134; pp. 155—157.— The portraits of both, from well-preſerved paintings by themſelves, are here given in Plate LXIX. from the original plates engraved for that valuable publication by the eſpecial favour of Meſſrs. Robinſons, proprietors of the work.

[2] Nicholas Hilliard was limner, jeweller, and goldſmith, to queen Elizabeth, and afterwards to king James; from whom he had an eſpecial patent that no other perſon ſhould, for twelve years, "invent, make, grave, and imprint any pictures of our image, or our royal family."—For a good portrait and a farther account of Hilliard, ſee Lord Orford's Works, vol. III. p. 127; and ſee ſir John Harrington's opinion of him in his annotations upon the 33d canto of Orlando Furioſo.

[3] A picture like this has been twice engraved; but ſuppoſed to be Holbein's by Granger, vol. I. p. 104; and ſee Bromley's Catalogue, p. 17.

[4] Burton, MS.

(d) Suetonius. (e) Lampridius. (f) S. Aurelius Victor. (g) Favin's Theatre of Honour, Engliſh edit. fol. 549.

(h) Of John de Critz, ſee Lord Orford's Works, vol. III. p. 244.

(i) Mr. Greenbury is mentioned in the Catalogue of the King's Collection, p. 173, for copying two pictures of Albert Durer by the direction of the lord Marſhall. Probably he was one of the lord Arundel's painters. Ibid. p. 247.

(k) Of Robert Peake, knighted at Oxford 1645, ſee ibid. p. 154. He is mentioned by Meres in his ſecond part of "Wit's Commonwealth, Lond. 1598," 4to.

(l) Whom Lord Orford calls Nicholas Lockie; ibid. p. 135. See alſo Meres. Mr. Burton (who often viſited him) calls him Rowland.

(m) Thomas and John Bettes are juſt mentioned by Meres. (n) So is John Shute; of whom ſee alſo Lord Orford, ibid. p. 135.

(o) This accompliſhed lady ſeems to have eſcaped the notice of Lord Orford.

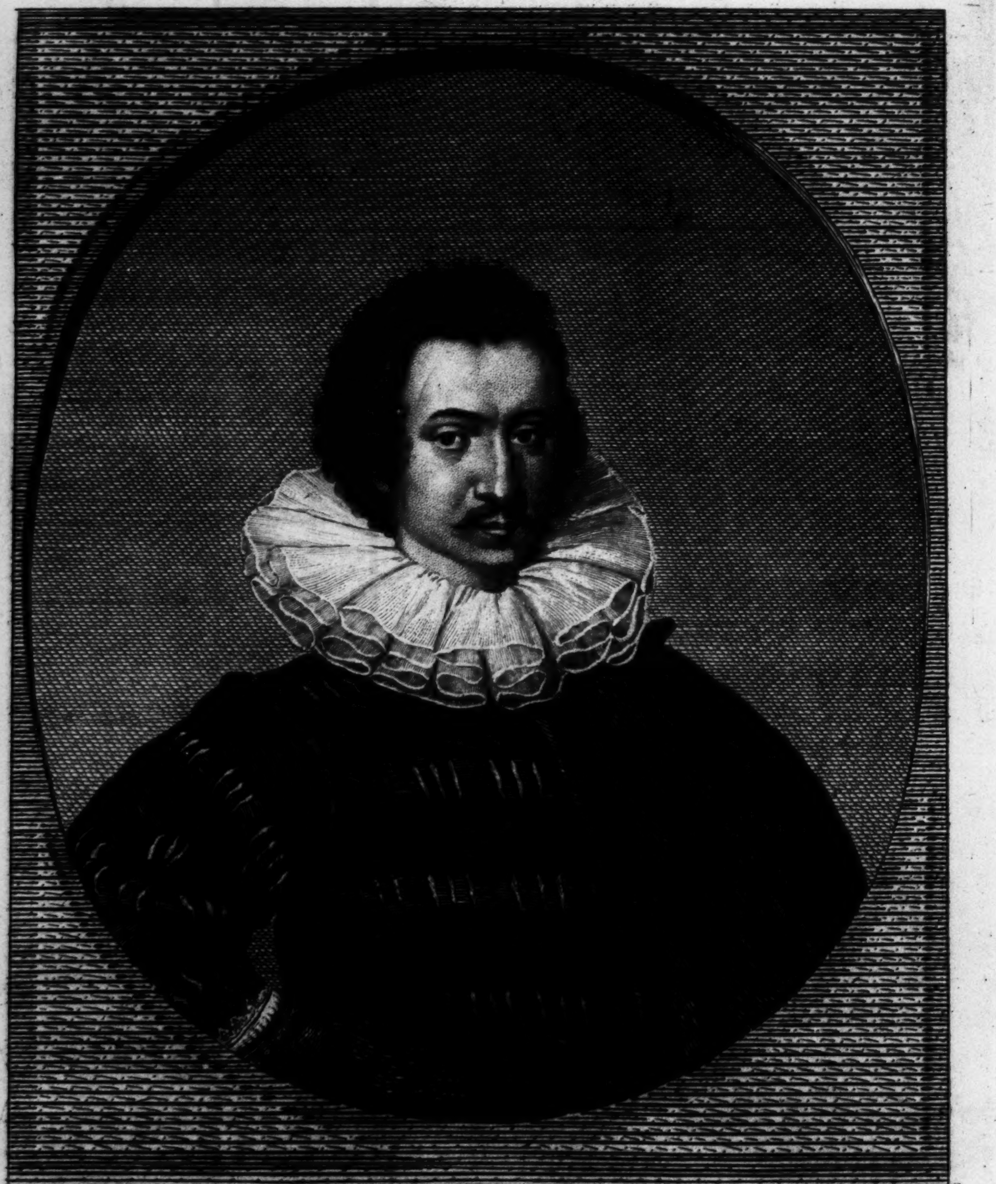
(p) "De ſymmetriâ partium in certis formis humanorum corporum; & de varietate figurarum & flexuris partium, & geſtibus imaginum. Noremberg, 1534," fol.

(q) "Juſti Ammani Tigurini Enchiridion artis pingendi, fingendi, & ſculpendi, Francofurti, 1578," fol.

(r) Humphrey Cooke was maſter carpenter employed in the time of Henry VII. in the new buildings at the Savoy. Robert Cooke, Clarenceux in that reign, was a painter. Of both, ſee Lord Orford, ibid. p. 87. (s) (t) (u) (x) (aa) (bb) Not mentioned by Lord Orford.

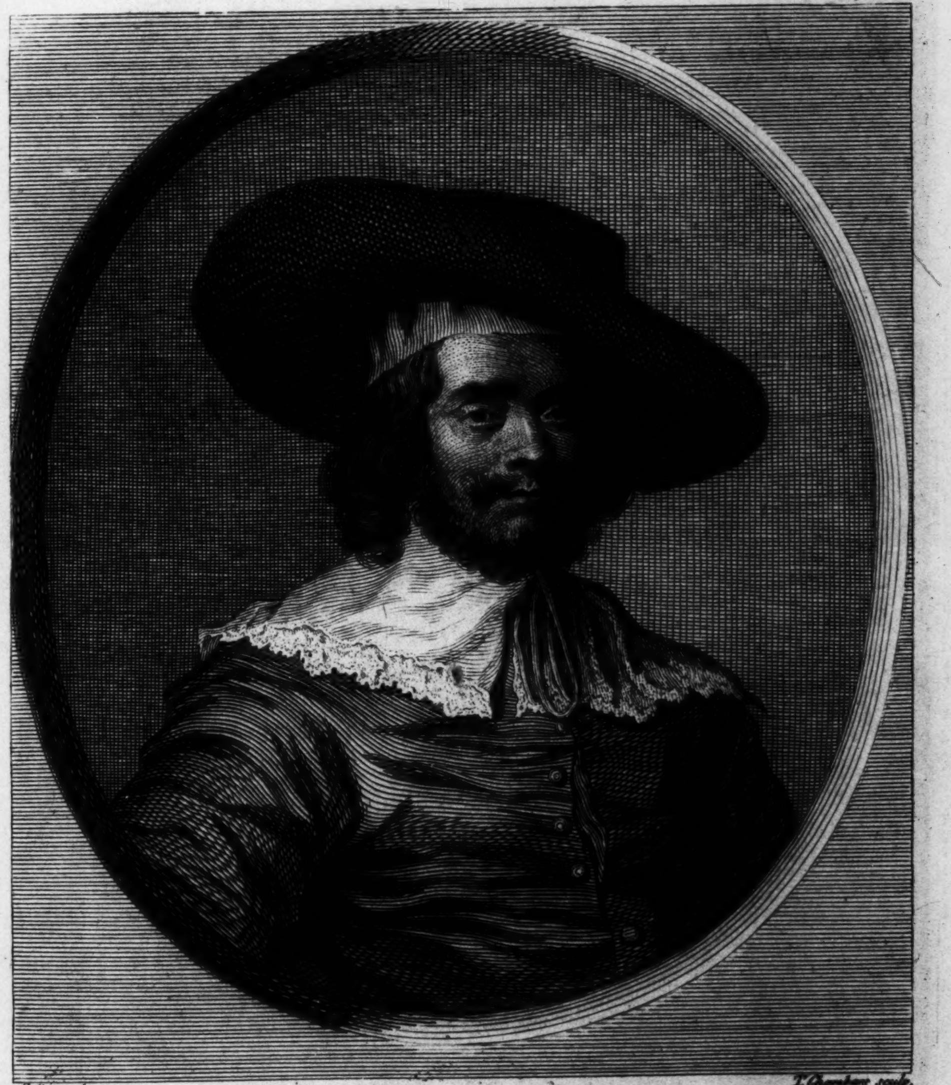
(z) Of him ſee Lord Orford, ibid. p. 173. (y) Nicholas, or his eldeſt ſon Henry, known by the name of Old Stone. Ibid. p. 170.

Pl.LXIX. p.290.



Isaac Oliver pinxt. — I. Miller Sculp

Isaac Oliver.



Se ipso pinx. — T. Chambars sculp.

PETER OLIVER.

of them, in the ſaid county of Leiceſter; and all the ſtate, right, title, intereſt, claim, and demand whatſoever, of him the ſaid Richard Roberts, of, in, and unto the ſaid manor and premiſſes, and every or any part or parcel thereof; and the reverſion and reverſions, remainder and remainders, together with the rents and profits of the premiſſes, and of every part and parcel thereof; except, and out of theſe preſents always foreprifed and reſerved, all that the capital meſſuage and the ſite of the ſaid manor of Eaſt Norton, with the court-yards, orchards, gardens, houſes, edifices, buildings, barns, ſtables, and outhouſes, thereunto belonging, now or late in the tenure or occupation of Richard Roberts, gent. or his aſſigns; and all that cottage or tenement and cloſe thereunto belonging, or therewith uſed, called Braunſton-cloſe, with their appurtenances, now or late in the tenure or occupation of T. S. or his aſſigns; and all thoſe ſeveral cloſes or new-incloſed grounds, now commonly called Buckwell Cloſe, Okeholme Cloſe, and New Cloſe, High Meadow Cloſe, Breach Field, and Peaſeland Cloſe, with their and every of their appurtenances."

The eldeſt ſon Richard was to have £30. a year till he was 15; and afterwards £100. a year till he was 21. There was another ſon, Thomas; and two daughters, Frances and Suſanna.

In 1722, 9 freeholders polled from Eaſt Norton; and 16 in 1775.

The late Henry Dummer, eſq. was lord of this manor; which is now the property of his widow, ſince married to Nathanael Dance, eſq. the celebrated painter. The other land-owners are, the earl of Denbigh; Thomas Babington, eſq. of Rothley; and the heirs of the late Shukburgh Aſhby, eſq. of Quenby. Mr. John Heycock, a wealthy grazier, is the principal inhabitant. The village contains about 15 dwelling-houſes; and the lordſhip, part of which is good feeding land, and part indifferent, is chiefly grazed; very little in tillage: which is the caſe alſo in the lordſhips of Skeffington and Tilton.

Eaſt Norton oldeſt regiſter was taken away ſome years ſince by ſome of the former vicars; and no one now can tell where it may be found. The preſent one is not 20 years ſtanding [1].

Baptiſms, 1786—1790, 17; burials, 10.

The CHAPEL, (ſee Plate LXVIII.)

dedicated to All Saints, conſiſts of a tower (in which are three bells); a neat ſpire; a nave and chancel, ſeparated by a thick partition-wall, in which is a ſmall arched door-way, a ſmall porch, and North door.

The North wall of the nave is much out of the perpendicular.

In this chapel were formerly theſe arms, fig. 14—17.

Or, three bars Gules; Moulton.

Paly of ſix, Or and Gules, a bend Argent; Draycott.

Argent, a feſs between three creſcents Gules; Ogle.

Ermine, a border Gules, charged with eight horſeſhoes Or; Montgomery.

In the South window is an old portrait, with the horſe-ſhoes, engraved in fig. 18; and in the Eaſt window the chalice, fig. 19.

The piſcina is ſhewn in fig. 20; and the antient octagon font in fig. 21.

The ſeats in this chapel are in general antient and open; with old carvings on them. On one is carved a woman's head, attired as a nun; on another is ſomething like a rabbit; on a third is a bear ſitting, with a ſtaff between its fore-paws; and on another a ſquirrel ſitting and holding a nut between the feet, as if going to crack it.

On the wall within the chapel:

"John Featherſtone churchwarden, 1775."

On a table of benefactions near the Weſt end of the North wall:

"Richard Freeſton, late of Eaſt Norton, gent. gave £10. to be placed out by the miniſter and churchwardens for the poor of this pariſh; and the intereſt to be paid on the 5th of November yearly for ever.

In the year 1651, Mr. Richard Roberts, Ralph Holman, Richard Freeſtone, and George Bruſhfield, freeholders, of this pariſh, left twelve acres and twelve perches of land for a cow-paſture for the uſe and benefit of the poor of Eaſt Norton for ever.

{ Philip Woodcock, churchwarden, 1794.
{ J. Burton, painter, Somerby."

In this chapel, which was given by Bertram Verdun to the abbey of Croxden, co. Stafford, at its foundation, divine ſervice is performed every Sunday.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

On a flat ſtone in the chancel:

"Here lieth the body of William Godfrey, who departed this life Nov. 25, 1717,
in the 72d year of his age."

On a large alabaſter in the nave, whereon no arms are perceptible; but the figure of a man with his head reſting on a cuſhion may yet be traced:

"Orate pro animabus . . . .
anno Dñi mill'o CCCCC . . . . et Johanna obiit
. . . . . anno Domini mill'o quinteſimo . . . ."

On a flat ſtone in the nave:

"Here lieth the body of Mary the wife of John Heycock, youngeſt daughter of Benjamin Clarke [2],
of Hardingſtone, in the county of Northampton, eſq.;
who departed this life the 12th day of January, 1753,
in the 39th year of her age.
Here alſo lieth Anne,
the third daughter of John and Mary Heycock, who departed this life the 16th day of November, 1750,
in the 3d year of her age.
Alſo Elizabeth, 2d wife of John Heycock.
She died the 16th day of July, 1759,
in the 38th year of her age.
And alſo Suſanna,
2d daughter of John and Mary Heycock.
She died the 21ſt day of July, 1766,
in the 19th year of her age."

The ſame names and dates have ſince been repeated, in nearly the ſame words, on a mural tablet of white marble againſt the partition-wall between the nave and chancel.

In the chapel-yard:

"Here lie interred the bodies of William and Joyce Hardyman. He departed this life the 21ſt of November, 1770, in the 69th year of his age. She died the 9th day of December, 1779, aged 76 years."

In memory of Urſula the wife of John Page [3], who died June 9, 1764, aged 67.

Everard Perſevall died April 6, 1728, aged 71.

Richard Elliott, July 11, 1788, aged 64.

On an altar-tomb:

"M. S.
dilectiſſimæ conjugis Elizabethæ Shaw,
filiæ Richardi Freeſton, hujus parochiæ, gen.
Quæ ſtirpe honeſtam . . . . rebus,
. . . . dotibus.
Obiit 6 Septembris, anno Dñi
. . . .
rector de Barton Seagrave, in agro Northamptonienſi."

Another altar-tomb adjoins the laſt; but has no inſcription legible; and another nearly ſunk in the ground cloſe by.

In the church-yard of Iſlington in Middleſex is a tomb-ſtone in memory of John Page of Norton, who died Nov. 9, 1758, aged 26.

---

[1] From the information of the rev. William Fenwicke, ſon of the late rev. John Fenwicke, rector of Hallaton, the preſent curate at Tugby and Eaſt Norton.

[2] Of this family ſee before, under Tilton, p. 468.

[3] Many of this family occur in the early part of the Tugby Regiſter.

TWYFORD,

antiently called Taivorde, probably derived its name from its ſituation; a conſiderable ſtream (called The Eye) running through the village, over which is now a handſome bridge built of brick, of three arches[1], with a good parapet wall and ſtrong ſtone coping, well ſecured with iron and lead. Probably, before the bridge was built, the town might be entered by two fords; which gave riſe to its preſent name, Twiford. It is ten miles diſtant from Leiceſter; bounded by North and South Mardefield, Ouſton, Loſeby, South Croxton, its own hamlet of Thorpe Sachvile, and Burrow; and, in the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, is within the deanry of Goſcote. "Twyford prædicto rivulo [Eye] irrigatur proximè[2]."

At the general ſurvey, Taivorde, containing four ploughlands and a half, and eight acres of meadow, is noticed as a member of the royal manor of Rodoleih[3].

In the time of king Henry II. (from 1154 to 1189) Robert de Twyford was lord of this village; and from him it deſcended to Julian his daughter and heir, mother of Robert Martinwaſt.

It was ſoon afterwards the inheritance of the Sacheviles; for, in 1207, we find that Robert de Secheville[4] claimed the right of preſentation to the rectory.

On the aid granted to king Henry III, in 1253, towards the marrying of his ſiſter with the emperor of the Romans, 9*s*. 4*d*. was paid by Ralph de Torp for half a fee held by him at Twyford under Peverel[5].

In the Teſta de Nevill, compiled about the year 1240, Thorpe and Twyford are deſcribed as conſiſting of two ploughlands.

"In Twyford & Thorp dim' feodũ quod Radus de Secchevill tenet de Willmo de Bruere."

In the Itinerary of 1280, Twyford and Thorpe anſwered collectively as one vill.

The poſſeſſions of Croxton abbey at Twyford are thus deſcribed in one of the regiſters of that religious houſe:

"Habemus in Twyford, de dono Johannis le Dyve, unum meſſuagium & unum croftum, que Humfridus de Eſton de nobis tenet, reddendo annuatim veſtiario de Croxton 2ś. ad duos terminos. Et idem Humfridus obligavit ſe in 4d. annui redditûs eidem veſtiario ſolvendis, per cirograffum.

Habemus in Twyford, de dono regis Henrici, 48ś. annui redditûs, recipiendos de terrâ quam Johannes le Megre tenuit, ad Paſcha & ad Mich'[6]."

Ralph Pipard (who in 1274 ſucceeded his uncle Ralph Fitz-Nicholas in the manor of Stretton Baſkervile in Warwickſhire; and had lands alſo in the counties of Nottingham, Derby, Oxford, and Berks), was in 1290 a ſuitor to king Edward I, for the regales libertates[7] appendant to the manor of Twyford, as parcel of the king's manor of Rothley; which he appears to have ſome time before enjoyed at an annual rent of ſix marks. But let us take his own ſtatement:

"Radus Pypard, qui uſus fuit regalibus libertatibus in manerio de Twyford, poſt feoffamentum regis H. ſucceſſori ſuo inde fc̃m, & cujus libertas ſeyſ' fuit in manum Domini regis pro causâ quam ignorat, optulit ad Scaccarium reddere annuatim ſex marcas pro eiſdem libertatibus integraliter habend' ibidem tam de parte Johis Giffard per avunculum ipſius feoffati ibidem, cujus libertas fuit in man' dñi regis pro eo q̄d alium titulum inde non habet quam feoffamentum predictum pro parte ſuâ quam prius habuit per regem, petit q̄d rex velit ei priſtinum ſtatum concedere abſque redditu, vel totum ei admittere pro redditu ſupradicto.

"Conceſſum eſt per regem, quod ille qui plus habet de terrâ plus ſolvat de redditu pro portione ſuâ, ſi poſſint concordare; abſque vicecomes habeat libertatem, & reſpondeat de dño regi de firma.

"Idem Rads dicit quod, occaſione cujuſdam mandati quod detulit ad Scaccarium a rege in Vaſconiâ non fuit ei permiſſum habere ſeyſinam regalium libertatum in manerio predicto, pro quibus habendis ſibi & [ſucceſſori]bus & heredibus ſuis integraliter finem fecit ad Scaccarium, & coram juſtic', & dictas libertates arentavit ad ſex marcas annuas; unde petit quo ex quo dictas libertates hucuſque non habuit, ſicut Johes Giffard coram rege recognovit, q̄d de fine predicto & redditu predicto uſque ad ſeiſinam quam inde recepturus eſt per novam conceſſionem regis, ut predictum eſt, ſit quietus.

"Conceſſum eſt per conſilium, quod ſic fiat; & baronibus de Scaccario mandetur in forma predicta[8]."

In 1300, Edmund earl of Cornwall died ſeiſed of divers lands at Twyford[9].

In 1301, the above-named Ralph Pipard levied a fine of his manor of Stratton juxta Hynkle to ſir John de Twyford[10], knt. of Kirk Langley in Derbyſhire; and died in 1310, leaving John Pipard his ſon and heir.

In 1303, it was found that Thomas de Nevile died ſeiſed of certain tenements in Twyford, held of the king in capite, as an appurtenance of the manor of Okeham, co. Rutland; which manor Margaret counteſs of Cornwall held wholly in dower, by homage; and that Theobald, ſon of Peter de Nevile, couſin of the aforeſaid Thomas, ſon of Robert, brother of the aforeſaid Peter, was the next heir of the ſaid Thomas[11].

Nov. 21, 1304, king Edward I. (although, upon the death of Thomas de Nevil, who held of him in capite, he had, according to cuſtom, cauſed all his lands to be ſeized into his hands; and, although he might yet retain one meſſuage and 37 acres of meadow, with their appurtenances, in Twyford, (all which the ſaid Thomas was poſſeſſed of at his death) as an eſcheat; yet), at the requeſt of William de Bereford, granted the ſame to John de Nevil, couſin of the above Thomas, and to his heirs for ever: "Rex archiepiſcopis, &c. ſalutem. Sciatis nos, per mortem Thome de Nevil' defuncti, qui de nobis tenuit in capite omnes terras & tenementa que fuerunt ejuſdem Thome die quo obiit, prout moris eſt, capi fecerimus in manum noſtram: Nos, licèt unum meſſuagium, xxxvii acras prati, cum pertinentiis, in Twyford, in com' Leic', que dictus Thomas tenuit de nobis in capite die predicto, & que per mortem ejuſdem Thome adhuc in manu noſtrâ exiſtunt, poſſemus, tanquam eſcaetam noſtram, quibuſdam rationibus, in manibus noſtris retinere: Volentes tamen Johanni de Nevill conſanguineo predicti Thome (ad requiſitionem dilecti & fidelis noſtri Willielmi de Bereford) gratiam facere in hâc parte, dedimus eidem Johanni & conceſſimus, pro nobis & heredibus noſtris, quantum in nobis eſt, dicta meſſuagium, terram, & pratum, cum pertinentiis, que de nobis tenentur in capite, ſicut predictum; habenda & tenenda eidem Johanni & heredibus ſuis de nobis & heredibus noſtris per ſervitia indè debita & conſueta in perpetuum. Hiis teſtibus; venerabili patre Waltero Covent' & Lichf' epiſcopo, Henrico de Lacey comite Linc', Johanne de Britanniâ juniore, Amaneno de la Bret, Hugone de Veer, Willielmo le Vavaſur, Willielmo le Richer, Roberto de la Warde ſeneſcallo hoſpitii noſtri, & aliis. Dat' per manum noſtram, apud Bruſtwyk, xxi die Novemb' [1]."

---

[1] Over the centre-arch, on the Eaſt ſide of the bridge, is the builder's name, and date of the year when built; "John Lewin, 1783."

[2] Wyrley, MS.

[3] "In Taivorde 4 carucatæ terræ & dimidia; & 8 acræ prati." Domeſday, fol. 230. b. 1.

[4] "Robertus de Sechevill debet 1 marcam, quòd xxiiii milites ſint coram rege, parati ſacramentum recognoſcere, quis advocatus præſentavit ultimam perſonam ad eccleſiam de Twiford." Madox, Hiſtory of the Exchequer, ex Mag. Rot. 8 John, Rot. 1. b. Warw. & Leic.

[5] Vol. I. p. liii; from the Teſta de Nevill.

[6] Peck, MSS. 4935; ex MS. in 4to apud Belvoir, fol. 39. a.

[7] Libertas in a forenſic ſenſe (and we ſcarcely meet with it in any of our Anglo-Saxon documents) ſignified, not general or natural liberty, but exemptions from ſome particular burden or inconvenience, to which others not ſo privileged were legally and uſually obnoxious. It is defined by Bracton, therefore, evacuatio ſervitutis. The liberty of a city or burg conſiſted in the lord having either the ſame mulcts or forfeitures, &c. to his own uſe. Theſe de jure belonged to the crown, and were transferred by grant, and excluded the king's bailiffs and reeves from intermeddling within the liberty to demand mulcts, &c. The liberty was to the lord for his men and tenants, who were his liberi homines, being protected by him from the ſheriffs and bailiffs of the king.—The church of Durham had a grant of "omnes libertates quæ ad coronam pertinent," Mon. Angl. vol. I. p. 42. Ruſſell, MS Notes on Spelman's Gloſſary.

[8] Petitiones in Parliamento, 28 Edw. I; Rot. Parl. vol. I. p. 49.

[9] Eſch. 28 Edw. I. N° 45. Leic.

[10] The Twyfords continued their reſidence at Stratton till the reign of Henry VII. Dugdale, Warwickſhire, vol. I. p. 51.

[11] Eſch. 31 Edw. I. N° 30. Leic.

In 1325, it was found that Stephen de Segrave, deceaſed, and Alice his wife, held 9l. 16s. 2d. rent, ariſing out of divers tenements in Twyford and Thorpe Sachevill, of Thomas de Wake, by the ſervice of one pair of gilt ſpurs, or by the ſervice of a knight's fee; and that John de Segrave was his ſon and heir [2].

In 1333, it was found that three bovates of land, with the appurtenances, which Thomas de Nevyll died ſeiſed of, in Twyford, were not held of the king, but of Hugh de Andele and Margaret his wife, as of the manor of Okeham, by the ſervice of ſuit of court at the court of the ſaid Hugh [3].

In 1346, John de Segrave and Robert Maule (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) were aſſeſſed 10*s.* for a quarter of one knight's fee; the abbot of Valdey [de Valle Dei] and the abbot of Ouſton the ſame ſum, for a like portion of a knight's fee; both ſituated in Twyford and Thorpe, and parcel of the fee of Sachvile [4].

In 1353, John de Segrave died ſeiſed of lands in Twyford [5].

In 1391, Robert de Swillington, knt. died ſeiſed of the advowſon of the church of Twyford [6]; and in the ſame year the abbot and convent of Ouſton had a grant of a tenement in Twyford [7].

It ſhould ſeem that the greateſt part of Sachvile's lands, both here and at Thorpe, came afterwards to the Belers; and from them to the Swillingtons; for, in 1391, ſir Roger Swillington, knt. died ſeiſed of ſeveral lands here, with the advowſon of the church, in right of Mary his wife, daughter and coheir of ſir Roger Beler, of Kirkby, knt. [8]

In 1399, it was found that Thomas Mowbray, late duke of Norfolk, died ſeiſed of certain lands in Twyford; and alſo that Margaret late ducheſs of Norfolk was ſeiſed of lands there [9].

In 1406, Thomas Mowbray earl Mareſcal died ſeiſed of certain meſſuages, lands, and rents, in Twyford [10].

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Twyford was rated at 2l. 12s. 0d.; and in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum; but an abatement was then made of 2s.; Thorpe Sachvile, at 1l. 11s. 6d.; and 2s. 11d. abated.

In 1461, John Mowbray duke of Norfolk died ſeiſed of Twyford as an hamlet of his manor of Dalby Chaucombe [11].

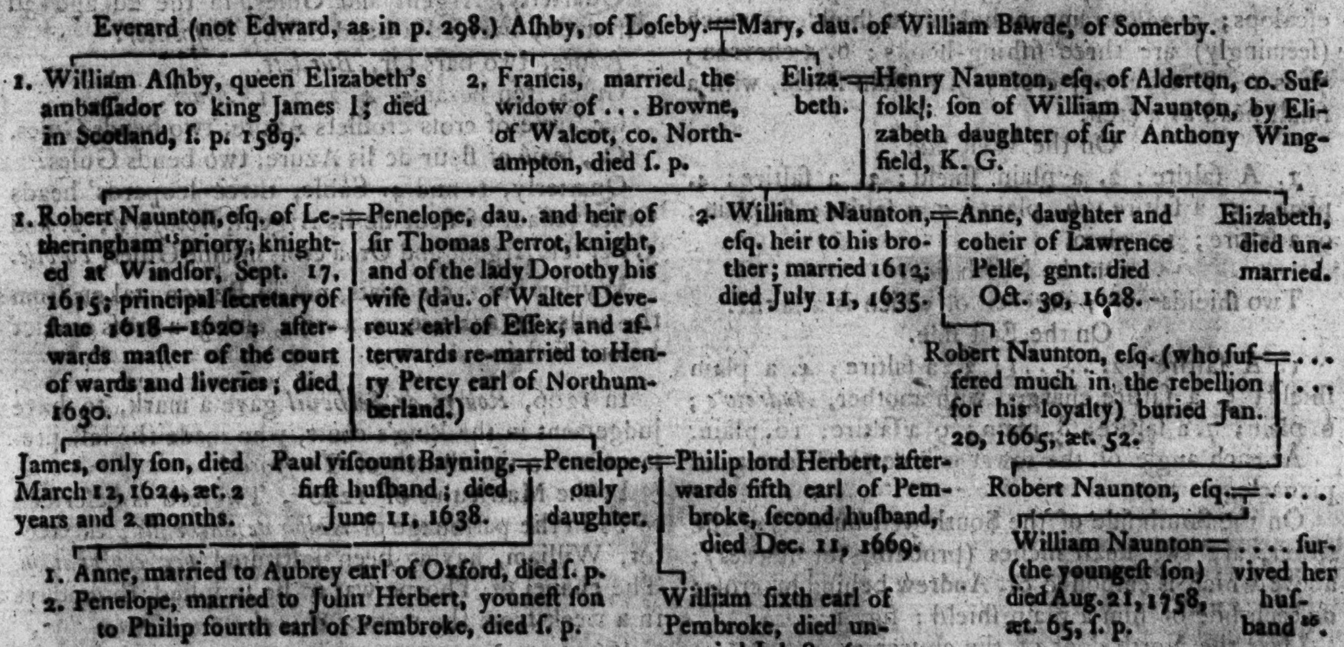
In 1564, there were 26 families in Twyford, and 15 in Thorpe Sachvile.

The lords of Okeham had a court in their caſtle of Okeham, unto which ſeveral towns in Leiceſterſhire, as Twyford and Thorpe Sachvile, owed ſuit and ſervice [12].

The abbot and convent of Ouſton had divers lands and tenements in Twyford, demiſed to different tenants at the yearly rent of 26s. 10½d. Theſe lands were ſurrendered to king James I, June 19, 1611 [13].

"The late lord of this manor was ſir Robert Naunton, knight, maſter of the court of wards [14]."

The connexion of this able ſtateſman with Leiceſterſhire will appear by the following ſhort pedigree:



Everard (not Edward, as in p. 298.) Aſhby, of Loſeby. = Mary, dau. of William Bawde, of Somerby.

1. William Aſhby, queen Elizabeth's ambaſſador to king James I; died in Scotland, ſ. p. 1589.

2. Francis, married the widow of . . . Browne, of Walcot, co. Northampton, died ſ. p.

Elizabeth. = Henry Naunton, eſq. of Alderton, co. Suffolk; ſon of William Naunton, by Elizabeth daughter of ſir Anthony Wingfield, K. G.

1. Robert Naunton, eſq. of Letheringham [15] priory; knighted at Windſor, Sept. 17, 1615; principal ſecretary of ſtate 1618—1620; afterwards maſter of the court of wards and liveries; died 1630. = Penelope, dau. and heir of ſir Thomas Perrot, knight, and of the lady Dorothy his wife (dau. of Walter Devereux earl of Eſſex, and afterwards re-married to Henry Percy earl of Northumberland.)

2. William Naunton, eſq. heir to his brother; married 1612; died July 11, 1635. = Anne, daughter and coheir of Lawrence Pelle, gent. died Oct. 30, 1628.

Elizabeth, died unmarried.

James, only ſon, died March 12, 1624, æt. 2 years and 2 months.

Paul viſcount Bayning, firſt huſband; died June 11, 1638. = Penelope, only daughter. = Philip lord Herbert, afterwards fifth earl of Pembroke, ſecond huſband, died Dec. 11, 1669.

1. Anne, married to Aubrey earl of Oxford, died ſ. p.
2. Penelope, married to John Herbert, youneſt ſon to Philip fourth earl of Pembroke, died ſ. p.

William ſixth earl of Pembroke, died unmarried July 8, 1674.

Robert Naunton, eſq. (who ſuffered much in the rebellion for his loyalty) buried Jan. 20, 1665, æt. 52. = . . .

Robert Naunton, eſq. = ...

William Naunton (the youngeſt ſon) died Aug. 21, 1758, æt. 65, ſ. p. = . . . ſurvived her huſband [16].

The freeholders at Twyford in 1630 were, William Tyers, John Reeve, John Day, Richard Reeve, John Hollowell, and William Lowth; at Thorpe Sachvile, John Cave, gent. Richard Chiſsledine, Robert Scarborough, William Bareſby, John Brittaine, George Williamſon, and Robert Duckett.

In 1655, there was collected in Twyford, for the relief of the poor Proteſtants in Piedmont, the ſum of 1l. 0s. 6d.

In 1719, 23 freeholders polled from Twyford, and 8 from Thorpe Sachvile.

In 1722, 25 freeholders polled from Twyford, and 8 from Thorpe Sachvile; and in 1775, we find 16 names from Twyford, and 6 from Thorpe Sachvile.

William Aſhby, eſq. of Twyford and Thorpe, and afterwards of Leiceſter, built a very good houſe at Thorpe, which he gave up to his eldeſt ſon; but which has ſtood empty and been going to ruin between 30 and 40 years. The laſt owner of Thorpe Sachvile gave to the Rev. George Aſhby the fine Roman key engraved under Burrow [17]. The father alſo built another excellent houſe, Barwell rectory, for another ſon.

---

[1] Cart. 33 Edw. I. N° 78.
[2] Eſch. 19 Edw. II. N° 91. Leic.
[3] Eſch. 7 Edw. III. N° 53. Leic.
[4] Rot. Aux. 20 Edw. III.
[5] Eſch. 27 Edw. III. N° 69 Leic.
[6] Eſch. 15 Ric. II. pars 1, N° 62.
[7] Pat. 15 Ric. II. pars 2. m. 31. pro ten. in Twyford.
[8] Chetwynd MS.
[9] Eſch. 1 Hen. IV. N° 71. Leic.
[10] Eſch. 8 Hen. IV. N° 76. Leic.
[11] Eſch. 1 Edw. VI. N° 46. Leic.
[12] Wright's Rutland, p. 104; Magna Britannia, vol. IV. p. 519.
[13] See vol. I. p. cxl.
[14] Burton, MS. 1641.
[15] Some account of ſir Robert Naunton, with the epitaphs on his family, will be found amongſt the Additions to this Volume.
[16] A widow Naunton with a portion of £20,000. (perhaps this lady) was married in 1761 to Captain William S rrac.
[17] See vol. II. p. 525.

The caſe of Mrs. Mary Beaumont, of High Twyford, who was cured of an obſtinate paralytic diſorder by electricity, was publiſhed in 1760[1].

In an act paſſed in 1796, for dividing the open fields in the lordſhip or liberties of Twyford, containing about 900 acres, Nathanael Aſhby, eſq. is deſcribed as lord of the manor, and entitled to ſundry ſmall chief, quit, fee-farm, or other rents, for certain lands within the manor, belonging to proprietors of lands in the open fields: William Latham, eſq. in right of Mary-Elizabeth his wife, ſir Thomas Huſſey Apreece, bart. in right of dame Dorothea his wife, William Fabling, Andrew Peake, and John Woodroffe, gentlemen, as entitled, in different proportions, to the tithes of grain in the whole lordſhip, and to the tithes of hay in part, and to a modus called Hay Silver in the remainder, except only of the antient incloſures within the ring of the town: The Rev. Thomas Clarke, as vicar, entitled to the ſcrap, or firſt math, for two out of three years, of a piece of meadow land containing about ſix roods, with a right of common for two cows in the open fields, and to an antient incloſure of about one acre within the ring of the town, and alſo to the tithe of hay from all the antient incloſures within the ring of the town; and to all other vicarial tithes, mortuaries, Eaſter-offerings, and ſurplice-fees: And the ſaid Nathanael Aſhby, together with the ſaid William Latham and ſir Thomas Huſſey Apreece in right of their reſpective wives, the ſaid William Fabling, Andrew Peake, and John Woodroffe, together with William Reeve, eſq. Robert-George Robinſon, eſq. William Oldham, and others, as owners of the open fields, and of nearly all the houſes, yards, gardens, orchards, homeſteads, and antient incloſures. An allotment is decreed to Mr. Nathanael Aſhby, proportionate to his intereſt, as lord of the manor, in the waſte lands, and a compoſition for his chief, quit, fee-farm, and other tithe rents, equal in amount to ſuch payments to be let on a leaſe for 21 years; two acres, for getting ſtone, gravel, &c. for repair of roads; a compoſition to the vicar for his ſwap and common right; and to Mr. Latham, ſir Thomas Huſſey Apreece, William Fabling, Andrew Peake, John Woodroffe, and the vicar, a compoſition for tithes and all other dues (Eaſter-offerings and ſurplice-fees excepted) equal to two elevenths of all the land to be incloſed which had ever been known to be broke up, and alſo of all the lands then uſed as balks and heads or other turnings for the plough; one eighth part from the other land to be incloſed, and one eighth in reſpect to the right of thoſe poſſeſſing antient incloſures; the reſidue according to the proportions of the ſeveral owners. Tithes not compounded for were reſerved to the vicar; and intakes and other manerial rights ſecured to the lord of the manor.

The lordſhip of Twyford is indifferent and cold land.

The CHURCH (ſee Plate LXX.)

dedicated to St. Andrew (though they have kept their wake, for ſome few years paſt, annually on Trinity-Sunday), conſiſts of a handſome embattled tower (in which are three bells); a new-built chancel, nave, and North aile, ſeparated by four ſemicircular arches upon round pillars, over which are two clereſtory windows.

Juſt below the battlements of the tower are the following ſhields, emboſſed on the ſtones:

On the South ſide.

1. A ſaltire; 2. ….. ; 3. a lion rampant; 4. two eſcalops; 5. a lion rampant holding a ſhield, on which (ſeemingly) are three fiſhing-hooks; 6. a chevron; 7. as 1; 8. a Calvary-croſs; 9. a plain ſhield, with a ſmall head as a creſt.

On the Weſt ſide.

1. A ſaltire; 2. a plain ſhield; 3. a ſaltire; 4. plain; 5. a ſaltire; 6. plain; 7. a ſaltire; 8. plain; 9. a ſaltire; 10. plain.

On the North ſide.

Two ſhields only; on each of which is a ſaltire.

On the Eaſt ſide.

1. A ſaltire; 2. ……; 3. a ſaltire; 4. a plain ſhield; 5. a ſaltire charged with another, Andrew's; 6. plain; 7. a ſaltire; 8. plain; 9. a ſaltire; 10. plain.

At each angle of the tower is a notched turret, or pinnacle.

On the South ſide of the South-weſt buttreſs of the tower, are two ſmall niches (probably for ſtatues); above which is emboſſed St. Andrew behind his croſs; on each ſide of him a plain ſhield; fig. 1.

Over the North door of the church:

John Keſten, churchwarden,
1777.

The font is antient, ſquare, and indented at each angle; fig. 1.

The pulpit is of oak, modern and handſome, with in front, ſurrounded by a glory of inlaid wood; the ſeats in general are old, open, and much out of repair.

✝
I H S

At the Weſt end of the nave is a mean old gallery for the choir, with open balluſtrades in front; above and at the back of which are the royal arms, very indifferently painted.

"In the nave is a poor-man's box, with three haſps and ſtaples for three locks. On it is the date "1618." The clerk told me, he never remembered but one ſolitary half-crown being put into it; and that by a gentleman who, many years ago, accompanied Mr. Aſhby of Thorpe to this church for public worſhip.

Mr. Burton deſcribes theſe arms here, fig. 3—9.

Gules, three ducal crowns Or, St. Edmund.

Quarterly, Argent and Gules, in the 2d and 3d a frett Or, over all a bend Sable, Deſpencer.

Azure, two bars Or, Burdett.

Gules, ten bezants, 4, 2, 3, 1, Zouch.

Or, ſemé of croſs croſſlets Azure, two bends Gules.

Or, ſemé of fleur de lis Azure, two bends Gules.

Quarterly, 1. and 4. Sable, three leopards' heads Gules jeſſant of fleur de lis Argent, Woodford; 2. and 3. Per feſs Argent and Or, a croſs moline Gules, Folvile.

Wyrley has three coats, not in Burton, taken from the bells: 1. a ſaltire, 2. a croſs, and 3. a croſs croſſlet botoné fitché.

In 1206, Robert de Sechevil gave a mark, to have judgement in the king's court, who made the laſt preſentation to the church of Twyford?

In the Matriculus of 1220[2], Twyford is deſcribed to be in the patronage of Ralph de Sachevile; the rector, William, having been inſtituted per concordiam. The chapel of Thorpe was to be ſupplied three days in a week from the mother church.

In 1344, the procurations were, 7*s.* 6¼*d.*; and the rectory was taxed at 25 marks, and paid 2*s.* 6*d.* for Peter-pence.

Twyford was endowed, in 1415, by Philip de Repingdon, biſhop of Lincoln, and appropriated to the prior and convent of Kirkby ſuper Wretheck[3].

The rectory of Twyford, with tithes in Thorpe, were leaſed, by the prior and convent of Kirkby Beler, in 1509, to William Tyer and Margaret his wife, at the yearly rent of £7.[4]

In 1534-5, the ſynodals were 3*s.* 6*d.*; ſir John Coke had a penſion from it of 2*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*; and the vicarage was worth £8. In 1650, Twyford was returned as an impropriation; the rectory worth £100.; the vicarage £10.; and the incumbent as "negligent."

---

[1] Atteſted by Mr. Joſeph Hornblower of Birmingham, in Gent. Mag. vol. XXX. p. 477.

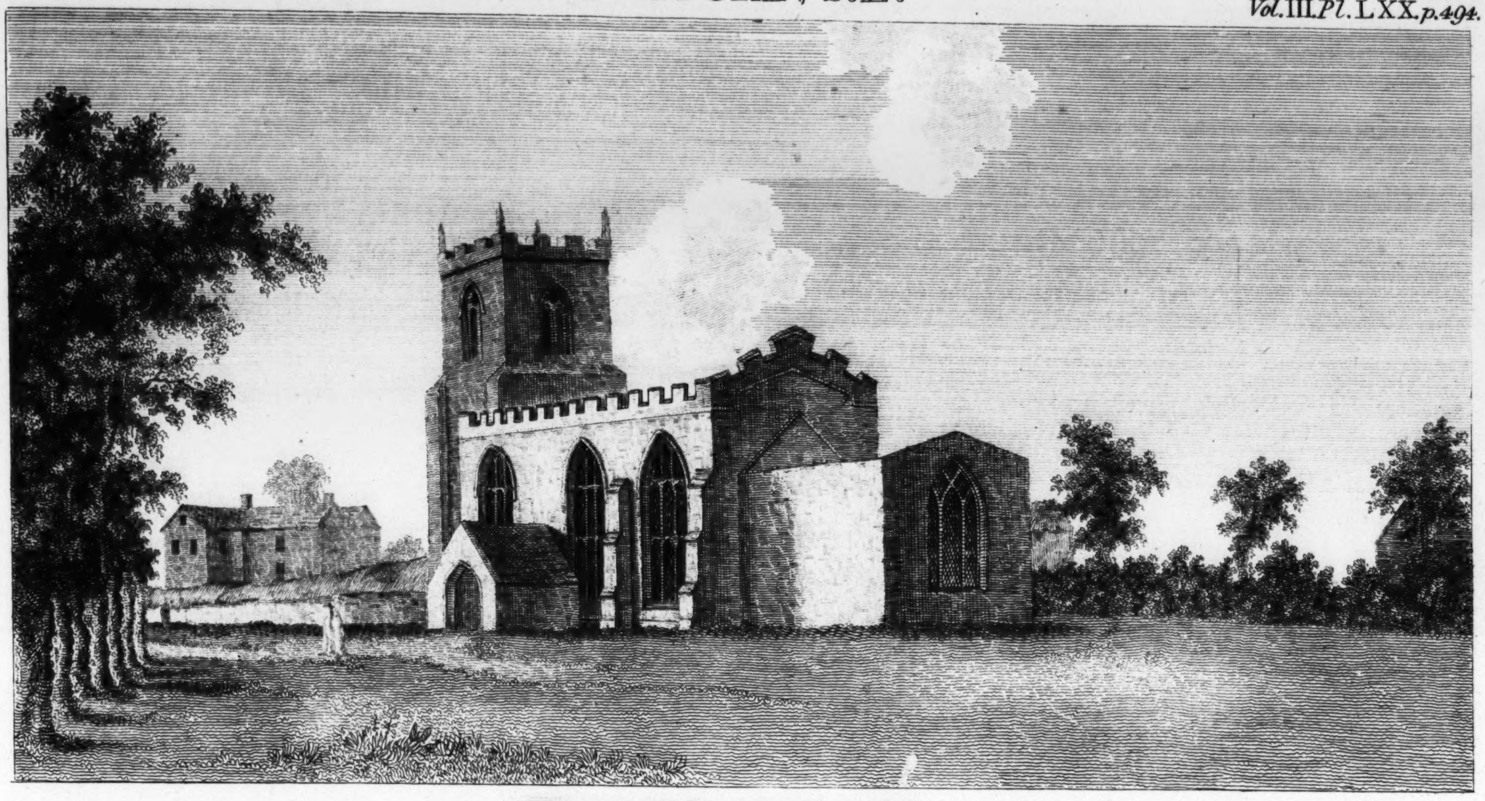
[2] See the Introductory Volume, p. lx.

[3] The endowment of the vicarage will be found in a ſubſequent page, amongſt the Additions to Eaſt Goſcote.—An act of endowment by the biſhop might be made either in the act of appropriation, or by a ſubſequent act, and a ſeparate inſtrument; ſo that, in ſearching for endowments in the Regiſtries of Biſhops, or the Court of Augmentations, &c. you are not to neglect the acts of appropriation, nor deſpair of finding the endowment, becauſe you find not a ſeparate act or inſtrument of endowment. Gibſon's Codex Eccl. p. 753.

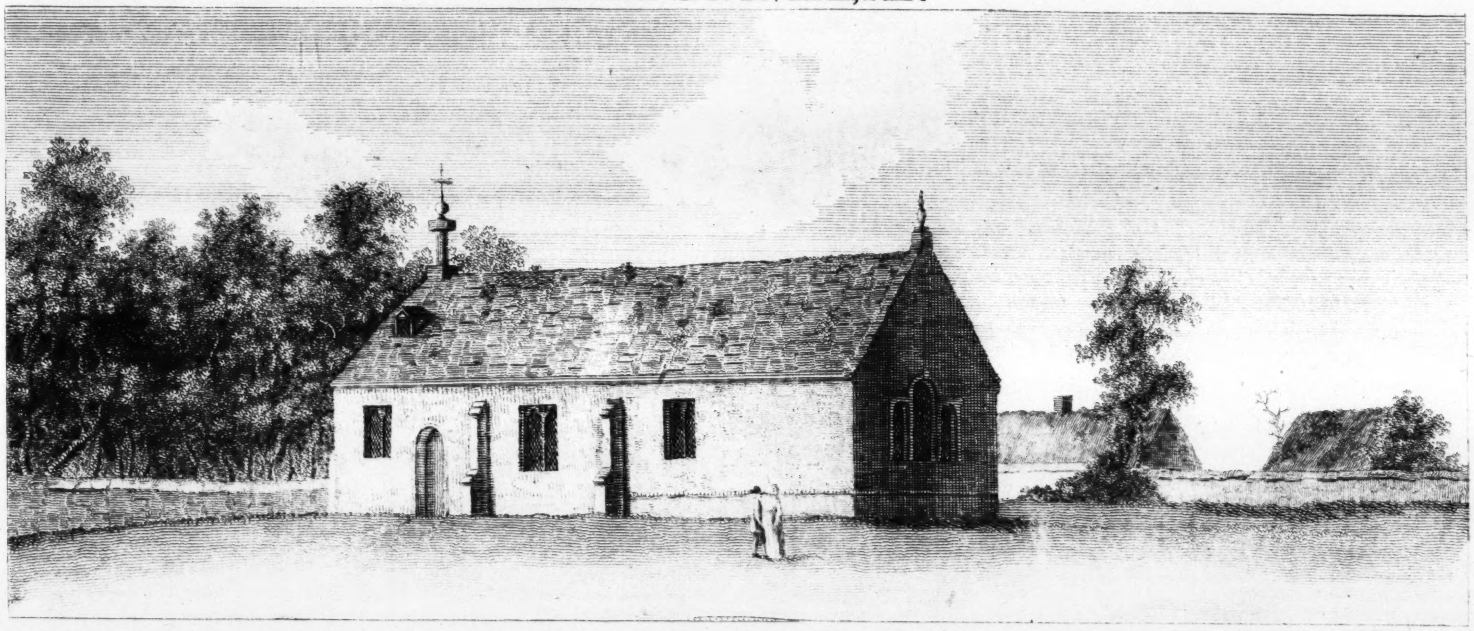
[4] Bailiff's Accompts in the Augmentation Office.

TWYFORD, S.E.

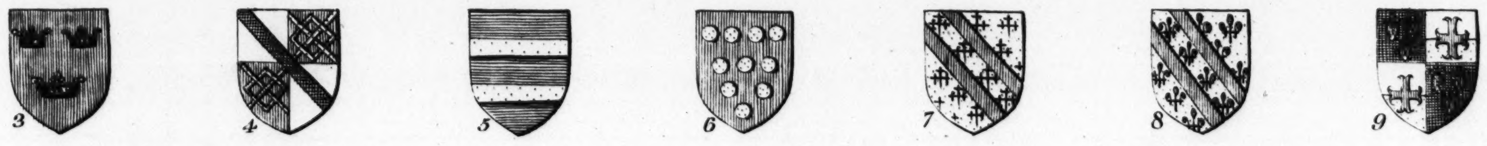
Vol. III. Pl. LXX. p. 494.

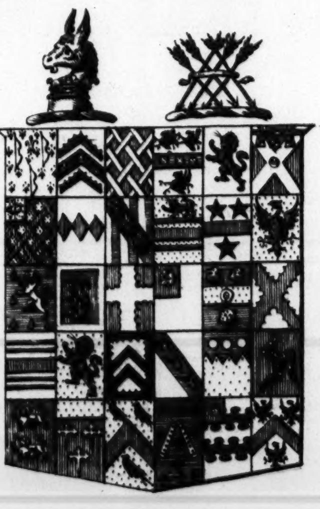


TRORPE SACHVILE, S.E.



I. P. Malcolm sc. 1792.





10
p. 556.

Fig. 1.

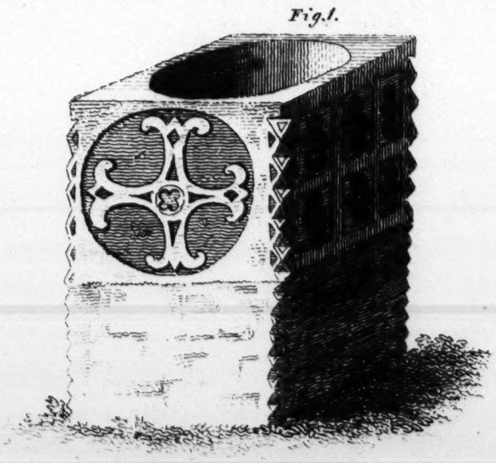


Fig. 30. p. 539.

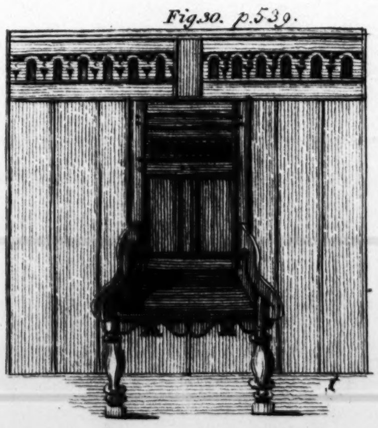

Fig. 2.

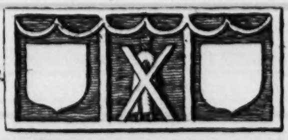
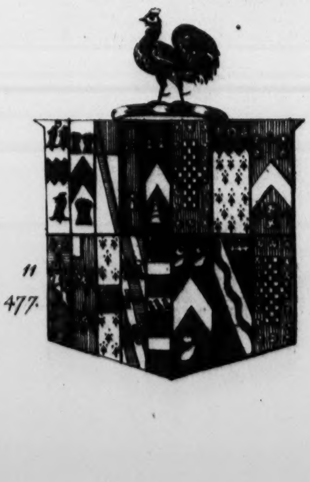
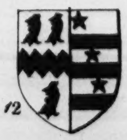
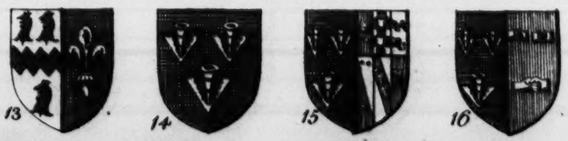


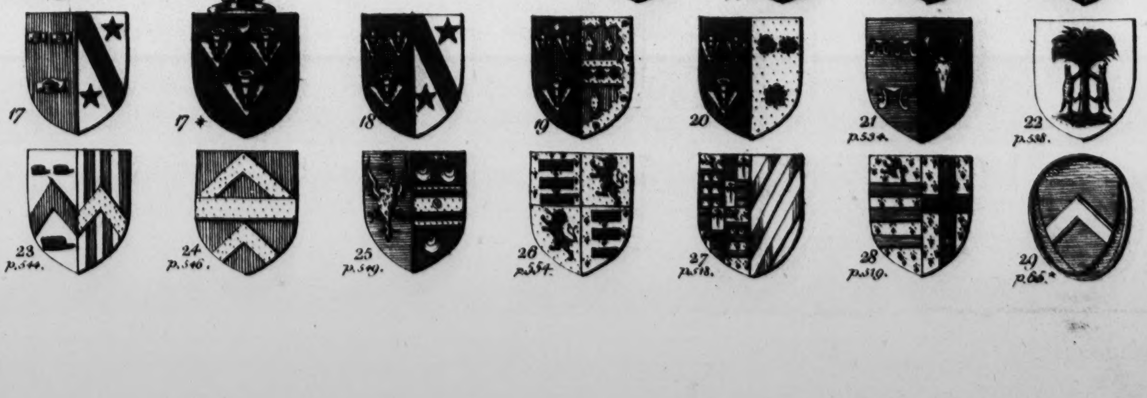


11
p. 477.



12





17
17*
18 19 20 21
p. 534.
22
p. 538.
23
p. 544.
24
p. 546.
25
p. 549.
26
p. 554.
27
p. 518.
28
p. 519.
29
p. 65.*

RECTORS.	PATRONS.
William ...... 1207.	Ralph de Sachvile.
John de Sutton [1], 1298.
Ralph de Sachvile, 7 kal. Sept. 1314.
Ralph de Sachvile, 1350.
VICARS.
Walter Gerald, 1415.	Prior and convent of Kirkby Wretheck.
William Mounceaux, Feb. 18, 1452.
John Dayne [2], 15..
John Nathull, 1534.	Ralph de Sachevile.
John Day [3], 1562.
Nathanael Goche, 1631.
Robert Scarborough, 1660.
James Wright, Aug. 5, 1662.	The King, per lapſum, ad corroborand'.
Robert Segrave, June 2, 1687.	William Pike, gent.
Michael Broughton, May 31, 1720; died 1731.	George Aſhby, eſq.
Samuel Mott [4], Feb. 22, 17 9.	John Aſhby, eſq. of the Lynches, Shropſhire.
Joſeph Juxon [5], March 20, 1731-2; died Oct. 15, 1757.	Waring Aſhby, eſq.
George Aſhby, B. D. Nov. 7, 1759.	George Aſhby, eſq.
Thomas Clarke, Jan. 17, 1769; the preſent vicar.	Shukburgh Aſhby, eſq. [6

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

In the chancel.

On flat ſtones within the altar-rails:

"Here lieth the body of Frances, wife of William Aſhby, eſq. who died Dec. 14, 1729, aged 33."

"Here lieth the body of Frances, the daughter of William Aſhby, eſq. who died June 21, 1738, aged 22."

On other flat ſtones in the chancel:

"Here lieth the body of William Aſhby, gent. who departed this life March 26, 1702."

"Here lieth the body of Mary Aſhby, widow, who died March 3, 1723, aged 70."

"Here lieth the body of Mary Aſhby, ſpinſter, who died March 26, 1744, aged 63."

In the nave.

"Here lieth interred the body of William Aſhby, the ſon of William Aſhby, of Thorpe-Satchvile, eſq. by Frances his wife;
who departed this life the 7th of February, 1747,
aged 9 months."

"Here lieth the body of Richard Pakeman, gent. who departed this life the 10th day of May,
anno Domini 1702."

"Here lieth the body of Elizabeth Barſby, the wife of William Barſby, gent.;
who departed this life the 29th day of October, 1711."

In the North aile:

"Beneath lies the body of John Williamſon, from Thorp, who departed this life May 27,
anno Domini 1755, aged 60 years.
Alſo Mary, wife of the above, died Aug. 31, anno Domini 1774, aged 74 years.
Both in their grave their mould'ring duſt remain,
Till Chriſt ſhall call them for to riſe again."

"Here lieth interred the body of Mary, the wife of Chriſtopher Williamſon, gent. of Thorpe-Satchvile.
She died February the 27th, 1757, aged 68 years."

"Here lies interred the body of Chriſtopher Williamſon, gent. of Thorpe-Satchvile.
He departed this life the 8th day of June,
anno Domini 1759, aged 73 years."

"Beneath lies interred the body of Joſeph Williamſon, gent. late of Gaddeſby, ſon of Chriſtopher Williamſon, gent.
late of Thorpe-Satchvile.
He departed this life the 13th of June,
1788, aged 70 years."

In the church yard.

On the South-eaſt ſide, at the top of an upright Swithland ſtone, in a hollow circle painted green, is ſculptured a tomb, painted black, with a green cover; on the front of which is cut the word MOLE. The tomb is ſurmounted by an urn painted brown; the colours ſymbolical; the green ſignifying the graſs land, under which the mole generally burrows; the brown denoting the colour of the earth, in which the mole works, and from which it ſubſiſts; the tomb painted black, as in mourning for the deceaſed; the mole in its proper colour, black, ſhining, and inclining to a lead colour. Below the emblems is inſcribed:

"To the memory of Thomas Holland [6], who departed this life July 4, 1786, aged 61 years."

Thomas Phipps, 16 Sept. 1767, aged 72.
Elizabeth Phipps, 11 July, 1785, aged 80.
{Richard Phipps, 1 Nov. 1767, aged 82.
{Anne Phipps, 23 Dec. 1759, aged 75.
Job Phipps, Nov. 23, 1737, aged 86.
Elizabeth Phipps, June 12, 1732, aged 76.
Neall Cobley, 22 June, 1785, aged 78.
Sarah Cobley, 9 Sept. 1782, aged 78.
John Goodman, 10 Feb. 1779, aged 82.
Mary his wife, July 1, 1790, aged 92.
Andrew Peak, March 2, 1738, aged 67.
Elizabeth Peak, his wife, Jan. 15, 1748, aged 72.
Andrew Peak, March 11, 1781, aged 74.
Mary his wife, Oct. 28, 1781, aged 75.
Thomas Peak, Dec. 16, 1792, aged 57.
Sarah, his wife, Dec. 5, 1772, aged 37.
Elizabeth, widow of William Bowley, of Rempſton, co. Notts, Oct. 13, 1766, aged 75.
John Pick, 1 Oct. 1793, aged 74.
William Berridge, May 5, 1757, aged 85.
Mary, wife of George Henton ſenior, of Thorpe Sachvile, Aug. 15, 1790, aged 55.
Anne, daughter of George and Mary Henton, July 12, 1782, aged 16.
Jonathan Ward, 2 Oct. 1793, aged 77.
Anne his wife, July 30, 1785, aged 58.

---

[1] A diſpenſation was granted to him, in 1298, to follow his ſtudies for ſeven years. Harl. MSS. 6951. p. 87.

[2] Reg. Cranmer, fol. 405.

[3] In the Certificate referred to under Allexton, p 8, Mr. Day is thus deſcribed: "Preſbyter, non conjugatus; ſatis doctus; reſidet; hoſpitalis; deget ibidem; non licentiatus, nec prædicat: nullum aliud habet."

[4] This name occurs as vicar in the books of the Firſt Fruits Office; yet, in the archdeacon's authority for inducting Mr. Juxon, dated March 10, 1731-2, the living is ſtated to be vacant by the death of Michael Broughton, clerk, the laſt incumbent.

[5] Joſeph Juxon was inducted into the vicarage of Twyford, on the 20th of March, 1731-2, by Gregory Henſon, vic. de Somerby.—In his time the vicarage was united to that of Hungerton. See before, p. 284; where his Sermon at Twyford, on Witchcraft, has alſo been noticed.

[6] He was a mole-catcher; and particularly deſired, before his death, that a mole ſhould be ſculptured on his tomb.

THORPE SACHEVILE,

ſo denominated from Sachevile, an antient town at Normandy[1], ſometime called Sicca-Villa, and alſo Thorpe Buſard, and Thorpe in the Clots, is a hamlet within the pariſh of Twyford; bounded by Aſhby Folvile, Burrow, and Twyford.

The abbot and convent of Vaudey (or Valle Dei), co. Lincoln, held lands in Thorp Sachevile, which were confirmed to them by king Richard I.[2]

In 1300, Edmund earl of Cornwall died ſeiſed of divers lands in Thorpe[3].

"Abbas de Valle Dei optulit ſe quarto die versùs Gunnoram de Sechvile, de placito quare idem abbas ſuperoneravit commune paſture ipſius Gunnore in Thorpe. Et Gunnora non venit primo die, nec ſecundo, nec tertio, nec quarto, niſi ad horam meridianam; & fuit querens; & abbas preciſè cepit ſe ad defalta; & Gunnora non poteſt ſanare defaltum. Et ideò conſideratum eſt, quòd predictus abbas eat ſine die; & Gunnora in miſericordiâ per plegium Willielmi le Venour de Thorpe[4]."

In 1325, it was found that Stephen de Segrave, deceaſed, and Alice his wife, held 9*l.* 16*s.* 2*d.* rent, ariſing out of divers tenements in Twyford and Thorpe Sachevile, of Thomas de Wake, by the ſervice of a pair of gilt ſpurs, or by the ſervice of a quarter of a knight's fee; and that John de Segrave was his ſon and heir[5].

In the ſame year, it was found that Roger Beler, deceaſed, and Alice his wife, held certain lands and tenements in Thorpe Sachevile, of the lord of Ocham, by the ſervice of 1*d.* a year[6].

In 1353, John de Segrave died ſeiſed of lands in Thorpe Buſard, otherwiſe called Thorpe Sachevile[7].

In 1380, Roger Beler died ſeiſed of a certain meſſuage and four virgates of land in Thorpe Sachevile, held of the lord Segrave[8].

In 1391, Robert de Swillington, knt. died ſeiſed of a certain meſſuage and four virgates of land in Thorpe Sachevile (with the advowſon of the church of Twyford, in which pariſh it lies), in right of his wife Mary, daughter of ſir Roger Beler, knight, and held under the lord Segrave[9].

In 1399, it was found that Thomas Mowbray late duke of Norfolk died ſeiſed of certain lands in Thorpe Buſard and Thorpe Sachevile; and that, in the ſame year, Margaret late ducheſs of Norfolk alſo died ſeiſed of lands in thoſe places[10].

In 1406, Thomas Mowbray earl Mareſcal died ſeiſed of certain meſſuages, lands, and rents, in Thorpe Buſard, and Thorpe Sachvile[11].

In 1420, Robert Swillington died ſeiſed of one meſſuage in Thorpe Sacheville, held of the lord of Okeham[12].

In 1444, it was found that Anne Chiſelden died ſeiſed of one meſſuage, nine virgates of land, and one croft, with the appurtenances, in Thorpe Sachevile; and that John Danſey and Margaret his wife had held the ſame for life[13].

In 1461, John Mowbray duke of Norfolk died ſeiſed of Thorpe Sachvile, as a hamlet of his manor of Dalby Chaucombe[14].

Thorp Sachvile rectory belonged to the priory of Kirkby Beler at the diſſolution. It was then under leaſe, at the rent of 4*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* to John Eton, of Thurmaſton; conſiſting of tithes in Thorp and Sechfild[15].

In 1569, Jaſper Skarborough and Richard Skarborough were cited, to ſhew by what title they held Colley Grange in Thorpe Sedgefelde[16].

Frances Aſhby, widow, is the preſent lady of this manor, 1800.

Thorpe Sachvile hath a neat chapel, dedicated to St. Michael; with nave and chancel; a ſmall locker on the North ſide of the altar; and is neatly pewed. (See Plate LXX.)

Mr. Wyrley, in 1595, ſays,

"Thorpe Sachvile nullum gentilitii ſcutum habet."

At the Weſt end:

"This chapel was beautified, regularly pewed, and the chancel re-built, A. D. 1753."

The clear yearly value of this chapel is 29*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*

Thorpe Sachevile, with Twyford, both united to Hungerton in favour of Mr. Juxon (who held Eaſtwell) were worth to Mr. Aſhby £60. a year, or a trifle more. Each had prayers and a ſermon every Sunday; and he kept them till he could not get a curate to do the duty for the whole.

Here are no monumental inſcriptions.

	Twyford.			Thorpe Sachvile.
	£.	s.	d.	£.	s.	d.
Money raiſed for the poor, within the year ending at Eaſter 1776,	47	17	5	20	17	9
Expended in county rates, &c.	3	3	4	4	2	8
——— on the poor, —	44	14	1	16	15	1
Rent of workhouſe and habitations,	6	13	0	0	0	0
Expended in litigations, —	0	0	0	0	0	0
Money raiſed for 1783, —	87	2	6	12	11	8
——— 1784, —	86	15	0	15	12	1
——— 1785, —	99	0	9	26	3	1
Medium of theſe three years,	90	19	5	18	2	3
——— of county expences,	6	5	10	5	15	5
——— of expences not relating to the poor; repairs of the church, roads, &c.	0	0	0	0	0	0
——— of nett annual expences,	84	13	7	12	6	10
——— of attending on magiſtrates,	1	8	3	0	7	0
——— of entertainments at meetings,	0	0	9	0	0	0
——— of law expences, —	0	1	8	0	3	0
——— of ſetting the poor to work,	0	0	0

The return made to the houſe of commons in 1786, in anſwer to an enquiry reſpecting the charitable donations in Twyford and Thorpe Sachevile, may be ſeen in vol. I. pp. 57, 58.

---

[1] See Gemeticenſis, cap. 38, fol. 386. edit. Camden.

[2] Cart. Antiq. Lit. W. n. 6.

[3] Eſch. 28 Edw. I. N° 45. Leic.

[4] Placita, ann. 31 Hen. III. in Recept. Scaccarii, Rot. 7.

[5] Eſch. 19 Edw. III. N° 91. Leic.

[6] Ibid. N° 98. Leic.

[7] Eſch. 27 Edw. III. N° 69. Leic.

[8] Eſch. 4 Ric. II. N° 14. Leic.

[9] Eſch. 15 Ric. II. pars 1, N° 61. & N° 62.

[10] Eſch. 1 Hen. IV. N° 71. & 72. Leic.

[11] Eſch. 8 Hen. IV. N° 76. Leic.

[12] Eſch. 8 Hen. V. N° 71. Leic.

[13] Eſch. 23 Hen. VI.

[14] Eſch. 1 Edw. IV. N° 46. Leic.

[15] Records in the Augmentation Office.

[16] Paſch. Rec. 11 Eliz. Rot. 91.

WALTON ON THE WOULDS,

a ſmall village in a healthy air, three miles from Loughborough, is bounded by Segrave, Barrow, Preſtwould, and Burton; and, in the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, is within the deanry of Goſcote.

There are many places of the name of Walton in the kingdom; and two others in this county, Walton upon Trent, or Iſley Walton, a chapelry to Kegworth; and Walton, a chapelry to Kimcote. The ſenſe of the word is the ƿealꝺ, or wood town [1].

In the reign of Edward the Confeſſor, ſeven ploughlands in Waletone were held firſt by Harding and his homagers, and afterwards by earl Aubrey; and were then valued at thirty-two pence. At the general ſurvey, being worth thirty ſhillings, they were held by Ralph Carnot. One plough was in the demeſne; and ſeven ſocmen, with two villans and two bordars, had four ploughs. There were thirty acres of meadow [2].

Another manor here, which had been worth ten ſhillings in the time of the Confeſſor, and at the ſurvey was worth twenty-five ſhillings, were held by a Norman. This land was equal to two ploughs; which ten ſocmen actually employed. There was a meadow one furlong, and one broad [3].

Who this earl Aubrey was, ſir William Dugdale could not aſcertain. He had property in Wiltſhire in the time of the Confeſſor, which ſhews that he was an Engliſhman; but we know not whence he derived his title [4]. In Leiceſterſhire he had ſixteen manors [5]; and, if I miſtake not the meaning of the clauſe which concludes their enumeration, poſſeſſed his property in this county in the reign of the Confeſſor, and continued to hold it for ſome time after the Conqueſt. "Harding," ſays the record, "with his homagers, held all theſe lands. Afterwards earl Aubrey held them. Now they are in the hands of the King."

In this town were very antiently two manors; one of which belonged to the Turviles of Normanton Turvile (deſcendants of the Norman who held it at the Conqueſt); and continued in that name and family till the laſt age.

The other manor was, in the time of king Henry II, the inheritance of Geoffrey Malory, father to Ankctill Malory of Kirby.

Walton is not noticed in the Teſta de Nevill, compiled about the year 1240; but in the Itinerary of 1280, Walton, Segrave, Sileby, and Coſſington, anſwered collectively as one vill.

In 1325, it was found that John de Segrave and Chriſtiana his wife held 11*s*. rent in Walton; and that John de Segrave (ſon and heir of Stephen de Segrave, couſin of the aforeſaid John de Segrave ſenior,) was his next heir [6].

17 Nov. 1335, king Edward III. granted to John Malorie and his heirs liberty of free-warren in all their demeſne lands at Walton, and alſo of Tachebroke and Bolley, co. Warwick: "Hiis teſtibus; J. Cantuar' archiepiſcopo, cancellario noſtro; H. epiſcopo Lincoln', theſaurario noſtro; Johanne de Eltham comite Cornubie, fratre noſtro chariſſimo; Johanne de Bohun, comite Heref' & Eſſex'; Henrico de Percy; Willielmo de Monte-acuto; Radulpho de Nevil, ſeneſcallo hoſpitii noſtri; & aliis. Dat' per manum noſtram, apud Novum Caſtrum ſuper Tynam, xvii° die Novembris [7]." This John Malory had licence, in 1336, to amortize one meſſuage, with the appurtenaces, lying within the lordſhip of Tachebroke, for maintenance of a prieſt, to ſing maſs daily in the chapel of St. James, in that town, for the health of his ſoul, and the ſouls of Margery his wife, and all the faithful deceaſed [8].

July 20, 1336, king Edward III. granted divers lands at Walton, as alſo the advowſon of the church there, late parcel of the poſſeſſions of Hugh le Diſpenſer earl of Winton, to Henry lord Beaumont and Alice his wife [9].

In 1340, it was found that Henry de Beaumont earl of Boghan died ſeiſed of the hamlet of Walton, as a member of Loughborough; and alſo of the advowſon of the church of Walton [10].

In 1346, John Malore (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 10*s*. for a quarter of one knight's fee in Walton, parcel of the honour of Leiceſter; and Ralph Turvile 5*s*. for an eighth part of one knight's fee there, parcel alſo of the fee of Leiceſter [11].

"In 1389, William Malory of Walton, making his laſt will, did recite in the ſame, that he had enfeoffed ſir Ankitel Malory, knt. Hugh Willoughby, clerk, Robert Martel, and John Slorey of Sleford, of his manor of Walton on the Woulds; and of all his lands at Burton on the Woulds, Wimeſwould, and Saxulby, co. Leiceſter; and of the manor of Tachebroke Malory, Botteley, and Whitmaſh, co. Warwick; to the intent that they ſhould perform the ſaid will and teſtament of the ſaid William Malory; to which he affixed his ſeal of arms, which I have [12]."

"In 1398, Richard Tourvile, of Normanton Turvile, did enfeoff Simon Bache, clerk, William Danet, William Palmer, Geffry Criſp, chaplain, and Henry Tourvile, of his manors of Normanton Turvile, Walton upon the Woulds, and of all his lands in Burton upon the Woulds, Thurleſton, and Woodhouſe, in truſtees; whereto are witneſſes, Robert Moton, Laurence Truſſell, Robert Langham, Reginald [illegible]am, and Nicholas Rugeley; which deed I likewiſe have [13]."

In 1413, Henry de Beaumont, knt. died ſeiſed of the advowſon of the church of Walton ſuper Wolds, value 100*s*. a year [14].

In 1415, William lord Zouch died ſeiſed of a virgate and an half of land in Walton, held of Ralph Horne [15].

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Walton was rated at 1*l*. 16*s*. 0*d*.; and in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum; but an abatement was then made of 4*s*. 4*d*.

In 1419, John Mowbray, of Newbold Ryvell, eſq. John Mowbray, of Walton, eſq. William Repyngdon, rector of Kibworth, and William Heynes, rector of Cleybrook, joined in a conveyance of two parts of the manor of Sadington to William Malory, eſq. and Margaret his wife [16].

In 1420, John Malory, ſon of Richard Malory, of Walton, was ſeiſed of lands in Friſby, &c. [17]

An indenture, between Laurence Sherard, eſq. of Stapleford, and John Malory, of Walton on the Woulds, relative to the marriage of their children, Anthony Malory and Anne Sherard, dated April 14, 1439, and conditioning, among other things, that John Malory ſhould give to his ſon the manor of Walton, with his purchaſed land, has been printed under Stapleford [1].

---

[1] A part of this compound is alſo found in Waltham. See vol. II. p. 379.

[2] "Idem [Radulfus Carnot] tenet 7 carucatas terræ in Waletone. In dominico eſt una caruca; & 7 ſochmanni, cum 2 bordariis, habent 4 carucas. Ibi 30 acræ prati. Valuit 32 denarios; modò 30 ſolidos. Has terras tenuit omnes Harding cum hominibus ſuis; & Albericus comes poſtea habuit. Modò ſunt in manu Regis.." Domeſday, fol. 231. b. 2.

[3] "Normannus tenet 4 carucatas terræ & dimidiam in Waletone. Terra eſt 2 carucarum. Pratum 1 quarentenæ longitudinis, & unius quarentenæ latitudinis. Valuit 10 ſolidos; modò 25 ſolidos." Ibid.

[4] See vol. I. p. li; and Dugdale, Bar. Angl. vol. I. p. 188.

[5] Knaptoft, Sapcote, Hinckley, Sibbeſdon, Shenton, Shereſby, Crebre (a ſmall manor between Broughton Aſtley and Sutton), Drayton, Bitteſwell, Swinford, Kilworth (Tivlingorde), Barkby-thorpe, Wanlip, Shouldby, and two manors in Walton.

[6] Eſch. 19 Edw. II. N° 88. Leic.

[7] Cart. 9 Edw. III. N° 10.

[8] Dugdale, Warwickſhire, vol. I. p. 486.

[9] Pat. 10 Edw. III. pars 2. m. 2.

[10] Eſch. 14 Edw. III. N° 24. Leic.

[11] Rot. Aux. 20 Edw. III.

[12] Burton, MS.

[13] Ibid.

[14] Eſch. 1 Hen. V. N° 45. Leic.

[15] Eſch. 3 Hen. V. N° 9. & 46. Leic.

[16] From the original deed in my poſſeſſion.

[17] Clauſ. 7 Hen. ~~IV.~~ V m. 8.

In 1425, Elizabeth (wife of William la Zouch, knt.) died ſeiſed, in dower, of a third part of a meſſuage and half a virgate of land, with the appurtenances, in Walton, held of the heir of the earl of Winton [2].

In 1432, John Malory, of Walton, gent. held a manor in Herburbury, co. Warwick, by the fourth part of a knight's fee [3]; and in 1440 he held lands in Whitmaſh in that county, which had deſcended to him from William Malory his grandfather [4].

In 1463, William Beaumont viſcount Beaumont, attainted of high treaſon, poſſeſſed the manor of Walton on the Woulds [5].

Oct. 26, 1464, king Edward IV. granted the advowſon of the church of Walton ſuper le Wold (parcel of the poſſeſſions of Katharine dutcheſs of Norfolk) to William Haſtings, his chamberlain [6].

9 Aug. 1467, king Edward IV. re-granted the advowſon of the church of Walton ſuper le Wold to William Haſtings, to hold of the king and his heirs by homage only, in lieu of all ſervice [7].

In 1469 and 1470, it was found that, before the death of John Mallory, eſq. (at that time deceaſed), one Richard Bradmere, rector of the church of Walton on the Woulds, John Hickling of Loughborough, John Kent of Kereby, &c. were ſeiſed of the whole manor of Walton on the Woulds, and of one meſſuage, four virgates of land, and a dovecote there; that, being ſo ſeiſed thereof, they by writing demiſed the ſame to the beforenamed John Mallory; that the ſaid manor and lands were held of the king as of the honour of Leiceſter; and that John Mallory junior was his ſon and heir [8].

In 1483, William lord Haſtings died ſeiſed of the advowſon of the church of Walton on the Woulds, held of the king [9].

In 1512, John Mallory died ſeiſed of certain lands and tenements in Walton, parcel of the manor of South Croxton [10].

In 1563, we find a writ, "De manu Reginæ amovend' de maneriis de Aſton Flamvell, Walton ſuper le Wolde, & aliis; & Franciſco Hynde, armigero, liberand' [11];" and in 1570, "De brevi directo eſcaetori, de manu Regine amovend' de manerio de Walton ſuper le Wolde, & aliis terris; & Henrico Turvile, armigero, liberand' [12]."

In 1564, there were 36 families in Walton.

At an inquiſition taken at Leiceſter, 8 April, 1592, it was found that . . . . . Blount died ſeiſed of one meſſuage, with the appurtenances, in Walton, held of the queen in capite; that he died the 6th of March laſt paſt; and that Robert Blount, his ſon and heir, was, the 22d of May then laſt paſt, aged 17 years [13].

In 1609, Robert Blount, Henry ſon of Lebbeus Derby, and . . . . Malory, held lands in capite at Walton ſuper les Woldes.

"Anne Malory, the heir-general, was married to Godfrey Somerſall; whoſe ſole daughter and heir Urſula was married to William Siſon, whoſe grandchild John Siſon aliened this manor to Mr. George Savage [14], of this town; who in 1641 was alſo lord of the Turvile manor, partly by his own purchaſe, and partly by intermarriage of his father; Mr. Tourvile of Aſton (who bore Argent, a lion rampant Sable) having given that manor, with his daughter in marriage, to the Rev. George Savage, archdeacon of Glouceſter, and younger ſon to Chriſtopher Savage, of Elmeley caſtle, co. Worceſter, eſq.; by whom he had iſſue the above-mentioned George [15]."

In 1615, Robert Noone, gent. obtained from the crown, by purchaſe, a court-leet at Walton; which was afterwards in the hands of his ſon Robert Noone, gent. [16].

The freeholders here in 1630 were, George Savage, eſq. and William Noone.

William Noone, died July 31, 1633. = Jane . . . . . ; remarried to Clere Sacheverell, rector of Rereſby.

George, ſon and heir; died under age, June 28, 1634.
1. Mary, daughter and coheireſs to her brother, æt. 7 years 6 months, June 28, 1634.
2. Joice, daughter and coheireſs, æt. 4.

Mr. Noone [17] was ſeiſed of court-leet and frankpledge in Walton, held of the king in capite, worth 2*s.*; 2 meſſuages and 9 virgates of land in Walton, and 4 cottages there, held of the king, as of the honour of Leiceſter, in free ſocage, worth 40*s.*; 4 cottages, &c. in Barrow ſuper Sore; a meadow called The Holme Cloſe; 2 cloſes in a place called The Acres, 20 acres of paſture there, and 2 acres and a half more in Barrow hades; all theſe were worth 20*s.* and (except one cottage in Nuttons, held of the manor of Barrow), were held in capite of the king by knight's ſervice.

In 1655, there was collected in Walton, for the relief of the poor Proteſtants in Piedmont, the ſum of 1*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*

In 1722, nine freeholders polled from this pariſh; and in 1775 we find the ſame number of names.

The open field in 1790 was very extenſive, about five miles in length, but not very wide, in general about three quarters of a mile. In an act paſſed in 1792, for incloſing this open field, reputed to be 52½ yard-lands, and to contain upwards of 1500 acres, Elizabeth Bainbrigge, of Woodborow, co. Nottingham, ſpinſter, is deſcribed as lady of the manor; and the Rev. Philip Storey, as rector, entitled to two yard-lands of glebe and common right, and to all manner of tithes both great and ſmall; and the ſaid Mrs. Bainbrigge, George Pochin, John Noone, and Francis Bunell Maſſingberd, eſqrs. the Rev. William Midleton, John Shuttlewood, Daniel Woodroffe, Thomas Shuttlewood, John Chawner, William Hall, Joſeph Mee, and others, as owners of the reſidue of the ſaid open fields. To the lady of the manor an equivalent is directed for the right of ſoil, and to the rector for his glebe and common right; the reſidue to be proportionably divided amongſt the ſeveral proprietors; the glebe and tithes allotments to be fenced without any charge to the rector, but his allotment to be ſubject to the ſame taxes as heretofore; and ſatisfaction to be made for tithes of lands then incloſed, the owners whereof had not land ſufficient in the open field. And whereas the whole of the incloſed glebe-land belonging to the rectory, excluſive of the parſonage-houſe, barns, ſtables, out-buildings, yards, and gardens, and the church-yard, conſiſted of a ſmall pingle, of about two roods, and a cloſe called Sheepgate Cloſe, of about two acres, both lying at a diſtance from the houſe, and from each other, it is provided that the rector may exchange thoſe ſmall parcels of land for any other old incloſures, lands, or hereditaments, within the pariſh, of equal value.

The manor and other property here of Mrs. Bainbrigge ſhe gave by will to the wife of Mr. Penlees of Stoke Newington in Middleſex; and the perpetual advowſon to the Rev. Philip Storey, the preſent rector, who is brother to Mrs. Penlees.

The late George Pochin, eſq. had alſo property here; as have John Noone, eſq. and a few ſmall freeholders.

The lordſhip conſiſts of ſeveral ſorts of ſoil, a great part of which is of a cold nature, but bears large crops of grain. Some part of it abounds with limeſtone, of the ſame quality as that dug up at Barrow, and ſo much admired for its excellence in waterworks; but very little, if any, is got up here at this

---

[1] Vol. II. p. 348.

[2] Eſch. 4 Hen. VI. N° 7. Leic.

[3] Dugdale's Warwickſhire, vol. I. p. 355; ex Rot. penes Rememb. Regis in Scaceario.

[4] Dugdale's Warwickſhire, vol. II. p. 365.

[5] Eſch. 3 Edw. IV. N° 30. Leic.

[6] Pat. 4 Edw. IV. pars 2. m. 18.

[7] Pat. 7 Edw. IV. pars 1.

[8] Eſch. 9. & 10. Edw. IV. N° 17. Leic.

[9] Eſch. 1 Ric. III. N° 32. Leic.

[10] Eſch. 4 Hen. VIII.

[11] Trin. Record. 6 Eliz. Rot. 5.

[12] Trin. Record. 12 Eliz. Rot. 15.

[13] Eſch. 34 Eliz.

[14] Burton, MS.

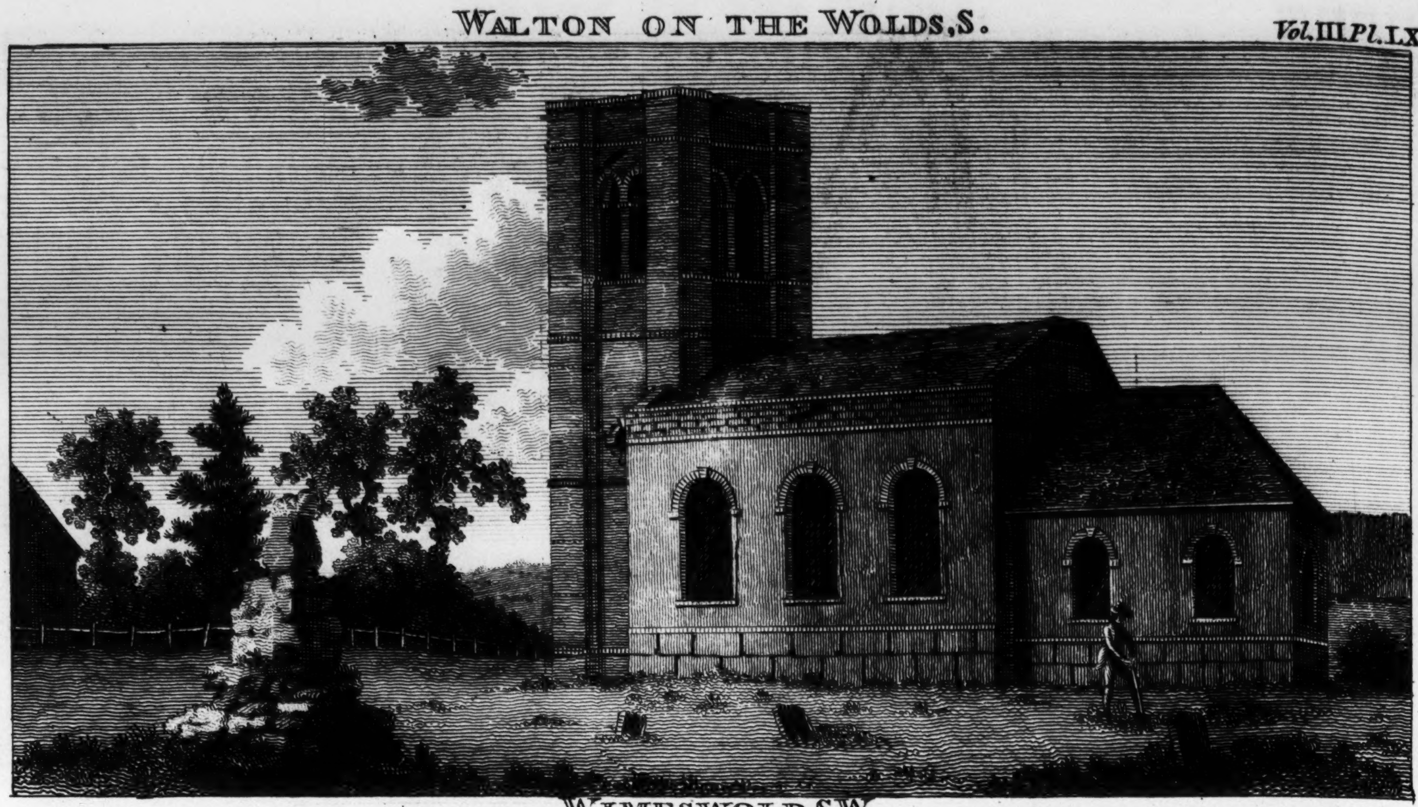
[15] Ibid.

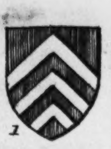
[16] 5 Pars Original. 12 Jac. I. Rot. 163.

[17] Inq. 10 Car. I.; Cole's Eſcheats, vol. V. (Harl. MSS. 760.) p. 163.—"This court-leet which Mr. Noone hath, is nothing belonging to the manor; but Robert Noone, this man's father that now lives, bought it of the king, to make himſelf great in the town." This note is by George Savage; of whom ſee above. Mr. Noone's arms were, Or, on a croſs engrailed Vert, a creſcent Or; Plate LXXI. fig. 9.

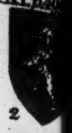
time

WALTON ON THE WOLDS, S.

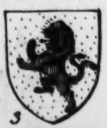




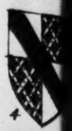
1



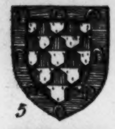
2



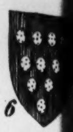
3



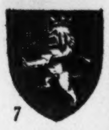
4



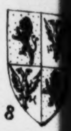
5



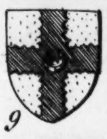
6



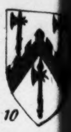
7



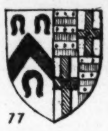
8



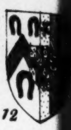
9



10

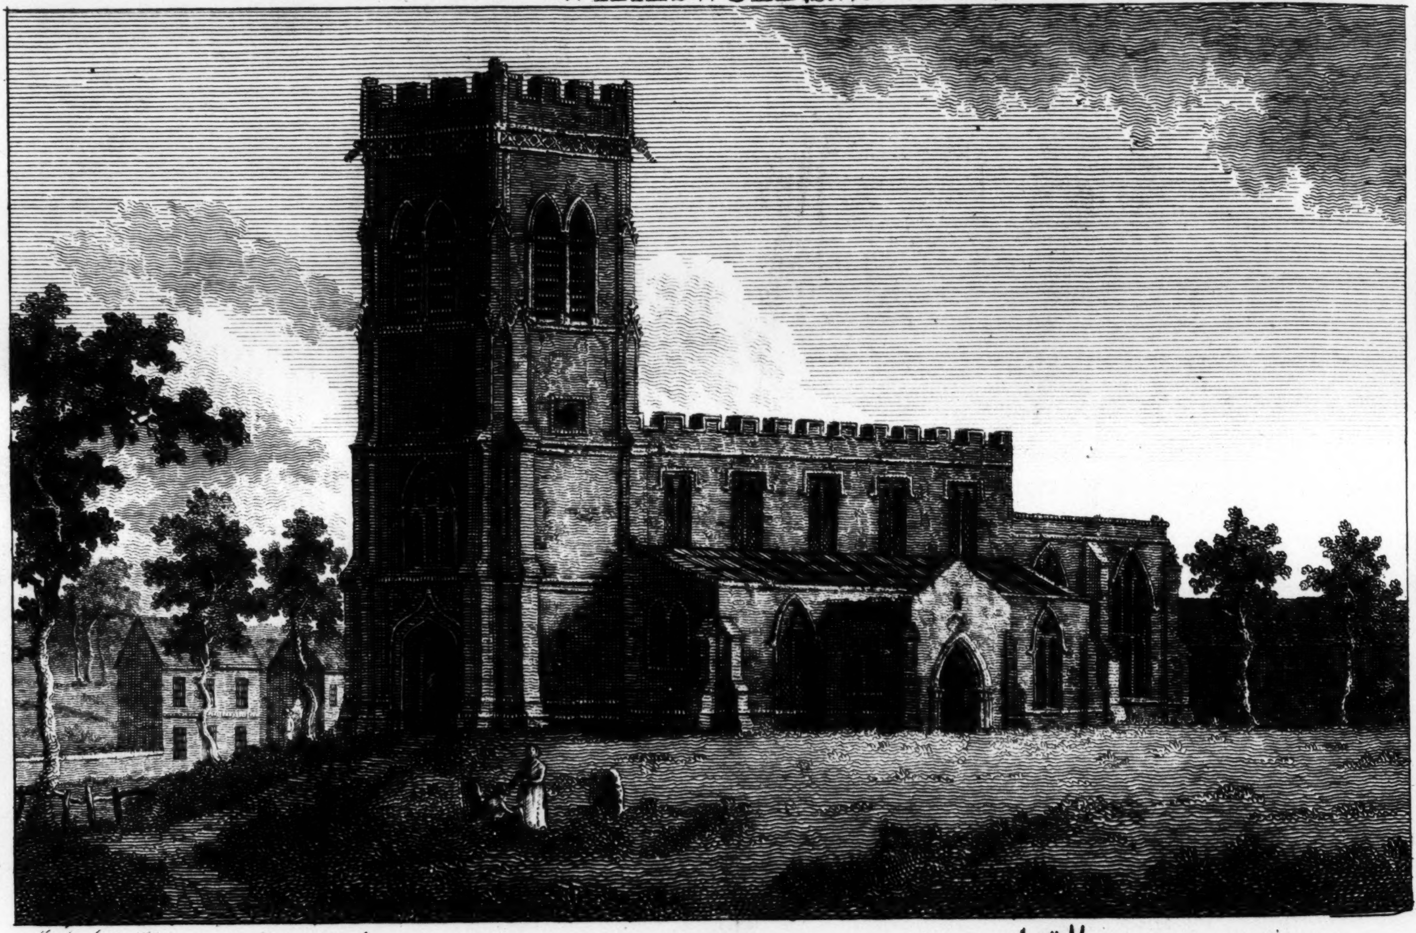


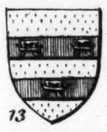
11



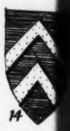
12

WIMESWOLD, S.W.

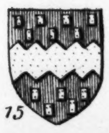




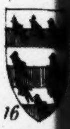
13



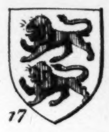
14



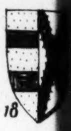
15



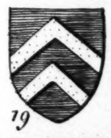
16



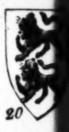
17



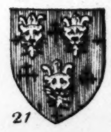
18



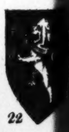
19



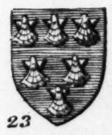
20



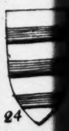
21



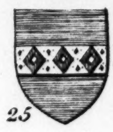
22



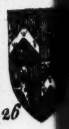
23



24

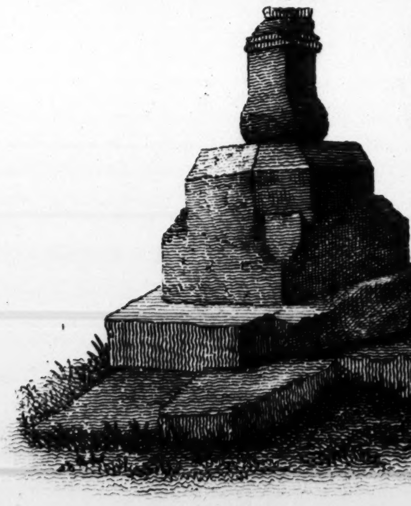


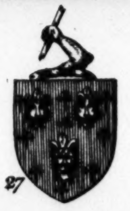
25



26

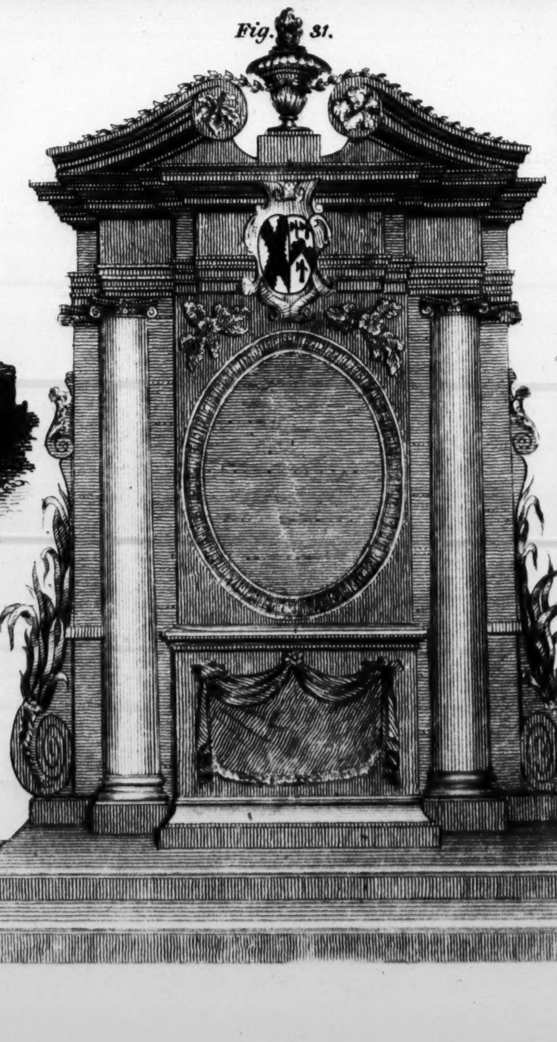
Fig. 28.

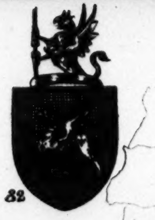




27

Fig. 31.





32

Fig. 29.

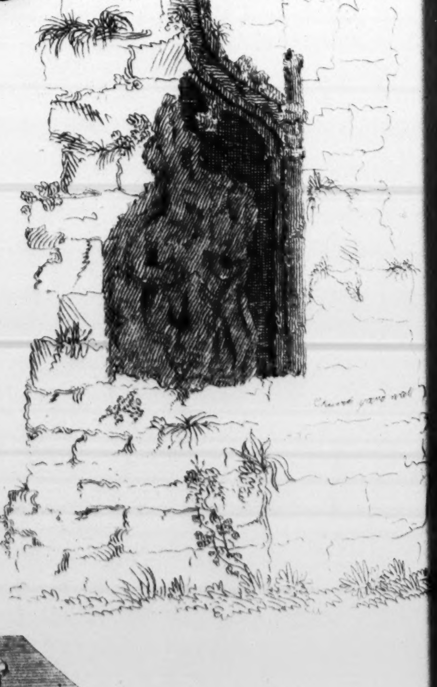


Fig. 30.

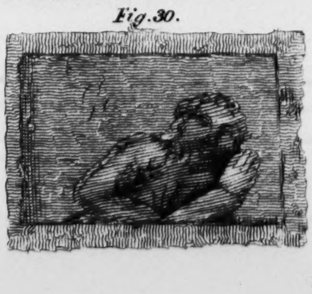

time, the attention of the inhabitants being principally taken up with huſbandry.

	£.	s.	d.
Money raiſed for the poor within the year ending at Eaſter 1776,	22	17	3
Expended in county rates, &c.	4	14	8
——— on the poor, —	18	2	7
Rent of workhouſe and habitations,	0	12	0
Expended in litigations, . —	0	0	0
Money raiſed for 1783, —	56	16	6
——— 1784, —	59	8	4
——— 1785, —	55	5	5
Medium of theſe three years,	57	3	5
Medium of county expences,	0	0	0
——— of expences not relating to the poor, repairs of church, roads, &c.	0	2	6
——— of nett annual expences,	57	0	11
——— of attending on magiſtrates,	1	14	11
——— of entertainments at meetings,	0	7	2
——— of law expences, —	1	5	8
——— of ſetting the poor to work,	0	0	0

The return made to the houſe of commons in 1786; in anſwer to an enquiry reſpecting the charitable donations in this pariſh, may be ſeen in vol. I. p. 58.

The CHURCH (Plate LXXI.)

dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a neat little edifice, built of brick.

By a brief, dated March 29, 1736, it appeared "that this church and ſteeple, by reaſon of its great antiquity, was become ſo ruinous and decayed, by the general decay of the timber, and the bulging out and mouldering away of the walls thereof, that the ſaid church (notwithſtanding its having been ſupported and upheld by props for many years) was in ſuch danger of falling, that the pariſhioners could not aſſemble therein for the public worſhip of Almighty God, without manifeſt hazard of their lives; and, not being capable of being any longer repaired, muſt be wholly taken down and rebuilt, the charge of which, upon a moderate computation, would amount to £1300."

The preſent church was accordingly rebuilt in 1739; and conſiſts of a ſmall tower; a nave and chancel; with a gallery at the Weſt end for the ſingers.

In the church Mr. Burton deſcribes theſe arms, fig. 1—7.

In the Eaſt window of the chancel:

Gules, three chevrons Vaire, Turvile.

Azure, ſemè de fleurs de lis, a lion rampant Or, Beaumont.

Or, a lion rampant, queue fourche Gules, Malory.

In the South-eaſt window:

Quarterly, Argent and Gules, fretty Or, a bend Sable, Diſpenſer.

Malory repeated.

In a South window:

Vaire, Or and Gules, a border Azure, charged with horſe-ſhoes Argent, Ferrers.

Gules, ten bezants, Zouch.

In the North-eaſt window:

Malory repeated.

Sable, a lion rampant Argent, crowned Or, Segrave.

In the Matriculus of 1220[1], Walton is deſcribed to be under the patronage of Ralph de Turvile; the rector . . . .; and there were then two vicars, who received the whole profits of the church.

"Nicolaus de Turvile preſentat ad eccleſiam de Walton de Wauz, quam preſentationem idem Nicolaus recuperâſſet in curiâ domini regis[2]."

In 1344, the procurations were 7*s.* 6¾*d.*; the rectory was taxed at 17 marks; and paid 2*s.* for Peterpence. The then patron was the heir of Henry lord Beaumont.

In 1534-5, the procurations and ſynodals were 11*s.* 1*d.*; and the value of the rectory, 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

In 1650, the rectory was returned worth £60; and the incumbent as "ſufficient, but negligent."

The preſent value in the king's books is £15.

The epiſcopal procurations are, for the rectory 2*s.* 4*d.* the vicarage 1*s.* 8*d.*; the archidiaconal, 7*s.*

The rectory, ſince the incloſure, is valued at about £300; and the perpetual advowſon is now the property of Mr. Storey, the preſent rector.

RECTORS.	PATRONS.
Hugh Diſpenſer, 1221.	Sir Hugh Diſpenſer, knt. as guardian of Henry Malore.
Robert de Waleton[3], 1238.
Hugh de Staunford[4], reſigned 1248.
Robert de Blaby, chaplain, 1249.	Hugo de Turvile, laicus.
Nicholas the preſbyter, 1263.
William de Den, 1269.	Nicholas de Turvile.
Ralph de Hauberg, 1277.
William de Lyndwode[5], utriuſque juris doctor; reſigned 1409.	The lord Henry de Beaumont.
Richard Bradmere, 1409.
Thomas Bonde, chaplain, 26 March, 1410.
Ralph Howett, 1534.
Harold Pagett[6], 1562.
Robert Blunt, buried March 26, 1633.
Edward Blunt[7], M. A. 1633; buried Feb. 2, 1653.
Samuel Blunt, 1653—1664.
John Beveridge, inducted March 3, 1664.	Robert Blunt, clerk.
William Colboune, Nov. 6, 1684.	Henry Haſtings, gent.
Thomas Pope, March 23, 1687; died 1728.	The king.
John Bainbrigge, June 2, 1729.	Robert Witmel, eſq.
Thomas Green[8], July 5, 1758; died 1776.	Philip-Harley Bainbrigge, eſq.
Philip Storey, May 27, 1776, the preſent rector 1800.	John-Lacock Storey, eſq.

---

[1] See the Introductory Volume, p. lx.

[2] In archivis eccleſie de Linc. apud Linc. de anno 12° Ricardi de Graveſend epiſcopi, annò Domini 1269.

[3] "Craſtinâ Aſſumptionis Beatæ Virginis, auctoritate concilii, conſolidata eſt vicaria quam Robertus de Waleton tenuit in eccleſiâ de Waleton, cum perſonatu ejuſdem eccleſiæ." Reg. Groſſeteſte, Pont. 4.

[4] He was preſented the ſame year to the rectory of Thurcaſton.

[5] William de Lindwode, rector of Walton on the Woulds, obtained a prebend of Saliſbury in 1411, and the rectory of All Saints, Bread-ſtreet, in 1418. See Newcourt; and Tanner, Bibl. Brit.

[6] In the Certificate referred to under Allexton, p. 8, Mr. Pagett is thus deſcribed: "Preſbyter, non conjugatus; mediocritèr doctus; reſidet; hoſpitalis; ſtudet apud Oxon.; non licentiatus, nec prædicat; nullum aliud habet."

[7] Rector alſo of St. Margaret, Leiceſter. In the civil war, he was plundered of eight or more horſes. Walker, p. 203.

[8] Vicar alſo of Wimeſwould 48 years; ſee his epitaph, p. 502. He publiſhed "An Eſſay on Oeconomy;" ſome Eſſays on practical divinity; and two ſermons; 1. "Inſtitutions for the Poor;" 2. "On the New Style, 1754." He left one ſon, the late Woodwardian Profeſſor at Cambridge (ſee before, under Barrow, p. 82.) and two daughters; the youngeſt of whom is married to the Rev. Nathanael Bramley, who is now maſter of the ſchool at Barrow.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

Mr. Wyrley found here a monument thus inſcribed;
"Hic jacent Joh'es Malori et Cecilia uxor ejus, MCCCCXC."
Arms: Quarterly, 1. and 4. Malory; 2. and 3. . . . . a ſpread eagle . . . . . .; fig. 8.

In the South ſide of the chancel was formerly this monument, not replaced in the new church:

"ANNO GR. CIƆIƆCXXXIV, ST. ANG.
PRID. KAL. FEB.
JACOBUS ALDRIDGE, GENEROS', PLENUS DIERUM,
DEBITUM NATURÆ SOLVIT;
REDDENS
SPIRITUM PATRI SPIRITUUM, MATRI OMNIUM PULVEREM;
QUI,
MORTIS TROPHÆUM,
VITÆ PIGNUS,
H. S. E.

Thou living man, look here, and ſee
Thy tranſitory ſtate in mee.
Death conquers wit, wealth, beauty, ſtrength;
And who lives long'ſt, muſt die at length.
Then, dying man, thy killer kill;
Will that is good: and do thy will,
And ſtrive to live devoyd of ſtrife:
So paſs by death to endleſs life.
Work none unreſt to harmleſs duſt,
That waits for glory with the juſt.
Eccl. xxxix.
Heri mihi; hodiè tibi."

In the chancel.

On a monument againſt the South wall:

Argent, a chevron ſuper-embattled between three battle-axes Sable, Bainbrigge; fig. 10.

"Near this place lie the remains of the rev. Mr. John Bainbrigge, late rector of this pariſh;
who departed this life May 29, 1758,
in the 68th year of his age.
He was the younger ſon of John Bainbrigge, eſq. of Lockington in this county.
Here alſo are interred the bodies of Hannah his wife and Hannah his daughter (an infant), who both died A. D. 1740.
This monument was erected by the order of Philip Harley Bainbrigge, eſq.
and his ſiſters Mary and Elizabeth Bainbrigge, in memory of their uncle."

In the floor:

"Here lieth the body of Elizabeth,
wife of Thomas Pope rector of this pariſh;
who departed this life March 19, 1695, aged 43."

"Here lieth the body of Thomas Pope, rector of this pariſh;
who departed this life Jan. 19, 1728, aged 68."

"Near this place lye the bodies of Iſaac Blunt, gent. and Suſannah his wife;
by whom he had three ſons,
William, Thomas, and Jeamſon.
She departed this life the 3d day of Auguſt, in the 29th year of her age, A. D. 1729.
He departed this life the 23d day of Auguſt,
A. D. 1729, in the 34th year of his age."

"The rev. Thomas Green, M. A. rector of this pariſh 18 years,
and vicar of Wymeſwould 48 years, died June 28, 1776, aged 72.
Anne his wife died Oct. 21, 1773, aged 62.
Quales fuerunt, poſtremus dies indicabit."

In the nave.

On a monument in the South wall:

Argent, a chevron between three horſe-ſhoes Sable, Pochin; impaling, Quarterly, 1. and 4. Barry of ſix, Ermine and Gules, Trollope; 2. and 3. Or, a croſs Vert, Huſſey; fig. 11.

"Near this place lyes Mary wife of Thomas Pochin, formerly of Walton, but late of Barkby, eſq.
She was the eldeſt daughter of ſir Charles Huſſey, of Caythorpe, in the county of Lincoln, bart.
She dyed Aug. 1, 1697,
in the 44th year of her age.
In memory of an indulgent mother,
Thomas Pochin, of Barkby, eſq. her eldeſt ſon, cauſed this monument to be erected."

In the floor:

"This ſtone is to the memory of George Pochin, late of Loughborough, co. Leiceſter, eſq. deceaſed; youngeſt ſon of Thomas Pochin,
of Barkby, in the ſaid county, eſq. deceaſed,
by Mary his wife, alſo deceaſed;
who was the eldeſt daughter of ſir Charles Huſſey,
of Caythorpe, in the county of Lincoln, baronet.
He died, in the commiſſion of the peace for the ſaid county of Leiceſter, the 26th day of November, 1756, after a ſeries of above 20 years' impartial diſcharge of his duty in that office;
aged 70 years."

On another monument in the South wall:

Pochin; impaling, Or, a croſs ſquare pierced between four cinquefoils, and a cinquefoil in the centre, all Vert; on an eſcutcheon of pretence the ſame arms as the woman's; fig. 12.

"Sacred to the memory of Elizabeth, wife of William Pochin, of Loughborough, gent.
who departed this life Nov. 14, 1780, aged 63.
Whoſe amiable virtues, in the ſeveral characters of a Wife, Parent, and Friend, moſt juſtly rendered her in death lamented,
as in life beloved.
Bleſſed are the dead which die in the Lord."

"Alſo to the memory of William Pochin, of Loughborough, gent.
who was a loving huſband and a faithful friend.
He departed this life Dec. 25, 1794, aged 75 years,
in hopes of a joyful reſurrection."

"Here lieth the body of Elizabeth,
relict of Luke Steward, of this pariſh.
She departed this life July 30, A. D. 1732, aged about 80."

In the church-yard:

"Katharine, wife of John Shuttlewood, relict of Samuel Bonnet, of Whitwick, died Oct. 11, 1781, aged 41."

James Glover died Sept. 14, 1789, æt. 85.
William Hall died Dec. 5, 1794, æt. 79.
Richard Meſon died July 27, 1766, æt. 76.

There is a ſtout fragment of a croſs in the church-yard; which, by its appearance, ſeems to be of great antiquity. This is ſlightly ſhewn in the view of the church, Plate LXXI; and more fully at the bottom of the ſame plate, fig. 28.

Fixed within the wall of the church-yard are the remains of a handſome niche and a mutilated figure; fig. 29.

Pedigree

Pedigree of MALORY, of Walton on the Woulds.

Geoffrey Malory, temp. Hen. II. = ...

Henry Malory, of Walton, 1196. =

Richard Malory, knt. lord of Walton ſur le Woulds, and Kirby, co. Leiceſter, and of Tachbroke Malory, and Boteley, co. Warwick, 1246. = . . .

William Malory, 1293. = . . .

Reginald Malory, knt. 1321. = . . .

John Malory, of Walton, 1352. = Margery, 1337.

William Malory, will dated 1382. = . . .

Richard Malory, 1389. = . . .

John Malory, 1429 and 1440. = Anne, dau. of Thomas Hubard.

Anthony Malory, married 1430; living 1452. = Anne, dau. of Lawrence Sherard, of Stapleford.

John Malory[1], died 1490. = Cecilia[1], dau. of John Cotton, of Ridware, co. Stafford; died 1495.

John Malory, ſlain at Terouenne, or Tournay, 1512. = ... dau. of William Aſhby, of Quenby.

1. Agnes, inherited the manor of Walton. = Geoffrey Somerſall, of Somerſall hall, co. Derby; held courts baron in right of his wife[2].

2. Margaret, married Thomas Stokes, of whom Adam is deſcended.

3. Katharine, married . . . . . Colſon, of Corby, co. Linc.

4. Eleanor, married . . . . Muſſendyne, and had iſſue.

5. Elizabeth, married John Brier.

William Syſton, of Walton on the Woulds, 1563; held courts baron in right of his wife; and died 1590[3]. = Urſula, dau. and heir, had the manor, and died 1595[3].

Mary, wife of . . . . Darby, exhæredata[4].

1. Godfrey Syſton, ſon and heir, died 1612[5]. = Margaret, dau. of . . . . Bramole, of the More.

2. Thomas.
3. Anthony.
4. Everard.

1. Mary.
2. Grace.
3. Anne.

John Syſton, ſon and heir, ſold the manor to George Savage, of Walton; and died 1627[6].

Pedigree of SAVAGE, of Walton on the Woulds.

Chriſtopher Savage, eſquire of the body to Henry VIII. deſcended from a younger branch of Savage earl of Beven, purchaſed an eſtate at Elmley caſtle, in Worceſterſhire, 1545. = . . .

Sir William Turvile, of Aſton Flamvile, died 1549. = Joan Warburton.

George Turvile, of Aſton, eſq. died 1552. = Anne Locke.

1. Francis. = Anne[7], dau. of . . . Sheldon, eſq.

1. William, temp. Eliz. purchaſed the college chauntry and manor of Elmley caſtle, died 1616. = Anne, dau. and heir of John Knotsford, of Great Malvern.

2. Walter.

1. Sir John, died ſ. p. = Dorothy, dau. of ſir Hen Poole.

2. Mary. = Sir Thomas Eſtcourt.

3. Giles, high ſheriff of Worceſterſhire 1626; died 1631. = Catharine, dau. of Richard Daſton.

Iſſue[10].

2. George, archdeacon of Glouceſter; he lived at Segrave[8]; and had the manor-houſe or capital meſſuage of Walton, &c. which was Turvile's by purchaſe, and ſomewhat in conſideration of his wife's portion. = Anne; her portion was allowed out of price at the land at Walton.

Henry Turvile, of Aſton; he ſold the manor, &c. of Walton to George Savage, of Segrave; died 1615-16. = Margaret Hinde, died 1669.

George Turvile, of Aſton, died 1649[9].

Mary, dau. of William Tracy, of Todington-houſe in Glouceſterſh. = George Savage, of Walton; he bought the manor of Walton on the Woulds, which was Malory's, of John Siſton; and ſo became lord of both manors, viz. Malory's and Turvile's.

Pedigree of NEVILL, of Wimeswould[11].

Stephen de Nevill, lord of the manor of Wimeſwould, died 1277. = . . .

Sir Hugo de Nevill, knt. 1334. = Ida, died 1360.

Sir John de Nevile, knt. of Wimeſwould, 1346. = . . .

Sir Henry Nevile, knt. of Preſtwould and Cotes, 1407. = Joan, dau. and heir of ſir Walter Goteham, knt.

Sir Robert Nevile, knt. died 1431. = Joan died 1426.

Sir Ralph Nevile, knt.

Sir Robert Nevile, knt. 1435.

Sir Robert Nevile, knt. ſold Preſtwould, Cotes, and Walton, 1442. = . . .

Robert Nevile, of Goteham, eſq. = . . .

Michael Nevile. = . . .

Francis Nevile, of Goteham, living 1619.

---

[1] From the inſcription on the tomb.
[2] Court Rolls.
[3] Ibid. and Pariſh Regiſter.
[4] The tradition of a very old man.
[5] Pariſh Regiſter.
[6] Ibid.
[7] Re-married to Richard Daſton, of Wirmington, co. Glouceſter.
[8] See ſome account of him under Segrave, p. 414.
[9] See vol. II. p. 465.
[10] See them in Naſh's Worceſterſhire, vol. I. p. 384.
[11] This pedigree is from the Chetwynd MSS.; and copied thither from Mr. Erdeſwick's Collectanea.

WIMESWOULD[1],

in antient writings called Wimundewalle, Wymeſwold, Wimundeſwold, Wymſwald, Wymundeſwald, Wymundawant, Wimundewold, Wymunſwoule, and Wimundewald, is a large village on the Weſt borders of the county, ſtanding upon the confines of Nottinghamſhire, loftily elevated upon the Woulds, in a pleaſing and delightful air. It is five miles Eaſt from Loughborough; bounded by Dalby on the Woulds, Burton on the Woulds, Preſtwould, Hoton, and Willoughby (which laſt place is in the county of Nottingham); and, in the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, is within the deanry of Goſcote.

We have the authority of Domeſday Book for ſtating, that two brothers once held this land as two manors; but that one of them bought the other's part, and made one manor of the two, in the time of king Edward the Confeſſor. It contained nine ploughlands and five oxgangs; and was then worth twenty ſhillings. At the general ſurvey, it was worth one hundred ſhillings, and was then held by Robert and Serlo under Hugo de Grenteſinainell. The land was equal to ſix ploughs. In the demeſne were two ploughs, with one bondman; and forty villans and four ſocmen, with four bordars and nine foreigners rendering ſervice, had ten ploughlands among them all. There were fifteen acres of meadow[2].

March 21, 1205-6, king John ſignified to the ſheriff of Leiceſter, that whereas William Fitz Warin had ſhewed that Michael le Clerc, uncle of the ſaid William, haven given him a virgate of land in Wimeſwould of the fee of William de Goiz, then in the wardſhip of Peter de Aſlacton; the ſaid Peter would not, however, admit him to take poſſeſſion thereof, without the precept of the king, or of his juſtices, for that the above William de Goiz held of the king in capite; and ordered, that if the aforeſaid Michael did give any ſuch land to the ſaid William his nephew, that then the ſaid ſheriff ſhould forthwith, reſerving his ſervice, give him full ſeiſin thereof. "Teſte, G. filio Petri, apud Windleſhore, XXI die Martii[3]."

Robert Fitz Ranulf, lord of Alfreton, co. Derby, was ſeiſed of this manor in the time of king Henry II; and, having then founded the priory De Bello Capite (or Beauchief) as an expiation for the murder of Thomas Becket archbiſhop of Canterbury, in which he was concerned, gave the church here, with 4 bovates and 2 tofts, to the ſaid priory[4]; to which Thomas the ſon of William de Chaworth (deſcended from the coheir of Fitz-Ranulf) added certain lands; and alſo obtained, in 1256, a charter of free-warren for his lands here[5].

"This lordſhip was afterwards divided into three manors; the one belonging to the abbey of Beauchief; the ſecond to Nevill; for, I find that in 1277 Stephen de Nevill died ſeiſed of a manor here[6]; from whom it came to one Odeby; and by the heir-general of him, by two daughters married to Bocland and Coulſon, it came unto them; the demeſnes of which manors (as I have heard) were 24 yard-lands. The third manor belonged to the Willoughbys[7]."

On the aid granted to king Henry III, in 1235, for marrying his ſiſter to the king of the Romans, two marks were paid for one fee, which Ralph de Jors held of the fee of Tikehull.

In the Teſta de Nevill, about 1240, Wimeſwould is deſcribed as conſiſting of two ploughlands and a half. Ranulph de Jors, at this time, held 32 virgates of land in Wymondeſwould and Houton in ſerjeanty[8].

In the latter end of the reign of king Henry III, John de Nevill of Wimeſwould was witneſs to a deed, whereby William de Bois did enfeoff Milicent de Cantilupe of all his lands in the county of Leiceſter[9].

In 1275, it appeared that Peter the baſtard, of Wymeſwould, deceaſed, was firſt enfeoffed by William Fitz Warin of one meſſuage in Wymundwould, paying thence 16*d*. yearly to Stephen de Nevill the chief lord of that fee, and doing foreign ſervice and ſuit of court to the ſaid Stephen; that afterwards the ſame Peter the baſtard obtained one virgate of land and two meſſuages in Wymundwold aforeſaid of Peter de Nevill, paying to the ſaid Peter one roſe-flower and foreign ſervice; that he obtained farther of Stephen de Nevill one bovate of land there; and that John was the ſon of the aforeſaid Peter the baſtard[10].

In 1276, it appeared that Stephen de Nevill, without any charter or other inſtrument, had given one bovate of land, with the appurtenances, in Wymundwold, to Peter the baſtard, for his maintenance; and that the ſaid Peter held not that land of the king in capite, but of the aforeſaid Stephen, and that without doing him any ſervice for it[11].

In the Itinerary of 1280, Wimeſwould anſwered pro villâ integrâ.

In 1297, Edmund earl of Lancaſter, the king's brother, at his death, held divers lands at Wymondwould[12].

In 1308, John Bardolf held, at his death, a croft and a toft, and 5 acres of land, in Wymundwold, of the maſter of the Hoſpital of St. John of Jeruſalem, by the ſervice of 2*s*. a year; and John Bardolf, his ſon and heir, was then aged 7[13].

In 1315, it was found that William de Nevill and Margaret his wife held certain lands and tenements in Wymundſwold, of John Haclut and Alice his wife, by the ſervice of a ſixth part of a knight's fee; alſo three virgates of land in Wymundſwold aforeſaid, of the honour of Tikehull, of Roger de St. Andrew and Maud his wife, by the ſervice of a thirteenth part of a knight's fee; and that John de Neville was his ſon and heir[14].

In 1328, it was found that it would be no loſs to the king, nor any other, if the king give leave to Simon de Joyce of Wimeſwold to enfeoff Richard de Wyloughby and Iſabel his wife in one meſſuage and one carucate of land, with the appurtenances, in Wymundwold and Houton; and that the premiſſes were held of the king by grand ſerjeancy; to wit, by the ſervice of finding the king in his army in Wales, by the ſpace of 40 days, with one horſe, cum capifero, pretium vs̃. & unum ſaccum cum prec', at their own expence[15].

In 1329, Robert Poutrell of Preſtwould, at his death, held certain lands and tenements in Wymundwold, of William Bigge of Stanford, co. Notts, by the ſervice of a tenth part of a knight's fee[16].

In the ſame year, Simon de Jorce gave to Richard

---

[1] "Wymund filius regis Witlafiii," occurs in Ingulphus, ſub ann. 870; from whom probably Wymondwold and Wimondham, both in this county, were ſo named; for, Wimondham is nothing but Wimond-ham, or town; and Wimeſ-would is nothing but Wimond's-town on the Woulds, or hills, ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Wimond-ham, from ham the diminutive of hamlet (oppidulum)." F. P.

[2] "Robertus & Serlo tenent de H[ugone de Grenteſmainell] 9 carucatas terræ & 5 bovatas in Wimundeſwalle. Terra eſt 6 carucarum. In dominico ſunt 2 carucæ, cum 1 ſervo; & 40 villani & 4 ſochmanni, cum 4 bordariis & 9 francigenis ſervientibus, habent 10 carucas inter omnia. Ibi 15 acræ prati. Valuit 20 ſolidos; modò 100 ſolidos. Hanc terram tenuerunt 2 fratres pro 2 maneriis; & poſtea emit alter ab altero partem ſuam, & fecit unum manerium de duobus, tempore regis Edwardi." Domeſday, fol. 232. b. 2. 233. a. 1.

[3] Clauſ. 7 Johan. m. 1.

[4] Pat. 9 Edw. II. p. 1. m. 3.

[5] Cart. 41 Hen. III. m. 3.

[6] Eſch. 5 Edw. I. n. 39.

[7] Burton, MS.

[8] See before, under Hoton, p. 372.

[9] See, under Thorpe Ernald, vol. II. p. 367.

[10] Eſch. 4 Edw. I. N° 36. Leic.

[11] Eſch. 5 Edw. I. N° 39. Leic.—See more of Stephen de Nevill in Allexton.

[12] Eſch. 25 Edw. I. N° 51. Leic.

[13] Eſch. 2 Edw. II. N° 25. Leic.

[14] Eſch. 19 Edw. II. N° 36. Leic.

[15] Inq. ad quod dampnum, 22 Edw. III. N° 86. Leic.

[16] Eſch. 3 Edw. III. N° 62. Leic.

de Willoughby and Iſabel his wife one meſſuage and one carucate of land in his manor, held of the king by ſerjeanty; viz. by the ſervice of finding a horſe, capariſoned with ſaddle and lance, for the ſpace of 40 days, at the tenant's proper coſts, in the king's army in Wales[1].

The Segrave Chartulary notices a grant of Roger de Sidenhale to Amicia his ſiſter, and her heirs, of four bovates of land in Wymondeſwold (which Geoffrey the Norman and Hugo ſon of Thedric held under her), on payment of 2*d.* a year, for all ſervices, except foreign ſervice. Theſe bovates were afterwards, on the ſame terms, aſſigned by Amicia to Stephen de Segrave and his heirs, two of them then being employed by Hugo Thedric and his ſon Geoffrey, one by Geoffrey Cruſe, and the other by Adam Broun. She alſo made over a toft and croft held by Peter Dod.

Maurice le Botyler alſo conveyed to the ſaid Stephen one knight's fee in Wymeſwould and elſewhere; from which he had the ſervice of half a knight's fee from Ralph Wyleby, and, of the gift of John D'Aencourt, another half fee, with the homage and ſervice of the ſaid Ralph and John, in lieu of all other ſervices[2].

Feb. 10, 1337-8, king Edward III. granted to Richard de Willoughby[3], and his heirs, liberty to hold a weekly market on Wedneſdays, and a yearly fair on the eve and day of Saints Peter and Paul, at their manor of Wymundwold. "Hiis teſtibus; Johanne archiepiſcopo, Ricardo Lincolnienſi, Roberto Ciceſtrienſi epiſcopo cancellario noſtro, Johanne de Warennâ comite Surrie, Henrico de Lancaſtriâ comite Derbie, Willielmo de Clynton comite Huntingdon', Thomâ de Wake de Lydel, Henrico de Ferrariis, Johanne Darcye le Coſyn ſeneſcallo hoſpitii noſtri, & aliis. Dat', per manum noſtram, apud Weſtm', x Feb.[4]"

In 1346, Richard de Willoughby (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon,) was aſſeſſed 2*s.* for a fortieth part of a knight's fee in Wimondſwould; Robert Poutrell 4*s.* for a tenth part of a knight's fee in Wimondſwould; John de Nevill 10*s.* for a quarter of a knight's fee in Preſtwould, Wymondſwould, Burton, and Cotes; and the prior of Beauchief 10*s.* for a quarter of a knight's fee in Wymondeſwould; all parcel of the honour of Leiceſter[5].

In 1353, John de Segrave held, at his death, lands at Wymeſwould[6].

16 July, 1361, Henry Plantagenet duke of Lancaſter died ſeiſed of one knight's fee in Wymondeſwould, Burton, and Preſtwould, which Thomas de Chaworth held; alſo of one knight's fee in Wymondſwould, Burton, Preſtwould, and Cotes, which John de Segrave held[7].

In 1362, Richard de Willoughby ſenior, at his death, held one meſſuage, two carucates of land, 100*s.* rent of aſſize, one dovecote, four acres of meadow upon the Woulds, and one windmill, at Wymondeſwould, of lady Philippa queen of England, by the ſervice of one pair of gloves; and ſir Richard de Willoughby, knt. was his ſon and heir[8].

"Sir Francis Willoughby, of Wollaton, co. Notts, lineally deſcended from the ſaid ſir Richard Willoughby, aliened their manor at Wimeſwould, the demeſnes whereof were 12 yard-lands, to William Ballard, gent. ſon of one of the coheirs of Odeby[9]."

In 1399, Thomas Mowbray late duke of Norfolk held certain lands in Wymondſwould[10]; and in the ſame year Margaret late dutcheſs of Norfolk was alſo ſeiſed of certain lands here[11].

In 1416, Thomas Mowbray duke earl Mareſcal died ſeiſed of certain meſſuages, lands, and rents, in Wymondeſwould[12]. In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted that year by the laity, Wimeſwould was rated at 4*l.* 5*s.*; and in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum; but an abatement was then made of 3*s.*

In 1432, John duke of Norfolk died ſeiſed of a moiety of a knight's fee in Wymondeſwould, parcel of the manor of Sileby; which Hugh de Willoughby, knt. then held; alſo a moiety of a knight's fee in the ſame town, parcel of the ſame manor; which the heir of John Nevil, knt. held[13].

In 1461, John Mowbray duke of Norfolk died ſeiſed of a knight's fee in Wymondeſwould, which Richard Wylughby and the heir of John de Ayncourt held[14].

Sir Richard Sacheverell, knight, ſon of Ralph Sacheverell, and ſome time privy counſellor to king Henry VIII, died lord of this manor in 1534; which he inherited from his father; and, having no children, bequeathed it to his nephew Ralph[15].

"Thomas Tooley was formerly lord here, who bore for armoury, Argent, 3 cinquefoils Sable. But much of this village did belong to the abbey of Becheſſe in Derbyſhire[16]."

The temporal eſtate here of the abbot and convent of Beauchief in 1535 is thus ſtated by the late Rev. Dr. Pegge, in his MS Hiſtory of the Abbey:

"Rents per annum, 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

Thence paid quit-rent		£.	s.	d.
To prior of Shene	—	1	0	0
To William Homerſton, bailiff,		1	0	0
To Thomas Brokeſby, auditor,		0	13	4

Thomas Homerſton held 1 tenement, with land, meadow, paſture, in the town and fields of Wymeſwould, by leaſe for 80 years, dated Michaelmas 1511; rent 24*s.*

He held 1 tenement, with certain parcels of land, late in the hold of John Firamyk, in Wymeſwold, by leaſe for 80 years, dated Michaelmas 1510; rent 19*s.* 10*d.*

Roger Fox and John Fox held 3 meſſuages, and land to the ſame meſſuages pertaining, in the fields and town of Wimeſwould, by leaſe for 72 years dated Pentecoſt 1526; rent 22*s.*

John Fox held 1 toft, 1 oxgang of land, in the town and fields of Wymeſwold, late in the hold of Thomas Fox, by leaſe for 90 years, dated Pentecoſt 1508; rent 6*s.* 8*d.*

William Leake held the ſite of the manor of Wymeſwold, with the tenth of hay, and all its appurtenances, except 2 tithe-barns, with certain land, &c. by leaſe for 60 years, dated Aug. 20, 1491; rent 53*s.*

William Walterſon held all the lands and tenements which Richard Walterſon late did hold in Wymeſwold, granted to him and his heirs for ever; dated St. Barnaby, 10 Hen. IV; rent, 13*s.* 4*d.* and all ſervice and cuſtoms to the chief lord of the right accuſtomed[17].

The canons had a manor here, as above; and moreover abbot William granted a leaſe of a toft and croft, and their edifices, in Wymeſwold, to Robert Ladde, clerico de Burton[18], pro homagio & ſervicio, for 4*s.* rent, pro omnibus aliis ſerviciis, ſalvis forinſeco ſervicio & ſectis curiarum noſtrarum[19]."

Lands in Wimeſwould and Kegworth were ſet to WIlliam Kinder and Roger Hagarth, by queen Elizabeth for 21 years, at the rent of 1*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.* in 1584[20].

In 1564, there were 79 families in Wimeſwould.

In 1568, certain lands in Wimeſwould, and a feoffment which had been granted for an obit in that churh, of the annual rent of 57*s.* 3*d.* were leaſed to —— Cope for 21 years[21].

In 1589, Henry Skipwith, eſq. died ſeiſed of divers lands and tenements in Wymondeſwould; of one meſſuage and divers lands and tenements there; and alſo of divers lands and tenements called "Wymondſwould Lands," lately bought of Edward[22] late earl of Leiceſter, and William Raven; and they were held of the queen in ſocage[23].

In 1609, Edward Ballard held the manor of

---

[1] Eſch. 2 Edw. III. n. 86.

[2] Appendix to vol. II. p. 118.

[3] Who bore, Or, on two bars Gules, three water-bougets Argent; Plate LXXI. fig. 13.

[4] Cart. 12 Edw. III. N° 44.

[5] Rot. Aux. 20 Edw. III.

[6] Eſch. 27 Edw. III. N° 69. Leic.

[7] Fin. 35 Edw. III. m. 23.—See more in Aſhby Magna.

[8] Eſch. 36 Edw. III. pars 2. N° 81.

[9] Burton, MS.

[10] Eſch. 1 Hen. IV. N° 71. Leic.

[11] Ibid. N° 72. Leic.

[12] Eſch. 8 Hen. IV. N° 76. Leic.

[13] Eſch. 11 Hen. VI. N° 43. Leic.

[14] Eſch. 1 Edw. IV. N° 46. Leic.

[15] See ſome account of the Sacheverell family in p. 508.

[16] Wyrley, MS.

[17] Communicated by Dr. Pegge, from a Rental of 31 Hen. VIII.

[18] Near Wimeſwould.

[19] Chartulary, fol. 39. b.

[20] Leaſes in the Augmentation Office.

[21] Ibid.

[22] Rectiùs Robert.

[23] Eſch. 3 April, 31 Eliz.

Wimeſwould in ſocage; and Edward Blount at the ſame time held lands here in capite.

The freeholders at Wimeſwould in 1630 were, William Ballaud junior, gent. William Blount, Thomas Fox, and John Franke.

In 1655, there was collected in Wimeſwould, for the relief of the poor Proteſtants in Piedmont, the ſum of 1 l. 18 s. 0 d.

In 1722, 42 freeholders polled from this pariſh; and in 1775 we find 57 names.

In an act paſſed in 1757, for dividing ſeveral commons, or waſtes, &c. within the manor of Wimeſwould, belonging to Thomas Alſopp, gent.; John Davys, gent.; the maſter, fellows, and ſcholars of Trinity College, Cambridge; Charles-James Packe, eſq. Joſeph Hickſon, Suſanna Hickſon, Anne Thompſon, William Burrows, John Burrows, and others, owners of lands, and of an extenſive right to depaſture beaſts, ſheep, and commonable cattle, by accuſtomed ſtints or proportions; Thomas Alſopp and John Davys are deſcribed as lords of the manor; the maſter, fellows, and ſcholars of Trinity college, as poſſeſſed of the rectory in proportions; and the Rev. Thomas Green, as vicar. One eighth of the whole was allotted to the College, as impropriators; and 60 ſtatute acres, of the yearly value of £30. or upwards, to Mr. Green as vicar, in lieu of all vicarial tithes, ſurplice-fees excepted; and proviſion made for public roads, 50 yards broad at the leaſt, for the great roads through the lordſhip, called Melton and The Vale Roads; and an indemnification to the owners of lands in Burton and Thorpe, who might be injured by ſuch lands being made through their incloſures.

Wimeſwould contains 170 houſes, and 1050 inhabitants, whoſe chief employment is huſbandry; the lordſhip containing upwards of 3000 acres. The ſoil here, as in moſt other places, is different. Some part about the town, eſpecially on the Weſt ſide, is very good mixed ſoil, worth 30 or 40 ſhillings per acre. The land on the other ſide is a ſtrong clay, and is very good for the produce of wheat and beans; but, about a mile from the town, it is very cold, being parcel ſtill conſiderably higher than the town.

The commiſſioners who were employed, at the time of incloſing the lordſhip, for the admeaſurement of the ſeveral lands, could not make the new allotments correſpond with one another, having 7 acres left, which they could not diſpoſe of; which ſtill remains let for the benefit of the highways.

Several very reſpectable farmers and graziers in this town occupy conſiderable eſtates of their own property.

Here was a manſion-houſe by the ſide of a ſtreet called The Brook Street, which was the reſidence of —— Oakover, eſq. But, about the year 1750, it was ſold, together with a large quantity of land, to different people; ſince which, the hall has been pulled down, and the materials carried away.

There does not appear to be a great increaſe in the number of inhabitants; for, by the firſt accounts of the Regiſter, which was in 1650, there appear to have been, on an average, 14 baptiſms annually; and of the laſt three years the average is 15.

It is commonly believed in this town, that, about 80 or 100 years ago, here were ſeveral witches; of whom the old inhabitants relate ſtrange ſtories.

	£.	s.	d.
Money raiſed for the poor, within the year ending at Eaſter 1776, —	111	2	3
Expended in county rates, &c.	7	9	3
——— on the poor, —	103	13	0
Rent of workhouſe and habitations,	4	6	1
Expended in litigations, —	0	0	0
Money raiſed for 1783, —	149	5	0
——— 1784, —	118	3	5
——— 1785, —	140	5	0
Medium of theſe three years,	135	17	9
——— of county expences,	7	19	7
——— of expences not relating to the poor; repairs of the church, roads, &c.	0	0	0
——— of nett annual expences,	127	18	2
——— of attending on magiſtrates,	1	3	2
——— of entertainments at meetings,	0	15	0
——— of law expences, —	3	13	4
——— of ſetting the poor to work,	1	6	2

The return made to the houſe of commons in 1786, in anſwer to the enquiry reſpecting the charitable donations in this pariſh, may be ſeen in vol. I. p. 58.

In the church is this table of benefactions:

"There are 66 acres of land in the lordſhips of Wimeſwould and Burton, veſted in the hands of truſtees; the rents and profits thereof to be diſpoſed of moſt for the commonwealth of the pooreſt inhabitants of the pariſh of Wimeſwould, or as the truſtees ſhall think fit and convenient."

Over the ſchool-door is this inſcription:

"In memory of the late Mr. Joſeph Thompſon, who died the 29th of April, anno Domini 1733, in the 83d year of his age. He endowed this ſchool with £100. towards teaching 10 boys.

GLORIA SOLI DEO."

The CHURCH (See Plate LXXI.),

dedicated to St. Mary, is a large building, and conſiſts of a ſtout embattled tower (in which hang ſix bells), an embattled nave, a chancel ſeparated from the nave by a neat ſcreen, and two ailes ſeparated by five arches with as many clereſtory windows; a North and South porch, the latter of which has been newly built.

In the tower of the church is the fragment ſhewn in fig. 30.

The pews are open ones; and, notwithſtanding they are generally old, yet, the church having been lately cleaned, whitewaſhed, and beautified, and a gallery built for the ſingers, it is remarkably decent; and the inhabitants have of late years laid out conſiderable ſums for theſe purpoſes. Among other things, it was thought neceſſary to have a great part of the top of the ſpire taken down; which was done, and re-built at a conſiderable expence. This had not continued many years, before, July 2, 1783, between 2 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon, a violent ſtorm of thunder and lightning came on; when the lightning ſtruck the weathercock, which paſſed with great violence down the ſpire, and paſſed along a door which goes out of the belfry into the ſingers' gallery into the church; which door it ſhattered, and went out at the chancel window. It alſo broke ſeveral ſplinters of the belfry-door into the church-yard; but it was not obſerved that it made any hole in the ground. The ſpire was ſo much ſhattered, that it was dangerous to paſs by; and was therefore taken down, and has not been ſince re-built. The bells [1] did not receive any damage.

In a window was written, "Orate pro anima Johannis Dounham [2], abbatis de Beaucheſſe."

Mr. Burton deſcribes theſe arms at Wymeſwould; Plate LXXI. fig. 14—24:

In the Eaſt window of the chancel:

Azure, two chevrons Or; Robert Fitz Ranulph. 19

Gules, billetté, a feſs dancetté Or; Brett.

Barry of ſix, Argent and Gules, eight martlets Sable; Valance.

Argent, two lions paſſant in pale Gules; Strange.

In a South window of the chancel:

Willoughby; impaling, Argent, on a ſaltire engrailed Sable, five annulets Or; Leake.

In a North window of the chancel:

Fitz Ranulph.

---

[1] At that time there were but four bells. There are now ſix, caſt by Oſborn in 1795.

[2] Abbot from 1458; but was depoſed, 27 Feb. 1461-2, for perjuries, waſting the convent's goods, incontinence, rebellion, or contumacy, and many other notorious crimes, proved againſt him, as the viſitors aſſert, not by malevolent or ſlanderous perſons, but by the teſtimony of grave men worthy of all credit. He was afterwards, along with ſeven monks his accomplices, excommunicated. Mr. Francis Peck's MSS. in the Britiſh Muſeum; and Dr. Pegge's MS Hiſtory of Beauchief Abbey, where this buſineſs is detailed at length, in the Appendix, N° XXVII.

Strange.

nevill Gules, ſemé of croſs croſſlets fitché, three leopards' faces jeſſant de fleurs de lis Argent; Nevill.

In a North window of the church:

Sable, a lion rampant Argent, collared Gules; 22 Waſtneis.

Azure, ſix eſcalops Argent, 3, 2, 1; Freſchevile.

Argent, three bars Azure; Cyfrewaſt.

Azure, on a feſs Ermine, three maſcles voided Gules.

Quarterly; 1. and 4. Gules, a chevron Ermine between ten cinquefoils Argent, Berkeley; 2. and 3. Gules, a lion rampant Ermine, crowned Or, Hamline.

In Wimeſwould church is this coat: Gules, three libbets' heads with feathers in their tops Argent between ſeven croſſes Argent; and they call them Nevill's arms, who was lord of this town; but q. if they were not Wymeſwould's, with the heireſs of which houſe Nevill might marry; for, it appears that Nevill gave it, by a ſeal to a deed dated 12 Ric. II; viz. "Charta Henrici Nevill, chevalier, & Jacome uxoris ejus, apud Thorpe. Teſte Joh. Nevill de Wymeſwould, chevalier." The creſt is, an arm holding a broken truncheon [1]; fig. 27.

The font is ſmall, and modern.

In the Matriculus of 1220 [2], Wimeſwould is deſcribed to be under the patronage of the earl of Winton; the abbot of Beauchief having the church in proprios uſus, of the gift of Robert ſon of Ralph [rather of Ranulph [3]], by the confirmation of Hugh [4] biſhop of Lincoln, as it is ſaid, for 35 years paſt; and it was the cuſtom to produce yearly their inſtrumenta at Lammasday, or the firſt of Auguſt (citra feſtum beati Petri ad Vincula). The vicar, John, inſtituted by B. [5] formerly archdeacon, received, in right of the vicarage, all the profits of the church, except great and ſmall tithes, and mortuaries; and paid to the rector a pound of incenſe by authority of the archdeacon. The alien priory of St. Ebrulph received ab antiquo two ſheaves of the tithes of twelve virgates of land and a half.

The following account of this rectory was communicated in 1791, by the late Dr. Pegge, from his MS Hiſtory of Beauchief Abbey:

"This church was originally given to the Abbey by Robert Fitz Ranulf the founder.

The great family of De Quincy, earls of Wincheſter, are ſaid to have been patrons of this church in 1220; but could, I think, have been ſo only as leſſees to the Abbey; ſince it follows immediately in the Matriculus, "Abbas de Bello-capite habens eam in proprios uſus, de dono Roberti filii Radulfi," &c.; the leaſe, or term, being probably granted to the Earl for the purpoſe of obtaining his aſſiſtance and protection on occaſion, as was cuſtomary with the religious houſes.

Robert Putrell ſet up ſome claim to this church, but acknowledged the advowſon to be the right of our founder; and ſo quit-claimed all his intereſt to the Abbey [6]. Putrell lived about the time of the founder, Adam, abbat of Welbec, being a witneſs to this inſtrument, as well as to one of the founder's. One Robert Putrell had a property in Wymeſwould in 1329 [7]; but muſt be a different perſon.

The ſame was done by William Jorz, and in the ſame words; only here is added, "The canons 'conceſſerunt mihi ſpirituale beneficium in extremis vitæ meæ, ſicut uni canonicorum noſtrorum' [8]." This was an eaſy way which the religious houſes had of getting rid of claims, and in this age of devotion was often practiſed with ſucceſs. One may judge this claimant to be of the ſame age with Robert Poutrell, on account of the abbot of Welbec's atteſting the deed. There is a William Jorz in Thoroton's Hiſtory of Nottinghamſhire; but he is too late again in time, as he flouriſhed in 1320.

A vicarage was ordained here early [9]; probably by Hugh the Burgundian, biſhop of Lincoln, who ſat from 1186 to 1200; and one John had been inſtituted to it, in 1220, by Reginald [10] late archdeacon of Leiceſter. The vicar was to receive the whole profits of the benefice, except tithes of corn, ſmall tithes, and the principal legacies [11], and paying alſo to the rector, or parſon, a pound of incenſe yearly. It ſhould ſeem that the vicar, by this ordination, had but a ſcanty allowance, the lot of many others beſides: however, there was a pretty good glebe.

As the churches conferred on the convent by the founder, were ſome of them full at the time, ſo that the houſe could not immediately receive any emolument from them; Fitz Ranulf was ſo conſiderate, as to give the canons his demeſne [12], 'to be held till all the churches on his eſtate ſhould become void, for their eaſe;' and he gave them afterwards two bovates of land here at Wymeſwould for a releaſe [13].

Thomas and John were chaplains here [14], employed, I conceive, by the convent, to ſupply the cure, before the vicarage was eſtabliſhed.

In 1291, the value of the rectory was 38 marks and one penny; ſo that this was far the beſt of all the convent's preſent benefices.

In 1344, the procurations were, 7*s.* 6¾*d.*; the rectory was taxed at 100 marks, and paid 4*s.* for Peter-pence.

In 1478, frater Ric. Holynbrige, canon of Beauchief, was vicar here [15], though Wymeſwould lay at ſo great a diſtance from the Abbey.

Tho. Homerſtor [l. Homerſtone], of Wymeſwould, held the tenth of all grain, wool, and lamb, with rents temporal in the town and fields there, and 2 tithe-barns and other, by leaſe for 27 years, dated Invention of the Croſs (3 May), 1510; rent 26*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* [16]

In 1535, this rectory was let to Thomas Homerſton; viz. glebe, and all other profits, at £20. per annum. Synodals and procurations were 16*s.* 4*d.* The vicarage was at that period valued at £8.

The king ſettled this rectory, with the manor, on his new foundation of Trinity college, Cambridge [17]."

Queen Mary, in 1553, granted the rectory and advowſon of Heverſham, in Weſtmorland, to Trinity College in Cambridge [18], in exchange for the church of Wymeſwould, co. Leiceſter, late belonging to the monaſtery of Beauchief, co. Derby; except the corn-tithes of Croſthwaite, which king Edward VI. in 1550 had granted to John Southcoat [19] and Henry Chinerton [20].

In 1650, Wymeſwould was returned as an impropriation; the rectory worth £120, the vicarage £16; and the incumbent as "weak."

In the king's books Wimeſwould is entered as a diſcharged living, worth, "in decimis majoribus & minoribus, cum manſ' & terr' gleb'," £9; clear yearly value 30*l.* 2*s.* The epiſcopal procurations are, for the rectory 6*s.* 8*d.* for the vicarage 2*s.*

The vicarage in 1734 was augmented with Queen Anne's bounty; and is now worth £120. a year.

---

[1] Gaſcoigne, MS Note.

[2] See the Introductory Volume, p. lix.

[3] A miſtake very common; as ſhewn in the Hiſtory of Beauchief Abbey.

[4] Probably Hugh the Burgundian.

[5] As there was no archdeacon there at that time whoſe name ſo began, B. muſt have been miſread by the learned Antiquary, or his correſpondent, for R. i. e. Reginald. See Browne Willis's Survey of Cathedrals, vol. II. p. 112. Mr. Burton's errors in his Latin extracts are numerous.

[6] Chartulary, fol. 36. b.

[7] Appendix to Beauchief Abbey, N° III.

[8] Chartulary, fol. 38. b.

[9] In conſequence, I ſuppoſe, of the Lateran Council, A. D. 1179.

[10] See note (5) above.

[11] Mortuaries.

[12] See before, p. 502.

[13] Chartulary, fol. 7.

[14] Deed without date.

[15] Appendix to Beauchief Abbey, N° IV.

[16] Rental, 31 Hen. VIII.

[17] "Terræ conceſſæ in diverſis comitat. Angliæ Collegio S. Trinitatis de Cantabrigiâ." 1 Pars Original. 38 Hen. VIII. Rot. 109; & 3 Pars Original. ejuſdem anni, Rot. 40.

[18] "Collegio Trinitatis in Cantabrigiâ, rectoria de Everſham, & alia, conceſſa in com. Cantabrigiæ, Weſtmorlandiæ, & Eboraci." 3 Pars Original. 1 Mariæ, Rot. 27.

[19] 2 Pars Original. 3 Edw. VI. Rot. 37.

[20] So Nicholſon and Bourne's Hiſtory of Weſtmorland and Cumberland, vol. I. p. 195; citing Dugdale's MS.

RECTORS.	PATRONS.
Henry de Rottenham, 1286.	Abbot and convent of Beauchief.
…… 11 kal. Junii, 1302.
Richard Holynbrigge, 1478.
Dr. Worth, 1534.
Thomas Woodcocke[1], M. A. 1562.	Trinity college, Cambridge.
Peter Rathbone, 1597—1618.
Nicholas Fiſher, 1618—1637.
George Chamberlain, 1637—1638.
Richard Palmer, 1638—1655.
William Shuttlewood, 1656.
John Orme, M. A. July 8, 1681; died 1700.
Edward Moiſes[2], M. A. Sept. 12, 1701; inducted a ſecond time Aug. 10, 1713; reſigned 1728[3].
Thomas Green, M. A. Aug. 22, 1728; died 1776[4].
Abraham Jobſon[5], M. A. Nov. 6, 1776, the preſent vicar, 1800.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

In the chancel.

On a monument of white marble on the South ſide, incloſed with iron rails; fig. 31.

Arms: Argent, on a ſaltire engrailed Sable, nine annulets Or, Leeke; impaling Bainbrigge.

"Hìc ſitus eſt
GULIELMUS LEEKE[6], armiger, ſerviens ad legem;
qui, ampliores honores meruiſſe contentus, non modò non ambivit, ſed etiam ultrò ſibi oblatos conſtanti animo recuſavit.
Antiquo genere, ſpectatâ fide, incorruptâ probitate, eximiâ legum ſcientiâ ac cultu,
satìs illuſtris,
ille univerſi juris Anglicani ſacraria reſervare,
atque intimos ſenſus ex publicis ſenatûs-conſultis,
ex judicum decretis ſolennibus, ac longo rerum uſu, eruere (ſi quis alius) pulchrè nôrat.
Clientibus ſummis, infimis, judicio acri, operâ fideli, optatiſſimus ſemper adfuit patronus;
in quo conciliandæ inter litigantes pacis, & de omnibus benè merendi, ſtudium enituit maximum.
Hinc, tam principi quàm populo charus, ad celſiorem dignitatis gradum ſibi aditum,
omninò invitus, aperuit;
in alta enim Purpuratorum Judicum ſubſellia â CAROLO II. evectus, munere ſe tam præclaro ſtatim abdicavit;
moderationis planè ſingularis rarum exemplum.
Ut, quia fortunâ minimè pendens,
nihil indè unquam ſperâſſet,
nihil itidem timeret.
Obiit 7° Idûs Octob. 1687, anno ætatis 57.
Uxor Catharina et unica filia, memores mœſtæque,
hoc marmor poſuere."

On another ſtone within the rails:

"Here lieth interred the body of Mrs.
Matilda, the daughter of Mr.
Gervas Bainbrigg, of Lockington, in the county of Leiceſter;
who died the 18th of ……… 1693,
in the 26th year of her age."

On a flat ſtone within the rails of the altar:

Arms of Bainbrigge ſingle.

"Here lieth interred the body of Henry Bainbrigg, ſon of William Bainbrigg, eſq.
of Lockington, in the county of Leiceſter;
who departed this life the 15th of December,
in the year of our Lord 1700,
in the 51ſt year of his age.
He married Mrs. Hannah Welby, ſiſter to William Welby, eſq.
of Denton, in the county of Lincoln;
by whom he had no iſſue.
His ſecond wife was Mrs. Elizabeth Nelthorp, daughter of James Nelthorp, of London, eſq.;
by whom he had 5 ſons and 2 daughters.
Here alſo lies interred the body of William Bainbrigg, eſq.
ſon of the aboveſaid Henry Bainbrigg;
who departed this life on the 13th day of April,
in the year of our Lord 1731,
in the 51ſt year of his age.
He married Mrs. Mary Hart, relict of Daniel Hart of London, gent.;
by whom he had iſſue three ſons.
Mr. John Bainbrigg, youngeſt ſon of the above Henry, died Sept. 26, 1750, aged 58."

In the floor of the chancel:

"Here lieth interred the body of
Mr. John Orme, late vicar of this pariſh.
He died December 8, anno Domini 1700,
in the 46th year of his age."

---

[1] In the Certificate referred to under Allexton, p. 8, Mr. Woodcocke is thus deſcribed: "Preſbyter, non conjugatus; doctus; reſidet; hoſpitalis; deget ibidem; vicarius ſine cur': nullum aliud habet."

[2] Of Trinity College, Cambridge; B. A. 1695; M. A. 1701.—Mem. that the ſaid Edward Moiſes was again inducted into the ſaid vicarage, to prevent its lapſing on his acceptance of Wyſall [Notts], on the 17th of Auguſt, 1713, by the Rev. Mr. Benjamin Bewick, vicar of Barrow upon the Soar. Pariſh Regiſter.

[3] Edward Moiſes, rector of Keyworth, co. Nottingham, was ſon of the rector of Wimeſwould; and was alſo of Trinity college, Cambridge; B. A. 1739; M. A. 1742. He publiſhed an Aſſize Sermon 1736; died in 1751, aged 76; and is remembered on a ſtone near the altar in the chancel of Keyworth church.

[4] Rector alſo of Walton on the Woulds; where ſee an account of him, p. 499; and his epitaph, p. 500.

[5] Rector alſo of Belton, co. Rutland; and curate of March in the Iſle of Ely, where he reſides.

[6] Serjeant Leake married Catharine ſiſter of Henry Bainbrigge, eſq. of Huggleſcote Grange, in this county; who, before he poſſeſſed Huggleſcote, reſided at Wimeſwould; and whoſe family was of conſiderable antiquity at Lockington, where their pedigree will be given. A ſir Henry Bainbrigge, in this Henry's time, viz. in 1669, gave £200. to Bridewell Hoſpital, as appears in the tables of benefactions preſerved in golden letters there. By Stat. 4 Geo. I. c. 14, it appears that a William Bainbrigge, eſq. at his own charges having erected the South gallery of the old pariſh-church of St. Giles in the Fields, and given the profits thereof to the uſe of the poor; in order that his charitable intention might not be fruſtrated, it was enacted, that, when the church ſhould be re-built, a South gallery ſhould be built for the ſame purpoſes; which was done accordingly. The learned Dr. John Bainbrigge (of whom ſee hereafter under Aſhby de la Zouch) was of this family. He was the ſon of Robert Bainbrigge by Anne his wife, one of the daughters of Richard Everard of Shenton, a family which will alſo be particularly noticed hereafter. Of a more antient part of the family of the Bainbrigges was Chriſtopher Bainbrigge, archbiſhop of York and cardinal prieſt of the Roman church, born in the preceding century, about 1450, at Hilton near Appleby in Weſtmorland, and whoſe hiſtory is ſet forth in Biographia Britannica, vol. I. p. 463; and ſee alſo Fuller's Worthies, Weſtmorland, p. 136. Camden, p. 807, and Additions, p. 813, make very honourable mention of Reginald Bainbrigge, of Appleby in Weſtmorland, as a learned gentleman and a great antiquary. The name of Bainbrigge poſſibly might have been taken from a bridge in Richmondſhire (ſee Camden's Britannia, p. 759.) called Baint-brigg.

"Here

✠

"Here lieth the body of Elizabeth,
the wife to Hugh Blunt;
who departed this life, in the 71ſt year of her age,
December 9, anno Domini 1702.
Requieſcat in pace!"

Another flat ſtone for a Blunt, hid by a pew.

"Joſeph Bayley, of ——— Hall in Yorkſhire, died March 6, 1709.
Requieſcat in pace!"

In the North aile.

"Here lieth the body of William Fox, who departed this life on the 21ſt of April,
in the year of our Lord 1725,
and in the 35th year of his age.
Here alſo lieth the body of Anne Fox,
the wife of the abovesaid William Fox.
She died Auguſt 6,
in the year of our Lord 1741,
aged about 56."

"Here lieth the body of Thomas Fox, who departed this life the 9th day of July,
in the year of our Lord 1743,
and the 34th year of his age.
Near this place alſo lie the bodies of Thomas and Elizabeth, children of Thomas and Elizabeth Fox;
who both died in the year 1744;
Thomas July 6, in the 1ſt year of his age;
and Elizabeth Auguſt 13, in her 4th year."

"Here lieth the body of Anne, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Fox;
who departed this life May 20,
in the year of our Lord 1743,
and the 6th year of her age."

"Sacred to the memory of Elizabeth Fox, relict of the late Mr. Thomas Fox.
She departed this life April 3, 1777,
in the 63d year of her age."

In the South aile;

"Here lieth the body of Elizabeth, the daughter of James Willimott by Anne his wife.
She departed this life Dec. 1, 1773,
in the 17th year of her age."

"To the memory of James Willimott, who departed this life September 2, 1780,
in the 54th year of his age."

"Alſo to the memory of Anne,
the wife of James Willimott, and relict of William Fox, butcher.
She departed this life Dec. 3, 1786,
aged 70 years."

In the nave.

"Beneath this ſtone lie depoſited the remains of William Fiſher, gent.
lord of this manor [1]; who departed this life the 2d day of February, 1797,
aged 67 years.
Reader, the man, whoſe duſt lies ſleeping here,
Was honeſt, good, religious, and ſincere;
A loving huſband, father, and kind friend,
And always mindful of his latter end.
Follow his ſteps, which now lies here at reſt,
That you with him hereafter may be bleſt."

In the church-yard.

"In memory of Thomas Bennett, who, after a life of benignity,
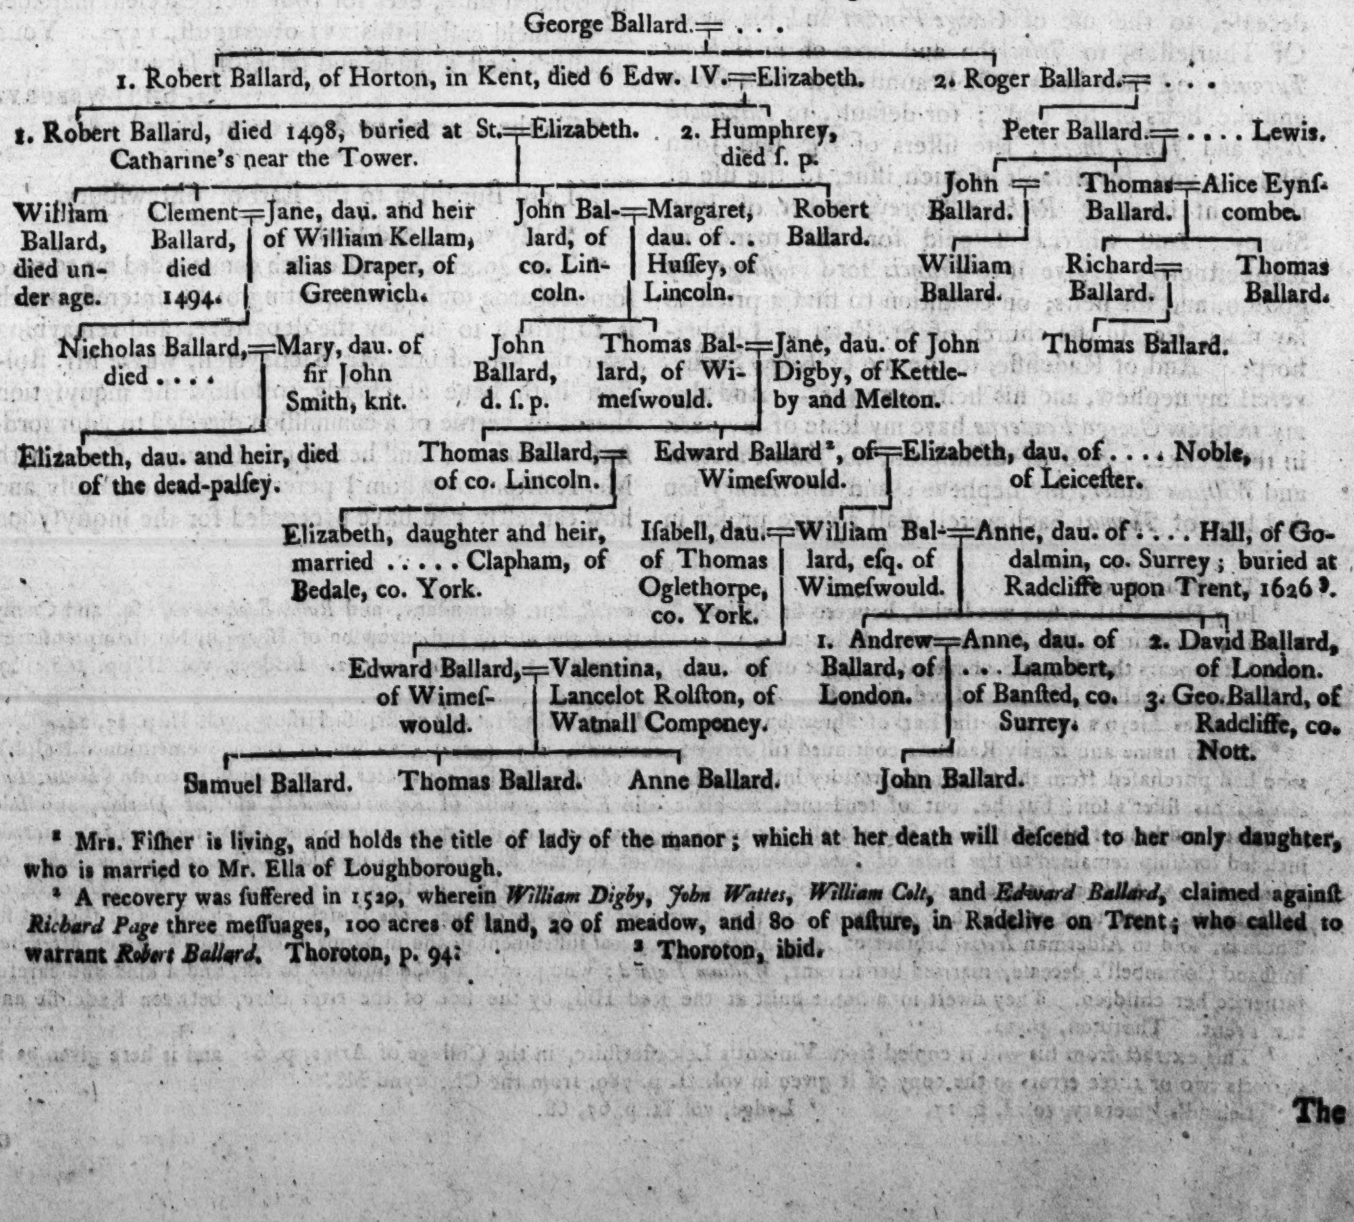
ſtrict temperance, and chaſtity, reſigned his immortal ſoul, Jan. 7, 1786,
aged 93 years."

Richard Tyers, Sept. 21, 1784, aged 72.
William Lambert, March 3, 1797, aged 73.
{John Burrows, Oct. 12, 1739, aged 76.
{Elizabeth Burrows, July 21, 1793, aged 78.

Pedigree of BALLARD, of WIMESWOULD.

Arms: Sable, a griffin paſſant Ermine, ducally gorged Or. Creſt, a demi-griffin Ermine, ſupporting a broken tilting-ſpear proper; Plate LXXI. fig. 32.



George Ballard. = . . .
1. Robert Ballard, of Horton, in Kent, died 6 Edw. IV. = Elizabeth.
2. Roger Ballard. = . . .
1. Robert Ballard, died 1498, buried at St. Catharine's near the Tower. = Elizabeth.
2. Humphrey, died ſ. p.
Peter Ballard. = ... Lewis.
William Ballard, died under age.
Clement Ballard, died 1494. = Jane, dau. and heir of William Kellam, alias Draper, of Greenwich.
John Ballard, of co. Lincoln. = Margaret, dau. of . . Huſſey, of Lincoln.
Robert Ballard.
John Ballard. =
Thomas Ballard. = Alice Eynſcombe.
William Ballard.
Richard Ballard. =
Thomas Ballard.
Thomas Ballard.
Nicholas Ballard, died . . . . = Mary, dau. of ſir John Smith, knt.
John Ballard, d. ſ. p.
Thomas Ballard, of Wimeſwould. = Jane, dau. of John Digby, of Kettleby and Melton.
Elizabeth, dau. and heir, died of the dead-palſey.
Thomas Ballard, of co. Lincoln. =
Edward Ballard [2], of Wimeſwould. = Elizabeth, dau. of . . . . Noble, of Leiceſter.
Elizabeth, daughter and heir, married . . . . . Clapham, of Bedale, co. York.
Iſabell, dau. of Thomas Oglethorpe, co. York. = William Ballard, eſq. of Wimeſwould. = Anne, dau. of . . . . Hall, of Godalmin, co. Surrey; buried at Radcliffe upon Trent, 1626 [3].
1. Andrew Ballard, of London. = Anne, dau. of . . . Lambert, of Banſted, co. Surrey.
2. David Ballard, of London.
3. Geo. Ballard, of Radcliffe, co. Nott.
Edward Ballard, of Wimeſwould. = Valentina, dau. of Lancelot Rolſton, of Watnall Componey.
Samuel Ballard.
Thomas Ballard.
Anne Ballard.
John Ballard.

---

[1] Mrs. Fiſher is living, and holds the title of lady of the manor; which at her death will deſcend to her only daughter, who is married to Mr. Ella of Loughborough.

[2] A recovery was ſuffered in 1529, wherein William Digby, John Wattes, William Colt, and Edward Ballard, claimed againſt Richard Page three meſſuages, 100 acres of land, 20 of meadow, and 80 of paſture, in Radclive on Trent; who called to warrant Robert Ballard. Thoroton, p. 94.

[3] Thoroton, ibid.

The family of SACHEVERELL, as may be ſeen in the Pedigrees printed in pp. 220. 394. 395. have been of ſo great antiquity in counties of Derby, Nottingham, Leiceſter, Warwick, and Dorſet, that ſome hiſtorical account of them may not be unacceptable.

In Thoroton's Nottinghamſhire, we find, in 1509, Henry Sacheverell, knight, and Ralph Sacheverell, with ſome other gentlemen, claim againſt Anthony Babington two meſſuages, 160 acres of land, 20 of meadow, 10 of paſture, and 15*s.* 8*d.* rent, with the appurtenances, in Kingſton and Ratcliff upon Sore [1].

After the attainder of Humphry duke of Buckingham, 5 Hen. VIII, the manor of Ratcliff on Sore came to ſir Richard Sacheverell [2], knight, who is thus mentioned in the Viſitation: "Ricardus Sacheverel, miles, à ſecretis [3] Hen. VIII. duxit Mariam dominam Hungreford, relictam Edwardi domini Haſtinges." He was, with others, "put ynto the Kyng's Bench, and like to be in great danger, for reteyning of ſervants at the reverence of God—Here is gret troble betwix the lord M'kes [4] and the lord Haſtings and ſir Richard Sacheverell. Both parties ſtand bound to appear in the Star-chamber; and, as they ſay, ſhall be bound to be of good abeyring. My lord Haſtings and ſir Richard Sacheverell be here examined becauſe they had ſo many yn a livre at the metyn of the Scottiſh queene. I hard my lord Cardinal command them to bring up every man's name, wyche was with them in their lyvre. At the ſame time, Anthony Babington hathe put up to the council upon the ſaid ſir Richard grete bill of complaint, and alſo taken ſurety of him [5]."

The number of retainers was expreſſed in the licence for keeping them; and all who exceeded became liable to very heavy penalties.

Sir Richard Sacheverell, by his will, dated March 29, 1534, gave to his nephew ſir Henry all that he had of his father, &c. "And whereas I have enfeoffed Francis lord Talbot, John Villers, knt. Roger Ratcliffe, eſq. John Harington, eſq. John Conſtable, eſq. Thomas Harvey, eſq. and John Fowler, gent. with others, of my manors of Sadington, Lubbeſthorp, Braunſton, Sapcote, Stony Staunton, Congeſton, Broughton, Sutton, Thurleſton, Shulton, Ibſtock, Wigeſton, Wimeſwould, Counteſthorpe, co. Leiceſter, and Radcliffe ſuper Sore, co. Notts; I will ſtand ſeiſed to me for life: After, of my manors of Sapcote, Congeſton, and Stony Stanton, with the advowſons, and of the chantry of Sapcote, after my deceaſe, to the uſe of George Vincent and his heirs. Of Thurleſton, to John ſon and heir of ſir William Turvile, and their heirs. Of Braunſton, to John Slorey and the heirs of his body; for default, to Elizabeth Nele and Jane Vincent, late ſiſters of the ſaid John Slorey; and, for default of ſuch iſſue, to the uſe of the right heirs of Richard Slorey, father of John Slorey. And whereas I paid for the manor of Lubbeſthorp; I give it to Francis lord Haſtings my godſon, and his heirs, on condition to find a prieſt to ſay maſs, &c. in the church of St. Peter of Lubbeſhorpe. And of Radcliffe, to the uſe of Ralph Sacheverell my nephew, and his heirs for ever [6]. And that my nephew George Fynderne have my leaſe of my park in the Peake. And of Sadington, to John Finderne and William Rider, my nephews; and that Henry ſon and heir of Thomas Sacheverell ſhall receive profits in Sadington, &c. I will that Ralf Sacheverell, George Vincent, and George Villers, be my executors; and Henry Norris overſeer [7]." He was buried in the collegiate church of St. Mary in the Newark at Leiceſter; where, "under a pillar in a chapelle of the South croſs iſle lyeth the lady Hungreford, and Sacheverell her ſecond huſband [8]."

John Sacheverell, a younger brother of ſir Richard, was killed in Boſworth-field, leaving a ſon Henry; who, as ſtated above, came into poſſeſſion of the antient inheritance of the family under his uncle's will. Henry died in 1558; and (his eldeſt ſon being dead before him) was ſucceeded by his grandſon John, who figures in the following State Letters:

George Earl of Shrewſbury to Queen Elizabeth.

"May it plees your Majeſtie,

"I reſevyd lately yoʳ highnes' lettars that I ſhuld ſee an indeferent jury impaneled for your majeſtie, in the counte of Darbe, to enquere of jhone Sacheverell fugetyve; whereapon I gave knolege to the ſherryff of that ſhyre of tyme and plaſe, whyche I thought meteſt for that mattar; and with myche adoo the ſheryff at length mett me, wher we hadde ſum talk, of his parte, more ſtout and froward than in that mattar was requyſyte. He wold uſe no conference with me to the ende your majeſtie wrytt; nethar wold he forbere orr impanell anny man of my moſyon, but departed, ſayeng he wold doo as he thought mete; and ſo he did mak and retorne a jure as him ſelf lyked beſte, without my aſſent. The jure indede are very honeſt and dyſkreet men; but for that I did well to perſeve Sacheverell and his frends bare ſych rule with that jury, and they wer ſo ner Norbury, and Sacheverell and his frends (and ſondry wees in ther danger) as gret favor was lyke to be ſhewid to the fugetyve, I thought nott meteſt to proſed theren untill your majeſtie were advarteſed, and your pleſure fordar knowne; for lothe I wold be that anny notoryus offendar, or contemtuous perſon ageynſt your majeſtie, ſhuld have anny favor where I have to doo; the exampull thereof myght perhaps brede ovarmuche boldnes in the lyke, or grettar offences. Mr. Rolſton can report to your majeſtie the furdar ſercomſtances and handleng of this mattar; and therfore I ſees to trobull your majeſtie, prayeng to God, accordeng to my bonden dute, ever for your moſt excelent majeſtie. At Sheffield caſtell this XVI of Auguſt, 1572. Your majeſtie's moſt humble and fethefull ſarvante,

G. SHREWSBURY.

"To the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſtie [9]."

Lord Burghley to the Earl of Shrewſbury.

"My very good lord,

"The Queen's Majeſtie hath commanded me to take ſome regarde to the proſequuting of hir intereſt, which is to growe to hir by the departure, and remayning over the ſeas of one Mr. Sacheverell, where Mr. Rolſton hath bene at chardg to follow the inquyſytion therof by vertue of a commiſſion directed to your lordſhip and others; and hereuppon I have conferred with Mr. Rolſton, by whom I perceave how honorably and how earneſtly you have proceeded for the inquyſytion of the truth; whereof hir majeſtie is alſo pryve, and doth acceptably accompt the ſame to be the rather doone uppon hir letter wrytten unto yow: and lykewiſe hir majeſtie is informed in whom the fault is that the matter hath not better ſucceeded; wherof I'm ſory that he ſhuld ſo overſee himſelf for any parciall reſpect to forbeare to receave your lordſhip's adviſe, as he was ſpecially commanded; I meane ſir Jhon Zouch, to whom I have preſently written by hir majeſtie's cōmandement, hopyng that uppon this admonition he wold have better regard to that which ought to furder hir majeſtie's ſervice. And ſo I pray your lordſhip to let me underſtand how yow ſhall fynd his doyngs; for not long he wrote to me that he douted that Mr. Rolſton wold complayne of hym; and therfor only required that he might not be miſlyked untill he wer hard to anſwer, pretendyng that he had no intent any wiſe to hynder her majeſtie's ſervice. To which letter I made him anſwer (as I remembre, when her majeſtie was at Kennellworth), that I had not hard of any manner of complaynt, and therfor could not tell what otherwiſe to anſwer; but to aſſure hym, that untill I ſhould ſee both Mr. Rolſton and his anſwer, I cold not juſtly miſlyk of hym; and for this purpoos I do now wryte to hym, and that partly by the queen's majeſtie's commandment, with ſome part of my owne advyſe. And for the matter, having here conferred with Mr. Sollicitor Generall thereupon, it is by us thought mete, and ſo I thynk your lordſhip will allow, that after ſir Jhon Zouch ſhall have made your lordſhip ſome better anſwer for a more indifferent jury, if yow lyke thereof, to procede, by vertew of your commiſſion, to charge the ſayd jury; and for it wer right for the queen's majeſtie to have ſome perſon of lerning to gyve the evidence to the jury to prove the covỹ, we have here thought that Mr. Roodes, though he be in commiſſion, may forbeare to ſitt in commiſſion, and to ſerve the queen's majeſtie as in place of hir lerned conſellor; whych I dout not but he will do, if your lordſhip ſhall have none metar, and will ſo requyre him. And if it happe that ether the ſhyrryve will not impanell an indifferent jury, or that your lordſhip ſhall ſe cauſe to dout of ther fyndyng of the truth to prove the covỹ, then may your lordſhip forbeare to procede, and chardg the partyes that pretend any intereſt in the land by conveyance, to appear the firſt day of Michelmas term in the Exchequer, wher the matter may be hard, and ordred as it ſhall be convenient. I have delivered to this berer my letter to the ſhyrryve, whō I have commanded to wayt on your lordſhip whan you ſhall ſend for hym. From Woodſtock, Sept. 5, 1572 [1]."

---

[1] Thoroton, p. 9.

[2] In 7 Hen. VIII. a fine was levied, between ſir Richard Sacheverell, knt. demandant, and Ralph Sacheverell, eſq. and Cecily his wife, the heir of John Durance, eſq. deforcients, of a moiety of the manor and advowſon of Iſham in Northamptonſhire; where it appears that Ralph Sacheverell (in right of his wife) preſented to this rectory in 1502. Bridges, vol. II. pp. 108, 109.

[3] Privy counſellor.

[4] Lord Marquis.

[5] Thomas Aleyn's Letter to the Earl of Shrewſbury, 1517. Lodge's Illuſtrations of Britiſh Hiſtory, vol. II. p. 23, 24.

[6] In this name and family Radcliffe continued till Henry Sacheverell, eſq. (great grandſon of the abovementioned Ralph), who had purchaſed from the Crown the rectory impropriate of Radcliffe, ſettled his eſtates in that lordſhip on ſir Thomas Hutchinſon, his ſiſter's ſon; but he, out of tenderneſs to his couſin Eleanor, wife of Roger Columbell, eſq. of Derley, and ſole daughter and heir of the ſaid Henry Sacheverell, his uncle, agreed to divide it between them; and ſo one moiety of this fertile incloſed lordſhip remained to the heirs of John Columbell, ſon of the ſaid Eleanor, who married Catharine Hickman, ſiſter of Thomas-Windſor Hickman (created lord Windſor 1660, and earl of Plymouth 1682) and to Marianna wife of ſir Henry Hunlocke, of Wimeſwould, who took care of her children; and the other moiety was by colonel John Hutchinſon, eldeſt ſon of the ſaid ſir Thomas, ſold to Alderman Ireton, brother of Henry Ireton, the great inſtrument in the unhappy wars. This Eleanor, after her huſband Columbell's deceaſe, married her ſervant, William Haſard; who proved a good huſband to her, and a kind and careful father to her children. They dwelt in a houſe built at the Red Hill, by the ſide of the river Sore, between Radcliffe and the Trent. Thoroton, p. 12.

[7] This extract from his will is copied from Vincent's Leiceſterſhire, in the College of Arms, p. 6; and is here given as it corrects two or three errors in the copy of it given in vol. II. p. 789, from the Chetwynd MS.

[8] Leland's Itinerary, vol. I. p. 17.

[9] Lodge, vol. II. p. 67, 68.

John Sacheverell, eſq. (who had been admitted of Gray's Inn 1534) died at Bruſſels, 23 Oct. 1592, ſeiſed of the manor of Sadington, then worth £20. and divers lands in Wigſton, Weſterby, and Mouſley; and Henry, his ſon and heir, then of Gray's Inn, (admitted there 1568) was aged 40.—Mem. that the ſaid John Sacheverell forfeited the revenue of his lands for going and remaining beyond the ſeas, contrary to Stat. 13 & 19 Eliz.; and that Henry his ſon had by patent, dated 20 Jan. 18 Eliz. the leaſe thereof during his father's life, at £200. a year, paid into the Exchequer [2]. In 1602, this Henry obtained, for himſelf and others, a grant of divers lands in Derbyſhire [3]; and afterwards fixed his abode at Old Hays, in the pariſh of Ratby, in Leiceſterſhire.

Joan, third dau. of ſir Humphry Bradbourne. = Henry Sacheverell, eſq. ſon and heir of John Sacheverell, of Morley and Hopwell [4], co. Derby; died at Old Hays, Aug. 14, 1620, æt. 73; and was buried at Ratby [5]. = Elizabeth Keyes.

1. Jacinth Sacheverell [6], of Morley, high-ſheriff of Derbyſhire in 1622; d. Jan. 22, 1656, æt. 79. = Elizabeth, dau. of ſir Rich. Harpur, of Little-over, co. Derby, died March 22, 1656.
2. Jonathan.
3. Victrian.
4. Omphale.
5. Abigail.
6. Jane.
3. Manfrede Sacheverell, eldeſt natural ſon, died 1615.
1. Ferdinando Sacheverell [7], died Jan. 10, 1628-9. = Lucy, dau. of ſir Hen. Haſtings, of Leiceſter Abbey; re-married to — Pinchbeck.
2. Valence Sacheverell, of Newhall, co. Warwick. = Anne, dau. of ſir Geo. Devereux, knt.
4. William.
5. Frances.

1. Henry Sacheverell, born 1625; died ſ. p.
2. Ferdinando [8] Sacheverell, of Old Hays.
Lucy, firſt married to . . . Danett. = George Sacheverell [9], b. 1663; reſided ſome time at Nottingham; afterwards of Newhall; and of Callow in Derbyſhire; high-ſheriff for the latter county 1709; died 1715. = Mary Watſon; afterwards married, ſecondly, to Henry Sacheverell, D. D; and, thirdly, to Charles Chambers, gent. She died Sept. 6, 1739; æt 75; and her third huſband May 20, 1749, æt. 88.

1. Henry Sacheverell, of Morley, marr. Nov. 20, 1638, at Tottenham, Middleſex, Anne dau. of ſir John Coke, knt. principal ſecretary of ſtate; afterwards wife of Hen. Danvers; died ſ.p.
2. Ralph.
3. Richard.
4. Dorothy.

John

---

[1] Lodge's Illuſtrations of Britiſh Hiſtory, vol. II. p. 73, 74.

[2] Inq. at Loughborough, 1 April, 38 Eliz.; Cole's Eſcheats, vol. I. (Harl. MS. 756.) p. 243.—A ſimilar inquiſition on his Derbyſhire eſtates had been taken, 36 Eliz. pars 2.

[3] 3 Pars Original. 44 Eliz. Rot. 181.

[4] The lordſhip of Hopwell, which originally came into the family of Sacheverell by marriage with an heireſs (ſee before, p. 394.) was deviſed by Jacinth Sacheverell to Henry Keyes of Hopwell; whoſe ſon Henry Keyes, eſq. counſellor at law, afterwards enjoyed it; married a Bellaſis out of Yorkſhire; and was high-ſheriff of Derbyſhire in 1678. Mr. Wolley's MS. deſcribes the antient manſion as "old, loftily ſituated, with a noble proſpect from the middle of the lordſhip, and well watered with curious ſprings almoſt at the height of the hill;" but this houſe has lately given place to an elegant modern building.

[5] Where ſee his epitaph. See alſo his Funeral Certificate, taken by Richard Jury and Samuel Kirke, deputies appointed for that purpoſe, in the Heralds College, M. XI. 110

[6] At the Eaſt end of the North aile of Morley church ſtands a very fair monument of alabaſter, with the portraitures of Jacinth Sacheverell, eſq. and Elizabeth his wife lying thereon; and this epitaph:

"D. O. M. P. S.

Hic jacent corpora, non item ſpes, JACINTHI SACHEVERELL, de Morley, in com. Derb. armigeri; et ELIZABETHÆ, tam in morte, quàm in vitâ ſociæ: quam quidem ELIZABETHAM, RICHARDI HARPUR, de Litle-over in eodem comitatu militis filiam, ille uxorem ſibi ducens, ſimul et felicitatem, amoris mutui tam pignoris quàm fructus, ex eâ ſuſcepit filios tres, HENRICUM, RADULPHUM, et RICARDUM, filiam unicam DOROTHEAM. Ipſe dierum, divitiarum, ac famæ ſatur, annos numerans LXXIX, fatis cedens, huc receſſit xxii° Januarii, 1656. Poſtea vitæ impatiens, unà et viduitatis, ſecundum morte conjugium expetiit, ſimul obtinuitque Martii xii° prox. ſequente."—He died ſeiſed of lands in Ratby and in Hopwell; Cole's Eſcheats, vol. I. (Harl. MSS. 756.) ex Libro Petitionum, 8, fol. 25; and ſee Harl. MSS. 5809. p. 70.

[7] He died ſeiſed of a moiety of the manor of Hambleton, and of lands at Ratby and Great Wigſton. Inq. 24 March, 4 Car. I.

[8] It appears by the Regiſter of Kirkby Muxloe, that Mr. Ferdinand Sacheverell, of Old Hays, married Mrs. Suſannah Feryman, at Kirby Muxloe, Oct. 2, 1656.

[9] He died May 13, 1715, æt. 83; and was buried at Sutton; where the following epitaph is placed to his memory:

"H. S.
GEORGIUS SACHEVERELL, armiger, de Novâ Aulâ in agro Warwicenſi,
VAL. SACHEVERELL, armigeri, de Morley in agro Derbienſi, filius natu maximus, ex ANNA uxore, GEO. DEVEREUX, militis, filiâ;
qui,
eximiis ingenii dotibus inſtructus,
collegio Orielienſi apud Oxonienſes, deindè Hoſpitio Graienſi, inſtitutus, proſapiam, animum, ſodalitia,
politioribus literis,
urbanitate perhumanâ,
ſeveriori diſciplinâ,
ornavit, auxit, cohoneſtavit.
Graſſante rabie civili,
otio haud ignobili diliteſcere voluit,
Muſaſque potiùs quàm caſtra ſequi;
in quibus excolendis ita diligentèr ſeſe exercuit, ut generis & fortunæ ſuæ dignitatem

multiplici

John Sacheverell, rector of Eaſt Stoke and Langton Matravers in Dorſetſhire, and ſome time miniſter of Stoke under Hamden in Somerſetſhire, a man of great reputation, is ſtated to have been a deſcendant from this antient family. But he was the firſt of his family who wrote the name Sacheverell; his grandfather being a Cheverell of Eaſt Stoke, deſcended from anceſtors ſo called for at leaſt ſix preceding generations[1].

Hugh Cheverel, of Eaſt Stoke.=Anne, dau. of ..... Deering.
1. John Cheverel, of Buckland, co. Dorſet.=Anne Jeſſop, of Whitcomb, co. Dorſet.
2. Chriſtopher Cheverel, died ſ. p.=Anne Titton.
John Sacheverell, rector of Eaſt Stoke, 1615—1651.=Deborah Dale.
3. Robert Cheverel, of Bacomb, co. Somerſet.=...... Guppic.
Chriſtopher Sacheverell.=........ Williams.
1. John Sacheverell, rector of Brimpton.=.... dau. of John Smith, firſt wife.
2. Theophilus.
3. Timothy.
4. Anne.
5. Philologus.
.......=Boreman, of the Iſle of Wight.
Joſhua Sacheverell, rector of St. Peter's, Malborough.=........ living 1711.
Henry Sacheverell, D. D. born 1672; married in 1716 Mary widow of George Sacheverell, of Callow, eſq.; and died 1724.
Two other ſons, and two daughters.

John Sacheverell obtained the rectory of Eaſt Stoke in 1615; Langton Matravers in 1644; and died April 25, 1651. He had four ſons; three of whom, John, Timothy, and Philologus, were bred miniſters at Oxford; though it does not appear that either of them ever took an academical degree; and it is remarkable that all the three were ſilenced on Bartholomew-day 1662.

Mr. John Sacheverell, whoſe memory is precious in the Weſt of England, was educated at St. John's college, Oxford; and was preſented by the biſhop of Wincheſter to the rectory of Rimpton in Somerſetſhire, which he quitted before the Reſtoration of Charles II. and afterwards obtained the chapelry of Wincanton in the ſame county. He had there but £30. per annum certain allowance, with a promiſe of £30. more from London; of which augmentation he received only one half year. His pains in this place were very great; he had conſiderable ſucceſs in his miniſtry; and his converſation was unblameable and exemplary. He was three times married. By his firſt wife (who was the daughter of John Smith, one of the Regicides) he had only one child, Joſhua; of whom hereafter. By the ſecond, who was daughter of William Harvey, of Langton in Purbeck, he had two other ſons, Benjamin[2] and Samuel (educated under Dr. Olliffe, rector of Dunton, Berks; and three years a ſtudent in Pembroke college, under Dr. Hall); and one daughter. The third wife (who ſurvived him, and by whom he had no child) was daughter to counſellor Huſſey of Shafteſbury, and widow of Mr. Henry Derby, an attorney. She brought him a copyhold eſtate of £60. a year at Stalbridge; which he returned to her two daughters by the former huſband, leaving his library to his ſon Joſhua, and 12*d*. only to each of his other children. He conſtantly roſe early, and ſpent the morning in his ſtudy, and the afternoon in viſiting his flock, and diſcourſing with them about religious matters, till the Saturday, which was entirely ſpent in preparing for the Sabbath. That day was uſually thus employed: he began his public worſhip with a ſhort prayer in the morning; then read a pſalm and a chapter, and briefly expounded them; and, after ſinging a pſalm, he prayed and preached for about an hour and a quarter. In the afternoon he began at one, himſelf repeating his morning ſermon, and examined young people as to what they had remembered; then prayed and preached for about an hour and a half; and afterwards the repetition of the evening ſermon, and examination of young ones about it, concluded the public ſervice. On the day of king Charles the Second's coronation he preached a ſermon upon 1 Sam. xii. 24, 25. But if ye do wickedly, ye ſhall be conſumed, both you and your king. The obſervation which he chiefly inſiſted on was this: That wicked men continuing in their wicked actions are the greateſt traitors to the king and ſtate wherein they live. Several went out of the church in the midſt of the ſermon; and the rabble got together, and in the market-houſe impanneled a jury from among themſelves, repreſented a formal trial of the preacher, and afterwards drew him in effigy, with a book in his hand, which they called his catechiſm, upon an hurdle, through the town, to the top of an hill, where a great bonfire was prepared. The effigy was hanged upon a pole, in order to be burnt; but the wind driving the flames away, the effigy remained untouched, and was ſhot at by ſeveral with great fury; and at length fell into the flames, where it was conſumed. It was the obſervation of many in thoſe parts, that ſeveral who were moſt active in this frantic diverſion, accompanied with much profaneneſs and debauchery, had ſome remarkable calamity that befel them ſoon after, and ſome of them died very miſerably; an account whereof was then publiſhed in one of the books of prodigies. A little after he was indicted at the aſſizes, for continuing the exerciſe of his miniſtry without reading the Common Prayer. When he was allowed to ſpeak for himſelf, he declared, that, if he had been required by authority to read the Common Prayer, he would either have done it, or immediately have quitted the living. He behaved himſelf ſo well, that the judge expreſſed himſelf to this effect to thoſe who were about him: "Have you no other man then in your county to ſingle out for a pattern of your ſeverity?" Upon hearing all matters, the jury brought him in not guilty; and he was acquitted. After being ſilenced by the Bartholomew Act, he retired to Stalbridge, where he had an eſtate in right of his wife. Being afterwards taken at a meeting in Shafteſbury, Mr. Hallet, Mr. Ince, and ſome other miniſters, he and they were ſent together to Dorcheſter gaol, where he remained three years. In this impriſonment he and the reſt of them took it by turns to preach out of a window to a conſiderable number of people that ſtood to hear on the other ſide of the river. In this confinement he contracted ſuch an indiſpoſition, that of a very chearful active perſon, he become very melancholy, and ſoon after ended his days. He died in his chair, ſpeaking to thoſe about him with great vehemence and affection of the great work of redemption. He wrote in the title-page of all his books, "To me to live is Chriſt, to die is gain;" which was alſo en-multiplici ſcientiarum omnium notitiâ inſigniret.

---

Geminâ felix conjuge;
alterâ LUCIA DANET; alterâ MARIA WILSON,
quam reliquit viduam:
ſed nullâ ex utrâque prole ſuperſtite.
Societatis Suttonienſis æquiſſimus, paritèr ac juſtiſſimus, juſtitiarius;

ubi, per longum provecti ævi ſpatium, $\left.\begin{array}{l}\text{Pietatis}\\ \text{Conſtantiæ}\\ \text{Benignitatis}\\ \text{Munificentiæ}\end{array}\right\}$ erga $\left\{\begin{array}{l}\text{Deum,}\\ \text{eccleſiam,}\\ \text{amicos,}\\ \text{pauperes,}\end{array}\right.$
illuſtre emicuit exemplum.
Obiit Maii 18, anno $\left\{\begin{array}{l}\text{Salutis humanæ 1715,}\\ \text{ætatis ſuæ 83."}\end{array}\right.$

—By his laſt will, Newhall, with an undivided moiety of the lordſhip of Callow, were deviſed to his great nephew Charles-Chadwick Sacheverell, eſq. of Maveſyn Ridware, in Staffordſhire; who was born Feb. 1, 1705; and educated at Chriſt College in Cambridge. On the death of his great uncle he aſſumed the name and arms of Sacheverell only; went to reſide at Newhall in 1729; and in 1742 was married to Anna-Maria *, eldeſt daughter and co-heir of William Brearley, gent. of Handſworth, in the county of Stafford. In 1756 he ſucceeded his father at Maveſyn Ridware, and was in the commiſſion of peace for the county of Stafford; but died without iſſue, July 31, 1779, at Newhall, and was buried in the vault at the Weſt end of the South aile in Sutton church. Shaw's Staffordſhire, vol. I. p. 184.

[1] See Hutchins's Dorſetſhire, ſecond edition, vol. I. p. 251.

[2] A letter from this Benjamin to his nephew was publiſhed in 1711, under the title of "Sacheverell againſt Sacheverell;" in which he coarſely tells him, "The wife of your brother Thomas borrowed ſix pounds of your uncle Samuel, to defray the charges of your brother Thomas's tranſportation."

* She died at Handſworth, ... January, 1795, aged ..., and was there buried; having bequeathed her large property (ſaid to be not leſs than £100,000.) to the late ſir Robert Lawley, bart. though it does not appear that he was any way connected with her in blood. Shaw, ubi ſupra.

graven upon his tomb-ſtone. Mr. Bangor, who was a fellow ſufferer with him, preached his funeral ſermon, from Rom. viii. 22, 23.

The patron of Tarrant Hinton rectory had ſo extraordinary a reſpect for Mr. Timothy Sacheverell, that, finding he could not conform, he freely told him that, if he thought it lawful to hold this parſonage, and act by proxy, in order to receive the profits, he ſhould readily have it; which however he refuſed. He then told him, none ſhould be preſented to the living but one that he recommended. He accordingly recommended Mr. Joſeph Tindal (a worthy man, brother-in-law to biſhop Fowler), who enjoyed it to his dying day. Between the Reſtoration and Bartholomew-day, Mr. Sacheverell was put down firſt in a liſt that contained the names of ſeveral who were to be ſent to priſon; but ſir Gerard Napier, being in the chair at the ſeſſions, and having a reſpect for him, refuſed to ſet his hand to the commitment; and ſo they all eſcaped for that time. Soon after Bartholomew day, he was cited to the ſpiritual court at Blandford, whither many people came, in hope of ſomething like a public diſputation; at leaſt, expecting to hear him very ſeverely reprimanded: but the chancellor told him, "that he did not ſend for him to diſpute with him, knowing him to be a perſon of great worth, temper, and learning; but only deſired him to weigh all matters calmly and without prejudice, and then left him to do as God ſhould direct him." Whereupon, as ſoon as he had in form admoniſhed him, he was diſmiſſed. Not long after, ſeveral troopers of the militia ruſhed ſuddenly into his houſe one morning whilſt he was at prayer with his family. One of them came and held his piſtol at his back, commanding him, in the king's name, immediately to ſtand up; but he ſtill continued praying. However, he ſoon concluded; and with great preſence of mind aſked the trooper, "how he durſt thus pretend in the king's name to interrupt him, while he and his family were preſenting their petitions to the King of kings?" He continued at Tarrant Hinton after his ejectment, till the five-mile act came out, preaching to a ſelect number. He afterwards removed to Winterburn, where he opened his houſe to all comers, and preached to them after the public worſhip was over. This he continued till the indulgence in 1672. He was then going to fit up an out-houſe for a place of worſhip; but there happened at that time a fire in his houſe, which conſumed all his books, papers, manuſcripts, and ſermon-notes, and almoſt every thing belonging to him. There were many things that gave ground of ſuſpicion that this fire was kindled by ſome ill-deſigning perſons, to prevent the opening of a public meeting-houſe in the town. This occaſioned his removal with his family to Enford in Wiltſhire; and thence to the Devizes, where his wife kept a boarding-ſchool for young ladies, by which they lived very comfortably; and here he preached gratis as long as he lived. It was often a requeſt to God in his prayer, "That thoſe might be ſuffered to preach who looked upon their work to be ſufficient wages." Mr. Johnſon, the public miniſter there at his firſt coming, preached againſt him; though he was generally his hearer, and preached only out of church-hours. One of his texts was, 1 Kings xviii. 21, If the Lord be God, follow him. One of Mr. Sacheverell's hearers preſſed him to anſwer Mr. Johnſon publicly; but he replied, "he knew better things:" which being ſo reported, ſo ſoftened Mr. Johnſon's temper in a little time, that he conceived a great reſpect for him, and carried it very civilly to him ever. His principles were very moderate. The renouncing the Covenant was the main thing he ſtuck at in conformity. He had great comfort in his laſt ſickneſs; rejoicing to think he was going to the Marriage-ſupper of the Lamb. He died in 1680.

Mr. Philologus Sacheverell, who was ſupported at Oxford by his half-brother, obtained the vicarage of Eaſtwood in Eſſex; where he formed a very intimate friendſhip with the Rev. William Clopton, M. A. rector of Rettenden in that county. They were both ill at the ſame time; but Mr. Clopton died firſt. Mr. Sacheverell, overhearing ſome one in his room talking of it, ſaid, "Then there is a good man gone to Heaven;" and, laying himſelf down, died immediately; and they were both buried in the ſame grave.

Joſhua Sacheverell, ſon of the rector of Wincanton, was educated firſt at King's College, and afterwards at Catharine Hall, Cambridge; at which laſt place he took the degree of B. A. 1667. He was a very worthy clergyman, and obtained the rectory of St. Peter's at Marlborough[1]; where he had five children; Henry, to whoſe name the violence of party has given more than a temporary celebrity, and of whom hereafter; two other ſons[2]; and two daughters. All poſſible care was taken by him in their education, as far as his circumſtances, which were very ſcanty[3], would permit. He put one of them apprentice to a mercer in London, and another clerk to an attorney at Beconsfield[4]; not then deſigning his ſon Henry for a ſcholar, fearing his inability of going through the charge of an academical ſtudy; but, there being ſomething which remarkably diſtinguiſhed both the parts and hopes of the Doctor from his brothers, his father was prevailed upon, by the entreaty and pecuniary aſſiſtance of his friends, to let him ſtay at ſchool ſo long as to be qualified for the Univerſity; which was accordingly done. His principal benefactor in this good work was Mr. Edward Herſt, an apothecary of Marlborough, who was his godfather, and adopted him as his ſon; and whoſe widow put him afterwards to Magdalen college, Oxford, where he became demy in 1687, at the age of 15. Young Sacheverell ſoon diſtinguiſhed himſelf by a regular obſervation of the duties of the houſe, by his compoſitions, good manners, and genteel behaviour; qualifications which recommended him to the particular notice of Dr. Hough, afterwards biſhop of Litchfield, who, when preſident of that college, had a very great eſteem for him, and greatly aſſiſted his advancement in life. As a public tutor, he had afterwards the care of the education of moſt of the young gentlemen of quality and fortune that were admitted of the college; and in that ſtation trained many perſons eminent for their learning and abilities; and, amongſt others, Mr. Holdiſworth, whoſe "Muſcipula" and "Diſſertation on Virgil" have been ſo deſervedly eſteemed. He was contemporary and chamber-fellow with Mr. Addiſon, and one of his chief intimates. Mr. Addiſon's "Account of the greateſt Engliſh Poets," dated April 4, 1694, in a Farewell Poem to the Muſes on his intending to enter into holy orders, was inſcribed "to Mr. Henry Sacheverell," his then deareſt friend and colleague. Much has been ſaid by Sacheverell's enemies of ingratitude to his relations, and of turbulent behaviour at Oxford; but theſe appear to have been groundleſs calumnies, circulated only by the ſpirit of party[5]. In younger life he wrote ſome excellent Latin poems. Beſides ſeveral in the ſecond and third volumes of the "Muſæ Anglicanæ," aſcribed to his pupils, there is a good one of ſome length in the ſecond volume, under his own name, tranſcribed from the Oxford collection, on queen Mary's death, 1695; and a tranſlation of his from Virgil's Georgics is in the third volume of Miſcellany Poems, 1693. He took the degree of M. A. May 16, 1696; B. D. Feb. 4, 1707; D. D. July 1, 1708. His firſt preferment was Cannock, or Cank, in the county of Stafford. He was appointed preacher of St. Saviour's, Southwark, in 1705; and, while in that ſtation, printed "The Nature, Obligation, and Meaſures of Conſcience, delivered in a Sermon preached at Leiceſter, at the Aſſizes held there, July 25, 1706, from Acts xxiii. 1. By Henry Sacheverell, M. A. Fellow of Magdalen College. Publiſhed at the Requeſt of the Gentlemen of the Grand Jury," 4to. He printed alſo a famous ſermon, preached at the aſſizes at Derby [1], Aug. 13, 1709, from 1 Tim. v. 2. intituled, "The Communication of Sin;" in which the Society for Reformation of Manners is roughly treated; and another, preached at St. Paul's, November 5, the ſame year, before the lord-mayor and corporation of London, from 2 Corinth. xi. 26. intituled, "The Perils of falſe Brethren both in Church and State" (dedicated to ſir Samuel Garrard, bart. lord-mayor); in which he was ſuppoſed to point at lord Godolphin [2]; and to this circumſtance, as much as to the doctrines contained in his ſermons, he was indebted for his proſecution, and eventually for his preferment. Being impeached by the Houſe of Commons, his trial began Feb. 27, 1709-10; and continued until the 23d of March; when he was ſentenced to a ſuſpenſion from preaching for three years, and his two ſermons ordered to be burnt. "The Miniſters," ſays Swift, "in this impeachment, proceeded as much as poſſible againſt common law; which the long-robe part of the managers knew was, in an hundred inſtances, directly contrary to all their poſitions, and were ſufficiently warned of it beforehand [3]." This ridiculous proſecution, however, which overthrew the Miniſtry, and laid the foundation of his fortune, is a ſtriking example of the folly and madneſs of party, which could exalt an obſcure individual, poſſeſſed of but moderate talents, to a height of popularity that the preſent times behold with wonder and aſtoniſhment. To ſir Simon Harcourt, who was counſel for him, he preſented a ſilver baſon gilt, with an elegant inſcription, written probably by his friend Dr. Atterbury [4]. In the beginning of May 1710, Dr. Sacheverell entered upon a kind of triumphal progreſs through ſeveral of the midland counties; during which period he was magnificently entertained at Oxford by the Univerſity, and received in the other great towns he paſſed through with loud acclamations and joyful congratulations upon his deliverance. At Worceſter particularly he made a magnificent entry on the 14th of July [5]; and during this journey was collated to a living in Wales, near Shrewſbury. His ſituation in 1711 is thus deſcribed by Dr. Swift, in a letter to Stella, Aug. 24: "And Sacheverell will be the new biſhop? He would be glad of an addition of £200. a year to what he has; and that is more than they will grant him for ought I ſee. He hates the new Miniſtry intolerably; and they hate him, and pretend to deſpiſe him too. They will not allow him to have been the occaſion of the late change; at leaſt ſome of them will not: but my Lord Keeper owned it to me the other day." Again, Jan. 22, 1711-12, "Did I tell you that Sacheverell has deſired mightily to come and ſee me; but I have put it off: he has heard that I have ſpoken to the ſecretary in behalf of a brother whom he maintains, and who deſires an employment. T'other day, at the Court of Requeſts, Dr. Yalden ſaluted me by name; Sacheverell, who was juſt by, came up to me, and made many acknowledgements and compliments. Laſt night, I deſired Lord Treaſurer to do ſomething for that brother of Sacheverell's: he ſaid, he never knew he had a brother; but thanked me for telling him, and immediately put his name in his table-book. I will let Sacheverell know this, that he may take his meaſures accordingly: but he ſhall be none of my acquaintance." In 1713, his reputation was ſo high, that he was enabled to ſell his firſt ſermon, preached at St. Saviour's on Palm Sunday after his ſentence expired, intituled, "The Chriſtian Triumph; or the Duty of praying for our Enemies," from Luke xxiii. 34. for a conſiderable ſum. Swift, in his Journal to Stella, April 2, 1713, ſays, "I did not get to Lord Treaſurer's till ſix; where I found Dr. Sacheverell, who told us that the bookſeller had given him £100. for his ſermon, preached laſt Sunday; and intended to print 30,000. I believe he will be confoundedly bit, and will hardly ſell above half." It appears, however, that 40,000 copies of it were ſold. In three weeks after his ſuſpenſion, the valuable rectory of St. Andrew's, Holborn, was given him by the queen, April 13, 1713; and, on the 29th of May, the Commons, to ſhew their opinion of him, deſired him to preach before them at St. Margaret's; which he did, from 1 Peter ii. 16; and publiſhed it, under the title of "Falſe Notions of Liberty, Religion, and Government, deſtructive of both." On the Sunday before the coronation of king George I. he preached a ſermon at Sutton near Birmingham, for which he is ſeverely cenſured in Tindal's Continuation of Rapin. A conſiderable eſtate at Callow in Derbyſhire was left him in 1715 by his kinſman George Sacheverell, eſq. whoſe widow the Doctor married in June 1716. In 1715-16, he prefixed a dedication to "Fifteen Diſcourſes, occaſionally

---

[1] Biſſet ſtyles him a Dean; and ſays that, for his adherence to the Eſtabliſhed Church, he was diſinherited by his father, who "ſettled his paternal eſtate on a more ſanctified ſon." But this is flatly contradicted in a letter to Dr. Sacheverell from his uncle Benjamin, who ſays that the grandfather never had any paternal eſtate.

[2] The letter to Dr. Sacheverell from his uncle in 1711 mentions his brother Thomas and ſiſter Suſanna.

[3] His widow was afterwards, on the recommendation of Bp. Burnet, admitted on the foundation at Saliſbury eſtabliſhed by Bp. Ward for clergymen's widows, each being allowed for their maintenance £30. a year.

[4] The attorney's clerkſhip being expired, he lived extravagantly, went abroad, and died beyond ſea. His other brother, being likewiſe out of his time, died before his friends could accompliſh ſuch a ſettlement in the world for him as was intended. One of his ſiſters died young; and the other in 1711 was living very reputably with a relation in the city of Worceſter.

[5] Amongſt other things, it was given out, that "the name of Sacheverell did not properly belong, but was aſſumed by him, with a deſign to inſinuate himſelf into the favour of George Sacheverell, eſq. of Derby, not being in the leaſt akin to him; that his pride and arrogance were ſo great, that he would not in the leaſt aſſiſt his mother, nor hardly own her, ſhe being then in an almſhouſe; and that he denied an own brother then in London, on account of his poverty, and being of ſome mean trade." Such ridiculous accuſations would not here be mentioned, but with a view to furniſh the curious reader, or at leaſt ſome ſome future biographer, with ample materials for refuting thoſe calumnious reports, by referring to a tract where the ſubject is enlarged on with the utmoſt pleaſantry. See "A Vindication of the Rev. Dr. Sacheverell, from the falſe, malicious, and ſcandalous Aſperſions caſt upon him in a late infamous Pamphlet, intituled, The Modern Fanatick, 1710;" re-printed in a complete edition of Dr. King's Works, 1776, vol. II. p. 179. The facts on which the Vindicator formed his arguments were evidently ſupplied by Dr. Sacheverell; to whom the whole pamphlet has by ſome been attributed.

---

[1] In a dedication of this Sermon to George Sacheverell, eſq. of Callow, then high ſheriff, he ſays, "As I am obliged by the relation I have the honour to bear to your family, may a double portion of divine favour reſt on you (Mr. High Sheriff)! whoſe commands I was very ready to execute in that office, ſince you thought neither the advancement of your years, ſo generouſly expended for the good of your Country, nor the great trouble attending this poſt, ſufficient to exempt you from ſhewing that ſteady loyalty and zeal to ſerve her Majeſty and the Government, for which you have been ſo remarkably diſtinguiſhed."

[2] "The famous Trial of Dr. Sacheverell aroſe from a fooliſh paſſionate pique of the earl of Godolphin, whom this Divine was ſuppoſed, in a ſermon, to have reflected on under the name of Volpone, as my lord Somers, a few months after, confeſſed to me; and at the ſame time that he had earneſtly and in vain endeavoured to diſſuade the earl from that attempt." Swift, vol. XV. p. 17.—The Dean, in another place, obſerves that the earl of Godolphin became a thorough convict by a perfect trifle; taking fire at a nick-name, delivered by Dr. Sacheverell, with great indiſcretion, from the pulpit, which he applied to himſelf."

[3] Vol. VIII. pp. 115. 186.

[4] "Viro honoratiſſimo, univerſi juris oraculo,
eccleſiæ & regni præſidio & ornamento,
Simoni Harcourt, equiti aurato,
Magnæ Britanniæ Sigilli Magni Cuſtodi, et ſereniſſimæ reginæ è ſecretioribus conſiliis;
ob cauſam meam, coram ſupremo ſenatu,
in aulâ Weſtmonaſterienſi, nervoſâ cum facundiâ, & ſubactâ legum ſcientiâ,
benignè & conſtanter defenſam;
ob priſcam eccleſiæ doctrinam,
inviolandam legum vim,
piam ſubditorum fidem,
et ſacroſancta legum jura, contra nefarios perduellium impetus feliciter vindicata;
votivum hoc Munuſculum
gratitudinis ergo
D. D. D.
Henricus Sacheverell, S. T. P. anno Salutis MDCCX."

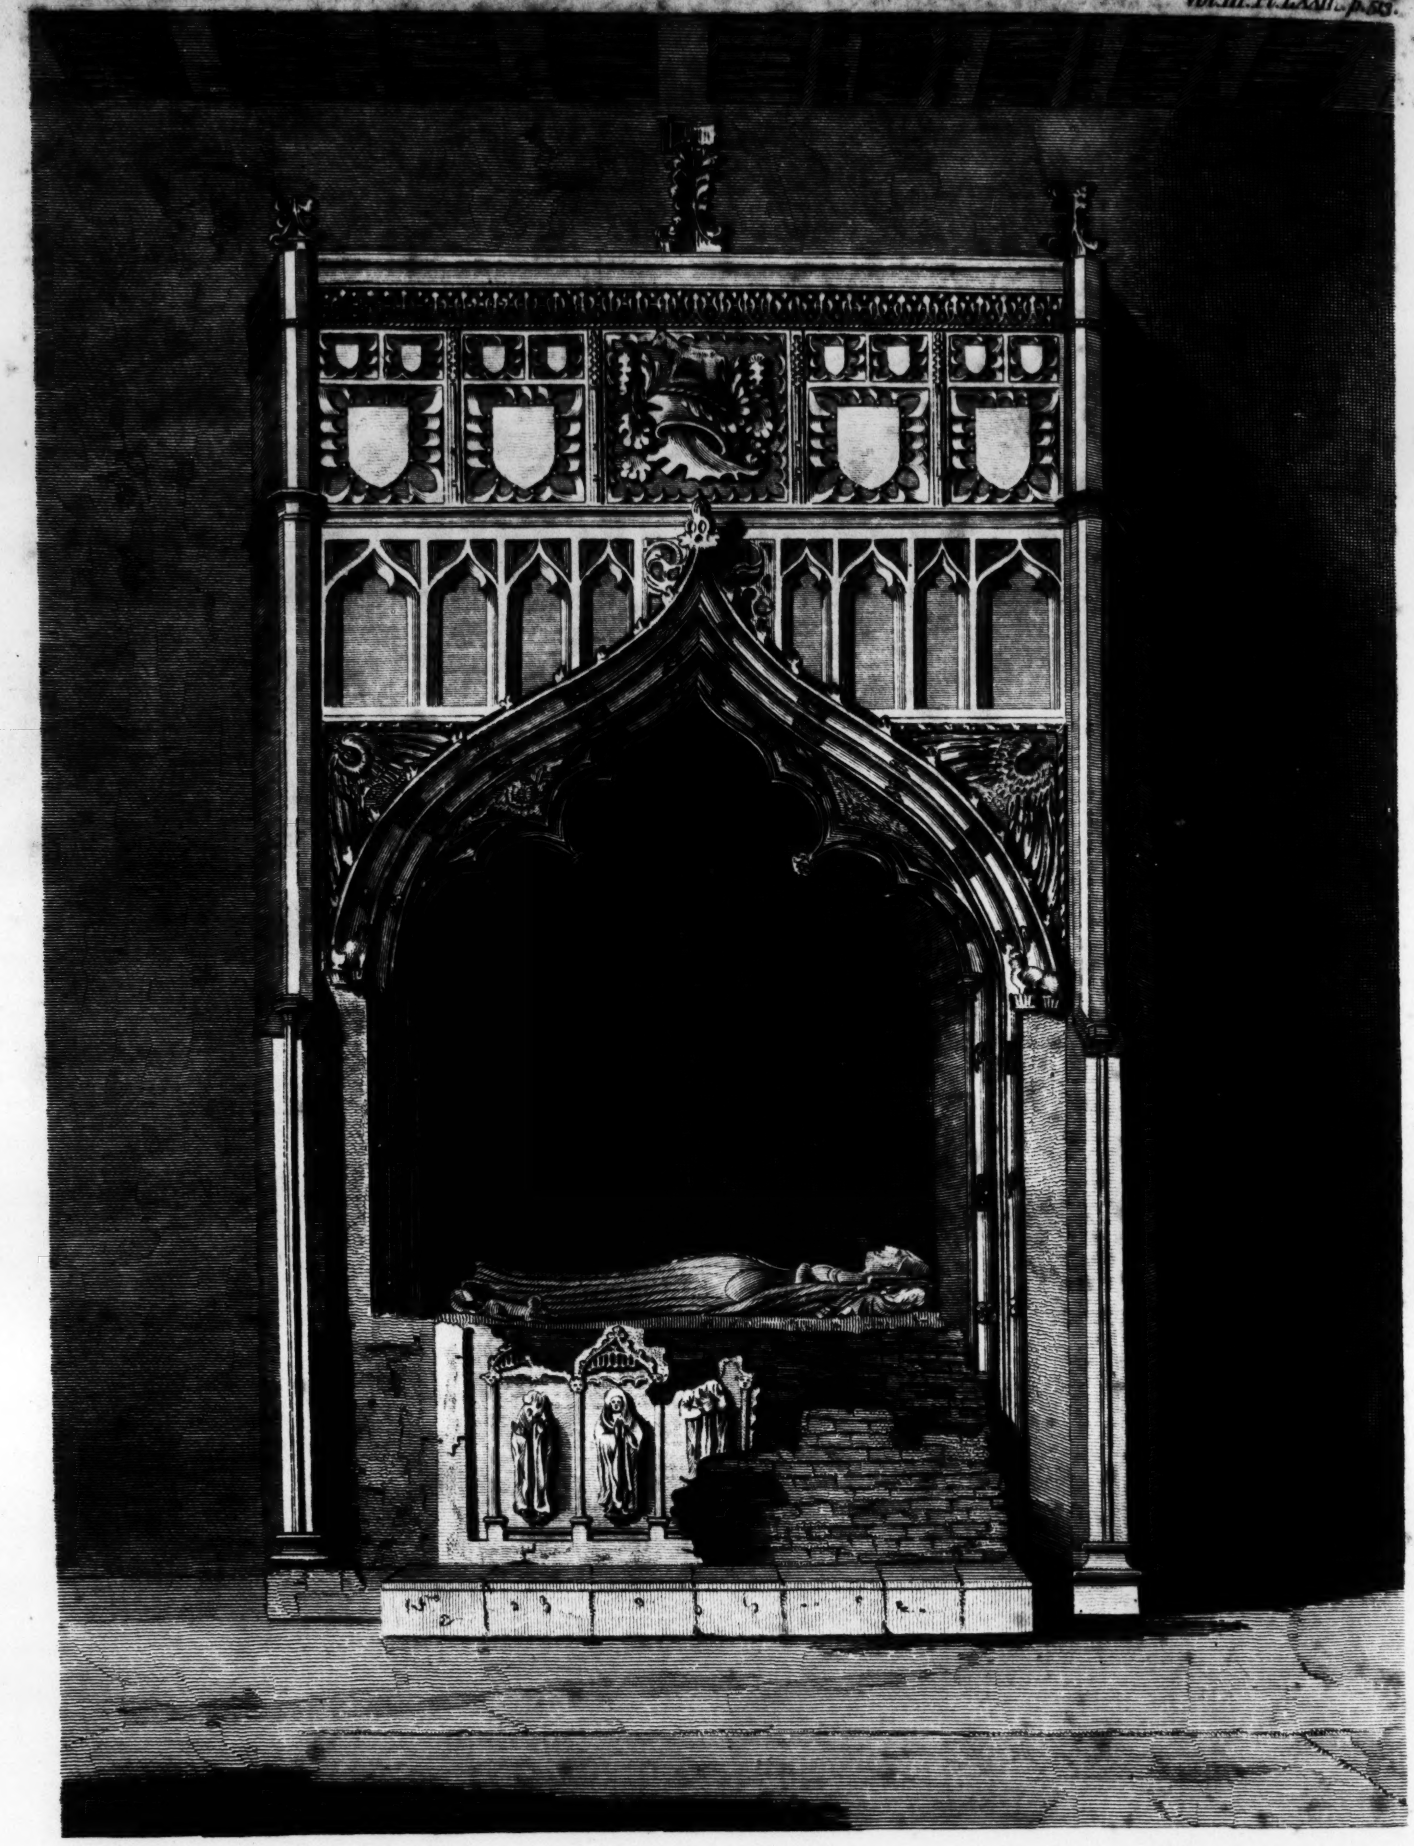
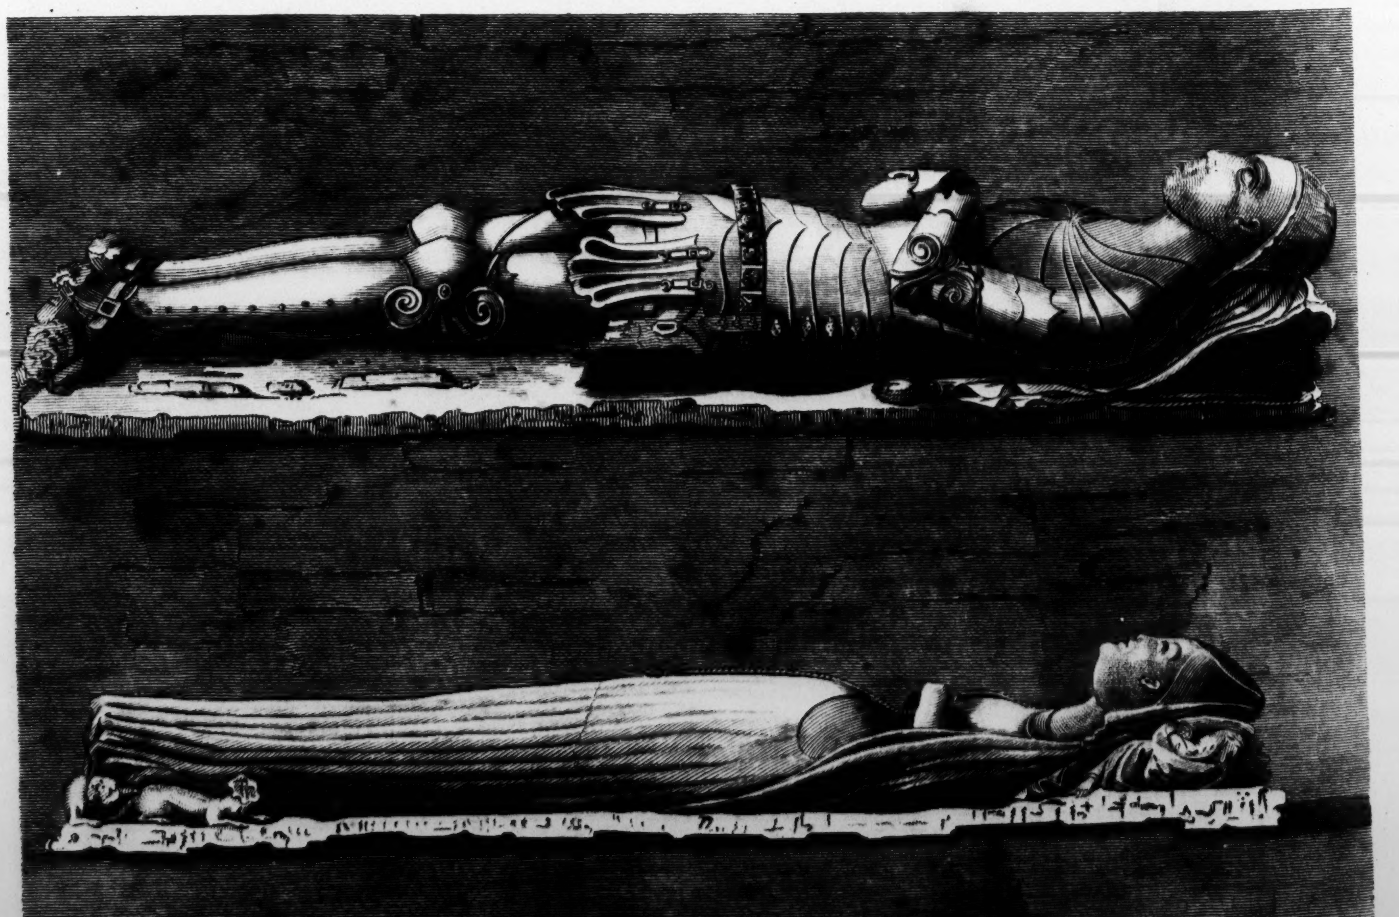
[5] This appears by a printed folio half-ſheet, intituled "The Worceſter Triumph; a true account of Dr. Sacheverell's Entrance and Reception in that City." It appears alſo that the triumph would have been far more extenſively celebrated, had not a circular letter been previouſly diſperſed by Bp. Lloyd to the clergy and churchwardens throughout the dioceſe.

delivered



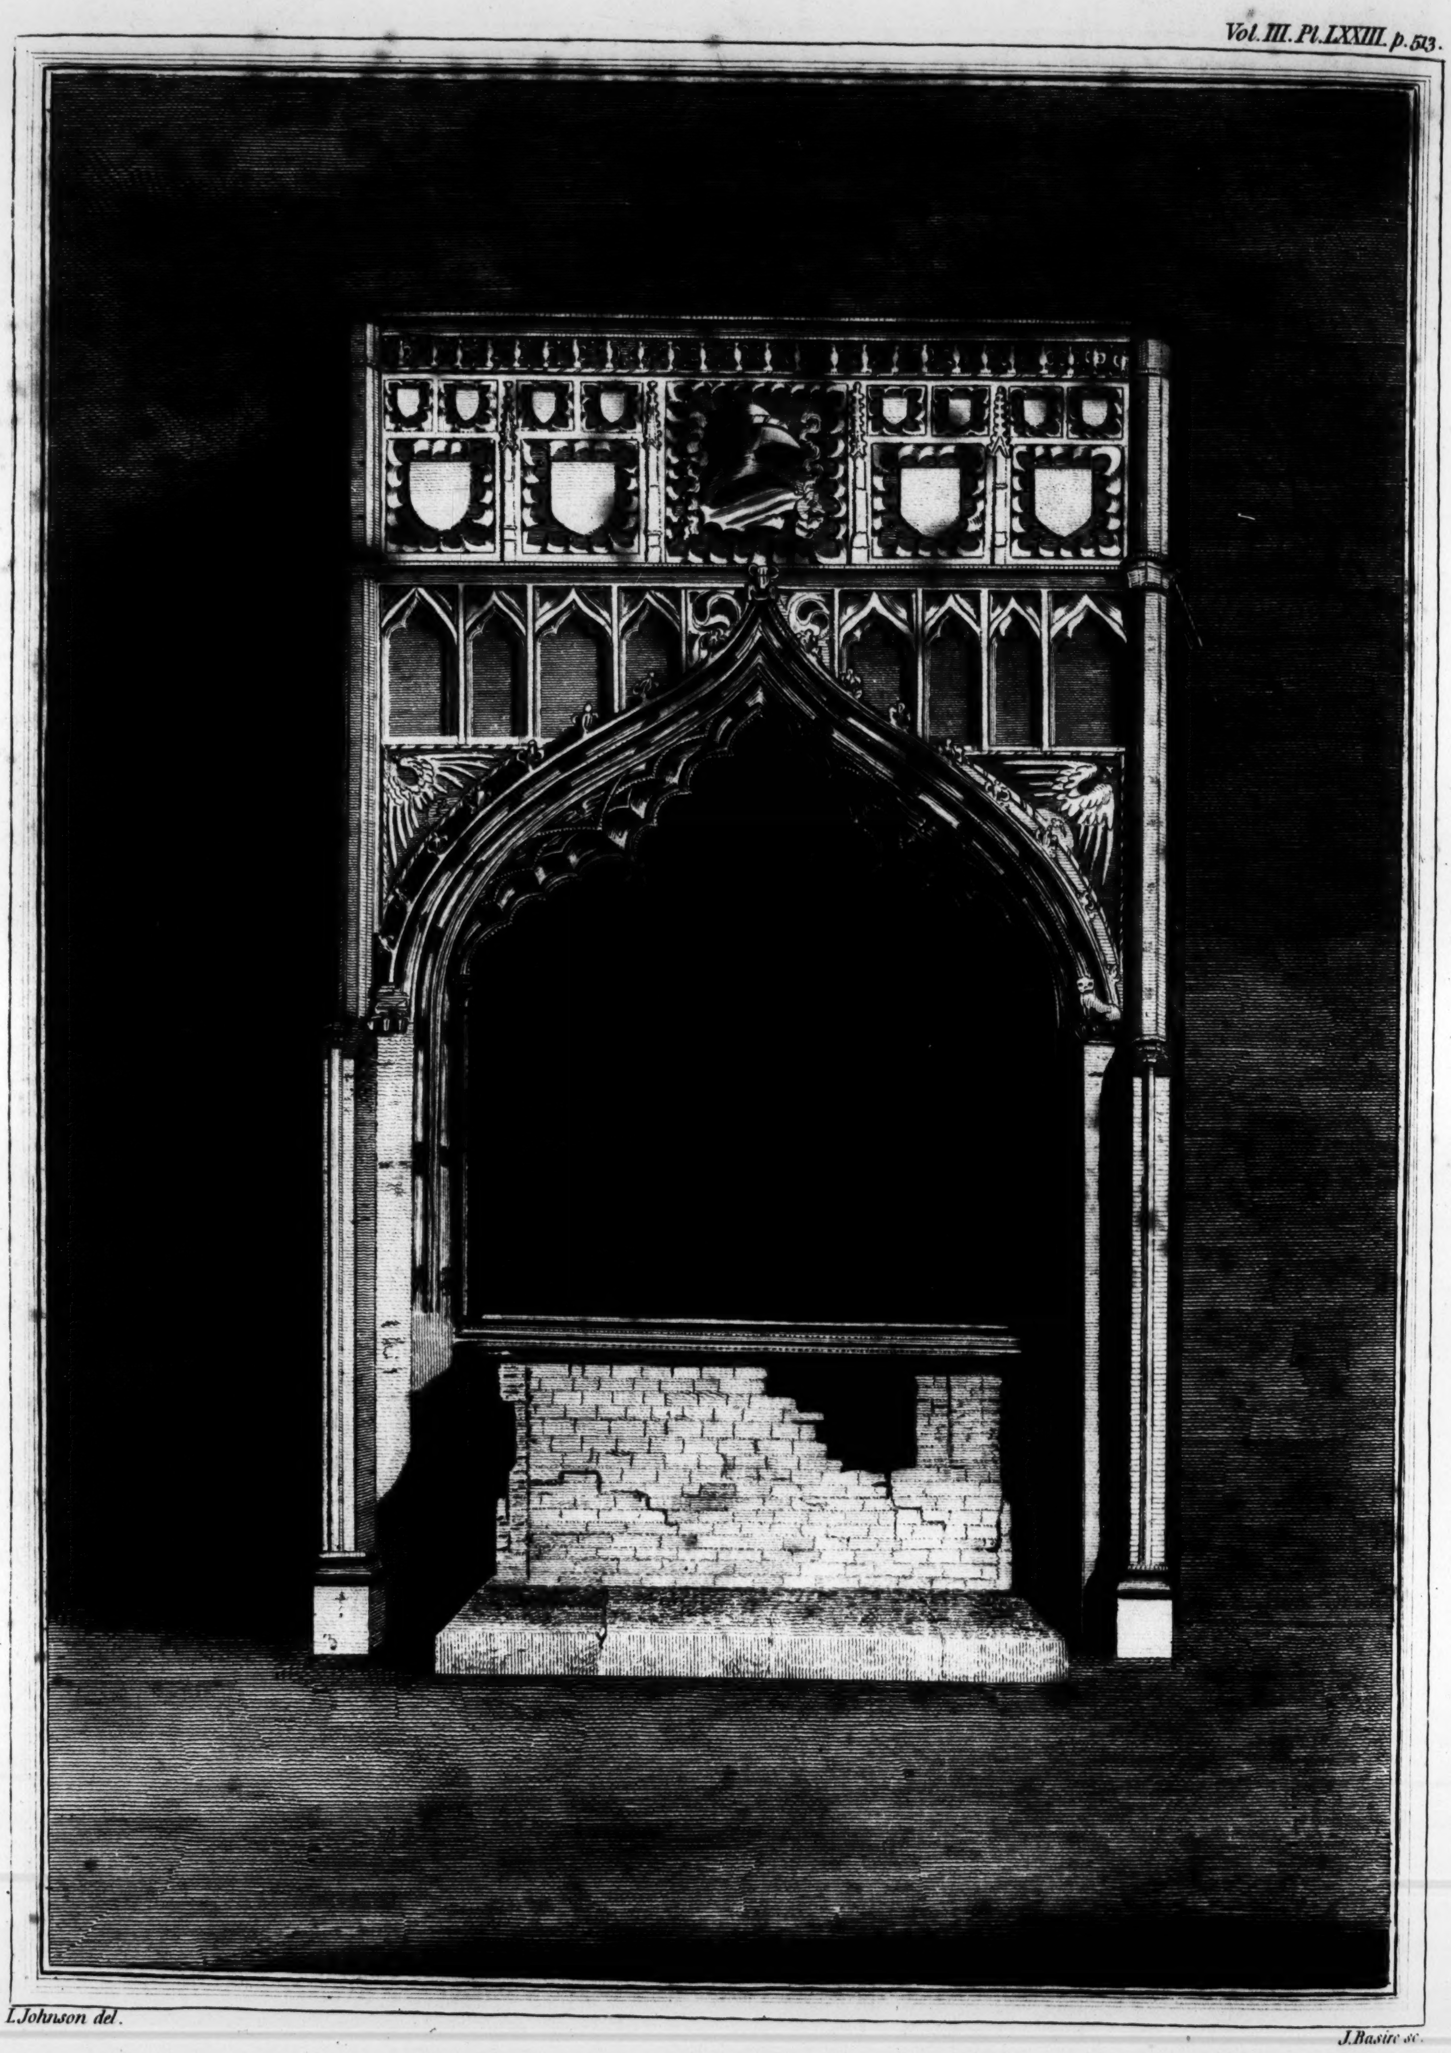
Monument and Figures on the S. side of Letheringham Church.



L. Johnson del.

J. Basire sc.

Vol. III. Pl. LXXIII. p. 513.



I. Johnson del.

J. Basire sc.

Monument on the N. side of Letheringham Church.

delivered before the Univerſity of Oxford, by W. Adams, M. A. late Student of Chriſt Church, and rector of Staunton upon Wye, in Oxfordſhire;" after which, we hear little of him, except by quarrels with his pariſhioners. On Sunday Jan. 1718-19, he publicly turned the celebrated Mr. Whiſton (with whom he had had a controverſy in 1713-14) out of a ſeat in his church of St. Andrew; the particulars of which were ſtated in a pamphlet by Mr. Whiſton in 1719. He died, after a long indiſpoſition, June 5, 1724, at his houſe in Highgate; and was privately interred on the 11th in the vault of St. Andrew's church (whence his leaden coffin was a few years after ſtolen). By his laſt will, he bequeathed to Bp. Atterbury, then in exile, who was ſuppoſed to have penned for him the defence he made before the houſe of peers[1], the ſum of £500. By the epitaph tranſcribed below[2], which was written by Dr. Sacheverell, and reviſed by Biſhop Atterbury, it will appear that he forbad the placing of any inſcription on his own tomb; but in the burial-ground of St. George's, Bloomſbury, behind the Foundling Hoſpital, is the following inſcription for his widow:

"Here lies the body of
Mary, wife of Charles Chambers, gent.
widow of Henry Sacheverell, D. D. late rector of St. Andrew's, Holborn; whoſe firſt huſband was George Sacheverell, of New-hall, in the county of Warwick, eſq.
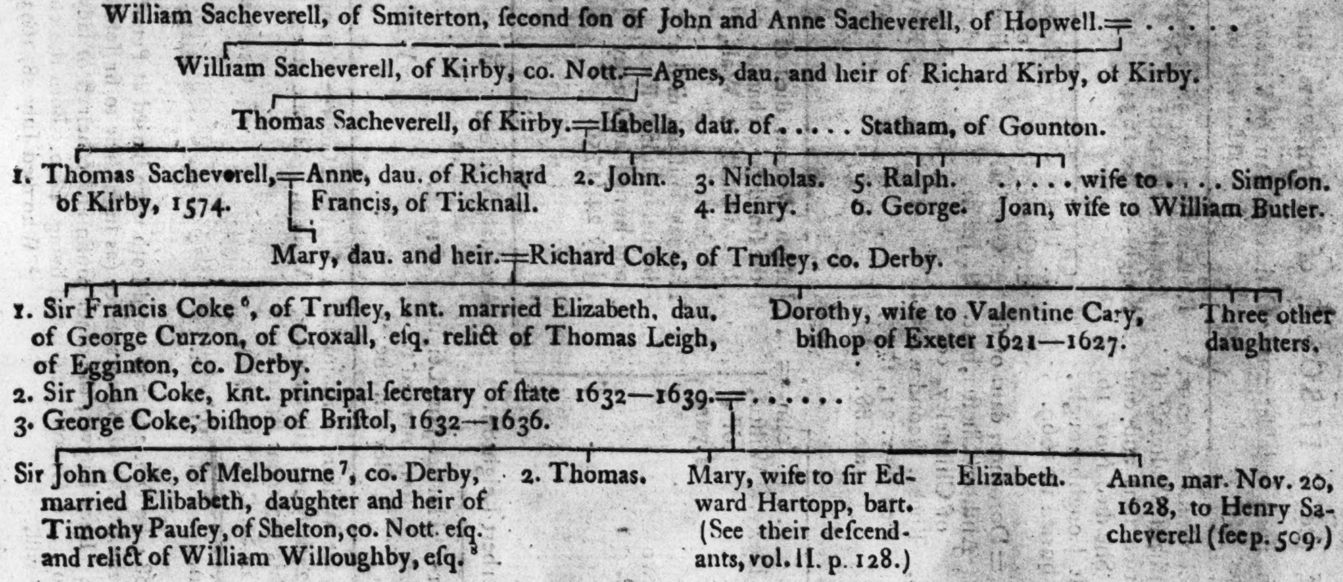
She died September the 6th, 1739,
aged 75 years.
And alſo the above
Charles Chambers.
He died 20 May, 1749,
aged 88 years."

The dutcheſs of Marlborough deſcribes Sacheverell as "an ignorant impudent incendiary; a man who was thoſe ſcorn even of the who made uſe of him as a tool[3]." And Biſhop Burnet ſays, "He was a bold inſolent man, with a very ſmall meaſure of religion, virtue, learning, or good ſenſe; but he reſolved to force himſelf into popularity and preferment, by the moſt petulant railings at Diſſenters and Low-church men, in ſeveral ſermons and libels, wrote without chaſteneſs of ſtyle, or liveling of expreſſion[4]."

There is a good portrait of him by T. Gibſon, engraved by M. Vander Gucht.

The ſermons publiſhed by him, beſides thoſe already mentioned, are, 1. "The Political Union. Prov. viii. 15. 1702." 2. "A Defence of her Majeſty's Title to the Crown, preached before the Univerſity of Oxford, June 10, 1702; 2 Chron. vi. 34, 35." 3. "The Nature and Miſchief of Prejudice and Partiality; an Aſſize Sermon; 1 Tim. v. 21. 1704." 4. "The Nature, Guilt, and Danger of preſumptuous Sins, preached at St. Mary's, Oxford, Sept. 14, 1707; Numb. xv. 30. 31." "A Sermon preached Jan. 31, 1714-15, by Henry Sacheverell, D. D. rector of St. Andrew's, Holborn, as it was taken in ſhort-hand by one of his pariſhioners: To which is added a Poſtſcript, containing Notes on another Sermon, printed on the 20th of the ſame month, 1715."

Pedigree of SACHEVERELL, of Smiterton and Ibwell, co. Nott[5].



William Sacheverell, of Smiterton, ſecond ſon of John and Anne Sacheverell, of Hopwell. = ...

William Sacheverell, of Kirby, co. Nott. = Agnes, dau. and heir of Richard Kirby, of Kirby.

Thomas Sacheverell, of Kirby. = Iſabella, dau. of . . . . . Statham, of Gounton.

1. Thomas Sacheverell, of Kirby, 1574. = Anne, dau. of Richard Francis, of Ticknall.
2. John.
3. Nicholas.
4. Henry.
5. Ralph.
6. George.
. . . . . wife to . . . . Simpſon.
Joan, wife to William Butler.

Mary, dau. and heir. = Richard Coke, of Truſley, co. Derby.

1. Sir Francis Coke[6], of Truſley, knt. married Elizabeth, dau. of George Curzon, of Croxall, eſq. relict of Thomas Leigh, of Egginton, co. Derby.
2. Sir John Coke, knt. principal ſecretary of ſtate 1632—1639. = ...
3. George Coke, biſhop of Briſtol, 1632—1636.
Dorothy, wife to Valentine Cary, biſhop of Exeter 1621—1627.
Three other daughters.

Sir John Coke, of Melbourne[7], co. Derby, married Elibabeth, daughter and heir of Timothy Pauſey, of Shelton, co. Nott. eſq. and relict of William Willoughby, eſq.[8]
2. Thomas.
Mary, wife to ſir Edward Hartopp, bart. (See their deſcendants, vol. II. p. 128.)
Elizabeth.
Anne, mar. Nov. 20, 1628, to Henry Sacheverell (ſee p. 509.)

---

[1] This ſpeech (printed in Bp. Atterbury's Epiſtolary Correſpondence, 1799, vol. IV. p. 258.) was thus originally addreſſed:
"To the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled.
"May it pleaſe your Lordſhips; it has been my hard fortune to be miſunderſtood, at a time when I endeavoured to expreſs myſelf with the utmoſt plainneſs; even the defence I made at your lordſhips' bar, in hopes of clearing the innocence of my heart, hath been grievouſly miſrepreſented. For which reaſon I have humbly preſumed to offer it in this manner to your lordſhips' peruſal. My lords, theſe are the very words I ſpoke to your lordſhips. I hope they are ſo plain and expreſs, as not to be capable of any miſconſtruction: and may I ſo find mercy at the hands of God, as they are in every reſpect entirely agreeable to my thoughts and principles! I am, my lords, your lordſhips' moſt obedient and moſt dutiful ſervant, Henry Sacheverell."
The ſpeech was tranſlated into Latin, and publiſhed, in 1710, "in uſum exterorum."

[2] "M. S.
THOMÆ COLLINS, S. T. B.
ſcholæ Magdalenenſis per quinquaginta fere annos archididaſcali:
ubi literarum adeo feliciter
rudimenta tradidit, incrementa excoluit, ut ſparſos ubique per academiam florentiſſimos in omnibus diſciplinis alumnos jactaret ſuos:
quippe qui ad efformandos Tyronum animos, moreſque,
apprimè peritus,
Atticos lepores et elegantias
Romanâ gravitate, et ſimplici dictionis puritate, ſubacto non ſine judicio temperare nôſſet:
in roſtris, tam theologicis, quam philoſophicis,
ita nervoſus et acutus,
ut dubium ſit, utrum conſummatiſſimus concionandi atque diſputandi artifex rerum pondere et doctrinâ, an eloquentiæ ſublimitate et illecebris, ſibique peculiari quâdam ſtyli venuſtate mentes auditorum facilius conciliaverit.
Qui politiſſimi licet ingenii acumine præſtans utpote innocuos uſque ſales ſermonibus miſcens Socraticis, critici tamen ſeveritatem æquioris manſuetudine Judicis leniit et caſtigavit, alienis erroribus potiùs indulgens quàm ſuis.
Unde factum, ut
plurima à ſe conſcripta, luce digniſſima, nimiâ, et in poſteros injurioſâ, modeſtiâ,
flammis devoverit;
bonis eruditiſque omnibus adeò charus, ut præpropero fato (octogenarius licet)
abripi videretur,
10° die Februarii, anno 1722-3.

Sepulchrale hoc Elogium
HENRICUS SACHEVERELL, S. T. P. ſcripſit, et ipſe fermè moribundus,
nec poſtea quidquam ſcripturus.
Iſtos nimirum honores dulciſſimo amico perſolutos voluit;
quibus in ſupremis tabulis interdixit ſibi."

[3] Account, &c. p. 247.

[4] Hiſtory, vol. III. p. 277.

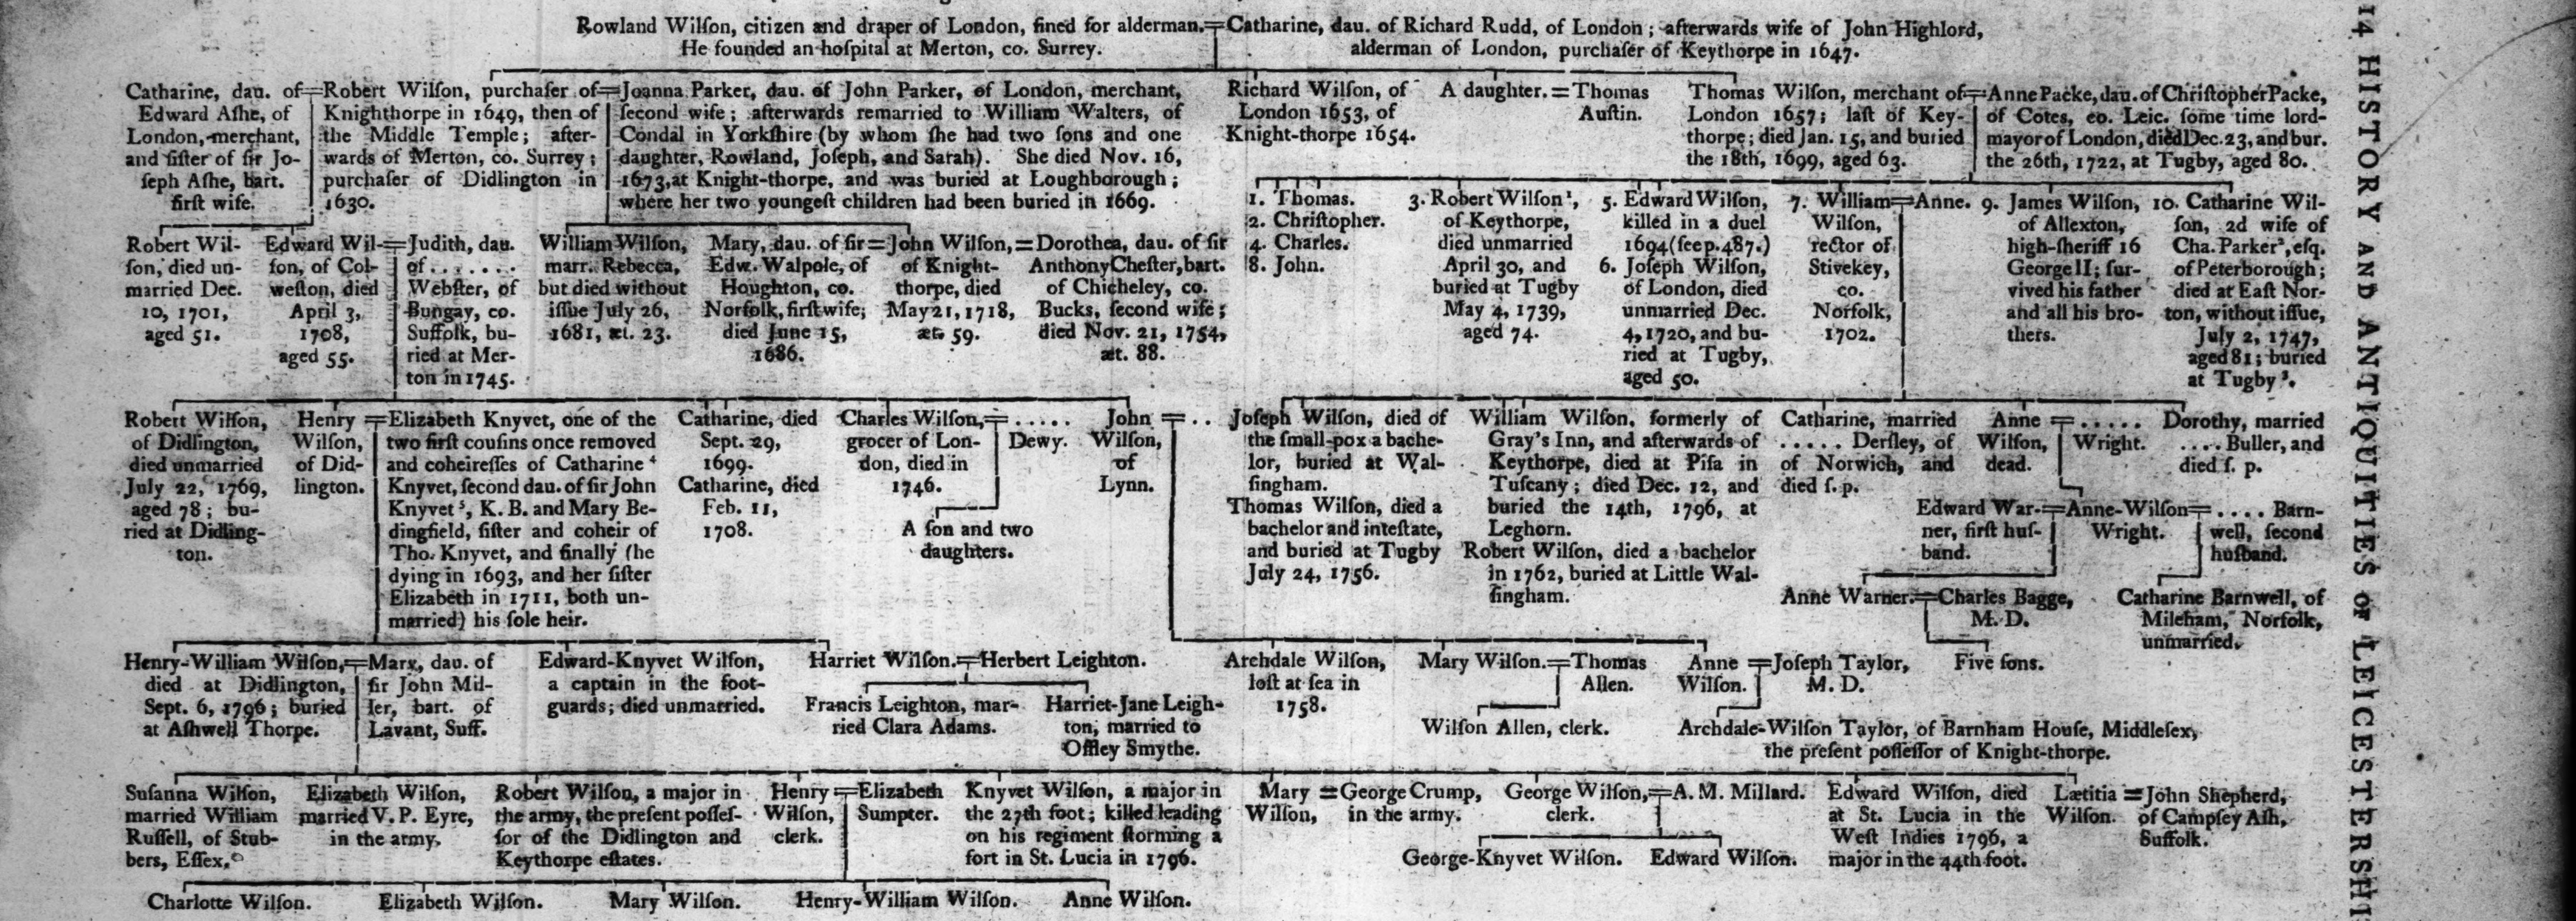
[5] Harl. MSS. 1555. p. 143.

[6] See their deſcendants, Harl. MSS. 5809. p. 84.

[7] Anceſtor to the lady of the preſent lord Melbourne; ſee vol. II. p. 246.

[8] Thoroton, p. 5; and ſee the epitaph of Mr. Willoughby (who died in 1630), ibid. p. 251.

Pedigree of the WILSONS, of KEYTHORPE and DIDLINGTON.



Rowland Wilſon, citizen and draper of London, fined for alderman. He founded an hoſpital at Merton, co. Surrey. = Catharine, dau. of Richard Rudd, of London; afterwards wife of John Highlord, alderman of London, purchaſer of Keythorpe in 1647.

Catharine, dau. of Edward Aſhe, of London, merchant, and ſiſter of ſir Joſeph Aſhe, bart. firſt wife. = Robert Wilſon, purchaſer of Knighthorpe in 1649, then of the Middle Temple; afterwards of Merton, co. Surrey; purchaſer of Didlington in 1630. = Joanna Parker, dau. of John Parker, of London, merchant, ſecond wife; afterwards remarried to William Walters, of Condal in Yorkſhire (by whom ſhe had two ſons and one daughter, Rowland, Joſeph, and Sarah). She died Nov. 16, 1673, at Knight-thorpe, and was buried at Loughborough; where her two youngeſt children had been buried in 1669.

Richard Wilſon, of London 1653, of Knight-thorpe 1654.

A daughter. = Thomas Auſtin.

Thomas Wilſon, merchant of London 1657; laſt of Keythorpe; died Jan. 15, and buried the 18th, 1699, aged 63. = Anne Packe, dau. of Chriſtopher Packe, of Cotes, co. Leic. ſome time lord-mayor of London, died Dec. 23, and bur. the 26th, 1722, at Tugby, aged 80.

Robert Wilſon, died unmarried Dec. 10, 1701, aged 51.

Edward Wilſon, of Colweſton, died April 3, 1708, aged 55. = Judith, dau. of . . . . Webſter, of Bungay, co. Suffolk, buried at Merton in 1745.

William Wilſon, marr. Rebecca, but died without iſſue July 26, 1681, æt. 23.

Mary, dau. of ſir Edw. Walpole, of Houghton, co. Norfolk, firſt wife; died June 15, 1686. = John Wilſon, of Knight-thorpe, died May 21, 1718, æt. 59. = Dorothea, dau. of ſir Anthony Cheſter, bart. of Chicheley, co. Bucks, ſecond wife; died Nov. 21, 1754, æt. 88.

1. Thomas.
2. Chriſtopher.
4. Charles.
8. John.

3. Robert Wilſon[1], of Keythorpe, died unmarried April 30, and buried at Tugby May 4, 1739, aged 74.

5. Edward Wilſon, killed in a duel 1694 (ſee p. 487.)

6. Joſeph Wilſon, of London, died unmarried Dec. 4, 1720, and buried at Tugby, aged 50.

7. William Wilſon, rector of Stivekey, co. Norfolk, 1702. = Anne.

9. James Wilſon, of Allexton, high-ſheriff 16 George II; ſurvived his father and all his brothers.

10. Catharine Wilſon, 2d wife of Cha. Parker[2], eſq. of Peterborough; died at Eaſt Norton, without iſſue, July 2, 1747, aged 81; buried at Tugby[3].

Robert Wilſon, of Didlington, died unmarried July 22, 1769, aged 78; buried at Didlington.

Henry Wilſon, of Didlington. = Elizabeth Knyvet, one of the two firſt couſins once removed and coheireſſes of Catharine[4] Knyvet, ſecond dau. of ſir John Knyvet[5], K. B. and Mary Bedingfield, ſiſter and coheir of Tho. Knyvet, and finally (he dying in 1693, and her ſiſter Elizabeth in 1711, both unmarried) his ſole heir.

Catharine, died Sept. 29, 1699.
Catharine, died Feb. 11, 1708.

Charles Wilſon, grocer of London, died in 1746. = ... Dewy.

A ſon and two daughters.

John Wilſon, of Lynn. = . .

Joſeph Wilſon, died of the ſmall-pox a bachelor, buried at Walſingham.
Thomas Wilſon, died a bachelor and inteſtate, and buried at Tugby July 24, 1756.

William Wilſon, formerly of Gray's Inn, and afterwards of Keythorpe, died at Piſa in Tuſcany; died Dec. 12, and buried the 14th, 1796, at Leghorn.
Robert Wilſon, died a bachelor in 1762, buried at Little Walſingham.

Catharine, married . . . . . Derſley, of of Norwich, and died ſ. p.

Anne Wilſon, dead. = ... Wright.

Dorothy, married . . . . Buller, and died ſ. p.

Edward Warner, firſt huſband. = Anne-Wilſon Wright. = ... Barnwell, ſecond huſband.

Anne Warner. = Charles Bagge, M. D.

Five ſons.

Catharine Barnwell, of Mileham, Norfolk, unmarried.

Henry-William Wilſon, died at Didlington, Sept. 6, 1796; buried at Aſhwell Thorpe. = Mary, dau. of ſir John Miller, bart. of Lavant, Suff.

Edward-Knyvet Wilſon, a captain in the foot-guards; died unmarried.

Harriet Wilſon. = Herbert Leighton.

Francis Leighton, married Clara Adams.

Harriet-Jane Leighton, married to Offley Smythe.

Archdale Wilſon, loſt at ſea in 1758.

Mary Wilſon. = Thomas Allen.

Wilſon Allen, clerk.

Anne Wilſon. = Joſeph Taylor, M. D.

Archdale-Wilſon Taylor, of Barnham Houſe, Middleſex, the preſent poſſeſſor of Knight-thorpe.

Suſanna Wilſon, married William Ruſſell, of Stubbers, Eſſex.

Elizabeth Wilſon, married V. P. Eyre, in the army.

Robert Wilſon, a major in the army, the preſent poſſeſſor of the Didlington and Keythorpe eſtates.

Henry Wilſon, clerk. = Elizabeth Sumpter.

Charlotte Wilſon. Elizabeth Wilſon. Mary Wilſon. Henry-William Wilſon. Anne Wilſon.

Knyvet Wilſon, a major in the 27th foot; killed leading on his regiment ſtorming a fort in St. Lucia in 1796.

Mary Wilſon, = George Crump, in the army.

George Wilſon, clerk. = A. M. Millard.

George-Knyvet Wilſon. Edward Wilſon.

Edward Wilſon, died at St. Lucia in the Weſt Indies 1796, a major in the 44th foot.

Lætitia Wilſon. = John Shepherd, of Campſey Aſh, Suffolk.

---

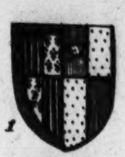
[1] See his benefactions to Tugby, vol. I. p. 56.

[2] Mr. Parker's firſt wife died Sept. 21, 1708; he Feb. 25, 1730; and both were buried at Peterborough.

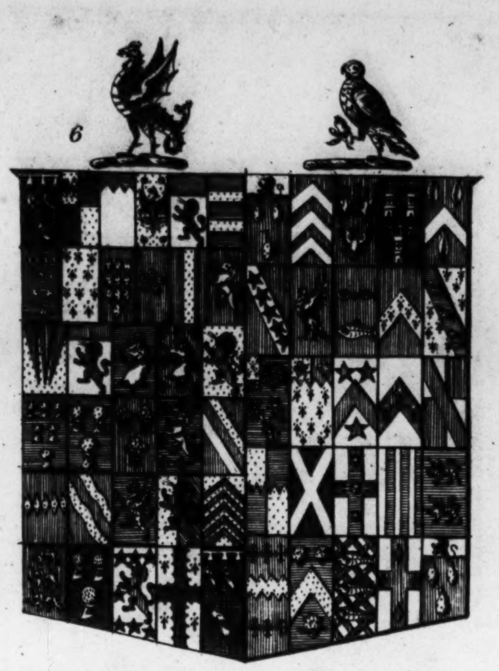
[3] See her benefactions to Tugby, vol. I. p. 56.

[4] Who in 1717 married Richard Bokenham, of Market Weſton, Suffolk; and aſſerted her right to the barony of Berners in fee (as lineal heir to ſir John Bourchier, knight of the Garter, firſt lord Berners, who died in 1532) which was allowed in 1720. She died in December 1743, æt. 89, and was buried by her huſband in the chancel of Market Weſton. Lucy Knyvet, the other couſin and coheireſs of lady Berners, was married firſt to Thomas Holt, by whom ſhe had one daughter; and ſecondly to John Field, of Reading, by whom ſhe had two daughters, Lucy and Catharine, one of whom was married to . . . . Greaves, and is ſtill living, 1800. Both the coheireſſes having ſurviving iſſue, the barony is now in abeyance. See Blomefield's Norfolk, vol. III. p. 105. The family eſtate of Aſhwell Thorpe, co. Norfolk, came to the Wilſons under lady Berners' will.

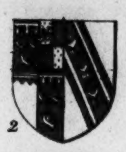
[5] Who died July 28, 1693; and his widow April 18, 1713, æt. 80.



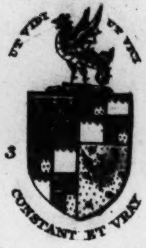
1



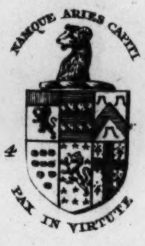
6



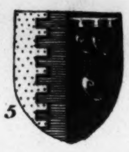
2



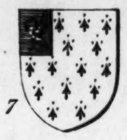
3
UT VIDI UT VIXI
CONSTANT ET VRAY



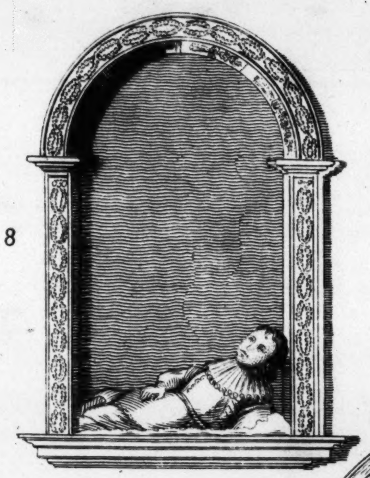
4
NAMQUE ARIES CAPITI
PAX IN VIRTUTE



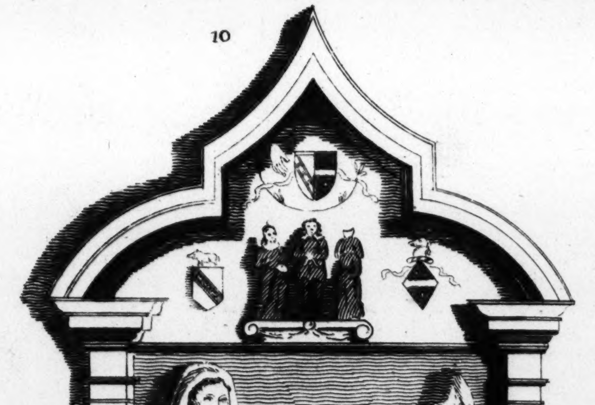
5



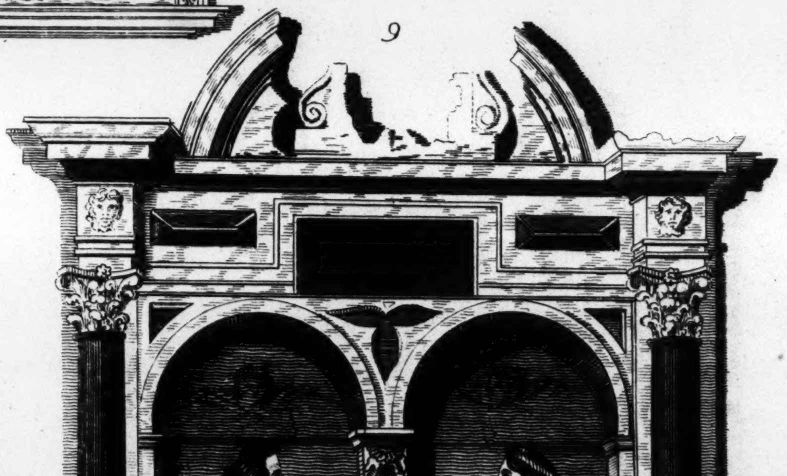
7



8



10



9

DEFVNCTVS AD SVOS.

PARCITE LACRYMVLIS. LACRYMARVM EX VALLE REDE
QVI PECCATA MIHI, ET LACRYMAS ABSTERSIT IESVS.
NEC MORIOR, DVCE SED CHRISTO, DE MORTE TRIVMPH
NON IACET HÍC TOTVS, SVPEREST NAVNTONIVS
PARTE SVI MELIORE MANENS SVPER ASTRA PERENNIS.
FÆLICESQ; ANIMAS, NON INFERIORA SECVTVS,
MILES VT EMERITVS SVPERÂ COMITATVR IN AVLÂ.
HOS ETIAM CINERES, PATRIIS QVOS CREDIDIT VRN
DEPOSITOS, QVIN-IMMO SATOS, SATOR OPTIMVS, IDE
MAXIMVS EXVTOS MORTALI FÆCE SVBINDE
ASSERET, ÆTERNOSQ; LVTO MELIORE RENATOS
RESTITVET, GAVDENTI ANIMÆ, CÆLOQ; BEABIT.
SIC SOLET ILLE SVOS. SIC VOS QVOQ; TEMPORE VEST
COLLIGET ILLE SVIS MEMORI PIETATE COLENDVS.
ERGO VICEM NEC FLETE MEAM, NEC PLANGITE VESTR
GAVDIA SED GAVDETE MEA, ET COGNOSCITE VESTRA. F

EIVSDEM VOTVM.

EN CINIS IN CINEREM, INQ; SOLVM GENTILE REMIGRO,
QVO FVERAM NATVS, REFEROR DENATVS EÔDEM.
QVAQ; RENATVS ERAM, SACRO RENOVANTE LAVACRO
CONDOR IN HÂC ITIDEM, CONNATVRALE SEPVLCRVM
HÍC INTER PROAVOS GENIALI NACTVS IN ÆDE.
VNDE NOVVS DEMVM CVM PATRIBVS VSQ; RENASCAR
VIRIBVS EX CINERE HÔC, VERÆ AD PRIMORDIA VITÆ.
HÆC, FATEOR, MISERANTE DEO, NIL TALE MERENTI

DEFVNCTVS AD SVOS

PARCITE LACRYMVLIS. LACRYMARVM EX VALLE REDEMPTO
QVI PECCATA MIHI, ET LACRYMAS ABSTERSIT IESVS.
NEC MORIOR, DVCE SED CHRISTO, DE MORTE TRIVMPHO.
NON IACET HÌC TOTVS. SVPEREST NAVNTONIVS IPSE,
PARTE SVI MELIORE MANENS SVPER ASTRA PERENNIS.
FÆLICESQ. ANIMAS, NON INFERIORA SECVTVS,
MILES VT EMERITVS SVPERÂ COMITATVR IN AVLÂ.
HOS ETIAM CINERES, PATRIIS QVOS CREDIDIT VRNIS
DEPOSITOS, QVIN-IMMÒ SATOS, SATOR OPTIMVS, IDEM ET
MAXIMVS EXVTOS MORTALI FÆCE SVBINDE
ASSERET, ÆTERNOSQ. LVTO MELIORE RENATOS
RESTITVET, GAVDENTI ANIMÆ, CÆLOQ. BEABIT.
SIC SOLET ILLE SVOS. SIC VOS QVOQ. TEMPORE VESTRO
COLLIGET ILLE SVIS MEMORI PIETATE COLENDVS.
ERGO VICEM NEC FLETE MEAM, NEC PLANGITE VESTRAM:
GAVDIA SED GAVDETE MEA, ET COGNOSCITE VESTRA. R.N.

EIVSDEM VOTVM.

EN CINIS IN CINEREM, INQ. SOLVM GENTILE REMIGRO,
QVO FVERAM NATVS, REFEROR DENATVS EÔDEM.
QVAQ. RENATVS ERAM, SACRO RENOVANTE LAVACRO
CONDOR IN HÂC ITIDEM, CONNATVRALE SEPVLCRVM
HÌC INTER PROAVOS GENIALI NACTVS IN ÆDE.
VNDE NOVVS DEMVM CVM PATRIBVS VSQ. RENASCAR

Depositos, qvin-immo satos, Sator Optimvs, idem
Maximvs exvtos mortali fæce svbinde
Asseret, Æternosq; lvto meliore renatos
Restitvet, gavdenti animæ, Cæloq; beabit.
Sic solet ille svos. sic vos qvoq; tempore vestro
Colliget ille svis memori pietate colendvs.
Ergo vicem nec flete meam, nec plangite vestram
Gavdia sed gavdete mea, et cognoscite vestra. R.N.

Eivsdem votvm.

En cinis in cinerem, inq; solvm gentile remigro,
Qvo fveram natvs, referor denatvs eôdem.
Qvaq; renatvs eram, sacro renovante lavacro
Condor in hâc itidem, coñatvrale sepvlcrvm
Hîc inter proavos geniali nactvs in æde.
Vnde novvs demvm cvm patribvs vsq; renascar
Virbivs ex cinere hôc, vera ad primordia vitæ.
Hæc, fateor, miserante Deo, nil tale merenti
Svnt indvlta mihi, svnt consignata fideli
Credenti ex animo; Vos hvnc, mea cvra, nepotes
Hvnc mecvm celebrate Devm; vos illivs aras
Lavdibvs accvmvlate; illi mea solvite vota
Pro vobis concepta; Hvic namq; ego mèq; meosq;
Hvic mea consecravi; Hvic vos, hvic vestrâ dicavi.
Hic, mihi fas spondere, aderit certissimvs vnvs
Antiqvæ vindex domvi, confidite tantvm
Fortiter ingenvi, et fido servite fideles.
Sic erit hâc aliqvis recidivâ ex gente svperstes
Illivs avgvstvm sanctè qvi Nomen honoret
Hîc propter patrios cineres hâc æde repostos.
Dvm patrij cineres sperata ad gavdia lvcis
Plena reviviscent, vegeti, lætiq; resvrgent.

Depositos, qvin-immo satos, Sator optimvs idem et Maximvs exvtos mortali face svbinde
Asseret, æternosq; lvto meliore renatos
Restitvet, gavdenti animæ, Cæloq; beabit.
Sic solet ille svos. sic vos qvoq; tempore vestro
Colliget ille svis memori pietate colendvs.
Ergo vicem nec flete meam, nec plangite vestram:
Gavdia sed gavdete mea, et cognoscite vestra. R.N.

Eivsdem votvm.

En cinis in cinerem, inq; solvm gentile remigro,
Qvo fveram natvs, referor denatvs eôdem.
Qvaq; renatvs eram, sacro renovante lavacro
Condor in hâc itidem, connatvrale sepvlcrvm
Hîc inter proavos geniali nactvs in æde.
Vnde novvs demvm cvm patribvs vsq; renascar
Viribvs ex cinere hôc, veræ ad primordia vitæ.
Hæc, fateor, miserante Deo, nil tale merenti
Svnt indvlta mihi, svnt consignata fideli
Credenti ex animo; Vos hvnc, mea cvra, nepotes
Hvnc mecvm celebrate Devm; vos illivs aras
Lavdibvs accvmvlate; illi mea solvite vota
Pro vobis concepta; Hvic namq; ego mèq; meosq;
Hvic mea consecravi; Hvic vos, Hvic vestrâ dicavi.
Hic, mihi fas spondere, aderit certissimvs vnvs
Antiqvæ vindex domvi, confidite tantvm
Fortiter ingenvi, et fido servite fideles.
Sic erit hâc aliqvis recidivâ ex gente svperstes
Illivs avgvstvm sanctè qvi Nomen honoret
Hîc propter patrios cineres hâc æde repostos.
Dvm patrij cineres speratæ ad gavdia lvcis
Plena reviviscent, vegeti, lætiq; resvrgent.
Agnoscentq; svos in sedibvs hisce nepotes

VIRBIUS EX CINERE HOC VERAE AD

HAEC, FATEOR, MISERANTE DEO, NIL TALE MERENTI
SUNT INDULTA MIHI, SUNT CONSIGNATA FIDELI
CREDENTI EX ANIMO; VOS HUNC, MEA CURA, NEPOTES
HUNC MECUM CELEBRATE DEUM; VOS ILLIUS ARAS
LAUDIBUS ACCUMULATE; ILLI MEA SOLVITE VOTA
PRO VOBIS CONCEPTA; HUIC NAMQ, EGO MEQ, MEOSQ, HUIC MEA CONSECRAVI; HUIC VOS, HUIC VESTRA DICAVI.
HIC, MIHI FAS SPONDERE, ADERIT CERTISSIMUS UNUS
ANTIQUAE VINDEX DOMUI, CONFIDITE TANTUM
FORTITER INGENUI, ET FIDO SERVITE FIDELES.
SIC ERIT HÂC ALIQUIS RECIDIVÂ EX GENTE SUPERSTES
ILLIUS AUGUSTUM SANCTÉ QUI NOMEN HONORET
HIC PROPTER PATRIOS CINERES HÂC AEDE REPOSTOS.
DUM PATRIJ CINERES SPERATAE AD GAUDIA LUCIS
PLENA REVIVISCENT, VEGETI, LAETIQ, RESURGENT.
AGNOSCENTQ, SUOS IN SEDIBUS HISCE NEPOTES.
NUMEN ADORÂNTES CASTÉ PER SAECULA SACRUM.
ANNUE, SANCTE PATER, FIENT HAEC OMNIA, FIENT. R.N

Sic pſalmum dicam Nomini tuo in ſaeculum ſaeculi, ut reddam vota mea de die in diem Ego autem et domus mea ſerviemus Domino. Joſua. 24. 15.
Et anima mea illi vivet, et ſemen meum ſerviet ipſi. Pſal: 22. 31.
Scio enim quod Redemptor meus vivit, et in noviſſimo die de terrâ ſurrecturus rurſum circumdabor pelle meâ Et in carne meâ videbo Deum Quem viſurus ſum ego oculi mei conſpecturi ſunt. Job. 19: 25. 26. 27.
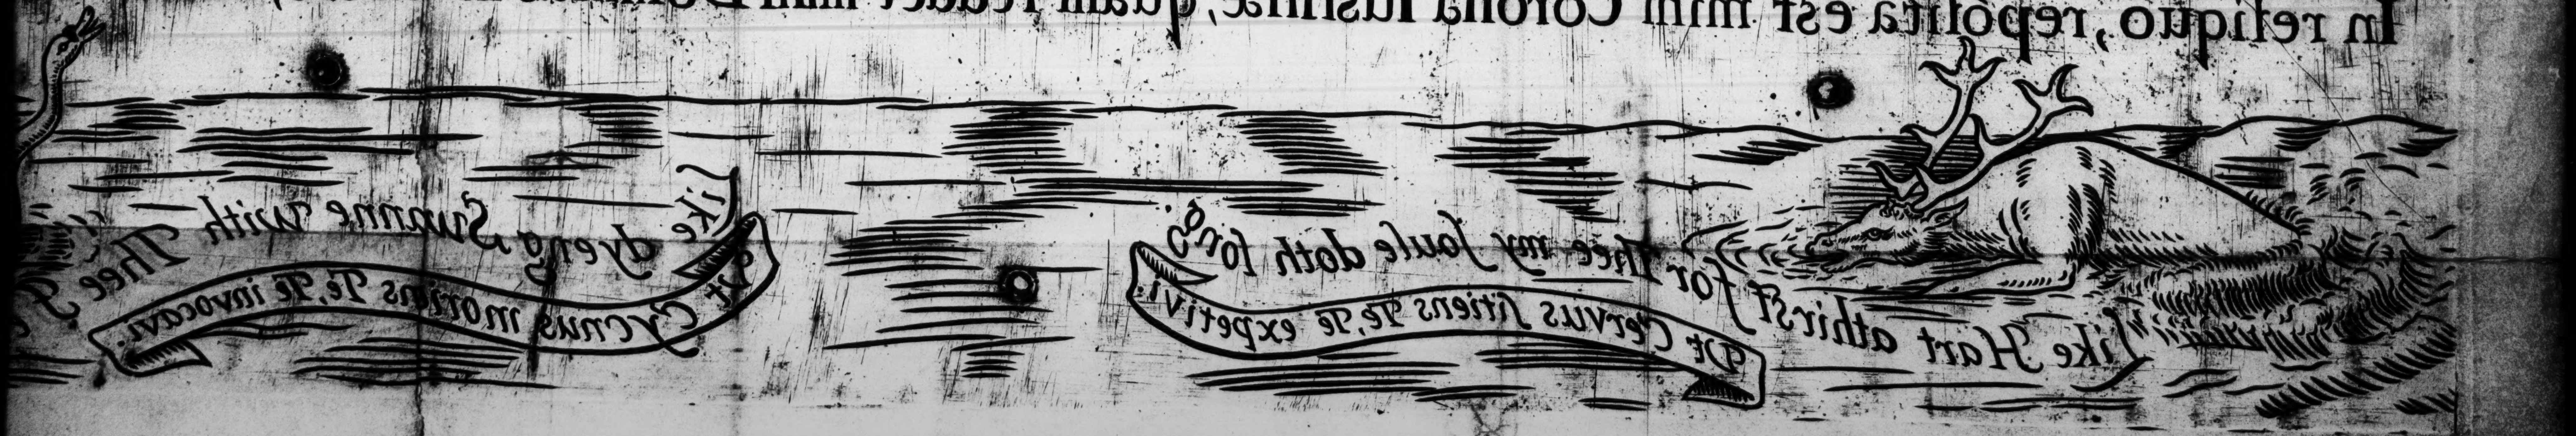
In reliquo, repoſita eſt mihi Corona Iuſtitiae, quam reddet mihi Dominus in illâ die, iuſtus Iud



Like dying Swanne with Thee I
Ut Cygnus moriens Te, Te invocavi.
Like Hart athirst for Thee my soule doth long Ut Cervus sitiens Te, Te expetivi.

SVNT INDVLTA MIHI, SVNT CONSIGNATA FIDELI
CREDENTI EX ANIMO; VOS HVNC, MEA CVRA, NEPOTES
HVNC MECVM CELEBRATE DEVM; VOS ILLIVS ARAS
LAVDIBVS ACCVMVLATE; ILLI MEA SOLVITE VOTA
PRO VOBIS CONCEPTA; HVIC NAMQ EGO MEQ MEOSQ, HVIC MEA CONSECRAVI, HVIC VOS, HVIC VESTRA DICAVI.
HIC MIHI FAS SPONDERE, ADERIT CERTISSIMVS VNVS
ANTIQVÆ VINDEX DOMVI, CONFIDITE TANTVM
FORTITER INGENVI, ET FIDO SERVITE FIDELES.
SIC ERIT HÂC ALIQVIS RECIDIVÂ EX GENTE SVPERSTES
ILLIVS AVGVSTVM SANCTÈ QVI NOMEN HONORET
HIC PROPTER PATRIOS CINERES HÂC ÆDE REPOSTOS.
DVM PATRIJ CINERES SPERATÆ AD GAVDIA LVCIS
PLENA REVIVISCENT, VEGETI, LÆTIQ RESVRGENT.
AGNOSCENTQ SVOS IN SEDIBVS HISCE NEPOTES.
NVMEN ADORANTES CASTÈ PER SÆCVLA SACRVM.
ANNVE, SANCTE PATER, FIENT HÆC OMNIA, FIENT. R. N.

m dicam Nomini tuo in ſæculum ſæculi, ut reddam vota mea de die in diem. Ps. 61.9.
m et domus mea ſerviemus Domino. Joſua. 24.15.
mea illi vivet, et ſemen meum ſerviet ipſi. Psal. 21. 31.
n quod Redemptor meus vivit, et in noviſſimo die de terrâ ſurrecturus ſum. Et rcumdabor pelle meâ, Et in carne meâ videbo Deum. Quem viſurus ſum ego ipſe, et conſpecturi ſunt. Job. 19: 25. 26. 27.
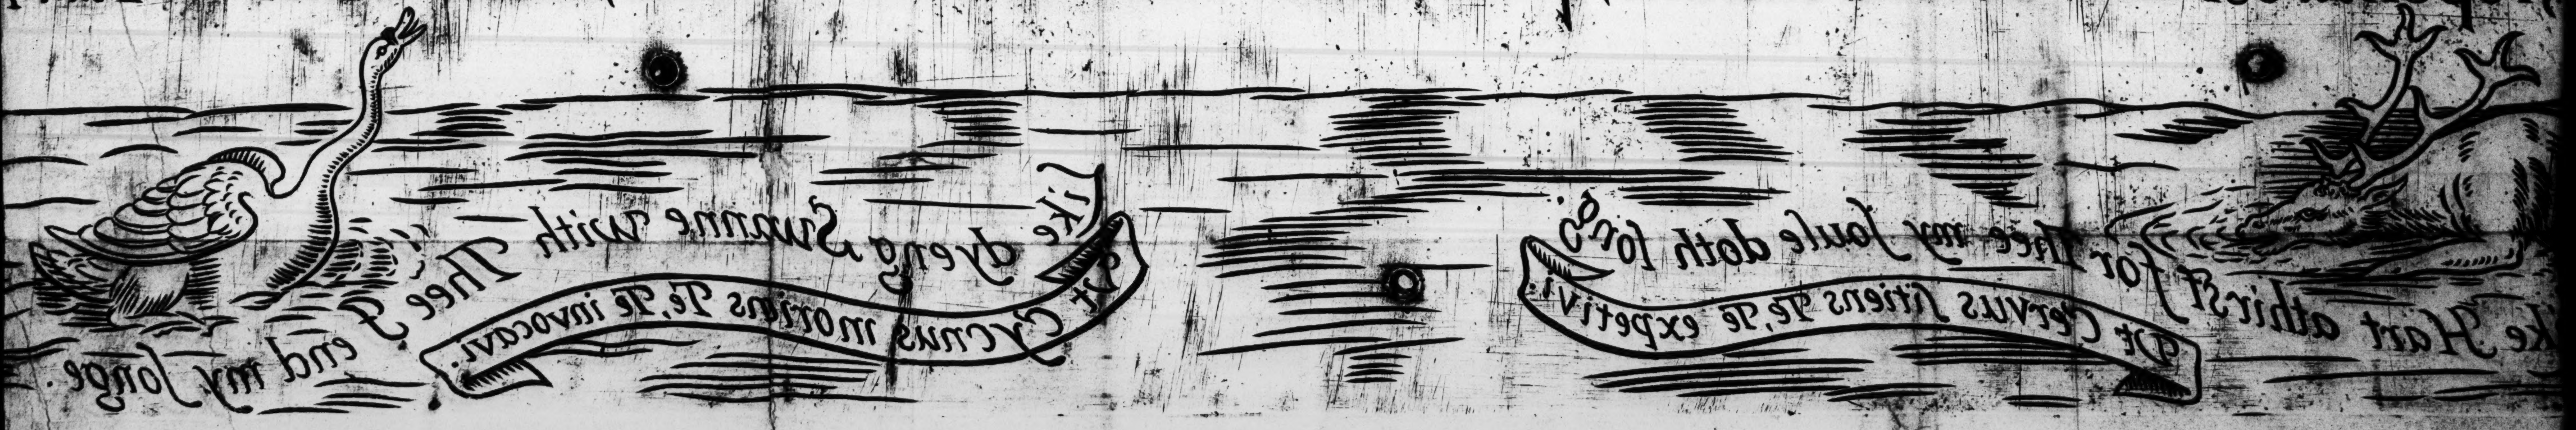
, repoſita eſt mihi Corona Iuſtitiæ, quam reddet mihi Dominus in illâ die, iuſtus Iudex. 2. Tim: 4



Like dying Swanne with Thee I end my ſonge
Ut Cygnus moriens Te, Te invocavi.
Like Hart athirſt for Thee my ſoule doth longe
Ut Cervus ſitiens Te, Te expetivi.

The family of Naunton is of very great antiquity in the county of Suffolk. The name occurs in deeds ſo early as the year 951; and in 1190 their lands were "worth above 700 marks a year." The earlieſt pedigree of them that I have met with begins with ſir Henry de Naunton, knt. a man of very great poſſeſſions (as Roger Awſten reporteth) in the reigns of Henry III. and Edward I.[1] "Some avouch," ſays Dr. Fuller[2], "that this family were here before, others that they came in with, the Conqueror; who rewarded the chief of that name for his ſervice with a great inheritrix given him in marriage. For a long time they were patrons of Alderton in this county."

Robert Naunton, eſq. (of whom it is principally intended here to ſpeak) was the ſon of Henry Naunton, eſq. of Alderton and Elizabeth Aſhby his wife. He was admitted a fellow commoner of Trinity college, Cambridge; and was afterwards choſen a fellow of Trinity hall. He addicted himſelf from his youth to ſuch ſtudies as tended to accompliſh him for public employment; and, when his uncle, William Aſhby, eſq. of Loſeby, was ſent ambaſſador from queen Elizabeth into Scotland in the year 1589[3], he attended him thither, probably in the office of ſecretary; and was ſometimes ſent by him on affairs of truſt and importance to the court of England, where he was in July that year, diſcontented with his unſucceſsful dependance on courtiers, and reſolved to haſten back to his uncle; to whom he returned in the beginning of the month following, and continued with him till his death, which happened in January 1589-90; ſoon after which event, Mr. Naunton returned to Cambridge, where we find him M. A. and public orator in 1594. He was ſent to France in 1595-6 by the earl of Eſſex, whom he frequently calls his patron. In November 1596, he was at the Hague, as a travelling tutor through North Holland to Mr. Vernon, a young gentleman committed to his care by the earl of Eſſex; and proceeded thence to Rouen; where he was ſoon far from being ſatisfied with his ſituation. "My ſole contentment with myſelf," he ſays, "is my conſtancy of devotion to your Lordſhip. For other contentments in this courſe, I find them ſo ſmall, as I were loth your Lordſhip ſhould be thought too much beholden for my cauſe, eſpecially where I find ſo ſmall means or likelihood of bettering, or enabling myſelf to do your Lordſhip ſervice. It were to ſmall purpoſe now to alledge what I have abiden, and how much more than ever I durſt have promiſed of myſelf, in all kinds of patience both in mind and body. It ſhall be ſufficient if I may, without accuſing any other, excuſe mine own weakneſs, that can endure this life no longer. The beſt allowance of credit I can have here is but in nature of betwixt a pedagogue[4] and a ſpy, both trades I know not whether more odious or baſe, as well in their eyes with whom I live, as in mine own." During this and the following year his correſpondence with the earl of Eſſex was frequent and highly intereſting[5]; and the opinion which his patron entertained of him may be collected from the following billet: "If my leiſure were as great as is my affection to you, I would ſend you as many anſwers as I receive letters from you: but I am in a place where I am tied to infinite attendance, and am tied to entertain many buſineſſes, and have a fortune of great exerciſe; and therefore I am ſure you will not look for many compliments from me; and for directions, you need them not. The Queen is every day more and more pleaſed with your letters, and doth promiſe your ſkill reſt. I do truly proteſt, that I read no man's writing with more contentment, nor ever ſaw any man ſo much and ſo faſt by any ſuch like improve himſelf. Therefore let the pains you have taken, and incommodities you daily ſuffer, not diſcourage you; for, as your own increaſe in ſufficiency doth make you amends, ſo I doubt not but you ſhall ſee you have made yourſelf a way to good employment and good fortune. I hope ſtrongly of her majeſty's gracious diſpoſition towards you; but promiſe for myſelf to be your moſt affectionate and conſtant friend, Essex."

In a letter dated Nov. 30, 1597, he repeats his earneſt deſire of departing from Paris, but whither he could not preſume to ſay without the earl's approbation. He had now, he ſaid, but one year left of his three, to ſpend in the reſt of France, and in Italy and Germany. This was all the free years of his life to come, that he could expect to diſpoſe of at his own diſcretion with his father's bleſſing; and he ſhould deſire to huſband it the beſt he could, if he knew how, ſo as at his return he might moſt ſatisfy the earl and his father; for, other ſatisfaction of his own apart he could have none, he could expect none, he could affect none. His own greateſt inclination was, to enlarge himſelf a little after this mewing up, and to inform himſelf what he could in ſo ſhort a time in the knowledge of the languages, and the principal places of France and Italy; and then to return homewards through Germany, if the paſſage ſhould be free for Engliſhmen. The earl's former directions had ſo inured him, as he could not now promiſe himſelf in any ſort to improve his travels without his lordſhip's preſcription and allowance of his courſe. He deſired no more commendations to the great men in France, which, he ſaw, did but breed ſuſpicions and jealouſies. He deſired much leſs the countenance and opinion of an employed man. He only requeſted his lordſhip's atteſtation, as it were, by way of recommendation for a ſafe conduct, to grace himſelf with the reputation of an honeſt poor man, in caſe he ſhould fall into any queſtion in Italy or Germany, where he was told that ſuch commendations were of moſt uſe, and likewiſe expected of courſe. Whatever gleanings he might gather in this ſcattered harveſt, were already conſecrated to his lordſhip's altar; and, if he might in his way perform any acceptable ſervice to his lordſhip, he ſhould take it for one of the principal bleſſings that could befal him, and for a like principal encouragement to be commanded by his lordſhip. It was too late for him now to proteſt how much he was aſhamed of himſelf, to think how far he ſtrayed from the firſt intent and drift of his travel, which was only to have prepared and qualified himſelf ſo, as he might have done his lordſhip ſervice at his return. He thought then to have played the Pythagorean for the three years of his ſtay abroad, to have heard and ſeen what he could, and ſaid nothing. But it pleaſed his lordſhip to vouchſafe him ſuch commendations and favours at his firſt coming out, "as my devotions," ſays he, "grew impatient to coop themſelves up for ſo long a time as my ſufficiency would aſk to breed in. This ὕϛερον ϖρότερον is allowed for a figure poetical, but not practical, where too forward zeals, outflying ability, may prove the highway to a break-neck precipitation. I muſt now labour to temper theſe zeals ſo, as they may be more ſecundùm ſcientiam. Increaſe of knowledge and experience cannot diminiſh them, but may perfect them. Having found already how little I can ſcribendo proficere, I muſt now turn over a new leaf, that I may learn another day proficiendo ſcribere, an non ſcribere?" The earl of Eſſex ſeems, after all, not to have had intereſt enough to advance him to any civil poſt; for which reaſon it is probable, that, after his lordſhip's diſgrace, he again returned to Trinity hall; and was proctor of the Univerſity in 1601; an office which, according to the old circle, returned not to that college but once in 44 years. However, he was afterwards again called forth into the world under the immediate patronage of the favourite Villiers; being made, firſt, a maſter of the requeſts, and then a ſurveyor of the court of wards. He was knighted at

---

[1] Harl. MSS. 1174. p. 75. b.

[2] Worthies, in Suffolk, p. 64.

[3] Letter of Mr. Naunton, July 6, 1589, among the original MSS. of William Aſhby, eſq. which in 1754 were in the poſſeſſion of the Hon. Philip Yorke.

[4] Becauſe he had Mr. Vernon under his care.

[5] Many of theſe letters are preſerved by Dr. Birch, in his "Memoirs of Queen Elizabeth;" and in the Harleian Catalogue, 288. 127. 128. pp. 245—251, are two letters from him to the earl of Eſſex; the one from Calais, Jan. 26, O. S. 1597, "reciting the affairs of France, where, through the king's negligence, or miſmanagement, all things grew worſe and worſe; ſo that divers perſons avowed, that England had never a fitter time to think of recovering its antient rights in France;" the other from Paris, Feb. 15, O. S. 1597, "concerning the peace pretended to be making between the kings of Spain and France."

Windſor, Sept. 17, 1615; and afterwards ſworn ſecretary of ſtate to king James, on Thurſday Jan. 8, 1617-18; "which place," ſays Fuller, "he diſcharged with great ability and dexterity. And I hope it will be no offence here to inſert a pleaſant paſſage. One Mr. Wiemark, a wealthy man, great novilant, and conſtant Paul's-walker[1], hearing the news that day [Oct. 29, 1618,] of the beheading of ſir Walter Raleigh; 'His head,' ſaid he, 'would do very well on the ſhoulders of ſir Robert Naunton, ſecretary of ſtate.' Theſe words were reported, and Wiemark ſummoned to the privy council; where he pleaded for himſelf, that he intended no diſreſpect to Mr. Secretary, whoſe known worth was above all detraction; only he ſpoke in reference to an old proverb, Two heads are better than one; and ſo for the preſent he was diſmiſſed. Not long after, when rich men were called on for a contribution to St. Paul's, Wiemark at the council-table ſubſcribed £100.; but Mr. Secretary told him two hundred were better than one; which, betwixt fear and charity, Wiemark was fain to ſubſcribe[2]." In the Britiſh Muſeum[3] is a letter of his to the lords commiſſioners for cauſes marſhall, Jan. 29, 1617-18, ſhewing the king's pleaſure, "that divers lords and gentlemen ſhould put themſelves in order to run at tilt, againſt the 24th of March enſuing." In the ſame collection are preſerved ſeven letters of his to the marquis of Buckingham[4], on public buſineſs, between 1619 and 1622, moſt of them written "in Secretary Calvert's abſence." In one of theſe, dated Whitehall, May 8, 1620, he thus ſpeaks of himſelf: "I ſhall be forced to take phyſick to-morrow, which I have had a deſire and cauſe to do long ſince; but I proteſt I have not had a free day for it theſe two years. I am not querulous; though, God knows, I ſuffer in my health and otherwiſe, having neglected all other things in reſpect to my true zeal to his Majeſty's ſervice, and to make good your Lordſhip's noble undertaking for me, to the beſt of my poor abilities. What I have been capable of I have done without grumbling, or craving the ſpur, not in eye-ſervice, nor as a man-pleaſer; and I am not yet ſo weary of ſerving his Majeſty and your Lordſhip, as that I would accelerate mine end by too much neglecting my health, as long as I ſhall have any ſtrength of nature left." Jan. 14, 1620-21, the king went to Theobalds; on which day he reproved Naunton the ſecretary, and ſuſpended him from the ſecretary's function, becauſe (as 'tis ſaid) he conſulted with the French ambaſſador about the marriage of the princeſs Henrietta, the French king's ſiſter, without conſulting the king[5]; and in a few days after he was confined to his houſe[6], Jan. 20, for giving ſome ſharp anſwer to the count of Gondemar, the ſubtle Spaniſh ambaſſador, being in diſcourſe with him, and afterwards refuſing to ſubmit to him[7]. He preſerved his office, however, though in imminent danger of loſing it, as appears by the following letter:

"To the right honourable my ſingular good Lord, my Lord Marquis Buckingham, Lord High Admiral of England. To his Lordſhip's own hands.

"My good Lord; I muſt begin with my dueſt thanks for your Lordſhip's ſo noble care of me, and thoſe your comfortable profeſſions and promiſes; whereupon, next after God and his Majeſty, I will ſolely rely. And will as unviolably perform what I have reciprocally promiſed your Lordſhip, as I do aſſuredly promiſe myſelf what your Lordſhip hath undertaken for me and mine, whereof I know your Lordſhip will admit no doubt. The world cannot take this from me, which I ſhall carry with me to my grave, that I have been always conſtantly true to my avowed friends; yea more true to my dead friends, how unfortunate ſoever to themſelves and me, than many know how to be to their beſt deſerving ones alive; which quality I muſt price it the higher in myſelf, the dearer it hath coſt me in my fortunes. Now the world knows, that which I muſt ever acknowledge, your Lordſhip hath already, and are likelieſt ſtill hereafter to deſerve more of me and mine, than all my friends put together ever could. Do (my dear Lord) give me leave to crave a little reſpite before I write the letter I promiſed; which I know your Lordſhip will, in your tender care of me and mine, give way unto, when you ſhall have read this that follows; yea, and would not forgive it me, if I ſhould ere have omitted to preſent it you in time, before it was too late. My Lord, when there was a rumour ſpread, about this time twelvemonths, that my place ſhould be taken from me, my wife, being then great with child, miſcarried of a ſon; which how near it ſits us both to this day, God beſt knows. She is a woman, and a woman naturally ſubject to ſtronger apprehenſions than I could wiſh; weak ſome ways, as all mankind is; fearful and miſtruſtful enough, which ſhe accounts a woman's wiſdom. She is now greater of the like burthen than ever ſhe was of any before, and looks her betwixt this and All Saints at the furtheſt; but I doubt and fear that ſhe will again come before her time, ſpecially if ſhe ſhall apprehend the loſs of my place; whereof ſhe would have grown a little jealous, ſince your Lordſhip's late ſpeech with me, if I had not given her all the beſt hopes and comforts which in diſcretion I can. I am now grown in years, and cannot expect many children. It is come upon me beyond mine expectation, that ſhe hath conceived again ſince her laſt ſo dangerous miſcarrying. My ſweet Lord, put me not to this deſperate trial where the preſent neceſſity is no greater, which may prove more to me than an Abraham's ſacrifice, in hazarding an Iſaac and a Sarah both under one. Thoſe children God ſhall vouchſafe to give us may in time prove none of the unfaithfulleſt to your own happy poſterity. Sir Edward Conway is my noble friend, and a gentleman. If I know him ſo right as I think I do, he will not find it in the honour of his own heart to affect ſucceeding me ſo eaſily, to the extirpation of my poſterity, which muſt be far dearer to me than this fagg end of my life. Let me but ſee her paſt the danger of this childbed, before ſhe ſhall know of my parting with my place; and I will write, and do, and endure, whatſoever your Lordſhip ſhall be pleaſed to direct me; and will be bounden to you for your loving directions, which I know they will be carefully and adviſedly bent to my moſt good, which I reſt aſſured your Lordſhip will now take to heart, more than it is, or can be, by your Lordſhip's moſt devoted and obliged humble ſervant, Charing Croſs, 7^{bris} 23°, 1622. ROBERT NAUNTON."

This requeſt was ſo far complied with, that he was continued in the office of ſecretary till the January following[8]; in which month was born his only ſon, whom, in compliment to the king, he called James.

In July 1623, he was appointed maſter of the court of wards and liveries; for which he thus expreſſes his grateful thanks:

"Moſt gracious and moſt redoubted Sovereign
Lord and Maſter;

"The moſt comfortable aſſurance of your Majeſty's wonted grace and favour, which I had formerly received from you, by the faithful intimacions of my noble Lord Admiral, and my Lord of Carliſle, your Majeſty hath this day confirmed, with an apparent badge of your princely bounty, under your great ſeal. My entire and true thankfulneſs unto God and your Majeſty I ſhall be humbly ambitious to ſeal with my beſt blood, whenſoever your ſervice ſhall ſo occaſion me. Meanwhile, I will pay my daily vows to his Divine Majeſty for his heavenly retribution upon you and yours; and will uſe my beſt endeavours to aſſure your Majeſty, that it hath not employed any portion of your incomparable goodneſs upon any man more faithfully devoted to ſerve, honour, and obey you, and to ſhield the true greatneſs, honour, and univerſal happineſs of you and yours, than is, and ever will be,

Your Majeſty's moſt faithful, and moſt obliged ſervant,

Charing Croſs, July 16, 1623. ROBERT NAUNTON[9]."

---

[1] The inſide of St. Paul's church was at that period a faſhionable public walk. See vol. II. p. 629.

[2] Worthies, in Suffolk, p. 64.

[3] Harl. MSS. 1107. 70.

[4] Ibid. 1581. 22. pp. 103—114.

[5] Camden's Annals, in the Complete Hiſtory of England, vol. I. p. 656.

[6] Sir Robert Naunton, a gentleman of known honeſty and integrity, was commanded from court, and Conway was put in his place. Wilſon's Life of King James I; ib. p. 726.

[7] Dr. Birch, MS.

[8] The patent of his ſucceſſor, ſir Edward Conway, was dated Jan. 30, 1622-3.

[9] Harl. MSS. 1581. 23. p. 115. See his hand-writing, Plate XVIII. 13.

This honourable ſituation ſir Robert reſigned in March 1634-5; and died in the ſame month, on Good Friday.—"He was a man of conſiderable learning, and well qualified for political affairs; and his letters contain many curious facts and juſt obſervations on the characters of perſons and parties, but obſcured by an affectation of ſtyle leſs frequent under the reign of Queen Elizabeth than her immediate ſucceſſors [1]."

His moſt excellent piece, called "Fragmenta Regalia, or Obſervations on the late Queen Elizabeth, her Times and Favourites," ſet forth ſince his death, was a fruit of his younger years; yet was in ſuch high eſteem, as an authentic collection of curious remarks, by the generality of men of place and buſineſs, that it was the conſtant practice of divers clerks, in parliament and term time, to tranſcribe copies of it for the uſe and ſervice of the lovers of Antiquity and State Hiſtory; and theſe copies had the honour afterwards of being treaſured up amongſt their choiceſt MSS. It was alſo printed, after his death, in 4to, 1641, 1642, 164..; and in 12mo, 1694, together with Walſingham's "Arcana Aulica."

Sir Robert Naunton's principal reſidence was at Letheringham in Suffolk, a ſmall priory of Black Canons, founded by William de Boyvile, valued at £26. a year; which was granted in 1553 by king Edward VI. to Elizabeth Naunton, third daughter to ſir Anthony Wingfield, K. G. and wife to William Naunton, eſq.

In the priory church, which after the diſſolution was made parochial, were many monuments of the families of Boivile and Wingfield; and in the windows many portraits and matches.

Sir Robert Naunton, removing from the paternal reſidence at Alderton, converted the priory houſe, well ſituated, into a good manſion; in which he formed a noble gallery, and adorned it with ſeveral valuable pictures.

His only ſon, James, died an infant in 1624; and his only daughter, Penelope, was married, firſt to Paul viſcount Bayning, and afterwards to Philip lord Herbert, afterwards fifth earl of Pembroke. He was ſucceeded in his eſtate at Letheringham by his brother William Naunton, eſq.; by whoſe male deſcendants it continued to be inhabited till the year 1758, when Mr. William Naunton, the laſt of the name (his elder brother Robert dying unmarried), left it to his widow for life, and afterward to his next heir. On the death of the widow, ſoon after 1761, in which year ſhe married to her ſecond huſband captain William Sirrac, of the 57th regiment [2]; the eſtate, valued at £1000. per ann. and more, devolved to William Leman, eſq. who was forced to maintain his right by a tedious and expenſive lawſuit againſt claimants who pretended deſcent from ſome Nauntons that had migrated into Normandy about 80 years before. His daughter was married to Mr. Read.

"The handſome old houſe, of which the South wing with the hall and gallery remained, was pulled down about the year 1770; and the fine collection of portraits which it contained are now probably in the poſſeſſion of the Leman family. About the ſame time, the adjoining church was ſuffered to run to ruin; the painted glaſs, conſiſting of figures and arms, taken down and diſperſed about; and all the antient and curious monuments of various kinds, for the Boyviles, Wingfields, and Nauntons (among which was a moſt ſumptuous one for the famous ſir Robert Naunton and his lady [3]; and one for ſir Anthony Wingfield [4], whoſe epitaph was thought of conſequence in a late conteſt for the great chamberlainſhip of England) were effaced and deſtroyed. Mere neglect and expoſure to the weather for a few years by the fall of the roof could not have reduced them to that ſtate of complete deſolation in which they appeared in autumn 1780. In 1768 (and perhaps later) they were in a good, though not in ſo clean a condition as they deſerved. Perhaps it was for the intereſt of ſome of the parties who lately diſputed the eſtate to deſtroy every record preſerved in this place: but how the dilapidation of this ſacred edifice came to be permitted by the higher eccleſiaſtical powers is a queſtion not eaſily reſolved [5]."

Such were the judicious obſervations of a late firſt-rate Antiquary in 1780; and ſuch were the feelings of the author of this article on ſeveral repeated viſits in that neighbourhood from 1785 to 1789; in which latter year the pariſhioners of Letheringham being under the neceſſity, by direction of the ordinary, to put their deſecrated church into decent order, and chooſing to re-build it, though it might have been repaired at leſs coſt, ſold the whole of the fabric, monuments and all, to the contractor for building the church; who beat the fine ſeries of the monuments of the Boiviles, Wingfields, Nauntons, &c. to powder; and ſold as much at 3*s.* a pound (nearly ſix hundred weight) for tarras as came to eighty guineas.

Two beautiful views of the Wingfield monuments in their ſtate of dilapidation, the more to be lamented as it was not the effect of time alone, were faithfully engraved by Mr. Baſire junior, from the delicate and correct drawings of Mr. Johnſon of Woodbridge, for the ſecond volume of Mr. Gough's truly ſplendid publication of the "Sepulchral Monuments in Great Britain;" by whoſe permiſſion they are here ſubjoined as Plates LXXII. LXXIII. of the preſent volume.

A few braſſes from the ruins, worked off in the ſame elegant volume, and that which faces p. *516, the publiſher of the preſent Work rejoices at having reſcued from the melting-pot [6].

Of the fragments that could be reſcued from the wreck, a pyramid [7] was erected by the Rev. William Clubbe [8], LL. B. in the garden of his vicarage at Brandeſton in the ſame county, with theſe inſcriptions:

1. "FUIMUS.
INDIGNANT READER!
THESE MONUMENTAL REMAINS ARE NOT (AS THOU MAYEST SUPPOSE)
THE RUINS OF TIME,
BUT WERE DESTROYED IN AN IRRUPTION OF THE GOTHS; SO LATE IN THE CHRISTIAN ÆRA
AS THE YEAR 1789.
CREDITE, POSTERI!!!"

2. "Undique collectis membris—
Abi, Lector!
Et, ſi nomen perenne cures,
Quæras aliundè:
Marmori famam credere
Quàm fallax vanumque ſit
Hinc collige."

3. "Who ſees with equal eye, as God of all,
The hero periſh, or the ſparrow fall."

4. "M. S.
Antiquiſ^{mae} Famil^{ae}
Reſtitutum
(Quoad reſtitui potuit)
A° Dom. 1789.
Quicunque ſis,
Hos hortos poſthâc colituruſ,
Vive memor mortuorum;
Neu ſinas
Haſce Relliquias
Iterùm in ruinam labi:
Hâc conditione, valeas!"

---

[1] This is the remark of Dr. Birch; in whoſe "Memoirs of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth" ſeveral of ſir Robert Naunton's letters on public occaſions are preſerved.

[2] See before, p. 493.

[3] See the epitaph, and an engraving of the monument, p. *516.

[4] See alſo this monument and epitaph, ibid.

[5] Gough's Camden, 1789, vol. II. p. 86; and Sepulchral Monuments, vol. II. p. 27.

[6] The font at Letheringham, with ſome others in the county of Suffolk, may be ſeen in the Archæologia, vol. X. from finiſhed drawings by Mr. Johnſon, which were communicated to the Society of Antiquaries by J. Nichols.

[7] Of this pyramid I have three beautiful drawings by Mr. Johnſon, which may be engraved at ſome future opportunity.

[8] Son of the Rev. John Clubbe, the facetious author of the Hiſtory and Antiquities of Wheatfield; and himſelf not unknown in the literary world.

As many of the epitaphs of the Nauntons as can at this diſtance of time be recovered ſhall be tranſcribed from a MS volume of Church Notes in Suffolk, taken in 1662 by Mr. Borret, now in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Gough; from Mr. Gough's own notes taken in 1784; from thoſe of William Latham, eſq. (the Hiſtorian of Cheſhire) taken in 1768; and from the obſervations of Mr. Pridden and myſelf in 1787.

1. On a graveſtone in the chancel, with the effigies of two ladies; and the following eſcutcheons:

1. Knightley; impaling Quarterly, Gules and Or, in the firſt quarter a mullet Argent, Vere; Plate LXXIV. fig. 1. 2. Quarterly, 1. and 4. Sable, three martlets Argent, with a label of three points for difference, Naunton; 2. Quarterly of four; in the firſt quarter a lion paſſant Gules, Boivile; 3. Argent, a chief indented Azure, Glanvil; impaling, Argent, on a bend cottized Sable, three pair of wings conjoined in lure Argent, Wingfield; fig. 2.

"Here lieth Dame Urſula Knightley, the wife of ſir Edmund Knightley, knt.
one of the coheirs of John earl of Oxford;
and Elizabeth Naunton, ſometime patron of this church, wife to William Naunton, eſq. daughter to ſir Anthony Wingfield [1], knight of the Garter, and to Elizabeth another of the coheirs of John earl of Oxford, and ſiſter to the aforeſaid Urſula. Which Urſula deceaſed in the year of our Lord 1557; and Elizabeth in the year 1592."

2. On a monument againſt the South wall of the church, three eſcocheons, inlaid with braſs:

1. Quarterly: 1. Naunton; 2. Boivile; 3. Glanvil; 4. Or, an eagle diſplayed Gules, between ſix torteauxes, Warren. Creſt, a baſiliſk proper. Mottoes, Ut vidi, ut vici. Below, Conſtant et vray [2].

2. Naunton; impaling, Argent, a lion rampant Sable, a chief Gules, Aſhby of Loſeby.

3. Quarterly of ſix [3]. 1. Aſhby of Loſeby; 2. Azure, two bars Or, each charged with three martlets Sable, Burdet. 3. Argent, a chevron Azure, between three ſtaples Sable, Illingworth. 4. Nine torteauxes. 5. A lion rampant between twelve mullets. 6. Argent, a croſs engrailed Sable, between four Ermine ſpots. Creſt, a ram's head couped. Mottoes: Above the ſhield, Namque Aries capiti. Below, Pax in Virtute.

"Here lyeth Henry Naunton [4], late patron of this church, and Triſtram Naunton (both ſonnes of William Naunton, eſq. and Elizabeth his wife), and Elizabeth, wife to the ſaid Henry, daughter of Everard Aſheby, eſq.; and Elizabeth daughter to the foreſayd Henry and Elizabeth [5].

Patruus ignotus, Genetrix vix nota, ſororque,
Occumbunt. Sequeris tu, mihi ſancte Pater.
Chara domus, terras fugitis, neque ſic fugitis me;
Vos ſequar in cœlos, queîs ſine terra gravis.

Patri, patruo, matri, ſororculæque chariſſimis, Poſui flevique Robertus Naunton, A. Dñi 1606."

3. On a mural monument againſt the South wall, the arms of Naunton, with divers quarterings; and the figure of a little boy, in a ruff and laced frock, recumbent, his right hand croſſed on his waiſt; fig. 8;

"Here reſts the corps of James Naunton, eſq. ſonne of ſir Robt Naunton, knight (principal ſecretarie of ſtate and maſter of the wards to o^{r} ſovarain lord king James) and of Penelope his wife, daughter and ſole heir of ſir Thomas Perrot, knt. by the lady Dorothie his wife, after counteſſe of Northumberland, daughter of Walter earle of Eſſex by the lady Letice his wife, after counteſſe of Leceſter.
He lived two years and two moneths, and deceaſed
the 12th of March, in the yeare of our Lord 1624, and here ſleeps with his fathers.

Here lyes the boy, whoſe infancy was ſuch
As promiſed more than's parents durſt deſire;
Yea, frighted them by promiſing too much
For earth to harbour long, as reaching higher
At thoſe perfections which he now enjoys
With his beſt Father—Father of us all!—
That own'd him from his cradle, and now joys
In his aſſumption cœleſtiall.
Stoop, Duſt and Aſhes; Oh! let heart and voyce
Of men and angels bleſſe the God of Gods,
That gives his grace in croſſes to rejoice;
Gain out of loſs! comfort out of his rods!
He gave his onely Sonne for us; and ſhall
Not this of ours be rendred at his call?
Adieu, God's darling! goe, poſſeſſe that crown,
That putts thy Godfather's diadems down.
The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken;
bleſſed be the name of the Lord!
Unico filiolo mnemoſynum poſui Robertus Nantonus."

4. On a grave-ſtone in the chancel:

"Here lyes the body of Anne Naunton, wife of William Naunton, eſquire, who deceaſed upon the 30th of October, 1628.
Nauntonam cœlo charam terriſque repoſcunt
Utraque: Cœlum animam, terra cadaver habet.
Chara vale ſoror Anna, Deo dilecta, ſuiſque!
Fleta jaces nobis, læta reſurge Deo.
Heaven's and Earth's love have ſhar'd Anne Naunton by repriſe:
Heaven hath her ſoule; Earth ſeized her corps, and here it lyes.
Adieu, dear ſiſter Anne, belov'd of God and his;
Th' art ſown to-night in teares, to-morrow riſe in bliſſe.
Dilectiſſ^{mae} ſorori mœrens repoſuit
Robertus de Naunton miles."

5. Againſt the North wall was a large and handſome monument for ſir Robert Naunton and his lady; his figure in armour, a piked beard and whiſkers, his head on a great book, on the top of which was,

"Omnis caro fænum; verbum autem D'ni in æternum."
Pſalm xl. 6.

His lady in a mantle and hair; at her head Latin and Greek texts; from Pſalm xvii. 16. Apoc. xiv. 13. &c.

"Here lye
Sir ROBERT NAUNTON, knight, ſomtime principal ſecretarie, and after maſter of the wards, and councellor of ſtate to our late king James, of happy memorie, and to our now
ſouerain lord king
Charles; and Dame Penelope his wife, ſole daughter and heire of ſir Thomas Perrot, knight; and of the lady Dorothie his wife, after counteſſe of Northumberland, wch ladie Dorothie was daughter of Walter earl of Eſſex;
and of the ladie Lettice his wife, firſt counteſſe of Eſſex, and after of Leiceſter."

On the top of the monument, VENI, D'NE JESU.

There was alſo at the top a great eſcutcheon of Naunton, with all his quarterings; impaling Perrot, with all his quarterings (fig. 6.) as follow:

1. Naunton.—2. Boivile.—3. Glanvil.
4. Or, an eagle diſplayed Gu. between ſix torteauxes.
5. Argent, a lion rampant Sable, a chief Gules; Aſhby of Loſeby.
6. Azure, two bars Or; Burdet.
7. Azure, ten bezants; 4, 3, 2, 1; Zouch, baron.
8. Ermine; Conan duke of Bretagne.
9. Gules, ten maſcles conjoined Or, 3.3.3.4. Rohan, earl.
10. Gules, a cinquefoil Ermine; Mellent, earl.
11. Gules, a pale Or; Grenteſmainell, earl.
12. Gules, a lion rampant Argent, crowned Or; Randal de Gernons, fourth earl of Cheſter.

---

[1] Vice-chamberlain and captain of the guard to king Henry VIII; and comptroller of the houſhold to king Edward VI.

[2] Plate LXXIV. fig. 3.

[3] Ibid. fig. 4.

[4] In the chancel of Otley church, Suffolk, againſt the wall on the North ſide, is a monument for "John Goſnold, eſq. third ſon of Robert Goſnold and of Urſula his wife, deſcended of the families of Naunton and Wingfield [daughter to William Naunton]. He was gentleman-uſher to queen Elizabeth and king James, and of the privy chamber to king Charles the Firſt. He married Winifred, daughter of Walter Windſor, third ſon of William lord Windſor, and of Margaret his wife, daughter of ſir Jeffrey Poole, knt. ſon of ſir Richard Poole and the lady Margaret counteſs of Saliſbury his wife, daughter of the right noble prince George duke of Clarence, brother to king Edward the Fourth. He died anno 1628, aged 60 years; and had iſſue, Robert his ſon and heir, four other ſons, and three daughters." Amongſt ſeveral other coats on this monument is that of Goſnold, Per pale embattled, Or and Azure, impaling Naunton; fig. 5.

[5] This epitaph is given very imperfectly by Mr. Weever, p. 756.

13. Or, three piles in point Gules; John (le Scott) fourth earl of Cheſter.

14. Argent, a lion rampant Azure, a chief Gules; Waltheof earl of Northumberland.

15. Azure, a wolf's head eraſed Argent; Lupus earl of Cheſter.

16. Gules, cruſuly of croſs croſslets Or, a wolf's head eraſed Argent; Richard ſecond earl of Cheſter.

17. Or, a lion rampant Gules, double queué Or; Randolph de Meſchines, third earl of Cheſter.

18. Azure, ſix garbs Or; 3. 2. 1; Hugh Keviliock, fifth earl of Cheſter.

19. Az. three garbs Or; Blundevile ſixth earl of Cheſter.

20. Gules, three fleurs de lis Or.

21. Azure, cruſuly of croſs croſslets Or, a lion rampant Argent, crowned Or; Brews.

22. Gules, two bends, the uppermoſt Or, the under one Argent; Earl of Hereford.

23. Gules, five lozenges in feſs Or; Newmarch.

24. Gules, two bends wavy Or; Brewer.

25. Azure, a griffin ſegreant Or.

26. Party per pale, Or and Vert, a lion rampant Gules, armed and langued Azure; Marſhall.

27. Or, five chevronels Gules; Strongbow.

28. Gules, three lions paſſant in pale Argent; Gifford.

29. Sable, three garbs Argent; Mac Mauro.

30. Arg. ſemé of mullets Sable, a lion rampant Gules.

31. Argent, a croſs engrailed Sable, between four Ermine ſpots.

32. Naunton, as 1.

The quarterings of Perrot in the impalement are,

1. Gules, three pears pendant Or; on a chief Argent a demi lion iſſuant Sable, Perrot.

2. Gules, three chevronels Argent.

3. Gules, three eaglets diſplayed Argent.

4. Sable, three caſtles triple-towered Argent.

5. Gules, a chevron between three holly leaves Arg.

6. Gules, on a bend Argent, five mullets Sable.

7. Gules, a falcon riſing Argent.

8. Gules, three ſalmons naiant Argent.

9. Gules, a chevron Ermine.

10. Ermine, on a bend Azure, three martlets Or.

11. Az. ſix lioncels rampant Arg. a canton Ermine.

12. Ermine, on a chief dancetté per pale Or and Gules, two roſes counterchanged.

13. Argent, a chevron between three mullets Gules.

14. Argent, on a chevron Gules, three fleurs de lis Or.

15. Quarterly, Argent and Gules, a bend of the ſecond.

16. Quarterly, per feſs indented, Or and Azure.

17. Sable, a ſaltire Argent.

18. Argent, on a croſs Azure five eſcallops Or.

19. Paly of ſix, Argent and Azure.

20. Azure, two lions paſſant Or.

21. Gules, a feſs dancetté between ſix croſs crofflets Or.

22. Azure, a chevron between three leopards' faces Or.

23. Az. fretty Gules, three lucies naiant in pale Arg.

24. Argent, on a croſs Gules four fuſils Argent, each charged with three bends wavy Azure.

25. Perrot, as 1.

Naunton's creſt, a baſiliſk proper; Perrot's, a parrot proper, holding in his claw a pear Or, with two leaves Vert.

On different parts of the monument the coat of Naunton was repeated 20 times; impaling as follows:

1. Argent, a chevron, and on a chief Azure three martlets Argent.

2. Quarterly, Gules and Or, in the firſt a mullet Argent.

3. Quarterly, Or and Sable, a lion paſſant, quarterly Gules and Argent; a chief indented Azure.

4. Gules, a bend between ſix croſſes fitchée Argent.

5. Quarterly, Azure and Gules, a croſs engrailed Ermine; Beveridge.

6. Gules, three bucks' heads caboſhed, Argent.

7. Quarterly, 1. and 4. Naunton; 2. Boivile; 3. Glanvil; impaling, Quarterly, 1. and 4. Gules and Arg. an eſcalop Or; 2. and 3. Gules, a lion rampant Arg.

8. Boivile, Glanvil, and Warren, with an eſcocheon of pretence of Vere, and his quarterings.

9. Or, an eagle diſplayed between ſix torteaux.

10. Aſhby, quarterly of ſix.

11. Perrot, with his quarterings.

12. Sab. a goat paſſ. between three trefoils ſlipped Arg.

13. Gules, three cups Argent.

14. Azure, three chevrons Or.

15. Gules, three fleurs de lis Or.

16. Gules, a chief Arg.; over all a lion rampant Or.

17. Sable, two ſwords proper, in ſaltire, between three fleurs de lis Or.

18. Argent, ſix martlets Sable.

19. Argent, three cinquefoils Gules.

20. Sable, a lion rampant, crowned Argent.

There were alſo theſe 20 coats impaling Naunton.

1. Arg. on three chevrons Gules, nine fleurs de lis Arg.

2. Ermine, on a chevron Sable, three creſcents Or.

3. Sable, a demi-lion rampant Argent.

4. Sable, a ſtar Or, between two flaunches Ermine.

5. Argent, on a chief Vert, two mullets Or.

6. Argent, ſemé of croſs croſslets, and three fleurs de lis Sable.

7. Ermine, a bend chequé Argent and Sable; in the ſiniſter chief an eagle diſplayed.

8. Quarterly, Or and Gules, a border Sable, charged with eſcalop ſhells Argent.

9. Sable, a croſs engrailed Or, in the firſt quarter a mullet Argent.

10. Sable, a bend between ſix billets Argent.

11. Argent, a fret Azure.

12. Argent, on a chevron per pale, Azure and Gules, three eſcalops Argent.

13. Argent, a feſs between three elm leaves Gules.

14. Argent, a chief Gules, over all a lion rampant Gules, crowned Or.

15. Gules, a fret Or.

16. Quarterly; 1. and 4. a bend engrailed between two cottiſes Or; 2. and 3. a chevron between three croſſes fitché Azure.

17. Party per pale indented, Or and Azure; on the firſt and third a pale lozengy Azure.

18. Arg. a feſs nebulé between three mullets Sable.

19. Argent, on a chevron between three martlets Sable, three cinquefoils Or.

20. Parted per pale crenelle, Or and Azure.

On the ſide:

"Cum patribus dormit patrias Nauntonus ad aras.
Laudari hic non vult; laus ſit honoſque Deo!
ΟΥΚ ΑΠΕΘΑΝΕΝ, ΑΛΛΑ ΚΑΘΕΥΔΕΙ. Luc. viii. 52."

"In peace down here I lye, with father's mine to ſleep;
Our bones, thou Lord moſt High, haſt number'd, and doſt keep."

On a large braſs plate, originally fixed in the wall, but which, after the demolition of the church, accompanied the ſale of the old materials, and is now in my poſſeſſion; and from which, to perpetuate the memory of the illuſtrious ſtateſman whoſe merit it ſtill records, impreſſions are here rolled off in Plate LXXV.

"DEFVNCTVS AD SVOS.

PARCITE LACRYMVLIS LACRYMARVM EX VALLE REDEMPTO;
QVI PECCATA MIHI ET LACRYMAS ABSTERSIT, IESVS:
NEC MORIOR; DVCE SED CHRISTO, DE MORTE TRIVMPHO.
NON IACET HIC TOTVS, SVPEREST NAVNTONIVS IPSE,
PARTE SVI MELIORE MANENS SVPER ASTRA PERENNIS.
FÆLICIESQVE ANIMAS, NON INFERIORA SECVTVS, MILES VT EMERITVS, SVPERA COMITATVR IN AVLA.
HOS ETIAM CINERES, PATRIIS QVOS CREDIDIT VRNIS,
DEPOSITOS, QVIN-IMMÒ SATOS, SATOR OPTIMVS, IDEM ET
MAXIMVS EXVTOS MORTALI FÆCE SVBINDE
ASSERET, ÆTERNOSQVE LVTO MELIORE RENATOS
RESTITVET GAVDENTI ANIMÆ, CŒLOQVE BEABIT.
SIC SOLET ILLE SVOS; SIC VOS QVOQVE TEMPORE VESTRO
COLLIGET ILLE SVIS MEMORI PIETATE COLENDVS.
ERGO VICEM NEC FLETE MEAM, NEC PLANGITE VESTRAM;
GAVDIA SED GAVDETE MEA, ET COGNOSCITE VESTRA. R. N.

'EJUSDEM VOTUM.

EN, CINIS IN CINEREM, INQVE SOLVM GENTILE REMIGRO; QVÔ FVERAM NATVS, REFEROR DENATVS EÔDEM.
QVAQVE RENATVS ERAM, SACRO RENOVANTE LAVACRO, CONDOR IN HAC ITIDEM, CONNATVRALE SEPVLCRVM.
HIC INTER PROAVOS GENIALI NACTVS IN ÆDE;
VNDE NOVOS DEMVM CVM PATRIBVS VSQVE RENASCAR
VIRIBVS EX CINERE HOC, VERÆ AD PRIMORDIA VITÆ.
HÆC FATEOR; MISERANTE DEO, NIL TALE MERENTI
SVNT INDVLTA MIHI, SVNT CONSIGNATA FIDELI
CREDENTI EX ANIMO; VOS HVNC, MEA CVRA, NEPOTES,
HVNC MECVM CELEBRATE DEVM; VOS ILLIVS ARAS
LAVDIBVS ACCVMVLATE; ILLI MEA SOLVITE VOTA
PRO VOBIS CONCEPTA; HVIC NAMQVE EGO MEQVE MEOSQVE, HVIC MEA, CONSECRAVI; HVIC VOS, HVIC VESTRA, DICAVI.
HIC MIHI FAS SPONDERE; ADERIT CERTISSIMVS VNVS
ANTIQVÆ VINDEX DOMVI: CONFIDITE TANTVM
FORTITER, INGENVI; ET FIDÒ SERVITE, FIDELES;
SIC ERIT HAC ALIQVIS RECIDIVA EX GEN[illegible] SVPERSTES,

ILLIVS AVGVSTVM SANCTE QVI NOMEN HONORET,
HIC PROPTER PATRIOS CINERES HAC ÆDE REPOSTOS, DVM PATRII CINERES SPERATÆ AD GAVDIA LVCIS
PLENA REVIVISCENT, VEGETI LÆTIQVE RESVRGENT, AGNOSCENTQVE SVOS IN SEDIBVS HISCE NEPOTES, NVMEN ADORANTES CASTE PER SÆCVLA SACRVM.
ANNVE, SANCTE PATER, FIENT HÆC OMNIA, FIENT! R.N."

"Sic pſalmum dicam Nomini tuo in ſæculum ſæculi, ut reddam vota mea de die in diem." Pſalm lxi. 9.

"Ego autem & domus mea ſerviemus Domino." Joſua xxiv. 15.

"Et anima mea illi vivet, & ſemen meum ſerviet ipſi." Pſ. xxi. 31.

"Scio enim quòd Redemptor meus vivit, & in noviſſimo die de terrâ ſurrecturus ſum. Et rurſum circundabor pelle meâ; & in carne meâ videbo Deum, quem viſurus ſum ego ipſe, & oculi mei conſpecturi ſunt." Job xix. 25, 26, 27.

"In reliquo, repoſita eſt mihi corona Juſtitiæ, quam reddet mihi Dominus in illâ die juſtus Judex." 2 Tim. iv. 8.

"Like Hart athirſt, for thee my ſoul doth long;
Like dying Swan, with thee I end my ſong.
Ut Cervus ſitiens te, te expetivi,
Ut Cygnus moriens te, te invocavi."

6. On a monument againſt the South wall, with figures of a man and his wife, and five ſons and five daughters kneeling under them; all which, with the inſcription, were in 1787 reduced to the broken ſtate in which they are correctly ſhewn in fig. 9. Over their heads, When Chriſt, who is our Life, ſhall appear, then ſhall we alſo appear with him in glory. Coloſſ. iii. 4.

Arms of Naunton, with 16 quarterings; impaling Pelle[1].

"Here lieth interred the corpſe of William Naunton, eſq. brother and heire to ſir Robert Naunton, ſometime one of his majeſty's juſtices of the peace for this countie, and patrone of this chappell, who departed this life this 11th day of July, anno Dñi 1635; and of Anne his wife, one of the daughters and heirs of Laurence Pelle, gent.[2] who departed this life the firſt day of November, 1628; which ſaid
William and Anne were married the 6th of Februarie, 1612; and had iſſue five ſonns and five daughters.
Robertus Naunton, arm', filius primogenitus, hoc monumentum poſuit, anno Dom. 1639."

7. On a monument againſt the South wall of the chancel[3]; which, with the inſcription, was reduced to the mutilated ſtate in which it is here correctly ſhewn (fig. 10.) Arms: Wingfield; impaling, Sable, a bend engrailed between three chaplets Argent, Deane. Each coat is repeated ſingle; Deane's in a lozenge. Creſt, a boar's head couped Sable, muzzled Or.

"Qui ortus ex antiquâ clariſſimâque familiâ, tot fortiſſimorũ equitum proventu per multa ſæcula feliciſſimâ, & Georgianæ periſcelidis inſignibus bis nobilitatâ,
ANTONIUS WINGFIELD, Baronettus[4], animi magnitudine, ſplendore morum, & omnibus mentis generoſæ dotibus,
tanto generi nequaquam impar,
in ipſo ætatis flore, celeri nimis
extinctus fato,
ſummum ſui apud omnes relinquens deſiderium.
Cujus benignitatem pauperes, nobiliores amicitiam gratiſſimam,
hoſpitalitatẽ omnes experti ſunt;
hic ſecundum Chriſti Redemptoris adventum expectat.
Obiit, anno ætatis ſuæ 33°, 31 Julii, 1638,
Suffolciæ vicecomes decimus-tertius, ex eâdem familiâ hæres qui illum magiſtratum in eodem comitatu geſſerunt; ſuſceptis ex chariſſimâ conjuge Annâ, fœminâ ſelectiſſimâ, Johannis
Deane, equitis aurati, filiâ primogenitâ (quam ſuperſtitem reliquit) ſeptẽ liberis, quorum duos infantes amiſit; vivis adhuc tribus filiis, Richardo, Antonio, & Johanne; filiabus binis, Annâ & Elizabethâ.
Hoc viro dilectiſſimo amoris monumentum poſuit conjux mœſtiſſima."

8. On a graveſtone in the chancel:

"Here lyeth the body of Henry Naunton, third ſon of William Naunton, of Lea-thringham, eſq.; who died the 11th of September, anno Dñi 1646, & anno ætatis 23."

In the church-yard:

1. "Robert Naunton[5], eſq. buried here the 30th day of January, anno Domini 1665, aged 52 years."

2. "Here lyeth interred the body of William Naunton, eſq. youngeſt ſon of Robert Naunton, eſq. of Letheringham Abbey in this pariſh; who departed this life the 21ſt day of Auguſt, in the year of our Lord 1758, in the 65th year of his age."

---

[1] Ermine, on a canton Azure, a pelican Or; fig. 7.

[2] Of Kettleborough.

[3] Funeral Certificate in the College of Arms, I. 24. p. 119. b.

[4] Anthony Wingfield, eſq. removing from Letheringham to Godyon in Hoo, was created a baronet May 17, 1627. He afterwards removed to Eaſton, where he had built a ſeat, which in the reign of king William III. was purchaſed by the earl of Rochford. Kirby's Suffolk Traveller, p. 99.

[5] It appears by the Viſitation of Suffolk, 1664, (in the College of Arms, D. 22. p. 95. b.) that this Robert Naunton, eſq. was three times married; and had children by each wife. By the firſt, Mary daughter and coheir of Arthur Cooke of Tharrington, he had one daughter, Theophila, married to John Leman (whoſe deſcendants at preſent enjoy the eſtates at Letheringham). By the ſecond, Jane daughter of Robert Spencer of Rendleſham, he had a ſon Robert, and a daughter Jane. By the third, Barbara daughter of Talmach Caſtle, he had four children, Charles, Eleanor, Anne, and Elizabeth.

P. 452. Pedigree of HODGES, of SYSTON.

Arms: Gules, a chevron Ermine, between three talbots heads Or, each iſſuing out of a mural coronet Azure. Creſt, a talbot's head Argent guttée de ſang, gorged with a collar Gules, rimmed and ringed Or, charged with three bezants; Plate LXVI. fig. 9.

Thomas Hodges, of Dorſetſhire. = Dorothy, daughter of Michael Poulteney, eſq. of Miſterton, grandfather to ſir John Poulteney, knt.

1. Francis Hodges, of Burton Overy. = Anne, daughter of William Warde, of Knighton.

1. Francis Hodges, of Syſton, ſon and heir, æt. 31, 1619. = Martha, daughter of Thomas Tokeby, of Carliſle.
2. Thomas.
Phœbe. = Tutho Thornton, of Newton Harcourt.
Anne. = Stephen Moye, of Coventry.

Thomas Hodges, ſon and heir, one year and a half old, 1619.

ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS IN FRAMLAND HUNDRED.

P. 13. Thomas Hilliard, gent. paid £10. in 1705 for the rectory of Abkettleby, as part of the jointure of the dowager Queen Catharine.

P. 18. In 1367, Geoffrey de Sutton, vicar of Plungar, releaſed to John the ſon of Thomas Drapur of Barkſton, and Emma his wife, and to their heirs for ever, all his lands and tenements, with their appurtenances, in Barkſton and Redmile. Teſtibus; Willo Schaveney de Barxton, Roberto fil' Johis, Roberto fil' ejuſdem Roberti, Willo de Denton & Robto de Cryche de eadem, & aliis. Dat' apud Barxton, in die Jovis prox' ante feſtum Sci Andree Apoſtoli, dñi regni regis Edwardi Tertii poſt Conqueſtum xl.° primo [1]."

P. 22. l. 17. Mr. Burton's MS copy, for "where I dwell," reads "where I lately dwelt."

P. 23, notes 11. and 12. read, "See Plate II. figures 17. and 21."

P. 27. In the Roſs pedigree, the wife of John fifth lord Ros ſhould be Mary inſtead of Margaret; and the wife of William ſixth lord Ros, Margaret inſtead of Mary: compare p. 35, note 13.

P. 32. a. l. 14. r. "Talington, co. Lincoln."

Ibid. l. 64. r. "upon the middle battlement of the North ſide of Stoke Albany church;" and add, "Over a large arched door-way of an antient farmhouſe at Stoke Albany are alſo the arms of Ros, emboſſed on ſtone, with another ſhield ſo much damaged that the charges cannot be diſtinguiſhed. On a buttreſs of the ſame houſe is a cypher of ſome of the Ros family, ſurmounted by a crown; and near it, on the ſame buttreſs, i.h̄.c.; both well emboſſed on the ſtones. The door-way is large, with ſtone heads at the ſpringing of the arches.

P. 49. "We need not croſs the ſea for examples of this kind; we have too many (God wot) at home. King James a great while was loth to believe there were witches: but that which happened to my lord Francis of Rutland's children convinced him; who were bewitched by an old woman that was ſervant at Belvoir caſtle; but, being diſpleaſed, ſhe contracted with the devil (who converſed with her in form of a cat, whom ſhe called Rutterkin), to make away with thoſe children, out of mere malignity and thirſt of revenge. But, ſince the beginning of theſe unnatural wars, there may be a cloud of witneſſes produced for the proof of this black tenet; for, within the compaſs of two years, near upon 300 witches were arraigned, and the major part executed in Eſſex and Suffolk only. Scotland ſwarms with them now more than ever, and perſons of good quality executed daily [2]."

P. 59. In 1676, when a bill paſſed with an oath in it to this effect, "I A. B. do declare, that it is not lawful, upon any pretence whatever, to take up arms againſt the king, &c." the earl of Rutland voted againſt it by proxy, as did ſeveral other peers.

P. 77. In a writ of ſummons to a parliament, bearing date at Wodeſtoke 49 Hen. III. amongſt the religious prelates of Leiceſterſhire, the prior of Belvoir is inſerted; viz. "abbati de Leiceſtr', priori de Belvoir, priori de Landâ, priori de Oſolveſton, & abbati de Croxton [3]."

Mr. Burton adds, "At this town was born John de Bever, ſo called of his birth-place here, whom Leland termeth by the two conceited names, Caſtoreus and Fiberius, both derivatites from the Latin name of the beaſt called a Bever. He was a monk of the abbey of Weſtminſter, where he wrote an hiſtory from Brute to the year 1306, anno 35 of king Edward I. which he called "Chronicorum Editio;" and another book of "Acts," done in his own houſe of Weſtminſter. He lived in the reign of king Edward I. and king Edward II. as Bale [4] writeth. This man took great pains in the finding out of the Antiquities of that famous king Arthur (upon whoſe authority for the ſame Leland much relieth, both in his "Aſſertio pro rege Arthuro" and in his "Cygnea Cantio"); to which it ſeems he was ſo much affected, that (as I find) he penned the feigned ſtory of Arthur King of Great Britain and of the Knights of the Round Table, whereof I once ſaw an old manuſcript, much differing in phraſe from that which is now current in print [5]; a work, in my conceit, of ſmall pleaſure and leſs profit, of which kind infinite are now a-days extant, as the ſtory of Amadis of Gaul [6], Don Roſiclere, or Donzel del Phebo, both firſt written in Spaniſh, afterwards tranſlated into French, Palmerin de Oliva, Palmudos, Primaleon, in many parts written in Italian. Of later times, Don Quixote, and [Gulman d'] Alfarache in Spaniſh, and infinite more of the ſame ſtrain, ariſing out of the phantaſtical brains of idle monks and cloiſtered friers, whoſe ſtupend fictions and hyperbolical narrations, beyond all likelihood or ſhew of probability, ſavouring of no kind of learning or invention (other than perhaps ſome few quaint lines and wanton ſpeeches), do beſot and gull idle and illiterate readers with fooliſh chimeras and illuſive conceits; ſo that it were to be wiſhed they were moſt of them fired; for that they better not the reader, but cauſe much [7] diſtraction and loſs of time, which in more profitable ſtudies might be better ſpent.

"But hereby I do not take upon me to cenſure all feigned ſtories; for I muſt juſtly and truly acknowledge that there are many worthily and learnedly penned, whoſe mythology, well conſidered, will afford variety of profit and content. As that excellent Hiſtory of Orlando Inamorato, penned by that noble and ingenious Matheo Maria Boiardo count di Scandiano in Lombardy, ſuccenturiated by like learned in each point Ludovico Arioſto, and by him called Orlando Furioſo, the Decamerone of Giovani Boccaccio, caſtrated by the Council of Trent, for that he jerked too free at the pleaſant recreations of thoſe holy fathers. The Hecatomithi of Giovanni Bapt. Giraldo Cinthio; and of our countrymen, Geffrey Chaucer's Hiſtories and Tales, ſir Philip Sidney's Arcadia, Mr. Edmund Spenſer's Fairy Queen, Joſeph Barclay's Argenis, and Guy of Warwick, penned by Mr. Samuel Verſtegan, alias Rowlandes, and divers others of the ſame ſort."

P. 89. In 1582, the tithes and manerial demeſnes of Bottesford, worth 37*s*. 8*d*.; and the tithes of Plungar, worth 5*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*.; were demiſed to John Packinton; and in 1581, a meſſuage at Bottesford, worth 47*s*. 4*d*. rent, to ſir Henry Cobham, knt. [8]

P. 95. "Dr. Stukeley ſhewed the Society of Antiquaries, in 1726, the braſs matrix of a ſeal, circumſcribed "Sigillum capelle Sci Jacobi in villa de Bottlesforth;" perhaps Bottesford in Leiceſterſhire, the birth-place of the duke of Rutland's family [9]."

P. 104. Eaſtthorpe is not noticed in Mr. Burton's printed book; but in his MS. he calls it "a village belonging to Bottesford, ſome time the inheritance of the lords Ros, now (1636) belonging to the earl of Rutland, ſaving one freehold in the ſame. The Hoſpital of St. John of Jeruſalem had ſome lands in this town, as appeareth by the Rental mentioned in Old Dalby [10].

---

[1] From the original deed in my poſſeſſion.

[2] Howell's Letters to Sir Edward Spencer, 1647; and Harl. MSS. 4275. 119.

[3] Burton, MS.

[4] Cent. 4. p. 361.

[5] Of the ſame opinion is Dr. Hakewell in his "Apology of the Power and Providence of God," fol. 32. edit. 2; and Dr. Key in his Antiquit. Cantabr. fol. 53.

[6] Of his hiſtory I had three large parts in Spaniſh, in folio, taken at the ſack of Calais 1596.

[7] Favin, Theatre of Honour, 2d part, p. 419.

[8] Leaſes in the Augmentation Office.

[9] Minutes of the Society of Antiquaries.

[10] See before, p. 245.

P. 105. "William Menitdurand was ſeiſed of the manor of Normanton; and, after revolting from the king's allegiance, returned into Normandy; after whoſe departure, king John granted it to William de Colvile for 20 marks and a palfrey[1].

P. 108. Add to the rectors of Braunſton,
Timothy Nicholſon[2], A. M. 6 March, 1637.
Thomas Hirſt[3], M. A. 3 Dec. 1638.

P. 123. The new-houſe of ſir William Manners at Buckminſter is now completed. And it would be injuſtice to living merit, were we not to notice, with due praiſe, an elegant collection of poems by Lady Manners; of which a ſpecimen ſhall here be given, as appropriate to the Hiſtory of the County:

"WRITTEN ON LEICESTER ABBEY.

Hail venerable walls! whoſe lonely round
Still ſhows the ſtranger what you once have been,
Though now with tufts of flowering elder crown'd,
And vivid ivy's never-fading green.

Thy priſtine glories are for ever fled,
Fled the unbounded power that once was thine;
Nor ever more ſhall rapt Devotion tread
With votive offerings round thy hallow'd ſhrine.

But where the cloiſter'd train, with Anthems clear,
In long proceſſion ſwept the vaulted aile,
Where pale Repentance dropp'd the pious tear,
And Faith 'midſt dying agonies could ſmile;

Nought now but bleating flocks are ſeen to ſtray,
Or browzing oxen from the ploughſhare led;
Or the rude peaſant, who at cloſe of day
Regardleſs paſſes o'er the ſilent dead.

The nightly bat amid the ruins flits;
The clamorous daw here builds her airy neſt;
While with diſcordant notes the ſcreech-owl ſits,
Foreboding woes to Superſtition's breaſt.

Can the reflective mind unmov'd remain,
Where every view invites the moral lay;
And kindly warns the arrogant and vain
Their boaſted honours muſt alike decay?

Methinks, as o'er theſe graſs-grown tombs I tread,
New ſhadowy forms in ſolemn order riſe;
The Warrior here erects his creſted head;
And here the Stateſman meets my wondering eyes.

For not alone the undiſtinguiſh'd crowd
Of Monks in this forſaken ſcene are laid;
Here too the children of Ambition bow'd,
And Death's inevitable tribute paid.

Tir'd with contention and the din of arms,
Here Leiceſter's earl[4], once turbulent and bold,
Sought in monaſtic gloom thoſe purer charms
Which camps or palaces could ne'er unfold.

Oft on the banks of Soar[5] he penſive trod,
And ſwell'd the rapid current with his tears,
While he beſought a long-neglected God
To blot the errors of his former years.

Rais'd by his care the ſculptur'd arches bend;
The maſſive columns form the lengthen'd aile;
In Gothic ſtate the lofty towers aſcend,
And proudly crown the conſecrated pile.

Though in thoſe ruder ages bigot zeal
Too oft miſled the viſionary mind,
And round Religion threw a gloomy veil,
Condemning joys which Providence deſign'd:

Yet far more happy for the human race
Thoſe rigid laws that deem'd all pleaſures crimes,
Than the licentious precepts which debaſe
The falſe Philoſophy of modern times.

Within theſe hoſpitable walls conceal'd,
Unhappy Segrave[6] ſhunn'd the barons' hate;
And in ſome cell obſcure his eyes he ſeal'd,
Who uncontroul'd had rul'd the king and ſtate.

A more illuſtrious mourner yet behold!
Lo, haughty Wolſey[7]! humbled to the duſt!
Hear him his fortune's ſad reverſe unfold!
And rue the hour he plac'd in Kings his truſt!

How chang'd from him, who, inſolent and proud,
The dazzling pomp of Majeſty outſhone!
Amid whoſe ſuite attendant nobles bow'd,
Rais'd by his ſmiles, or by his frowns undone!

From him, who, foremoſt in the glitt'ring train,
At Guiſnes and Bruges boundleſs power diſplay'd;
Where rival Kings his favour ſought to gain,
And more than princely honours to him paid.

No more by vain proſperity miſled,
To brighter objects here he turn'd his mind;
With reſignation bow'd his hoary head,
And, dying, own'd his cup of ſorrow kind.

Who, then, ſince ſuch the end of human power,
Would waſte in courts the vigour of their prime?
Or loſe one ſhort ineſtimable hour,
That fills the leſſening meaſure of their time?

Since wealth and grandeur in poſſeſſion cloy,
And oft with unſuſpected ſwiftneſs part,
With wiſer aim, O Man! thy thoughts employ
To cultivate the mind, to mend the heart.

With awful wonder mark yon vaulted ſky;
Obſerve thoſe ponderous planets how they roll;
The vaſt expanſe of endleſs ſpace deſcry,
And trembling to its Maker lift thy ſoul:

Turn, then, to ſublunary ſcenes thine eyes,
Behold what trifles mortals toil to gain;
And aſk thy mind if thoſe they greateſt prize
Can merit aught but pity and diſdain."

P. 129. Mr. Burton, in 1636, ſays, "This manor now belongeth to ſir Edward Hartopp, bart. by the ſame conveyance as Buckminſter."

Ibid. In 1568, certain lands and tenements at Sewſterne, worth 13*s.* 4*d.* were demiſed for 21 years to —— Cope; in 1578, other lands, worth 22*s.* to John Place; in 1582, tenements and lands in Sewſterne, worth 36*s.* and other lands at Buckminſter and Sewſterne, worth 21*s.* 8*d.* to Charles Sledd; in 1587, lands and tenements, parcel of the manor of Buckminſter and Sewſterne, to Thomas Keyes; and in 1589, a court-baron at Backminſter and Sewſterne, worth £11. 3*s.* 4*d.* to Thomas Beverley and others[8].

P. 133. In 1595, a capital meſſuage, with ſeveral cottages and lands in Claxton, parcel of the manor, of the yearly rent of £18. 3*s.* 8*d.* were granted to Nicholas Seyneberde; and, July 15, 1612, lands and tenements in Claxton, late parcel of the priory of Belvoir, to the annual value of 36*s.* 8*d.* were paſſed in fee ſimple to Richard Chamberleyne, eſq.

P. 135. In 1226, Ernald vicar of Claxton, and in 1366 William Warner, alſo vicar, was admitted in fraternitatem at Belvoir priory[9].

In 1705, John Moore paid £18. 0*s.* 3*d.* for the rectory of Claxton, parcel of the jointure of the dowager queen Catharine.

P. 142. The pedigree of the Frewens will be illuſtrated by the following ſeries of epitaphs[10]:

On a flat ſtone in the chancel of Northiam church:
"John Frewen rector, ob. 1628."

On a flat ſtone in the nave:
"Thankfull F. 1656."

On painted glaſs in the Eaſt window of the North aile, are the following verſes, composed by Dr. Humphreys[11]:
"Acceptus Frewen, Coll. Magdal. Præſes, & idem Litchfield & Covent. Præſul, poſt Eborac. Archè . . ."

In the church-yard:
"Hic requieſcit in ſpe felicis reſurrectionis
Thomas Frewen, Joan. F. Joan. N.
hujus eccleſiæ de Northiam, cui integro penè ſeculo præfuerunt, poſt eorum patremque rector. Obiit 25 Jan. anno Dñi
1676-7, ætatis ſuæ 47.
Maria uxor mœſtiſſima mœrens poſuit.
Reſurgam."

On a marble monument affixed to the North wall of the chancel, in the centre of the top, is this coat: Quarterly, 1. and 4. Frewen; 2. Quarterly, 1. and 4. Azure, three whales' heads couped Or, 2. and 1.; 2. and 3. Argent, a croſs croſſlet fitchy; impaling, Argent, three bends ſiniſter[12].

"Near this place lye interred the bodies of ſir Edward Frewen, of Brickwall in this pariſh, and dame Selina his wife, daughter of John Godſchall, of Eaſt

---

[1] Burton, MS.
[2] Rymer, vol. XX. p. 205; from Pat. 13 Car. I.
[3] Pat. 14 Car. I.
[4] Robert Boſſu earl of Leiceſter, the founder of this abbey, who became a regular canon here, and died and was buried in this abbey in 1168. See vol. I. p. 254.
[5] The name of a river at Leiceſter.
[6] The miniſter of Henry III. who alſo became a regular canon of this houſe, and died here in 1241. See vol. I. p. 261; and vol. III. p. 408.
[7] Wolſey alſo died at this abbey. See his portrait, and ſome affecting particulars of the laſt hours of his life, vol. I. p. 272.
[8] Leaſes in the Augmentation Office.
[9] Appendix, p. 24.
[10] Sir William Burrell's Collections for Suſſex, in the Britiſh Muſeum, 5697; Monumental Inſcriptions; p. 170.
[11] Le Neve's Life of the Archbiſhops, vol. I. part 2. p. 139.
[12] Plate LXX. fig. 27.

Shene, in the county of Surrey, eſq. She departed this life ſuddenly, at Hawkurſt in Kent, November 25, 1714, aged 54 years. He at Brickwall, after a long illneſs, Oct. 8, A. D. 1723, in the 62d year of his age. They had iſſue 3 ſons and 2 daughters; whereof Jane the eldeſt married William Ives, eſq. of Braden in Northamptonſhire, eſq. and is ſince deceaſed without iſſue; and Selina the youngeſt, now the wife of John Turner, of Cold Overton-hall in Leiceſterſhire, eſq. Of the ſons, John and Edward died in their minority; and Thomas Frewen, eſq. the only ſurvivor, who married Martha, only daughter of Henry Turner, eſq. ſerjeant-at-law, cauſed this monument to be erected in memory of the beſt of parents, A. D. 1727.

"In the ſame vault lye alſo the remains of Stephen Frewen, eſq. grandfather of the ſaid ſir Edward Frewen, who was buried Sept. 16, 1679. May Poſterity imitate their good example; and may they all receive the reward of the Righteous at the laſt day!"

On a monument of white and veined marble, affixed to the North aile of the chancel, at the top whereof in the centre is this coat; Ermine, three bars Azure, in chief a demi-lion Gules; impaling, Ermine, a croſs Sable, charged with five fer de moulin Argent[1].

"Reader, if you regard truth and ſincerity, and deteſt flattery, approach this monument with reverence and regret. It is ſacred to the valuable memory of Thomas Frewen, late of Brickwall, eſq. who merited from all men the deſireable character of a faithful friend, a juſt and worthy gentleman, exact in the diſcharge of his duty as an affectionate huſband and tender parent. He left iſſue ſurviving, only one ſon, Thomas Frewen, eſq. who erected this marble in memorial of the beſt of fathers. He departed this life on April the third, 1738, in the 51ſt year of his age.

"Thomas Frewen, eſq. grandfather of the ſaid Thomas Frewen, died on September the eighth, 1702, in the 72d year of his age; and lies interred at Putney in the county of Surrey, together with his late wife dame Jane Wymondeſold, relict of ſir Daws Wymondeſold, knt. and daughter of ſir Robert Cooke, of Hynam in Glouceſterſhire. She died June the 20th, 1718, ætat. 70 years."

On a flat ſtone in the chancel:

"Hic ſitus eſt vir reverendus Thankfull Frewen, hujus eccleſiæ (poſt patrem, avum, proavumque) per quinquaginta ſex annos rector ſanctiſſimus & doctiſſimus; pietatis erga Deum, amoris erga ſuos & proximos, atque charitatis erga egenos, perilluſtre exemplum: munere ad amuſſim præſtando, literaria opera, & annis confectus, obiit 2do Septembris, 1749, anno ætatis 81mo.
Etiam hic depoſitæ ſunt reliquiæ Saræ, conjugis chariſſimæ Lucæ Spencer, de Cranbrook, generoſi, quæ obiit 4to Auguſti, 1734, anno ætatis ſuæ 62do."

On a flat grave-ſtone in Fairleigh church, Suſſex:

"P. M. S.
Reverendi viri
Stephani Frewen, A. M.
hujuſce eccleſiæ
fidi & ſeduli per xxv annos vicarii, necnon
Annæ dilectiſſimæ conjugis,
ex antiquo Daviſiorum ſtemmate
Londini oriundæ.
Obiit { Ille Junii 18°, A. D. 1726, ætat. 49°.
Illa Dec. 24, A. D. 1705, ætat. 37°.
Maria filia unica & hæres
parentibus optimè meritis
H. M. M. P."

P. 144. The petrified ſhell-fiſh is the helmintholithus, Gryphites of Linnæus, Syſt. Naturæ. It is an oyſter not found recent; and will be more particularly deſcribed in the Natural Hiſtory.

P. 145. On the 29th of June, 1611, a virgate of land, with an adjoining cloſe in Coſton, let to William Loſſe at 6*s*. a year; another virgate, with a tenement, &c. to Robert Ewares, at 18*s*.[2] late parcel of the priory of Tutbury, were ſurrendered to the king.

Ibid. Sept. 23, 1366, Robert de Braybroke (ſon of ſir Gerard Braybroke, knt. of Braybroke caſtle, co. Northampton) held the rectory of Coſton, then called Colyſton, and taxed at eleven marks, with the reverſion of a prebend in the church of York[3]; which he obtained the ſame year, Nov. 9, on the death of Robert de Walkington[4]. He had before this the rectory of Hinton near Cambridge, which he extorted from the fellows of Peter-houſe, by virtue of the pope's proviſo, about 1360; and in 1379 (being then prebendary of All Saints in the church of Lincoln) exchanged the ſame for the rectory of Girton; and that too, a little after, for Horſeman in the dioceſe of Lincoln. He was made prebendary of Fridaythorp, in the church of York, Nov. 11, 1366; and after that of Lichfield. He exchanged the prebend at York for the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and the prebendary of Combe Prima in the church of Wells, March 3, 1377. In like manner he exchanged the archdeaconry of Cornwall for the rectory of Bideford July 26, 1381. From a canon reſidentiary he was confirmed dean of Sarum by the biſhop Feb. 28, 1380. He was promoted to the ſee of London by the bull of pope Urban, Sept. 9, 1381; was conſecrated at Lambeth on the 5th of January following, and received his ſpirituals the next day, but his temporals on the 17th of December before. In September, 1382, he was made lord chancellor, but (through the reſentment of John of Gaunt) held not that place above half a year. In 1386 he ordained that the days of the Converſion and Commemoration of St. Paul ſhould be celebrated throughout his dioceſe equally with the higheſt feſtivals. In 1390, he united and incorporated ſeveral chantries in the church of St. Paul, by reaſon of the incompetency of their revenues. In 1393 he decreed, that all the clergy of his dioceſe, in their prieſtly ornaments, ſhould every year be preſent in St. Paul's church in proceſſion on the days of the Converſion and Commemoration of St. Paul. In this church an ill cuſtom for many years paſt had prevailed, which was this: The canons reſidentiary would admit no canon to reſidence, unleſs he would expend 1000, 800, or 700 marks, in the firſt year after his admiſſion, in eating and drinking, and other exceſſive and ſuperfluous expences. This cuſtom the biſhop had in vain for ſome time attempted to remedy. At laſt, this matter, by conſent of the biſhop and reſidentiaries, being referred to the king, he interpoſed his ſentence April 16, 1399, whereby he enjoined, that for the future the reſidence in the church of St. Paul ſhould be obſerved according to the form of the ſtatutes and uſe of the church of Sarum. Authors differ much about the time of his death; but, according to the trueſt account, which appears by his epitaph, he died Aug. 27, 1405, and was buried in St. Paul's church; where, in the middle of the Lady[5] chapel, on a ſlab under a rich canopy, was placed a braſs figure of him, habited in pontificalibus, the hem and facing richly embroidered; his right hand in a poſture of benediction, his left holding his croſier. On two of the prior ſhields London, and ſix maſcles voided.

Round the ledge of the ſlab was this inſcriptio

"Orate pro anima Roberti Braybroke, quondam epiſcopi iſtius eccleſie; cujus corpus hic tumulatur;
qui obiit viceſimo ſeptimo die menſis Auguſti, anno gratie milleſimo quadraginteſimo quinto; cujus anime et omnium fidelium, propitietur Deus. Amen."

"After this church was laid waſte by that dreadful fire in 1666," ſays Mr. Newcourt, "there was a body dug up in the place where this biſhop was buried, whole and uncorrupt, as if it had been lately buried. I ſaw it myſelf, and handled it[6]; it was very light, and had hair on the face, and was probably the body of this very biſhop, which is now immured in the new buildings of the church. One thing more of mine own obſervation I cannot omit, which is this: though theſe ſculptures in braſs were by ſacrilegious hands torn away from all the tombs in the church; yet this alone, which was one of the coſtlieſt, having the biſhop's effigies in braſs at length engraven upon it in his epiſcopal habit, and his epitaph in braſs likewiſe inſcribed about it[1], was left untouched, till it was buried in the ruins by that dreadful fire, notwithſtanding it was the moſt conſpicuous of any; the lord-mayor and his brethren, and the greateſt part of the congregation paſſing over it every Sunday as they came to hear ſermons there, after it was made a preaching-place for the ſaints of thoſe times, who entered not in at the door, but, like thieves and robbers, came in at the window, where they had made one[2].

---

[1] Plate LXX. fig. 28.

[2] See vol. I. p. cxli.

[3] Reg. Langham, archiep. Cantuar.

[4] Willis, Cathedrals, vol. p. 132.

[5] So Godwin, p. 186. In the choir, Dugdale.

[6] A very ridiculous and groſsly indecent ſtory relative to this diſcovery is inſerted in the Antiquarian Repertory, vol. II. p. 57.

P. 149. Samuel Beilby, D. D. rector of Folkton in Yorkſhire, and vicar of Croxton Kyriel, was chaplain to the late duke of Rutland. He married a daughter of the Rev. Dr. Raſtall, prebendary of Normanton, who was niece to ſir Richard Heron, bart. Dr. Beilby publiſhed three ſingle Sermons, which were well adapted to their reſpective occaſions: 1. "A Sermon preached in the cathedral at York, July 29, 1781, at the Aſſizes," 8vo. 2. "On Religious Toleration, preached in the Church of Bewneſs, upon Windermere, Weſtmoreland, 1790," 4to. 3. "A Sermon, preached in the Church of Croxton Kyriel, Leiceſterſhire, March 15, 1795," 4to.

P. 152. Mr. Burton corrects, "At what time (as it is reported by Ralph de Coggeſhall and Ralph Niger) as king John came from Swineſted Abbey in Lincolnſhire (viſited with ſickneſs) unto the caſtle of Newarke, where he died; the abbot of this houſe, being very expert in phyſick, was then phyſician to the king; who cauſed the king's dead body to be embalmed, and ſo to be conveyed to Worceſter, according to his deſire, there to be interred near St. Wolſtan. The bowels of the king he buried in this abbey, to which this king had been before a benefactor, having before given to this houſe lands to the yearly value of £10.—It is obſerved, by Matthew of Weſtminſter[3], that the king died ſo hateful to his nobles, ſo deſtitute of treaſure, friends, and attendants, and that he had not left him ſo much ground in peace as would ſerve for his burial; that not without miſcauſe he was called John without land. The like is reported of king William the Conqueror by William of Poictiers, archdeacon of Luxow in France, in a little fragment[4] of the life of the ſaid king (ſet forth, amongſt others, by Mr. Camden in 1603), that after the ſaid king was departed at Roan in Normandy, no ſooner breath was gone from him, but that he was forſaken of all, as well his nobility as his own ſervants, his treaſure ſtolen away, his body being left almoſt naked in the middle of the floor, inſomuch that the author falleth into this apoſtrophe: Cernite, precor, omnes qualis eſt mundana fides. And when the corpſe was to be buried in the abbey of Caen, the place was challenged by one Aſceline[5], as wrongfully and violently taken from his anceſtors, for which compoſition was firſt made before the funeral could be ſolemnized; whereupon the ſaid author concludeth, that he that but a little before was ſo potent and warlike, and feared in ſo many places, was now forſaken of all, and left naked on the ground; he that erſt was maſter of ſo much treaſure, was for his funeral beholden to other mens' purſes; and he that was governor ſo lately over ſo many countries and cities, wanted at his death a free piece of ground for his body to be buried in. And laſtly, his reſtleſs bones, which ſo hardly had obtained entombing, did, about 500 years after, unluckily leave it again; for Monſieur Peter de Martigny, abbot of Caen and biſhop of Caſtres, out of a curious deſire of ſatisfaction, cauſed his tomb to be broken open, where he found upon a wall within the vault an epitaph in a plate of braſs[6]. And after that, in the year 1652, when admiral Chaſtillion, conducting the remnant of thoſe that eſcaped at the battle of Dreux, took the city of Caen, certain rude ſoldiers did beat down and utterly deface that noble monument of that renowned Conqueror; and when they could find no treaſure (which they falſely ſurmiſed had been laid up there) they pulled up the bones, and ſpitefully threw them away.

"Abbot of this houſe was William de Houghton, a learned doctor in divinity, who beſtowed much coſt in the repair of his houſe, and eſpecially of the library, to which he gave many books; amongſt the reſt he gave a large Bible, in nine volumes, very fair written in vellum, and learnedly gloſſed on by Solomon archdeacon of Leiceſter; for which Bible he paid fifty marks ſterling. He died in the ſecond year of king Edward the Firſt, 1274, and was here buried; as I find in a little old fragment: which alſo is briefly remembered by John Stowe, in his Annals of the beginning of king Edward the Firſt's reign."

P. 154. Pope Nicholas's Valor ſtates, that "Eccleſia de Lound eſt abbatis de Croxton; & nullum aliud habet beneficium eccleſiaſticum; VII marc'. Hence it appears that Lound was then their only benefice. Others, as we have ſhewn, were afterwards added to it.

P. 157. See in vol. I. p. lxxxiii. the revenues and expenditure of Croxton abbey.

Ibid. William was abbot here before 1190.

Euſtace was elected abbot in 1241[7].

P. 167. Under Eaſtwell, Mr. Burton adds, "It ſhould ſeem that there is another manor here; for that 1 Jac. Roger earl of Rutland aliened a manor here to John Woring."

Ibid. Several meſſuages or tenements, a capital meſſuage or manor-houſe, cottage, mill, and lands, with their appurtenances, in the counties of Derby and Leiceſter, the property of Rowland Eyre, eſq. (who had been declared a traitor by the then uſurping powers) were ſold to the Earl of Rutland, 9 May, 1653, for 5392*l.* 15*s.* 8½*d.*[8]

P. 177. The following letter has been found, among ſome looſe papers of Mr. Burton, ſince the articles on Edmondthorpe and Withcote were printed:

"To the worſhipful and his much reſpected friend
William Burton, eſq. at Lindley, give theſe.

"Worthy Sir, your titles put me to the bluſh; it were my happineſs to deſerve the leaſt of them; but it is your pleaſure to ſtyle me what I ſhould be. I have made bold to interline your note, to ſhew the houſe from whence I come; concerning which place may it pleaſe you farther to know that there is therein as beautiful a little church as I have ſeen, built alſo by mine anceſtors, as I have heard. The probability grows by the reſemblance with the other buildings, as alſo by the windows being all alike enriched with large proportions of all the Apoſtles and ſome of the Prophets; and under every of them the ſeveral pictures and arms, in coloured glaſs, of my great grandfathers William Smith and Roger Ratcliffe, and of my great grandmother Aſhby, wife unto them both; and alſo of my grandfather John Smith, and Dorothy his wife, my grandmother, with their ſeveral coats; wherein my great grandfather Smith and his wife are ranked in the firſt place. They are the richeſt and faireſt windows for ſuch proportions and ornaments that ever I ſaw; their ſeveral coats are alſo engraven in ſtone at the upper end of the chancel; where are alſo monuments of all the ſaid parties, but plain; and alſo of Ambroſe Smith, eſq. whoſe heir is now owner thereof. The roof alſo of all the ſaid church is, and always has been, very finely painted. I have returned this incloſed note, together with the pedigree, becauſe, if I miſtake not, the ſeveral coats added unto Aſhby's coat are not in both alike, whereby I cannot underſtand the ſeveral coats, which I intreat may be more fully explained to my underſtanding; and if you pleaſe to keep the pedigree any longer you may. I find in your book, fol. 183. and 185. that Aſhby married Elizabeth, the daughter and heir of Burdet of Loſeby, by whom he had Loſeby; the which Burdet, in this your note, I find to be John Burdet; and in your book, fol. 141. I find that John Burdet, knight, had iſſue Elizabeth his daughter and heir, who, 7 Henry V, married ſir Humphrey Stafford, knight, and there that pedigree ends; ſo that I do not find the pedigree of Burdet to be drawn to match with Aſhby, which, as it ſeems, fol. 185, was temp. Edward IV. I find alſo, fol. 185, that Burdet of Loſeby married the daughter and heir of Roger le Zouch; but yet I cannot find in the pedigree of the Zouches, fol. 19, that the line is drawn down ſo far as to match with the Burdets; both which (if you pleaſe) I deſire may be done, or elſe it may ſtand as a bar and objection againſt the deriving of our pedigree from thoſe families. If you think it requiſite to have my wife's father's coat, with the ſeveral coats annexed thereunto, I will ſend it to you in London. I have ſent you a ſmall remembrance, preſuming to be ſtill troubleſome unto you, relying upon your love and kindneſs herein; whom you ſhall ever find, Yours, and yours ready to requite, ROGER SMITH.

---

[1] See Dugdale's St. Paul's, p. 84 (where a repreſentation of it is given); and Gough's Sepulchral Monuments, vol. II. p. 15.

[2] Newcourt, vol. I. p. 20.

[3] Flores Hiſtor. fol. 78. col. a. lib. 2.

[4] Fragmentum de Willielmo Conqueſtore, fol. 33.

[5] William de Malmeſbury, 63. b; Eadmerus, lib. 1. Nov. 13; William de Newburgh, lib. 1. cap. 2.

[6] Andrew Thevet, in his Coſmography, writing of Caen. See the detail of all theſe ſeveral openings, in Ducarel's Anglo-Norman Antiquities, p. 51—56, fol. edit.

[7] Reg. Groſſeteſte, Pont. 7.

[8] From a MS. in the Bodleian Library, intituled "Purchaſers, &c. of the Eſtates of the Royaliſts, in the years 1651—1654."

Edmondthorpe, Oct. 16, 1632.

"I cannot but approve exceeding well of what you have ſaid concerning Edmondthorpe, as alſo of your intentions for Withcock; whereof when you ſhall treat, my deſire is, in your diſcourſe of our family as in your judgement you ſhall think beſt, that you would be pleaſed to ſet forth in particular the deſcent of Aſhby from Burdet, and Burdet from Zouch, &c."

The articles on Edmondthorpe and Withcote, above alluded to, ſhall be tranſcribed from the hand-writing of Mr. Burton.

"The now lord of the manor of Edmondthorpe is the grave and religious ſir Roger Smith, knt. one of the juſtices of this county, whoſe worthy parts are adorned with the worth of his deſcent; whoſe great grandfather William Smith, alias Heriz, of Withcock, in this county, eſq. married Katharine, the daughter of William Aſhby, of Loſeby in this county, eſq. whoſe anceſtor married with the heir-general of John Burdet, of Loſeby, eſq. who married Elizabeth, ſole daughter and heir of ſir Roger Zouch, of Lubbeſthorpe in this county, knt. whoſe lineal anceſtor Alan viſcount of Rohan in Little Brittaine in France, married Conſtance, daughter of Conan duke of Brittaine, by Maud his wife, daughter of Henry the firſt king of England, as will appear in the pedigree of Zouch in Aſhby-la-Zouch and Lubbeſthorpe.

"The firſt wife of the ſaid ſir Roger Smith was Jane eldeſt daughter of ſir Edward Heron, that learned lawyer, and one of the barons of the Exchequer; by whom he had iſſue two daughters, Aletheia and Jane; and one ſon named Edward, who married the eldeſt daughter of ſir Edward Heron, knight of the Bath, whoſe mother was Anne, daughter of ſir Henry Cobham, knt. brother to the lord Cobham lord chamberlain, and lord-warden of the cinque-ports, and father of the now lord Cobham. His ſecond wife was Anne daughter of Thomas Goodman, of Goodman's place in the Minories, eſq. by whom he had iſſue divers ſons and daughters. His eldeſt daughter Anna married ſir John Norwich, of Brampton, in the county of Northampton, knight and baronet, of an antient and noble family, whoſe antient name was Bigot earl of Norfolk and Suffolk temp. Henry I. and by ſome called earl of Norwich, from whence the name is come, as appears by his evidences. His ſaid ſon Edward Smith had iſſue two ſons. The eldeſt, Roger, died in his minority; and the younger ſurviving, named Edward, is a gentleman of great hopes both for virtue and other endowments, and is yet unmarried.

"This manor is entire; and hath been incloſed in part many hundred years, and the reſidue above 80 years, without decaying the farms. It hath a court leet, free warren, clerk of the market, waifes, ſtrays, and felons goods by charter. The ſoil is exceeding good, and well wooded; and in it the ſaid ſir Roger Smith hath built a very fair and large houſe of brick and ſtone, with all other accommodations anſwerable thereunto."

P. 177. On the death of Edmund Smith, eſq. the manſion-houſe and eſtate at Edmondthorpe were ſold to the late Mr. Pochin for £22,500. by the late Mr. Thomas Smith[1], who was generally believed to have made away with the greater part of the property before he came into poſſeſſion of the eſtate.

P. 178. l. 4. After "admiration of them," Mr. Burton's MS. adds, "Contrary to the humour of that famous pope and excellent Antiquary, pope Sixtus Quintus, who began his papacy in the year 1584, and who ſpent infinite treaſure in reſtoring decayed Antiquities, as Alfonſo Ciacconio[2], Antonio Cicarella[3], and Jo. Bapt. de Cavalleriis[4], report of him. And as Pirrho Ligorio[5] (who was an agent in the performance of moſt of them) ſays of him, that in his time (which was in continuance about ſix years), he performed more rare works[6] than any one than had gone before him had; and had he lived but any reaſonable time longer, he would have done more than all his predeceſſors put together; witneſs thoſe huge pyramids, obeliſks, columns, churches, chapels, fountains, and many other worthy things now extant in Rome by him erected and reſtored. The true proportion of which Giov. Franciſco Bordini[7] cauſed curiouſly to be cut in copper, and printed at Rome 1588 (which book I have); and are at large deſcribed by Giov. Pinadello[8], in his Numeri Quinarii."

Ibid. l. 25. For "in the remembrance of him," r. "for the monument of him;" and in the two laſt lines read thus; "That if one take away a coat armour which hangeth over a tomb in a church, the indictment muſt be, bona executorum of the dead man; but, if a grave-ſtone be taken away, the indictment muſt be bona eccleſiæ."

P. 184. Dorothy, daughter of Ambroſe Smith, was married, thirdly, to viſcount Kilmurry; and fourthly, to the earl of Kelly, privy counſellor. Her ſiſter Iſabella was married to —— Lewys, a lawyer.

P. 188. Under Garthorpe, Mr. Burton adds, "It ſhould ſeem that there be two manors within this town; that of Woodford, which deſcended to John Morton, father of Mary, married to Francis Smith, who died 6 Eliz. ſeiſed thereof: the other, whereof in 23 Henry VIII. Edward Watſon died ſeiſed."

P. 213. To the rectors of Harby add,

John Barbour, 1420[9].

Richard Johnſon, M. A. May 21, 1638[10].

Thomas Daffye (not Dalby) 1647.

John Major, 1703, was M. A. and rector alſo of Tollerton, co. Nottingham.

Dr. Stanley was inſtituted May 10, 1798, on his own petition; and had a diſpenſation to hold with it the rectory of Stubton, co. Lincoln.

P. 214. "From ſir John Leke," ſays Burton, "deſcended ſir Francis Leke, baron Deincourt, now living, 1636."

P. 215. In the Teſta de Nevill, under the head of "Terra Normannorum," is this entry: "Item abbas de Leyc' tenet advocationem eccleſie de Harſtan; & non poteſt inquiri per quem habuit advocationem[11]."

---

[1] Who died in November 1797. See under Huſbands Boſworth, vol. II. p. 471.

[2] Alfonſo Ciacconio, and Antonio Cicarella, in their Lives of Sextus V. Alfonſo Ciacconio was a Spaniſh Dominican frier, and patriarch of Alexandria, who wrote the Lives of the Popes and Cardinals, 1601; reprinted at Rome 1676, 4 vols. fol. with a Continuation of the Hiſtory of Trajan's war with the Dacians, and an Illuſtration of the column erected on that occaſion; and "Bibliotheca Scriptorum uſque ann. 1583." He died 1599, aged 59.

[3] Cicarella in 1600 completed, as far as Clement VIII, the Lives of the Popes; which Baptiſt Platina had compiled as far as Paul II; and Onuphrius Panvinius had continued to Pius V.

[4] Effigies Pontificum Romanorum, in eiſdem vitis & inſignibus, Romæ, 1545, 8vo.

[5] Deſcrittione de Roma.

[6] 1586. He removed an obeliſk out of one ſolid ſtone, 107 feet long, weighing 956,148 pounds, from Circa Neronis to the Vatican Piazza; for performance of which he had about 50 cranes and ſuch like engines; wherein by the ſpace of a whole year he had daily labouring 907 men and 70 horſes. The whole expence came to 37,965 crowns; as M. Funccius ſetteth down, in his Auctuarium to his Commentaries upon his Chronology, & Dominico Fontana (who was an agent in the erection) writeth.

[7] De rebus præclarè a Sixto V. Pont. Max. Jo. Fran. Bordini liber. Romæ, 1588, fol.

[8] Invicti Quinarii Numeri Series, quæ ſummatim a ſuperioribus Pontificibus et maximè a Sexto V. res preclarè quadriennio geſtas annuntiat; Romæ, 1598. 4to.

[9] Peck, from a MS. at Belvoir.

[10] Pat. 14 Car. I.

[11] Vol. I. p. xlviii.

P. 222. In 1247, there was a ſuit between William Beler and the prior of Kirkby, concerning ſome cuſtoms and ſervices claimed by the ſaid William from the prior for a free tenement held by him in Kirkby[1].

P. 230. " Mr. Burton adds, " Clemens Reynerus, in his Apoſtolitas Benedictinorum in Angliâ, fol. 210, will have this priory to be of the order of Cluniacs; and to be founded temp. Henry II. But both he and Mr. Speed are miſtaken in the time of the foundation; for it ſhould be temp. Edward II."

P. 231. Lands in Aſfordby, parcel of the priory of Kirkby Beler, were granted, June 23, 1609, to William Silverwood, yeoman; and a tenement and lands of that priory in Leiceſter, demiſed in 1596 to William Kempe for 32 years, was granted, July 15, 1602, to William Chamberlayne.

P. 232. Lands in Aſfordby, parcel of the priory of Kirkby, which had been demiſed to divers perſons at the annual rent of 36*s*. 8*d*. were paſſed away in fee-ſimple to William Silverwood, yeoman, June 23, 1609; and certain lands and tenements in Leiceſter, parcel of the priory of Kirkby Beler, which had been demiſed in 1596 for 30 years to William Kempe at a rent of 13*s*. 4*d*. were paſſed away in fee-ſimple to Richard Chamberlayne, July 15, 1612.

P. 233. note 1. Mr. Burton adds, " Whoſe life is at large ſet down by the lord Coke, in his Preface to his Commentaries upon the ſaid Mr. Thomas Littleton's Tenures;" and at the end of the note, " As Mr. John Perkins ſaith, in his chapter of Tenant by the courteſy of England; who was alſo a fellow of the Inner Temple, and wrote a little treatiſe of certain titles of the common law, wittily and learnedly compoſed, wherein (as Mr. Fulbeck ſaith) be many commendable things, delivered by a ready wit and pleaſant method, many excellent caſes, ſhewing great reading and good experience; but expreſſing more ſharpneſs of wit than depth of judgement[2]; which treatiſe was firſt publiſhed 1530, 22 Henry VIII. (as John Bale[3] writeth in his Eleventh Century, who lived alſo in the ſame time). It was afterwards corrected and reprinted in London, by William Middleton, 1541, 33 Henry VIII. as appeareth by the title of the book, one of which edition I now have. He died 1545, 37 Henry VIII. Littleton's Tenures by ſome is conceived to be firſt ſet forth about 24 Henry VIII; to be printed at Roan in France, at the inſtance of Richard Pinſon, printer to king Henry VIII; but, ſaving their favour, I take it to be firſt publiſhed in the reign of king Henry VII. and put forth by Richard Littleton, of Pileton, co. Stafford, a learned apprentice of the lawes, younger ſon to ſir Thomas Littleton the author (which Richard Littleton died 9 Henry VIII.) for theſe two reaſons. Firſt, for that the book being ſo learned and judicious a piece of work, and dedicated to him by his ſiſter, he would in no ſort neglect or detract time of the publiſhing, but with all ſpeed and conveniency communicate it to others for general good, and this at his own coſt; for it is not probable that Pinſon would be at the charge of the printing it in France, not knowing what the event and iſſue would be in the ſale of them at home. Next, for that this Pinſon (who is ſaid to procure it to be firſt printed at Roan by William le Taileur, for it was written in French) was printer to king Henry VII. and died in the beginning of the reign of king Henry VIII; whom in that place ſucceeded Robert Redman, whoſe dwelling and printing-houſe was at the George in Fleet-ſtreet; for confirmation hereof I have an Abridgement of the Statutes, printed 1499, 15 Henry VII. by Richard Pinſon the king's printer; and have ſeen divers books printed in the beginning of king Henry VIII. by Robert Redman; and have two books now in my cuſtody: " Articuli ad novas Narrationes," and " Diverſitates Curiarum cum Juriſdict." printed by Robert Redman, 1528, 20 Henry VIII; by which it is moſt evident, that Littleton's Tenures muſt then be extant before 24 Henry VIII. For the reaſon produced, that, had it been in print before, it is likely it would have been vouched either in argument, or by ſome writers, that is no argument; for it is a general noted obſervation, that preſent times never yielded reſpect, but ſucceeding ages that gave and enlarged the credit of the author, as hath long ſince been affirmed by the poet;

'Rara coronato plauſere theatra Menandro:
Et ſua riſerunt ſæcula Mæonidem[4].'
Menander being crown'd, few did applaud the ſtage,
And Homer himſelf was laugh'd at in his age.

And a little after,

'Nam poſt fata venit gloria.'
For after Death doth Honour come."

P. 237. To note 4, Mr. Burton adds, " John Chifflet[5], in his Inſignia Gentilitium Equitum Ordinis Aurei Velleris," printed at Antwerp, 1632, 4to, p. 155, maketh the field " Gules, and the teeth Argent;" and on Stephen Bathor he remarks, " whoſe picture I have, well cut, in a little medayle."

P. 239. Melton was a market-town in 1078, as appeareth by the grant of Godfrey de Wirce, printed in the Appendix to vol. I. p. 125.

P. 240. In 1240, John de Fontibus poſſeſſed lands to the value of 20 marks at Melton, which John Fitzwilliam and William Orgar held.

P. 246. In 1572, the rectory of Melton Mowbray was demiſed to Humphrey Adderley, at a rent of £16. 1*s*. 3*d*.; in 1592, three meſſuages, with certain lands and tenements, yielding £4. 7*s*. 8*d*. rent, parcel of the manor of Melton, were granted to Edmund Power for a term of 31 years; and in 1595 lands and tenements there, to the yearly value of 33*s*. 4*d*. to Ellen Pynne[6].

P. 250. " In tempore domini Oliveri Sutton, quondam Lincolnienſis epiſcopi, qui cœpit preeſſe ecclesie cathedrali beate Marie Virginis Lincolnie A. D. 1279.

Melton Mowbray vic'.

Ordinantes, & ordinando tenore preſentium ſtatuentes, quòd in dictâ eccleſiâ de Melton ſit perpetua vicaria; dictique prior & conventus, ac eorum ſucceſſores futuris temporibus ſucceſſivè, poſt mortem Richardi de Hetham nunc vicarii ejuſdem eccleſie de Melton, preſbyterum idoneum nobis & ſucceſſoribus canonicè preſentent, inſtituend' pro perpetuo in eâdem vicariâ, qui duos capellanos, unum diaconum, & unum ſubdiaconum, competentes & honeſtos, ipſius vicarii ſumptibus exhibendos, ſecum continuò habeat reſidentes, ad divina obſequia in eâdem perpetuò ſuſtinenda. Habeant autem dicti prior & conventus integrè & pacificè totam terram pertinentem ad eccleſiam de Melton, cum pratis, paſcuis, & paſturis, & omnibus aliis ad dictam terram eccleſie pertinentibus. Percipiant & iidem prior & conventus totam decimam garbarum & feni, & totam decimam agnorum, & mortuaria in vivis animalibus ac pecoribus conſiſtentia, & triginta ſolidos annuos de abbate & conventu de Gerweden, quos eccleſia de Melton conſueverat ab eiſdem percipere nomine decimarum. Et vicarius, qui pro tempore fuerit, percipiet totum altaragium dicte eccleſie de Melton; ſcilicet, totam decimam lane, omneſque alias minutas decimas, oblationes, & obventiones undecunque ad dictam eccleſiam nomine altaragii pertinentes (exceptis decimâ agnorum, & mortuariis conſiſtentibus in vivis pecoribus, ut ſuperiùs eſt expreſſum); & habebit manſum prope eccleſiam ab omni onere & ſervitio liberum & quietum, quod nunc vicarius ipſius eccleſie & ſui predeceſſores habebant ſecundùm domini Henrici ordinationem predictam. Suſtinebunt autem dicti prior & conventus onera reficiendi, reparandi, ac de novo conſtruendi, cancellum dicte eccleſie, cùm neceſſe fuerit; & alia omnia onera extraordinaria. Ad hec, pro recompen-

---

[1] Harl. MSS. 7178. [2] Fulbeck, p. 28. [3] Bale, Deſcript. Britann. Cent. XI. fol. 74. [4] Martial, Lib. V. 10.

[5] Of this book I have a MS copy, beautifully tricked, under the title of " Inſignia Gentilitia Equitum Ordinis Aurei Velleris, Fecialium verbis enuntiata. A. Johanne Jacobo Chiffletio, Philippi IV. Catholici Regis & ſereniſſimæ Principis Iſabellæ Claræ Eugeniæ Hiſpaniarum Infantis, Medici à cubiculis, Ordinario; Latinè & Gallicè producta. Le Blazon des Armories de tout les Chevaliers del ordre de la Toiſon d'or depuis le primeur inſtitution (1429) juſques à preſent 1632. Antwerpiæ, ex officinâ Plantinianâ Balthaſari Moreti, 1634. Effigiata & ſic delineata, cum Eulogiis Equitum, labore & pœnâ Will'mi Burton, de Lindley, com. Leic. an. 1640, æt. 65, ſive ſpeculari." J. N.

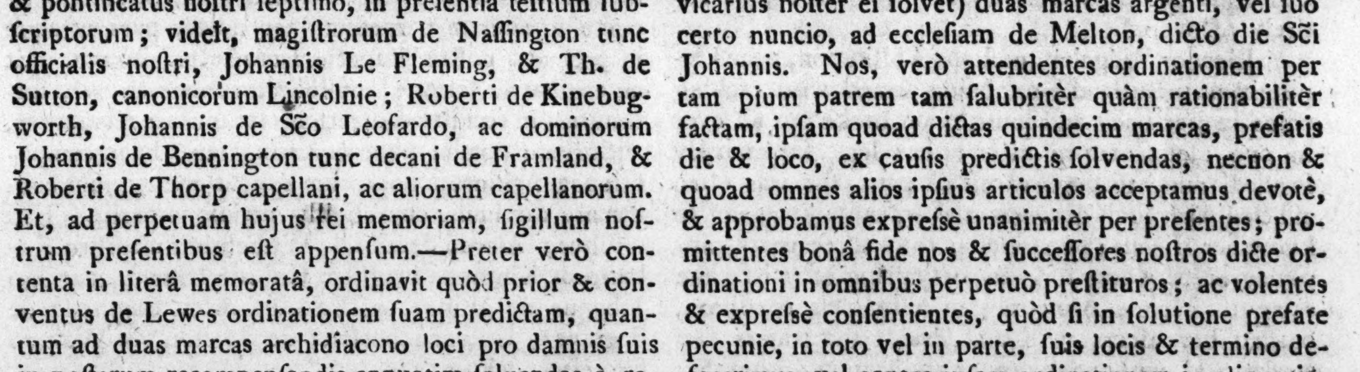
[6] Leaſes in the Augmentation Office.

ſatione damnorum que ex dictâ appropriatione ac noſtrâ ordinatione contingere poſſent in hâc parte, ordinamus & ſtatuimus quòd dicti prior & conventus ſolvant annuatim in perpetuum, in ſignum reverentie & honoris, & in conſervationem indemnitatis de dictis bonis eccleſiaſticis ſuis uſibus aſſignatis, treſdecim marcas argenti eccleſie noſtre Lincolnie, in ipsâ eccleſiâ, per ſuum proprium nuncium, ſacriſte ejuſdem loci tradend', die Nativitatis beati Johannis Baptiſte, in uſus vicariorum ac clericorum miniſtrantium in ipsâ eccleſiâ convertend', prout ſuper hoc duximus ordinandum; ita quòd ſolvant perpetuò annuatim archidiacono loci qui pro tempore fuerit, pro damnis ſuis in poſterum recompenſandis, preter annuam procurationem (quam vicarius ei ſolvet), duas marcas argenti, vel ſuo certo nuncio ad eccleſiam de Melton, dicto die Sancti Johannis. Vicarius autem qui pro tempore fuerit, ac ipſa vicaria, ſuſtinebit omnia onera ordinaria, debita, & conſueta, dictam eccleſiam de Melton contingentia, inveniendi, reficiendi, & reparandi libros, veſtimenta, calices & alia vaſa, ceteraque omnia ornamenta eccleſie in eccleſiâ memoratâ. Hec autem ordinamus & ſtatuimus, & perpetuò manere volumus illibata, ſalvis in omnibus epiſcopali & Lincolnie èccleſie dignitate, & nobis ac ſucceſſoribus noſtris auctoritate & poteſtate interpretandi & declarandi, ſi quid dubium ſupra dictam ordinationem perſonatûs & vicarie forſan emiſerit in futurum, & compellandi dictos priorem & conventum, ac vicarium, ſuoſque ſucceſſores, ad plenam obſervationem hujus noſtre ordinationis, interpretationis, & declarationis ejuſdem, ſi quà fieri contingat, de plano & abſque judiciali, per ſequeſtrationem & ſubtractionem fructuum & proventuum dicte eccleſie de Melton, aliiſque modis quibus nobis viſum fuerit expedire. Acta ſunt hec apud Lidington, 19 kal. Septembris, A. D. 1286, & pontificatûs noſtri ſeptimo, in preſentiâ teſtium ſubſcriptorum; videlt, magiſtrorum de Naſſington tunc officialis noſtri, Johannis Le Fleming, & Th. de Sutton, canonicorum Lincolnie; Roberti de Kinebugworth, Johannis de Sc̄o Leofardo, ac dominorum Johannis de Bennington tunc decani de Framland, & Roberti de Thorp capellani, ac aliorum capellanorum. Et, ad perpetuam hujus rei memoriam, ſigillum noſtrum preſentibus eſt appenſum.—Preter verò contenta in literâ memoratâ, ordinavit quòd prior & conventus de Lewes ordinationem ſuam predictam, quantum ad duas marcas archidiacono loci pro damnis ſuis in poſterum recompenſandis annuatim ſolvendas à religioſis memoratis, per literam ſuam patentem ratificarent; quod expreſſiùs conceſſerunt. Deindè, altercato aliquandiù ſuper juramento canonice obedientie à priore predicto ratione prefate eccleſie preſtando, priore aſſerente ſecum ſuper preſtationem hujus juramenti eſſe per ſedem Apoſtolicam diſpenſatum, tandem, poſt varia, idem prior juravit pro eccleſiâ de Melton, predicto epiſcopo & ſucceſſoribus ſuis, & officialibus ejuſdem, canonicam obedientiam in formâ conſuetâ, proteſtatione premiſſâ, quòd ſi ante feſtum Omnium Sanctorum proximè ſequens poſſet docere per privilegium ſedis Apoſtolice ſe ad peractionem hujus juramenti non teneri, per dictum juramentum nullatenùs arctarentur, ſed pro non preſtito habetur, alioquin juramentum hujus robur habet perpetue firmitatis. Poſtmodum ſcriptum fuit officiali archidiaconi Leiceſtrie ſub hâc formâ:—O. permiſſione divinâ, Lincolnienſis epiſcopus, dilecto in Chriſto filio officiali archidiaconi Leiceſtrie ſalutem. Quia eccleſiam de Melton Mowbray, vacantem, religioſis viris priori & conventui de Lewes, ejuſdem eccleſie patronis, caritatis intuitu conceſſimus, in uſus ſuos proprios perpetuò poſſidendam, ſalvâ portione vicarie in eâ antiquitùs ordinatâ: Vobis mandamus quatenùs eoſdem religioſos in corporali poſſeſſione dicte eccleſie inducatis, ſeu faciatis induci. Vale. Dat', apud Lidington, 19 kalend. Septembris, pontificatûs noſtri anno ſeptimo.

Sequitur ratificatio prioris & conventûs in dorſo rotuli:—Univerſis ſancte matris eccleſie filiis, ad quos preſentes litere pervenerint, frater Johannes prior humilis Lewen', & ejuſdem loci conventus, ſalutem in Domino. Noverit univerſitas veſtra, quòd cùm venerabilis pater dominus Oliverus, Dei gratiâ, Lincolnienſis, eccleſiam de Melton Mowbray nobis noſtriſque ſucceſſoribus, caritatis intuitu, in proprios uſus perpetuò poſſidendam, pro ſuâ gratiâ conceſſiſſet; ac, inter cetera, juxta lubentiam noſtram quam ei ſuper hoc liberantèr fecimus, tempore ordinationis hujus ordinâſſet, quòd nos, pro recompenſatione damnorum que ex dictâ appropriatione ac ſuâ ordinatione contingere poſſent in hâc parte, in perpetuum ſolvamus annuatim, in ſignum reverentie & honoris, & conſervationem indemnitatis, de dictis bonis eccleſiaſticis noſtris uſibus aſſignatis, treſdecim marcas argenti matrici eccleſie Lincolnie, in ipsâ eccleſiâ, per proprium nuncium, ſacriſte ejuſdem loci tradendas, die Nativitatis Sc̄i Johannis Baptiſte, in uſus vicariorum & clericorum miniſtrantium in ipsâ eccleſiâ convertendas, prout dictus patèr ſuper hoc duxèrit ordinandum; ita quòd ſolvamus perpetuò annuatim archidiacono loci qui pro tempore fuerit, pro damnis ſuis in poſterum recompenſandis, preter annuam procurationem (quam vicarius noſter ei ſolvet) duas marcas argenti, vel ſuo certo nuncio, ad eccleſiam de Melton, dicto die Sc̄i Johannis. Nos, verò attendentes ordinationem per tam pium patrem tam ſalubritèr quàm rationabilitèr factam, ipſam quoad dictas quindecim marcas, prefatis die & loco, ex cauſis predictis ſolvendas, necnon & quoad omnes alios ipſius articulos acceptamus devotè, & approbamus expreſsè unanimitèr per preſentes; promittentes bonâ fide nos & ſucceſſores noſtros dicte ordinationi in omnibus perpetuò preſtituros; ac volentes & expreſsè conſentientes, quòd ſi in ſolutione prefate pecunie, in toto vel in parte, ſuis locis & termino defecerimus, vel contra ipſam ordinationem in aliquo invenerimus modo quovis, dictus pater & ſui ſucceſſores de plano & ſine ſtrepitu judiciali, per ſequeſtrationem & ſubtractionem fructuum & proventuum eccleſie de Melton, ad ipſius ordinationis obſervationem nos & ſucceſſores noſtros liberè poſſint compellere, aliiſque modis quibus eis viſum fuerit expedire. In cujus rei teſtimonium, ſigillum noſtrum commune preſentibus eſt appenſum. Dat', in capitulo noſtro apud Lewes, die Dominicâ proximâ poſt feſtum Sancti Dionyſii, A. D. 1286.—Iſta verò ratificatio, & ſubmiſſio prioris & conventûs de Lewes ex aliâ parte rotuli conſcripta, miſſe fuerunt 7 kal. Novembris, anno 7°, per magiſtrum Durandum, ut ibidem per decanū & capitulum ejuſdem in theſauro ſalvo cuſtodirentur."

P. 252. Add to the vicars,
“ Richard Hetham, 1286.”

P. 259. Add this Pedigree of SHIPWARD, of MELTON MOWBRAY, 1619. (Harl. MSS. 1180.)



George Shipward, of the Foreſt of Dene, co. Glouceſter. = . . .
Other ſons and daughters.
. . . . 1ſt wi. = 2. Maurice Shipward, of Alleſton, co. Glouc. = Margaret, dau. of John Raglin, 2d w.
Walter Shipward, of Melton Mowbray, co. Leic. = Urſula, dau. of Laurence Savage, brother to John Savage, of Cheſter, knt.
3. William Shipward, of Mangoteſfeild, co. Glouceſter, 3d ſon.
Mary, dau. and heir. = Richard Houghton, of Eaſt Harting, co. Suſſex.
Maurice, 1ſt ſon.
Anne, married to John Hutchin, of Wyfordby.
Iſabel, married to Robert Leigh, of Claxton.
Henry Shipward, eldeſt ſon and heir 1619. = Mary, dau. of Anthony Docwra, of Rudfen, co. Warwick.
2. Chriſtopher.
4. Matthew.
3. George Shipward, of Cold Overton. = Barbara, dau. of Robert Hutchin, of Rutland.
Katharine.
1. Thomas Shipward, æt. 34, 1619.
2. Maurice.
3. John.

P. 261. l. 2. Read “ Everard,” not “ Sir Everard.”

P. 262. l. 7. For “ creſcents,” r. “ croſs croſslets.”

P. 264. In the vault of Eltham church, Kent:
“ Sir Charles Hudſon, bart. died 22 Oct. 1773, aged 49 years.
“ Deborah lady Hudſon, relict of ſir Charles Hudſon, bart. died Jan. 1, 1780, aged 55 years.”

P. 267. In 1581, lands in Burton Lazar, alias Spytle, tle, parcel of the manor of Melton Mowbray, were demiſed for 21 years to Francis Alforde[1].

Ibid. In the Pedigree, for "Rev. Robert Hacker," read "Rev. Charles Hacker, rector of Widmerpole, co. Notts, married in 1712[2]."

Ibid. Lady Mary Howe died April 9, 1800. She was to have been married (had ſhe lived four days longer) to the earl of Morton.

P. 267. The following are the cures which are noticed as having been effected by the waters of Burton:

"At Melton Mowbray, Sarah Ward, a girl of about 12 years old, had 10 years laboured under a moſt inveterate ſcurvy and ſcalded head, one entire ſcab, her body blotched (being pronounced incurable) came to bathe in and drink the water, which, without any other application, in about three months wrought an entire cure, her ſkin quite clear and ſound, and ſhe in perfect health.

"Mary Sanſum, of the ſame place, 16 years of age, from eight years old had been afflicted with a virulent ſcurvy and inſufferable ſharp humour in her blood; from bathing about nine times and drinking the water is entirely recovered.

"A child, about five years old at Leiceſter, firſt ſeized with a ſore like a ring-room on her cheek, ſoon ſpread all over her body, full of blotches and ſores; ſhe could neither ſtand nor ſit eaſy; and had ſo continued ſome time, her parent ineffectually applying every where for relief; at length, by bathing and drinking the water about two months, is entirely cured.

"One Doubleday, a lad about 12 years of age, of Great Clawſon, in Leiceſterſhire, from a hooping-cough was afflicted with a large ſwelling on his throat, which impoſthumated, and had a continual diſcharge for two years and a half, that he was obliged conſtantly to wear double cloth over it: upon bathing and drinking the waters about three weeks, he entirely recovered.

"Eleanor Ridgeley, of Long Lidlington, near Uppingham in Rutlandſhire, being ſeized with racking pains in her back and loins, ſoon broke out all over in one almoſt entire ulcer; her legs ſurprizingly ſwelled, and, through exceſs of pain, ſhe was often afflicted with ſuch dizzineſs and inſenſibility as not to know her friends; continuing thus three years, applying every where for, but deſpairing of relief; ſhe came to Melton Mowbray in a helpleſs condition, bathed her ulcers with and drank the waters five weeks, and, without any other application during that time, ſhe voided many conſiderable ſized ſtones, her ulcers healed, ſhe recovered her ſtrength, and is now perfectly ſound and well; and has, as a moſt extraordinary object, been viſited by many of the phyſical faculty. However incredible this relation may ſeem, her caſe is well known in her neighbourhood, and ſhe wholly attributes her cure to Burton waters.

"Mrs. Wilcox, of Ouſton in Leiceſterſhire, a gentlewoman near 70, had a wonderful cure from the waters[3]."

Ibid. The cure of diſtempered cattle was an invaluable circumſtance; but it is not eaſy to ſay to what it was owing; hardly to any inherent ſanctity having continued ſo long on the grounds; or to any known natural properties; as the ſame ſalubrity was obſerved in other ſmall ſpots, where nothing particular was ever pretended to. In Stone-pit Cloſe, in Cold Newton lordſhip, a common road, open on both ſides, runs through the whole length; and droves of cattle paſſed through in conſiderable numbers; and the tenant aſſured me that he frequently got out of bed to hinder the travellers from mixing with his cows, or ſlabbering over the graſs. The reaſon of his giving himſelf this trouble was, his knowing that they were diſtempered from being drove at ſuch an unſeaſonable hour; which was done to avoid the penalty for moving their cattle in that condition. The tenant alſo added, that the cattle died in all the contiguous cloſes round, which were only ſeparated by an hedge. And his relation cannot be doubted, as he would hardly tell a lie to his landlord of his having eſcaped the general loſs; when ſaying the contrary was more likely to be beneficial to him. G. A.

P. 272. l. 41, 42. r. "Lev. xiii. 44. Numb. v. 1."

P. 273. In the reign of king Henry III. the following compoſition was entered into between the monks of Kirkby and the brethren of St. Lazar of Burton, concerning the tithes of Melton mills, by the mutual oath of the parties litigant;

"Univerſis ſancte matris eccleſie filiis tam preſentibus quam futuris, W. dictus abbas de Stanleiâ, & W. & J. de Kenilworth & de Coventriâ priores, ſalutem in vero ſalutari. Noverit univerſitas veſtra, quòd cauſa quæ vertebatur inter priorem & monachos de Kirkebi ex unâ parte, & fratres S. Lazari de Burtonâ ex aliâ parte, ſuper decimas duorum molendinorum de Meltonâ, nobis à ſummo pontifice delegata, amicabili compoſitione hunc finem ſortita eſt; videlicet, quòd predicti fratres S. Lazari ad feſtum S. Laurentii, dimidiam marcam argenti predictis priori & monachis de Kirkebi in perpetuum abſque contradictione annuatim perſolvent. Hanc autem compoſitionem firmitèr in perpetuum tenendam, pars utraque in preſentiâ noſtrâ, inſpectis ſacroſanctis, juravit. Et nè ea quæ auctoritate apoſtolicâ, ratione previâ, ſtatuuntur, in recidive contentionis ſcrupulum relabantur, auctoritate domini pape quâ fungimur, hanc compoſitionem ſigillorum noſtrorum appoſitione dignum confirmare duximus, cum ſigillis utriuſque partis. Hiis teſtibus; Alardo decano de Withebroc, magiſtro Roberto de Kintona, magiſtro Ric. de Limeſi, magiſtro Johanne de Winewich, Radulfo Beler, Stephano de Segrave[4], Guidone perſonâ de Melton, & Waltero filio ejus; with five more[5]."

Another compoſition of the brethren of Burton St. Lazarus, about the tithes of Dalby, may be ſeen under the pariſh of Dalby Chaucombe[6].

Commiſſio ubi dominus eſt conſervator privilegiorum fratribus hoſpitalis Sancti Lazari Jeruſalem de Burton, a ſede apoſtolicâ indult'. Dat. apud Lameth, 20 die menſis Maii, 1382[7].

Georgius Sutton, miles, magiſter de Burton Lazari, ordinis militie Sc̄i Lazari Jerl̄m in Angliâ, & ejus loci confratres, abſolvebant Tho. de Winington & Elen' uxorem ejus, ab omnibus pecatis ſuis, niſi talia ſint ſuper quibus ſedes apoſtolicâ ſit conſulend'. Dat. 1491[8].

P. 279. Mr. Burton ſays, "In 39 Eliz. Edward Pate was ſeiſed of this manor; which came after to the lord Scrope.

P. 283. Enlarge the three firſt lines of the Pedigree thus:

Edward Pate, of Eyekettleby, one of the maſters of the mint to king Henry VIII; died 1593, æt. 90.=Catharine ....

1. Henry, died an infant.	2. Edward Pate, of Eyekettleby and Siſonby, died 1597, &c. (as printed.)=	.... dau. of John Buſſy, of Haydon.	3. Henry.	4. John, (as printed.)	Elizabeth. Dorothy. Mary.	Urſula. Margaret. Frances.

Edward, not Edmond, Pate married Anne Skipwith.

P. 284. Mr. Burton adds, "About the latter end of the reign of king Henry III. Ada de Sallawe, daughter and heir of Roger de Sallawe, gave lands at Welby in frank-almoigne to the abbey of Gerenden; whereto are witneſſes, Simon de Perereis of Sextenby, William de Boivile, William Fitz Neel, Robert de Herevile. And to the ſame abbey, about the ſame time, Nigell de Aleby releaſed all his right in certain toſts adjoining to the toſts of Sallawe; witneſſes, William de Perereis, Thomas de Sextenby, Henry Pontrell, Robert de Herevile, Hue de Boivile. Alſo Robert de Herevile gave lands here to the abbey of Gerendon, whereto Annabell the widow of the ſaid Robert releaſed all her right and claim; for which releaſe the abbot and convent gave her a quarter of wheat and a buſhel of beans; witneſſes, Gilbert de Oleby, John de Geywode, John de Boivile, and William his ſon.

---

[1] Leaſes in the Augmentation Office.

[2] See before, p. 397; where, for Henton ſenior and junior, read Hacker.

[3] The original publication adds, "Theſe facts are with great integrity very truly related; as might many more, were it not inconvenient to expoſe the misfortunes of thoſe who labour under afflictions. It is excellent in the ſcurvy and all other ſcabious and cutaneous diſorders; alſo for the rheumatiſm; it braces up and invigorates all weakly perſons, rendering them leſs liable to colds and diſorders. The inhabitants of Burton will uſe their endeavours to accommodate gentry in the village, and they may be ſupplied with every neceſſary from Melton Mowbray."

[4] It has the letters CIROGRAPHVM cut through indentwiſe, neatly written.

[5] Stephanus de Segrave reddit compotum de c & xxx marcis ad auxilium werræ regis Ricardi; Magn. Rot. Pip. 7 Joh. Rot. 3. a. Stephanus de Segrave reddit compotum de firmâ comitatuum de Eſſex & Hertford; Rot. Pip. 6 Hen. III.

[6] Vol. III. p. 241.

[7] Reg. Courteney, fol. 13. b.

[8] Harl. MSS. 2077. p. 41.

P. 296. June 19, 1601, lands in Plungar, late belonging to the priory of Belvoir, and let to divers tenants at a rent of 19*s.* 5½*d.* were ſurrendered to the king; as were alſo lands in Redmile, of 30*s.* rent.

P. 302. See in the Appendix to vol. II. p. 14, an agreement, in 1242, for celebrating the anniverſary of Robert de Redmile in Belvoir priory.

P. 304. Mr. Burton adds, "In 37 Edward III. Andrew Luttrell, of Irnham, in the county of Lincoln, gave this manor to the abbey of Croxton, founded by one of his anceſtors; and it is now (1636) the inheritance of John earl of Rutland. There was alſo in this town another manor, which belonged to the priory of Drax in Yorkſhire; which, together with the impropriation and advowſon of the vicarage, in 33 Henry VIII. was granted to Thomas Manners earl of Rutland; and now belongs to the ſaid John earl of Rutland. The church was appropriated to the priory of Drax."

P. 319. William Green, gentleman, was lord of the manor of Somerby in 1636.

P. 320. An order from the Houſe of Peers occurs, March 27, 1648, for Daniel Trigg, M. A. to be inducted to the vicarage of Somerby, void by death, ſalvo jure cujuſcunque; William Green, gent. patron[1].

P. 328. note, l. 5. Mr. Burton corrects "race*n*ous" to "race*m*ous;" and after "abide," l. 21, adds, "And whereas that unfortunate Richard Grey earl of Kent (who died without iſſue 1523, 15 Henry VIII.) had before in a vain and prodigal humour greatly waſted his eſtate, not leaving ſufficient livelihood to maintain the poſt and dignity of an earl; the ſaid title of earl, upon juſt conſideration thereof had, was waived and diſcontinued by ſir Henry Grey, of Wreſt, knight (brother to the ſaid Richard, and heir of George earl of Kent his father), and by his ſon Henry Grey alſo, until the year 1571, it pleaſed that renowned queen of famous memory queen Elizabeth, out of her princely favour and bounty, and upon notice taken of the worthineſs of that moſt noble and antient houſe, and the former diaſtrous acts of the ſaid earl Richard, advanced Reginald Grey, eſq. ſon and heir of the ſaid laſt Henry, to the title and earldom of Kent, reſtoring unto him divers manors and goodly poſſeſſions, for the maintenance and ſupport of that antient earldom; which ſaid earldom of Kent is now deſcended unto the right honourable Anthony Grey, now earl of Kent, ſon and heir of George Grey, ſon and heir of Anthony, younger ſon of the firſt-named George Grey earl of Kent; which ſaid Anthony earl of Kent married Magdalen, daughter of William Purefey, of Caldecote, co. Warwick, eſq. ſon and heir of Michael Purefey, eſq. and Joice his wife, daughter and coheir of John Herdwike, eſq. ſome time lord of the manors of Herdwike, co. Warwick, and Lindley, co. Leiceſter; by whom he hath iſſue Henry Grey lord Ruthin, and many others."

P. 331. Mr. Burton ſays, "Within the town of Stapleford, ſtanding on the Eaſt ſide of the county, upon the confines of Rutland, were two manors; the one belonging to William de Ferrers earl of Derby; the other to the antient family of Hawberk;" and obſerves, that "William lord Sherard, who, for his good ſervice to king James and king Charles, was created baron Sherard of Letrim, married the right noble and learned lady, and true lover of Antiquities, Abigail, daughter and coheir of Cecil Cave, eſq."

P. 336. It would be highly culpable not to record in this hiſtory the death of one of its moſt munificent benefactors, Robert earl of Harborough; which happened at Stapleford, April 21, 1799. His lordſhip (as we have before ſtated) was in holy orders when he ſucceeded to the earldom, and reſigned his church preferments in 1773. Notwithſtanding, dignities ſeem not to have warped his mind from that divine profeſſion in which he was educated; he erected a church at Stapleford about 1789; alſo one at Saxby; and another at Teigh, in Rutland. His lordſhip generally reſided at Stapleford, in the midſt of a numerous and reſpectable tenantry, whom it was his greateſt delight to make happy; and the whole tenor of his life was dignified by great ſuavity of diſpoſition and a heart of univerſal benevolence.

Ibid. Lady Lucy Cave was re-married, Aug. 29, 1798, to the hon. Philip Puſey (ſee vol. III. p. 468.)

P. 356. Mr. Burton adds, "Catharine, the grandchild and heir of ſir Lawrence Taillard, was married to Robert Brudenell, of Deene, eſq. who brought to her huſband divers manors in the counties of Huntingdon, Bedford, and Cambridge; whoſe ſon Thomas lord Brudenell now (1636) enjoyeth the ſame. The heir of Richard Reynes, partly by agreement and partly by purchaſe, came to the poſſeſſion of Clifton Reynes;" and, inſtead of the firſt note in p. 338, he thus reads: "This coat is ſet up for Reines; but in the reign of king Henry VII. it was borne by ſir Hugh de Tatteſhall, as it appeareth in an old roll of vellum and in colours, made about the latter end of the ſaid king Henry VII's time; which roll was ſome time my very good friend's Mr. Sampſon Erdeſwick, of Sandon, co. Stafford, and is now in the cuſtody of ſir Henry St. George, knt. Norroy king of arms; which roll, with many others, to the number of 24, made for moſt of them temp. Henry III. Edward I. and Edward II. and ſome temp. Edward III. and Richard II. and one temp. Henry VI. I copied out of the originals at my firſt coming to the Temple, and after reduced them into ordinaries, and by characters diſtinguiſhed every ſcocheon to his proper roll. At which time alſo I began a collection of church-notes in ſeveral counties, which now is grown to a great volume."

P. 368. Mr. Burton adds, "The firſt Ernald de Bois was a benefactor to Kenelworth priory, co. Warwick, temp. Stephen; and gave them two hides of land in Newton, as it appeareth in the Leiger-book; to which grant are witneſſes, Robert earl of Leiceſter (whom he there calls dominus meus), Richard abbot of Leiceſter, and William de Charneles. The fourth Ernald, who died in 1255, was one of the chief foreſters in the land; and was buried at Billeſden abbey."

P. 375. In 1564, Mary, daughter and heir of John Morton, ſon and heir of Thomas Morton and Margaret his wife, daughter and heir of Woodford, being the widow of Francis Smith, died ſeiſed of the manor of Brentingby.

P. 381. June 19, 1611, lands at Waltham, late belonging to the priory of Belvoir, of the yearly rent of 5*s.* were ſurrendered to the king.

P. 385. On a neat braſs chandelier in the nave of Waltham church:

"The gift of William Love, 1741."

On the wall of the North ſide of the nave:

"James Clarke, churchwarden.
Thomas Truckler, pariſh-clerk.
Henry Seagrave, painter, 1778."

At the Weſt end of the North aile is a fire-place.

The following epitaph on the tomb-ſtone of William Eaſt, in Waltham church-yard, was compoſed for himſelf when on his death-bed[2]:

"Reader, believe, and come to Chriſt betimes:
His pow'rful blood prevails for fouleſt crimes.
Eternal life and grace by him is giv'n:
No way canſt thou but by him get to Heav'n.

---

[1] Journals of the Houſe of Lords, vol. X. p. 161.

[2] Copied from a ſtrange rhapſodical publication, intituled, "The Spiritual Gamut, or Rudiments of True Muſic; being a faithful Relation how William Eaſt, of Waltham in Leiceſterſhire, who was a man well ſkilled in the Muſic of this World, learned alſo to ſing the Song of Moſes, and the Song of the Lamb. Taken from his own Mouth. With the Particulars of his Life and Death. To which are added, Two Poems; one, on his Converſion; the other, on his Death; both ſet to Muſic (for Four Voices) by Mr. Keark, of Kibbeth [Kibworth], Leiceſterſhire.

Therefore lay hold of Chriſt, and view him well:
By his redeeming love we're ſnatch'd from hell.
Thus, by that great divine God-man[1], a race
Are brought to heav'n to ſee our Maker's face;
And there to join the ſaints, with praiſes ſing,
To glorify the Lord, our heav'nly King.
Who would but change all this world can afford
For endleſs joys with Jeſus Chriſt the Lord?"

In the chancel of Heckington church, co. Lincoln, on a black marble ſlab:

"Here lyeth the body of Anne Taylor,
the wife of William Taylor, gent.
who departed this life the 21ſt day of July, 1714,
in the 63d year of her age.
By him ſhe had iſſue five ſons and one daughter.
She was daughter of Mr. Richard Noble and Bridget his wife, of Waltham,
in the county of Leiceſter."

On another black ſlab is a Latin epitaph for her huſband, who died May 2, 1723, æt. 73; and a third for their ſon Anthony, March 5, 1713, æt. 32.

P. 386. Dr. Raſtall was originally of Jeſus college, Cambridge; which he exchanged for Peter-houſe for a lay-fellowſhip; but afterwards returned to Jeſus college. Mrs. Beilby was niece, not daughter, to Dr. Raſtall; and the ſurgeon at Newark was Timothy, not Thomas.

P. 387. Mr. Burton has left ſeveral memoranda concerning Withcote; which ſhall here be conſolidated:

"The lordſhip of Withcock is in the hundred of Framland, upon the edge of Rutlandſhire.

"In this town were antiently two manors; the one, The King's manor; the other, Aſhby's manor; and in 21 Henry IV. the king granted his manor to John Dounton for term of his life; Aſhby's manor in 8 Henry VII. was granted by William Aſhby, of Loſeby, eſq. (whoſe anceſtor Richard Aſhby, married Elizabeth, ſole daughter and heir of John Burdet, of Loſeby, eſq.) to William Smith, alias Heriz, eſq. and Katharine Aſhby his daughter in marriage.

"The ſaid William Smith, alias Heriz, is deſcended of the antient family of Heriz, of Wiverton, in the county of Nottingham; whoſe anceſtor alſo married Maud, the daughter of Ralph lord Baſſet of Drayton, in the time of king Edward II; from which family alſo is deſcended the earl of Kingston upon Hull and the viſcount Chaworth. He had iſſue by the ſaid Katharine his wife, one ſon named John Smith, alias Heriz; and three daughters; one of them married into the great family of Booth of Cheſhire; another married Chapham of Claphall in Yorkſhire; and the third married Porter of Lincolnſhire.

"His ſaid ſon, John Smith, alias Heriz, married Dorothy, one of the daughters of Richard Cave, of Stanford in the county of Northampton, eſq. a very great antient family, which originally came from Cave of Cave in the ſaid county of York, whereof they were owners in the time of William the Conqueror, and of which family there have been very many knights. This John Smith, alias Heriz, had many children by the ſaid Dorothy his wife (whoſe ſecond huſband was ſir Henry Poole, knight of Rhodes). His eldeſt ſon, Roger Smith, eſq. married the daughter of ſir Thomas Griffin, of Dingley in the ſaid county of Northampton, knt. a very great and antient family, by whom he had two daughters; the one married Stourton, deſcended of the family of lord Stourton; the other married to Norwich, of Brampton in the ſaid county of Northampton, a very noble and antient family. He had alſo (amongſt others) two ſons, Eraſmus Smith and Ambroſe Smith, eſqrs. The ſaid Eraſmus married Anne Byard, daughter of —— Byard of Clawſton (this family had its original in the county of Derby, and their habitation is called antiently after their name); and by her was father of that worthy gentleman, ſir Roger Smith, knight, lord of the manor of Edmondthorpe in this county, and of Henry Smith, deceaſed, that famous, pious, learned, and eloquent Divine. His ſecond wife was Margaret, relict of Roger Cave of Stanford aforeſaid, eſq. and ſiſter to that moſt renowned counſellor of ſtate, William Cecil lord Burleigh, lord treaſurer of England. And the ſaid Ambroſe Smith had iſſue ſir William Smith, knt. late of Laund abbey; and Henry Smith of Withcote; which Henry married the ſiſter of ſir William Skipwith, of Cotes, in this county, knt. from whom is lineally deſcended Henry Smith, eſq. now (1641) lord of the ſaid manor, patron of the ſaid church, and knight of the parliament for this ſhire; who in 1633 was a ward of the king's; and of whom an account has been already given. His wife was the daughter of Cornelius (not Charles Holland).

"In the old houſe here (as I have heard) ſtand the arms of Heriz, the three hedgehogs Or, in a field Azure; which houſe the ſaid William began, it being a very fair and ſtately work, built of aſhler ſtone, caſtle-like; which was after finiſhed by Roger Ratcliffe, eſq. gentleman of the privy chamber to king Henry VIII. (deſcended out of the ſame family that the earl of Suſſex iſſued) who married Katharine, widow of the above-named William Smith. This houſe is much commended by Leland in his Itinerary[2]. The other manor was alſo purchaſed of the king; ſo that at this time (1641) the lord of both theſe manors is the above-named Henry Smith, eſq.

"Here is a very beautiful little church, the fabrick of which was built by the afore-named William Smith and Roger Ratcliffe, and finiſhed by their heirs, as may well appear by the like reſemblance to the building of the houſe, curiouſly wrought with ſtained and coloured glaſs, expreſſing the portraitures of the Prophets, Apoſtles, and Saints; and at the bottom of each of them are the portraits or arms of the ſaid William Smith, Roger Ratcliffe, and of Katharine widow to them both; and of John Smith (ſon and heir of the ſaid William Smith) and Dorothy his wife; which ſaid ſcocheons of arms are alſo cut in ſtone, and graven at the upper end of the chancel; where alſo are the monuments of all the parties, as alſo of Ambroſe Smith, eſq. great grandfather to Henry Smith, now lord of the ſaid manor." [See p. 520.]

P. 393. W. de Daventry, M. A. in 1366, held Withcote, then taxed at 8 marks and a half, together with the Præpoſitura collegii Scolarium Beate Marie, Oxon[3].

P. 394. In an act of reſumption, 1467-8, a proviſo is enterd, "that it ſhall not be prejucial unto our well-beloved ſervant Edmund Tankerd, gentleman, cook for our Halle place, and Robert Wilſon, yeoman of our larder, of or for a grant to them made, by our letters patents, of the manor of Withecok, otherwiſe called Whitecok, in the county of Leiceſter, and a place or piece of land called Sawage, otherwiſe called Savage, in Whitecote, otherwiſe called Whitecok, in the ſaid county, for term of 60 years, yielding yearly therefore unto us £3. as in our letters is expreſſed more at large[4]."

P. 403. note 1. for "Brunſwick," r. "Berwick."

P. 405. b. l. 48. read "19*l*. 03*s*. 6*d*."

P. 413. Pedigree of Berkeley, laſt deſcent: "Elizabeth, daughter of ſir William Wynne, of Woodcott, in Surrey, muſt have been the ſecond wife of ſir Henry Berkeley, of Wymondham; as after his deceaſe ſhe was married to ſir Hugh Wyndham, one of the juſtices of the Common Pleas[5].

Ibid. "The principal houſe of the Delalaundes was North Witham in Lincolnſhire, upon or by Witham water. The place is auncient, fair, and ſtrange, and hath goodly commodities aboute it. The daughter and heyre of Delalaunde was wedded to one Berkeley, a knight of [Wimundham in] Leyrceſterſhire [at the egge of Ruthelande]. One of the Barkelys dying without iſſue male, lefte his owne inheritaunce to an heire male deſcending from a younger brother of his name, and ſo it is ſtil in the name. And the Delalaundes lande went to a daughter of Barkelys, as entalid to the heir generale[6]."

---

[1] The word God-head for God-man is deſignedly altered, being a miſtake in the engraver's copy.

[2] Leland's deſcription of it may be ſeen in vol. II. p. 387.

[3] Reg. Langham.

[4] Rot. Parl. vol. V. p. 594.

[5] See Hutchins's Dorſetſhire, vol. II. p. 324. col. b.

[6] Leland's Itinerary, vol. VI. p. 68.

ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS IN GARTRE HUNDRED.

P. 435. b. l. 33. read " 489 perſons."

P. 438. a. l. 4. ſtrike out Haloughton.

P. 444. In the church of Waſhington, Suſſex, on the South ſide of the communion-table:

" In piam memoriam Johannis Fortrie, A. M. è coll. Mag. apud Oxon.
ſocii, & hujus eccleſiæ 36 annos paſtoris fideliſſimi. Obiit Maii 24, 1706, ætat. 64.
Necnon utriuſque Elizabethæ uxoris & filiæ; quarum altera obiit Feb. 11, 1717;
altera Maii 29, 1698, ætat. 18."

On a monument of black and white marble affixed to the South wall of the chancel:

" In piam memoriam Annæ Fortrie, Johannis Fortrie hujus eccleſiæ vicarii uxoris;
quam pietas, morum ſuavitas, & amor conjugalis,
omnibus, præcipuè ſuis, charam reddidêre.
Obiit Maii 3, 1733, ætat. 52.
Hoc poſuit mœrens maritus.
Juxta uxorem conquieſcit Johannes Fortrie, [M. A.]
paſtor fide ac vitâ integer, aſſiduus, gravis, prudens.
Plura quidem ſi tabella admiſiſſet, plurima piè voluit Anna Fortrie.
Obiit Martii nono, A. D. 1752, ætat. 73."

P. 447. In the church of Langar, co. Nottingham, on the North ſide of a fair tomb, is this inſcription:

" The right honourable and noble lord, Thomas Lord Scroope, baron of Bolton, Maſham, and Upſhall, of the moſt noble order of the Garter, knight, Lord Warden of the Weſt Marſhes, ſteward of Richmond and Richmondſhire, and bow-bearer of all his Majeſty's parks, foreſts, and chaſes, within the ſame, lyeth here buried; and died the 2d day of September, anno Dom. 1609."

On the South ſide:

" The right honourable Thomas Lord Scroope, &c. married the right honourable Lady Philadelphia, daughter to the right honourable Lord Henry Carie, baron of Hunſdon, lord chamberlain to our late Queen Elizabeth her Majeſty's houſhold; who died the 3d of February, 1627; and had iſſue only one ſon, Emanuel Scroope."

At the feet of the tomb:

" Emanuel Scroope, ſon and heir of the right honourable Thomas lord Scroope, and of the right honourable Philadelphia his wife, was, after his father's deceaſe, lord Scroope, and then earl of Sunderland."

Emanuel, the laſt lord Scroope, created earl of Sunderland in 1627, married Elizabeth, daughter of John earl of Rutland; but, having no iſſue by her, he ſettled the manor of Langar and the reſt of his eſtate on his natural iſſue which he had by Martha Janes (living 1672); of which, his only ſon, John, died unmarried July 31, 1646, aged about 20 years; but his three daughters, who by that means divided the whole inheritance amongſt them, were living Oct. 2, 1672.—Mary the eldeſt was firſt married to Henry Cary lord Lepington, eldeſt ſon and heir of the earl of Monmouth; but, he leaving her a widow, without children, ſhe afterwards became the wife of Charles lord St. John of Baſing, eldeſt ſon and heir of John marquis of Wincheſter, and in 1689 created duke of Bolton. Elizabeth, the ſecond daughter, was wife of Thomas earl Rivers. And Annabella, the third daughter, was married to John Howe, ſecond ſon of ſir John Howe, of Compton in Glouceſterſhire, baronet; to whoſe portion, on the diviſion, the manor of Langar was aſſigned. King Charles II, by his letters regiſtered in the Office of Arms, bearing date June 1, 1663, in the 15th year of his reign, in conſideration of the good and acceptable ſervice done and performed by John Howe, of Langar, eſq. her huſband; and, for a mark of his eſpecial grace and royal favour, granted and ordained that ſhe the ſaid Annabella ſhould be had, taken, and eſteemed, as the daughter of an earl of this kingdom of England; and that, for and during her natural life, ſhe have, hold, uſe, take, and enjoy, the ſtyle, place, degree, precedency, and privileges thereof, in as full and ample manner as if ſhe had been the legitimate daughter of Emanuel late earl of Sunderland, with a precept of obedience to all and every of his majeſty's ſubjects; after which, ſhe was uſually ſtyled " The Right Honourable Lady Annabella Howe."

Thus far principally from Thoroton.

This lady ſurvived her huſband; and, dying in 1703, was buried at Stowell in Glouceſterſhire; where a plain marble is thus inſcribed:

" In memory of the truly pious the Lady Annabella Howe, one of the daughters of Emmanuel Lord Scrope earl of Sunderland,
the widow of John-Grubham-Howe of Compton, and the moſt indulgent mother of John Grubham Howe, of Stowell,
in the county of Glouceſter.
She died the 20th of March, 1703-4.
Quem ſemper acerbum, ſemper honoratum . . . . habebo."

She had four ſons and five daughters; whereof, Bridget was married to John Bennet lord Oſulſton; Elizabeth to ſir John Guiſe, of Rendcombe, co. Glouceſter, baronet; and Diana to ſir Francis Molineux, of Tiverſall in Nottinghamſhire, baronet: but of the two others we find no account. The ſons were Scrope, John, Charles, and Emanuel.—Scrope Howe was born in 1648; and ſerved in ſeveral parliaments as knight of the ſhire for the county of Nottingham, in the reign of king Charles II. (by whom he was knighted), and in ſeveral parliaments afterwards. He concerted with the earl of Devonſhire the means of bringing the Prince of Orange into England; and, on his landing, united with the earl of Nottingham in a declaration of their principles, Nov. 22, 1688—We own it rebellion to reſiſt a king that governs by law; but he was always accounted a tyrant that made his will the law; and to reſiſt ſuch a one we juſtly eſteem no rebellion, but a neceſſary and juſt defence. He was one of the grooms of the bed-chamber to king William; and was created baron of Clenawly, in the county of Fermanagh, and lord viſcount Howe, of the kingdom of Ireland, by patent dated May 6, 1701. He died Jan. 16, 1712-13, having been twice married. By his firſt wife, lady Anne, daughter of John eighth earl of Rutland, he had iſſue one ſon, John-Scrope Howe, and two daughters. By his ſecond wife, Juliana daughter of William lord Allington, he had Emanuel-Scrope lord viſcount Howe, and three daughters. Which Emanuel-Scrope lord viſcount Howe was appointed governor of Barbadoes in 1732, and died there in 1735; leaving iſſue by his lady, Mary-Sophia-Charlotte, daughter of the baron Kilmanſegg, three ſons; George-Auguſtus, Richard, and William; beſides ſix daughters. George Auguſtus ſucceeded his father; but, being killed July 6, 1758, near Ticonderoga, in North America, the honours and eſtate devolved on his brother Richard, the late gallant admiral, who in 1782 was created an Engliſh viſcount; in 1788 an Engliſh earl; and died, full of years and honour, Aug. 5, 1799[1].—John Howe, ſecond ſon of the beforementioned John Howe and lady Annabella, ſerved in ſeveral parliaments for the county of Glouceſter, and diſtinguiſhed himſelf very remarkably by his ſpeeches in the Houſe of Commons, which ſhewed his extenſive knowledge in the laws, and averſion to unconſtitutional meaſures. It is ſaid, that, when the Partition-treaty was under conſideration of that houſe, he expreſſed his ſentiments of it in ſuch terms, that king William declared that, if it were not for diſparity of their rank, he would demand ſatisfaction with the ſword. In the reign of queen Anne, he was ſworn of the privy council, conſtituted vice-admiral of the county of Glouceſter, and paymaſter-general of her majeſty's guards and garriſons; which laſt place he enjoyed till after the acceſſion of king George I. He married Mary, daughter and coheireſs of Humphrey Baſkerville, of Pentryllos in Herefordſhire, eſq. and widow of ſir Edward Morgan, of Llanternam in Monmouthſhire, baronet; and, dying in 1721, left iſſue by her his ſon and heir John Howe, of Stowell, eſq.; who, on the deceaſe of ſir Richard Howe, of Compton in Glouceſterſhire, and Wiſhford in Wiltſhire, baronet, in 1730, without iſſue, ſucceeded to thoſe eſtates, and was ſeveral times elected one of the knights of the ſhire for the county of Wilts. May 12, 1741, he was created lord Chedworth, baron of Chedworth in Glouceſterſhire. He married Dorothy, eldeſt daughter of Henry-Frederick Thynne, eſq. by whom he had ſeveral children; and, dying in April, 1742, was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon, John Thynne; who, dying ſ. p. in 1762, was ſucceeded by his next brother Frederick-Henry; and, he dying in 1781 unmarried, the title devolved on his nephew John, the preſent lord Chedworth.

---

[1] See vol. II. p. 267; and Gent. Mag. vol. LXIX. p. 805.

P. 453. Within the rails at Yaxley, co. Huntingdon, is a ſlab for Mary the relict of William Dent of Blaſton, co. Leiceſter, daughter of William and Suſanna Nicholls; who died Aug. 23, 1781, aged 76.

P. 459. Add to note 2. Dr. Johnſon's remark, that Worth is derived ƿoꞃð, a court or farm; or ƿoꞃðiᵹ, a ſtreet or road.

P. 461. Read "Alice, daughter and heir of William Lee, of Statfold,=Reginald Archer, of Tamworth" (olim Toneworth.)—Ibid. r. "William Ingwardby, of Willeſley" (olim Wiveleſley).

If Alice de la Lee had iſſue by Stoke, which is quite contrary to Dugdale, Warwickſhire (ſee it, particularly Thomas's, in Merton Bagot and Umberſlade, and Shaw in Statfold), it muſt be from her deſcendants that ſir John Stanley purchaſed Statfold, or ſuch part of it as might not deſcend from his great grandfather ſir Richard Stafford. This point (who ſold to him) wants aſcertaining. A pedigree of the Abney family ſays, John Abney was lord of Willeſley by marriage with Ingwarby in 1417, agreeing cloſely in time with the match, in this page, of Stoke and Ingwarſby.—Stoke might get ſome part of Willeſley, and afterwards ſell, as has been printed in the laſt deſcent, to Abney. Nicholas de Ingwardeby & Cecilia ux' had three virgates and other parcels in Wyveleſleye from William de Rydewar lord of Seile (of which thoſe parts of Wyveleſley were then and afterwards held), not long, it is believed, after 1200. (Second article of ſir Thomas de Rydware's Seile Chartulary.)

There is an uncommon ſeries of longevity in the above Abney pedigree. George, James, and ſir Edward (baron Abney's father) attained 94, 93, and very near 97. Sir Thomas, the lord-mayor, younger brother to ſir Edward, was 84.

P. 464. The following extracts have been communicated by Mr. Thomas Sharp of Coventry, from a folio Miſſal, ſecundùm uſum Sariſbur. printed at Rouen by Martin Morin, 1510: which was purchaſed, a few years ſince, at Douay, with many other Miſſals, ſome of which, beſide the one above-cited, had belonged to the Forteſcue family.—The extract, No. I. is written on the back-ſide of the title-page. Mr. Sharp ſays, "I could not be poſitive that the form of prayer is in the hand-writing of ſir Adrian; yet it is very probable. The words in Italics are daſhed through with a pen; a circumſtance which favours my conjecture. No. II. is at the foot of the calendar for June, and is referred to from the 14th day; the writing, I have little doubt, ſir Adrian's. No. III. is written in the margin of calendar for July againſt the 28th day. There are ſome other memoranda; but theſe I conceived moſt likely to be intereſting:

No. I. Liber p̱tinet Adriano Forteſcū, militi.

(See Plate LXVI. fig. 21.)

"An order and forme of byddyng of bedys by the kyng's com̃aundement, a° D^{ni} 1636.

Ye ſhall p̃y for the hole congregac̃on of Chriſt's chirche, and eſpecially for this chirche of england; wherein firſt I com̃end to yoʳ devoute p'yers the kyng's moſt excellent majeſtie, ſupreme hede im̃ediately under god of the ſp'rualti and te'poralitie of the ſame chirche, and the moſt noble and vertuouſe lady quene Jane, his moſt lawfull wyfe.

S̃condly, ye ſchal p̃y for the clergye and lords tẽporall and com̃ons of this realme; beſechyng almighty god to gyfe ev̄y of them, in his degre, grace to uſe themſelfs in ſuch wiſe as may be to his contentac̃on, the king's honor, and the weel of the realme.

Thirdely, ye ſchal p̃y for the ſouls that be depted, abydyng the m̃cye of almighty god; that it may pleaſe hym the rather, at the contẽplac̃on of oʳ p̃yers, to g̃nt them the fruyc̃on of his p̃ſence.

God ſave the kyng!"

No. II. "Hâc die lune, anno d̃ni $M^{mo}v^{cmo}$xviij. Anna uxor Adriani Forteſcu, milit', ap̃d Stonor in com̃ Oxoñ; & ſepulta eſt in eccliâ p̃orat' de Byſham in com̃ Berk̃, a° Rg̃' henrici octavi decimâ, lrâ dm̃icale C."

No. III. "Obĩt J. Forteſcu, milit̃, patr̃ Adr̃, a° Rg̃' h. vij. xv°."

P. 468. Knightley Holled, D. D. nearly 40 years rector of Badby in Northamptonſhire, died there, in January 1795, æt. 87. He was of Baliol college, Oxford; M. A. 1766; B. and D. D. the ſame year[1].

Ibid. Add to note 1, "See Turner's epitaph, p. 485."

Ibid. Add to note 14, "Mr. Rogers publiſhed a ſmall humourous book of poems, tranſlations, and imitations; with his portrait prefixed."

P. 482. On a neat altar-tomb in the South-weſt part of the church-yard of St. Mary in Arden:

"IN A VAULT UNDERNEATH THIS TOMB LIE THE REMAINS OF THOMAS RATTEN, GENT.;
WHO DEPARTED THIS LIFE
THE XXXth DAY OF OCTOBER, MDCCXCVII, AGED LXXIV YEARS."

Adjoining the altar rails in the church of St. Nicholas, in Little Bowden, is the following inſcription, on a flat ſtone on the pavement:

"Hic jacet corpus Johannis Wotton, hujus eccleſiæ rectoris, & lectoris de Market-
Harborough, per annos 31.
Obiit 9^{bris} die 21°,
anno { ætatis ſuæ 62,
Salutis 1725."

On an upright ſtone in Lower Tooting church-yard:

"In memory of Edward-Eamer Scott, ſon of Thomas and Sarah Scott,
late of this pariſh,
and now of Market Harborough,
in the county of Leiceſter;
who departed this life May 21, 1793,
aged 20 months.
Clark ſculpſit, Market Harborough."

P. 489. In the year 1310, it appears that a fine of £30. was laid on the town of Harborough, for an offence reſpecting the public meaſures then in uſe[2].

P. 493. Robert de Haverberg, ſubdeacon, in 1229 was inſtituted to the third part of the church of Clipſton, in the county of Northampton, on the preſentation of Robert the ſon of Ada de Clipſton the patron[3].

Robert Michel de Haverberga and John Bale were in 1401 patrons of the church of Little Bowden, in the county of Northampton[4].

Ibid. b. l. 55. John Prior died in "1531[5]."

P. 497. Add to the miniſters of Harborough;

James Wright, B. A. recommended by the inhabitants of Harborough for ſchoolmaſter, 4 April, 1649[6].

---

[1] Gent. Mag. vol. LXV. p. 174.

[2] "De villatâ de Haverberg, pro tranſgreſſione menſurarum, 30*s*." Wardrobe Account, 28 Edw. I. p. 2.

[3] Bridges's Northamptonſhire, vol. II. p. 20.

[4] Ibid. vol. II. p. 6.

[5] Eſch. 23 Hen. VIII.

[6] Repertory Reynardſon, p. 503. b.

Ibid. A letter of attorney in the town-cheſt, bearing date the laſt day of September, the 15th year of the reign of Edward IV. poſt Conq. A. D. 1476, mentions lands lying in the fieldes of Harborowe, &c.

Everard Dygby, of Stoke-Dry, co. Rutland, amongſt other bequeſts, in his laſt will, gave to his daughter Alice all his rentes, landes, and tenementes, with all proufettes and commodities to them belonging; which he had purchaſed by dede, or by copye, in the townes and feldes of Hareborow, Bowden, and Foxton; to have and to hold to hyr heyres and aſſigneyes for ever. The will is dated 1508[1].

By four leaſes in the town-cheſt, bearing the ſeveral dates of 1609, 1611, 1616, and 1618, it appears that Robert Smyth, of London, gent. was, with others, a feoffee, or truſtee, of the town and charity lands of Market Harborough.

P. 498. Mr. Burton's account of Mr. Smith and his charities is worth tranſcribing: "I cannot in ſilence let paſs unremembered the good and charitable acts of a late worthy benefactor to this town, one Robert Smith, born here; being ſon of William Smith, a poor taylor; who, about the age of 15 years, coming to London, was entertained in the ſervice of the under-chamberlain of the city, into which office, after certain years paſſed, his maſter deceaſing, he ſucceeded. In which office he thus being; having by his good endeavours got a good eſtate, he began to look back to his native place. And firſt he ſent ten pounds to the town of Harborough, to be diſtributed amongſt the poor inhabitants of five neighbouring pariſhes, by way of ſatisfaction for the corn he had gleaned and gathered out of thoſe ſeveral fields whilſt he lived there a poor boy. Afterwards, in the year of our Lord 1614, he gave to the Chamber of London £750. for yearly payment for ever of the ſum of 46*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* to theſe uſes; viz. firſt, to a lecturer at Harborough 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* yearly; alſo to the ſchoolmaſter there ten pounds yearly, for the free teaching of fifteen poor ſcholars. Alſo forty-ſix ſhillings and eight pence yearly, to buy ſeven ſmall Bibles; whereof ſix every year, immediately before Eaſter, are to be diſtributed by the miniſter and ſchoolmaſter to ſix poor children; the other odd Bible is yearly given to the church, for the benefit of ſtrangers; for whom likewiſe he formerly ſet up four convenient pews and certain other ſeats in the church, and beſtowed money in pavement of the church, to the coſt and charges of twenty pounds or more. Alſo, to be allowed yearly towards the reparation of the ſchool, forty ſhillings. Alſo, weekly throughout the year, eighteen pence, to be diſburſed in good wheat bread, and upon the Sabbath-day to be divided with the advantage amongſt 21 poor people of the town. Alſo to the churchwarden yearly five ſhillings a year, to ſee the bread thus weekly equally to be diſtributed. Alſo to the clerk of the church five ſhillings and four pence yearly, for to look to, deliver, and receive again, the ſaid Bibles from the ſtrangers; which in the year 1628 were 24 Bibles; every year to increaſe one. Laſtly, he nominated the dean and prebendaries of Chriſtchurch in Oxford chief viſitors; to whom he hath given the nomination of the lecturer; who, by his requeſt, are to viſit, once in four or five years, the ſaid ſchool; for which end, he hath appointed twenty ſhillings yearly to be reſerved and to be paid to them on the day of their ſaid viſitation; provided always, if the ſaid dean and prebendaries ſhall refuſe or neglect to make viſitations accordingly, that then that money, for them ſo reſerved, ſhall be diſtributed amongſt the poor inhabitants of the town. All which particulars caſt together make the ſubſtance of 46*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Beſides all this, he formerly gave unto the church one of the largeſt great Bibles, together with certain ſmall Bibles; and alſo the Book of Martyrs, in two large volumes; and alſo the Works of Biſhop Jewell. All which things were done, ſettled, and performed, in his life-time, and long before his death. The truth and certainty whereof was teſtified and aſcertained to me under the hand-writing of Mr. Edward Terry, miniſter and receiver, and Mr. John Orpin, miniſter and ſchoolmaſter, at Harborough, 6 March, 1628."

P. 449. The return made by the conſtables to the lords lieutenants and magiſtrates of the county of Leiceſter, in May 1798, of the number of men between the ages of fifteen and ſixty in the town of Market Harborough capable of carrying arms, was 405.

P. 503. Dr. John Moore publiſhed a ſermon preached before the Lord Mayor, and the Court of Aldermen, at Guildhall chapel, May 28, 1682, in the mayoralty of his countryman ſir John Moore.

P. 504. The foſſil body dug at Harborough is evidently calcareous, fermenting with acids, but is mixed with a portion of argil. It is extremely abſorbent, adhering to the tongue, like the pureſt tobacco-pipe earth. The more cruſtaceous part is ſperry. The ſhape of the lump ſent does not allow room for conjecture, if it were ever an organiſed body; of which however it has ſome appearance.

P. 505. "True News from Harborough in Leiceſterſhire; declaring how the earl of Stamford met with prince Rupert as he was plundering the ſaid town, and taking away their horſes, with other inſufferable oppreſſions; alſo how the ſaid earl of Stamford fell upon them, killed ſome, took others priſoners, and prince Rupert himſelf eſcaped very narrowly. Likewiſe the true proceedings of the parliament's forces in theſe parts againſt the evil-affected party and malignant ſpirits of the kingdom; 1642[2].

"Prince Rupert, the ſecond ſon to the lady Elizabeth, the king's majeſty's only ſiſter, hath (if report ſpeak truth) ſince his laſt coming and abode in England, done many outrages, plundered many towns, deſtroyed much corn, with many other inſufferable injuries and oppreſſions, which have been by him heaped on the poor ſubjects that ſtood well-affected to the Parliament. And, leſt any ſhould make queſtion of the truth of this relation, ye know that an attempt of the ſame nature was by the ſaid prince Rupert and his followers put in execution on Monday laſt the 12th of September, at a place called Harborough in Leiceſterſhire, the inhabitants of the town, it appears, being well-affected to the king and parliament; for which cauſe the ſaid prince Rupert came againſt them with eighteen hundred horſe, and ſome ſmall number of foot, and fell upon them, plundering of their houſes, taking away their arms, ſeizing upon their horſes, throwing their hay about, and trampling it under feet with their horſes, and doing miſchief without controul, the town not being able to make any reſiſtance without aid from ſome other place, which for the preſent was not afforded unto them.

"During the time that prince Rupert was putting the town to this extreme trouble and diſtraction, the noble earl of Stamford had received intelligence of this proceeding, he being upon a march only with eight hundred horſe; whereupon, knowing that prince Rupert would never adventure upon ſuch a deſign, if his ſtrength were not anſwerable; and withal conſidering the great damage that he might ſuſtain if he ſhould go againſt him, being ſo weak and unprepared; wherefore he drew up his men into a ſmall front, with a loud voice immediately declaring what information he had newly received from Harborough; and alſo declared unto them the number of the forces that accompanied the ſaid prince Rupert; and with many expreſſions ſetting forth the earneſt deſire he had to go up to aſſiſt them; but withal was very loth to adventure his ſmall forces againſt ſo great odds; and he for the preſent not knowing how to gain ſtrength to ſuppreſs them, his forces being diſperſed through the country upon ſeveral urgent and neceſſary occaſions for the maintaining of the peace of the kingdom. Wherefore the ſaid earl demanded of them whether they were willing to go on or retreat; withal telling them, that, if they did go on, they muſt reſolve to fight it out to the uttermoſt, and to ſtand againſt a double oppoſition for this number.

"Notwithſtanding all this, and theſe difficulties, and the imminent danger, they with a general ſhout cried, 'On! on!' Which the good earl perceiving, with a great deal of joy encouraged them, telling them, that himſelf in perſon would lead them on and bring them off, and not forſake them ſo long as he had either breath or one drop of blood in his veins.

---

[1] See before, p. 464.

[2] From a quarto pamphlet, printed at London, for J. Upton, Sept. 17, 1642.

"Thus with confidence and courage they preſently marched forward, ſinging of pſalms till they were within the ſight of Harborough, where they might plainly perceive the prince with all his forces marching out of the ſaid town, very confidently and ſecurely, without the leaſt ſuſpicion of being oppoſed, with their prize of arms and horſe which they had taken from the town; which the earl of Stamford ſeeing, made a ſtand under a wood ſide, which ſheltered him and his companions from the ſight of the prince's forces; which having done, he ſent forth a ſcout privately to the town, to command them to put themſelves into the beſt poſture of defence that they could, to keep them from retreating back to the town, which was accordingly effected; in which time the prince had recovered the bottom of the hill, where the earl of Stamford had placed his men, only two troops which he had ſent through the wood to come on the rear of the prince's troops, and conſequently to get between him and the town. As ſoon as the prince ſaw himſelf ſo ſuddenly encompaſſed, he endeavoured to retreat again to the town; but, finding that there was no ſecurity, and ſeeing that the earl of Stamford preſſed ſo hard upon him, and charged ſo hotly againſt him, the prince with his horſe made up to the wood ſide, endeavouring to gain the wind; but was immediately prevented, and beaten back upon the river, by which means his troops were diſordered; for the other two troops of horſe which the earl of Stamford had ſent to get between the prince's forces and the town, together with the inhabitants of the town on the one ſide, and the earl of Stamford with his troops on the other ſide, purſued them ſo cloſely, that moſt of the prince's foot were forced to take the river, thirty were ſlain, many priſoners were taken, and the prince himſelf enforced to fly for the ſafety of his perſon, and leave his rich prize behind him, otherwiſe the earl of Stamford had taken order for his forthcoming.

"This victory being thus obtained, they marched back again to the town, where they were joyfully entertained by the inhabitants, bringing back with them the pillage alſo which prince Rupert's forces had taken from them. There is a troop of horſe quartered there, for the ſafeguard and future ſecurity of the town againſt other ſuch attempts of the Cavaliers. The town is now in a good poſture of defence, being a rich town for trading, and well affected to the king and parliament, the defence of the Proteſtant religion, and the liberty of the ſubject. Haſtings plays leſs in ſight ſince the arrival of the earl of Stamford.

"This is the truth of the proceedings of note in our county. So I reſt, your friend to be commanded, Harborough, Sept. 14. Andrew Chapman."

P. 506. Add the following letter from the committee with the Parliamentary Army at Naſeby in 1645.

"For the honourable William Lenthall, eſq. Speaker of the Houſe of Commons.

"Sir, This morning, by day-break, we marched out of Guilſborow after the enemy. After an hour's march, we diſcovered their horſe drawn up at Sybbertoft, three miles this ſide Harborough. An hour after their foot appeared; this was about eight in the morning. By ten, we were diſpoſed into a battalia on both ſides. Both ſides with mighty ſhouts expreſſed a hearty deſire of fighting. Having for our parts recommended our cauſe to God's protection, and received the word, which was 'God our Strength,' theirs 'Queen Mary;' our Forlorn Hope began the play, whiles both ſides laboured for the hill and wind, which in concluſion was as it were equally divided; our Forlorn Hope gave back, and their right wing of horſe fell upon our left with ſuch gallantry, that ours were immediately routed. Above a thouſand ran along with them: but ſuch was the courage and diligence of the right wing, backed with the foot, that they not only beat back the enemy from their train, but fell-in with their foot, and, after two hours diſpute, won all the field-pieces (of which ſome are cannon), moſt of their baggage, mortar-pieces, boats, nine thouſand arms, much powder and match, &c. and nigh four thouſand priſoners. Their number was about twelve thouſand; ſome ſix hundred ſlain, many commanders of note. Of ours, not above one hundred. Our horſe are ſtill in purſuit, and have taken many of theirs. The ſtandard is ours; the king's waggon, and many ladies. God Almighty give us thankful hearts for this great victory, the moſt abſolute as yet obtained. The general, lieutenant-general Cromwell, and major-general Skippon (who is ſhot in the ſide, but not dangerous), did beyond expreſſion gallantly; ſo did all our other commanders and ſoldiers: we have loſt but two captains. Though this come late, be pleaſed to accept it from

Your honour's moſt humble ſervants,

Naezby, where the fight was, Har. Leighton, this Saturday, 14 June, 1645. Tho. Herbert.

"Captain Potter is dangerouſly wounded, but hopes of his recovery; ſo is captain Cooke."

The preceding letter is copied from the Journals of the Houſe of Lords; where is alſo preſerved a long liſt of "perſons who were taken at Nazeby-field;" with "the names of his majeſty's houſhold ſervants now in the marſhal's cuſtody;" and the following

P. S. "There were many taken laſt night late near Leiceſter, and ſent to Rockingham Caſtle, moſt of the duke of York's life-guard; and then the colours of that regiment were taken: ſir John Norwich took colonel Nevile priſoner." A day of public thankſgiving was ordered; and Mr. Marſhall and Mr. Vynes preached before the parliament at Chriſt Church[1].

Ibid. An intelligent friend obſerves, "In your account of Harborough, you have followed king Charles to Naſeby; but have omitted the King's terrible dream at Daventry, a few days before the fight, which is ſo admirably told by Mr. Savage, a gentleman reſident at Southwell during the whole of the tranſactions[2], which he relates in a MS hiſtory, dated 1671 and 1702, intituled, Coritani Lacrymantes, printed at the end of Mr. Raſtall's Hiſtory of Southwell, p. 430—432; that I believe that moſt people who read it would make no difficulty to believe that the apparition was real, as not only the King, but the two chamberlains in the next room, were ſatisfied that it was ſo; for, they heard a noiſe. But cannot a ghoſt come without making a noiſe? if he is not the yard-dog dragging his chain up ſtairs. This muſt have been a night of much diſtreſs, and very likely to have been paſſed in much anxiety. The true and ſimple fact is, that, whilſt at Daventry, the King and all his army were much at their eaſe and in high ſpirits, and thought ſcorn of Fairfax and all his proceedings. The King, after a council of war, in which the gallantry or raſhneſs of prince Rupert had forced him to conſent to give battle, when he himſelf was diſpoſed to comply with the wiſhes of part of his army, and march Northward, may be ſuppoſed to have fallen aſleep under the greateſt anxiety of mind; and, as his conſenting to the fate of Strafford was ever uppermoſt in his mind, even to the laſt moments of his life (witneſs his ſpeech on the ſcaffold), no wonder that he thought that great man appeared to him, and perhaps upbraided him, and that he endeavoured to make ſome apologies for his behaviour; and this attempt to ſpeak in his ſleep, as is common to perſons in that condition, the inarticulate diſagreeable noiſe was heard by his attendants. The whole account deſerves to be recorded, as it leads to an eaſy explanation of what appeared to Cæſar, Brutus, and others, when all were under the ſtrongeſt perturbations of ſpirits, as their fortunes and lives depended upon the event. You mention that the King's enemies had two pieces of cannon, and with one of them ſhot where they were informed the king was. Why not? The two armies did not come there to hold a talk, like a lad and a laſs, as Homer deſcribes, under a tree, or a rock; and, had their aim ſuceeeded, would it not have been better for the lives and fortunes of many brave and worthy men, and even for the King himſelf, who never enjoyed a ſingle moment of happineſs or eaſe afterwards? Surely, death in the bed of honour muſt be preferable to a royal or even gallant mind, than to be long confined by inſurgents, and at laſt cut off by a mock ſhow of juſtice and trial. Would it not have been happy for the king of France, his wife, and ſiſter, to have all been knocked on the head the firſt moment the mob broke into Verſailles, than to go through the ſcene of ſufferings which followed? As they had but two cannon, it was much to employ half for this particular purpoſe; and that they were bad markſmen is plain, as neither the King, nor any body near his perſon, is ſaid to have been hurt; which I believe is ſeldom omitted. But they publiſhed his private letters: was it not natural for them ſo to do in their own juſtification? I never ſaw the letters: but, if I am right, they only publiſhed the political parts, and not the amatorious or uxorious, if any ſuch there were; and have not the French, or would they not, do the ſame? But the King's enemies' horſe, in the purſuit, ſlaſhed above 100 women of quality: who can anſwer for what common ſoldiers, whilſt hot in action, and in revenge for like former injuries, may do? One would think that the ladies formed two rows for the horſemen to ride between; and we certainly never heard the name of any one lady or gentlewoman killed. Lord Clarendon, indeed, mentions this ſtory; but he only copies, without naming, Ryves, who was a political writer, and publiſhed on the ſpur of the occaſion [1]. In lord Clarendon's opinion, the King is never to be blamed; the loſs of the battle is charged on lord Carneworth, who turned the King's horſe about; but that he did nothing wrong is certain, from his never being called to any account for it; and the fact is, that he continued faithful and active in the King's ſervice, and that the battle was completely loſt before, as Fairfax's men had cleared the field of the Royaliſts, and were now come up in regular order, horſe, foot, and cannon, to the King and his body of horſe in reſerve. In ſuch circumſtances, the conſequence was certain; and, if the King, in a fit of deſpair, had a mind to throw himſelf among the enemy, and get knocked on the head (which, by-the-bye, would have been a fortunate circumſtance for himſelf and many others that ſuffered in their lives and fortunes afterwards), that was no reaſon why that ſmall body of horſe ſhould follow his Majeſty to their own certain deſtruction. If the body of horſe was conſiderably large, why did not the King bring it into action before, and charge the flank of Fairfax's infantry, when Rupert had bruſhed away their wing of horſe? If it were only a ſmall body of reſerve, or for the protection of the King's perſon, what could that do againſt an army fluſhed with victory, and drawn up in regular battalia? Lord Clarendon talks, I think, of the King's having done every thing that could be expected from a general, or a common ſoldier. But nothing of this appears; whereas we hear of particular acts of both kinds done by Fairfax, Cromwell, Ireton, Skippon, &c. &c.; and his lordſhip certainly talks abſurdly of lord Carneworth, who only acted as became a good ſubject; and in the ſet of prints the loſs of the battle is imputed to him."

---

[1] Journals of the Houſe of Lords, vol. VII. p. 436.

[2] "The armie, conſiſting off leſs than 5000 foot, and about as many horſe, were ordered to Daintree, whither the king went with a thorough reſolution of fighting. The next day, however, to the ſurpriſe of prince Rupert and all the reſt of the armie, this deſign was given up; and the former one off going to the North reſumed. The occaſion off this alteration was ſaid to be preſages off ill fortune which the king received, and which were related to me by a perſon off Newark, att that time in his majeſtie's horſe. About two hours after the king had retired to reſt, ſome off his attendants, hearing an uncommon noiſe in his chamber, went into it; where they found his majeſtie ſetting up in his bed, and much agitated; but nothing which could have produced the noiſe they fancied they heard. The king, in a trembling, enquired after the cauſe of their alarm, and told them how much he had been agitated in a dream, by thinking he ſaw the apparition of lord Strafford; who, after upbraiding him with unkindneſs, told him that he was come to return him good for evil; and that he adviſed him by no means to fight the Parliament armie that was at that time quartered at Northampton, for in it was one whom the king ſhould never conquer by arms. Prince Rupert, in whom courage was the predominant qualitie, rated the king out off his approbation the next day, and a reſolution was again taken to meet the enemie. The next night, however, the apparition appeared to him a ſecond time, but with looks of anger aſſured him that would be the laſt advice he ſhould be permitted to give him; but that, if he kept his reſolution off fighting, he was undone. If his majeſtie had taken the advice of the friendly ghoſt, and marched Northward the next day, where the parliament had few Engliſh forces, and where the Scots were becoming very diſcontented, his affairs might probably ſtill have had a proſperous iſſue; or if he had marched immediately into the Weſt to join the lord Goringe, who had there a good bodie of horſe, he might afterwards have fought on more equal terms. But the king fluctuating between the apprehenſions of his imagination and the reproaches of his courage, remained another whole day at Daintree in a ſtate off inactivitie. At length the former got the better, and on the 13th off June he determined to march Northward the next day. Att night word was brought him that the enemie were within eight miles. Still, however, keeping his reſolution, they marched the next morning; but had not got far before the armie under Fairfax were upon their rear. There was now no alternative. The king made a judicious diſpoſition off his little force; but was beat by the intemperate purſuit off a part of the enemies left wing by prince Rupert. This was called the battle of Naſeby, fought on the 14th of June, 1645, which put the finiſhing ſtroke to the king's affairs. After this he never could get together an armie fit to look the enemie in the face. He was often heard to ſay that he wiſhed he had taken the warning, and not fought at Naſeby; the meaning of which nobody knew but thoſe to whom he told this appearance at Daintree; and they were all of them afterwards charged to conceal it."

P. 518. b. l. 36. for Inchcliffe read Inchley.

P. 519. In the Pedigree of Norwich, near the bottom, read, "2. Mary, daughter of ſir Henry Atkins, of Cheſhunt, Herts, relict of William Halford, eſq. of Welham, married Sept. 21, 1652;" and, ſix lines lower, read, "2. Elizabeth, married to Thomas Atkins, eſq. of Bedwell Park; ſee p. 864."

P. 523. b. l. 9. from the bottom, read "a foſs."

Ibid. Add, "Burton ſays, Preſtgrave was, in the time of king Edward III. a great village ſtanding on the confines of Northampton and Rutland ſhires."

P. 524. Mr. Burton thus enlarges his remarks on Burrow-hill: "At this day it is arable land, and in nothing ſo famous as in this, that the young men dwelling near thereto were wont yearly to recreate themſelves with ſports and ſeveral exerciſes in this place, which had been ſo accuſtomed of antient times, yearly on the Monday next after Whitſunday, as Leland ſaith in his Itinerary. This exerciſe, or ars gymnaſtica, is ſo much approved of by Galen, that antient phyſician, that he wrote a little tract (dedicated to one Thraſybulus) in praiſe and commendation thereof, ſhewing the benefit thereof; that in a ſound body it begetteth a good habit, increaſeth ſtrength, and preſerveth health; and that it was in ſuch eſteem in antient times (as Plato and Ariſtotle affirm), that that counrry was thought not to be fully perfect, or rightly governed, wherein this ars gymnaſtica, or art of exerciſing, was wanting. The ſame Galen affirmeth it not to be found out in Homer's time, but a little before the time of Plato; yet it appeareth by Homer, in 2 and 23 Iliads, and 8 and 23 Odyſſeas, that there were in theſe times certain exerciſes, as wreſtling, running, ſhooting, caſting of darts, coiting, and ſuch like. What exerciſes and places for ſeveral exerciſes were in the Romans' times, appeareth by Vitruvius, Pliny, Celſus, and many others; amongſt the Jews, by Joſephus; and, amongſt the Grecians, by Plato, Athenæus, Laertius, and others. But whoſo is deſirous to be farther aſcertained of the dignity and worth of this art, let him read a learned treatiſe on this ſubject, written by that famous doctor in phyſic, and profeſſor in Padua in Italy, Hieronymus Mercurialis; who, in ſix books, hath ſet down the kinds of all the antient exerciſes, the places, manners, faſhions, and faculties, and whatſoever doth belong to man's body; which he dedicated to Maximilian the ſecond emperor. Printed at Venice, 1573."

P. 533. Mr. Thomas Burdett, of Burton Overy, was fined £50. April 16, 1646, for appearing at Leiceſter when the king's forces held it.

Ibid. Mr. John More, a native of Burton Overy, was of Peter-houſe, Cambridge; an excellent ſcholar, and a good preacher. When he left the Univerſity, he ſettled at Bedford, and thence removed in 1645 to the vicarage of Clavering in Eſſex, where he had an eſtate. He was a man of an humble ſpirit, and of a blameleſs converſation; and died in 1673, aged about 70.

---

[1] For publiſhing the Letters, ſee Oldmixon's Clarendon and Whitelocke compared, p. 200. For ſlaſhing the women, p. 202.

P. 540. Mr. Burton adds, "At this place was born (as I have been credibly informed) that famous arch-pirate of theſe latter times, Captain Ward, that ſo much infeſted the Mediterranean and Levant ſeas; who, from a very mean and ſmall veſſel, became to be maſter of many tall ſhips; and, being armed for thoſe enterprizes, ſeated himſelf firſt at Algiere upon the ſea-coaſt of Africk, within and not far diſtant from the Streights of Gibraltar, a great and ſtrong city, fortified by Art and Nature, ſtanding upon a promontory iſſuing into the ſea, whereby it hath many (and thoſe ſafe) havens; amongſt the reſt, three are of more ſpecial note, the middlemoſt made partly by Art, the plot of which city is to be ſeen in Brune his ſecond part of the Theatre of Cities, 59th map; afterwards at Tunis, a great city, ſomewhat higher upon the ſame coaſt, and almoſt oppoſite to Rome, a place exceedingly ſtrong and fortified with new works, ſtanding ſomewhat more into the land, ſo that it yieldeth but one, and that a ſecure, harbour for ſhips; the plott whereof alſo is to be ſeen in the ſame ſecond part of the Theatre of Cities, the 57th and 58th maps. Theſe ſecure harbours and the commodious ſite fit for ſuch profeſſors gave ſeat heretofore to divers of the ſame condition; as Charidemus, who from a pirate came to that height of power, that he durſt and did encounter with the Mooriſh kings of Barbary; at laſt, oppoſing the Spaniards, was by them ſlain in the time of Ferdinand king of Spain. After him ſucceeded his brother Hariademus Barbaroſſa, from the ſame ſtate, to be king of Algiere and Tunis; and was ſo well affected by Solyman the Turkiſh emperor, that he made him one of his baſſaes, and his chief admiral; who dying in 1547, there ſtart up two other brothers, as famous pirates as they, viz. Dragutes and Sala, both ſo potent and ſtrong, that by their aſſiſtance the ſaid emperor Solyman won the great city of Tripoli in Syria, 1551. At each of theſe two cities, the ſaid captain Ward built a ſtrong caſtle, whither he brought his prizes, which he took chiefly from the Spaniſh and Italian merchants; and, having gotten to an exceeding height of riches, made means to king James for a pardon, and licence to plant himſelf in England, Wales, or Ireland; but, being ſtrongly oppoſed therein by the great duke of Tuſcany (who not long before had entered into a treaty of marriage for one of his daughters with prince Henry, and to the ſame end had ſent to him divers rich and rare gifts), for that he had taken a great ſhip of the duke's richly laden, out or near his haven of Ligorno, could not provide therein. But, ſtill continuing in his former courſe, and keeping at each of his caſtles a lady; the one of them, being poſſeſſed that he was more affectionate and bountiful to the other than to her, gave him a fire, whereof he died about 20 years ſince."

P. 544. Add to note 2: "And to Mr. Nathanael Carpenter's ſecond book of Geography, cap. 15."

P. 550. The Rev. Charles Palmer (who died 1717) had two daughters; 1. Frances, (married to the Rev. . . . . . . Dickinſon), who was left a widow extremely young (p. 710), and died at Belton in Rutland in 1799, in her 100th year; 2. Elizabeth, died unmarried.

P. 551. Mr. Burton ſays, "The abbey of Creke was of the order of canons regular of the order of St. Auguſtine, and was of the foundation of one of the kings[1] of this land, and ſtood in the North part of the ſhire, not many miles from Lynne; which abbey, together with all the manors, lands, and tenements, thereunto belonging, in 22 Hen. VII, by reaſon that the abbot and whole convent then died of ſome infection or epidemical diſeaſe, eſcheated to the king, and was never after reſtored; a preſage (as ſome have obſerved) of the ruin and ſubverſion of all other monaſteries not long after to ſucceed."—The abbot was Giles S*hev*ington [2].

P. 553. a. l. 9. bott. r. "blue ſtone;" ſee note 1.

P. 556. Mr. Burton adds, under Evington, "At this town, as it appears, by the priory-book of Burton, and Matthew Paris, p. 117, William earl Ferrers and Derby, being ſick of the gout, and carried in a litter, through the negligence of the driver fell out of the ſame; by which he was ſo hurt, that within a ſhort while he died, 9 kal. April, 1254; and was buried at Merevale abbey in Warwickſhire, founded by his anceſtors."

P. 558. note, l. 5. after "viſcount Mansfield," add, "and earl of Newcaſtle upon Tine;" and, next line, read "the firſt William earl of Devonſhire."

P. 561. Mr. Burton adds, "About the time of king John, one Simon was lord of this manor; who in all his deeds ſtyled himſelf baro de Foxton (and at this time, as I have been informed, there is a place called The Baronage) for that he perhaps was ſeiſed of an entire barony, the extent whereof you ſhall ſee more at large in Sapcote."

P. 562. l. 18. Mr. Burton corrects, "who making equal partition of the manor, each ſtyled themſelves lord of a manor, as heretofore was uſual, and good in law, as I have ſpoke in Drayton.—Sir William Burton, owner of Middleton's manor, ſate juſtice of the king's bench from 17 Edw. III. to 36 Edw. III; in the which year he was made chief juſtice of the common pleas in Ireland; which place he held till his death. He had been before employed in ſome buſineſs for Ireland, viz. in the year 1345; at which time, as it appeareth by the Annals of Ireland ſet forth by the lord William Howard of Naworth caſtle, and printed with Mr. Camden's Britannia, he, by virtue of two writs to him directed, arreſted Maurice Fitz-Thomas earl of Kildare, and committed him to the caſtle of Dublin. Sir William Burton died 49 Edw. III; leaving iſſue by Eleanor his wife ſir Thomas Burton, knt. who died 8 Ric. II; leaving iſſue Thomas de Burton, of the age of 16 years; who in the reign of king Henry IV. aliened this manor to Thomas Derbey. The now lord of this manor [1636] is my very good friend, Thomas Chapman, eſq. one of the benchers, and reader, of the Inner Temple, in London, claiming from Derbey by deſcent. Latimer's manor, by an heir-general, came to Griffin of Dingley."

P. 570. a. 7. for "his" r. "her;" and b. 4. r. "Nov. 10;" and note 4. r. "late of Leiceſter, now of Bedford."

P. 571. The following judicial proceedings in the Exchequer occur relative to the rectory of Galby:

"Nov. 15, 1653. Hartopp, knt. againſt Tookey, clerk, and another. The bill ſet forth, that, whereas Matthew then late biſhop of Ely was, in right of his ſaid biſhopric of Ely, lawfully ſeiſed, to him and his ſucceſſors, of a yearly penſion of three pounds ſix ſhillings and eight pence iſſuing out of the rectory of Galby, in the county of Leiceſter; and that he, by indenture dated the 14th of December, in the 14th year of the late king Charles, did demiſe to the plaintiff the aforeſaid penſion for three lives, by virtue whereof the plaintiff was ſeiſed, and for divers years received the ſame of the then rector T. Tookey, the defendant's father; that afterwards, the lands and poſſeſſions of the late biſhop being by ordinances of parliament veſted and ſettled in certain truſtees to be ſold, the inheritance of the ſaid annual penſion was purchaſed by ſome friends of the ſaid plaintiff for him; that nevertheleſs the ſaid penſion, for 13 years paſt, had been in arrear and unpaid by the ſaid defendant Tookey's father and himſelf, the ſaid plaintiff not knowing of whom to demand the ſame, the aforeſaid T. Tookey having the perpetual donation of the ſaid rectory, and having made ſeveral conveyances thereof to the defendant Whalley's late huſband, who claimed a title thereto: the bill therefore prayed a diſcovery and payment of the ſaid penſion and the arrears thereof. The defendant Tookey anſwered; and confeſſed, that he was then rector there; but that, in caſe the ſaid plaintiff had a right to receive the ſaid penſion, he was not liable to pay the ſame, nor any arrears thereof, for any longer time than he was rector there. The plaintiff replied; and the cauſe deſcended to iſſue; and witneſſes were examined. The cauſe came on to be heard this day. And the Court declared, ordered, and decreed, that the ſaid rectory, in whoſe hands ſoever the ſame is and remaineth, is liable to the payment of the ſaid penſion, and of the arrears thereof; and that the ſaid defendant Tookey, now rector of the ſaid rectory, ſhall pay and ſatisfy to the plaintiff, for the arrears of the aforeſaid penſion due and incurred at the time of exhibiting this bill, the ſum of twenty pounds, with five pounds for his coſts; and that the ſaid defendant ſhall likewiſe pay and ſatisfy to the ſaid plaintiff for the future, as the ſame ſhall grow due and payable, during the time as he ſhall continue rector of the ſaid rectory."

---

[1] Henry III. anno regni 15.

[2] Q. S*kev*ington? Parkins gives it S*her*ington; and ſays, an abbot of the name of William occurs in a fine 31 Hen. VIII. by whom it ſhould ſeem the houſe was reſtored. Hiſtory of Norfolk, vol. III. p. 376.

"May 15, 1732. Wragg againſt Whalley. The plaintiff, as rector and patron of the rectory of Galby, in the county of Leiceſter, ſtated that, ſoon after the death of his father, his predeceſſor, on the 16th of October, 1727, he was inducted into the ſaid rectory, and became entitled to the revenues and profits thereof, and particularly to a certain penſion of two marks and a half, iſſuing out of the rectory of Norton by Galby, and payable at Eaſter yearly; that his predeceſſors, in right of the ſaid rectory, had been entitled to a manſion-houſe, with certain outhouſes and buildings, and to a yard, gardens, orchards, a home-cloſe of about two acres, and, for time out of mind, to divers other parcels of land and common, in the fields and precincts of Galby and Norton, for all manner of cattle, and to have and uſe a free and uncontrouled liberty, way, or paſſage, to and from each and every piece and parcel of the ſaid field-lands, for themſelves, their ſervants, their horſes, carts, and carriages, to ſtock, dreſs, ſow, plough, and manure, and to bring home the crops therefrom; that his father, for all the time that he was rector, was well entitled to the ſaid penſion, and had power to demiſe the ſame to him; that he is now become entitled to the profits of the ſaid rectory ſince his death, and ſo to the ſaid glebe-lands, and to the tithes and dues in the ſaid pariſh, or to ſome payment in lieu thereof; that, for time beyond the memory of man, all the ſaid fields in Galby and Norton were common and open until 1614; that about that time they were incloſed and allotted; that two allotments were then made to the then rector; one in Galby, next to the home-cloſe, of about 13 acres, called The Parſonage Home Cloſe, for the uſe of the rectors, in lieu of their glebe-lands in Galby fields; and the other in Norton, 29 acres, called Galby Parſonage Cloſe, in lieu of the glebe-lands in Norton fields; that the defendant's grandfather and the then rector came to ſome agreement for the payment of fifteen pounds twelve ſhillings and eight pence, in lieu of the tithes of the other incloſed grounds, as named in the bill; and that the two Pike Cloſes were allotted in lieu of the tithes of the other part of the ſaid incloſures. The bill therefore prayed a full diſcovery, and relief in the premiſſes. The defendants anſwered. And the defendant Whalley admitted that the plaintiff was rector, as in the bill ſtated, and entitled to the tithes thereof, but denied that he was entitled to the penſion. He ſaid, that he believed the plaintiff was entitled to the manſion-houſe, &c. as ſtated in the bill, and had a right of way before the incloſures; but he inſiſted, that he and his anceſtors had, for 200 years paſt, been, and that he now is, ſeiſed of the rectory of Norton, and of the advowſon of the vicarage of Norton, and the impropriate tithes thereof; and he denied that the vicar there had a right to any kind of tithes whatever, the dues belonging to the ſaid vicarage conſiſting only in certain pecuniary payments. He farther ſtated, that the Pike Cloſes belonged to the church of Galby, and had been time out of mind enjoyed by the plaintiff's predeceſſors, in lieu of the tithes of his lands in Galby; and that, as the ſaid Pike Cloſes are, by indentures of the 5th and 6th of January, 1699, declared to be a modus or compoſition for ſuch his ſaid lands, he apprehended the ſame to be a good modus or compoſition for the tithes of thoſe lands; and therefore did, and ſtill does, refuſe to pay the ſame; and he ſaid that the rector of Galby, for time beyond memory, had not only enjoyed the ſaid Pike Cloſes in lieu of the tithes of ſuch his ſaid lands, but alſo a money-payment of fifteen pounds twelve ſhillings and eight pence, in lieu of the tithes of the reſt of his (the defendant's) lands in Galby, as in the bill is mentioned. The other defendants put in their anſwers. The plaintiff replied to the defendants Whalley, Warner, Warner, and Dalby; and they rejoined, and witneſſes were examined on their behalf, as well as on the plaintiff's; and the cauſe came on to be heard: and, upon hearing counſel for all parties, and reading ſeveral proofs in the cauſe, and an indenture, ſigned W. Whalley, dated the 6th of January, in the 11th year of William III; and, on full debate, the Court ordered the injunction, formerly granted in this cauſe, to be diſſolved, and the bill to be diſmiſſed with coſts."

P. 574. l. 32. read "Martell, erroneouſly written in ſome records Marcell, was here of great antiquity."

Ibid. In 1294, William Gilmeyn, of Great Glen, had licenſe to grant to the abbot and convent of Alenceſter in Warwickſhire, a meſſuage and two virgates of land in Glen, which were then held by William de Irees by the payment of 5*s.* a year to the ſaid William; who were bound to pay 10*s.* a year to the manor of Newton Harcourt[1].

P. 575. In 1581, lands and tenements, parcel of the manor of Great Glen, demiſed in ſeveral parcels to the annual amount of £5. 15*s.* 4*d.* was leaſed by the Crown, for 21 years, to Robert Cole, alias Plume; in 1582, other lands there, parcel of the manor, rented at £17. 4*s.* 9*d.* were leaſed to Henry Foxwell; and in 1583 lands in Glen were granted to Joſeph Lupo[2].

P. 576. Mr. Burton, in noticing the arms in the North-eaſt window of Glen church, obſerves, "that in 1628 all the other windows were broken and defaced."

P. 579. Mr. Burton adds, "At this town (as the tradition goeth) was the ſeat of Edric de Stretton, by ſome writers called Streone (that is, treacherous or covetous,) ſometime a duke of Merchland [Mercia]; for confirmation whereof, when Mr. Charles Browne, father of Mr. John Browne, now lord of this manor, about 30 years ſince, began the foundation of his new houſe near the church, there was found, deep in the ground, the ruins of an antient building of ſtone, of a great bigneſs and proportion, which extended to a great plot of ground. This Edric was ſon of one Egelric, a man of mean birth and parentage; and, as Matthew of Weſtminſter[3] ſays of this Edric, he was a bad man, the ſcum of the people, the diſgrace of the country, two-tongued, crafty, a ſower of diſſention, a deep diſſembler and counterfeit; who, being ſent to mediate a peace with the enemy, more hotly kindled the war. This man, through his cunning and ſubtle behaviour, ſo won himſelf into credit with king Etheldred, that, in the year 1003, the king gave him his daughter Edina in marriage, and created him duke of Merchland, who thereby grew to ſuch an height of pride, that he could not endure a companion in the ſame country; for, in the year 1006[4], having invited Athelſtan[5], another duke of Merchland (a man of great power and eſteem) to a feaſt; which being ended, he took him a hunting, where in the woods he cauſed him treacherouſly to be ſlain by Godwin Porkhund, a wicked fellow of Shrewſbury; in revenge whereof the king cauſed the eyes of Wulſage and Wecgate, his two ſons, to be pulled out; and he himſelf not long after felt a juſt requital[6]; for, falling into braving words with king Canute, he was, by his command, in the year 1017, preſently ſtrangled, and flung out of a window into the Thames. The name of Stretton continued in this town long after; for, in the North windows of the church, I have ſeen under the pictures of men in the old glaſs theſe Saxon names written, viz. Edredus de Stretton, and Oſbertus de Stretton. And at this preſent (1636) there is yet remaining one freeholder and ſome others of that name, but of yeoman rank."

P. 586. b. l. 11. from bott. after "old croſs," add, "the baſe of which now only remains in the church-yard, nearly fronting the porch."

---

[1] Appendix to vol. I. p. 18; ex Inq. ad quod dampn. 22 Edw. I. N° 124. Leic.

[2] Leaſes in the Augmentation Office.

[3] Flor. Hiſt. lib. 1. fol. 296.

[4] Ibid. fol. 297.

[5] Florentius Wigorn, fol. 372. calleth him Alfhelme.

[6] Matth. Weſtminſter, lib. 1. p. 309; Roger de Hoveden, Annal. pars prior, fol. 250. b. Ingulph. 507.

P. 588. Mr. Burton, under his account of the lords De la Warre at Harby, adds, "The family of Griffin had a large inheritance with the heir of Latimer lord of Braybrook caſtle; but was much enlarged by Edward Griffin, attorney-general to queen Mary, who ſucceeded his elder brother ſir Thomas Griffin in all his whole eſtate; whoſe great grandchild ſir Edward Griffin, knt. is now (1636) his lineal heir by deſcent; who married the daughter of ſir William Uvedall, knt. of Wickham in Hampſhire, and treaſurer of the king's privy chamber; the which ſir William (if I might ſpeak without imputation) I could ſay, as the Frenchmen did of Monſieur Semieres (agent for the treaty of marriage between queen Elizabeth and Monſieur Francis duke of Alençon and Anjou, brother to the French king) that abſolutely he is one of the fineſt courtiers for figure and perſonage in the whole court."

Ibid. Dec. 12, 1599, ſir Edward Griffin demiſed the manor of Gumley to ſir Thomas Morriſon, ſir William Morriſon, and Valentine Brown, eſq. in truſt, to the uſe of himſelf and Lucy his wife for their lives; remainder to ſir Thomas Griffin; which demiſe, Jan. 31, 1608-9, was transferred by ſir Thomas Griffin to William Horton, of Gumley, gent. his heirs and aſſigns. This William was ſucceeded by his ſon John; who, in April 1630, was married to Margery Caſlin; and in 1658 had two ſons living; Thomas Horton, of Harborough; and John Horton, of Sadington.

John Horton had two ſons; John and Andrew, who ſucceſſively inherited Gumley.

John died in 1701. Andrew, who married Elizabeth Fiſh, daughter of Thomaſine Fiſh, widow, had one daughter, Frances, who died in 1712. He and his wife both died in 1721. By his laſt will, dated Oct. 30, 1719, he left his property at Gumley to his ſon, John Horton, of Kettering, gent. who in 1707 had purchaſed the manor from Henry Morley, and whoſe wife Margaret (daughter of John Bridges, eſq.) died of the ſmall-pox at Barton Segrave, her native town, Dec. 1, 1714, æt. 38[1]; leaving three daughters, 1. Elizabeth; 2. Margaret, married to her couſin John Bridges[2], eſq.; 3. Anne, married to Mr. John Aldwinckle.

6 Oct. 1660, Francis Fiſh, gent. and Mary his wife conveyed lands at Gumley to Thomas Oneby, who had married their daughter Elizabeth; 17 Oct. 1662, ſome lands at Gumley were purchaſed by Samuel Marſhall, clerk; which were again ſold, in 1686, by John Marſhall, M.D. to Henry Haſtings, eſq. from whom they were re-purchaſed by Andrew Horton; and in 1667, Thomas Oneby conveyed the ſame to John Oneby; who, June 10, 1680, mortgaged a yard-land there to his relation Nathan Wrighte, eſq.

In 1695, James Horton, of London, tallow-chandler, and Mary his wife, ſold lands to Andrew Horton.

Ibid. "London, April 7, 1708. We are informed that a gentleman of good eſtate, formerly bound for lord Griffin for the payment of £5000. was lately arreſted, and is ſtill in cuſtody."—"April 16. The record relating to the outlawry is ordered to be copied."—"May 17. On Saturday laſt, the lord Griffin was brought to the Queen's bench bar; where his outlawry was read againſt him in Latin. He ſaid, in his defence, that he was neither in arms nor in council with the enemy; and was forced upon the expedition merely againſt his inclination by the French court; he expreſſing his diſlike of it as a raſh attempt, and of dangerous conſequence; however, he was fain to comply with it. That he had nothing farther to ſay, but to throw himſelf at the queen's feet for mercy, and hoped the favour of the court. He was remanded by water to the Tower."—"June 16. On Monday, an order was ſent to the ſheriff for the beheading of the lord Griffin (commonly ſo called) this day on Tower-hill. For that purpoſe a ſcaffold was erected there yeſterday; and two companies of grenadiers are appointed to keep guard till execution ſhall be over."—"June 30. The laſt council-day, the lord Griffin was reprieved for a month; and the reprieve was ſent to the Tower laſt Monday[3]."

P. 589. In 1736, there were in the lordſhip of Gumley 5700 trees planted out for timber, 1000 of them being then ten inches in the ſquare; and it was computed by men of ſound judgement, that they would in 40 years time be worth £5500. The eſtate conſiſted, inter alia, of the manor and royalties of Gumley and Foxton (within one mile of Northamptonſhire and two from Market Harborough) with court-leet and court-baron, eſtrays, deodands; and alſo of chief rents iſſuing out of the ſeveral towns of Gumley, Foxton, Eaſt Langton, Weſt Langton, Thorpe Langton, and Smeeton, amounting in the whole to above £3. a year.

A very good new-built houſe, ſix rooms on a floor, called Gumley hall; the hall, two parlours, and a breakfaſt-room, all wainſcoted, as were ſeveral of the chambers; with very good offices, ſtable, two barns, coach-houſe, a double dove-houſe, two gardens planted with the choiceſt wall-fruit, a large orchard planted with the beſt of fruit, then in perfection; a cloſe called Fellow's cloſe, and a meadow called Longcroft, adjoining to the gardens, about ſeven acres; all then lately let to the hon. Mr. Berkeley at £25. a year.

Two ſubſtantial farm-houſes, ſeveral cloſes, and eleven yard-lands in the open-field. The wood called the Great Wood, about 20 acres, planted with oak, and in hand; the underwood in which, communibus annis, ſold for £12. Divers coppices or ſpinnies planted with aſh, elm, abeles, containing about five acres; which, in poles for coopers, &c. produced yearly £6. About 18 fiſh-ponds, with ſluices, well ſtocked with large carp, tench, perch, &c. lying one under another, which might be drained and filled again at pleaſure, and which coſt about £150. making.

There were two annuities of £20. per annum each, iſſuing out of ſome few of the cloſes and Great Wood only, to two ſchools, for which cloſes and wood the owner was not charged to the land-tax, but deducted it with one of the ſchool-maſters; of which ſchool, viz. that at Pighteſley near Kettering, the owner of the eſtate was patron, an advantage to the proprietor; and alſo a modus of £17. 6*s.* per annum, in lieu of tithes, for all the incloſures, (about £2.) to Merton College. The ſchool-maſter of Pighteſley had a very good houſe and cloſe adjoining, where he taught ſchool, in the gift of the owner of this eſtate, beſides the £20; ſo that the whole was worth £26. beſides 40*s.* for teaching every out-town boy [1].—The lordſhip of Gumley was purchaſed, in 1741, by Joſeph Cradock, eſq. from Mr. John Aldwinckle, who married the youngeſt daughter and coheireſs of Mr. John Horton.

---

[1] See her epitaph in Bridges's Northamptonſhire, vol. II. p. 221.

[2] I gladly embrace this opportunity of ſetting right an inadvertency in the "Anecdotes of Mr. Bowyer," pp. 145. 557. The purchaſer of the eſtate at Burton Segrave was John Bridges, eldeſt ſon of colonel John Bridges, of Alceſter, co. Warwick; who dying Jan. 5, 1712-13, æt. 71, (ſee his epitaph in the Hiſtory of Northamptonſhire, vol. II. p. 221.) was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon John, the original collector of the materials for the Hiſtory of his native county; and he dying without iſſue March 16, 1723-4, (ſee his epitaph, ib. vol. I. p. vi.) was ſucceeded by his brother William Bridges, eſq. of the Stamp Office; and he, 1743, by his only ſon John; whoſe merits the following epitaph at Burton Segrave, never before printed, will record:

"On the South ſide, before the entrance into the chancel, is a dormitory or chapel for the Bridges family; and there, againſt the Eaſt wall, is a neat monument of grey and variegated marble, adorned with archetrave, cherubs' heads, and urn at top, with this inſcription:

Arms: Azure, three water-bougets, 2. 1. Or; Bridges; impaling, Sable, a duck's head caboſhed Argent; Horton. (Pl. LXX, fig. 21.)

"Infra hunc fornicem ſepulchralem, cineres ſuos deponi voluit
JOHANNES BRIDGES armiger,
GULIELMI armigeri filius unicus,
JOHANNIS viri ſummâ laude digni, rerumque reconditarum indagatoris ſtudioſiſſimi (poſt patris mortem)
patruelis hæres.
Matrem ſortitus eſt ex antiquâ de HART ſtirpe apud Brill in agro Buckingamiæ olim commorante.
Uxorem duxit MARGARETAM conſobrinam, filiam JOHANNIS & MARGARETÆ HORTON, quæ de natis fuerat JOHANNIS BRIDGES armigeri, qui primus ſuæ Gentis
in hoc vico ruſtico ſedes collocavit.
In triceſimo quarto ſuæ ætatis anno,
Patruis, quæ reliquæ fuerant, bonis ſucceſſit;
ſed iis parum diu potitus eſt,
patri vix ſemianno ſuperſtes.
Nam eodem anno febre correptus acutâ, ſine liberis mortem præmaturam obiit;
dignus tamen
(ſi hodierna exoptanda eſſet vita) diuturniori ejus curriculo.
Quippe qui propter pectoris integritatem,
morum urbanitatem,
et placidiſſimum ingenii obſequium,
in quo præ cæteris enituit, & ſpectatus fuit, et ſibi ſuiſque vixit utilis,
et ab omnibus deſideratus obiit,
decimo ſexto die Julii 1741.
In memoriam chariſſimi conjugis, cui ſe optima & plurima debere fatetur, lapidem hunc ſepulchralem poni curavit
Conjux amantiſſima."

[3] From a Newſpaper of the year 1708, in my collection, printed by John Morphew, intituled, "The Supplement."

P. 592. There is at Audley inn a capital pedigree of "the antient family of the Griffins of Gormandlee, co. Leiceſter;" with whole lengths in armour and robes of Hubert de Burgo earl of Kent, Robert Tregoze baron of Ewias, Roger de la Warr baron of Wichinton; Warin Latimer baron of Danby at the head, and Griffin on horſeback in armour; ſeals, deeds, and arms; at leaſt ten feet long.

P. 593. Mr. Burton adds, "There is a tradition about this town of Haloughton, that it hath been accounted many years ago a place of ſpecial holineſs (the etymon of the name importing as much as Holy-town [2]); ſo as ſick folks did uſe to flock thither to die, as faſt as mad men to Anticyræ to be cured; and the great charnel houſe, vaulted under the church, was perhaps founded for the entertainment of thoſe gueſts." Mr. Burton's obſervations, however, have no foundation.

P. 597. John Dent, of Southwark, Surrey, brother to John Dent, of Halloughton, died ſeiſed of 200 acres at Melton Mowbray [3].

P. 600. In 1586, The Newtes Paſture, in Hallaton, parcel of the manor, was demiſed to Thomas Carre, Thomas Skevington, and others, at a rent of 16*s* [4].

P. 602. Thomas fourth ſon of the late Thomas Vowe, eſq. died ſ. p. in October 1798; and John (ſixth ſon) married Martha daughter of Mr. Henry Ward, of Gainſborough, co. Lincoln, July 6, 1798.

P. 604. Mr. Fenwick publiſhed "A Sermon preached at Leiceſter, July 14, 1736, at the Triennial Viſitation of Richard Biſhop of Lincoln;" and "A Sermon preached in the pariſh church of Hallaton, Oct. 31, 1736, on occaſion of the Small-pox breaking out there." He was ſome time fellow of St. John's college, Cambridge; B. A. there 1708; M. A. 1712; B. D. 1720; and publiſhed, "Thoughts on the Hebrew Titles of the Pſalms, and on ſome of thoſe in the Septuagint; endeavouring to diſcover the meaning, and point out the uſe of them; 1749," 8vo.

P. 604. a. l. 61. r. "near 30 years."

P. 607. In October, 1799, as a boy was nutting in Holyoke wood, his feet ſlipped into a ditch, and ſtruck againſt a glaſs urn, containing 230 ſilver coins of Gratian, Julian, Theodoſius, Arcadius, &c. many of which were in high preſervation.

P. 609. Half the lordſhip was incloſed before 1730.

P. 610. a. l. ult. r. "of her age."

P. 611. The note upon villans Mr. Burton had conſiderably enlarged. After "his lord," line 6, he adds, "Of this kind there were two ſorts, villans regardant and villans in groſs. Villans regardant were where a man was ſeiſed of a manor to which a villan was regardant; and he that is ſeiſed of the manor, or they whoſe eſtate he hath in the ſame manor, have been ſeiſed of the ſaid villan and of his anceſtors, as villans regardants to the ſaid manor, time out of mind. Villan in groſs is where a villan regardant is granted from a manor to another: theſe villans in groſs are called in the civil law vernæ; the villans regardants, called adſcriptitii glebæ, or agri conſiti, ſo often mentioned in Juſtinian's Digeſts and Code." And, after "any man," l. 12, "Theſe villans and bondmen are now almoſt quite extinguiſhed through the realm; but when they ſhould be manumitted I cannot certainly ſay. That learned ſir Thomas Smith, LL. D. and ſecretary of ſtate to that renowned queen Elizabeth, 1565, in his book of the Commonwealth of England, cap. 10, delivereth his opinion hereof in theſe words: 'Since the light of the Chriſtian religion maketh us all in Chriſt brethren, and in reſpect of God and Chriſt conſervos; men began to have conſcience to hold in captivity and ſuch extreme bondage him whom they muſt acknowledge to be their brother, and a Chriſtian, who looketh in Chriſt and by Chriſt to have equal portion with them in the Goſpel and ſalvation. Upon this ſcruple, in continuance of time, and by long ſucceſſion, the holy fathers, monks and friers, in their confeſſions, and eſpecially at the time of extreme and deadly ſickneſs, burdened the conſciences of them whom they had under their hands; ſo that temporal men, by little and little, by reaſon of that terror in their conſciences, were glad to manumit all their villans. But the ſaid holy fathers, with the abbots and priors, did not in like ſort by theirs; for they had alſo conſcience to impoveriſh and deſpoil the church ſo much as to manumit ſuch as were bound to their churches, or to the manors which the church had gotten; and ſo kept theirs ſtill. The ſame did the biſhops alſo; till at the laſt, and now of late ſome biſhops (to make a piece of money) manumitted theirs, partly for argent, partly for ſlaunders, that they ſeemed more cruel than the temporalty: after, the monaſteries coming into temporal men's hands, have been the occaſion that now they be almoſt all manumitted.' Thus far ſir Thomas Smith. And moſt probable it is that for money they were all manumitted. Leland, in his Itinerary, in Wiltſhire, giveth an inſtance in the ſame kind; ſpeaking of the manor of Coſham, co. Wilts, ſome time belonging to the earl of Cornwall, who had here a manſion-place, where, for his pleaſure, he ſometimes lay; in which manor all the inhabitants were bondmen, who, on a time greatly lamenting their miſerable eſtate, were overheard by the ſaid earl, who, commiſerating their condition of life, for a ſum of money, manumitted them all, and gave them this manor to hold by copy of court-roll and payment of a yearly chief rent." And, l. 16. after "bought by Crouch," he reads, "and thereof made a leaſe for years to his ſervant, who entered; and, upon an agreement made by Crouch," &c.

P. 612. Mr. Burton adds, "At this town was born that learned Doctor in Divinity William de Houghton, who was alſo abbot of the monaſtery of Croxton in this county. He beſtowed much coſt upon his houſe; and eſpecially upon the library, to which he gave a great Bible in nine volumes, very fairly written in vellum, and learnedly gloſſed upon by Solomon archdeacon of Leiceſter, for which Bible be paid £50. ſterling. He died in 1274, and was buried at Croxton, as I find in a little old fragment; which alſo is briefly remembered by John Stowe, in his Annals, at the very beginning of the reign of king Edward I."

Ibid. The lands and tenements in Houghton, belonging to the Carthuſian priory near Coventry, were let by them, March 2, 1537-8, to John Allen, for 60 years, for 63*s.* 1½*d.* rent. This leaſe was ſurrendered to king James I, June 19, 1611.

P. 616. Mary Hericke's anagram on his tomb was,

Make ye rickes.

P. 618. William Herick, of Gray's Inn, gent. eldeſt ſon and heir of Tobias Herick of Houghton, only ſon and heir of Robert Herick, eſq. of Leiceſter, died, at his chambers in Gray's Inn, March 20, 1635, being a bachelor; and was interred with eſcocheons in the pariſh church of St. Andrew in Holborn, leaving three brothers, John his next heir, Francis, and Tobias [5].

P. 629. b. l. 48. r. "B. A. 1719."

P. 632. Nicholas Herrick, of London, merchant, reſided in Colman-ſtreet ward in 1634, when he entered his pedigree. His ſiſter Mercie was married to John Wingfield, of Brantham, Suffolk, ſon of Humphrey Wingfield (who died in 1612) by Anne, daughter of ſir John Breauſe, of Little Wenham, Suffolk.

P. 633. Mr. Cotton, in his Angler, mentions Robert Herrick as author of a Piſcatory Eclogue; and the late Dr. Farmer obſerves, in a MS note, that Robert Herrick's print was "extremely like the late Mr. Samuel Heyrick of Leiceſter."

P. 636. a. l. 42. r. "and died in 1640."

P. 639. The gold coin of Julianus was engraved from a drawing found amongſt ſir Thomas Cave's MSS. His names FL. CL. occur on moſt of his coins, and P. P. or P. F. following his name; but PFP is probably a falſe reading.

---

[1] This appears from the particulars offered in 1736 for public inſpection by Mr. Aldwinckle.

[2] Leland, in his Itinerary, calleth it Halydon; that is, Holy hill, the town ſtanding on the declive of a hill.

[3] Inq. 5 Sept. 38 Eliz. Cole's Eſcheats, vol. I. Harl. MSS. 756.

[4] Leaſes in the Augmentation Office.

[5] From the Funeral Certificate, ſigned by Francis Heyrick, in the College of Arms, I 24. p. 30.

P. 641. In 1645, Mr. Hunt, parſon of Kibworth, was fined £150. for delinquency.

P. 642. The following epitaph has been placed at Kibworth ſince the account of that pariſh was printed:

“Conſoled in approaching Death by Faith,
Scripture, and the hope of advancement to life eternal, on September the 2d, 1797, died Elizabeth,
the daughter of George Foxton, of Kibworth, gent.
and wife of the Rev. Thomas Thomas, B.D.
rector of Iſham.

O Grief! allow, that Death nor tomb profound
Can duſt reviving lock in charnel-ground;
When Jah commands the clay-cold form ariſe,
And, ſpirit-like, aſcend to Sion ſkies;
No grievance more to feel, nor fancied gloom,
But raptures that confeſs a glorious doom;
When Saint becomes, in ſoul-embodying frame,
A monument of praiſe to Shiloh's name[1].”

P. 643. In the church-yard of Caldecote, Rutland:

“William Peters, ſon of William and Anne Peters, of Kibworth, died July 5, 1789, aged 12.
Katharine Peters, their daughter, died Aug. 10, 1791, aged 18.”

P. 645. l. 28. r. “deacuaret;” l. 38. r. “Heydon, com. Eſſex;” l. 53. r. “Farneham, com. Bucks;” and, after “teneret,” l. 40, add, “& inveniat unam cirothecam pro manu dextrâ.”—The manner of the coronation of king Henry III. ſee in Matthew Paris, p. 563.—The like claims were made, and ſervices performed, at the coronation of king Henry IV.[2]; and at every ſucceeding one, to that of his preſent Majeſty.

P. 652. Dr. David Jennings was born May 18, 1691, and received his grammar learning at a free-ſchool at Kibworth. About 1709 he came to London, and entered into a courſe of academical ſtudies under the tuition of the Rev. Dr. Chauncey, and finiſhed them under Dr. Ridgley and Mr. Eames. He preached his firſt ſermon at Batterſea May 23, 1714; and in March following was choſen one of the lecturers at an evening lecture then carried on at Rotherhithe. In June 1716, he was choſen aſſiſtant to the Rev. Mr. Foxon. May 19, 1718, choſen, and July 25 ordained paſtor, in the room of the Rev. Mr. Simmons, deceaſed, and ſucceeded by William Ford, jun. his aſſiſtant and co-paſtor. In 1719, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. William Cox, of Wapping, timber-merchant, who died in child-bed within the year. May 19, 1724, he married Sarah, daughter of Mr. Joſeph Collins, of Hackney, by whom he left two ſons, Joſeph and David. On the deceaſe of the Rev. Daniel Neal in 1743, he was choſen a truſtee of Mr. Coward's large charities; and in Auguſt that year ſucceeded the Rev. Mr. Hubbard as one of Mr. Coward's lecturers at Little St. Helen's. He ſucceeded Mr. John Eames in 1744 as divinity profeſſor in the Diſſenting academy at Hoxton, then chiefly ſupported by Mr. Coward's charity; and in May 1749 the Univerſity of St. Andrew's in Scotland honoured him with the degree of D. D. He publiſhed Sermons to Young People, 1730, dedicated to his Congregation; republiſhed 1743, 12mo; ſeveral Sermons among thoſe preached at Berry-ſtreet by different miniſters on the principal heads of the Chriſtian Religion 1733; and publiſhed 1737; a Tranſlation of Profeſſor Franck's Letter on the moſt uſeful way of preaching, and a Preface, containing ſome account of the profeſſor, 1736, with two Diſcourſes of Mr. John Jennings on preaching Chriſt, and on experimental preaching. He printed an Ordination Sermon at St. Ive's in Huntingdonſhire, from 2 Cor. iv. 5. 1742, 8vo, with a Charge by Dr. Doddridge; a Sermon at the Funeral of David Neale, 1 Cor. xv. 22. 1743; a Sermon on the Rebellion, preached in the Meeting at New Broad-ſtreet, 1746; a Sermon before the Society for Reformation of Manners, at Salters Hall, 1746, 8vo; an Introduction to the Uſe of the Globes and Orrery, with an Appendix, attempting to explain the Moſaic account of the Creation, printed 1739, but not publiſhed till 1747; an Abridgement of the Life of the Rev. Dr. Cotton Mather, publiſhed 1744; a Funeral Sermon, Heb. xi. 4. 1749; a Charge at the Ordination of the Rev. William Ford, jun. 1752, annexed to a Sermon by William Ford, ſen. and a Charge by Dr. Savage; a Sermon, 1752, 12mo; The Scripture Teſtimony examined and confirmed by plain Arguments; or, an Appeal to Common Senſe, for the Truth of the Holy Scriptures, in two Diſcourſes, 1755, 12mo; a funeral Sermon for the Rev. Timothy Jollie, from Phil. i. 23. 1757, 8vo; a Sermon on Proverbs xxii. 6. 17.., 8vo. He was alſo author of “An Introduction to the Knowledge of Medals,” which was printed after his death, by Baſkerville, at Birmingham, 1775, 8vo. Beſides theſe he was author of an anonymous piece, written with great ſmartneſs, in vindication of the Scripture Doctrine of Original Sin, printed in 1740. He enjoyed a very good ſtate of health till within two years of his death, when he was ſeized with epileptic fits, which frequently returned, and conſiderably weakened him, till they carried him off Sept. 15, 1762. With a ſtrong conſtitution, he poſſeſſed a comely perſon, quick apprehenſion, acute judgement, lively imagination, and happy memory, a temper eaſy and chearful, but warm aud ſanguine. A funeral Sermon on Dr. Jennings, by the Rev. Samuel Morton Savage, with an Oration at his Interment by the Rev. William Ford, appeared in 1762.

P. 663. By an agreement preſerved at Oxford, dated Oct. 30, 1645, it appears “that Elias Strelley, of Weſt Langton, in the county of Leiceſter, gent. had there an eſtate for his life, amongſt other things, of and in theſe three cloſes following, that is to ſay, The Home Cloſe, The Orchard Penne, and the Cloſe above it, in Weſt Langton, without impeachment of waſte; in and about which cloſes, and the hedges and ditches, mounds, and free-boards thereof, there were then divers aſh-trees growing. And the ſaid Elias Strelley, for conſideration of £3. of good and lawful money of England, paid by his ſon and heir Henry Strelley, covenanted, that he would not, during the natural life of the ſaid Elias, fell, cut down, girdle, lop, top, plaſh, or ſpread, any aſh-trees whatſoever, in any of the ſaid recited cloſes, or the hedges, ditches, mounds, fences, or free-boards of the ſame, but would let the ſame grow, ſtand, and increaſe, for the only uſe and benefit of the ſaid Henry Strelley, his heirs and aſſigns, without any manner of ſpoil, waſte, or deſtruction[3].”

“March 27, 1650. A brief collection of four yard-land; land arable, meadow, and paſture, with the appurtenances, of the inheritance of Nicholas Strelley, extracted forth of his Boundary book; viz.

Imprimis, one meſſuage, 50 acres of arable land, 28 acres of paſture and mowing ground; ſeven cloſings, containing 10 acres, and 12 acres of meadow.

A particular valuation hereof as followeth:

My homeſtead, valued at	£120	0	0
The Seven cloſing, valued at	300	0	0
The fifteen acres adjoining, to be incloſed, valued at	300	0	0
Twelve acres of meadow at £12.	240	0	0
There are 63 acres ſtill remaining, valued at £30. per annum, which amounts to £600. or take it thus, valued at £10. per acre, and it amounts to	630	0	0
Amounts, according to this valuation,	1590	0	0

Memorandum, that the greateſt part of the arable land, meadow, and paſture, with the appurtenances, do lie in very good ſort, by wongs and great pieces throughout in quantity; and as concerning quality, the prime ſoil in Leiceſterſhire. NICH. STRELLEY.

---

[1] The Gentleman who communicated this epitaph obſerves: “There is, perhaps, nothing more deſireable in the compoſition of an epitaph, than the ſimplicity which ſpeaks to the heart; nay (as the Poet beautifully ſays), ‘Uncouth rhymes, with ſhapeleſs ſculpture deck'd,’ to the feeling mind will be more affecting, than the moſt laboured production of the chiſſel or the Muſe. Nevertheleſs, the ſublime may be admitted, as in the preſent inſtance, in a manner that may equally do juſtice to the ſubject, and credit to the genius of the compoſer.”

[2] Crompton's Juriſdiction of Courts, p. 84.

[3] From a long quarto MS. in Dr. Rawlinſon's Collection, unnumbered, but lettered on the back, “Strelley's MS. of things in Leiceſterſhire, flagrante bello civili.”

Wheat-field, 1652. One headland, and the fellow and hades upon Little hill, containing one acre.

Half acre land, with the hades on the ſame furlong.

Fallow. Two half-acre leys ſhuting upon Purgate, being one diſtance from the other; five leyes ſhuting Eaſt and Weſt, near unto Lord's cloſe, containing three acres: in the whole five acres and a half, valued at £15. an acre, £82 10 0

Wheat. The dole of meadow in the Weſt Moor, containing three acres; two old rood leys near unto Lord's cloſe, ſhuting Eaſt and Weſt; four half rood leys in Croſour cloſe, next the Barons cloſe; two rood leys together on the ſame furlong.

Peas. Two rood leys together in Round-hill cloſe.

Fallow. Two old rood leys beyond the Spinage, Hopkins, lately Weſt. Item, one half rood land on the Weſt ſide Rundles. In the whole ſix acres and half a rood at £15. an acre, £90 0 0

So that there is in Mr. Staveley's cloſing of my ground 11 acres and a half, to be valued at £15. an acre, it comes to, beſides the half rood in Rundles, £165 0 0

Item, my homeſtead, 100 0 0

Item, Seven cloſing, valued at twelve acres, the price 260 0 0

Item, 32 lands, with the Barons gate, containing ſeven acres and one rood, at £11. an acre, £79 5 0

Mem. my homeſtead Seven cloſing:

Thirty and two lands, with the gate, containing 20 acres, as before prized, it comes in the whole to 439 5 0

So that this comes to in all [1] 604 5 0

P. 665. note 2. l. 1. for "Cayne," r. "Eayre."

P. 666. "To the honourable the committee at Leiceſter, the petition of the pariſhioners of Church Langton in the ſaid county, humbly ſheweth, That your petitioners are deſtitute of preaching, of prayer, and the adminiſtration of the ſacraments, the outward means of their ſalvation; that Clement Breton, D. D. their miniſter, is of exemplary godly life and converſation, and hath demeaned himſelf ſoberly and quietly among them; that he did duly preach unto your petitioners while he did abide with them; and the cure was never more ſufficiently diſcharged in their memories than under his miniſtry. Wherefore, the premiſſes conſidered, your petitioners humbly pray that he, preaching twice every Lord's day unto your petitioners, and obſerving all other orders which ſhall be enjoined him in the exerciſe of his function, may continue their miniſter, and go on in the diſcharge of his miniſterial office, and your petitioners in the public worſhip of God and their Chriſtian profeſſion[2]."

P. 668. On the floor of Langton church, on a free ſtone under the North wall, is the following epitaph:

"HERE LYETH THE BODY OF SARAH ROBERTS, THE WIFE OF THOMAS ROBERTS, ESQ.
THE SON OF SIR RICHARD ROBERTS,
WHO DECEASED SEPT. 29TH, 1678."

Ibid. Note 3. l. 2. for "before," r. "below."

P. 672. In 1393, John de Carvaile gave to John Normanville lands and tenements in Turlangton, which he poſſeſſed by the feoffment of Thomas de Normanville, father of the ſaid John.

P. 673. In the ſums paid by the ſeveral towns which pay chief rents unto the Gartre hundred court, 4*d*. is included in each article for the receipt.

Ibid. "In the name of God, Amen. The eighth day of February, in the 19th year of the reign of our ſovereign lord Charles, by the grace of God of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, king, defender of the faith, &c. annoque Domini 1643, I Thomas Smith, alias Moor, of Tur Langton in the county of Leiceſter, yeoman, being ſick of body, but of good and perfect memory (thanks be to Almighty God), calling to mind this uncertain and tranſitory life, and the certainty of death, do make and ordain this my laſt will and teſtament, in manner and form following: viz. Firſt and principally, I commend my ſoul into the hands of Almighty God my Maker, hoping ſtedfaſtly, and believing, through the precious bloodſhed, death, and paſſion of my bleſſed Lord, Saviour, and Redeemer, Jeſus Chriſt, and by his only merits, to have remiſſion of my ſins, and to enjoy everlaſting life; and my body I commit to the earth, to be interred in decent and Chriſtian burial, at the diſcretion of my executors hereafter named: and as touching all my moneys, debts, goods, chattles, houſhold ſtuff whatſoever, I do give and bequeath unto Grace my loving wife all my houſhold ſtuff whatſoever, and £50. of lawful Engliſh money, to be paid unto her within one month next coming after my deceaſe by my executors hereafter named: Item, I give to Mr. Samuel Smith £5 to be deducted and allowed him out of the ſum of £30. which he oweth me upon bond, dated the 5th of October, 1643; Item, I give to Anne his wife £5. more, to be paid her out of the ſaid ſum; and the other £20. remaining of the ſaid bond, I give to Grace my wife; Item, I give unto Alice Smyth, the daughter of Anne Smyth, £10. to be paid her within one year next after my deceaſe; Item, I give and bequeath to Samuel, the ſone of the aforenamed Samuel Smyth, 20*s*; Item, I give and bequeath unto Thomas Smyth, my grand-child, £70. of lawful money of England, to be paid him by my executors when he ſhall accompliſh and come to his full age, one and twenty years: And if it happen my ſaid grand-child Thomas Smyth do deceaſe before he accompliſh his ſaid age of one and twenty years, then my will is that the ſaid £70. ſhall be equally divided between my three executors. Item, I give, deviſe, and bequeath unto the aforenamed Thomas Smyth, my grand-child, one pair of malt quarnes, one garner, all my carts, cart-gears, ploughs, plough-gears, harrows, harrow-gears, hovel-timber, and all other timber about the yard and homeſtead, to be ſafely kept and laid up for him until he accompliſh his ſaid years of one and twenty, and then to be delivered unto him: And if it happen my ſaid grand-child Thomas Smyth to die before he accompliſh the ſaid age of one and twenty years, then my will is alſo that all the above-mentioned carts, cart-gears, and other the above-named goods, ſhall be parted and equally divided amongſt my ſaid executors. Item, I give and bequeath unto my couſin Thomas Coleman, of Stretton, £5.; Item, I give unto William Coleman, of Stretton, £5.; Item, I give to George Coleman, of Stretton, £5.; Item, I give to John Andrewes, of Illſton, £5.; Item, I give to George Andrewes, of Illſton, 50*s*.; Item, I give to Thomas Gilbert, my godſon, 10*s*.; Item, I give to Margaret Smyth £5.; Item, I give and bequeath unto Robert Coleman, of Tur Langton, 20*s*.; Item, I give to William Watts, my godſon, 5*s*.; Item, I give to Thomas Burges, 5*s*.; Item, I give to my three tenants, viz. Vaile, Brewing, and Cobley, 5*s*. apiece; Item, I give to William Buzzard, my ſervant, 5*s*.; Item, I give to my maid ſervant, Dorothy Browne, 5*s*.; I give to Elizabeth Chapman, 5*s*.; Item, I give to the poor ſort of people of Weſt Langton 15*s*.; Item, I give to the poorer ſort of people of Eaſt Langton townſhip 15*s*.: And my will is, that all the ſaid ſums and legacies by me heretofore given, and not limited hereby, ſhall be paid within one year next coming after my deceaſe. Item, I give to my ſiſter Andrewes one cow and a calf; Item, I give to my eldeſt daughter, Elizabeth Strelley, £40. and one cow; Item, I give unto her three daughters, Grace, Dorothy, and Elizabeth, £70. 10*s*. to be equally parted amongſt them, and to be paid them within one year next after my deceaſe. Item, I give to my ſecond daughter, Jane Coleman, £40.; Item, I give to her two children, William and Joan, £47. to be equally parted amongſt them, and paid within a year after my deceaſe; Item, I give to my youngeſt daughter, Anne Halford, £40.; and to her two children John and Joan, £47. to be equally parted between them, and to be paid within one year next after my deceaſe; Item, I give and bequeath to my ſon-in-law, Nicholas Strelley, £80. of lawful Engliſh money, one black four year old colt, and one grey colt of two years old, one horſe-foal, three yearly calves, 30 todds of my wool, to be waighed out of my wool; Item, I give and bequeath to my ſon-in-law, Henry Coleman, £80. of lawful Engliſh money, one bay mare, one bay colt, one mare-foal, two yearling calves, and all the reſt of my wool; only the ſaid Henry paying out of his part £10. when the ſaid wool is ſold, unto Grace my wife. Item, I give and bequeath unto Nicholas Strelley and Henry Coleman three cows and four rams which are in Noſeley Cloſe, to be equally parted between them; Item, I give and bequeath to my ſon-in-law, Richard Halford, my beſt bay horſe, and £80. of lawful Engliſh money. All the reſt of my goods, cattle, chattels, and debts, hereby not given nor bequeathed (my debts, legacies, and funeral being fully paid and diſcharged) I give and bequeath unto my ſaid three ſons-in-law, viz. Nicholas Strelley, Richard Halford, and Henry Coleman, whom I make my full and ſole executors of this my laſt will and teſtament. In witneſs whereof I have hereunto ſet my hand and ſeal. Dated the day and year firſt above written. Thomas Smith.

---

[1] From a long quarto MS. in Dr. Rawlinſon's Collection, unnumbered, but lettered on the back, "Strelley's MS. of things in Leiceſterſhire, flagrante bello civili."

[2] Ibid.

"Read, ſealed, and publiſhed, in the preſence of us,
John Dillingham,
John Freere,
Leonard Coleman."

The inventory of all the goods, cattle, chattels, credits, and debts, of Thomas Smyth, alias Moore, late of Tur Langton, in the county of Leiceſter, yeoman, deceaſed; taken and praiſed the firſt day of April, anno Domini 1645, annoque 21° Caroli nunc regis Angliæ, &c. by John Freere, Leonard Coleman the elder, and Thomas Burges, as followeth:

Imprimis, eight ſcore and ten ſheep,	£60	0	0
Item, eleven horſe kind	40	0	0
Item, nineteen kine and five yearling calves,	45	0	0
Item, ſix hogs, one ſow, and four pigs,	5	0	0
Item, in barley, peas, and wheat	80	0	0
Item, in hay,	30	0	0
Item, in wool,	50	0	0
Item, carts, ploughs, harrows, and cart-gear,	10	0	0
Item, hovel, timber, and all other wood and timber,	5	0	0
Item, the malt-quearns and garner,	2	0	0
Item, in houſhold ſtuffe and goods within doors,	30	0	0
Item, his apparel, and money in his purſe,	20	0	0
Item, debts good and deſperate, due and owing to the defunct,	500	0	0
Item, things omitted and forgotten	2	0	0

John Freere. Thomas Burges.

P. 674. Mr. Burton's MS. thus deſcribes two rectors of Langton: "In the 26th of king Henry the Eighth, the rector of this church was Polydore Vergil, an Italian (as I found by an inquiſition then taken of the value of all the churches in this county, and the incumbents then living, lately by me copied out of the original). This Polydore Vergil was born in the city of Urbine in Italy; ſon of George Vergil, great grandchild to Anthony Vergil, doctor in phyſic and philoſophy, reader in the univerſity of Paris. Being yet but young, he ſhewed many fruits of his rare wit, inſomuch that Guido Ubaldo, then duke of Venice, a learned prince, and a great Mæcenas of learned men, took notice of him, and allowed him a large exhibition; to which duke he dedicated his Adages, firſt printed in Venice, 1498; which work he calleth his primitiæ; which after was re-printed, 1519, and by him then dedicated to Richard Pace, ſecretary of ſtate to king Henry VIII. He afterwards ſet forth his book "De Inventoribus Rerum" (a work, as he ſaith, begun and finiſhed in the ſpace of nine months), printed at Urbine 1499; written to Luigi Odaſſio, ſome time ſchoolmaſter to the ſaid duke Guido Ubaldo. Duke Guido, perceiving the great knowledge and learning of Polydore, and intending farther to advance him, procured of Pope Alexander VI. (whoſe captain-general he was of all the forces belonging to the church) that he might be ſent into England, there to gather the Pope's treaſure of Peter-pence; which the rather he endeavoured, for that he was in a great league of amity with king Henry the Seventh, formerly commenced in the time of his exile (if ſo I may term it), when he was but earl of Richmond; for teſtimony of which, he was after by him elected into the order of the Garter. Upon the firſt coming of Polydore, king Henry VII. impoſed on him the penning of the Engliſh hiſtory, from the firſt beginning to that preſent time; wherein, as himſelf ſaith, he ſpent twelve years' labour together, but yet finiſhed it not; after ſome diſcontinuance, he ſet upon it again, and performed it in 1533, in the 25th year of king Henry VIII; to whom he then made dedication of the ſame; a work of great labour and like reading, but much carped at by John Druſe (who wrote a book againſt him), Jo. Leland, Richard White, Jo. Lewis, Humphrey Lluid, and others; not, as I conceive, for any juſt cauſe, but for that he, being an alien, ſhould be graced with ſuch a matter of charge, which moſt properly had belonged to a native of the land. The chief matters they charge him with are; firſt, for that, having taken the ſubſtance of the beginning of his hiſtory all out of the works of Geoffrey of Monmouth, yet unthankfully (imitating therein William of Newborough) laſhing at him; next, for that in many places he pincheth ſomewhat ſmartly upon the antiquity of Britain; thirdly, for that he doth ſeem ſeverely to cenſure ſome of thoſe kings which he treateth of; laſtly, that, having gotten many old manuſcripts together, by whoſe help he compiled his book, after his concluſion of the ſame, he ſet fire on them all. To which allegations if I might be admitted to ſpeak, I ſhould clear him from all. For the firſt and ſecond, it is well obſerved by many of great reading and judgement, that Geoffrey of Monmouth hath ſomewhat hyperbolically extolled the praiſe and antiquity of the Britons, and interlaced many paſſages of his own device, and drawn down a ſeries of deſcents, but with what truth the juſt and true chronology of time, upon good examination, will ſoon diſcover; ſo that Polydore doth not upon the matter impeach the antiquity of Britain, but the fabulous inventions of the ſaid Geoffrey. To the third, thoſe Princes which oppoſed the Pope's proceedings are indeed by him cenſured, thoſe that gave way are applauded; but that is to be attributed to the time, and to the circumſtance, as whoſe agent he was; yet whoever ſhall peruſe what he hath written ſhall find, that many things he did not approve, though inſtituted by the Pope's authority, but held them impertinent and novel; as the inhibiting of marriage to ſpiritual men, the ordination of feſtival days, examinations, kneeling to pictures, creation of cardinals and religious orders, and ſuch like. Laſtly, for his deſtroying of manuſcripts, I could never yet be drawn to believe it; neither is it probable, for that, unleſs he had had all the copies of each kind together, that by one act they might all have finally periſhed, he would never have attempted ſuch an enterprize; and certain it is, by Leland's Collectanea, that almoſt in every abbey (himſelf ſetting down a catalogue of all manuſcripts which he ſaw in each place) there was variety and ſtore of copies, not only of the chiefeſt writers, but almoſt of the meaneſt chronologers and hiſtorians. But, whatſoever they have ſaid, this I may truly ſay, and can make good: He was a man of ſingular invention, good judgement, and great reading, and a true lover of antiquities. Amongſt the rewards which he received from king Henry VII. and king Henry VIII. he had a rich parſonage in Somerſetſhire (as I have heard), and this of Church Langton, and one of the archdeaconries of Wells; to which church he was a benefactor, in beautifying the choir of the cathedral church of Wells with fair arras hangings (which are there at this day, 1636); wherein, in many eſcocheons, are his arms; viz. Argent, a laurel-tree Vert, ſupported with two crocodiles Proper [1]; over which, in a winding label, a ſcroll is written,

Hæc Polydori ſunt munera Vergilii;

underneath, in a ſtrait ſcroll,

Sum laurus virtutis honos pergrata triumphis.

---

[1] Plate LXX. fig. 22.

What other places he had I know not, though I have made much enquiry, and ſent of purpoſe to Wells for farther ſatisfaction; but there could learn nothing. Where he died, for certain is not known; though Bale (upon report), in his thirteenth century, fol. 130, ſetteth down that he died, at Urbine, an aged man, 1555. He wrote many other books mentioned by Bale in the ſame place.

"I cannot let paſs here unremembered that conſtant profeſſor of the Goſpel, Laurence Saunders, ſometime rector alſo of this church; who was firſt ſon of Thomas Saunders, of Sibbertoft, co. Northampton, eſq. and brother to ſir Edward Saunders, knight, chief baron of the exchequer; who was firſt a ſcholar at Eaton college; after in King's college in Cambridge, where, after he was maſter of arts, he was choſen reader at Fotheringay college, co. Northampton; which not long after being ſuppreſſed, he was made lecturer in the minſter at Lichfield; from whence departing, he was preſented to this church; and ſhortly after was preſented to the church of Allhallows in Bread-ſtreet in London, where he was, for his conſtancy in religion, condemned to die; and was buried at Coventry, 8 Feb. 1555, 3 Mary. He is compared by Fox, in his Book of Acts and Monuments (who wrote the hiſtory of him, beginning page 1420,) to St. Laurence, that antient and conſtant Roman martyr; firſt, for the manner of the torture, the one on the gridiron, the other with lingering green wood; next, for his ſtedfaſtneſs and conſtancy to his laſt breath, being the ſecond that ſuffered for that cauſe in the hands of queen Mary."

P. 667. Oct. 2, 1307. William Greenfeld archbiſhop of York received homage, at Wotton, of Walter Baude, for lands at Lubbenham; and acknowledged that the ſaid ſervice was owing for half a knight's fee; and that for the other fee Peter de Wotton's daughter was anſwerable to the archbiſhop; and that homage, wardſhip, relief, and ſcutage, were due whenever they ſhould be claimed. On the 6 kal. Nov. following the archbiſhop received in the choir of the church of Weſtminſter the homage above ſpecified to be due from Peter de Wotton's daughter, for lands at Lobenham [1].

P. *693. In St. Botolph's church-yard, Cambridge:

"Here lieth the body of Philip Bliſs, who died the 7th day of October, 1664.
Here lieth he who fear'd not death,
But willingly gave up his breath."

P. 698. ——— Wood, of Lubbenham, married lady Patience Grey.—Lubbenham Lodge farm conſiſts of a farm-houſe and extenſive out-buildings, 340 acres, 3 roods, 13 perches of land; about 100 acres of which are arable, the remainder paſture; and is now held of John Johnſon, eſq.

P. 704. Mr. Burton adds to the note, "Appropriations were ſo called, as ſome take it, for that theſe eccleſiaſtical benefices, which originally, and in their own nature, were juris divini et in patrimonio nullius, were made and granted to the proper and perpetual uſe of ſome religious order; by others, becauſe whereas perſons ordinarily be not accounted domini but uſufructuarii, having no right of fee-ſimple, as appeareth by Littleton, cap. de Diſcontinuance; theſe, by reaſon of their perpetuity, are accounted owners of the fee-ſimple, and therefore are called proprietarii. It appeareth by the reſolutions in Grendon's Caſe, Mich. 18 and 19 Eliz. in Plowden's Commentaries, fol. 497; that none was capable of an appropriation, but only a body corporate or politic ſpiritual, which had ſucceſſion, and which could miniſter ſacraments and ſacramental rights; and therefore lord Dyer, in his arguments in the ſaid caſe, ſays, that it was an abſurd thing to appropriate churches to nunneries, which could not miniſter ſacraments, nor ſay divine ſervice to the pariſhioners, but only under pretence of hoſpitality, and the maintenance thereof (when as indeed it was to the utter ruin of hoſpitality in the pariſh where chiefly it ought to be kept, and from whence all the profits do ariſe); and for the ſupply of theſe defects a vicar was appointed, who was deputy to theſe religious men, who commonly had but ſome ſmall penſion, and the houſe the chief revenue. But of theſe appropriations, and of the inſatiate greedineſs of theſe wolves in ſheeps' cloathing, theſe abbots, priors, and other religious orders, that learned and religious gentleman, Mr. Thomas Ryves, LL. D. hath lately written a treatiſe [2], ſhewing, that not only in equity and conſcience, but alſo by the canon law, and by the common law and ſtatute law of this realm, and likewiſe of Ireland (for which he chiefly intended his diſcourſe), the parochial miniſter of the church ought, out of the annual tithes and other profits, to be ſufficiently provided for, notwithſtanding the impropriations. But why do men ſpeak to the belly that hath no ears? Or rather, why do men not ſerve God, but their own bellies? yea, ſerve their own bellies with that which was given for the only ſervice of God.

"Sic ſuccus pecori, ſic lac ſubducitur agnis."

P. 705. In the pew belonging to the lord of the manor, in Lubbenham church, is fixed an antient chair of Engliſh oak, as ſhewn in Plate LXX. fig. 30. This pew is in the South ſide of the nave, on the right hand of the entrance into the chancel; it is wainſcoted with oak, correſponding with the chair in point of materials and workmanſhip, and is undoubtedly of the ſame age, which is probably about 200 years. The back part of the chair forms part of the wainſcot againſt the South wall of the nave fronting the South ſide of the pulpit. The reaſon of its erection is not known; but it might perhaps have been placed for the eaſe of an infirm, or, out of oſtentation, of a proud lord of the manor. Tradition ſays it was occupied by that unfortunate monarch, king Charles I. a few days previous to the fatal battle of Naſeby; and this tradition appears to have ſome probability, conſidering that Monarch's attachment to Religion, and his temporary reſidence at Lubbenham manor-houſe [3] during his harraſſing troubles preceding the aforeſaid battle. The appearance of the chair, though apparently perfectly ſound, indicates its erection at or before that period. But it could hardly have been placed here merely on the account of its royal, though ſuffering occupier, as his viſit was probably unexpected, and undoubtedly his ſtay but ſhort. But, ſhould this have been the caſe, the pew was alſo wainſcoted upon the ſame occaſion, it being of one piece, as it were, with the chair itſelf. J. T.

P. 716. An annual cuſtom prevailed at Medbourn, diſcontinued but about 8 or 10 years, of ſtrewing new hay along the ailes of the church on the laſt Sunday in June or firſt of July. A bit of ground in the meadow was appropriated for producing the hay: the overplus produce was the property of the pariſh clerk. The reaſon aſſigned for diſcontinuing the cuſtom was, a young woman ſwooning during divine ſervice, ſuppoſed from the ſmell of the hay which then happened to be ſtrewed in the church. Whether the bit of land in the meadow was left by ſome perſon in conſideration of the clerk performing the above annual cuſtom, or whether it was conſidered as an offering to God of the firſt fruits of the enſuing and approaching crop, we know not.

To the profeſſions, trades, &c. add, "butchers 2." there being that number at Medbourn at the time. J. T.

P. 717. a. l. 3, 4. r. "Medbourne-lime."

Ibid. The additional article of Mr. Burton on Medbourne has been ſo conſiderably contracted in Mr. Chetwynd's tranſcript, that I hope to ſtand excuſed for reprinting it in our Author's own words: "This town," he ſays, "ſtandeth low, near to the river of Welland. At this preſent it is a large village, full of many houſes, and hath been heretofore of great fame and antiquity, and in the Romans' time; for moſt aſſuredly there had been an old Roman ſtation, but what name it ſhould then bear is now quite forgotten. It is about eight miles diſtant full South from Vernometum, that antient Roman ſtation, now called Burrow (of which I have ſpoken before); ſo that I ſhould gueſs it to be a member thereof, planted here upon the edge of the meadows and banks of the river, for the quitting of the country of the ſudden excurſions of the barbarous then lurking thereabout; for, the North-eaſt part of Northamptonſhire bordering hereon was either woody, mariſhe, or fenny; a fit harbour and receptacle for ſuch people. For proof of the antiquity hereof, the antient Roman coins and medals here found, in all the three[1] fields of the town, both in gold, ſilver, and copper, will give ſufficient teſtimony. I went thither of myſelf to view the place and ſite thereof; but I could find no ſhew of any fort, bulwarks, rampart, trench, or building; where I was fully aſcertained of the continual diſcovery of theſe coins, eſpecially of the copper ſort, which are ſo abundant, that the ſwine do uſually root them up in the fields, and are therefore there commonly called Hog-pence; and this by the relation of my worthy friends, the grave and learned Mr. Doctor Hill, late rector of the church there, and Mr. John Payne, an old man and an antient inhabitant there, who ſaid that he had in his poſſeſſion ſeveral in ſilver, of Veſpatian, Domitian, and Antonine; and gave me ſome copper pieces of Carauſius, Allectus, Conſtantius Chlorus, and Helena his wife, and of Conſtantine the Great her ſon, and of the later emperors; and I have one of Tiberius found there of ſilver.

---

[1] Et debet homagium, wardum, relevium, & ſcutagium, quando currit.

[2] The poor Vicar's Plea, printed by John Bill, 4to, 1624.

[3] See vol. II. p. 699.

"At this place alſo was ſometimes (as it is reported by the inhabitants, and as I have ſeen verified in an old manuſcript) an antient monaſtery, founded by one of the Saxon kings of Mercia, wherein had been a ſanctuary, which was a place privileged by the king, for the ſafeguard of the life of an offender, grounded upon the law of mercy, and upon the great reverence and devotion which the king had to the place whereto he granted the privilege. Theſe ſanctuaries, called in the Saxon tongue ꝼꞃıð-ꞅꞇole, that is, the ſeat of peace[2], ſeem to have their beginning from the cities of refuge appointed by Moſes[3] for the ſafeguard of the lives of thoſe that by caſualty had ſlain a man. Polydore Vergil, in his book De Inventoribus rerum[4], voucheth, out of Servius, writing upon the eighth book of Virgil's Æneids, that the progeny of Hercules, fearing that they ſhould be proſecuted by them to whom Hercules before had offered violence, firſt built a ſanctuary or temple of mercy at Athens, from whence none ſhould be drawn by force. After Romulus, as Livy[5] and Dio write, built one at Rome in imitation of that at Athens: the emperors alſo of Rome long after made the places of their ſtatues, and their temples and churches, places of refuge, as appeareth by Codex, lib. 1. tit. 15. De iis qui ad ſtatuas confugiunt; and Codex, lib. 1. tit. 12. De iis qui ad eccleſias confugiunt. The antient kings of this land did ſo much approve of theſe ſanctuaries, that they granted to them their protections for treaſon, murder, manſlaughter, rape, felony, and for what fault ſoever that ſhould endanger the life; from whence no man might forceably be drawn to the uſual trial of law; and if any perſon ſhould expel any one from thence, if he were a lay-man, he ſhould be excommunicate; if religious, he was made irregular; and in the Regiſter is a writ to reſtore one to a ſanctuary taken thence, 3 Edward III. Coron. fol. 313. Some places, as Weſtminſter, preſcribed to have protection for debt, accompt, and other cauſes which were not felony; but, 29 Aſſ. pl. 34. it was adjudged otherwiſe; yet ſir Robert Brooke, in his Abridgement, tit. Sanctuary, pl. 11. putteth the caſe, that if one being in execution for debt eſcape and take ſanctuary, that he ſhall enjoy the privilege (and that for a ſlender reaſon); for, ſays he, it may be that by long impriſonment his life was in jeopardy. The great liberty and freedom of theſe places gave encouragement to ſome ill-diſpoſed perſons to proceed in their villanies and naughtineſs; inſomuch that Polydore Vergil, in the ſaid book and chapter above-named, ſays, that in this land there was, by reaſon of theſe places, ſuch freedom for all offences, were they never ſo capital, that the kings ſeemed rather to imitate the Athenians and Romulus than Moſes in the right ordinance of them. But after, the abuſes growing ſo great, they were abridged by act of parliament, 32 Henry VIII. c. 12. and reduced to the firſt inſtitution of Moſes. And whereas there were many ſanctuaries of great antiquity in this land, as, namely, at Culnham by Abingdon near Oxford, founded by Kenulfus king of Mercia anno Dom. 780; Crowland, co. Lincoln, by Witlafe king of Mercia 833; Weſtminſter, by king Edgar anno 968; Battaile in Suſſex, by king William the Conqueror, anno 1067; St. Martin le Grand in London, by Engelricus and Edward, two brothers, an. 1056; and divers others in every ſhire found[6]; yet, by the ſaid act of 32 Henry VIII. they were ſuppreſſed, and reduced to theſe places; viz. Wells in Somerſetſhire, Weſtminſter, Mancheſter, Northampton, York, Norwich, Derby, and Launceſton in Cornwall; and by the ſtatute of 27 Henry VIII. c. 19. divers ordinances were made for the demeanour of theſe ſanctuary men; as, that they muſt upon their upper garment wear a badge; muſt carry no ſword or weapon; muſt not be out of their lodging before ſun-riſing, nor after ſun-ſetting; nor ſhould make reſiſtance to their governors; that their governors ſhould end and determine all differences between them and others, ariſing upon any contract, covenant, debt, treſpaſs, or otherwiſe. And by the ſaid ſtatute of 32 Henry VIII. the governor daily ſhould call all the ſaid privileged perſons before them; and, upon three days default of appearance, ſhould forfeit their privilege; if any committed any felony, ſhould loſe his privilege. But all theſe ſtatutes are repealed by parliament, 1 Jac. c. 25. Whoſo is deſirous to be farther aſcertained of all the learning concerning ſanctuaries, let him read Juſtice Stamford's book of the Pleas of the Crown, lib. 2. c. 38. 39. This monaſtery and ſanctuary of Medbourne was, in the reign of king Etheldred, a Saxon king, anno 1010, by the barbarous cruelty of the ſavage Danes, utterly conſumed by fire, who for a long time before had domineered and tyranniſed in this land. They began firſt to ſet foot here, as William of Malmeſbury[7] and Henry of Huntingdon[8], anno 787; and, by petty incurſions and invaſions, continued ſo till the time of king Egbert the firſt monarch of England, and ſomewhat after, waſting and ſpoiling the land; until by the worthy valour of king Alfred[9], Edward ſenior, Athelſtan, and king Edgar, by the ſpace of 50 years, they were ſuppreſſed and driven back. But after, in the reign of king Etheldred, they began again with their fleet to invade the ſame; and, being landed, ſo ſpoiled and waſted the land, that the king was forced to impoſe a yearly tribute of 12*d.* upon every hide of land, which was afterwards commonly called Danegeld; but this not ſerving their turns, the Danes ſtill more increaſing, the king was forced to a new compoſition of the yearly value of £10,000. which they yearly ſo enhanced, as that in a ſhort time they brought it to £40,000.; ſo that at length, what by the ſpoil of the Danes and their yearly tributes, the realm was quite exhauſted of all money and treaſure[10]. Some, ſetting down the miſeries of theſe times, report, that, beſides the extortion of the ſaid tributes, the Danes ſo inſulted over the poor Engliſh, keeping them in ſuch ſubjection, that they compelled the poor huſbandmen to till the land, and do all manner of toil and huſbandry, they enjoying the fruits of their labours; and at their pleaſures abuſing their wives, daughters, and maid-ſervants. King Etheldred, being grieved and weary with this tyrannical dealing over his poor diſtreſſed ſubjects, determined by policy to make an end of theſe miſeries, and therefore made command throughout the realm[11], that, on a certain day, every maſter of an houſhold, ruler, or other officer, ſhould kill every Dane within their liberties, which at one hour was put in execution, 13 Nov. anno 1002, the night after the ſolemnity of their drunken feaſt of St. Martin. But the Danes in Denmark, hearing of this bloody meaſure, were ſo enraged, that, the next year following, their king Swene came in perſon with a huge and mighty fleet of ſhips, and firſt landed in Norfolk, rifling and burning all before him; after he came to Sandwich; from thence to Canterbury, which, after twenty days defence, having ſurprized by the treachery of a deacon, he ſhewed moſt horrible cruelty againſt the inhabitants, ſparing neither man, woman, nor child, ſlaying the whole multitude by nines, ſparing only every tenth man, ſo that for 804[1] that eſcaped, 7237 were ſlain; of all the monks only four remained alive. Alphege the archbiſhop was by Turkill the Dane moſt cruelly murdered. Swene, following ſtill this tyrannous courſe, was ſo fearful to the inhabitants, that whereſoever he came, they ſubmitted themſelves to his mercy; he ſtill continuing his fury in ſuch a violent manner, that he ſpoiled and waſted 17 ſhires together, of which number this county was one; which king Etheldred perceiving, and ſeeing how deſperate the caſe ſtood, and himſelf deſtitute of all means of reſiſtance, fled into Normandy, with his wife, children, and friends; after which departure, though both he himſelf returned, and put Canutus (the next king of the Danes, and ſon of Swene) to flight; and Edmund Ironſide his ſon alſo fought many great battles with them; yet the Danes ſo mightily prevailed upon them, that three of them in ſucceſſion, Canutus, Herald, and Hardicanutus, reigned here kings of this land almoſt 30 years. But after the deceaſe of Hardicanutus, the nobility and commons joined ſo cloſe to king Edward the Confeſſor, their ſovereign and liege king, that all the Danes by him were for ever expulſed; and that great name of Lord Dane, which before had been a word of great honour and terror, came after to a name of diſdain and reproof, and continueth yet in the North parts, being turned to Lourdaine. Beſides, ever after the common people, in joy of that deliverance, have celebrated the annual day of king Hardicanutus' death with ſports and paſtimes in the ſtreets, calling it to this our time Hock-Tueſday; that is, as Mr. Lambert interpreteth it, Huckes-Tueſday, the ſkinning or marking Tueſday; which is yet uſed in Oxford, and in many places in the South parts."

---

[1] Only in the field towards Slauſton, as Mr. Tailby has already noticed.

[2] See a part of the Jewiſh Talmud, called Maccalf, tranſlated by John Keck of Breme 1629; wherein the manner and nature of theſe ſanctuaries are moſt fully ſet down.

[3] Exodus xxi. 13: Joſephus, Antiq. lib. 4.

[4] Lib. 3. cap. 12. fol. 33.

[5] Livy, lib. 1; Dio, lib. 2.

[6] Ingulphus, fol. 487.

[7] P. 20.

[8] P. 198.

[9] Ethelwerdus, p. 480.

[10] William de Malmeſbury, p. 35; Roger de Hoveden, p. 245; William de Newburgh; Marianus Scotus.

[11] Henry de Huntingdon, lib. 6. p. 606; Florentius Wigorn. p. 370.

P. 717. b. l. 34. read, "which are now perfect."

Ibid. Mr. Aſhby obſerves on this paſſage, "The track of Via Devana might eaſily be tricked out on the map of this hundred; and its continuance beyond Leiceſter, with a ſlight ſketch of its commencement, from Colcheſter to Medbourne, and from Leiceſterſhire to Cheſter. The account ſeems very good. How far the writer is indebted to Charles Maſon, D.D. Woodwardian profeſſor (whom you call here and in a former volume Chriſtopher), I cannot tell; but I know that he had the examination of the Doctor's papers in Sir Iſaac Pennington's poſſeſſion; and ſo had the Rev. Stebbing Shaw, whom I informed where they were. Dr. Maſon prided himſelf much on his diſcovery of this road, and told me that, if you lay a ruler down on a large map of England, all the large towns along the road-ſide would be found to be within two, three, or four miles of it, and not directly on it. The ſame I have noticed to be the caſe of the Foſs at Belgrave and Leiceſter; and there can be no doubt that all theſe great towns had two roads from them to the great roads. The mention of the Foſs reminds me, that in vol. I. p. cxlvii. the writer begins his account of Richard's deſcription A Præſidio, &c. Whether this word ever was in Richard, we cannot now tell; but certainly no ſuch word is there now at p. 39, and therefore ſhould not have been inſerted without ſaying that it was a ſupplement, &c. as nothing of this kind has been hinted, it is plain that the writer blindly followed Dr. Stukeley's account of Richard, and not Richard himſelf. This and two or three other ſimilar inſtances of Dr. Stukeley's boldneſs Dr. Ch. Maſon has noticed in his copy of that work that I bought at the Doctor's ſale. This is the more deſerving obſervation, becauſe it ſeems not to be certain that Warwick was Præſidium. See a long note on the word and place in Dr. Thomas's edition of Dugdale's Warwickſhire, in whoſe map the Foſs goes along two or three miles diſtant from Warwick; ſo that, though it is highly probable that there was a Roman ſtation there, or thereabouts; yet we have not proper authority to ſay that it was Præſidium."

P. 718. a. l. 20. read, "for any now in uſe for."

P. 720. In 1422, Henry Hoby died ſeiſed of the advowſon of Medbourn.—It ſhould be added, in the valuation of the rectory, that Mr. Toddington, immediately on being poſſeſſed of the rectory, ſet aſide the Holt modus, it is believed, without any law-ſuit; but only council's opinion; thereby doubling the living, or nearly.

P. 721. a. l. 12. r. "lands that pay Belvoir tithe."

P. 722. On Sunday June 3, 1779, John Watkins, eſq. of Tatten Forge, Herefordſhire, iron-founder, aged 64 years, was buried in a vault made for that purpoſe, at the Eaſt end of the South aile of Medbourn church. He had boarded at Medbourn for about ſix weeks before, for the conveniency of Holt ſpa-water; which had been recommended to him for the benefit of his health, but proved ineffectual. There has been no ſtone erected to perpetuate his memory. A ſilver or plated breaſt-plate was placed on his coffin (which was covered with black cloth) inſcribed with his name, date, place of abode, and age.

P. 723. a. l. 10. for "exceed," r. "excelled."

P. 726. Sir John Nevil, knight, was appointed by the king's writ, Jan. 30, 1534-5, to take the eccleſiaſtical ſurvey of the county of Leiceſter.

P. 730. Thomas Smyth, high ſheriff 1606, died "1636-7:" ſee his monument, p. 730.

Ibid. Frances Taſburgh died in "1724;" and Coſmas, eldeſt ſon of the preſent Coſmas Nevill, eſq. died July 29, 1798, aged 7 years and 10 months.

P. 740. Mr. Burton adds, "That this Roger was ſon and heir of ſir Ankitell de Martivall will appear by the following deed, now in my cuſtody:

"Sciant preſentes & futuri, quòd nos Rogerus de Martivallis, filius & heres quondam domini Anketini de Martivallis domini de Noveſle, epiſcopus Sarum, dedimus ac confirmavimus magiſtro Ricardo de Stretton canonico eccleſie Lincolnie, dominis Hugoni de Knoffington canonico eccleſie Sarum, & Waltero de Thorpe rectori eccleſie de Aſhby Folevill, 4 ſeliones in Haloughton, unà cum advocatione medietatis eccleſie ejuſdem ville, cujus medietatis dominus Thomas de Geithull, clericus, ad noſtram præſentationem nunc rector exiſtit; necnon unum toſtum, cum pertinentiis, in Gilden Morton, unà cum advocatione eccleſiæ ejuſdem ville; que quidem toſtum, 4 ſeliones, & advocationes predicta, fuerunt quondam dicti domini Anketini patris noſtri, & ad nos poſt ejus deceſſum jure hereditario deſcendebant. Dedimus inſuper predictis magiſtro Ricardo, Hugoni, & Waltero, duas virgatas terræ, cum pertinentiis, in Gilden Morton predictâ; quas quidem duas virgatas terre penès nos retenuimus tempore donationis jamdudum per nos facte Anketino de Martivallis filio domini Henrici Hybaud nepoti noſtro, & Margerie uxori ejus, de ceteris tenementis que tunc habuimus in Gilden Morton; habendas & tenendas dictis Ricardo, Hugoni, & Waltero, &c. Hiis teſtibus; Willielmo de Sauſton de Keythorpe, Johanne de Glenton de Haloughton, Ricardo Burdet de Gilden Morton, Willielmo Janumulle de Wellen. Dat' apud Noveſle, 3 Edw. III."[2]

P. 746. In the Hiſtory of Independency, ſir Arthur Heſelrige is ſtyled, "a man too ignorant to command, and inſolent to obey." We find, however, that in 1645 he had intereſt enough in Leiceſterſhire to diſtribute with ſucceſs the following circular letter:

"Gentlemen and neighbours, the earl of Kent being called to the Lords' houſe upon the death of his father, you are, upon Thurſday the 20th of this inſtant

---

[1] Roger de Hoveden, fol. 246. b.

[2] See before, under Hallaton, vol. II. p. 597; and the ſeal (which ſhould have been circumſcribed ROBERTUS, DEI GRATIA, SARESBURIENSIS EP'US), Plate CIII. fig. 20.

November, being the county court-day, to make choice of another knight for this ſhire. The truſt is great; and if you apprehend I have been faithful to you, I intreat ſuch a companion may be added to me as will draw in the yoke, and not hinder: I move to you Mr. Henry Smith, of Withcocke, and moſt earneſtly deſire your appearance at Leiceſter upon the day; where to ſee you will rejoice my heart. I am confident you will not fail in a buſineſs that ſo much concerns yourſelves, your poſterities, the kingdom, and your loving neighbour and ſervant, Leiceſter, November 10, 1645. ART. HESILRIGE."

P. 747. The following particulars were publiſhed Dec. 24, 1659, under the title of "The advance of ſir Arthur Heſilrige from the garriſon of Portſmouth toward the city of London; and his letter to the lord-mayor, aldermen, and common council. Alſo the number both of horſe and foot; the names of the regiments revolted from the army; together with the Iſle of Wight, and moſt of the caſtles thereabouts. Likewiſe the anſwer agreed upon by the lord-mayor, aldermen, and common council, at Guildhall yeſterday; and the names of the commiſſioners ſent to ſir Arthur Heſilrige and vice-admiral Lawſon, to communicate the ſenſe of the City.—The great hand of Providence having in a moſt high and wonderful manner appeared in the iſſue of theſe late changes, overturnings, and confuſions; and, in the midſt of our great fears, dangers, and calamities, miraculouſly to work and point out a ſignal deliverance for theſe diſtracted, languiſhing, and woful afflicted nations; by raiſing up ſome noble and faithful patriots, true-ſpirited Engliſhmen, and renowned aſſerters of the people's rights, liberties, and freedoms, ſtanding up in this great day of England's trial and trouble, even in the very gap and gulph of deſolation, threatening the inevitable ruin of many thouſands, who deſired nothing more than a true ſettlement of the public peace upon a firm baſis and irremoveable foundation, of truth and righteouſneſs, and to preſerve a good conſcience, in caſting off thoſe ignominious reproaches of breach of faith to their repreſentatives; and thereupon divers honourable members of parliament, being ſpirited to ſtand firm for the intereſt of this commonwealth (being warranted in their preſent actings by eſpecial commiſſion and authority from the council of ſtate), unanimouſly declared their reſolution and concurrence to hazard all, even lives and fortunes, for reſtoring of the parliament and people to their antient rights and undoubted freedoms. In purſuance whereof, it pleaſed God to raiſe up deliverers, both by ſea and land; having, by admirable providence, put an opportunity in the hands of general Monck, a moſt able and experienced commander of the parliament's army; vice-admiral Lawſon, commander in chief of the fleet under his immediate conduct; and colonel Whetham, governor of Portſmouth; whoſe actions and undertakings have been ſo honeſt and honourable, as that they have given an abſolute check to the exorbitances of ſuch who have betrayed their truſt, and walked contrary to the light of knowledge, in theſe late and glorious diſpenſations, and ſo to become inſtruments of ſome men's ambitions, by making the good people of England their enemies, and expoſing the nation again to the hazard of a new war and inteſtine troubles. But, bleſſed be God! theſe clouds are extinguiſhing, and the black vizards of theſe dark and obſcure tyrannical ſtreams begin to run and center in their proper current: for, not only colonel Rich's regiment of horſe have deſerted the army, and returned to their former duty of obedience to the parliament, but alſo ſome of colonel Berry's regiment of horſe, in all nine troops; and ſeveral companies of colonel Lago's regiment of foot are gone into Portſmouth, marching with drums beating and colours flying, where they declared for the parliament, and their reſolutions (by the help of God) to ſtand by and aſſiſt them with their lives and fortunes, and to hazard all that is near and dear to them in the defence of the parliament, and the ſecurity, ſervice, and peace of this commonwealth.

"Upon the coming in of the ſaid nine troops and five companies of foot, ſir Arthur Heſilrige, colonel Morley, colonel Walton, and colonel Whetham (the governor), ſent out a party of horſe and foot, to make a diſcovery of the remainder part of the army; and, having good intelligence amongſt them, and of their motion, upon their approach near, it pleaſed God the whole party came in, ſome few officers only excepted; ſo that the ſiege was raiſed, and the town at liberty, without a drop of blood. The town is very ſtrong, and the ſoldiery unanimous; ſir Arthur and colonel Morley having behaved themſelves very gallantly. This Weſtern brigade being ſo providentially reduced to the obedience of parliament; it is ſaid that ſeveral regiments of horſe and foot are upon their march from Portſmouth towards London, under the conduct of ſir Arthur Heſilrige and other faithful commanders; and that there are four troops of horſe, and four companies of foot, raiſed in the Iſle of Wight, for the ſervice of the parliament. Beſides, it is aſcertained that two troops of horſe and two companies of foot in the ſaid iſland have alſo revolted from the army; and likewiſe Cariſbrook caſtle, Hurſt caſtle, and all the reſt of the caſtles thereabouts, except Cowes caſtle, which is blocked up, and a ſpeedy reducement thereof is ſuddenly expected. For the carrying on of this great work ſo happily begun, and for a timely deliverance of theſe almoſt deſtroyed nations, it is the duty of every Engliſhman to aſſiſt; that poſterity may be happy under a ſucceſſion of parliamentary authority, derived from a civil rather than a military foundation, from whence floweth nothing but unlimited and arbitrary ſtreams. In order whereunto, a letter hath been ſent from ſir Arthur Heſilrige, and the reſt of the parliament's commiſſioners at Portſmouth, to the right honourable the lord-mayor, aldermen, and common council of the city of London, deſiring them to contribute their aid and aſſiſtance, for reſtoring of the parliament, and ſettling the antient rights, charters, liberties, and fundamental privileges of theſe nations. In purſuance whereof, vice-admiral Lawſon hath alſo repreſented to his lordſhip the ſtate of affairs with the fleet; importing that they were reſolved (through the Lord's aſſiſtance) to ſtand to their declaration, and, with the hazard of their lives and fortunes, to endeavour the re-eſtabliſhment of the parliament, interrupted the 13th of October, 1659, to the exerciſe of their truſt; not doubting but to find the aſſiſtance and concurrence both of them and others in this undertaking and reſolution; and, in confidence of their compliance herein, he aſſures them of all aſſiſtance for the advancement of the trade, freedom, and ſafety of the city in particular, and of the nation in general. Hereupon the lord-mayor, aldermen, and common council, aſſembled at Guildhall, London, on Thurſday the 22d day of this inſtant December; where, after reading of the ſaid letters, a Committee of Safety was choſen; who are forthwith to conſider thereof, and to return an anſwer unto vice-admiral Lawſon; as alſo unto that which came from the commiſſioners at Portſmouth. The ſaid committee is alſo appointed to conſider of ſettling the militia of the city, to the end that the peace and ſafety thereof may be inviolably preſerved, and the exorbitances of all perſons whatſoever (for the future) prevented. Which will be the only means (under God) to prevent confuſions and deſolations, the ſad companions of civil diſcords, and to eſtabliſh peace and truth throughout her confines, by putting a check to ſuch ambitious and inſolent ſpirits, who thirſted after the treaſure of her pavilions, and fain would have made her habitable places even as ſo many thrones.

"Guildhall, London, Dec. 23, 1659. This day the lord-mayor, aldermen, and common council, reſumed the debate of ſettling the militia of the city; and reſolved upon ſeveral officers of approved truſt and fidelity, there being a ſingular choice, by free election, of ſuch gentlemen and perſons of quality as do, and with God's aſſiſtance will always, adhere to their former principles and declarations, in the uſe of all lawful means for the maintenance of the true reformed Proteſtant religion, the ſupport of a ſettled lawful magiſtracy, the preſervation of a learned pious miniſtry, the reſtoring of the antient fundamental laws of the nation, and the juſt rights, properties, and liberties of the people.

"Dec. 23, afternoon. The revolt of the Army forces in the Weſtern parts is not only ratified by ſundry teſtimonies from very good hands; but alſo a confirmation of the advance of ſir Arthur Heſilrige from Portſmouth, on Wedneſday laſt, with about five thouſand horſe and foot, leaving only 400 in the garriſon. They began their march about 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and quartered that night at Petersfield. The next morning they began their march again, intending to quarter at Gilford on Friday night; but, whether the inclemency of the ſeaſon or the ſhortneſs of time impedes them, a few hours will prove the only reſolve. In the mean time, no ſmall expectations, but as high conjectures, what event theſe ſtrange mutations will produce: ſince that the ſpirits of men are extremely diſſatisfied and elevated, and poſſibly cannot be allayed, without a reſtoration of their long-loſt trade, liberties, and freedoms: With which God, of his infinite mercy, crown theſe nations!

"P. S. "Through many dilatory expreſſions and ſpeeches by ſome few perſons, the honourable court of aldermen and common council of the city of London could not proceed to the nomination of officers for the militia that night; but reſolved to meet this preſent Saturday, and proceed to the election of colonels and other officers. A report being made alſo of the ſenſe and ſubſtance of the letters ſent from ſir Arthur Heſilrige and vice-admiral Lawſon; the ſaid Court reſolved upon an anſwer to be returned; declaring their cordial affections to preſerve the peace and ſafety of theſe nations, and to acquieſce in ſuch things as may be conſiſtent with the glory of God, and the rights, privileges, and properties of the people. In purſuance whereof, commiſſioners were choſen to repreſent the ſenſe of the city; the names whereof are as followeth:

To ſir Arthur Heſilrige, { Alderman Tompſon, Colonel Bromfield, Mr. Beard.

To vice-admiral Lawſon, { Alderman Fowk, Mr. William Bateman, Mr. Jolley, merchant.

For Whitehall, { Alerman Bateman, Mr. Vincent, Mr. Rich. Foord, merchant."

P. 751. Mr. Burton, in 1636, ſays, "The pariſh-church is now deſtroyed and gone; the collegiate church is there ſtanding. The town alſo is quite ruinated and extinct; the manor-houſe only remaining."

P. 753. John Baſſet, M. A. was preſented, 2 Nov. 1638, "ad rectoriam ſive capellam de Noſeley[1];" patron, the King, by lapſe.

P. 756. Edward Heſilrige, who married Anne, daughter of Thomas Nicolls, and ſiſter of ſir Auguſtine Nicolls, had a ſon Edward, who married Frances daughter and heir of William Brocas of Thedingworth (ſee p. 832); by whom he had a ſon Bertin, killed in a duel in April 1630 by John Hurſt, a ſtudent in the Temple; and one daughter, Frances, married to Walter Chetwynd.

P. 758. On the 22d of April, 1300, king Edward I. was at Ouſton abbey, in his road from Northampton to Pighteſley, Rockingham, and Stamford; and made an offering of 7*s.* at the great altar of the pariſh-church.

On the ſame day we find the following payment: "Radulpho de Aſhton, valletto rectoris eccleſie de Haſhton, ven' ad mandatum regis uſque Sanctum Albanum cum duobus falcon' & tribus leporar' ejuſdem domini ſui, & redeunti ad eundem per preceptum regis, pro vadiis & expenſis ſuis duorum garcionum & duorum equorum ſuorum, per 13 dies, menſe April', videlt, per 10 dies morando in cur', & per tres dies redeundo ad partes ſuas, percip' per diem 12đ.—quia non comedit in curiâ regis, nec aliquam percepit liber' de eodem, 13s̃.—Eidem, pro puturâ dictorum falcon' & leporar' per idem tempus, cuilibet falconi per diem ob̄. & cuilibet leporar' per diem ob̄. 2s̃. 8đ. ob̄. per manus proprias, apud Oveſton, 22 die Aprilis. Summa, 25s̃. 8½đ." At the ſame time the lady de Vallibus, in the queen's name, gave to John le Feroun de Anet, a poor man de partibus tranſmarinis, 2*s.* by the hands of ſir William de Melton[2].

P. 769. After 55, add, "Geraldine, the third ſon, died without iſſue;" and, l. 60, read, "The heir of this houſe, 1636, is ſir John Curzon, knight, living at Kettleſton; who married Patience, daughter of ſir John Crane, knight, late one of the king's ſerjeants at law.

"All the manors in Pickwell came (as it ſhould ſeem) by purchaſe to Curzon; for, in the reign of king Henry VIII, Thomas Curzon of Croxhall allotted this manor, with the advowſon of the church, to Richard Cave, lineal anceſtor to William Cave, eſq. late lord of the whole manor, and patron of the church.

"This manor (with the advowſon) was lately purchaſed of the ſaid William Cave by the relict of Baptiſt Hickes viſcount Campden, for her grandchild Mr. Henry Noel, ſecond ſon to Edward lord Noel."

P. 775. l. 40. Mr. Burton corrects, "One of theſe manors (I take it to be that which belonged to the abbey of Valdy) came by purchaſe to that good, wiſe, and worthy ſtateſman, ſir Walter Mildmay, knt.; who, for his very eminent and well-deſerving parts, was by king Henry VIII. created ſurveyor of the Augmentation-court; afterwards graced with the order of knighthood by king Edward VI; and by queen Elizabeth firſt made one of her council of ſtate, afterwards chancellor and ſubtreaſurer of the Exchequer. In the year 1584, he finiſhed the college of Emanuel in Cambridge; endowing it with large revenues for a maſter and 62 ſtudents; and died in 1589; leaving his inheritance to deſcend to his ſon and heir ſir Anthony Mildmay, knight, a gentleman of an high and noble ſpirit; who, not many years after, departing this life, left iſſue his only daughter and heir, Mary late counteſs dowager of Weſtmorland, the relict of the right honourable Francis Fane late earl of Weſtmorland; a lady adorned with many ornaments of grace and nature, a great lover of learning and arts, but chiefly ſtudious in phyſic and philoſophy; whoſe worthineſs I am unfit to tell, when (as I may truly ſay with ſir Philip Sydney) in her each parts more pens may dwell.

P. 779. John Warde occurs rector in 1458.

P. 788. Samuel Bold, vicar of Naſeby, in Northamptonſhire, died Dec. 15, 1751, aged 79; and was buried in Naſeby church within the altar-rails[3].

P. 789. Thrice, for "Story," read "Slory."

P. 795. Mr. Burton adds, "Much lands in this manor were given to the abbey of Ouſton in this ſhire, which in 33 Henry VIII. were given to John lord Ruſſell. The now lord of the manor (1724) is ſir Thomas Brudenell, bart. of Deane, co. Northampton; afterwards (3 Car. I.) baron of Staunton Wyvile.

P. 796. a. l. 36. The proprietors here mentioned are not nearly half the number which owned land in the lordſhip of Slauſton before the incloſure; but thoſe only who, having been forwardeſt in the buſineſs, ſigned the petition to parliament.

P. 799. a. l. 15. from bot. for "1670," r. "1676."

Ibid. The Rev. John Parker (who, it is believed, was of St. John's college, Cambridge, B. A. 1759) was preſented to the vicarage of Slawſton in 1760 by George fourth earl of Cardigan, late duke of Montagu, at the requeſt of the principal pariſhioners; and in 1798 was inducted, on the preſentation of lord Sondes, to the rectory of Lutton near Oundle in Northamptonſhire, on his reſignation of the rectory of Rockingham in the ſame county. He died April 1, 1800. Being at firſt attacked by a fever, he was ſoon after ſeized with the gout at his ſtomach (a complaint with which he had been before frequently afflicted); which terminated his life after three weeks illneſs. He was a man of a quiet and peaceable diſpoſition, always avoiding thoſe matters which tend to breed quarrels and contentions between miniſters and the people committed to their charge, and happily ſaw the good effects thereof. Practiſing that benevolence which his diſcourſes inculcated, he lived reſpected, and died lamented by them. During all the time he was vicar of Slawſton he reſided at Uppingham, where he had formerly been uſher of the ſchool.

P. 800. Mr. Burton makes mention, in 1636, of

---

[1] Pat. 14 Car. I.

[2] Wardrobe Account, 28 Edw. I. pp. 33, 34.

[3] See Mr. Maſtin's Hiſtory of Naſeby, p. 105.

“ a monument of Hugh Lineals.”

P. 801. Mr. Burton, who does not mention Othorpe in his printed book, thus notices it in his additions: “ Houthorpe, called alſo Hoćthorpe and Outhorpe, in the hundred of Gartre, reckoned for a village in the old roll of “ Nomina Villarum, &c. com. Leic. temp. Edw. I.” In the time of king Edward I. Roger de Pikering was lord of this manor; and by marriage it fell to Boivill and Lineals. In 12 Ric. II. William de Babthorpe and others gave to the priory of Oſulveſton four meſſuages, one yardland and a half, and four acres of meadow, in Slauſton and Houthorpe, held of Thomas de Boyvile by ſuit of court [1]. It once had a chapel within it, as appeareth by the Matriculus in 5 Hen. III; and was in the pariſh of Slauſton. It is now (1636) quite depopulated, and turned to ſheep-walks; and is the inheritance of Thomas lord Brudenell, baron of Staunton, co. Leiceſter, by deſcent from ſir Robert Brudenell, his great grandfather, who purchaſed it about the latter end of the reign of king Henry VII.”

P. 803. b. l. 14. r. “ Feb. 24, 1583-4.”

Ibid. Robert Brudenell (in the pedigree, p. 807, ſtyled ſir Robert) is called armiger in his epitaph, p. 820. Dugdale alſo (Warw. vol. II. p. 978.) ſtyles him in 1590 “ Robert Brudenell, eſq. of Doddington.” His wife was the heireſs of Laurence Tallard of that place; and in p. 803, ſir Thomas Brudenell writes of “ his brother’s houſe at Doddington.”

Ibid. Agnes, wife to ſir Edward Brudenell, was daughter of John Buſſey; (ſee pp. 403. 410); John of Pilton was living in 1603; and Edward (heir of ſir Thomas) died in “ 1652.”

P. 804. a. l. 15. r. “ four children;” and l. 17. r. “ 3. Edward; and 4. Mary,” &c. Ibid. b. l. 15. r. “ 1661-2;” and l. 24. r. “ next ſurviving brother.” Ibid. note 6, r. “ who died 1551;” note 8, “ ſee p. 810;” and note 12, r. “ ſee p. 819.”

In the chancel of Bruiſyard church, Suffolk, a grave-ſtone, with the portraiture of a man in braſs, between his two wives, is thus inſcribed:

“ Hic jacet D. Michael Hare, armiger, quondam d’nus de Bruſyard, cum duabus uxoribus ſuis; Elizabetha Hobart et Maria Brudenell; qui quidem Michael obiit 11° menſis Aprilis, anno Chriſti 1611.”

P. 806. Edmund Brudenell and Katharine Littleton, ſir Edward’s daughter, were married Sept. 16, 1673 [2].”

P. 809. note 1. l. 2. read “ p. 813.”

P. 812. a. l. 18. r. ætatis ſuæ “ 38;” ibid. b. l. 31. r. “ chancel of Aſton le Walls, co. Northampton;” and add, “ Againſt the wall adjoining the Eaſt window of Whittington church, co. Stafford, is a ſmall monument, thus inſcribed:

Thomas Brudenell, filius natu maximus
Thomæ, de Stonton, in com. Leiceſtriæ, armiger, ſub auſpiciis ſereniſſimi regis Caroli Primi, equitum major,
occubuit morte anno ſui Jeſu 1670, et ſuæ ætatis 57;
die noviſſimo Maii, ultimum et flebile dixit vale.
Hujus exuviis hoc decoratur hypogæum;
hujus innocenti umbrâ hoc conſecratur ſepulchrum;
hujus morum, et virtutum elegantiæ,
hunc celebrant rogum:
Auguſtiori ſanè dignum erat cadaver ſanctius dormitorio.
Niſi quod anima cœleſtis omnibus terrenis impoſuit modum,
quippe, cui, non vita, ſed mortalitas periit, et cui, jam chorus angelarum euge perpetuum concinunt.

Arms: Argent, a chevron between three chapeaus Gules; impaling, Paly of ſix, Argent and Gules, over all a chevron Or; Plate LXX. fig. 23.”

P. 813—816. are erroneouſly paged 913—916.

P. 813. l. 11—14. r. “ William Cave of Pickwell;” l. 16, 17, r. Frances, born “ 1588;” l. 26. r. Lucy, born “ 1620;” l. 27. r. “ Dorothy, married 1648” (ſee p. 805.); and in the note, after “ family,” r. “ with their eldeſt ſon’s epitaph, p. 812;” ſee too his wife’s epitaph in the ſame page.”

P. 814. Mr. Burton adds, “ See the ſecond part of the Reports of the Laws of king Edward III. 29 Edward III. fol. 12; where the caſe is expreſſed; and the manner how the champions of each ſide were armed for the combat is fully ſet down. This manner of trial by combat or battle was a ſpecies of the Ordalian law, uſed in this land long before the Conqueſt; which etymon my lord Coke, in his ninth part of Reports, thus ſetteth down, viz. Or is a privative; dael ſignifies a part; ſo ordael is as much as expers, no party, or not guilty [3]. Verſtegan, in his Reſtitution of decayed Intelligence in Antiquities [4], deriveth it otherwiſe. Or, ſays he, is underſtood for due and right; daell, for part; ſo ordeall, ſignifies as much as due part; which word, as he there affirmeth, is yet uſed in the Low Countries and Germany for dome and judgement. This judgement of Ordeall was uſed in doubtful caſes, when apparent and manifeſt proofs were wanting, or could not be had, to try and find out whether the accuſed were free or guilty; ſo that the defendant might chuſe whether he would be tried by God and the country, that is, by twelve men, or by God only, and was therefore called the judgement of God; for that it was preſumed that God would deliver the innocent. Hottoman [5] the civilian, in his Diſputationes Feudales, ſpeaking of five kinds of proofs, which he calleth feudales probationes, he maketh this the fourth, alledging ſix ſorts hereof; viz. by fire, by hot-burning-iron, by water hot and cold, by lots, and the body of the Lord. Mr. Lambarde and Verſtegan make four ſorts of Ordeal: the firſt by combat, the ſecond by iron red hot, the third by hot water, the fourth by cold water. The firſt of theſe kinds was called in the Greek Monachia, for that one with one did contend; in Latin Duella, for that only two were in action; in French Combat, as much as dimicatio or decertatio. For the trial by combat the accuſer was with peril of his own body to prove the accuſed guilty, and by offering his gauntlet to challenge him to this trial; which the other muſt either accept, or acknowledge himſelf guilty of the offence whereof he was accuſed. If it were a crime deſerving death, then was the combat for life and death, and either on horſeback or on foot. If the fault deſerved not death, but impriſonment, then was the combat ended when the one had forced the other to yield, or diſabled him to defend himſelf, and ſo to be delivered his priſoner. The accuſed had liberty to chuſe another in his turn; but the accuſer muſt perform it in his own perſon, and with equality of weapons. No women were admitted to the view thereof, nor any male children under 13 years old. The prieſts and people which were beholders did ſilently pray that the guiltleſs might gain the victory; and if it were for life and death, a bier ſtood ready to carry away the dead body of him that ſhould be ſlain. None of the company that were ſpectators might riſe, ſhriek out, or make any noiſe, or give any ſign whatſoever. And therefore ſuch was the cuſtom at Halle, a city in Suevia in Germany (a place appointed for trial by combat) as Munſter [6] reporteth; and ſo great regard thereof taken, that the executioner ſtood near to the judges ready with an axe, to cut off the right hand and left foot of the party ſo offending. He that (being wounded) did yield himſelf, was at the mercy of the conqueror; to be killed, or ſuffered to live. If he were killed, he was afterwards buried with honourable ſolemnities; but if ſuffered to live (being vanquiſhed), then was he, by ſentence of the judges, declared utterly void of all honeſt reputation, and never to ride on horſeback, or to bear arms. This alſo was antiently the law of the Longobardi before they invaded Italy, which was about anno 571, as appeareth by Sigonius [7]; who writeth that Arioaldus, having put away his wife Gundeburga upon a ſurmiſe of adultery with Tato duke of Hetruria, at the ſuggeſtion of Adeluthus, a nobleman of Lombardy; Lotharius king of France, kinſman to the ſaid Gundeburga, deſired that the truth might be tried by combat; which was performed; and Adeluthus was vanquiſhed by one Charles the queen’s champion, and ſhe reſtored to her former place and honour. This manner of trial hath often been uſed both before and ſince the Conqueſt, moſt uſually in writs of right. The laſt caſe that I find hereof is in the Lord Dyer's[1] Reports, Trin. 13 Eliz. in the caſe of Lowe and Kyme, who brought a writ of right againſt one Paramoure, who choſe trial by battle; in which caſe the manner of the proceedings, the habit and oath of the champions, the order of their bringing to the liſts, is there at large ſet down; to the view of which near 4000 people were aſſembled together at Tothill-fields by Weſtminſter; but it did not proceed to trial. Of this you may read in divers civilians, as Paris de Puteo de Re Militari, Alciat de Duello, Hottoman Diſputationes Feudales, cap. 42. and others. And alſo in the Roman Lawyers, lib. 2. cap. 3, 4, 5; Bracton, lib. 2. tract. 3. fol. 140; Breton, cap. 22; Horne's Mirror of Juſtices, lib. 3. The trial by red-hot iron was uſed upon like occaſions without manifeſt proof (though not without ſuſpicion that the accuſed might be faulty); and the party accuſed denying the fact, was adjudged to take up red-hot irons in his bare hands; which, after certain prayers ſaid, he muſt do, or elſe acknowledge himſelf guilty, and ſo to receive condign puniſhment for the ſame. Some were adjudged to go blindfolded with their bare feet over certain plough-iron ſhares, red hot, ſome diſtance one from the other; and if the party in paſſing through them did chance to miſs them, or, treading on them, received no harm, then were they declared innocent. To this purgation was Emma, mother of king Edward the Confeſſor, put; who, being accuſed of adultery with Alwin biſhop of Wincheſter, and being led hood-winked to the place where the hot irons lay, and having paſſed them all with her bare feet, not knowing whether ſhe had been near them or no, ſaid, 'O God, when ſhall I come to the place of my purgation[2]?' The like trial is reported of Cunegund, wife of Henry II. emperor, who, being falſely accuſed of adultery, to prove her innocency, did, in a great and honourable aſſembly, take ſeven red-hot irons in her hands bare, without hurt or harm. In the 17th year of king John, as appeareth by the Records in the Tower of London, membrana 25, a writ was directed to Peter Scudamore and the ſheriff of Wiltſhire, ad faciendum judicium ferri de Robino fratre Petitpos. The trial of hot-water was in like caſes of occaſion as is aforeſaid; the party being accuſed and ſuſpected, was appointed to put his bare arms up to the elbows in boiling-hot water; who, after prayers and invocations, was by the conſequence adjudged guilty or guiltleſs. Cold-water Ordeall was the trial which was ordinarily uſed for the common ſort of people, who, having a cord tied about them under their arms, were caſt into ſome river; and if they ſunk down to the bottom thereof within a ſhort time limited, then were they held guiltleſs; but ſuch as did remain upon the water were held culpable, being (as was ſaid) of the water rejected and caſt up. And to this day, in ſome places of Germany and in the Low Countries, this kind of trial is uſed for ſuch as are accuſed to be witches. But the purgations uſed in Diana's well (as appeareth by Eumathius[3] in the trial of Iſmene) was contrary to this; thoſe which were virgins did ſwim, but the unchaſte were drowned. This obſervation hath been made in the above-named trials, that thoſe which were of a free condition and ſtate were to be tried by fire; thoſe which were of a bound and ſervile by water, hot or cold. There were many other kinds of trials and purgations (as appeareth by hiſtories); as, that of the Veſtal Virgins in fetching water in a ſieve, as Pliny writes; of Feronia's temple in Solinus; of the ſtatue of Memnon in Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus; of Pan's cave in Achilles' Statues[4]; and of St. Wilfride's needles, in the monaſtery of Rippon in Yorkſhire, as Mr. Camden[5] hath it, where, in a narrow hole in the crowds or cloſe-vaulted room under ground, women's chaſtity was tried. This manner of trial by Ordeall was called vulgaris purgatio; and for that it was a terrible kind of trial, and had its beginning in Paganiſm, and was firſt invented by the devil, and was directly againſt the Word of God; viz. 'Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God;' and alſo for that divers exorciſms, ſtrange invocations, and many other unlawful ceremonies, were uſed by the prieſts then preſent; they were firſt prohibited by the canon laws; after by pope Stephen V.[6] by a general decree. The Ordeall of fire and water was aboliſhed in this land by an act of parliament 3 Henry III, membrana 5. But the trial by combat was never prohibited by any ſtatute, and ſo remaineth yet in force.

---

[1] Eſch. 12 Ric. II. n. 153.

[2] Tamworth Regiſter.

[3] In the caſe of the abbot of Strata Marcella, fol. 32.

[4] Fol. 63.

[5] Diſputationes Feudales, cap. 41.

[6] Lib. 3.

[7] De Reg. Ital. lib. 2.

"This manor of Staunton, in the reign of king Henry VII. came by purchaſe (as I before ſaid) to ſir Robert Brudenell, knt. ſecond ſon of Edmund Brudenell, eſq. lord chief juſtice of the common pleas 12 Henry VIII; and now from him by deſcent to the right honourable ſir Thomas Brudenell, knight and baronet, created by king Charles baron Brudenell of this place; and that rightly, having here a whole barony, conſiſting of five entire manors; viz. Staunton, Gloweſton, Cranehoe, Outhorpe, and Slauſton, contiguous in a ſemicircle together; which, whether you conſider the quantity or quality of the land, will truly make that proportion good which is required in a complete baronage; beſides his chiefeſt and greateſt inheritance in the county of Northampton, and his large revenues in the counties of Rutland, Lincoln, Huntingdon, and Bedford. A man worthy of all honour, for his general knowledge in moſt kinds of learning, eſpecially in the noble ſtudy of Antiquities; which no doubt is in him hereditary, as may well be gathered by that deſerving memorial of ſome of his anceſtors, made by John Leland, that judicious Antiquary, in his Itinerary of this county and of Northampton, whoſe bright ſhining knowledge hath much enlightened my weak rays in the diſcovery chiefly of the Eaſtern parts of this ſhire remoteſt from me.

"The whole atchievement of this baron containeth 34 coats quarterly; but in his ſeal are only four (which are as many as well may be cut in ſuch a model), viz. Brudenell, Bulſtrode, Entwiſel, and Taylard; and in an eſcocheon of pretence Wivill's coat. The creſt a ſea-horſe Argent, finned Or; but the antient creſt is a ſavage's arm Vert, holding a club, with a chain at the end compaſſing the arm Or; ſupported with a ſtag Argent, between whoſe horns a croſs formy fitché Or; and with a horſe Argent, whoſe ſhoulder is charged with a croſs flory Sable. The motto, En grace affie; but the old motto is Thinke and Thank.

"The ſigillum ſecretum is only the coat of Brudenell, the navel of whoſe chevron is charged with Wivill's coat; which in my conceit is very right and clear: for that ſir Robert Brudenell, having married the ſiſter and coheir of Thomas Entwiſell, junior, who married the heir-general of Wivill; and the ſeiſin of all that whole manor of Staunton being come to Brudenell, and none left of Wivill's line, he very juſtly may bear the ſaid coat in this manner. For in antient times it was the cuſtom to bear the coat of that family that had long been the lord of the manor (the family being extinct, as this manor which carried the denomination with it). As you may ſee one in Whelleſborough; where, for that Purefey had the reverſion of the manors of Whelleſborough and Drayton; John de Whelleſbrough (whoſe anceſtors had been antient lords of them both) for that cauſe granted to Thomas Purefey the arms of Welleſborough, to be preſently borne by him; which reaſon you may ſee expreſſed in his deed at large, dated 21 Richard II, there ſet down.' And this cuſtom was grounded (no doubt) upon the ſame reaſon as thoſe that have come by conqueſt, purchaſe, or ſucceſſion, to kingdoms, principalities, dukedoms, earldoms, and baronies, have done and yet do the like, as I could give ſome of many both exotick and domeſtick."

P. 815. l. 34. There is at this time an antient ſtone-built houſe ſtanding, which adjoins the Weſt ſide of the church-yard; and, by its arched door-ways, windows, &c. has much the appearance of an hoſpital, or religious houſe. It is occupied by a ſubſtantial grazier; and part of it is ſhewn in Plate CXXXII. with the church.

---

[1] Fol. 301. See alſo Thomas de Walſingham, fol. 337, the manner of a combat between ſir John de Anneſly, knt. and Thomas de Katington, 5 Ric. II.

[2] John Aventinus Annales Boiorum, lib. 4.

[3] Lib. 8.

[4] Lib. 6.

[5] Fol. 700.

[6] He died 817.

P. 816. Margaret the wife of Thomas Preſtwould had a rent of 8*s*. iſſuing out of the allotment of her ſiſter Elizabeth Cockayne at Uppingham.—"I had once in my cuſtody a deed of Preſtwould; the ſeal whereof was, upon a bend three legs of a man couped above the knees. I delivered this deed, with divers others, to my kind friend Mr. Richard Gaſcoigne the Antiquary, of whom I had them." Sir Francis Burdet, MS. 1650.

P. 819. Richard Williamſon, commonly called Dick Williamſon the Cat-eater, who died at Stockerſton, about 1770, at the age of 80, was a broad-ſet man, of lowiſh ſtature, with very high ſhoulders, ſo that he appeared as if he had no neck; a ruddy, broad viſage, low forehead, large eyebrows; generally wore a large beard, which was black; and had double teeth, or grinders, all round, both in his upper and under jaws; and had a very uncouth and ſavage appearance. He frequently, for a few halfpence, would devour living cats with more than ſavage ferocity; and without any deception, this more than ſavage cruelty being performed before multitudes (at country feaſts, &c.) in the open ſtreets, in broad day-light. Frogs and newts were nothing to him; and he once eat a toad, which had like to have proved his end. Another time, for a trifling wager, he eat a pair of hedging-mittens, compoſed of a horſe's hide prepared into a very tough white leather, after ſoaking them in urine.

P. 823. b. l. 12. r. "entrance of the South chapel."

P. 824. l. 32. r. "Loveth;" and ſo in the note.

P. 825. Though Mr. Chetwynd has given the ſubſtance of Mr. Burton's additions to Thedingworth[1], I ſhall tranſcribe our Author's words; as they aroſe from the challenge of Lady Cotton (ſee vol. II. p. 842):

"In 32 Hen. VIII. ſir Ralph Rowlett, knight, was ſeiſed of this manor; whoſe daughter and coheir Urſula was married to ſir Francis Goodere, of Poleſworth, co. Warwick, knight; whoſe ſon, ſir Henry Goodere, knight, in 18 Eliz. aliened it to William Brocas; who conveyed it, and the impropriation and the advowſon of the vicarage, to Edward Heſilrige. Sir Richard Skeffington, knt. and Richard Newdigate, eſq. are now (1636) lords of this manor. This family of Goodere (who beareth, Gules, a feſs between two chevrons Vaire[2]), was of great poſſeſſions and antiquity in Hertfordſhire, and bought divers manors about Barnet. Their chief houſe was at Hadley there; and (as appeareth by their arms in many places upon the pillars and walls of the church, and in the windows, with divers monuments of ſeveral of them in marble ſtones,) they ſeem to have built that church. They have been enriched by the heirs of divers good families. King Henry the Eighth gave to this ſir Francis Goodere the abbeys of Polleſworth and Stoneley, the manor of Bagginton, and much lands in Bubnell, Gubbington, and other places, in the county of Warwick. He died of a wound received in the wars in France with the ſaid king. The laſt ſir Henry Goodere died without iſſue male; leaving four daughters his heirs; Lucy, married to ſir Francis Netherſole, knight; Elizabeth, to Samuel Roper[3]; Mary, to Samuel Hederſham; and Anne, to John Kingſton."

P. 826. Among the ſums borrowed by Richard II. in 1382, for the war in France, and ordered to be repaid, Richard Symonds of Thedingworth appears to have lent ten marks[4].

P. 828. Mr. Burton, in 1638, ſays, "In this church no arms; but the monument of .... Villiers of Houthorpe[5]."

P. 834. l. 18—20. read thus:

"2. Frances, married to ſir Edward Montague, K. B.

"3. Rebecca, married to William Mulſho, eſq."

P. 836. A judicious friend obſerves, "It is highly improbable that Cotton wrote the book which occaſioned him ſo much trouble; whereas it is exactly in the manner of ſir Robert Dudley, duke of Northumberland, who was a moſt enterprizing genius. Neither the temper of Cotton, nor the times, were likely to give birth to ſuch a book in England under James."

P. 838. It cannot be diſpleaſing to the Antiquary, that an attempt has been made to ſupply the brevity of Mr. Burton, by a particular account of the families of Brocas and Cotton of Thedingworth; in which a careful reviſion of the monuments at Connington has furniſhed the following corrections and additions:

Connington church conſiſts of a nave, divided from the two ailes by four flattiſh pointed arches on cluſtered columns; a chancel with two ailes, and a handſome Weſt tower with purfled finials.

In the chancel are old ſtalls and a deſk.

The pews and pulpit are modern.

In the South wall of the chancel are three ſtalls, with groined roof; and in front of the ſeat a bordure of quatrefoils; piſcina and ſhelf of the ſame pattern.

At the bottom of the nave ſtands an old wooden chair, on which is repreſented the Salutation, eagles, &c. carved at the back, angels at bows, and in ſpandrils. Before the South door the baſe of a croſs.

In the Eaſt end of the South aile is an old ſtone figure, finely carved, of a man, in a cowl, and under it and over his hands and wriſts mail; a friar's cord and mantle. Q. if Simon de St. Lis, the founder of the abbey, or one of the Bruces?

On the North wall againſt the Eaſt end of the North aile between the upper windows is a rich monument of grit ſtone, with two fluted pillars, which appears to have been a memorial of the perſon put up long after his time:

PRINCE HENRY OF SCOTLAND, LORDE OF CONNINGTON.

Arms: Scotland, as earl David; impaling thoſe of his wife Adelina, daughter to William earl Warren and of Surrey; Checquè, Or and Azure.

Againſt the ſame wall, divided into two arches, with Corinthian pillars fluted, near the door of the chapel at the end, a large and rich old monument of grit ſtone, with Corinthian columns, two unicorns ſupporters, and this inſcription:

"IMPERATOR, REX. FRANCIÆ, ANGLO-SAXONUM, ANGLIÆ, SCOTIÆ."

Arms at top, a ſhield of four coats Quarterly; 1. Scotland, the lion rampant, &c. as the laſt part of earl David's coat; 2. Edward the Confeſſor; 3. earl Waltheof; 4. earl Goſpatric, which laſt is again lower in two ſingle ſhields.

At the bottom five ſhields:

1. Azure, an eagle diſplayed with two heads, Sable. Auſtria.
2. Azure, ſemée of fleur de lis, Or. France antient.
3. Edward the Confeſſor.
4. Gules, two lioncels paſſant guardant in pale, Or. England antient.
5. Scotand, as before.

Below all.

1. Scotland, impaling Waltheof.
2. Scotland, impaling Edward the Confeſſor.
3. Waltheof, impaling Goſpatric, the ſaltire and chief.

On a large ſlab in this aile is a rich crucifix, with a knight and lady kneeling; having labels; two pediments and ſhields between: the braſs gone.

---

[1] There is not the leaſt addition to the article of Thedingworth in Gaſcoigne's copy; though Mr. Burton's letter to ſir Robert Cotton is dated 1627; and Gaſcoigne tells us, p. 20, at bottom, that he had Burton's book, that ſhould have been reprinted, in his cuſtody, in the beginning of the war, 1640.

[2] Plate LXX. fig. 24. Among the remains of painted glaſs in the windows of the North tranſept at Hadley, is a punning cognizance adopted by the family of Goodere, who flouriſhed at Hadley for ſeveral generations previouſly to the year 1600. It repreſents a young partridge with a large ear of wheat in its bill; to which, leſt the alluſion ſhould not be underſtood, is annexed a ſcroll with the word Gooder.—The ſame device occurs on a pillar near the South tranſept, very well executed in alto releivo. Round the window above-mentioned is a border of large ears of wheat, each of which has a ſcroll inſcribed Gooder. It is moſt probable that one of the Goodere family was a principal benefactor towards rebuilding the church. Weever mentions the tomb of John Goodere, eſq. who died in 1504. There is ſtill in the North tranſept a braſs plate to the memory of Anne Walkeden, of the Goodere family, who died in 1575. Lyſons's Environs of London, vol. II. p. 521.

[3] See before, in Brokeſby, p. 194.

[4] Rymer, Fœd. vol. VIII. p. 342.

[5] Of which ſee vol. II. p. 828.

On an oval and thin oblong tablet, between two Corinthian columns, are theſe inſcriptions:

1. ASTA TE AMABO,
LEGE.
2. DONEC SUM
VIVUS, NON PARA-
BAM IN QUA QUIESCEREM:
MORTUAM UNAM SALTR'
CURABAT MIHI HÆRES BENIG-
NUS SEU HÆREDE BENIGNIOR
PRONEPOS: HIC NI RESTITUISSET
LATUISSEM MAJORIBUS RUDERE
CŒNOBII. SUM THOMAS COTTON,
QUEM AUTHORITAS ADULTA PATRI-USQUE AMOR, CASTA UXOR,
PARIS FILIA, DULCESQUE LIBERI, ORNAVERUNT. A MORTE
ERIPIENS, PATRIAM AMICAM,
POSTERIS, JOANNAM VIDU-AM, MARITO HEREDEM, PUPIL-
LUM CUSTODI RELIQUIT,
AN. SAL.
M.D.XIII.
3. VALE,
ET ABI IN REM TUAM:
4. THOMAS COTTON:
JOHANNA PARIS:

Arms of Cotton; impaling three unicorns' heads.

At the bottom of a very rich monument of grit-ſtone, againſt the South wall at the end of the South aile of the church, with the arms in twelve quarterings, and ſeven ſingle coats with curious devices in various parts of it, is inſcribed,

THOMAS COTTON. THOMAS COTTON.
ELIZA SHIRLEY. LVCE HARVEY.

In the South-Weſt angle of the chapel in the South porch of the church, under a monument of veined marble, erected by the piety of Sir Robert's wife and ſon; whereon is his buſt bearded and whiſkered, and under it a laurel wreath without buds; is inſcribed,

ROBERTVS COTTONVS, MILES ET BARONETTVS, DOMINVS HVJVS
MANERII DE CONNINGTON;
ANTIQVAE ET NOBILIS FAMILIAE BRVCEORVM EIVSDEM
MANERII DOMINORVM, PER PARENTALEM SUCCESSIONEM HAERES.
SAGACISSIMVS ANTIQUITATVM HVIVS GENTIS INDAGATOR, ET CONSERVATOR NOTISSIMVS.
NATVS XXII JANVARII, MDLXX. DENTONIAE;
OBIIT VI DIE MAII, MDCXXXI, IN DOMO SVA
WESTMONASTERIENSI;
ET IVXTA HIC CONDITVR, EXPECTANS RESVRRECTIONEM FOELICEM.
COMMVNIS MVNDO SVPEREST ROGVS.

Sir Thomas Cotton, the ſecond baronet, was buried in the North-Eaſt angle of the abovesaid chapel near his father, under a ſtatuary monument erected for the preſervation of his memory, with his buſt, bearded and whiſkered, flowing hair, band and taſſels; under him a half wreath of laurels, with this epitaph, by Dr. Smith, who wrote his life:

Thó. Cottonus, baron, Rob. è proximo ſiti filius,
Hæres, & imitator paternæ ſedulitatis in conquirendis
Britannicarum Antiq. monumentis.
H. S. E.
Oppreſſæ patriæ & Regi Carolo I° fidem præſtitit.
Bibliothecam
ineſtimabilem ſum̃o ſtudio, nec minoribus impenſis, conſervavit,
locupletavit, & poſteritati eruditæ dicavit.
Duas uxores, lectiſſimas fœminas, ſibi ſociavit; ex priori filium Joannem, filias Luciam & Franciſcam, ſuſcepit.
Ex poſteriori tres filios (uno prærepto) & duas filias ſuperſtites reliquit.
Obiit Maii 13°, A. D. 1662.
JOANNES COTTONUS P. amantiſſimo poſuit.
Quantula pars hominum corporis exuviæ?

Sir John Cotton, the third baronet, (who was born in 1621) was twice married. By his firſt wife Dorothy, daughter and ſole heir to Edmund Anderſon, of Stratton and Eyworth, co. Bedford, eſq. he had one ſon John, and a daughter Dorothy. By Elizabeth his ſecond [1] lady, daughter to ſir Thomas Honywood, of Marks hall in Eſſex, knt. (who died April 3, 1702), he had ten children, of which only three ſurvived; one ſon, Robert; and two daughters, Elizabeth, married to Lionel Walden, eſq. (whom ſhe ſurvived); and Mary-Honywood, wife of Roger Kenyon [2], gent.

Sir John was buried at Connington; where, againſt the South Eaſt angle of the chapel, on the North ſide of the church, a handſome monument of white and jaſper marble, on which is his buſt three quarters profile, gown over left ſhoulder, a large flowing wig, with palm branches and cherubs, is thus inſcribed:

H. S. E.
D. JOANNES COTTONUS,
Baronettus, D. THOMÆ filius, & D. ROBERTI nepos digniſſimus, avitarum virtutum, paritèr ac lauti patrimonii, hæres; quas egregiis animi & ingenii dotibus, ſtudiiſque politioris literaturæ adauxit & adornavit. Bibliothecam, ab Avo in ædibus Cottonianis Weſtmonaſterii fundatam ditiſſimum Hiſtoriæ &
Antiquitatis Britannicæ Sacrarium, ut in omne ævum integra & inviolabilis ſervaretur, pro pietate & præclariſſimo de Patriâ optimè merendi ſtudio, in publicos literatorum uſus transferri, & perpetuo nexu addici, lege Parlamentariâ curavit. Tandem, ſatur dierum, & illibatæ apud omnes famæ, duodecimo die Septembris, à reparatæ hominum Salutis MDCCII. octogeſimoprimo ætatis anno Strattonæ, in agro Bedfordienſi, placidè obdormivit in Domino, per quem expectat fœlicem & beatam reſurrectionem.
Memoria juſti cum laudibus [3].

Againſt the North Eaſt angle of the ſame chapel is a monument of white and jaſper marble for ſir John's ſecond lady, in hair; a veil head-dreſs thrown open appears from behind her neck; the ſhift plaited; over her ſhoulder an elegant robe, with palm branches and cherubs' heads, as in ſir John's. Under her,

Sacred to the memory of Dame ELIZABETH COTTON, daughter of ſir THOMAS HONYWOOD, of Marks Hall, in Eſſex, knt. and ſecond wife of ſir JOHN COTTON, lord of this mannor of Connington, baronet; by whom ſhee had iſſue ten children, of which onely three, ROBERT, ELIZABETH, the relict of LIONEL WALDEN, eſq. and MARY-HONYWOOD,

---

[1] By the ſecond lady ſir John had four ſons. See an epitaph at Steeple Gedding for the eldeſt of them, vol. II. p. 838.

[2] See alſo an epitaph at Steeple Gedding for this lady, ibid.

[3] Beſides this inſcription, which it is ſuppoſed was placed here afterwards by his ſucceſſor, there is, on a ſlab in the North chapel, another ſhort inſcription on ſir John, ordered by himſelf, which is as follows:

"Hic ſubtus jacet reconditum
corpus D. JOHANNIS COTTONI, Baronetti, hujus Manerii de Conington domini; qui ſententiam hanc, quaſi ex
Archangeli ore, in extremo mundi perituri die proferendam (quam ille auribus ſuis inſonuiſſe ſentiebat), ſaxo ſepulchrali incidi voluit:
'SURGITE, MORTUI, &
VENITE AD JUDICIUM'."

This might have been ſuppoſed to belong to John his ſon, if he had not died without the title, which this John has here given him.

ſurvive. She was a lady of true and ſolid piety, of an excellent underſtanding and ſharpneſs of wit, a moſt loving and tender wife, an indulgent and careful mother, obliging in her deportment towards her neighbours and friends, and bountiful and charitable to the poor. After ſhe had lived thirty-eight years in holy wedlock, ſhe reſigned up her pious ſoul to God, with all calmneſs and tranquillity of mind, on the 3d day of April, MDCCII.
at Cotton houſe in Weſtminſter, in the LXVth year of her age;
and lyes here interred, expecting a joyful and happy reſurrection.

The four laſt-mentioned inſcriptions are all on large medallions of white marble; and in the pier below the laſt of them is a pointed-arched locker, and a ſhelf.

On a ſlab in the South aile, is the following very brief monument for the only ſon of ſir John Cotton by his firſt lady, "J. C. eſq. Mar. 20, 1681." His deſcendants will be duly noticed in a ſubſequent page [1].

On an altar tomb at the Eaſt end of the church-yard is this inſcription:

Here lyes interred the body of ELIZABETH, late wife of ſir JOHN COTTON, bart. daughter of JAMES HERBERT, of KINGSEY, in the county of Oxford, eſq. and granddaughter of THOMAS, late duke of LEEDS; who departed this life the 11th day of February, 1721-2, aged 42 years.
She had one daughter, CATHARINE, who died an infant, and lyes interred with her; who was a woman of ſtrict virtue, and always delighted in private charities.

Againſt the North wall of the Eaſt end of the South aile, on a neat monument of white marble, with pilaſters, pediment, &c. but no arms, is the following inſcription:

Amongſt the other Monuments of his Anceſtors, erected in this ſacred place, this memorial of Sir JOHN COTTON, Baronet, put up; who, dying at LONDON on Feb. 5th, 1731, was, agreeable to his own ſpecial direction by his laſt Will, buried in the pariſh of St. George the Martyr, where a Monument is erected to his memory, in the Burying-ground belonging to the ſaid pariſh in Lamb's Conduit fields, at the expence of his near kinſman and teſtamentary heir. He was ſon to JOHN COTTON, eſquire, who died 24th March, 1681, and was buried near this place; and grandſon to ſir JOHN COTTON, bart. who lies interred in the North chancel of this church. He was a kind landlord to his tenants; and the augmentations he gave to the rector of this pariſh, to the vicars of St. Neot's in this county, and of Biggleſwade in Bedfordſhire; the foundation of two charity-ſchools, the one at Holm in Huntingdonſhire, and the other at Biggleſwade; together with the piece of land in this pariſh, which he ſettled on the poor of Holm for ever; are manifeſt proofs of his pious and charitable diſpoſition.

On a braſs plate on the chancel floor:

HIC JACET HENRICUS WILLIAMSON, HUJUS ECCL'Ē RECTOR,
SACRÆ THEOLOGIÆ BACCALAVREVS, ET CLARVS DIVINI VERBI
PRÆCO, DORMITORIUM HOC SIBI MORIENS ELEGIT: QUIESCAT (INQUIT) CORPUS MEUM IN CUBILI ILLO, IDQUE IN BEATAM RESURRECTIONEM, ANIMAM VERO MEAM SUSCIPIAT DOM. JESUS, VENI DOMINE JESU, VENI CITO ET SUSCIPE ANIMO. SIC QUIEVIT IN DOMINO
MARTII VICESIMO SECUNDO DIE, ANNO DOMINI 1613 [2].
ROSA,
DICTA HENRICI RELICTA, HÆC VERBA
LITERIS MEMORALIBUS INSCRIBI FECIT.

On the lower ſtep of the rails: 16 H. HARRIS. 87.

Within the rails:

"Hunc intra TUMULUM quieſcit
HENRICUS HARRIS, Art. Mag.
hujus eccleſiæ triginta fere annos fidelis paſtor; qui tædiis, curis, & mundanis cunctis valedicens laboribus, variolarum tandem rabie
kalendis Februarii mortalitatem explevit, anno { ſalutis 1693, ætatis 55."

On a black ſlab before the rails:

"UNDER THIS STONE RESTETH
THE BODY OF JOHN COTTON,
FOURTH SON OF THOMAS
COTTON, LORD OF THIS
MANOR OF CONINGTON.
HE LIVED 88 YEARS; TO HIS FAMILY GAVE THE MANOURS OF GLATTON,
HOLME, SAWTREY, BEAWMES,
STEEPLE GIDDING, AND DENTON. HE DECEASED
ON NEW-YEAR'S DAY,
ANNO DNI 1635."

On ſlabs in the North aile:

1. "Dr D. C.
FEB. 24, 1662."

2. "M. H. C.
DYED the 1 OF APRILL 1666."

3. "MR. PETER COTTON
WAS BURIED NOV. 2, 1687."

4. "MRS. MARGREAT COTTON
WAS BURIED FEBRUARY 12, 1688."

5. "HIC JACET ...... JOHNSON,
A. M. CURAT. DE HOLME;
OBIIT 4° MAR. A. D. 1670."

On ſlabs in the South aile:

1. "EDWARDUS BERIFFE, OBIIT I DIE MAR. 1640, ANNO ÆTATIS SUÆ 55."

2. "ELIZ. BERIFFE, relicta Edmundi BERIFFE, filia Gulielmi Halis, Sacræ Theologiæ Doctoris, 1667."

In the church-yard [3]:

"In memory of the Rev. Mr. Thomas Dod, who was rector of this pariſh near 55 years;
an exemplary pattern of all Chriſtian and Social Duties.
He died March the 27th, 1754,
in the 83d year of his age."

"The old regiſter being almoſt worn out, and in danger of being loſt, the following were tranſcribed ꝑ me Thomas Dod."

The baptiſms begin 1660--1699, burials 1700--1798.

Oppoſite the Weſt end of the church ſtood the manor-houſe, which, being ruinous, was re-built by ſir Robert Cotton, the Antiquary, who brought from Fotheringay caſtle the whole room in which the queen of Scots was beheaded [4].

---

[1] See p. 549.

[2] He was alſo prebendary of Peterborough, though not ſo here obſerved.

[3] Another ſtone in the church-yard commemorates "Anne, widow of the Rev. John Hargreaves, late rector of Iſlip, co. Northampton;" who died March 24, 1754; and was buried at Connington by her own deſire.

[4] Gough's Camden, vol. II. p. 161.

In the garden on a terrace were two octangular ſtone ſummer-houſes, one of which was fitted up with Roman inſcriptions from the Picts wall[1], and only one now remains as a granary to the farm.

In the Eaſt bow-window of the deſerted hall, now down, Mr. Smyth deſcribes the grand atchievement of 30 coats, as already noticed in p. 841.

The houſe was taken down, except the ſtone colonade before it, by the laſt ſir John Cotton (the great grandſon of the builder), who had a predilection for Stratton Hall in Bedfordſhire. The part which formed the apartments for ſervants was fitted up as a farm-houſe. Mr. Heathcoate (to whoſe family the rectory[2] has belonged ſince the year 1754) has built a ſmall hunting box near it. The ſtone gate-way on the South ſide of the manſion houſe remains.

The laſt-mentioned Sir John Cotton having died without iſſue in 1731; the dignity and part of the eſtate went to his uncle, ſir Robert Cotton, of Steeple Gedding, in the county of Huntingdon, bart. only ſurviving ſon of ſir John Cotton, of Conington, bart. by Elizabeth Honywood, his ſecond lady.

Sir Robert Cotton married, firſt, Elizabeth, daughter of ——— Wigſton, eſq. by whom he had one ſon John Cotton, eſq. By his ſecond lady —— Morton, he had no iſſue. He died July 12, 1749; and was buried at Steeple Gedding.

Sir John Cotton, bart. his ſon and ſucceſſor, married Jane, daughter of ſir Robert Burdett, bart. by whom he had two ſons; Robert, who died an infant in 1715-16; and John, a very accompliſhed young gentleman, of great expectations, who died at Durham, of the ſmall-pox, juſt after his return from foreign travel, Nov. 15, 1739, at the age of 25; and ſeven daughters; 1, Mary, 2 Mary, 3. Heſter, who all died young; 4. Jane, married, Oct. 26, 1741, to Thomas Hart, of Warfield, Berks, eſq.; 5. Elizabeth-Stuart, married to Thomas Bowdler, eſq.; 6. Maria, married April 12, 1754, to Baſil the preſent earl of Denbigh; and, dying Oct. 14, 1782, left two ſons, William-Robert viſcount Fielding (who died Aug. 8, 1799[3]), and George; 7. Frances.

On the death of ſir John Cotton, which happened March 27, 1752, the title became extinct.

Mr. John Cotton (whoſe death is noticed in p. 548) married Frances, daughter of ſir George Downing, of Eaſt Hatley in Cambridgeſhire, knt.; and, dying in the life-time of his father, at the early age of 31, left two ſons and one daughter; 1. Sir John[4], ſucceſſor to his grandfather, married in 1708 Elizabeth, daughter of James Herbert, of Kingſey, co. Oxon, eſq. by whom he had only one daughter Catharine, who died an infant; his lady died Feb. 11, 1721-2; and he Feb. 5, 1730, ſ. p.; 2. Thomas, who married Frances, only daughter and heir to William Langton, of Peterborough, eſq.; 3. Frances, married to William Hanbury, of Little Marcle in Herefordſhire, eſq. by whom ſhe had one ſon, who is thus noticed on a flat ſtone in the South aile of Connington church:

"Here lies the body of WILLIAM HANBURY, gent.
eldeſt ſon of William Hanbury, of Little Marcle, in the county of Hereford, eſq.
by Frances, only ſiſter of ſir JOHN COTTON, bart.
lately deceaſed.
Ob. 6to Julii, 1731, æt 22°.
Vir fuit ætatis, virtutum advenerat æſtas,
Sed florem et fructum mors inopina tulit;
Attamen haud raptum properato funere credas,
Nam ſat maturè, qui benè vixit, obit."

Mr. Hanbury had alſo four daughters, who at his death, Nov. 21, 1756, became co-heirs to the family-eſtates; viz. 1. Elizabeth, married to William Neale, eſq. of Alleſley in Warwickſhire; 2. Frances, married to Francis Barrett, eſq. of Otterden in Kent; 3. Mary, married to the Rev. Martin Anneſley, D. D. of Bucklebury, Berks; and 4. Catharine, married to Velters Cornewall, eſq. of Moccas Court, Herefordſhire.

Mary (the third daughter) left ſeveral children; viz. Francis Anneſley, eſq. the preſent member for the borough of Reading, and who is here mentioned as the heir at law of the Cottons of Connington in Huntingdonſhire, and Stratton in Bedfordſhire; which heirs at law, in conſideration of their alienation of Cotton-houſe in Cotton-garden, Weſtminſter, and of the generous and valuable donation of the Cottonian Library to the publick, have ſettled on them and their heirs eſtates at Stratton in Bedfordſhire; being one of thoſe few entails which Parliament, for valuable ſervices, has ſubſtantiated to the family for ever. By the ſame deſcent Mr. Anneſley becomes heir at law of the Downings of Gamlingay in Cambridgeſhire; and, by the court of Chancery, has been conſtituted to put the truſts of the will of ſir George Downing, bart. into execution, who left £4000. a year to found a college within the Univerſity of Cambridge.

Catharine (the fourth daughter) left iſſue, by Velters Cornewall, eſq. Catharine, married to ſir George Amyand, bart. who took the name of Cornewall; by whom ſhe has ſeveral children.

In the chancel of Baddenham church, Suffolk:

Condidit hæc bino gnatus monumenta parenti,
Et vivos inter vivere poſſe dedit;
Et mihi poſſe loqui cùm garrula Fama ſilebit,
Hos egò veridicos ingeminabo ſonos.
His Genus antiquum, Generiſque Inſignia, mores
Ingenui, probitas, & ſine labe decus.
His viduæ & miſeri lactantis cura pupilli;
Pauperibus facilis, larga, benigna manus.
Vir priùs hìc jacuit, dilecta ſupervenit uxor,
Poſtquam quinta fuit falce reſecta ſeges.
Ecce, domoque toroque ſimul fœlicitèr, atrox
Mors benè conjunxit quos benè junxit Amor.
Quænam eſt vita veſtra? vapor eſt ad modicum parens, & deindè exterminabitur. Jac. iv. 14.
Concordes domus una priùs, torus unus habebat,
Compoſitos ſub ſe quos lapis unus habet.

Here lye the bodies of William Cotton, eſq.
bachelour of the civill lawe,
who dyed the 22d of May, anno 1616;
and of Lucie his wife, daughter of Reginald Rous, of Baddingham, eſq.
who dyed the 7th of Auguſt, anno 1621.
They had iſſue Edward and Katharine.

Ecce, parentum
Æmula proles
Bina, ſuperſtes
Cottona fructus,

Decidit Arbor.
Lucia luxit.
Rem Roſa-nata
Floruit olim.

Sat tibi Carmen.
Quàm brevis vitæ,
Tam brevis hora.
Perge, Viator.

On the top of the monument, Azure, an eagle diſplayed Argent, Cotton; impaling, Sable, a feſs dentized Or; between three creſcents Argent a label of three points; each coat having a creſcent for difference; Rous. Cotton's creſt, a faulcon Argent, armed Gules; Rous's, a bunch of laurel, Vert; Plate LXX. fig. 25.

Underneath, the ſtatues of Cotton and his wife, with their daughter and ſon kneeling; and round the tomb ſeveral impalements of both families.

P. 857. a. l. 35. for "1413," r. "1570."

P. 861. On a ſtone in the chancel of the church of Pycombe in Suſſex is inſcribed:

"Under this marble lies the body of the Rev. SIR LEWIS BEAUMONT, BART. M. A.
36 years rector of this pariſh.
Obiit Dec. 23, 1738, aged 64.
Vixi;
Peccavi;
Pœnitui;
Naturæ ceſſi;
Reſurgam.

Sir Lewis Beaumont married ELIZABETH, daughter of Mr. COURTENAY, of the Iſle of Wight, and of the antient and noble family of Powderham caſtle; who lies buried in this chancel."

Extracts from the Regiſter:

Sir Lewis Beaumont, bart. late rector of this pariſh, was buried Dec. 28, 1738.

Lady Elizabeth Beaumont was buried July 15, 1750.

---

[1] Thoſe of them which remained were preſented by ſir John Cotton to Trinity College, Cambridge, where they were fixed up at the foot of the Library-ſtairs, and have been engraved by P. S. Lamborn. Gough's Camden, ubi ſupra.

[2] Bacon's Liber Regis.

[3] Gent. Mag. vol. LXIX. p. 725.

[4] "Sir John Cotton married to Mrs. Elizabeth Herbert, grand-daughter to the duke of Leeds, in his chapel, on Sunday night, July 4, 1708; the licence being only a common one for the regiſter of the pariſh-church of Wimbledon, between the hours of 8 and 12 as uſual." Lyſons, vol. I. p. 537.

P. 864. Sir William Halford, bart. was fellow of New College, Oxford. His ſon, ſir James Halford, was living in 1712, and at that time was in the queen's liſe-guard. He had a brother John; and a ſiſter Charlotte, married to William Lucy, citizen and linen-draper of London.

P. 869. Mr. Burton, in his additions, ſays,

"Wiſtowe, in the hundred of Gartre, antiently called Winſtanſtowe, that is, the place or ſeat of Winſtan; for, ſtowe (as Florentius Wigornenſis[1] and Verſtegan hath it) ſignifieth ſo much. This Winſtan was an antient Saxon and liver here, and for his holy and religious life was of the people accounted a Saint, of whom the town took the name; and to his honour the inhabitants built and dedicated their church, as appeareth by an inquiſition taken after the death of ſir Leonard Haſtings, knight, 34 Hen. VI.[2] The like denomination was of Helenſtowe in the county of Bedford, now called Elſtowe, Helenæ ſtatio, as Leland[3] interpreteth it; for that Helen the empreſs had a palace there. This Helen, as all our hiſtories write, and as that learned chronologiſt cardinal Baronius and Cuſpinian[4], in the Lives of the Emperors, do agree, was the daughter of Coëll king of Britain, the wife of Conſtantinus Chlorus emperor, that died at York 306, and mother of Conſtantine the Great, that famous Chriſtian emperor. She was a Chriſtian of great ſanctity and holineſs, and converted her ſon Conſtantine to Chriſtianity. Having found the croſs of Chriſt, ſhe died about the age of 80 years, and was buried in Conſtantinople; whom her ſon Conſtantine, after her deceaſe, cauſed to be canonized a ſaint, and to be called Auguſta; commanding medals of gold with her picture thereon to be ſtamped; ſome of which Mr. Speed, in his Hiſtory of England, out of the cabinet of ſir Robert Cotton, hath expreſſed. Afterwards, in the reign of king William the Conqueror, Judith neice to the Conqueror, daughter of Lambert earl of Lens in Artois, and wife to Waltheof earl of Huntingdon, built a nunnery here, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, St. Mary, and St. Helen. In many ſhires of this land are divers towns which bear the names of Saints, which I have obſerved to ariſe chiefly upon ſix cauſes. The firſt is the place of the birth; for inſtance, Ebcheſter, the biſhopric of Durham, that is, the city of Ebba, who was the daughter of a king of Northumberland, and here born, and for her religious life was canonized a Saint about 630; and St. Columbes in Cornwall, of one Columbe alſo reputed a Saint, and there born. The ſecond, by reaſon of the ſeat or dwelling; as Kaineſham[5] in Somerſetſhire, that is, the home or dwelling of Kaine; which Kaine was a Britiſh virgin of rare and ſingular holineſs, of whom the people in former ages reported, that ſhe turned ſerpents into ſtones, for that ſuch ſtones are often found in mineries and leaden grooves near Mendip hills not far off diſtant; ſome of which, not long ſince, from thence were ſent unto me, upon which is the proportion of a ſerpent round in a circle or wreath, the tail being in the centre, and the head in the uppermoſt circumference, but broken off[6]. Malmeſbury in Wiltſhire, antiently called Maidulf's Bury (as Bede writeth) of one Maidulfus[7] a Scot, a man of great learning and ſanctity, who lived here an hermit; and, after having gotten ſome companions unto him, began here the foundation of a little monaſtery: St. Bees, or St. Bega, in Cumberland, of Bega[8] an Iriſh maid, who lived here a ſolitary life; to whoſe holineſs many miracles are aſcribed, as the taming of a wild bull, and great ſtore of ſnow covering the hills, falling at a ſummer ſolſtice, occaſioned by her prayers. The third, after ſome great or memorable act; as, St. Oſwald's in Northumberland, of Oſwald king of Northumberland; who, being to join battle with Cedwall a Briton, king of Cumberland (as Bede[9] writeth), erected up a croſs, and, kneeling down, made a long and pathetical prayer to Chriſt (ſet down in Bede), imploring his aid againſt his adverſary; who, after getting ſucceſsful victory, was baptized, and procured alſo Aidanus a Scot, with all his family, to do the like; which thing happened about 634, before which time no Chriſtianity was there profeſſed; this Oſwald being the firſt motive and beginner thereof: and St. German's in Cornwall, where, for that St. German, biſhop of Antiſſiodore [Auxerre] in France, being ſent for, for the ſuppreſſion of the Pelagian hereſy in this land, had at this place alſo prevailed much againſt the ſaid heretics, had a church conſecrated in his favour, and the town named after his name[10]. The fourth cauſe, the place of the death; as a town in Huntingdonſhire, firſt called Slepe, which afterwards, upon the death of one Iven, or Ive, a biſhop, who, about the year 600, travelled over moſt part of the land with a great opinion of holineſs, teaching and preaching where he came, departed this life at this place, was by his name called St. Ive: and St. Piran in Cornwall, of one Piran an Iriſh Saint, whom the inhabitants reported to have relieved ten juſt kings and their armies, by the ſpace of eight days, with three cows only; and that he had reſtored to life dead men, hogs, and other beaſts; and here himſelf deceaſed: alſo Congerſbury in Somerſetſhire, ſo named of one Conger, who lived there an heremitical life in great ſtrictneſs and ſincerity, and here departed; the very word importing ſo much; for, bury (as Verſtegan[11] noteth) ſignifieth to hide or bury[12]. The fifth, the place or honour of martyrdom; as St. Alban's in Hertfordſhire, before called Verulam, an antient Roman city, wherein long before was the palace of the antient Britiſh kings (by what name then called I know not); as, at the firſt arrival of Julius Cæſar in this iſland, here reſided Caſſibilan, one of the kings of Britain, who firſt encountered him; but when as Alban had ſuffered martyrdom under the emperor Diocleſian about 293, who by horrible torments went about utterly to root out the Chriſtian religion, it was denominated after his name; to whoſe honour, being the protomartyr of this land, the Chriſtians (as Bede writeth) not long after built a goodly monaſtery, where in the year 429 was a council held for the ſuppreſſion of the Pelagian hereſy, brought into this land by Agricola the ſon of Severus a biſhop, which had taken ſuch root in this land, that they were forced to ſend for the abovenamed St. German of Antiſſiodore [Auxerre] and Lupus of Tricaſſine [Troyes] out of France, to ſuppreſs the ſame; but after, when that antient monaſtery had ſuffered ruin in the time of Uther Pendragon, ſince come into the Saxons' hands, Offa[13], that mighty king of Mercia, in 793 began the new foundation of a ſumptuous monaſtery in honour of the ſaid St. Alban; which after grew to ſuch wealth and greatneſs, that it was eſteemed one of the richeſt and chiefeſt in this land[14]; and at the ſuppreſſion of abbeys, temp. Henry VIII, it was valued yearly to diſpend £2510. of old rent of aſſiſe. At what time alſo as Wolpher king of Mercia with barbarous cruelty had ſlain his two ſons, Wolfanus and Ruffinus, for that they had profeſſed themſelves to be Chriſtians, even in the chapel in the midſt of divine ſervice; himſelf after having embraced the Chriſtian religion, and ſeeing the heinouſneſs of the fact, and entering into meditation of the danger of the ſame; for, as David ſaith[15], "precious in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his Saints;" ſeeking how he might waſh away the foulneſs of this act, he thought upon ſome holy buſineſs to be performed; wherefore he addreſſed himſelf to the finiſhing of a monaſtery in Northamptonſhire, but newly began by his brother Peada, ſon of Peada king of Mercia, at a place called Medeſhampſted, which he, in memory of the martyrdom of his two ſons, finiſhed in 673, and conſecrated to St. Peter; which after was thereupon called Peterburgh. The like denomination, by reaſon of martyrdom, was at St. Kenelm's monaſtery [1], commonly called St. Kellum's, near Clent in Staffordſhire, of Kenelm king of Mercia; who, being treaſonably ſlain by the procurement of his ſiſter Quendreda aſpiring to the crown, at this place, in a deep valley between two hills, was after accounted a Saint, and a church built in this place to him; which yet remaineth. The ſixth and laſt cauſe, by reaſon of the tranſlation of the body from the place of the firſt interrment; as a town in Suffolk, firſt called Bedericeſwold [2], but after, upon the tranſlation of the body of St. Edmund king of the Eaſt Angles, who was cruelly ſlain by the Danes, an. 870, at a place in the ſaid county called Hogilſdon, or Hoxne, and from thence tranſlated hither, was thereupon called St. Edmundſbury, where the inhabitants built a church to his honour; afterwards, about 210 years after the paſſion of St. Edmund, king Canute began the new foundation of a monaſtery, which after increaſed to that riches, ſtatelineſs, and beauty, that Jo. Leland (who ſaw it in the reign of king Henry the Eighth) ſaith [3] the ſun never ſhone upon a more magnificent place; and, at the ſuppreſſion of abbeys, it was valued yearly to diſpend 2336*l.* 16*s.* of old rent of aſſize. Likewiſe St. Neote's in Huntingdonſhire, of the tranſlation of the body of St. Neote, an holy man, from Neoteſtoke in Cornwall to this place [4]; where after Ælfridus an earl of Mercia built an abbey of Benedictine monks: as alſo St. Alkemund, a pariſh-church in Derby, of Alcmund, a king of Northumberland [5]; who, being required by the inhabitants of Wilton to make defence to certain lands which he had at that place againſt a duke of Mercia, was, in a battle there fought betwixt them, ſlain, an. 808; his body was firſt buried at Lilleſhull, co. Salop, and after tranſlated to Derby, where after a church was erected unto him, and at this day beareth the name of St. Alkemund; to which St. Alkemund alſo is a church in Shrewſbury dedicated. But chiefly the inhabitants of Cornwall and Wales did ſo much reſpect their Iriſh and own native Saints, as that there was ſcarce any town which was not either conſecrated unto them, or elſe did bear the Saint's name; as in Cornwall, St. Burien, St. Ive's, St. Alin, St. Erick, St. Neikan, St. Erne, St. Fooke; and in Wales, Llan Patrick, Llan Avon, Llan Daff, Llan Madak, Llan Quenith, Llan Elthy, and many the like [6].—Whoſo is willing to know the hiſtories or lives of the Saints (omitting 'Legenda Aurea de Vitis Sanctorum,' written by Jacobus de Voragine, biſhop of Genoa,) may read 'Vitæ Sanctorum,' written by Zach. Liepoldus, in three tomes, 8vo, printed in 1596; 'Viridarium Sanctorum,' by Matth. Raderus, 8vo. printed at Augſburg, 1605; 'Sanctorum Hiſtoriæ,' by Alviſio Leppez Manno, a Venetian, biſhop of Verona, in 4 tomes, printed in Venice 1554; 'Probatæ Sanctorum Vitæ,' by Laur. Surius a Carthuſian monk, in ſeven volumes in folio, printed at Cologne, 1569 and 1589; and 'Probatæ Hiſtoriæ Sanctorum,' written by Jacobus Moſander, folio, printed at Cologne 1581; and our countryman John Capgrave his 'Catalogus Sanctorum Angliæ,' printed at London 1616.

---

[1] Florentius Wigorn. p. 419; Reſtitution of Decayed Intelligence, p. 232.

[2] Eſch. 34 Hen. VI.

[3] Vol. I. p. 46.

[4] Cuſpinian, fol. 112.

[5] Lib. de Kaneſham.

[6] Nothing more nor leſs than Cornua Ammonis.

[7] Leland, vol. III. p. 265.

[8] Bede.

[9] Bede, lib II cap. 2.

[10] Hen. Huntingdon, lib. II. p. 478. b.

[11] Reſtitution, fol. 211.

[12] With all due deference to Verſtegan, bury here is the ſame with burgh, a place or reſidence, and anſwers to ſtowe beforementioned.

[13] For the manner of finding the body ſee Matthew of Weſtminſter, in "Flores Hiſtoriarum," lib. i. fol. 21. b.

[14] Rob. de Swafham; Chronicon Monaſterii de Feretris.

[15] Pſalm cxvi. 15.

This manor was ſometime the inheritance of ſir Ralph de Haſtings, knt. to whom king Edward III. gave liberty of free-warren here [7]. Francis earl of Huntingdon, lineally deſcended from the ſaid ſir Ralph de Haſtings, died, ſeiſed of this manor, 2 Eliz."

P. 870. "To the honourable the committee of Sequeſtrations ſitting at Leiceſter,

The humble petition of Richard Halford, gent. ſheweth,

"That your petitioner in April laſt bought of this committee divers goods and cattle which were the goods and cattle of ſir Richard Halford, knight and baronet, for which he was to pay £120, which he hath paid accordingly to this committee; yet, notwithſtanding, the agents of this committee have, by warrant from this committee, ſeized and taken away from your petitioner divers of the ſaid goods, to the value of above £70; your petitioner not knowing any cauſe for the ſame, he never having given any offence whereby he might incur the diſpleaſure of this committee or the parliament, but hath in all things manifeſted his duty and affections to the parliament; and therefore humbly prayeth, that this honourable committee will be pleaſed to take ſome courſe that your petitioner may have the ſaid goods reſtored to him again, or elſe ſatisfaction in money, according to the true value of them; or elſe that this committee will be pleaſed to certify the right honourable the committee of lords and commons of ſequeſtrations the cauſe wherefore the ſaid goods were taken from your petitioner; that if it be for any offence pretended to be committed by your petitioner, he may have liberty to clear himſelf, and have ſatisfaction according to the juſtice of his cauſe. And your petitioner will pray, &c." [8]

P. 874. At Haydon in Eſſex is an epitaph to the laſt male deſcendant of the Halfords.

P. 876. l. 3. from bottom, read "South Witham."

P. 884. A reſpectable friend ſays, "I knew Mr. Greenaway well. He was a very ſerious, ſtudious man: but it does not place him in a very favourable light, to ſay that he maintained the contrary opinion to Houbigant, Lowth, and Kennicott. I ſhould think it probable that he never ſaw a Hebrew MS. in his life: how then was he capable of contradicting men of great learning, who were particularly converſant in the ſubject? He himſelf makes no ſcruple to advance a very violent correction of a paſſage in Horace's Odes without the authority of any MS. He muſt therefore think very differently of the integrity of the Sacred Scripture and its cauſe; and thoſe of Profane writers. Preface, iii. lxxv. lxxviii. Eccleſiaſtes. As his name does not appear among the graduates of Oxford, I am at a loſs to know how he got the degree of A. M. at Cambridge in 1772. His Eccleſiaſtes, in three parts, is a ſingular inſtance of irregular printing, paging, and price; Part I. 1781; being only 1*d.*; Part II. 1783, 3*d.*; and Part III. 1791, 5*s.*"

P. 887. l. 4. from bott. r. "Great Bowden."

Ibid. a. l. 39. r. "Sept. 1."

P. 888. The wife of the ſecond Bartholomew Tate was "Arundel, daughter of Henry Stratford." His ſiſter Catharine married "Charles Hedg*es*."

Ibid. John-Cave Browne, eſq. of Stretton en le Fields, died Oct. 2, 1799, in his his 69th year.

Ibid. "Biſby" ſhould be "Riſby."

P. 890. b. l. 47. read "Mr. Birtchnell, maſon."

P. 895. a. l. 14, 15. for "Coſmas Nevill, eſq." read "Joſeph Bentley."

---

[1] Chron. Tho. de Rudberne; Leland, tom. I. p. 391.

[2] Leland, tom. I. p. 245. Chronicon Monaſterii Sancti Edmundi.

[3] Leland's Itinerary, in Suffolk.

[4] Leland, tom. III. p. 310.

[5] Chron. Tho. de Rudburne; Leland, tom. I. p. 592.

[6] Giraldi Cambrenſis Itinerarium Walliæ, p. 66; edit. G. Powel 1385.

[7] Cart. 3 Edw. III. n. 44.

[8] From the MS. of Dr. Rawlinſon, in the Bodleian Library, cited in p. 536.

ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS IN EAST GOSCOTE HUNDRED.

P. 10. l. 34. Read, "From the Vernons, the manor of Allexton came to the Burlington family, and ultimately to lady Jane Boyle, who deviſed it to a dependant; from whom it was purchaſed by Knight and Wilſon; and by them in 1711 ſold to William Wilſon, eſq. of Keythorpe, who had previouſly a conſiderable eſtate there, which had deſcended to him from his anceſtors. The late Mr. Wilſon bequeathed to the poor a legacy of £10; and his annual gift of £2. is continued by the preſent owner of the lordſhip.

P. 16. Mr. Smith's daughter was married to ſir Philip Hales, who ſold Asfordby to Mr. Burnaby.

P. 29. In October 1644, on lord Carrington being created an Engliſh peer, ſir Henry St. George, Garter, deviſed for his ſupporters two panthers guardant proper; but, ſir Henry dying at Oxford Nov. 4, 1644, his ſucceſſor deviſed other ſupporters for the lord Carington, which his lordſhip uſed. Francis the ſecond lord Carington fixed his reſidence for ſome time at Ledwell in Oxfordſhire. His next brother, Caryll Smith, married a daughter of Mr. Turvile of Aſton; and his ſiſter Margaret was married to ſir Francis Hungate, of Saxton, in Yorkſhire, knight; who was created a baronet by king Charles I. Aug. 15, 1642.

P. 30. The following authentic inſtrument will illuſtrate the charitable foundation at Aſhby Folvile:

"31 Jan. 1673. By indenture; Francis lord Carington of the one part; Henry marquis of Dorcheſter, James earl of Northampton, Theophilus earl of Huntingdon, George lord viſcount Halifax, ſir Francis Hungate, bart. ſir Edward Ayſcough, knt. Charles Pelham, Richard Walmſley, John Caryll, Richard Caryll, Charles Carington, and John de la Fontaine, eſqrs. Edmund Smith, Thomas Putchin, John Knight, and Thomas More, gentlemen, of the other part; the ſaid Francis lord Carington conveyed to the marquis of Dorcheſter, &c. the parſonage-houſe, or almſhouſe, in Aſhby Folvile, in the county of Leiceſter; the meſſuage, lands, tenements, meadows, paſtures, cloſes, and grounds, aftermentioned in North Kelſey, co. Lincoln; viz. a meſſuage, cottage, or tenement, in Perlin, and four acres of meadow in Turfcar, in poſſeſſion of Bryan Dent; the Hill-cloſe, containing 28 acres, in poſſeſſion of Simon Pennell; a cloſe called Old Sadney, containing 50 acres, New Sadney containing 30 acres, in poſſeſſion of Simon Pennell and Robert Hickabottom; a cloſe called Netherſet-copp, containing 26 acres, in poſſeſſion of Simon Pennell; 4 acres of meadow in Middledike; one cloſe containing 16 acres, and one called Snape, containing 12 acres, in poſſeſſion of Anne Fawding, widow; to hold to the ſaid marquis, &c. their heirs and aſſigns, at the yearly rent of 5*s.* if lawfully demanded, ſubject to the truſts in the ſchedule hereunto annexed: viz. That ſeven poor aged people, that have been inhabitants within the pariſhes of Aſhby Folvile aforeſaid, Wavens Wotton, co. Warwick, and North Kelſey aforeſaid (or elſewhere, if there be not fit perſons in the ſaid pariſhes), whereof the greater part to be men, the reſt women of good fame, ſingle of the age of 50 years and upwards, and ſuch as have been honeſt ſervants or labourers (except they be lame, or have ſome diſeaſe or infirmity hopeleſs to be cured, then their age or youth to be no impediment). That the ſaid truſtees ſhall authorize ſuch perſon, or perſons, as lord Carington and his heirs ſhall nominate, or, in default of ſuch nomination, the churchwardens of the town of Aſhby Folvile for the time being, to let and ſet the premiſſes at the beſt rent, and collect the ſame yearly, and diſtribute the ſame as after appointed. That the ſaid lord Carington and his heirs be allowed the nomination of all the ſaid ſeven poor; and that the houſe be for their dwelling for ever. That, in caſe of the marriage, death, ill behaviour, or non-reſidence, of any of the ſaid ſeven poor people, lord Carington and his heirs, with conſent of one or more of the truſtees, to put other in their places. That the perſons empowered to receive the rents of the premiſſes yearly pay to every one of the ſaid ſeven poor people, at Pentecoſt and St. Andrew's day, £5. apiece; and, on payment thereof, and accounting for and paying the reſt to lord Carington and his heirs, and one of the truſtees, the receiver, or receivers, to be allowed 20*s.* for their pains and expences. That the receivers, yearly, out of the ſaid reſidue, pay to each of the ſaid ſeven poor people, at Pentecoſt, 6*s.* 8*d.* towards their fire; and, on St. Andrew's day, 13*s.* 4*d.* apiece for a black or ruſſet frize cloth gown, with a red croſs on the right breaſt. That the ſaid poor people be aiding and aſſiſting to one another in caſe of ſickneſs or other inability. Lord Carington and his heirs to appoint one of the moſt able to take care of the reſt; and, in caſe of his refuſal to do ſo, that to be a ſufficient reaſon to remove ſuch perſon from the ſociety. That each of the ſaid poor people ſhall bring with them a good and convenient bed, bolſter, with coverlets, blankets, and two pair of ſheets, and other neceſſaries for their lodgings; alſo a braſs pot or kettle, two pewter diſhes or platters, one pail, one drinking pot or jug, and ſuch implements as ſhall be fit for their uſes; and each of the ſaid poor people, having had the benefit of this endowment for three years, ſhall, upon requeſt of lord Carington, or his heirs, or any of the ſaid truſtees, give ſufficient ſecurity to the ſaid truſtees to leave the ſaid houſehold ſtuff, with the third part of the goods or money he or ſhe ſhall be worth at their death, to be employed in the loſs, &c. which ſhall happen in the ſaid houſehold ſtuff uſed in the ſaid houſe for maintaining the ſaid ſeven perſons (if needful), or ſold towards the repairing the ſaid houſe, under the penalty of forfeiting the benefit of the ſaid houſe on refuſal, and another to be elected, as if they were dead. That, out of the reſidue of the ſaid rents, which amount to £50. a year or upwards above £43. hereby appropriated, ſhall be raiſed £10. to lord Carington and his heirs, to be kept by them and any one of the ſaid truſtees under lock and key, for the neceſſary uſes of the ſaid almſhouſe. After ſuch ſtock ſo raiſed, the overplus to be diſpoſed of by lord Carington and his heirs, by conſent of one or more of the ſaid truſtees, towards enlarging of the ſaid almſhouſe, or repairing the highways, or any other charitable acts the ſaid lord Carington and his heirs, or any two of the ſaid truſtees, ſhall think fit; the ſaid ſtock of £10. being in the firſt place kept for the intent aforeſaid. That, when the number of the ſaid truſtees ſhall be reduced to five, ſuch five ſurviving truſtees ſhall convey the premiſſes to ſuch perſons as they think fit; which truſtees ſhall make a re-conveyance to the ſaid ſurviving truſtees, and to as many noblemen, knights, and gentlemen, dwelling near the ſaid pariſh of Aſhby Folvile, as the ſaid five ſurvivors ſhall think fit, and to their heirs, to the ſame uſes herein contained. That, in caſe of failure of performing theſe truſts, the ſaid lord Carington and his heirs, with the aſſiſtance of the inhabitants of Aſhby and Wotton aforeſaid, or any of them, may apply to the lord chancellor or lord keeper for redreſs thereof; ſuch inhabitants, for their encouragement to have their charges out of the ſurplus, and that rather with the moſt than the leaſt. That the majority of truſtees, with conſent of lord Carington and his heirs, may make new ſtatutes, ſo as the ſame may not be repugnant to thoſe herein contained.—By inſtrument of the ſame date, lord Carington declares, that, if his heir be a female, the powers and privileges within-mentioned ſhall be in the perſon who ſhall have the poſſeſſion and inheritance of the manor of Aſhby Folvile, and not in ſuch heir female."

P. 31. Mr. Burton adds, "In this church is an antient and fair monument of one of the Folviles in armour, on his breaſt Folvile's coat; and another of Ralph Woodford, eſq. not high raiſed from the ground, with the coat and creſt upon the wall. There are alſo one or two more, undefaced."

P. 35. In the Teſta de Nevill, about 1240, two fees are noticed in Eſſeby Folevill, held by Euſtace de Folevile of Iſabella de Brus; and two fees in Heſſeby and Newbold, held by William de Folevile were taxed at two marks.—In the terrier referred to under Barkby, p. 45, Bareſby fills one page.

The property of the abbot and convent of St. Mary de Pratis at Leiceſter in this lordſhip is thus deſcribed:

"Habemus in Newbold, ex dono Willi de Folvillâ, cum corpore ſuo, molendinum ſuum ibidem, cum totâ ſequelâ domorum ejuſdem ville ad ipſum pertinentium; & unum holmum adjacentem, adjacent' prefato molendino; & unum toftum quod Galfridus Wyder tenuit.

Habemus, de dono Willi de Folevill, & confirmatione ejuſdem, molendinum de Newbold, cum liberâ ſemitâ ad homines & equos ad predictum molendinum venientes per pratum ſuum, cum emendatione rationabili ſtagni ejuſdem molendini, & cum uno tofto in villâ, cum communiâ rationabili in villâ & extra, que pater ſuus nobis dedit cum corpore ſuo.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Ricardi filii Reginaldi de Gadſby, unam placeam prati in prato de Newbold, quam quondam ipſe tenuit de nobis, & jacet ad ſtagnum molendini. Wills Monke tenet ibi unum toftum, unum holmum, & unum hoke, & unam placeam prati in prato de Newbold; & reddit xiiii đ.

Mem', quòd molendinum aquaticum de Newbold reddit xiis̄. nobis anno Dñi m°ccciı°; &, anno Dñi m°cclix°, xxxs̄. ſicut patet in Rentalibus antiquis [1]."

In 1346, John de Folvile (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 30*s.* for three parts of a knight's fee in Aſhby Folvile and Newbold, parcel of the fees of Cheſter and Huntingdon [2].—In 1607, George Smith, eſq. died ſeiſed of certain lands in Newbold Folvile [3].

P. 60. The act for incloſing Barrow paſſed in "1760."

P. 73. In a letter from Mr. William Beridge, about 1626, he ſtates that he was then the miniſter of Barrow, and his father the patron; and that the advowſon of the vicarage had been ſold by ſir William Herrick to Robert Ruſtat, who re-ſold it to Mr. Beridge."

P. 76. l. 42. r. "paved with Swithland ſlates.

P. 91. —See before, in pp. *5, 6, an inventory of all the goods, plate, jewels, and ornaments, in the chapels of Mountſorell, Quorndon, and Woodhouſe, in 1552.—The ſchool at Mountſorell was founded by the father of the late ſir John Danvers, as appears from the following inſcription: "This Engliſh ſchool, for poor boys out of Mountſorell and Swithland, given by Joſeph Danvers, eſq. 1742."

P. 102. In the beginning of April 1800, from the ill ſtate of the younger Mr. Meynell's health, it was thought adviſeable to diſpoſe of Quorndon hall; which was accordingly ſold, with about 96 acres of land, including the pleaſure-ground, for £16,000. to William Molyneux earl of Sefton and viſcount Molyneux, who has alſo bought the foxhounds and kennels of the elder Mr. Meynell. This veteran ſportſman, however, the oldeſt foxhunter in the kingdom, who has reſided at Quorndon hall more than 47 years [4], has purchaſed a ſmall houſe belonging to his huntſman, and is going to build ſome rooms to it, at the back of the kennels, for an occaſional reſidence during the hunting ſeaſon [5].—I am ſorry to add that the removal of the younger Mr. Meynell to London was of no avail: he died May 17, 1800 [6].

Ibid. col. 2. l. 44. for "1774," r. "1776."

Ibid. note 5. for Mr. Whinfield, r. Mr. Wingfield.

P. 108. Mr. Prior ſucceeded Mr. Green, as curate of Quorndon and Woodhouſe, in 1758; and continued till 1763.—The Rev. John Boyer is B. A. of Trinity college, Cambridge.

P. 109. Add theſe dates from the Quorn Regiſter:

Mrs. Sarah Hyde, widow, buried Feb. 26, 1752.

Mary, daughter of John Hyde, bapt. July 5, 1752.

Savile-John Hyde, ſon of John and Mary Hyde, baptized Dec. 14, 1755.

Edward, another ſon, baptized Feb. 7, 1756; died young.

Thomas, ſon of John Hyde, bapt. Dec. 21, 1756.

Sarah, dau. of John Hyde, eſq. bapt. Sept. 16, 1760; buried July 24, 1761.

William, ſon of John Hyde, eſq. bapt. Oct. 30, 1761.

Mr. Charles Stevens buried May 17, 1762.

Charlotte, daughter of Robert Stevens, buried June 30, 1763.

George, ſon of John Hyde, eſq. bapt. Nov. 3, 1766.

Ann, daughter of Mary and John Hyde, eſq. baptized April 10, 1768; died Sept. 17, 1787.

Clarendon, ſon of John and Mary Hyde, baptized Jan. 17, 1771; died Sept. 19, 1797.

Sarah, daughter of John Hyde, eſq. and Mary his wife, baptized Aug. 7, 1772.

Savilla, another daughter, baptized Feb. 15, 1774.

Elizabeth, another daughter, March 17, 1775.

Mary wife of John Hyde, eſq. buried Sept. 8, 1787.

John Hyde, eſq. died Jan. 31, 1789.

Mary-Ann Hyde, daughter of Savile-John Hyde, eſq. and Suſanna-Abigail his wife, bapt. Apr. 2, 1793.

John-Savile Hyde, their ſon, bapt. Aug. 25, 1796.

P. 112. Mr. Rawlins, by leaſe and releaſe, Auguſt 11 and 12, 1691, conveyed to Edward Whitworth and William Patrick, and their heirs, one meſſuage, two gardens, three cloſes of paſture, called The Pingle, The Barncloſe, and The Claypiece; and ſix cloſes of meadow and paſture ground, called The Vicardipards, all lying in Woodhouſe; to hold to the uſe of William Rawlins junior, Chriſtopher Smalley, and Thomas Chapman, their heirs and aſſigns for ever, upon the truſts ſpecified in the inſcription over the door of the ſchool.

P. 113. The houſe in Pater-noſter Row is thus deſcribed in Mr. Rawlins's will: "One meſſuage, or tenement, with the appurtenances, ſituate and being in the pariſh of St. Michael in the Quern, London, in a certain ſtreet or place there, called Pater-noſter-Row, on the North ſide of the ſaid ſtreet, late built and erected upon a toft or parcel of ground whereon, before the late dreadful fire which happened in London, ſtood a meſſuage, or tenement, ſometimes divided into two tenements, and, at the time of the ſaid fire, being then in the tenure or occupation of William Bloreblock and Francis Maidſtone; the which ſaid new-built meſſuage, or tenement, is now held by the aſſignee or aſſignees of the ſaid William Bloreblock and Francis Maidſtone for the reſidue of the term of 61 years coming, from the Nativity of St. John the Baptiſt, which was in the year of our Lord 1669, at and under the yearly rent of twenty pounds."

The legacy to Mountſorell meeting is thus expreſſed: "The ſum of 2*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* a year, for ever, unto ſuch poor old people as ſhall be ſettled in a religious exerciſe in Mr. Matthew's meeting-houſe in Mountſorell, in the ſaid county of Leiceſter. And I do deſire my executors hereafter named ſhall pay the ſaid ſum of 2*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* to Mr. Matthews yearly, if then living, to be diſtributed by him to ſuch of the ſaid poor people which ſhall moſt want; and, after his deceaſe, my will is, that my ſaid executors ſhall diſtribute the ſaid ſum of 2*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* to the ſaid poor."

The highways towards the repair of which he left 20*s.* a year are, "the foot and cart way leading from the ſchool of Woodhouſe aforeſaid to the end of Woodhouſe town; and the overplus thereof, when it ſhall be ſufficiently repaired, to be yearly laid out and expended in the repairing the foot and cart way in Woodhouſe Eaves, as long as there ſhall be occaſion; and, after the ſame ſhall be ſufficiently repaired, that then the ſaid yearly ſum to be expended in the repairing and amending of the Foreſt lane, leading from the gate up to the church."

---

[1] Charyte's Rentale, fol. cxiii.

[2] Rot. Aux. 20 Edw. III.

[3] Eſch. 16 Jan. 5 Jac. I.

[4] He kept his hounds, and reſided at the hall, from Lady-day 1753; ſome years before he purchaſed the eſtate.

[5] All the houſes in Quorn are at this time (May 1800) taken by people of the firſt diſtinction. A ſmall houſe, with only a garden and ſtables, is let to Lord Foley and Sir Stephen Glyn for 100 guineas a year; another ſmall houſe to Sir Robert Lawley, bart. at the ſame rent; and another is taken by Lord Craven. Every houſe in the neighbourhood alſo that can be had is taken; and it is ſuppoſed that, next winter, it will be the largeſt hunt that has ever been known at Quorndon; it being now the faſhion for all the young men to join in the hunt.

[6] See Gent. Mag. vol. LXX. p. 493.

He gave ſmall legacies to Thomas Hartopp, Thomas Chapman, Robert Tarlton, William Tarlton, couſin Elizabeth Morell, couſin Southwell's four children, Mr. Smalley of Woodhouſe, Abraham Lockwood of Barrow, Mr. Wyld of Woodhouſe, couſin Mary Langton, and couſin Rebecca Ebſall; to Thomas Chapman all his apparel, books, and papers; and to Mr. Boley, the ſchoolmaſter of Woodhouſe, the uſe of one oval table, a leathern carpet, a writing-deſk, and of one braſs candleſtick, while he dwells at the ſaid ſchool-houſe; and directs, that they ſhall be kept at the ſaid ſchool-houſe, for the benefit of the ſucceeding ſchool-maſters, during their abode there."

P. 117. Mrs. Mary Heanes (who died at Woodhouſe, unmarried, in her 86th year, Dec. 18, 1794, in the old manſion in which Lady Howe was born, a view of which is given in Plate XXIV.) was daughter of Edward Heanes[1], eſq.; who by Mary his wife, daughter of Skinner Ryther, eſq. of Bingham, became heir at law to a conſiderable property; with part of which he purchaſed the eſtate of Chiverton Hartopp, eſq. at Woodhouſe, and came to live there. He had two ſons and two daughters; and died July 15, 1749, aged 74; and his wife a few years after him. The ſons were, Edward, who died in November 1789, aged 72; and Thomas, who died January 10, 1779, aged 59. The daughters were, Elizabeth, who died Nov. 12, 1785, aged 69; and Mary, the very early part of whoſe life was ſpent in the family of old lady Howe, the late Earl's grandmother; which family always ſhewed her much reſpect, and ſome of them have condeſcended to viſit her at Woodhouſe, where ſhe reſided for 50 years. She was an early riſer, being always up the firſt in the village, and generally in bed by nine at night. Though of ſo advanced an age, ſhe retained all her faculties, eye-ſight, and hearing, quite perfect; and enjoyed good health till within a few years of her death, when ſhe was unable to leave her houſe. She was of a moſt happy cheerful diſpoſition, a ſtrict obſerver of her word; whatever ſhe promiſed was ſure to be performed to the greateſt nicety; kind and forbearing to her tenants, conſiderably to her own loſs and diſadvantage; charitable to the poor; a good miſtreſs, as ſhe was ſcarcely ever known to change her ſervants, one of them having lived in her ſervice near 40 years. In her houſe ſhe kept up the old Engliſh hoſpitality, particularly at Chriſtmas time, when ſhe was happy to ſee her friends and neighbours. Such is the true character of Mrs. Mary Heanes, warm from the heart of one who knew her virtues; and that of both her brothers and her ſiſters was equally eſtimable. They all paſſed a life of retirement in the greateſt harmony, and were all of the ſame turn of mind; neither of them ever ſleeping a ſingle night out of their home, or ever known, except from illneſs, to be abſent from public worſhip on a Sunday (of which they were ſtrict obſervers) during a great number of years. All the four died unmarried, and were buried in Woodhouſe chapel. As laſt ſurvivor, Mrs. Heanes became poſſeſſed of all the property of the family, which was conſiderable; and has left the whole of it, except a few legacies, to her next of kin, a diſtant relation.

P. 118. l. 42. for "Jan. 26," r. "Jan. 16."

Ibid. The Viſitation of 1619 notices theſe arms of Stokes of Woodhouſe: Quarterly, 1. and 4. Ermine, three bars humette Sable, on each three bay leaves Or, Stokes; 2. and 3. Or, a lion rampant, double queué Gules, Malory. Creſt, a demi-lion double queué; Plate LXX. fig. 26.

P. 133. Charnwood Foreſt makes a fine background to many proſpects from places South of it, and is perhaps the firſt of that kind which occurs to travellers in going Northward. Riding towards Derby, it makes a handſome appearance on the left hand; but it has been obſerved, that probably it does not contain a ſtick big enough to make a quarter-ſtaff. The caſe is the ſame in Sherwood and other foreſts.

P. 143. Leland, in another part of his Itinerary[2], thus again notices the Beaumonts: "Ther was ſyns the Bellemontes erles of Warwick a Baron of great landes of that name, and the laſt of them in king Henry VII. time was a man of ſimple witte. His wiſe was after marridd to the Erle of Oxforde. The chiefeſt houſe of the Lord Beaumonte, as I lerned, was at Beaumanner yn Leyrceſtre or Lincolnſhire. The Duke of Northfolk hath fair landes that longed to this Beaumont in Lincolnſhire. This Beaumont had faire poſſeſſion in the North Cunterey. Syr Nicholas Carr had of the landes of this Beaumont that the old countes of Oxford had yn jointure."

P. 145. Sir Nicholas Throgmorton died at Leiceſter houſe, in the pariſh of St. Clement Danes, Feb. 12, 1570; and was buried in Chriſtchurch near Aldgate. By his lady, Anne daughter of ſir Nicholas Carew, knt. he had ſix ſons and one daughter[3].

P. 150. In the reigns of Elizabeth and James, the Engliſh Ambaſſadors at the Grand Seignor's court were ſtyled "Agents for the London Company of Merchants;" by whom they were elected, and not appointed by the Sovereign[4].

P. 151. Among the New-year's Gifts preſented to king James in 1605-6, is, by ſir William Herrick, a ring with a ſquare amathyſt; and to him, in return, was given by the king, in gilt plate, 20¾ oz.

Sir Anthony Weldon[5], ſpeaking of ſir Thomas Monſon's impriſonment on account of Overbury's murder in 1613, ſays, "Cook's malice was ſuch againſt him, as, though it rained extremely, and Monſon not well, he made him go afoot from the Guildhall to the Tower; which almoſt coſt him his life. Here lay he a cloſe priſoner above three months, the end to get a Recorder's place (that Cranfield deſired); every man, thinking him in ſome treaſon, would not lend him money; and, if ſo much money had not been paid by ſuch a time, his place had been forfeited. And in this let me commend the part of a true friend in Sir Humphrey May; who, at 24 hours' notice, made his brother Herick take up £2000. and pay it, to ſave his office, without ſo much as any ſecurity from ſir Thomas Monſon (for he was cloſe priſoner), or from any friend of his,"&c.

P. 152, notes, l. 4. After "Scotland," add, "Charles the laſt viſcount Irwine was ſon of Charles, brother of George the eighth viſcount. He married, Aug. 2, 1758, Frances[6] daughter of Samuel Shepheard, eſq. of Exning, Suffolk; ſucceeded to the title in 1763; and died June 19, 1768."

P. 156. Roger Heyrick was elected to Chriſtchurch, 1624, from the king's ſchool at Weſtminſter.

P. 161. By a deed dated 1629, ſir William Herrick conveys to his third ſon, Richard Herrick, on his marriage with Helena Corbet, all his tithes of Woodhouſe and Beaumanor, a meſſuage in Woodhouſe, three cloſes called Turvey-leys, and two other cloſes called Turvey-leys, all in Woodhouſe; all the tithes, both great and ſmall, in Mountſorell; and all the ſite of the rectory meſſuage, or farm-houſe, in Barrow, late in the poſſeſſion of Theophilus Cave; alſo two cottages in Barrow aforeſaid, held by copy of court-roll of Beaumanor, and the arable land to the ſaid meſſuage belonging; and alſo a meſſuage in Quorn, and common of paſture thereto belonging. —Mr. Thomas Herrick, ſon of the Warden by Helena his wife, was living in 1703; and by him a part of the above property was alienated.

P. 173. At an inquiſition taken May 13, 1710, on a commiſſion of charitable uſes, the jury found that there were divers lands, tenements, and hereditaments, in Belgrave, given, limited, aſſigned, and ſet out, to and for the uſe and benefit of the poor of Belgrave aforeſaid; viz. one plot called The Poors' Plot, which, upon the incloſure, was agreed to be laid and ſet out for a paſture; and alſo one cottage in Belgrave, in the poſſeſſion of Robert Yates; and a cloſe, containing nine acres, called The Town cloſe, in the tenure of the ſaid Yates; and another cloſe, called Mark's Yard, containing half an acre, in the tenure of the ſaid

---

[1] See his epitaph, p. 117; and the arms, corrected, p. *169.

[2] Vol. V. p. 71.

[3] Funeral Certificates in the College of Arms, I. 5. p. 186.

[4] Harl. MSS. 1580. p. 392.

[5] Court of King James, 1650, p. 113.

[6] There is a good portrait of this lady, by ſir Joſhua Reynolds, in the drawing-room at Quorndon hall.

Yates; and another antient cottage and homestead in Belgrave, in tenure of Mary Dawson; and another close in Belgrave, containing nine acres and a half, in the tenure of the said Dawson; and another close, called The Bull Piece, containing two acres, in the tenure of the said Dawson: All which said last-mentioned premiſes had been theretofore granted and conveyed to Daniel Taylor, Henry Colborn, Charles Byerly, John Thiſtlewaite, Thomas Johnſon, Thomas Tompſon, and William Brewerne, and their heirs, in truſt, for the uſe and benefit of the town of Belgrave aforeſaid; viz. part thereof to ſuch uſes as the antient townlands there had or ought to have been employed, and 11 acres reſidue thereof, as the truſtees laſt-mentioned and their heirs ſhould think fit; and that the rents and profits thereof had been theretofore paid and employed for the uſe and benefit of the town and poor of Belgrave aforeſaid; and that the ſaid Daniel Taylor, Henry Colborn, Charles Byerly, John Thiſtlewaite, Thomas Johnſon, Thomas Tompſon, and William Brewerne, were the laſt truſtees and feoffees in truſt of and for the ſaid charities, and were all long ſince dead; and that the ſaid Charles Byerly was the ſurviver of them; and that Charles Byerly, then of Belgrave, eſq. was then his ſon and heir.

The commiſſioners, at a meeting held at the borough of Leiceſter, reciting the above inquiſition, and the decree for confirming the incloſure of Belgrave beforementioned, order and decree that Charles Byerly, then of Belgrave, ſon and heir of Charles Byerly, before mentioned to be one of the truſtees of the ſaid charity, ſhould within three weeks make a new feoffment of the ſaid cottages, lands, and premiſſes, unto ſir George Beaumont, ſir Edward Wigley, Walter Ruding, James Beaumont, Thomas Pochin, John-Beaumont Byerly, Guſtavus Hawes, Edmund Cradock, John Smith, John Ward, William Orton, John Clark, Francis Holbech, John Haſlock, and John Kinnes, their heirs and aſſigns for ever, in truſt, to and for ſuch uſes, intents, and purpoſes, as the ſaid charitable lands and tenements in Belgrave are ſet apart for, in, and by, the ſaid decree of chancery beforementioned.

Feb. 4, 1710-11. Charles Byerly, in obedience to the commiſſioners' decree, grants and conveys to Simon Barwell and Zaccheus Duckett, their heirs and aſſigns for ever, the ſaid lands and tenements mentioned in the decree; to hold to the ſaid Simon Barwell and Zaccheus Duckett, their heirs and aſſigns, to the only uſe and behoof of the ſaid ſir George Beaumont, John Smith, Thomas Pochin, Charles Byerly, Walter Ruding, James Beaumont, John-Beaumont Byerly, Guſtavus Hawes, Edmund Cradock, John Ward, William Orton, Francis Holbech, John Clark, John Kinnes, and John Haſlock, their heirs and aſſigns for ever; in truſt, nevertheleſs, to and for ſuch uſes, intents, and purpoſes, as the ſaid cottages, cloſes, and premiſes, are ſet apart for in and by the articles made for the incloſure of the lordſhip of Belgrave, and the decree of the high court of chancery obtained for confirming the ſame, and under and ſubject to ſuch directions and appointments as in and by the ſaid order or decree before mentioned to be made at the borough of Leiceſter, as aforeſaid, are mentioned; and ſubject alſo to ſuch other truſts, uſes, orders, and decrees, as the ſaid granted premiſſes were ſubject unto before the execution of theſe preſents[1].

P. 187. William Pepper of Thurmaſton married Maria daughter of William Palmer. Some of the family yet remain in that village.

P. 209, note 3, r. "calling Samuel three times."

P. 218. Add to the epitaphs at Dennington:

1. On a graveſtone in the chancel:

"Hic jacet Elizabetha uxor ſecunda Edwardi Barker, de Bedingfield, in com. Suff. ac filia ſecunda Roberti Wright, paſtoris hujus eccleſiæ; quæ obiit circiter finem menſis
Januarii, anno Domini 1613, & ætatis ſuæ 27."

2. Againſt the North wall:

"In memoriam
Reverendi Gulielmi Fulke, Sacræ Theologiæ
Doctoris, Aulæ Pemb. in Cantabrigiâ Præfecti, hujus eccleſiæ Dinningtonienſis paſtoris;
ac in teſtimonium amoris ſui perpetui
erga eum, hoc qualecunque poſuit Robertus Wright, Sacræ quoque Theologiæ Profeſſor, & nunc ejuſdem eccleſiæ paſtor. Corpus illius terræ traditum fuit 28° die Auguſti, 1589;
& in hoc ſacello jacet, reſurrectionem expectans per adventum Chriſti.
If deepeſt Learning, with a zealous love
To Heaven, and Truth could privileges prove
To keep back Death; no hand had written, Here
Lyes Rev'rend Fulke, till Chriſt in clouds appear.
His works will ſhew him more free from all error;
Rome's foe, Truth's champion, and the Rhemiſts' terror.
Heureux celuy qu'apres un long travaill,
S'eſt aſſeure de ſon repos au ciell."

On the North ſide of the chancel at Cranham:

1. "Here lieth interred the body of Nathan Wright[2], eſq. lord of the manor of Cranham, and patron of this church; who, in the enjoyment of many of God's bleſſings, lived to the age of 66 years and 2 days; and, in full aſſurance of a happy reſurrection, died 11 March, 1657, leaving behind him his dear and loving wife and his diſconſolate widow Anne, daughter of Giles Heming, of the county of Eſſex, eſq.; as alſo one ſon, Benjamin Wright; and four daughters." Fleming

2. "Here lieth the body of Suſanna Drake, wife of Francis Drake, eſq. and formerly wife of Charles Pitts, eſq. one of the daughters of Nathan Wright, of Cranham hall, eſq. and Anne his wife. Ob. 15 July, 1664."

P. 237. A moiety of the rectory of South Croxton was leaſed by the Crown, in 1579, to Ralph Staverton, for 30 years, at a rent of 53*s.* 4*d.*

P. 242. Dalby Magna, Burton Lazars, and other lands, tenements, &c. parcel of the manor of Burton Lazars, were leaſed by the Crown, in 1588, for 21 years, to George Gower, at a rent of 6*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.*

P. 244, note 8. Mr. Burton preſerves this extract from Gregory of Toulouſe, a celebrated civilian, (who publiſhed "Syntagma Juris univerſi," fol.; and "De Republicâ," 8vo. He died 1597): "Creſcente numero peregrinorum juxta templum Hieroſolymitanum, xenodochium ædificatur D. Johannis, quo exciperentur peregrini quos cœnobia capere non poſſunt. Hujus ergo miniſterio quoque viri pii nobiles ſe devoverunt, qui & peregrinos tutarentur, & à latronum ſive Agarenorum incurſu defenderent. Horum profeſſio eſt votum ſolenne paupertatis, abdicationis propriorum, caſtitatis, & obedientiæ. Proindè, propter primum votum nihil proprii habent, vel habere debent; ſed accipiunt annonam quamdiù vivunt, vel præceptorias quas (Commanderies vocant) adminiſtrent, quamdiù eas poſſident, & optione mutant, vel ex magiſtri licentiâ permutent; reddituri, morientes, quæ apud eos reperiuntur, ſocietati."

P. 246. b. l. 14. read "bailiff of Eagle."

P. 248. Preceptory of Dalby[3].

Manor of Dalby. Rents of aſſize,	£. 1	13	4
Rent of cuſtomary tenants there,	10	16	4
Rents of tenants at will, —	3	2	0
Meſſuage, &c. in which Richard Robinſon dwells, — —	2	2	0
Cuſtomary works, — —	0	3	0
Demeſne lands, — —	28	0	0
Small rents in divers towns, —	6	17	6½
Rents of aſſize in Stoneſby, —	1	13	3
Rents of cuſtomary tenants there,	6	15	10
Rents of tenants at will there,	1	0	8
Farm of the manor there, —	2	6	8
Rents in Melton Mobury, —	9	13	5

---

[1] From original papers, communicated by the Rev. Henry Woodcock, vicar of Barkby.

[2] His grandſon's firſt wife was Anne, daughter of John Meyrick, of London, merchant; the ſecond, Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Bragge, of Hatfield Peverell, eſq. widow of William Brown of Norwich; 3. Elizabeth, daughter of John Bowater, of Warwickſhire; 4. Abigail, daughter of Samuel Tryſt, of Culworth; who was afterwards re-married to Herbert Tryſt, eſq. Morant's Essex i. 305

[3] From the Miniſters or Bailiffs Accounts in the Augmentation Office, 34 Hen. VIII.

Small rents in Twyford and other towns,	11	13	3½
Rent in Stocking near Beamond-Leys 2*s.* from the abbot of Leiceſter.	extinguiſhed.
Rent in Sewſtern 2*s.* from the prior of Kirkby Beler.
Perquiſites of courts, —	4	1	4
Arrears, — — —	12	14	6
Sum total, with the arrears,	102	13	2

P. 253. The manor of Dalbie in the Woulde, and the lordſhip of Nether Broughton, with the appurtenances, the property of the duke of Buckingham (who had been declared a traitor by the then ruling powers), were conveyed to Oliver Cromwell, Lord General, March 24, 1651, under an act of parliament, for the nominal conſideration of 5*s.*[1]

P. 260. Certain lands and tenements in Friſby, leaſed in ſeparate parcels at the rent of 8*l.* 9*s.* were granted in 1577 for 21 years to George Kirkeham, who at the ſame time had a grant of a rent of 8*s.* from it of the manor of Whitwick; and three meſſuages, parcel of the manor, let by three different leaſes for 73*s.* 4*d.* in the whole, were granted in 1596 to John Wells.

Nicholas Sharpe, gent. ſeiſed in fee of the manor of Friſby, made his will and teſtament in writing, bearing date Dec. 31, 1612; and thereby (inter alia) deviſeth his manor of Friſby to his kinſmen Robert Sharpe and David Sharpe for life; and then deviſeth in hæc verba: "I give and deviſe my manor of Friſby, &c. to the eldeſt ſon of the body of the ſaid David lawfully begotten which ſhall be living at the time of the deceaſe of the longer liver of the ſaid Robert and David, for the term of the life of the ſame eldeſt ſon of the ſaid David; and after his deceaſe, and for want of ſuch, to the heirs males of the body of the ſaid David lawfully begotten; and for want of ſuch iſſue, and when ſuch iſſue ſhall fail, to the heirs male of the body of the ſaid eldeſt ſon of the ſaid David (which ſhall be living at the time of the deceaſe of the longer liver of the ſaid Robert and David) lawfully begotten; and for want of ſuch iſſue, and when ſuch iſſue ſhall fail, to the ſecond ſon of the ſaid Robert which he ſhall beget on the body of Anne his wife, which ſecond ſon ſhall be living at the time of the failure of the heirs males of the body of the ſaid eldeſt ſon of the ſaid David lawfully begotten; and for want of ſuch ſecond ſon then being, to the heirs male lawfully begotten of the body of the ſecond ſon of the ſaid Robert which he ſhall beget on the body of the ſaid Anne; with other remainders."

On this will the following caſe was ſtated to Mr. Oneby.

David, eldeſt ſon of Robert, died without iſſue.

William, ſecond ſon of Robert, was not born, nor in rerum naturâ, at the time of David's death.

Qu. Whether William, not being born at the time of David's death without iſſue, can, by the words of the will, take any thing by the deviſe, &c. as the words are limited to his being born and in being, &c.?

Upon ſerious conſideration taken of this perplexed and intricate caſe; I am of opinion;

Firſt, That the ſecond ſon of the ſaid Robert, who can take any thing by this deviſe, muſt be a ſon begotten after the making of the will, and not in eſſe at the time of the making of the ſaid will.

Secondly, That the ſecond ſon of Robert, who ſhall be capable to take by his will, muſt, by the true intention of the ſaid will, be conſtrued to be the ſecond ſon begotten next after the ſaid David, who was the eldeſt ſon of the ſaid Robert; yet nevertheleſs, by the words of the will, it may be ſtrongly objected, that the ſecond ſon of the ſaid Robert, which he ſhall beget on the body of Anne, muſt be intended to be the ſecond ſon of Robert begotten after the making of the will; and ſo he ſhall be, upon the whole matter, the third ſon of Robert: But my opinion is, that the ſecond ſon muſt be intended; the ſaid William, who is the ſecond ſon, accounting the ſaid David the firſt ſon.

Thirdly, I am of opinion that ("the ſaid William not being born, nor his mother being enſient, at the time of the failure of the heirs males of the body of the ſaid eldeſt ſon of the ſaid David lawfully begotten) the ſaid William doth not take any thing by this deviſe.

Fourthly, I am of opinion, that, although the ſaid William taketh nothing by the deviſe, yet nevertheleſs, whereas the ſaid William ſaith that, for want of ſuch ſecond ſon then being, he deviſeth the manor to the heirs males lawfully begotten of the body of the ſecond ſon of the ſaid Robert, which he ſhall beget on the body of the ſaid Anne; I am of opinion, that the ſaid deviſe to the heirs males of the body of the ſaid William, being the ſecond ſon, is good, if the ſaid William died in the life-time of the ſaid Robert; but, if the ſaid Robert died living the ſaid William, then the ſaid deviſe could not take effect to the heirs males of the body of the ſaid William, becauſe all the particular eſtates were ended in the life-time of the ſaid William; and then the ſaid William could not, in his life-time, have an heir male of his body; and ſo the ſaid eſtate could not veſt. Jo. ONEBY[2]."

Houſes in the pariſh of Friſby, in 1798, were 66. Inhabitants, nearly 306. Freeholders, 45. Farmers that keep a team each, 7. Freeholders that live in the town, 24.

P. 273. Henry Keble died at Humberſton, May 9, 1571; and was buried in that church May 24; his daughter Elizabeth being then in her 11th year, and Margaret in her 10th. Jane his widow and ſole executrix provided, for the funeral, her brother Edward Griffin, eſq. of Dingley, to be chief mourner; and Francis Smith, eſq. of Aſhby Folvile, and Thomas Heſilrige, eſq. of Noſeley, the other two mourners. The penon was borne by Robert Braham, of Barrow, gent. The officers of arms were, William Flower, Norroy king of arms; and Richard Lee, Portcullis purſuivant[3].

P. 276. Add theſe arms of Bowes of Humberſton[4]:

1. Ermine, three bows erect Gules, a fleur de lis for difference; Bowes. 2. Argent, on a chevron between two chevrons couped and engrailed on the upper edge Sable, thre eſcalops Or; Gonvile. 3. Gules fretty Argent; Huddleſton. 4. Argent, on a feſs Azure between three demi-griffins Sable, three bezants; Smith. 5. Argent, a lion rampant Gules; .... 6. Gules, a ſaltire Argent, a label company Argent and Azure, a creſcent for difference; Nevill. 7. Or fretty Gules, on a canton per pale, Ermine and Or, a galley with ſails furled Sable; Nevill. 8. Argent, three lozenges conjoined in feſs Gules; Montacute. 9. Paly of ſix, Argent and Azure, on a bend Gules three eagles diſplayed Or; Graundſon. 10. Or, a feſs between two gemelles, and in chief a lion paſſant Gules, Tregoz. 11. Argent, a feſs Gules between three mullets Sable; Evias. 12. Or, an eagle diſplayed Vert, beaked and legged Gules; Mounthermer. 13. Azure, ſemé of fleur de lis, a lion rampant guardant Argent; Holland. 14. Gules, three lions paſſant in pale Or, within a border Argent; Edmund earl of Kent. 15. Gules, a croſs engrailed Argent; Inglethorpe. 16. Argent, on a quarter Gules a roſe of the firſt; Bradſton. 17. Azure, on a feſs between three leopards' faces Or, an annulet for difference; De la Pole. 18. Argent, a ſaltire engrailed Gules; Tiptoft. 19. Argent, a feſs between four gemelles Gules; Badleſmere. 20. Or, a lion rampant Gules; Charleton. 21. Argent, two chevrons within a border engrailed Sable; Stanton. 22. Argent, on a bend Azure, three bucks' heads caboſhed Or; Stanley. 23. Per feſs dancetté, Azure and Or, in chief three plates; Lathome. 24. Gules, three legs in armour, couped and conjoined at the thighs Argent; Man. 25. Gules, two lions paſſant in pale Argent; Strange. 26. Gules, three croſs croſſlets fitché Argent, a chief Or; Arderne. 27. Or, a chevron Gules between three martlets Sable; Stafford. 28. Azure, two organpipes in chevron between ten croſs croſſlets Or; Pipe. 29. Argent, two bars nebulé Sable, on a canton Gules a creſcent Or; Keble. 30. Argent, a chevron between three eagles diſplayed Gules. Firſt creſt, an aſs's head couped Sable, ducally gorged Argent; ſecond creſt, eight arrows interlaced Argent, headed and barbed Or, banded Gules. Plate LXX. fig. 10.

---

[1] From the MS. already cited, p. 520, intituled, "Purchaſers," &c.

[2] Palmer's MS Caſes, p. 202.

[3] Funeral Certificates in the College of Arms, I. 5. p. 189.

[4] Harl. MSS. 1113.

P. 283. Since the article of Hungerton was printed off, Mr. Latham has presented to that church, as an altar-piece, a fine and appropriate picture of the baptiſm of Our Saviour, by St. John[1], in the river Jordan. On a tablet attached to the ſame is inſcribed:

"This painting
(by Jacobo da Empoli) was given to the church of Hungerton, as an altar-piece,
by William Latham, Eſq. F. R. S. and F. S. A.
A. D. 1800."

Of the painting itſelf we ſhall ſay nothing more, than that it confirms every encomium which Pilkington, in his Dictionary of Painters, has beſtowed upon Jacobo da Empoli, who was born 1554, and died 1640. His works are now become very ſcarce.

P. 288. Add, "A Sermon preached in Greenwich church, on Sunday March 18, 1800, by the Rev. A. Burnaby, D. D. in Conſequence of the atrocious Attempt to aſſaſſinate His Majeſty, in Drury-lane Theatre, on Thurſday the 15th of May;" 12mo.

Ibid. Edwin-Andrew Burnaby, eſq. married Mary, daughter of the Rev. William Browne, rector of Burrow; and has two ſons and a daughter. His reſidence is at Rotherby hall. Of the Archdeacon's other ſons, the ſecond, Sherard-Beaumont Burnaby, and the fourth, George-Freeman Burnaby (now a ſtudent in the Univerſity of Edinburgh) are unmarried; the third, Captain John-Dick Burnaby, is married to Henry-Anne, only daughter of ſir Thomas Fowke, knt. of Loſeby, by Anne daughter and coheir of ſir Iſaac Woollaſton (ſee p. 340.)

P. 294, l. 28. r. "daughter of William, and ſiſter of George Aſhby, eſq. of Loſeby."

P. 296. note 3. William Aſhby of Loſeby, ſon of Everard Aſhby, died in Scotland, where he was embaſſador from queen Elizabeth[2], 1589-90, ſ. p. His ſiſter Elizabeth was married to Henry Naunton, eſq. of Alderton, co. Suffolk; by whom ſhe had the celebrated ſtateſman, ſir Robert Naunton (ſee p. 493.)—Correct in like manner the pedigree in pp. 298, 299—The age of Barbara (wife of George Aſhby), who died either in 1588 or 1598, is not quite certain; but ſhe ſeems to have been at leaſt 100.

P. 298. The coat armour of the three different branches of the Caves was thus diſtinguiſhed: 1. Cave of Pickwell; 1. and 4, Azure, fretty of eight Argent, Cave; 2. and 3. Ermine, on a bend Sable, three whales' heads eraſed Argent, Whalley. In the centre a mullet for difference. Creſt, a greyhound courant Sable, collared Or, charged on the ſhoulder with a mullet.—2. Cave of Bagrave; 1. and 4, Azure, fretty of eight Argent, a creſcent for difference, Cave; 2. and 3, Whalley. Creſt, a greyhound courant Sable, collared Or, charged on the ſhoulder with a creſcent.—3. Cave of Ingarſby; 1. and 4. Azure, fretty of eight Argent, Cave; 2. and 3. Whalley. In the centre an annulet for difference. Creſt, a greyhound courant Sable, collared Or, charged on the ſhoulder with an annulet.

P. 305 The complaint in parliament was in "1330."

P. 326. Laund is low ſituated, with water before it; yet the cellars are completely dry[3].

P. 328. l. 32. r. "2. and 3. Alfreton."

Ibid. l. 30. r. "a bordure Azure bezanté."

P. 352. By inquiſition dated April 5, 1800, ſir Francis Burdet, of Formark, has aſſumed the name of Jones only, in compliance with an injunction contained in the will of his grandfather, William Jones, of Ramſbury manor, co. Wilts, eſq.—Eliza Burdett was married, May 26, 1800, to James Langham, eſq.

P. 354. note, l. 3, read, "Azure, a feſs embattled; on a chief Argent," &c.

P. 358. Mr. Wyrley notices the arms of Preſtwould, "ſuper picturam hominis armati in feneſtrâ."

P. 359. Edward Fiſher was curate in 1682.

P. 362. The Pedigree was ſigned by Chriſtopher Packe, jun. eſq. of Preſtwould, and Simon Packe, of Cotes; but, as appears by the following letter, contained ſome ſlight miſtakes:

"For Mr. G. King, in the College of Arms, London.

"Sir, I am very ſorry any miſtake of mine ſhould occaſion you the trouble of a letter. What you writ, and I ſigned at Leiceſter, was the greateſt part of my own knowledge; the other part was (as I told you) traditional. If any error hath been committed in it, it was the ſame I received by tradition; and was an error of the underſtanding, and not a wilful miſtake. What relates to my grandfather, I cannot be poſitive in; but wherein the account varies from that in 34, I know not how better to rectify from than by that, if ſigned by my father's own hand. My father, who I told you was ſenex capularis, being now in a languiſhing (I wiſh not a dying) condition, cannot now be conſulted, or give in any reſolution therein. I have underſtood, ſince I was ſo happy as to ſee you, that my grandfather was originally of Kettering, or Grafton, in Northamptonſhire; and whereas I took my father's firſt wife's name to be Jones, that was not her own name, but her widow name; her maiden name, I think, being Newman, and her firſt huſband a Welſhman. Theſe inſtances I meant, when I ſaw you next, to have corrected. As to what you wrote concerning the arms, I own it to be true, that, when my father was ſheriff of London, and before, the arms he gave were three anchors, in ſuch manner as you deſcribe them, for which he had a patent from the then Clarenceux under the ſeal of the office. Since that, upon the King's Reſtoration, he exchanged the coat which you mention for that I gave you the blazon of, by patent from ſir Edward Biſche. He, knowing the thing to be true, verified the latter coat, which my father now gives; and I could have produced ſufficient authority for it, had you in the leaſt deſired it, having it then about me, and expecting you would have demanded a ſight of it. I know not how well to tranſmit it to you, as you ſeem to deſire; but poſſibly my brother may ſhortly wait upon you, and give you farther ſatisfaction. However, if we ſhall be ſo happy as to ſee you in this country again this ſummer (as I have been told we may), if there ſhall then remain any ſcruple, I ſhall remove it by giving you the authority you deſire. Whereas you note that due entry hath not been made of either of the coats; if Officers of Arms omit what is to be done on their parts, it is not in our power to help it, becauſe we know it not; but rather gives juſt cauſe of complaint, ſince all patents of that kind eſpecially ought to be duly regiſtered, as Mr. Camden did in all his time. But poſſibly the diſorder of late times may be admitted, not only as an excuſe, but be found a reaſon for ſuch omiſſions. I cannot end, ſince you mention Sir Henry St. George, whom I had the honour once to know when he lived at Woodford, without giving him my acknowledgements; and beg the favour of you, you would let him know I am with all reſpect his, and to believe I am your very humble ſervant, Cotes, May 15, 1682. CH^R PACKE."

The following corrections are from the pedigree entered in the Viſitation of London, 1634.

Thomas Packe, of Kettering, or Grafton, = Catharine
co. Northampton, a merchant in London. | ....

Chriſtopher Packe, eſq. of London, merchant, married, 1. Jane, daughter of ...... Newman, and grandchild of ..... Kenrick; 2. Anne, eldeſt daughter of Simon Edmonds, by Mary daughter of Thomas Barkby, eſq.; 3. Elizabeth widow of Alderman Herring.

P. 368. See before, in p. *6, an inventory of plate and church-ornaments in Cotes chapel in 1552.

P. 370. Thomas Skipwith of Metheringham was a ſerjeant at law, and died very old, at his houſe in Lincoln's Inn Fields, in May 1694 (ſee p. 281). His ſon ſir Thomas, of Valentines, in Upminſter, Eſſex, married Margaret daughter of George Brydges lord Chandos, relict of William Brownlow, of Hornby, co. Lincoln, eſq. by whom he had one ſon, ſir George Brydges Skipwith, bart. living 1723, in his 37th year.

P. 375. In 1578, the ſite of the manor of Queneborow, with certain rents in Eaſt Norton, were granted, for 32 years, to Edward Turner; and lands and tenements at Queneborow, for 21 years, to Thomas Cope.

P. 386. a. l. 69. r. "an eagle diſplayed within," &c.

Ibid. b. l. 41. r. "Danvers of Daunſey."

P. 395. Alderman Ortin died Feb. 11, 1795, æt. 70.

P. 397. paſſim, for Henton, read Hacker.

P. 415. Since the article on Mr. Burton was printed, a ninth edition of his book has been publiſhed, neatly printed in two volumes 8vo, 1800; with a Life of the Author, compiled by Mr. Stephen Jones; which enables me to inſert here a copy of Mr. Burton's will:

---

[1] The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptiſt.

[2] See before, pp. 493. 515.

[3] Gough's Camden, vol. II. p. 198.

" In nomine Dei, Amen. Auguſt 15th, one thouſand ſix hundred thirty-nine. Becauſe there be ſo many caſualties to which our life is ſubject, beſides quarrelling and contention which happen to our ſucceſſors after our deaths by reaſon of unſettled eſtates; I Robert Burton, ſtudent of Chriſtchurch, Oxon. though my means be but ſmall, have thought good, by this my laſt will and teſtament, to diſpoſe of that little which I have; and, being at this preſent (I thank God!) in perfect health of body and mind (and if this teſtament be not ſo formal according to the nice and ſtrict terms of law, and other circumſtances peradventure required, of which I am ignorant), I deſire, howſoever, this my will may be accepted, and ſtand good according to my true intent and meaning. Firſt, I bequeath animam Deo, corpus terræ, whenſoever it ſhall pleaſe God to call me. I give my land in Higham, which my good father, Ralph Burton, of Lindley, in the county of Leiceſter, eſquire, gave me by deed of gift, and that which I have annexed to that farm by purchaſe ſince now leaſed for thirty-eight pounds per annum, to mine elder brother, William Burton, of Lindley, eſquire, during his life; and, after him, to his heirs. I make my ſaid brother William likewiſe mine executor, as well as heir, paying ſuch annuities and legacies out of my lands and goods as are hereafter ſpecified. I give to my nephew Caſſibilan Burton twenty pounds annuity per annum, out of my land in Higham, during his life, to be paid, at two equal payments, at our Lady-day in Lent, and Michaelmas; or, if he be not paid within fourteen days after the ſaid feaſts, to diſtrain on any part of the ground, or on any of my lands of inheritance. Item, I give to my ſiſter Katharine Jackſon, during her life, eight pounds per annum annuity, to be paid at the two feaſts equally, as aboveſaid; or elſe to diſtrain on the ground, if ſhe be not paid after fourteen days at Lindley, as the other ſum is out of the ſaid land. Item, I give to my ſervant John Upton the annuity of forty ſhillings out of my ſaid farm during his life (if till then my ſervant), to be paid on Michaelmas day in Lindley each year; or elſe, after fourteen days, to diſtrain. Now for my goods: I thus diſpoſe of them. Firſt, I give an hundred pounds to Chriſtchurch in Oxford, where I have ſo long lived, to buy five-pounds lands per annum, to be yearly beſtowed on books for the library. Item, I give an hundred pounds to the Univerſity library of Oxford, to be beſtowed to purchaſe five-pound lands per annum, to be laid out yearly on books, as Mrs. Brooks formerly gave an hundred pounds to buy land to the ſame purpoſe, and the rent to the ſame uſe. I give to my brother George Burton twenty pounds, and my watch. I give to my brother Ralph Burton five pounds. Item, I give to the pariſh of Segrave, in Leiceſterſhire, where I am now rector, ten pounds, to be given to certain feoffees, to the perpetual good of the ſaid pariſh, as I have lately done to St. Thomas's pariſh, Oxon. Item, I give to my niece Eugenia Burton [Gray] one hundred pounds. Item, I give to my nephew Richard Burton, now priſoner in London, an hundred pounds to redeem him. Item, I give to the poor of Higham forty ſhillings, where my land is; to the poor of Nuneaton, where I was once a grammar ſcholar, three pound; to my couſin Purefye of Wadleſe [Wadley], my couſin Purefye of Calcott, my couſin Hales of Coventry, my nephew Bradſhaw of Orton, twenty ſhillings apiece for a ſmall remembrance; to Mr. Whitehall[1], rector of Checkly, mine old chamber-fellow, twenty ſhillings. I deſire my brother George and my couſin Purefye of Calcott to be the overſeers of this part of my will. I give moreover five pounds to make a ſmall monument for my mother where ſhe is buried in London[2]; to my brother Jackſon forty ſhillings; to my ſervant John Upton forty ſhillings beſides his former annuity, if he be till then my ſervant. Rob. Burton.

Charles Ruſſel, witneſs.
John Pepper, witneſs."

" An Appendix to this my Will, if I die in Oxford, or whilſt I am of Chriſtchurch, and with good Mr. Paynes; Auguſt the fifteenth, 1639.

" I give to Mr. Doctor Fell, dean of Chriſtchurch, forty ſhillings; to the eight canons twenty ſhillings apiece as a ſmall remembrance; to the poor of St. Thomas pariſh twenty ſhillings; to Braſenoſe library five pounds; to Mr. Rowſe of Oriel college twenty ſhillings; to Mr. Heywood xx*s.*; to Doctor Metkerke xx*s.*; to Mr. Shirly xx*s.* If I have any books the Univerſity library hath not, let them take them. If I have any books our own library hath not, let them take them. I give to Mrs. Fell all my Engliſh books of huſbandry, one excepted . . . .[3]; to her daughter, Mrs. Katharine Fell, my ſix pieces of ſilver plate, and ſix ſilver ſpoons; to Mrs. Iles my Gerard's Herbal; to Mrs. Morris my Country Farm, tranſlated out of French, 4to, and all my Engliſh phyſick-books; to Mr. Whiſtler, the recorder of Oxford, I give twenty ſhillings; to all my fellow-ſtudents, Maſters of Arts, a book in folio, or two apiece, as maſter Doctor Morris treaſurer (or Mr. Dean) ſhall appoint; whom I requeſt to be the overſeer of this Appendix, and give him, for his pains, my Atlas Geographicus, and Ortelii Theatrum Mundi, folio. I give to John Fell, the Dean's ſon, ſtudent, my mathematical inſtruments (except my two croſs ſtaves, which I give to my Lord of Downe[4]), if he be then of the houſe. To Thomas Iles, Doctor Iles his ſon, ſtudent, Salmuth on Panciroila, and Luria's Works in 4 tomes. If any books be left, let my executors diſpoſe of them, with all ſuch books as are written with mine own hands, and half my Melancholy copy (for Cripps hath the other half). To Mr. Jones, chaplain and chanter, my ſurveying books and inſtruments. To the ſervants of the houſe forty ſhillings. Rob. Burton."

" This will was ſhewed to me by the teſtator, and acknowledged by him, ſome few days before his death, to be his laſt will. Ita teſtor, Jo. Morris, S. Th. D. prebendarius eccl' Chr'i, Oxon'; Feb. 3, 1639.

" Probatum apud London. coram venerabili viro Dño Henrico Marten, mil. LL. D. 11° Maii, 1640, juramento Wil̃li Burton, fr'is & executoris; cui &c. coram magiſtris Nathanaële Stephens rectore eccleſiæ de Drayton, & Edwardo Farmer, clericis, vigore commiſſionis, &c."

P. 417. The kindneſs Mr. Robert Burton experienced from the counteſs dowager of Exeter at Waleſby muſt have been after Feb. 7, 1622-3, on which day ſhe became a widow; and was not held long; for, in the edition of 1632, he adds, in a note, " lately reſigned for ſome ſpecial reaſon."

P. 418. Strike out 1632, and 1634. The latter is a miſtake; and of the edition of 1632 I have ſince ſeen Mr. Steevens's copy; in ſome MS obſervations on which, he ſays, " This celebrated Work (which paſſed through eight editions) about a century ago was almoſt forgotten. It is not mentioned either by Addiſon, Pope, or Swift. Nay, it ſeems to have eſcaped the notice of that excurſive reader Arbuthnot, who was familiarly acquainted with more books than the preceding Triumvirate ever heard of. The following circumſtances however, within a few years paſt, have raiſed the price of Burton's performance from one ſhilling and ſixpence to a guinea and a half. [Here follow the remarks of Dr. Johnſon and Mr. Warton, already printed; and theſe which follow:]

" He wrote an excellent book of the Anatomy of Melancholy, wherein he hath piled up variety of much excellent learning. Scarce any book of Philology in our land hath, in ſo ſhort a time, paſſed ſo many impreſſions." Fuller's Worthies.

" Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, a book once the favourite of the learned and witty, and a ſource of ſurreptitious learning, though written on a regular plan, conſiſts chiefly of quotations: the author has honeſtly termed it a cento. He collects, under every diviſion, the opinions of a multitude of writers, without regard to chronological order; and has too often the modeſty to decline the interpoſition of his own ſentiments. Indeed, the bulk of his materials generally overwhelms him. In the courſe of his folio, he has contrived to treat a great variety of topics that ſeem very looſely connected with the general ſubject; and, like Bayle, when he ſtarts a favourite train of quotations, he does not ſcruple to let the digreſſion outrun the principal queſtion. Thus, from the doctrines of religion to military diſcipline, from inland navigation to the morality of dancing ſchools, every thing is diſcuſſed and determined."

---

[1] James Whitehall, elected to Chriſtchurch from Weſtminſter, 1602; afterwards rector of Checkly in Staffordſhire.

[2] It does not appear in what church in London ſhe was buried.

[3] Illegible in the original.

[4] Dr. Jeremy Taylor.

"The archneſs which Burton diſplays occaſionally, and his indulgence of playful digreſſions from the moſt ſerious diſcuſſions, often give his ſtyle an air of familiar converſation, notwithſtanding the laborious collections which ſupply his text. He was capable of writing excellent poetry; but he ſeems to have cultivated this talent too little. The Engliſh verſes prefixed to his book, which poſſeſs beautiful imagery, and great ſweetneſs of verſification, have been frequently publiſhed. His Latin elegiac verſes, addreſſed to his book, ſhew a very agreeable turn for raillery."

"When the force of the ſubject opens his own vein of proſe, we diſcover valuable ſenſe and brilliant expreſſion. Such is his account of the firſt feelings of melancholy perſons, written probably from his own experience." Ferriar's Illuſtrations of Sterne, pp. 58. 60.

"The late Commentators on Shakſpeare, by their frequent extracts from Burton's book, have likewiſe contributed to its preſent circulation. It may be predicted too that this volume will henceforward become dearer and dearer, on account of the numerous copies mutilated by our portrait-hunters, that they might add the reſemblance of our author to their collections. During a pedantic age, like that in which Burton's production appeared, it muſt have been eminently ſerviceable to critics of many deſcriptions. Hence the unlearned might furniſh themſelves with appropriate ſcraps of Greek and Latin; whilſt even men of letters would find their inquiries ſhortened by knowing where they might look for what both antients and moderns had advanced on the ſubject of human paſſions. I confeſs my inability to point out any other Engliſh author who has ſo largely dealt in apt and original quotation [1]. Several volumes, containing ſingle tracts referred to by Burton in the courſe of his work, were bound up and preſented to him by the Bodleian Library."

Thus far the remarks of Mr. Steevens.

Dr. Ferriar ſays, the "Anatomy of Melancholy" was originally publiſhed in 1617; but this muſt probably be a miſtake, as I have now before me the quarto edition of 1621, which takes no notice of any earlier impreſſion. There was no entry originally made of it in the books of the Company of Stationers, which I have ſearched for that purpoſe from 1616 to 1622; but in the laſt-mentioned year it is entered, May 24, by Michael Sparkes, "by conſent of Henry Crippes;" who had tranſferred to Sparkes all his eſtate in the copy of that and two other books, Godwin's Antiquities, and a Sermon of Peter Du Moulin.

The firſt edition contains "The Concluſion of the Author to the Reader," by way of epilogue, dated, "From my Studie in Chriſt-church, Oxon. Decemb. 7, 1620;" and the concluding ſection of the Work, "Cure of Deſpair by Phyſick," &c. is extremely ſhort; but was afterwards conſiderably enlarged at the requeſt of ſome friends; amongſt whom he names "his brother George Burton, and Mr. James Whitehall, rector of Checkly in Staffordſhire, his quondam chamber-fellow, and late fellow-ſtudent in Chriſt-church, Oxon."

One more extract from the firſt edition:

"It remains that I make a thankful remembrance of ſuch friends, to whom I have been beholden for their approbation, or troubled in peruſing ſeveral parts, or all of this treatiſe: for I did impart it to ſome of our worthieſt Phyſicians, whoſe approbation I had for matters of Phyſic; and to ſome Divines, and others of better note in our Univerſity, as well as to my more private Collegiate friends; whoſe cenſures when I had paſſed, and that with good encouragement to proceed, I was the bolder to haſten it, permiſſu ſuperiorum, to the preſs. I will name no man; or prefix, as the cuſtom is, any encomiaſtic verſes, which, I thank my friends, have been offered; leſt, if either whole or part ſhould be miſliked, I ſhould prejudice their judgement. I acknowledge myſelf much beholding and bound to them. If ought be amiſs, I take it wholly to myſelf, and ſay again,

Me, me, adſum qui feci, in me convertite linguas,
O Momi; meus hic error; nihil eſſe putavit
Nec voluit."

P. 428. The late Dr. Heathcote was baptized at Barrow, Jan. 6, 1721-2; the ſecond brother, Edward (whoſe wife was Catharine, daughter of Robert Hacker of Loughborough, and two of whoſe ſons were named Robert and Ralph), March 20, 1723-4; Charles, the third, Jan. 14, 1725-6, died March 10, 1726-7.

P. 433. In the Britiſh Muſeum is a petition from ſir William Darcy of Platten, 23 Hen. VIII, "all tres noble ſeignr Will. Skeffington, chr, deputa ſire ſeignr le roy dans ſon terre d'Irland," concerning the manor of Rathwer, in the county of Meath [2].

P. 448. "Chriſtopher Skevington, ſerjeant of catrys of the queen's majeſty's moſt honourable houſhold, died at London, the 23d day of March, being Wedneſday, anno D'ni 1568; and was buried in the collegiate church of Weſtminſter the 29th day of the ſaid month. The ſaid Chriſtopher married Margaret the daughter of Robert Toll, of London, merchant; and by her had no iſſue. He died inteſtate. The mourners at this ſaid funeral were, Anthony Brigham chief mourner, John Haynes, and Humphrey Lovell. The officer of arms was Nicholas Dethick, Bluemantle [3]."

P. 453. A very fine Roman coin was ſome time ſince turned up at Moody-buſh; which is a high ridge of ground overlooking Queneborow. and in full view of Burrow-hill to the Eaſt, and the Foreſt hills to the Weſt; commanding alſo Leiceſter, the Ratæ of the Romans, to the South, and the country as far as Segs-hill, Dalby, and Melton, to the North.

P. 460. Add theſe epitaphs in Thruſſington church:

On an upright ſtone againſt the South wall:

"Sacred to the memory of Thomas-Parker Sibſon, who lies depoſited near this place.
He departed this life the 20th day of February,
anno Domini 1774, aged 32 years."

On an upright ſtone againſt the North wall:

"Beneath are depoſited the earthly remains of Elizabeth, late wife of William Southernwood, of Beaumont Leys, in this county.
She departed this life Aug. 5, 1786, aged 51 years."

On a mural monument at the Eaſt end of the nave:

"Near this place lieth interred the body of William Wills, eſq. the only ſurviving ſon of William Wills, eſq. by Mary his wife, daughter of Francis Needham,
of Gaddeſby, in this county, eſq.
He married Mary, the eldeſt daughter of John Simons, of Belgrave, eſq.;
by whom he left no iſſue.
He lived beloved; and died lamented, Dec. 3, 1741, aged 29 years and 2 months."

On another, oppoſite to the laſt, on the North ſide:

"Mary Wills, relict of the late William Wills, eſq. of this pariſh, and daughter of the late John Simons, eſq.
of Belgrave, in this county,
died June 10, 1775, aged 62 years.
She was eminent for ſincerity and openneſs of heart;
virtues which neither the vices of the age,
nor the prevalence of faſhion, could corrupt or deſtroy.
With an unaffected piety and real benevolence ſhe diſcharged her duty towards God and her neighbour."

P. 479. a. l. 34. r. fig. 17.

Ibid. b. l. 36. r. "three roſes Gules," &c.

P. 489. A rent of 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* in Eaſt Norton, with certain lands and tenements there, were granted by the crown, in 1578, to Edward Turner, for 31 years.

P. 494. The following endowment of the vicarage of Twyford is extracted from the Lincoln Regiſtry:

"Reverendo in Chriſto patri ac domino domino Philippo, Dei gratiâ, Lincolnienſi epiſcopo, veſter humilis & devotus filius Johannes Louſeby, perpetuus vicarius eccleſie parochialis de Melton Mowbray, veſtre diœceſeos, obedientiam, reverentiam, & honorem, tanto patri debita. Literas veſtras reverendas nuper recepimus, tenorem continentes infra-ſcriptum:—Philippus, permiſſione divinâ, Lincolnienſis epiſcopus, dilecto domino Johanni Louſeby, vicario perpetuo eccleſie pa-

---

[1] See the Reflections in the Critick, 8vo, 1719, on the difficulty to determine whether the book was written in Latin or Engliſh; ſo much it is filled, both text and notes, with Latin quotations.

[2] Ayſcough's Catalogue of MSS. 4963. 18.

[3] Funeral Certificates in the College of Arms, I. 5. 168.

rochialis de Melton Mowbray, noſtre diœceſeos, ſalutem, gratiam, & benedictionem. Preſentârunt nobis religioſi viri prior & conventus de Kirkeby ſuper Wretbek eccleſiam parochialem de Twyford, noſtre diœceſeos, eis unitam, annexam, & incorporatam, auctoritate Apoſtolicâ, ut aſſerunt canonici, obtinentes, dominum Walterum Gerald, capellanum, ad vicariam perpetuam ejuſdem eccleſie de Twyford, in manſo & portionibus ſubſcriptis per nos, auctoritate noſtrâ ordinariâ, de novo ordinandum & dotandum; videlt, quòd vicarius dicte eccleſie, qui pro tempore erit, habeat pro manſione ſuâ aulam rectorie ibidem, pincernariam, duas cameras ad finem Auſtralem dicte aule de novo edificatas, coquinam, & piſtrinum, in uno domo contenta; unum horreum, cum ſtabulo in fine ejuſdem; unum columbare, & gardinum competens, cum ſuis clauſuris. Habeat idem vicarius portiones ſubſcriptas nomine vicarie ſue; videlt, decimas agnorum, & vitulorum, porcellorum, aucarum, anatum, pullorum, columbarum, pullaliorum, & aliorum animalium decimabilium quorumcunque, lane & lactis, totius parochie eccleſie predicte de Twyford. Habeat etiam idem vicarius quiſcunque, perpetuis futuris temporibus, quecunque mortuaria defunctorum, viva & mortua, de parochiâ predictâ qualitèrcunque provenientia; ac oblationes quatuor diebus principalibus, annis ſingulis, contingentes; ceramque totam oblatam in feſto Purificationis beate Marie; oblationes quoque in purificatione mulierum parochie antedicte & nubentium; necnon oblationes quaſcunque quorumcunque funerum ibidem contingentium, tam diebus funerationis hujuſmodi, quàm in anniverſariis & tricennariis eorundem; ac oblationes & decimas quadrageſimales, & alias devotiones & oblationes, infra eccleſiam parochialem predictam, ſeu ejus parochiam, qualitèrcunque provenientes; unà cum decimis lini, canabi, ortorum, & curtilagiorum. Habeat etiam idem vicarius pro tempore exiſtens omnes alios & ſingulos fructus, redditus, & proventus, ad dictam eccleſiam qualitèrcunque ſpectantes & proventuros; reſiduo manſi rectorie dicte eccleſie vicario ſuperiùs nunc aſſignato, ac glebâ dicte eccleſie, necnon decimis garbarum & feni ejuſdem eccleſie, duntaxat exceptis: vicarius verò quicunque pro tempore exiſtens invenire teneatur ceram, panem, & vinum, pro celebratione miſſarum in dictâ eccleſiâ, & pro denariis Sancti Petri tantùm reſpondeat archidiacono loci; omnia verò alia onera ordinaria & extraordinaria prefate eccleſie de Twyford qualitèrcunque in futurum incumbentia dicti prior & conventus perpetuò ſubibunt, ſupportabunt, & agnoſcent. Ad inquirendum igitur de & ſuper vero valore annuo portionum ſupraſcriptarum, ac ſufficientiâ manſi ſuperiùs limitati & aſſignati, necnon meritis preſentati, & aliis articulis in hâc parte neceſſariis & conſuetis; in pleno capitulo in eâdem eccleſiâ celebrando per rectores & vicarios ibidem preſentes, & in formâ juris juratos, premiſſorum notitiam meliùs obtinentes, vocatis primitùs omnibus & ſingulis in hâc parte vocandis; &, ſi per inquiſitionem hujuſmodi invenire poteritis manſum ſuperiùs aſſignatum & limitatum pro ipſius vicarii & ſuorum inhabitatione ſufficientem & idoneum, ac portiones ſuperiùs limitatas & aſſignatas ad ſummam decem librarum monete Anglie in vero valore annuatim ſe extendere, ac ipſum preſentatum idoneum & honeſtum, nihilque in hâc parte obviaverit de canonicis inſtitutis ad ordinandam & dotandam ipſam vicariam in manſo & portionibus predictis, vel aliis ad dictam ſummam ſe extendentibus, dictumque manſum & gardinum certis finibus & limitibus diſtinguenda, dictumque Walterum ad eandem vicariam ſic ordinatam & dotatam, nullo alio obſtante canonico, admittendum, ipſumque vicarium perpetuum, ſecundùm formam conſtitutionum legatinarum in hoc caſu editarum juratum, inſtituendum canonicè in eâdem; necnon in corporalem poſſeſſionem ejuſdem vicarie, cum ſuis juribus & pertinentiis univerſis, per archidiaconum noſtrum Leiceſtrie, ſeu ipſius officinalem, induci mandandum & faciendum canonicè ipſius domini Walteri obedientiam nomine noſtro recipiendum; ceteraque omnia & ſingula facienda, exercenda, & expedienda, que in hâc parte neceſſaria fuerint ſeu opportuna: Vobis, de cujus fidelitate confidimus, tenore preſentium, committimus vices noſtras; mandantes, quatenùs de omni eo quod feceritis in premiſſis, nos, dicto negotio expedito, diſtinctè & apertè certificetis per literas veſtras patentes, harum & facti veſtri ſeriem pleniùs continentes, ſigillo authentico conſignatas. Dat', ſub ſigillo noſtro, in caſtro noſtro de Sleford, XIIII° die menſis Januarii, anno Domini millmo-CCCC^{mo}-XV^{mo}, & conſecrationis noſtre anno XII^{mo}."—Quarum literarum veſtrarum reverendarum auctoritate, in pleno capitulo in eccleſiâ de Twyford celebrato per eccleſiarum rectores & vicarios ibidem preſentes, & juratos, hujus rei notitiam pleniùs obtinentes ſuper omnibus & ſingulis in dictis literis contentis, vocatis in hâc parte vocandis, inquiſitionem fecimus diligentem; per quam comperuimus manſum ſuperiùs aſſignatum & limitatum pro ipſius vicarii & ſuorum inhabitatione ſufficientem & idoneum; ac portiones ſuperiùs limitatas & aſſignatas, dempto columbari, quia ferè ad terram eſt collapſum, & addito, nomine ipſius, uno holmo prati ſive paſture in campo de Twyford predictâ, prope gardinum dicto vicario limitatum, ad ſummam decem librarum monete Anglie in vero valore ſe extendere; ac ipſum preſentatum, per diligentem examinationem, invenimus idoneum & honeſtum, nihilque in hâc parte obviare de canonicis inſtitutis: Ordinamus & dotamus ipſam vicariam in manſo & portionibus predictis; totum, videlt, gardinum & manſum ex parte Auſtrali cujuſdam muri, extendentis à coquinâ ad finem Borealem dicte aule uſque ad torrentem, eidem vicarie aſſignamus; dictumque Walterum ad dictam vicariam, ſic ordinatam & dotatam, admiſimus; ipſumque vicarium perpetuum, ſecundùm formam conſtitutionum legatinarum in hâc parte editarum juratum, inſtituimus canonicè in eâdem, & in corporalem poſſeſſionem dicte vicarie, cum ſuis juribus & pertinentiis univerſis, per archidiaconum veſtrum Leiceſtrie, ſeu ipſius officinalem, induci mandavimus, canonicamque obedientiam ipſius Walteri nomine veſtro recepimus. Que omnia & ſingula veſtre paternitati reverende ſignificamus per preſentes, ſigillo decanatûs Chriſtianitatis Leiceſtrie, ad noſtram requiſitionem, ſignatas. Et ego decanus decanatûs antedicti, ad ſpecialem rogatum dicti domini commiſſarii, ſigillum officii mei preſentibus appoſui in fidem & teſtimonium premiſſorum. Dat', apud Twyford, XVIII° die dicti menſis Januarii, anno Domini ſupradicto."

Miſs Roberts has the impropriate tithes of four yard-lands in Twyford.

P. 499. note 8. read "ſee his epitaph, p. 500."

P. 505. Fig. 27. ſhould be thus deſcribed: "Gules, cruſuly fitchée, three leopards' heads jeſſant as many fleurs de lis Argent; Nevill antient."

P. 510. Joſhua Sacheverell's wife was Bridget, daughter of Henry Kilby, of The Hute, co. Leiceſter, and relict of Anthony Tate[1], of Burley Park.

P. 512. A letter from Dr. Sacheverell to his friend and bookſeller Mr. Henry Clements, immediately after his famous Aſſize Sermon at Derby, dated from "Newhall near Lichfield," the ſeat of his kinſman George, the high ſheriff, is in the Britiſh Muſeum[2].

P. 514. l. 3. Mr. Richard Wilſon married Margaret, ſecond daughter of Thomas Farnham, gent. (ſee p. 104).

P. 518. The couplet on Abp. Frewen was formerly in the preſident's parlour at Magdalen[3] college in Oxford, under the arms of York and Frewen impaled.

P. 535. b. l. 45. read "fifty marks ſterling." The article of Abbot William de Houghton ſhould not have been here inſerted, as it already occurs among Mr. Burton's additions to Croxton, p. 320.

P. 536. Dr. Jennings publiſhed alſo "Jewiſh Antiquities, or the three books of Godwin's Moſes and Aaron, 2 vols. 1766, 8vo."

---

[1] Mr. Anthony Tate was aged 34 in November 1663. He was ſon of George Tate, eſq. of Sutton Bonington, co. Notts, (where he had lands, which came by his mother, the daughter of Richard Strelley); and gra[illegible]n of Anthony Tate, who married a daughter of John Digby, of Welby, eſq.

[2] Ayſcough's Catalogue, 4276. 75.

[3] By his will, he bequeathed to that college £100. to be laid out in ſome public way to be approved on by his good friend biſhop Sheldon; and ſo gave them a debt of £50. more; whereupon they made the following entry in the College Regiſter: "Anno 1666. Acceptus Frewen condonavit ſociis quingenas libras quas ab eodem mutuò acceperant, ut ſuppetias ferrent regum optimo Carolo I^{mo}; & quingenas libras in ornatum capellæ."—To the poor of the pariſh where he died, 20 nobles.—To every biſhop of the a ring with this inſcription, "Neque melior ſum quàm patres mei. 1 Reg. 19. A. F.;" no one to be under the value of thirty ſhillings.—To the biſhop of Rocheſter [Warner] a ring, once biſhop Jewel's. Le Neve, p. 239.

APPENDIX.

Nº I. EXTRACTS FROM CHARYTE'S RENTALE, RELATIVE TO BARKBY, BARKBY THORPE, HAMILTON, AND THURMASTON.

Habemus in Barkby, ex dono Walteri Power & Roberti filii ſui, eccleſiam in proprios uſus, cum decimis garbarum & feni, lini & canabi, &c. reddendo indè canonicis de Trentham viii marcas & dimidiam ad tres anni terminos, ſicut patet in matriculo epiſcopi, in hiis verbis: "Eccleſie de Barkby patronus abbas Leyc', ex dono Roberti le Poer, habens eam in proprios uſus ab antiquo, ſolvens canonicis de Trentham viii marcas & dimidiam, auctoritate cujus neſcit capitulum. Et habet capellam Thurmaſton, in feodo comitis Leyc', que debet deſerviri iii diebus in ebdomate per matricem eccleſiam. Item capellam de Hamulton, que debet deſerviri iii diebus in ebdomate per matricem eccleſiam."

Mem', quòd habemus xxs̃. pro penſione à vicario, ſicut patet in taxatione decimarum, ut patet in ſententiis diffinitivis epiſcoporum. Mem', quòd iſta pencio recuperata fuit per placitum, ſicut patet infra.

"Mem', quòd vicarius de Barkeby debet deſervire capellis de Thurmaſton & Hamulton, ſcil', utrique earum iii diebus in ebdomate, ut patet per ſententiam datam coram judicibus ordinariis die Mercurii proximâ poſt feſtum S̃ci Jacobi Apoſtoli, in eccleſiâ Omnium S̃corum de Dereby, &c. Et percipimus de vicario ibidem annuatim xxs̃. ſicut patet in ordinatione ejuſdem vicarii factâ per Hugonem ep̃um Linc': "Vicarius in eccleſiâ de Barkby habebit, nomine vicarie ſue, totum altaragium in eâdem; & ſolvet annuatim abbati & conventui Leyc' xxs̃. Solvet eciam vicarius ſynodalia t̃m."

Habemus ibidem decimam molendinorum.

Decima garbarum reddit inter grana. Et decima feni reddit cum firmâ. Et pro decimâ feni require poſtea in decimâ feni.

Et colimus ibi vi virgatas terre & dim'; & terram quam habuimus de Joħe Blunde; & dimidiam bovatam terre & i rodam. Et continet tota predicta terra $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{vii}}$ & xvi acras, iii rodas & dim'; que quidem acre ſolebant reddere xvlī. Et habemus pratum ibidem in diverſis particulis, ſicut patet in libro de terris dominicalibus.

Decima garbarum reddebat xxiiiilī.; modò reddit circa xxvilī. cum decimâ de Thorp & Thurmaſton.

Tenentes ad voluntatem.

Wiłłs Stevuns tenet ibidem manſum rectorie noſtre, continentem $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{vii}}$xvi acras, iii rod' & dim'; quatuor virgatas terre & iii quart', & paſturas xxxviii averiorum; cum pratis, paſcuis, & decimâ feni, lini, & canabi, de Barkeby & Thurmaſton, & cum crofto de Thorp Barkby; redd' v marcas.

Habemus ibidem orreum decimale, cum le Rekyart, ad imponend' decimas noſtras garbarum.

Et ſolebamus habere unam gregem arietum paſcentem in campis ibidem, ſcil', $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{xx}}$ & ultra.

Joħes Power tenet i meſſ', iii quart' terre, unum croftum, & vi paſturas; & redd' xviiis̃. i gallum, & i gallinam; opus.

Joħes Page tenet i meſſ', i croftum, i virgat' terre, & viii paſturas; redd' xiiiis̃. viiiđ. i gall'; opus.

Vicarius ibidem tenet ii toſta, vi acras terre & dim', ſed nullam paſturam; & redd' viis̃. & ii gallin'; opus.

Wiłłs Jonſon tenet i meſſ', i croftum, i virgat' terre, & viii paſturas; & redd' xvs̃. & ii gall' & iii gallin'; opera.

Idem Wiłłs tenet i meſſ', i croftum, & i quart' terre, & ii paſturas; & redd' vs̃.

Wiłłs Browne tenet unum croftum; & redd' Camerario viiiđ. & ii pullos.

Tota villa pro le Pynfold redd' iiis̃. iiiiđ.

Summa virgatarum viii.

Summa, lxiiis̃. viiiđ. preter firmam.

Tenentes liberi.

Thomas Alot & Rogerus Eliot de Stowton tenent i croftum & dim' virgatam terre, quondam Ricardi Samſon; & redd' iis̃. Et mem', quòd idem Ric' Samſon fecit homagium ſuum đno Wiłło Cloune, abbati, anno regni regis Edwardi Tertii poſt Conqueſtum xlviiii, &c.

Et Rogerus Pinchebeke, celararius, ſeiſivit Ric̃um filium Hugonis Heriſon pro wardâ, ut patet in Rentali predicti Rogeri Pinchebec, & in computo Joħis Bathe.

Wiłłs Ranton tenet . . . . . . & redd' iđ. ob̄. q̃. ꝑ s̃vic' milit', ſicut patet in Rotulo a° Hen. V. vij°.

Wiłłs Shurlok tenet . . . . & redd' iđ. ob̄.

Wiłłs Stevons tenet per ſervic' militare i meſſ', i virgat' terre, quondam Joħis Gerard, nuper W. Ranton; & redd' viiiđ. & homagium.

Joħes Bate tenet unam peciam terre & dim' virgat' terre; que pecia terre jacet inter vicariam & regiam viam; redd' iiiiđ. ſect' curie.

Joħes Billyng tenet iii acras terre & dim', quondam Joħis Kyng, poſtea đni J. Smyth, rectoris de Thurleſton; redd' iiđ. ſect' curie, ut in Rentali fratris J. Sadyngton.

Wiłłs Maſon de Thorp Barkby tenet i meſſ', ii bovatas terre, prati, & paſture, quondam Wiłłi filii Rogeri de Rotheley; & redd' vis̃. homagium & ſervitium; quos ſcil' vis̃. nos aſſignavimus ipſum ad ſolvend' đno de Ros pro nobis.

Commune fyn xiiđ. Summa, xvis̃. iiiđ. ob̄. q̃.

Summa totalis, viiilī. viiis̃. viiiđ. ob̄. q̃.

Require conſuetudines tenentium de Barkeby in fine iſtius libri.

Compoſitio inter nos & canonicos de Trentam ſuper eccleſiam de Barkby, reddendo illis viii marcas & dim' annuatim, &c.

Mem', quòd abbas Leyc' tenet omnia terras & tenementa ſua in Barkby in puram & perpetuam eleemoſinam de omnibus auxiliis regis quieta, ſicut patet in libro placitorum in quaternio de auxiliis dandis pro primogenitis regis faciendis militibus, &c.

Dona diverſorum, ſicut patet per cartas eorum.

Mem', quòd Robertus le Puher dedit vi bovatas terre eccleſie de Barkby, ad incrementum glebe eccleſie, ſicut patet per preſentationem ſuam datam capellano comitis Ceſtr'; in quâ preſentatione dedit ei capellano in perpetuam eleemoſinam, videlicet, eccleſiam de Barkby, cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, & nominatim vi bovatas terre de ſuis propriis, quas dedit ad incrementum tertie prebende, ut in primâ cartâ.

Item dedit eidem eccleſie de Barkeby, per cartam ſuam, unam bovatam terre, cum toſto Wiłłi Gangeru, & unam acram terre apud Pluntre, & in Sales ix ſeliones de dominico ſuo, & pratum de Goſecoto, ut in cartâ nonâ.

Item dedit eidem eccleſie vii bovatas terre in Barkeby; ſcil', quatuor & dim' de dominico ſuo, & ii & dim' de aliâ terrâ, ut patet per cartam ſuam undecimam.

Habemus confirmationem Petri de Linc' & Margarete uxoris ſue, de omnibus donationibus quas Walterus le Peur & Robertus filius ejus, & heredes, nobis dederunt, & cartis confirmaverunt; ſcil', eccleſiam de Barkby, cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, & quicquid eccleſie noſtre tam in terris quàm in hominibus dederunt, cum unâ carucatâ terre in Humberſton, &c. & cum unâ virgatâ terre in Barkeby; & cum duabus bovatis terre & dim' in Hows, cum pertin' ſuis, de feodo de Barkeby; & eccleſiam de Hungarton, cum pertin' ſuis, ut in eâdem cartâ, ſcil', decimâ.

Habemus confirmationem Roberti de Ros & Yſabelle uxoris ſue de omnibus terris & tenementis quas vel que habemus ex dono vel confirmatione Petri filii Thome de Linc', & anteceſſorum ſuorum, ſeu cujuſcunque alterius de feodo ſuo; videlicet, in Barkeby undecim virgatas terre, cum advocatione eccleſie ejuſdem ville; & i carucatam terre in Humberſton; & i carucatam terre in Thurmaſton; & i bovatam terre in Thorp juxta Barkby; & i culturam & iii ſeliones in Hamulton; & ii bovatas terre & dim', & ii meſſ', in Hows, ad dictam eccleſiam de Barkby pertinent'. Et unam virgatam terre aſſign' ut craſſectum ejuſdem eccleſie. Et in Hungarton x & ix virgatas terre, & iiii toſta & unum croftum & ix ſeliones, cum advocatione eccleſie ejuſdem ville, & ii virgatis terre in eâdem villâ ad eandem eccleſiam pertinentibus. Et in Southe Croxton vi virgatas terre & dim', & vi acras terre & dim', cum cheviciis ad eas pertinentibus; & tres acras prati & i holmum ad Heldiker, & dimidium croftum in Thorp ſupradictâ, cum omnibus libertatibus, &c.; ita quòd nec ipſi Robertus & Yſabella, nec heredes ſui, in predictis terris aut tenementis diſtrictionem aliquam de cetero facere poſſint, pro wardis, releviis, &c. viſu francipleg', auxiliis ad filium ſuum vel primogenitum militem faciend', aut filiam ſuam maritand', &c. ut in cartâ xiiª. Unde habemus finem levatum inter ipſum & nos in curiâ d̄ni regis.

Habemus conventionem inter predictum Robertum de Ros, Yſabellam, & nos, de omnibus predictis in predictâ cartâ, ſigillis ſuis ſignatam. Et, ad majorem ſecuritatem, habemus cirograffum ſuper premiſſis in curiâ d̄ni regis, levatum per finalem concordiam inter ambas partes, &c. ut in cartâ xiiiª, & in finali.

Habemus confirmationem Wiłłi de Ros de Hamelak pro omnibus predictis, ut patet per cartam ſuam.

Nos obligamur, per cartam noſtram, d̄no Roberto de Ros & Yſabelle uxori ejus, & heredibus ſuis, ſolvere eiſdem annuatim vis̄. vid̄. de auxilio vicecomitis & wardâ caſtri de Belver, pro terris & tenementis quas vel que tenemus de feodo ſuo de dono & feoffamento d̄ni Petri de Lincoln' & anteceſſorum ſuorum in vanaſſeria de Barkby de honore de Bealver. Modò Wiłłs Maſon de Thorp Barkby ſolvit dictos vis̄. d̄no de Ros pro nobis.

Mem', quòd heredes Thome Walſe de Anlep tenentur ſolvere nobis annuatim vis̄. pro quietâ clamatione piſcarie in Sorâ, ut patet per compoſitiones inter ipſum & nos; quos ſcil' vis̄. ipſe aſſignavit Joħem Maſon de Thorp Barkby, heredem Wiłłi filii Rogeri de Rotheley, ad ſolvend' nobis annuatim pro i meſſ', iii bovatis terre, prati, & paſture, que predictus Joħes tenet de predicto Thomâ in Barkby; quem quidem Joħem & heredes ſuos nos aſſignavimus ad ſolvend' d̄no de Ros pro nobis annuatim predict' vis̄. ut patet per compoſitionem inter d̄num de Ros & nos in parte ſolutionis de vis̄. & vid̄.

Habemus in Barkby, ex dono Yſolde filie Petri filii Thoreſton de Barkby, iiid̄. ob̄. de medietate unius toſti quam Rogerus Wytcope tenet de eâ in Barkby.

Habemus quietam clamationem Thome de Lincoln' de Barkeby, pro nobis & pro omnibus liberè tenentibus in eodem, de toto jure ſuo quod habuit in prato de Northinges in campo de Barkby, ſcil', de duobus equis paſcend' ſingulis annis in predicto prato à feſto Purific' beate Marie uſque ad tempus apertum prati.

Habemus communem paſturam, ex dono & confirmatione Thome filii Thome de Lincoln' de Barkeby, in diverſis locis in campis de Barkeby; ſcil', in Weſtgate, Kyrkegate, Howſegate, Cokeſgate, Pluntregate, & ad le Dykeſhende, &c.

Habemus cartam Matilde de Lincoln', per quam licebit nobis vias communes & chevicias proprias cum averiis noſtris depaſcere, &c. in Barkby.

Hec eſt concordia & conventio facta inter abbatem & conventum Leyc', & homines ſuos de Northorp in Thurmaſton, ex unâ parte, & Thomam de Lincoln', d̄num de Barkeby, ex alterâ; ſcil', quòd predictus Thomas de Lincoln' recognovit & conceſſit predictis abbati & conventui, & hominibus de Northorp in Thurmeſton, communem paſturam ſuam in hayâ ſuâ de Barkeby, ad averia predicti abbatis & hominum predictorum de Northorp pertinent', ad liberum tenementum predicti abbatis & hominum ſuorum in Thurmeſton; videlicet, ſingulis annis, ab horâ nonâ de Nativ' Sc̄i Joħis Baptiſte uſque ad Purif' beate Marie eodem anno, predictus d̄nus Thomas recognovit & conceſſit predictis abbati & conventui, & heredibus ſuis, predictum liberum introïtum & exitum ad communem paſturam in perpetuum, ad finem predicte haye, ſecundùm quod mete fuerint ſite. Predicti abbas Leyc' & conventus, & homines ſui de Northorp in Thurmeſton, recognoverunt & conceſſerunt predicto Thome de Lincoln' & heredibus ſuis communia paſture ſue in hayâ ſuâ de Thurmeſton ad averia ſua propria de dominico ſuo pertinente ad liberum tenementum ſuum in Barkeby, ſcil', ſingulis annis, ab horâ nonâ die Nativ' Sc̄i Joħis Baptiſte uſque ad Purif' beate Marie eodem anno, cum libero introïtu & exitu ad predictam paſturam. Predicte verò haye erunt in libero defenſo ſingulis annis à Purif' beate Marie uſque ad horam nonam die Nativ' Sc̄i Joħis Baptiſte. Unuſquiſque d̄nus alteris warantizabit communia predictarum paſturarum in perpetuum. Pro hâc autem conventione & conceſſione dederunt predicti abbas & conventus, & homines ſui predicti, Thome de Lincoln' xxiis̄. argenti. Ut autem hec conventio rata ſit & ſtabilis in poſt', predict' Thomas de Lincoln' huic parti cirographi ſigillum ſuum appoſuit, &c.

Habemus in Barkby ix rodas terre & prati, cum pertin', ex dono Wiłłi filii Hugonis de Syleby; illas, videlicet, ix rodas terre & prati, quas Rad̄us filius Jocelini preſbyteri nobis dedit.

Habemus, ex dono ejuſdem Wiłłi ibidem, unam dimidiam terre acram, cum pertin', jacent' inter terram Sampſonis de Weſthorp ex utrâque parte, & abuttat uſque in Saltegate.

Habemus ibidem redditum iiid̄. ex dono Ade filii Joħis fil' Kenlb̄nſal, quem Henricus filius Herberti conſuevit ſibi dare.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Henrici filii Herberti de Barkeby, vi ſeliones terre in campo de Barkby, jacentes, ſcil', inter terram abbatis Leyc' & terram Alexandri filii Galfridi de Barkby, cum unâ rodâ prati que jacet inter terram pratum abbatis Leyc' & pratum Joħis Dodman in eſſe. Item dedit nobis iii ſeliones terre in campo de Thurmaſton; ſcil', in Dales qui jacet inter terram Joħis Dodman de Leyc' & terram Will' filii Alani de Thurmaſton; ſcil', ſuper le homeforlong juxta terram Thurſtan juxta aquam, ut in cartâ xxª. Item per eandem cartam dedit nobis idem Henricus liberam paſturam ad unum averium in paſturâ Wiłłi filii Joħis filii Ketilbn̄ de Thurmaſton.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Walteri filii Wiłłi Herbert de Barkby, dimidiam bovatam terre, cum ōibus pertin' ſuis, illam, ſcil', quam Joħes le Whyte nobis dedit, & cartâ ſuâ confirmavit.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Walteri Herbert de Barkby, redditum iis̄. vid̄. quem ſolebat recipere de terrâ Wiłłi le Puher, cum homagiis, wardis, releviis, eſcaetis, &c.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Petri filii Thurſtan de Barkby, ii ſeliones in campo de Barkby; unum, ſcil', ad Brodeſcherd de duabus rodis & dim' juxta ſelionem abbatis, & aliam in monte de Quenib' de duabus rodis & dim' juxta ſelionem abbatis, & totum pratum ſuum quod habet in Eſt Medue.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono ejuſdem Petri, dimidiam acram terre ſuper Tungemare.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Iſeude filie Petri fil' Thurſtan de Barkby, tres acras & unam dim' rodam terre & unam dolam in Hardmedewe, jacentes inter campum de Barkby, ſecundùm bundas & metas.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Petri filii Thurſtan de Barkby, duas rodas terre, quarum una jacet ſuper Sandhul, & altera que ſe extendit in Bedemoram juxta terram Radulphi avunculi ſui; & illud pratum quod ſe extendit ultra ſemitam uſque Sideſton ſuper quod pater ſuus occiſus fuerat, & quiet' clamavit nobis dimidiam acram terre que jacet in Dales, quam pater ſuus quondam tenuit.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Roberti Haliday de Barkeby, quatuor placeas prati in prato de Barkby, ſcil', unam placeam prati jacent' in loco qui vocatur Neſſe, & unam placeam prati jacent' ex parte auſtrali juxta pontem de Anlep, & unam placeam prati in Burnardeſhul, & unam placeam prati in Sutherdole, &c.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Rogeri Haliday de Barkeby, unam acram terre, ſcil', unam dim' acram ad Gretehon, & unam rodam in Raveneſby; & unam rodam ſuper Hunyghull.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Joh̄is le Whyte, unam rodam terre ſuper le Branteclif.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Agnetis fil' Yvonis de Coſington, tres rodas terre, & unam rodam & dim' & quartam partem unius rode prati, in campis de Barkeby jacent', ſecundùm bundas & metas, ut exprimuntur in cartâ XLIII^a.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono & feoffamento Joh̄is Twywell capellani & Joh̄is Anſty capellani, licentiam domini regis & domini ducis Lancaſtrie, & aliorum dominorum quorum intereſt, vis̃. annui redditûs, quondam đni Thome Walch militis. Et mem', quòd habuimus iſtos vis̃. à đno Thomâ Walch de Anlep pro quietâ clamatione piſcacionis piſcarie ſue de Anlep, quam piſcacionem habuimus ex dono Ric' l'Abbe; ſcil', quociens & quando ibi piſcari voluerimus, cum retibus & ſagenis; ſcil', pro iſtâ quietâ clamatione dedit nobis predictus Thomas predictos vis̃. recipiend' de I meſſ' & I virgat' terre in Barkby, unà cum homagio & ſervicio Willi filii Rogeri de Rotheley, qui predict' meſſ' & virgat' terre tenent in dominico. Facta fuit hec mutatio die Veneris proximâ ante feſtum Converſionis Sc̄i Pauli, anno regni regis Ric̄i Secundi poſt Conqueſtum primo. Et jam ſolvit iſtos vis̃.

Mem', quòd nos conceſſimus, & per cartam noſtram confirmavimus, Alexandro filio Walteri capellani de Barkby, & heredibus ſuis, I toftum, III acras terre, & I croftum, &c. redd' nobis per ann' IIs̃. viđ. & II gallinas.

Item nos conceſſimus, & per cartam noſtram confirmavimus, Roberto Mareſcallo de Leyc' & heredibus ſuis, pro homagio & ſervicio ſuo, I virgatam terre, cum pertin' ſuis, &c. redd' nobis per ann' vis̃. viiiđ. ut in cartis inter feoffamenta.

Item nos conceſſimus, & per cartam noſtram confirmavimus, Rogero Haliday filio Alwini de Barkby, pro homagio & ſervicio ſuo, I virgatam terre, illam, ſcil', quam pater ſuus aliquando tenuit, exceptâ unâ acrâ terre quam nobis de ſe & heredibus ſuis quiet' clamavit, &c. redd' nobis annuatim viiis̃. & vi gallinas.

Item conceſſimus, & per cartam noſtram confirmavimus, Joh̄i de Coteſmore & heredibus ſuis, I bovatam terre que fuit Barth', cum dimidio tofto uſque aquam, & dimidio crofto uſque Barkhon, que fuerunt magiſtri Bernardi, pro ſervicio & homagio ſuo, per ſervitium annuum, ſcil', unam libram piperis, vel IIđ.

Habemus confirmationem regis Henrici II. de eccleſiâ de Barkby, cum pertin'.

Require terrarium de terris domini calibus in terrario fratris W. Charyte.

Nota, quòd abbas Leyceſtrie & Rogerus de Somervile ſunt domini de Barkby, Thorp, & Hamulton, ſicut patet in computis collectorum rationabilis auxilii ad primogenitum filium regis, &c. anno regni regis Edwardi Tertii xx°, &c.

Mem', quòd pencio, ſcil', xxs̃. recuperata fuit contra Galfridum Bouer, vicarium de Barkeby, per placitum in curiâ đni regis Ricardi Secundi, termino Paſce, anno regni regis ejuſdem quinto, ut in placito quod eſt in le Chartwary.

Mem', quòd Wills Pour & heredes ſui onerantur de ſolutione vis̃. viđ. per annum Thome de Ros per abbatem Leyc', pro unâ virgatâ terre & dim', & XII acras terre, in Barkby & in Thorp, quas idem Wills tenuit de predicto abbate Leyc', ſicut patet in cartâ XIIII^a in Barkby, & in XV^a. Et ſolvunt abbati XIs̃.

Mem', quòd Wills Maſon de Thorp Barkby tenet nunc de nobis certa terras & tenementa in Barkby & Thorp Barkby, pro quibus ſolvit nobis annuatim liberè xviiis̃. viđ. ſervicium, homagium, & relevium, cum wardis & eſcaetis, &c. ſicut patet in cartâ, & in finali concordiâ. Indè nos aſſignavimus eum ſolvere đno de Ros annuatim nomine noſtro vis̃. viđ.; ſed ipſe faciet ſervitium, homagium, & relevium đno abbati; relevium, ſcil', xviis̃. viđ. ad minus.

Mem', quòd queque bovata terre, cum tenementis que Herbertus filius Jorell, & Thurſtanus & Rađus fratres Herberti, & Joh̄es filius Thome de Coteſmerâ, tenuerunt, debent reddere nobis annuatim IIIIs̃. viđ. ſicut reddere conſueverunt priori & conventui de Trentham, ſicut patet per compoſitionem inter nos.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Radulphi filii ſacerdotis de Barkby, II rodas terre & unam rodam prati & dim', quarum una roda eſt ſuper Waltidis apud albam petram, & altera roda apud Horneſtumb, que ſe extendit uſque Saltegate; & roda prati que eſt in Longedale, & dim' roda prati ad petram.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Walteri le Whytte de Barkeby, dimidiam bovatam terre, cum pertin' ſuis, illam, ſcil', quam Willus fil' Herberti ſibi dedit; que dim' bovat' terre continet in ſe VIII acras & dim' acram prati in Neſſe.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Roberti capellani, fil' Willi le Ferr^r de Leyc', unam virgatam terre, cum pertin', illam, ſcil', quam Robertus Mareſcallus diſronavit per breve Henrici đni regis in curiâ abbatis Leyc' erga Alwinum Haliday, &c. Mem', quòd dedimus iſtam predictam virgatam terre, cum pertin', predicto Roberto Mareſcallo & heredibus ſuis, & per cartam noſtram eis conceſſimus, pro homagio & ſervicio ſuo tenend' de nobis; ipſe & heredes ſui reddend' nobis annuatim pro omni ſervicio ad nos pertinent' dim' marcam.

Habemus ibidem, ex quietâ clamatione Joh̄is de Noverey junioris, unam heyam, cum pertin' ſuis, jacent' inter communem paſturam de Thurmaſton & Thorp ex unâ parte, & communem paſturam de Barkby & Northorp ex alterâ.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono & quietâ clamatione Alexandri filii Walteri capellani, unum toftum quod eſt inter duo tofta Thurſtani, & tres ſeliones terre in culturâ, videlicet, de Brow, & quinque ſeliones terre deſuper toftum Alberni. Item unum croftum quod eſt juxta domum Walteri ſacerdotis.

Habemus in Thorp Barkby, ex dono Petri de Lincoln', medietatem unius crofti quod vocatur Thorpcroft; que medietas jacet uſque occident' cum ſtanno adjacente & foſſato in cormitis illius crofti & ſtagni, cum omnibus pertinentiis. Item habemus, per eandem cartam, & ex dono ejuſdem, redditum XIs̃. & viđ. videlicet, IIIIs̃. de unâ virgatâ terre quam Wills le Powr de ipſo tenet in Barkby; & IIIIs̃. & viđ. de quartâ parte unius virgate & quartâ parte unius bovate terre, cum tofto & crofto, que idem Wills de ipſo tenet in Thorp; & IIs̃. de uno tofto quod Alanus de Thorp de ipſo tenet in Thorp; & XIIđ. de uno tofto quod Ranulphus de Radclif de ipſo tenet in Thorp ſupradictâ.

Habemus in Barkby, ex dono & confirmatione Rogeri de Barkby clerici, annuum redditum XIs̃. & viđ. videlicet, IIIIs̃. de unâ virgatâ terre quam W. Powr de ipſo tenet in Barkby, &c. ut in predictâ cartâ proximè precedente, ſcil', Petri de Lincoln', &c. ut in cartâ LIIII^a.

Habemus in Barkby, ex dono & confirmatione Joh̄is Moleſon & Alicie uxoris ejus, & ex perquiſito fratris Willi Charyte quondam prioris, unum croftum quod jacet inter venellum vocat' le Vicars-lane ex parte orientali, & terram quam Wills Brown tenet ex parte occident', extendens ſe à campo vocat' le Crokfeld ex parte boreali uſque terram Joh̄is Pour ex parte auſtrali, ut in cartâ III in libro de Chartwary. Et totum datum eſt conventui ad duo dat' per dictum W. Charyte. Modò in tenurâ Willi Browne.

Reſolutiones; ſcil', canonicis de Trentham VIII marcas & dim'; đno de Ros vis̃. viđ. Archidiacono Leyc' pro procuratione viis̃. viđ. ob. q̃.

Require conſuetudines tenentium in fine libri.

Habemus ibidem liberam warennam in omnibus terris dominicis noſtris. Et habemus ibi weyfe & ſtreyf. Omnes tenentes noſtri de Barkby venient ad viſum franc' noſtri de Thurmaſton. Et ſolvent ad commune fyn xiiđ. Et omnes ſolvent in ingreſſu domino abbati ſicut poſſint finire cum ipſo.

Quilibet tenens ibidem ad voluntatem domini dabit Domino poſt mortem ſecundum animal.

Mem', quòd habemus in Barkeby xii virgatas terre, ut patet in finali concordiâ inter nos & Robertum Ros; & ſimilitèr de aliis cartis & evidentiis noſtris. Et ſic ſolvimus ex antiquo ad ſcutagium pro xii virgatis terre, ſcil', pro quâlibet virgatâ iiiđ. ſicut pateat ſcrutanti evidentias noſtras.

Mem', quòd ſolebamus habere cccc arietes paſcentes in campis de Barkby, & ultra[1].

Habemus in Thorp Barkby decimam garbarum & feni, lini, & canabi, in campis creſcent', pertinent' ad rectoriam de Barkby. Et habemus totam decimam feni de hadys & leys ibidem, & in Hamulton.

Habemus in Thorp Barkby, ex dono Petri de Lincoln', medietatem unius crofti uſque orientem, que ſe extendit uſque villam de Hamulton, & homagium & ſervicium Galfridi Poreſmouch, &c. Et redditum ixs̃. & viiđ. ob̄. videlicet, unam virgatam terre quam dictus Galfridus tenuit de ipſo in Suth Croxton, & unius tofti & crofti, & trium ſelionum illius tofti & crofti.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Rogeri de Barkby, medietatem unius crofti quod vocatur Thorp croft; que medietas jacet ex parte orientali illius crofti, cum ſtagno adjacente, & cum circuitu illius crofti & ſtagni.

Habemus conceſſionem Ric̃i de Branteby, ut in v^a^ cartâ; & conceſſionem Wiłłi filii Henrici de Thorp, ut in vi^a^ cartâ, ad infoſſand' & ad includend' predictum croftum, &c. ut in cartis.

Habemus conceſſionem, confirmationem, & quietam clamationem Rogeri Wylughby de predicto crofto, cum ſtagno, circuitu ſtagni, cum domibus, foſſatis, & in communâ paſture, vel aque, vel aiſiamenti, &c.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Wiłłi Harbard de Barkby, i rodam terre & dim' in illâ culturâ que vocatur Stoteldole; illam, ſcil', rodam & dimidiam que jacet inter ſemitam fontis ex unâ parte, & terram Rogeri fil' Walteri ex alterâ, in dictâ culturâ, ut in cartâ viii^a^.

Habemus, ex venditione & quietâ clamatione Wiłłi filii Herberti de Barkby, tres acras terre ſuper Caleborge in campo de Thorp, juxta culturam domini de Hamulton, pertinentes ad illam virgatam terre quam tenuit de nobis in villâ de Barkby, per ſervicium xviđ. per annum; ita quòd de cetero pro reſiduo illius virgate terre ipſe & heredes ſui reddant plenum redditum, ſcil', xviđ.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Roberti Puher', & confirmatione Petri de Linc', & conſenſu đni Rob̄ti Ros, unam bovatam terre & dim'; unde habemus finem levatum in curiâ đni regis, &c. ut patet in cartâ vii^a^, cartâ x^a^, & in cartâ xiiii^a^, infra cartas de Barkby.

Habemus in Thorp Barkby & in Hamulton decimam feni de hadys & leys; &, pro decimâ feni pratorum, habemus iii pecias prati nobis aſſignat', &c. ut in decimâ feni, que reddit per ann' viiis̃.

Tenentes ad voluntatem.

Wiłłs Stevens tenet ibidem i croftum valens per annum xxs̃. redd' cum firmâ de Barkeby.

Idem Wiłłs tenet tres acras, i croftum, quondam Joħis Bochar, & redd' xiiđ.; & illud croftum modò includitur priori crofto.

Rob̄tus Maſon tenet i toftum, i bovatam terre; & redd' viis̃. iiiiđ.

Tenentes liberi.

Joħes Thorp tenet i cotagium & iii rodam terre, & redd' liberè viđ. & ſectam curie.

Wiłłs Maſon tenet unum meſſ', unam virgatam terre [& in Barkby[2]]; & redd' xis̃. viđ. homagium, relevium, ſectam curie, maritagium, &c.

Habemus ibidem, pro decimâ feni, viiis̃. per annum, per firmarium noſtrum.

Decima garbarum redditur inter grana.

Mem', quòd Joħes Maſon de Thorp Barkby fecit homagium đno W. Sadyngton, abbati Leyc', in capellâ Sc̄i Auguſtini, die Animarum, anno regni regis H. VI^ti^ poſt Conqueſtum xii°, pro i meſſ', iii bovatis terre, prati, & paſture, in Barkby, & pro i meſſ' & i virgatâ terre in Thorp Barkby, que tenentur de đno abbate per ſervicium vis̃. homagium, wardam, & relevium, in Barkby; & per ſervicium xis̃. homagium, wardam, & relevium, in Thorp Barkby.

Et mem', quòd Wiłłs Maſon de Thorp Barkby fecit homagium đno Joħi Pomeroy abbati Leyc', anno regni Edwardi regis IIII. vii°, pro eiſdem meſſ', terris, &c. in clauſtro Abbathie, coram đno W. Charite tunc priore, Tho' Lathbury armigero, & aliis[3].

Habuimus quondam in Hamulton unam capellam, decimam garbarum & feni, pertinent' ad eccleſiam de Barkby, que, ſecundùm matriculum epiſcopi, debuit deſerviri tribus diebus in ſeptimanâ per matricem eccleſiam.

Item vicarius de Barkby tenebatur ad deſerviend' illos tres dies per ſententiam dat' coram judicibus ordinariis in eccleſiâ Omnium Sc̄orum apud Darby, &c.

Habuimus ibidem unam virgatam terre, que aſſignata fuit capelle Sc̄i Joħis Baptiſte in eâdem villâ, cum tofto uno juxta virgultum, & iiii ſelionibus, & terrâ quam Adelicia tenuit in Thorp de predictâ virgatâ terre; que omnia Paulus abbas & conventus conceſſerunt Herberto filio Jocelini ſacerdotis de Barkby, tenend' de nobis per ſervicium xviđ. per ann', ſicut patet inter cartas feoffamentorum in Hamulton.

Item habuimus x acras terre, ut patet per cartam Wiłłi de Ros, đni de Hamulton, in Barkby; & ſicut patet per finem levatum in curiâ đni regis, & in placito & in finali concordiâ que fuerunt inter nos & Robertum de Ros & Yſabellam uxorem ejus; unde ſolvimus ad ſcutagium quando accidit, pro iſtis x acris, iiiđ. ob̄.

Habemus ibidem, de unâ bovatâ terre & dimidiâ in campis de Thorp & Hamulton, & de unâ culturâ ad caput gardini Ricardi filii Geraldi de Hamulton, & iiii ſelionibus ſuper Blye, & quinque ſelionibus ſuper Brodale, liberum redditum, ſcil', xđ. per annum à Ricardo filio Geraldi de Hamulton, que omnia frater Paulus & conventus Leyc' dederunt dicto Ric̄o & heredibus pro homagio & ſervicio ſuo. Et hoc factum eſt per finalem concordiam in curiâ đni regis.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Walteri filii Wiłłi Herbert de Barkby, iiis̃. liberè exeunt' de unâ bovatâ terre Gerardi filii Ric' de Hamulton, ut patet per cartam; homagium & relevium.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Gerardi de Hamulton, iiiis̃. liberè recipiend' ab ipſo vel heredibus ſuis. Et poſſumus diſtringere heredes ſuos, vel quoſcunque aſſignatos ſuos, pro dicto redditu ubicunque voluerimus in feodo ſuo, ut patet per cartam ſuam.

Habemus jam tantùm viis̃. xđ. liberè in Hamulton à Ricardo Wylloby, qui tenet de nobis in capite, vel heredibus ſuis, homagium & ſervicium, cum eſcaetis, pro certis terris ibidem.

Require pro decimâ feni in decimâ feni infra[4].

Habemus in Thurmodeſton capellam & decimam garbarum & feni pertinent' ad eccleſiam de Barkby, ex dono Roberti le Powr'.

Decima garbarum redd' inter grana.

Et mem', quòd in Thurmodeſton ſunt due capelle; quarum una eſt de feodo comitis Winton', & pertinet ad eccleſiam de Belgrave, que debet deſerviri per capellanum reſidentem per matricem eccleſiam. Altera eſt de feodo comitis Leyc', & pertinet ad eccleſiam de Barkby, que debet deſerviri per matricem eccleſiam tribus diebus in ſeptimanâ, ut patet in matriculo, & ut patet per ſententiam datam coram judicibus ordinariis in eccleſiâ Omnium Sanctorum apud Darby.

Et notandum, quòd, cùm diverſe lites & diſcordie fuerunt inter abbatem Leyc' & rectorem de Belgrave ſuper decimis molendini de Belgrave, & ſuper certis decimis garbarum de Thurmedeſton, & infra fines & limites de Barkby; ſic tandem concordati ſunt, die Lune prox' poſt feſtum Aſſumptionis beate Marie, A. D. 1350; ſcil', quòd rectores eccleſie de Belgrave qui pro tempore fuerint, nomine ſuo & eccleſie ſue de Belgrave predicte, percipient à modo decimas de predicto molendino, & decimas de duabus virgatis terre in campis ville de Thurmedeſton jacentibus, que jam ſunt in tenurâ Joh̄is Alye & Joh̄is Tyrlyngton de Northorp, quorum uterque tenet unam virgatam terre.

---

[1] Charyte's Rentale, fol. xii. a.—xiv. a.

[2] Theſe words are an interlineation in the original.

[3] Charyte's Rentale, fol. cxxxviii. b. cxxxix. a.

[4] Ibid. fol. lx. b.

Prefati religioſi abbas & conventus, nomine ſuo & monaſterii ſui, percipiēt & penès ſe retinebant veras & integras decimas de quâdam culturâ que vocatur Clipſtherne, de quibus priùs fuit diſcordia, ut patet per compoſitionem. Et mem', quòd predicta cultura vocata Clipſtherne jam includitur in boſco noſtro de Stokkyng, ut dicitur.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono fundatoris noſtri, iii carucatas terre & i virgatam terre; ſcil', xiii virgatas terre in villanagio, ut patet in cartâ originali Roberti Boſſu fundatoris noſtri, & ex confirmatione regis Henrici II. &c. quarum quiſque liberè reddere ſolebat per annum xii s̄. i gallinam, & opa.

Item habemus ibidem, ex dono Petronelle comitiſſe Leyc', cum corpore ſuo, totum pratum ſuum de Thurmedeſton vocat' Belholme, &c. ut in cartâ ſuâ primâ.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Henrici de Anlep, iiii virgatas terre, cum capitali meſſuagio, ut in cartâ xxi^{a}, ubi jam moratur Witts Skeyth. Nota, quòd agitur de terrâ Henrici Anlep predict' à cartâ xi^{a} uſque ad cartam xxv^{am} incluſivè; in quâ habemus quietam clamationem Mariorie uxoris ſue de predict' iiii virgatis terre, ut ratione dotis ſue.

Habemus totum jus & clameum, dominium, & ſervitium, quod Rogerus de Quincy habuit in iiii virgatis, unâ bovatâ, & x buttis terre, in Thurmaſton, quas tunc habuit ibi, & modò prior de Caldwell, &c. ut in cartâ vi^{a}. Inquire pro illo ſervicio.

Require pro decimâ feni in decimâ feni poſtea.

Habemus terram ibidem, cum ſequelâ eam tenentium, & domos aliquorum liberè tenentium, ſicut patebit inferiùs, cum viſu franciplegii iiii hominum prioris de Caldwell, quas Henricus abbas emit de Rogero comite Winton' pro xxxiii marcis, ut patet in cartâ vi^{a}.

Habemus octo ſolidatos redditûs, quos Henricus Abbas emit de Witto Kyforde pro vi marcis.

Habemus, ex dono Rogeri Quinci comitis de Winton', homagium & ſervicium Elie de Lyndeſey & Alicie uxoris ſue, de iiii virgatis terre quas dicti Elias & Alicia uxor ejus nobis dederunt cum corporibus, cum omnibus aſiamentis, libertatibus, & liberis conſuetudinibus, cum viſu franciplegii, homagio, ſervicio, & omnibus aliis eſcaetis, ut in cartâ v^{a}.

Habemus confirmationem Rogeri Quincy de iiii bovatis terre quas Henricus Anlep dedit nobis, cum toftis, croftis, & omnibus aliis pertinentiis.

Habemus quietam clamationem ejuſdem, nobis fact' & tenentibus noſtris in predictâ terrâ vel toftis manentibus, de viſu franciplegii, cum omnibus aliis ſectis que de terrâ vel pro terrâ exigi potuit.

Habemus quietam clamationem eiſdem factam Henrici de Anlep, de wardâ Foreſte vocat' Northhaye, que de jure ſpectabat ad virgatam terre quam dictus Henricus emit de Roberto filio Thurſtani.

Item habemus diverſas parcellas terrarum & pratorum ex diverſis donatoribus, ut patet per cartas, &c.

Habemus, ex dono Henrici filii Herberti de Barkby, iiii ſeliones terre, cum paſturâ xx ovium & unius averii, & totum pratum Ade Ketilborn in Neſſe.

Habemus, ex dono Witti de Galby, ii rodas & dim' & i ſelionem.

Habemus, ex dono Thurſtani filii Witti de Thurmaſton, ii virgatas terre de feodo de Barkby, quas Ada Ketilborn de patre ſuo tenuit, & pater ſuus Petro de Lincoln' d̄no de Barkby dedit, & ipſe abbathie Leyc' dedit; unde habemus finem levatum in curiâ domini regis de unâ carucatâ terre, cum pertin', &c. ut patet in finali concordiâ inter nos & Robertum Ros, &c. ut in Barkby habetur. Et ſolvimus ad ſcutagium, quum accidit, pro quâlibet virgatâ iſtius carucate, xiii đ.

Mem', quòd dn̄s Wittmus de Cloun abbas & dn̄s W. Keyrby habuerunt wardas heredum terrarum, &c. in Thurmaſton, que nuper fuerunt W. Stevyns, ſicut patet in Rotulo fratris G. de Leyc', in computo ſuo de ingreſſibus, releviis, &c. Et dn̄s W. Keyrby vendidit wardam & heredes predictarum terrarum pro xl. lī. ſicut patet in quodam Rotulo.

Item dn̄s Abbas habuit wardam filii Thome Fabri de Thurmaſton x annis, & vii s̄. vi đ. per annum, ſicut patet in Rotulo de ingreſſibus.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Ric̄i filii Herberti, ii acras prati juxta dominicum pratum abbatis Leyc'.

Item habemus, ex dono ejuſdem, ii acras prati jacentes juxta ſtagnum molendini de Burſtall.

Habemus, ex dono Robert̄i filii Thurſtani, unam partem prati ad Limeſtalende.

Habemus duos ſeliones terre in wong que jacet inter terram Thurſtani Botle & terram Thurſtani juxta aquam, ex dono Witti filii Joh̄is filii Ketilbern.

Habemus, ex dono Joh̄is Ketilbern, ii rodas & dim' terre.

Habemus, ex dono ejuſdem, i placeam prati voc' Holm, jacent' in prato boreali de Thurmaſton, redd' indè annuatim i đ. Et habemus quietam clamationem ejuſdem commune paſture illius placee ex alterâ parte Sore voc' le Hurſt, in Northorp-more, ſic quòd licet nobis includere, infoſſare, & ſtagnum levare.

Habemus, ex dono ejuſdem, i acram terre, & ii rodas terre, duos ſeliones, & dimidiam acram prati, jacent' in Neſſe, benè limitat'.

Habemus, ex dono ejuſdem, ii ſeliones jacentes pro i rodâ & dimid'.

Mem', quòd Thurmaſton reddit xii lī. xix s̄. iiii đ. q̄. iiii flect', viii raſus gingeberi, ii flores roſarum, & quarterium piperis, & ret', ſicut patet in Rotulo Rogeri Pynchebek, cujus dat' eſt anno Domini m°ccclxxxx°vii°.

Habemus, ex dono ejuſdem, dim' acram jacent' in Overfurlong.

Habemus quietam clamationem ejuſdem de dimidiâ acrâ prati jacent' ſuper Brodwong.

Habemus, ex dono ejuſdem, v rodas quas Matilda Dodeman tenuit.

Habemus, ex dono ejuſdem, iii rodas & ii rodas terre, & unam placeam prati, ſub Lawnhath.

Habemus quietam clamationem ejuſdem de quinque rodis & dim' terre in Honyakar.

Habemus donationem & quietam clamationem de medietate unius molendini ventritici, cum medietate ſitûs ejuſdem, per Wittm filium Petri Carpentarii.

Habemus, ex dono Joh̄is filii Witti Avicie de Thurmedeſton, dim' acram prati jacent' in prato de Thurm' ſub Anlep, unde ſolvimus annuatim collegio Sc̄i Mart̄i Oxon'[1] i đ.; modò in tenurâ Joh̄is Drayton.

Habemus, ex dono ejuſdem, unum toftum, cum pertin', quondam Samuelis de Thurmedeſton.

Habemus, ex dono Witti Alnath de Thurm', unam rodam jacentem in le Ryefurlong.

Habemus, ex dono & quietâ clamatione Roberti Preſbyteri, filii Thome Preſt de Thurmaſton, paſturam unius virgate, cum omnibus pertinentibus, in campis de Thurm' & Barkby.

Habemus, ex dono Rob̄erti Wyſman, tres rodas prati in Longrake.

Habemus, ex dono Roberti filii Bertrami de Helegate, dim' acram & dim' rodam prati.

Habemus, ex dono Simonis filii Witti Oſmundi, i placeam terre, cum pertin', in Thurm', ex oppoſito le haw inter terram canonicorum & terram quam Hugo Barry aliquando tenuit.

Mem' de uno ſelione ſuper le Langelondes in cartis lxi, lxii, lxiii.

Habemus, ex dono Witti filii Martini de Hertford, i toftum, cum edificiis & pertin', & iii ſeliones terre ſuper Longelondes; que tofta & iii ſeliones fuerunt Samuelis Molendinarii. Et habemus i rodam prati jacentem juxta Bellholm.

Habemus, ex dono Roberti capellani, filii Thome Preſt, viginti ſeliones & vii rodas prati, cum paſturâ, i bovatam terre, &c.

Mem', quòd d̄nus Willm̄s de Cloune, abbas mon' beate Marie de Pratis Leyc', conceſſit Rob̄to Foſter de Thurmaſton, hered' & aſſignatis ſuis, cuſtodiam & maritagium Joh̄is filii Witti de Morton de Thurmaſton, qui in manibus ejuſdem d̄ni abbatis devenerat ratione minoris etatis dicti Joh̄is, filii & heredis dicti Witti de

---

[1] See page 7.

Morton, pro certis terris & tenementis de dicto đno abbate tent' in villâ de Thurmaſton, &c. habend' & tenend' dictam cuſtodiam & maritagium predicti Joħis à die confectionis preſentium uſque ad plenam etatem ipſius Joħis, ſine contradictione ſive impedimento dicti đni abbatis, ſeu alicujus alterius nomine ſuo quoviſmodo. Conceſſit etiam idem dn̄s abbas, quòd, ſi predictus Joħes infra etatem decedat, ſicut quòd Agnes & Joħa ſorores Joħis ſupradicti, ſeu altera illarum, ſuccedant ſeu ſuccedat in hereditatem dictarum terrarum & tenementorum, &, ratione minoris etatis earundem, ſeu earum alterius, tam cuſtodia quàm maritagium dictarum Agnetis & Alicie in manibus ejuſdem đni abbatis iterum cadere debuiſſet, quòd, dictâ minore etate non obſtante, cuſtodia vel maritagium dictarum Agnetis & Alicie, ſeu earum alterius, dicto Roberto cedatur uſque ad plene etatis earundem, ſeu earum alterius, completionem. In cujus rei teſtimonium, tam ſigillum dicti đni abbatis quàm ſigillum dicti Roberti hiis indenturis alternatim ſunt appenſa. Dat' in abbathiâ Leyc', in feſto Sc̄i Barnabi Apoſtoli, anno regni regis Edwardi Tertii poſt Conqueſtum triceſimo anno, ut patet per indenturam inter partes.

Thurmaſton reddebat xxiiii lī. xv s̄.; modò xii lī. xiiii s̄.

Parcelle liberi redditûs per diverſos donatores nobis allat'.

Habemus de Waltero de Evyngton iii s̄. quartam partem unius libre piperis, & i flectam, ſcil', de illo tenemento quod Joħes Dodeman & Wiƚƚs Morker tenent ii s̄. & quartam partem i libre piperis. De ten' quod Thomas filius Elie capellani tenet v đ. Et de unâ acrâ terre quam Wiƚƚs filius Avicie tenet ii đ. Et de tenemento quod Thomas Preſt tenet iii đ. Et de i ſelione quem Wiƚƚs de Dauby tenet ii đ. Et de tenemento quod Wiƚƚs filius Oſmundi tenet i flectam, cum omn' product', homag', ſervic', &c.

Item habemus, ex dono Joħis Ketilbern, ii đ. ob̄.; videlicet, de Simone Molendinario, i đ. pro viii rod' & dim' terre. De Agnete uxore Walteri Prepoſiti i đ. pro iii acris. Et de Hawyſâ Dodman & heredibus W. Morker ob̄. pro dim' acre terre, cum predict' homag', &c.

Item habemus, ex dono Wiƚƚi filii Joħis Ketilbern, x đ. annuatim de i meſſ' & ſeptem rodis terre que Henricus Barcarius quondam tenuit; & homagium & totum ſervitium Joħis Dodman & W. Morkar.

Item habemus, ex dono Joħis Ketilbern, i đ. annui redditûs de Roberto Wyſman de i prato in Neſſe, cum homagio predicti Roberti.

Item habemus, ex dono predicti Joħis, i đ. ob̄. q̃. & octavam partem i libre piperis, & i flectam, de unâ bovatâ terre quondam Joħis Evyngton.

Item habemus, ex dono ejuſdem Joħis, unam placeam que aliquando fuit capitale meſſ' ſuum, que jacet inter toftum Thome Broun & aquam de Sore, & in quodam ſervitario quod jacet juxta aquam de Sore. Et totum jus & clameum quod habuit in ſervicium unius radicis gingeberi adpēt' de Michaele Carpent' pro iii acris terre; & in ſervicium unius clavi gariefoli de Simone de Hamilton, pro dim' acr' terre, & in toto dominico & ſervicio quod habuit in villâ de Thurmodeſton.

Item habemus, ex dono Joħis Ketilbern, i đ. & i florem roſe de Wiƚƚo Oſmund; & i dolam prati in Langworth quantum in ipſo prato ad i virgatam terre pertinet.

Item habemus, ex dono ejuſdem Joħis, ii đ. ob̄. de Wiƚƚo filio Avicie, pro vi rodis terre, ſcil', jac' in le Wong; & dim' acram prati uſque Onlep.

Item habemus, ex dono ejuſdem, i đ. & quadrant' de iii acris terre quas Petrus Carpentarius tenet.

Item habemus, ex dono ejuſdem, iii đ. ob̄. & iiii partes i libre piperis, pro i bovatâ terre quondam Wiƚƚi Alnath, cum homagio.

Item habemus, ex dono ejuſdem Joħis, homagium & ſervicium Wiƚƚi Sparow pro tenemento quod idem Wiƚƚs tenet de ipſo, videlicet, i đ. adpēt'.

Item habemus, ex dono ejuſdem, vi đ. de unâ bovatâ terre quondam Yſabelle de Glenfeld.

Item habemus, ex dono Gerardi de Hamulton, totum jus & clameum nativitatis ſeu villanagii de Symone de Thurmaſton, filii Regin' Cole de Hamulton, & de totâ ſequelâ ejus, & de omnibus catallis ejus.

Habemus viſum franc', cum omnibus libertatibus ad viſum pertin', ex dono Rog̃i Quincy, de tenentibus iiii virgatarum terre Henrici Anlep, de tenentibus iiii virgatas terre quondam Elie Lynſey, de tenentibus iiii virg' & dim' prioris de Caldwell, & de diverſis aliis liberè tenentibus in Thurmaſton, ſicut patet in cartis ejuſdem Rogeri comitis ibidem; & quas quidem libertates, cum ceteris, Henricus abbas emit de predicto comite pro xxxiii marcis, ſicut patet in le Pyn.

Item habemus, ex dono Edwardi filii Joħis Lewyn, partem unius tofti que fuit Jordanis perſone de Carlton; & totum terram & ten' quod fuit patris ſui Joħis Lewyn in Thurmodeſton.

Item habemus quietam clamationem Thome filii Preſt de xxiii ſelionibus & vii rodis prati.

Item habemus quietam clamationem Wiƚƚi filii Joħis Lewyn de omnibus terris, tenementis, & redditibus, que pater ſuus tenuit in Thurmodeſton per ſervic' iii s̄. vi đ. & ii s̄. ii đ. ut in cartâ centeſimâ. Nota benè hanc cartam, que multa continet.

Item habemus, ex dono Thurſton de Galby, ob̄. de dim' acr' prati quondam Hugonis Fabri.

Item habemus, ex dono Roberti Fabri & Agnetis Qᵉnyl, iiii đ. pro iii rodis terre & i rod' prati.

Item habemus quietam clamationem Roberti filii Regin' de dim' virgat' terre, cum pertin', quam Joħes le Wyn & Matilda uxor ejus de eo tenuerunt, cum homagio & relevio.

Item habemus, ex conceſſione & quietâ clamatione Thurſtani de Stotton & Matilde uxoris ejus, x đ. de Wiƚƚo filio Avicie de Thurm', de uno tofto, cum pertin', quod jacet inter toftum quod Regin' Sturtſul aliquando tenuit & toftum quod Robertus Thomas aliquando tenuit, & abuttat ſuper altam viam.

Require terrarium de terris dominicalibus & de ii virgatis terre, de quibus rector de Belgrave habet decimas, & de unâ virgatâ terre W. Belgrave, in terrario fratris W. Charyte.

Summa acrarum terre & pratorum ex dono fundatoris noſtri & aliorum benefactorum in campis de Thurmaſton.

Summa acrarum terre de dono fundatoris, ſ. tⁱñ capit' & unius virgate terre, $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{xii}}$viii acre, iii rod' & vii buttis; ſumma acrarum prati xxv acre.

Summa acrarum terre de iiii virgatis terre de dono Elie Lyndeſey, $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{iii}}$ acre i rod' terre; ſumma acrarum prati xiii acre.

Summa acrarum terre de iiii virgatis terre de dono Henrici Anlep, $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{iiii}}$iii acre, iii rod' & dim'; ſumma acrarum prati xxi acre ii rod'.

Summa acrarum unius virgate terre adquiſite per Wiƚƚm Blakeberd, nativum noſtrum, xvii acre; ſumma acrarum prati ii acre.

Summa omnium acrarum terre ccccxxviii acre per minus, &c. Summa omnium acrarum prati, $\overset{\text{xx}}{\text{iii}}$ acre & dim', & dim' rod'.

Tenentes ad voluntatem.

Thomas Port' tenet i meſſ', ii tofta, ii virgat' terre & dim', & i pyle ad finem ejuſdem ſelionis; & redd' xxvi s̄.; opera.

Rogerus Broxby tenet i virgatam terre & dim'; & redd' xii s̄.; opera.

Wiƚƚs Skeyth tenet capitale meſſ', iii tofta, unam virgatam terre & i quart'; & redd' xxvi s̄. ii đ.; opera.

Thomas Hynde (modò Ric̄us Turton) tenet i meſſ', i toftum, ii virgat' terre & quart', & redd' xviii s̄. x đ.; opera.

Thomas Walkar tenet i meſſ' & i rod' prati juxta Belholm; & ii rod' terre, quarum una jacet ſuper Brownſol, & alia extendens à Lampnars juxta commune balke; & redd' vi s̄.

Joħes Alye tenet i meſſ', i croftum, ii virgat' terre; & redd' xvii s̄. i gallinam; opera. (Modò predictus Joħes Aly accepit illud meſſ', toftum, & virgat' terre, per rotul' curie, que Robertus Lambert tenuit.)

Robertus Lambert tenet i meſſ', i croftum, i virgatam terre, redd' ix s̄. vi đ. i gallum; opera.

Joħes Dreyton tenet ii meſſ', iii virgat' terre; redd' xxviii s̄. viii đ. iiii gallinas.

Joħes Tyrlyngton tenet i meſſ', ii virgat' terre, redd' xv s̄. i gallinam.

Wiƚƚs Schankton tenet i meſſ', ii crofta, ii virgat' terre, & i acram; redd' xix s̄. i đ. iiii gallinas.

Robertus Reynald tenet i meſſ', iii crofta, ii virgat' terre & dim'; redd' xxviis̃. viiiđ. iii gallinas.

Ricardus Gybſon tenet i meſſ' & i croftum, i virgat' terre & dim'; redd' xvs̃. iiiiđ. ii gallinas.

Wil̄l̄s Skeyth tenet unum cotagium, quod Joh̄es Lynle nuper tenuit; redd' iiis̃. i gallinam.

Joh̄es Reynold tenet le Mylncroft; & redd' ad voluntatem xvđ.

Brodmedow redd' xviiis̃.; & dividitur inter diverſos tenentes noſtros.

Summa redditûs xilī. xviis̃. viđ.; preter unam peciam prati, que eſt in tenurâ Joh̄is Hanſon de Burſtal, Seyntmarymedow vocat', valent' per ann' xs̃.

Summa virgat' terre xxii & dim', una acra, & iii rode.

Liberi tenentes.

Eccleſia de Syſton, pro ii acris terre modò in tenurâ Joh̄is Lye, redd' iđ.

Prior de Caldwel tenet iiii meſſ', iiii virg' & dim', per ſervic' viiđ. & ſect' curie.

Joh̄es Draper tenet in capite i meſſ' & i quart' terre, cum prato, quondam W. Atthehall; redd' iis̃. iiiđ. homagium & ſervicium.

Idem Joh̄es tenet iii meſſ' & dim' virgat' terre, quondam predicti W. Atthehall; & redd' viiđ. ob̄.

Idem Joh̄es tenet ii meſſ' & i quart' terre, cum prato quondam predicti W. Atthehall, nuper Amicie Laundr'; redd' iis̃. iiiđ.

Idem Joh̄es tenet i meſſ' & vi acras terre & dim', nuper predicte Amicie; redd' iis. iiiđ. & tenet per ſervicium militare.

Idem Joh̄es tenet i meſſ' nuper dicte Amicie; redd' per ann' ii raſynes[1] zinzeberi, & i flectam, i bozon'.

Idem Joh̄es tenet i meſſ' & dim' virgat' terre nuper dicte Amicie; redd' viiđ. ob̄.

Summa, viiis̃. & relevium viiis̃. ad minus.

Indè allocantur dicto Joh̄i Draper iiiis̃. pro i tenemento & ii rod' terre, & i rod' & dim' prati, quondam Wil̄l̄i Blakberd.

Mem', quòd Rob' Kyng modò tenet i meſſ', v toſta, dim' virgat' terre, i quart', iii acras & i rod' terre, de predictis terris quondam Joh̄is Draper; relevium iis̃.

Item Joh̄es Bylt de Baro modò tenet i meſſ', ii toſta, dim' virgatam terre, i quart', iii acras & i rod' terre, de predictis terris quondam Joh̄is Draper; relevium xxiđ.

Mem', quòd dictus Joh̄es Draper fecit homagium ſuum đno Wyl̄l̄o Sadynton, abbati Leyc', in capellâ Sc̄i Auguſtini, die Animarum, anno regni regis Henrici Sexti poſt Conqueſtum xii°, coram Joh̄e Mayell, Ric̄o Taylord, Wyl̄l̄o Friſsby, & aliis, pro dictis terris & tenementis. Et tenet per ſervicium militare, ſicut patet in Rotulo curiali, cujus dat' eſt in anno regni regis H. Quinti vii°.

Prepoſitus de Shene tenet i virgat' terre cum crofto; redd' iiđ. & i florem roſe.

Quere terrarium unius virgate terre in terrario fratris Wil̄l̄i Charyte.

Joh̄es Belgrave tenet de nobis in capite dim' virgat', quondam Joh̄is Swynton, nuper Thome Maundwyle; redd' iđ. ob̄. q^a^, & octavam partem i libre piperis, & i flectam.

Idem, pro dim' acr' prati in Longholme, & dim' acr' inter pratum noſtrum & pratum quondam Reginaldi Fabri, redd' q^a^.

Idem tenet unam bovatam in Northorp-feld, quondam Thome Maundvyle, nuper in tenurâ W. Sowter; redd' iiiiđ.

Ep̄s Lyncoln', pro i toſto & dim' virgat' terre, redd' iiiđ. & i quarter' piperis.

Rob' Rewars, pro dim' acr' prati vocat' Moldehalle-acr', redd' q^a^ & ſect' curie.

Joh̄es Reynolds, pro vi rod' terre, quondam Wil̄l̄i Bateman, redd' iđ. ob̄.; modò ep̄s Linc'.

Joh̄es Stanton tenet de nobis in capite pro iii virgatis terre, &c. quondam Joh̄is Morton, poſtea Ric̄i Hotoſt; redd' vs̃. iiiđ. ob̄. un' quart' piperis, & i flect', cum ſect' curie; ſcil', pro i meſſ', ii bovatis terre, & xxviii acris & dim' terre, & iii rodis prati, quondam H. Morcar.

Idem Joh̄es Stanton, pro dim' acr' quondam predicti Henrici Morcar, ob̄.

Idem Joh̄es, pro dim' acrâ terre quondam predicti H. Morcar, iiđ.

Idem, pro v acris, quondam W. Wyſman, aliàs vocat' Preſt, & pro toto prato illius dim' virgat' terre quam Rogerus de Coſyngton tenuit, ixđ.

Idem, pro unâ peciâ prati in Neſhe, continent' v rodas prati, redd' iđ.

Dn̄s de Northfolk, pro i bovat' terre, redd' iđ. flectam, & roſam.

Willm̄s Stevyns (tenet in capite), pro i meſſ', i virgat', & dim' acr' prati, pro crofto & bovat' terre & ix rod'; redd' iiiis̃. iiiđ.

Summa, vs̃. iiiđ. ob̄. ut ſuprà.

Summa redditûs liberi, xviis̃. ob̄.

Summa totalis, xiilī. xiiiis̃. viiđ. ad minus.

Mem', quòd relicta Wal̄t̄i Fabri de Thurmaſton ſolvit abbati, pro wardâ filii ſui, pro predictis meſſ', i virgat' terre, predict' acr' prati & terr', redd' de iis̃. viiđ. cum ſect' curie; videlicet, pro i meſſ' & i virgat' terre & dim' acr' prati, xxđ. ob̄. & pro crofto & bov' terre viđ. & pro xi rod' terre iiiđ. ob̄. Summa, iis̃. viiđ. Et ret' homagium & ſect'.

Wil̄l̄us Shankton, pro i acr' terre quondam Thome Bapt', redd' iiđ. ob̄. & ret'.

Habemus viſum franc' de omnibus tenentibus n̄ris, cum omnibus libertatibus ad eum pertinentibus; ad quem venient omnes n̄ri tenentes de Thurmaſton, de Hows, de Kirkby Bellers, Gadſby, Croxton, Quenyboro, Barkby, Thorp Barkby, Coſington; tenentes prioris de Caldwell. Et ſolvunt ad commune fyn, ſcil', xiiis̃. tenentes de Thurmaſton; tenentes de Barkby xiiđ.; tenentes de Quenyboro xiiđ.; tenentes prioris de Caldwell viiđ.

Summa totalis, xiiilī. viiis̃. iiđ. ob̄.

Habemus ibi weyf & ſtreyf.

Omnes tenentes noſtri de Thurmaſton debent ſolvere ingreſſum đno abbati ſecundùm quod poſſent finire cum ipſo; & poſt deceſſum ſolvere unum hariotum đno abbati.

Habemus quietam clamationem Rogeri de Quincy de omni demandâ, ſect' curie, & de toto jure ſuo quod habuit, &c. ſuper viſum franc', &c. que à nobis vel tenentibus n̄ris in feodo ſuo exigebat, &c.

Habemus ibidem warennam in omnibus terris dominicalibus n̄ris.

Mem' de conſuetudinibus tenentium, ut in Rentalibus le Pyn, Geryn, & Bathe, &c. ut notatur in fine iſtius libri.

Mem', quòd abbas Leyc' tenet omnia terras & ten' ſua in Thurmaſton in puram & perpetuam eleemoſinam, & non p̱ ſervic'; de omnibus auxiliis regum dandis pro primogenitis faciend' milit' quieta; ſicut patet in libro placitorum.

Notand', quòd omnes tenentes noſtri de Thurmaſton & de Northorp, prout tenentes terram de Bordelond, debent levare fenum đni abbatis in Seyntmaremedow, quod modò eſt in tenurâ Joh̄is Hanſon de Burſtal, ut dicitur; & facere certa opera & conſuetudines, &c. ut in fine libri.

Mem', quòd v° die menſis Octob', anno regni regis H. V^ti^, &c. attachiati fuerunt due boves & duo bovioli per feod' lib', qui feloniter fugati fuerunt, & deliberati celerario Abbathie.

Mem', quòd ſolvimus decimas regi pro releviis & redditibus n̄ris in Thurmaſton, & pro operibus xii virgatarum ibidem, ſicut patet in taxationibus de redditibus omnium religioſorum in Leyceſtriâ.

Reſolutiones; ſcil',

Rob̄to Kyng & Joh̄i Byll iiiis̃. iiiđ.

Collegio Sc̄i Mart̄i[2] Oxon' iđ.[3]

---

[1] Compare with Cowel's Interpreter, voce Raſe.

[2] It has been ingeniouſly ſuggeſted that the words "Collegio Sc'i Mart'i Oxon'" may allude to a fraternity of prieſts in St. Martin's (that is, Carfax) church, Oxford. Tanner, however, does not mention any thing of the kind.—And it moſt probably is intended for Merton College, who had, and ſtill have, ſome property at Barkby Thorpe.

[3] Charyte, fol. cxliv. b.

II. BARROW, MONTSORELL, QUERNDON, WODHOWS.

Habemus in Baroo eccleſiam, ex dono Ranulphi comitis Ceſtrie, & ex confirmatione H. regis II. cum decimis garbarum & feni, boſci, calcis, petrarum venditarum, lini, canabi, & piſcarie, &c. & cum capellâ de Querndon, omnia in uſus proprios, ſicut patet in matriculo ep̄i, in his verbis: 'Eccleſie de Barow patronus abbas Leic', habens eam in proprios uſus, ex conceſſione W. quondam Linc'. Vicarius Wiłłus inſtitutus per H. nunc Lincoln'. Et percipit, nomine vicarie ſue, medietatem omnium proventuum altaris, & tertiam partem decimarum garbarum. Et faciet deſerviri eccleſiam ipſam; & ſuſtinebit pro eâ onera epiſcopalia & archidiaconalia. Et habet capellam de Quernedon, que debet deſerviri tribus diebus in ebdomadâ per matricem eccleſiam. Monachi de Sc̄o Severo percipiunt ab antiquo unam partem decimarum bladi de dominico comitis Ceſtrie in Barow, cum omnibus minutis decimis provenientibus de curiâ comitis. Item percipiunt duas partes bladi de terrâ Wiłłi Blundel & Hugonis Cantoris, & de novis bondis comitis in Barow. Item totam decimarum garbarum de novis aſſartis de Monſorell, unde non debent percipere niſi tertiam partem. Item percipiunt omnem decimam garbarum & minutarum decimarum de Wodhows, exceptis oblationibus in diebus feſtivis & denariis Petri, & ceragio [1].'

Dona diverſorum, ſicut hìc per cartas patet eorum.

Habemus in Baro, ex dono Ranulphi comitis Ceſtrie, eccleſiam, cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, & cum unâ carucatâ terre in Querendonâ & in Barow, de dominico dicti Ranulphi comitis Ceſtrie, cum omnibus libertatibus & conſuetudinibus, ut patet in predictâ cartâ.

Habemus, ex conceſſione & confirmatione Hugonis comitis Ceſtrie, omnia contenta in predictâ cartâ nobis conceſſa & confirmata, ut patet in ſecundâ cartâ. Et poſtea per eandem ſecundam cartam habemus, ex dono illius Hugonis, tres carettas errantes in boſco de Querendonâ in perpetuum, ad capienda ligna ad focum noſtrum, ut patet in ſecundâ cartâ.

Habemus, ex dono Hugonis de Albeni comitis Arundell, omnes decimas majores & minores infra limites parochie de Barow, ut patet in iiii^{a} cartâ.

Habemus, ex dono Hugonis Herbert de Barow, unam placeam terre, cum pertin', jacentem inter meſſ' dictorum canonicorum ex unâ parte occ' & meſſ' ſuum, que quidem placea continet in longitudine quantum ſe extendit grangia dictorum canonicorum, & in latitudine ad unum caput duos pedes, & ad aliud caput duos pedes, & per medium duos pedes. Item per eandem cartam poſſumus licitè ingredi curiam ſuam cum ſtal' ad grangiam manerii cooperand' & reparand', quotieſcunque opus fuerit, abſque damno ſuo vel aliorum, ut in cartâ vii^{a}.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Hugonis Herberd, unam rodam terre arabilis, jacentem inter terram noſtram ſuper unam culturam que vocatur Rederodes, in eſcambium pro unâ rodâ terre arabilis in campo aquilonari, illâ ſcil' que jacet apud Bidewell juxta terram ſuam.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Joh̄is Stefani Ale Raper de Baro, unam acram terre & dim', cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis, que jacent ultra ſemitam.

Habemus, ex conceſſione & renunciatione abbatis Sc̄i Severi & ejuſdem loci conventûs in Normaniâ, omnimodas decimas quas ipſi habuerunt in parochiâ de Baro, [2] ſicut patet per compoſitionem, reddendo eis annuatim lx s̄. Item relaxationem & quietam habemus clamationem predictorum lxs̄. de eiſdem abbate & conventu. Et ſervicia hominum ſuorum tenent' de ipſis in manerio de Baro habemus, ſicut patet per cartam in le Chartwary.

Item habemus, ex venditione, conceſſione, & dimiſſione predictorum abbatis & conventûs, omnes decimas in parochiâ de Baro, quas ipſi habuerunt, & relaxationem predict' lxs̄. pro quibus ſolvimus eis ſexaginta marcas.

Barow, decima reddebat xiiiilī. modò xiiilī.

Habemus rectoriam de Baro, ex dono Ranulphi comitis Ceſtrie, prout ſuprà; & i virgatam terre de glebâ ejuſdem; ac eciam vi virgatas terre in dominico, ii acras & dim' terre, & dim' rod' & i rod' prati, de terris quondam Ric̄i Saucer. Et dict' terr' continet cxi acras & iii rodas.

Et percipiebamus ex antiquo, de quodam molendino ventritico cujuſdam Egidii de Evyngton nobis conceſſ', pro decimâ ejuſdem molendini, & de molendino aquatico ib̄m, decimam proficuûm indè provenientium.

Et tam prata quàm garba ibi decimantur in campis.

Et mem', quòd quondam habuimus ibidem x cotagia, & quodlibet cotagium reddere ſolebat per annum totum redditum, unum xxiđ. aliud xxiđ. aliud iis̄. viđ. aliud iis̄. viđ. Et alia v cotagia, quodlibet eorum xiiđ. quorum omnium quodlibet eorum redderet ad Natale Domini ii gallinas, & ad Paſca xx ova. Et quodlibet cotagium meteret i die ad cibum proprium, & i die ad cibum abbatis; & faceret fenum i die ad cibum proprium, & i die ad cibum abbatis; & portaret taſſum abbatis i die, & indè haberet dictarum p'ſ'arum quidquid ſervitium nobis pertinet ex antiquâ conſuetudine; tamen, pro defectu tenentium, reſpectuatur & ſuffert^{r}. Modò habemus ibi ñ tm̄ duo cotagia, que reddunt vis̄. viiiđ.

Require conſuetudines tenentium in fine libri.

Wiłłs Saxulby tenet ibi rectoriam noſtram, vi virgatas terre, & columbare, i croftum continent' cx acras, ii cotagia, decimas lini & canabi infra villam, cum ceteris decimis minutis, ſcil' omnibus aucis, porcellis, &c. & unam peciam prati in Baroholme, valent' per annum xiiis̄. ivđ. Item habet decimas feni de prato ducis Norfolcie, & de pratis dominicalibus domini de Chamberleyn, que decima valet per annum vis̄. viiiđ. Item habemus in pecuniâ xiis̄. pro decimâ feni de Baroholm. Et redd' nobis liiis̄. iiiiđ. pro omnibus.

Wiłłus Parker tenet ibidem decimas garbarum & feni de hads & leys, lini & canabi, in campo auſtrali; redd' viiilī.

Decima molendini redd' vis̄. viiiđ.
Decima piſcarie redd' . . . . . [2].
Decima calcis redd' . . . . . . [2].
Decima petrarum venditarum redd' . . . . [2].
Summa, xilī.

Habemus ibi viſum franciplegii, & quicquid ad viſum franciplegii pertinet; ad quem venient tenentes noſtri de Baro & Querndon, cum tenente vicarii ibidem. Et ſolvunt ad commune fyn; ſcil', tenentes de Baro iiđ. vel iiiiđ. tenentes de Querndon viiiđ. Habemus ibi weyf & ſtreyf, & gregem ovium.

Habemus decimas feni per cumulos de omnibus hadys & leys que falcantur; & de hiis que non falcantur quodlibet eorum reddebat quod valet, iiiđ. vel ivđ.

Habemus decimam feni per cumulos de prato dominicali ducis Norfolcie, & fenum indè proveniens eſtimat' ad ii vel iii careci', valens per annum iiis̄.

Item habemus ibi, pro decimâ feni de pratis domini de Haſtyngs, decimam acram prati in pratis ſuis, unde habemus i acram in uno loco pro decimâ feni, unam dim' acram in alio loco, & dim' acram in alio loco, & unam rodam in alio loco. Indè una acra valet per annum iiis̄. vel iiis̄. iiiiđ. Summa, vis̄. viiiđ. ad minus.

Tenentes ibidem modò non dant fenum decimale de pratis ſuis, & hoc injuſtè; ideò conſulendum eſt, &c.

Item multe ſunt paſture & clauſure in Querndon & in Baro, de quibus decima non datur, & hoc injuſtè; ideò conſulendum, &c.

Notandum quòd habemus condemnationem dn̄i Henrici de Erdyngton de decimis diverſarum paſturarum & clauſurarum ſuarum in Querndon & Baro, ſcil' ut de agiſtamentis beſtiarum in le Holm in yeme & in eſtate, &c. ut in eâdem condemnatione, cujus dat' eſt anno Dn̄i M^{o}cccxxxv^{o}.

Terre dominicales reddeb' xxs̄; modò reddunt xxs̄.

Nota, pro decimâ piſcarie, & pro decimâ petrarum venditarum ad calcem faciendam, & pro decimâ q^{r}t̄io calcis, in veteri quodam Chartwary cum magno coopertorio, & eciam in quibuſdam rotulis compot' celariorum.

---

[1] Charyte's Rentale, fol. xiv. b.

[2] Sic in Originali.

Habemus quietam clamationem Willi fil' Ric' fil' Helie de Baro de duobus cereis, quos ſolebat percipere annuatim de ſacriſtâ abbathie Leyc', pro unâ acrâ terre vocat' Seyntmarieſedlond; & dicta acra jacet ſuper Uttherhull, &c. ut in cartâ xvii^{a}.

Habemus ibi unam acram terre, ex dono Ade le Salſer, in campis de Baroo in Hothornwll, que jacet inter terram Stefani le Rope & terram Walerani in Bell, &c. ut in cartâ xviii^{a}.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Ric̃i filii Ade le Sauſer de Baroo, unam dim' rodam terre ſub Eſt Welond, & i dim' rodam prati in Lambecroft, &c. ut in cartâ xix^{a}. Et, ex dono ejuſdem, unam dim' rodam terre ſuper Brocfurlong, &c. ut in cartâ xx^{a}. Et, ex ejuſdem dono, duas acras terre ſecundùm bundas & metas, ut in cartâ xxi^{a}. Et, ex dono ejuſdem, unum pratum quod jacet ad caput dimidie acre in Ryecroft, quam nobis dedit, &c. ut in cartâ xxii^{a}.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Radulfi le Boteler de Baro, unam acram terre & dim', quarum una dim' acra jacet ſuper Bidewellhull, & alia dim' acra ſuper culturam de Udeformer, & tertia ſuper Huthornhil, &c.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Radulfi Pincerne [1], ii acras, ſcil', unam dictarum acrarum ſuper Redelond, & aliam rodam ſuper in Bidewell, & aliam rodam ſubtus Eſthonland extendentem ſe uſque ad aqueductum labentem in vinarium d̃ni comitis Ceſtrie; & unam dictarum acrarum ultra Foxhull; & unam dictarum acrarum in Ryecroft, extendentem ſe erga viam Stanforde, &c.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Ric̃i le Wes, unam acram terre arabilis in campo aquilonari de Baro, ſcil' duas rodas ſituat' ſuper Barlyhul jacentes juxta terram noſtram, & dim' acram in Ryecroft extendentem ſe ad viam de Stanforde, in excambium pro unâ acrâ terre arabilis in eodem campo jacente, videlicet, duabus dim' acris in Pancroft-ſil jacentibus, que ſe abuttant ſuper portam quondam Nic̃hi Pigot, &c.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Gilberti Pedman, ad terminum quatuor-viginti annorum, ſcil', unam acram terre arabilis in campo boreali, ſcil', dim' acram ſuper Bidewell, & dim' acram ſuper Holandes, in eſcambium pro vi ſelionibus jacentibus in campo auſtrali, ſcil' v ſuper Smythiſbuttes per diverſa loca, & unus apud Hareghâredyk, &c. ut in cartâ xxvi^{a}.

Habemus quietam clamationem d̃ni Thome Erdington militis, de toto jure, clameo, ſtatu, titulo, & demandâ, que unquam habuit, &c. in omnibus terris, tenementis, libertatibus, parcis, &c. cum omnibus pertinentiis, in Baro & Querndon, & in omnibus aliis locis que Ranulphus, Hugo, & Ranulphus, quondam comites Ceſtrie, nobis dederunt & confirmaverunt; ac etiam de unâ peciâ prati jacent' in Baro, in quodam prato vocat' Baroholme; que quidem pecia prati eſt de glebâ eccleſie de Baro predict', &c.

Mem', quòd ſolebamus habere ibidem unum gregem, ſcil' cc & dĩ. ovium.

Habemus confirmationem regis Henrici II. de eccleſiâ de Baro, &c.

Mem', quòd abbas Leyc' & conventus habent Regale in Baro, ſicut patet per ipſos qui taxaverunt bona temporalia ipſius abbatis & conventûs in Baroo [2].

Montſorell. Radulphus Enſwort tenet de nobis ibidem decimam garbarum, & redd' xxxs̃. que ſolebat reddere nobis xxxiiis̃. iiiiđ.

Thomas Chaveney tenet decimam feni de hades & leyes, & medietatem lini, canabi, ovorum, porcellorum, aucarum, columbarum, &c. & redd' iis̃.

Habemus compoſitionem inter nos & d̃num Hugonem Diſpenſarium, &c. quod percipiemus ſingulis annis in perpetuum xiis̃. pro decimis molendini ſui ibidem, &c. ut in compoſitione ii libri de Chartwary ibidem; modò reddit niſi viiis̃.

Joh̃es Maſon tenet liberè unam clauſuram, quondam Rog̃i Rowthorn, ubi fuerunt i meſſ' & dim' meſſ'; & redd' iis̃.

Rob̃tus Rowthorn tenet liberè iii ſelliones in Bondecroft, abuttantes ſuper dictam clauſuram; & redd' viđ.

Thomas Chaveney tenet liberè i cotagium & iii ſeliones; & redd' viđ.

Joh̃es Glover tenet liberè i meſſ' & certas terras in Bondecroft; & redd' viđ.

Habuimus quondam xviiiđ. ultra predictum redditum de diverſis terris ibidem; ſed quia modò terre ignorantur, ideò redditus deperditur. Indè Joh̃es at ye hate, quondam Willi Spicer, tenet vi ſeliones; redd' viđ.

Summa, xliiis̃. viđ. [3]

Rotul' de Pin.

Montſorell, redd' vs̃.

Decime garbarum inter granum.

Molendinum xiis̃. ut patet per compoſitionem.

Summa, xviis̃.

Greene.

Montſorell, vs̃.

Molendinum redd' xiis̃.

Decime garbarum & feni redd' lvis̃. viiiđ.

Bath.

Montſorell redd' iiiis̃.

Molendinum viiis̃.

Decime garbarum & feni xls̃.

Summa, liis̃.

Novum Rentale.

Montſorell iiis̃. viđ.

Decime garbarum xxxs̃.

Decime minute ivs̃.

Molendinum, viiis̃.

Summa, xliiis̃. viđ. viđ. per alt' [4].

Summa totalium receptuum, Montſorell viiis̃. viđ. [5]

Montſorell redd' xxxiiis̃. iiiiđ. Solebat reddere xlvs̃. ad feſta Paſce & Sc̃i Petri [6].

Mem', quòd abbas monaſterii beate Marie Leyc' habet in Querndon, ex dono Radulphi comitis Ceſtrie, iii meſſuagia, ii virgatas terre, ii cotagia, & v acras terre, que predictus comes quondam tenuit in dominico ſuo, quorum quidem quodlibet meſſuagium, cum i virgatâ terre, reddere ſolebat xiiis̃. iiiiđ; & quodlibet meſſuagium, cum dim' virgat' terre, reddere ſolebat vis̃. viiiđ.; & quodlibet cotagium predictorum, unum videlicet, reddere ſolebat iiis̃. viiđ. ob̃. aliud cotagium per annum iiiis̃. Item iii carecte errantes in boſco cotidiè pro foco abbatis.

Habemus, ex dono Rad̃i comitis Ceſtrie, unam carucatam terre in Querndon & in Baro, de dominicis ſuis, ſicut patet in primâ cartâ & ii^{a} in Baro.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Rog̃i Blundel, tres acras terre, unde una jacet, &c. ut in cartâ primâ.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Rad̃i Burt, fil' Petri Burt, unum toftum, quod Radulphus Burt, d̃nus ſuus, nobis antea dedit, &c. ut in cartâ iiii^{a}.

Habemus quietam clamationem W. fil' Hugonis le Chauntour de ii cereis, quos ei reddere ſolebamus annuatim, ut in cartâ v^{a}.

Habemus quietam clamationem Rob̃ti Gras de Querndon de ii denaratis annui reddit̂us, exeuntibus de duabus acris, &c. ut in cartâ vi^{a}.

Habemus ibi, pro decimâ feni, quoddam pratum vocat' Ballondſyke, & i foreram in prato vocat' Ballondſykehadelond, continentem in ſe iiii^{or} acras & i rodam i quarentenam, que quidem ex antiquo liberate fuerunt nobis pro decimâ, & pro pratis domini ſibi liberè conceſſis cujuſdam ſtadii vocat' Blopol Acurlands & Barough Brygmedewes.

Item habemus ibi unam peciam prati vocat' Hyllydols, liberat' nobis nomine decime prati vocat' Outredholme & Greneholme, continentem in ſe iiii^{or} acras prout ſupponitur; item i peciam prati ſub nomine Halfeacoſſitill juxta Coſſytil-forthe, liberat' nobis nomine decime pro pratis vocat' Coſſytils, continent' in ſe per eſtimationem i rodam & dim' prati.

Firmarius noſter modò tenet omnia predicta ibidem.

Reſtant alie minute decime prati, ut de cheveciis, hadys & leys, cum Stonyſik & aliis dominicis ſykys, que omnes decimate particularitèr tempore fenali, extendentes ſe cùm colligantur ad decimam carectam feni, ut dicitur; quod quidem fenum decimatur quum componitur & levatur. Et omnes predictas minutas decimas feni jam occupat Thomas Chaveney de Montſorel. Et idem Thomas occupat & percipit medietatem decime ortorum, & tam lini quàm canabi, ut pro medietate decime abbatis & conventûs Leyc'. Et reddit pro omnibus xxxs̃. que multò plùs valent, ut dicitur. Tota decima feni ibi eſtimatur ad valorem xls̃.

---

[1] Pincerna was the Latin of Boteler; and probably this was the ſame with the Ralph le Boteler in the foregoing paragraph.

[2] Charyte's Rentale, fol. xv. a. b.

[3] Ibid. fol. cxi. b.

[4] Ibid. fol. xiiii.

[5] Ibid. fol. clviii.

[6] Ibid. fol. clxii.

Mem', quòd ſolebamus percipere decimas molendini aquatici & fullonis monachorum de Bermondeſley in Querndon, tolneti & proficui eorum; ſcil', decimam menſuram & decimam aliorum proficuorum ex illis provenientium.

Item dicti monachi reddere nobis ſolebant decimam de proficuis provenientibus de quodam molendino conſtructo in le Allercarr.

Item ſolebamus percipere decimam proficui provenientis de molendino dn̄i de Beamont, quondam Hugonis le Spenſar.

Tenentes & firmarii.

Wiłłus Parkar, firmarius noſter ibidem, tenet ad firmam de nobis decimas garbarum & feni, cum orreo, xlĩ. Et decima feni valet xxis̃. per ann'. Et redd' viiilĩ.

Thomas Chaveney, pro decimis minutis, reddit xxxs̃. ut ſupra.

Wiłłus Walkar tenet i meſſuagium, i virgatam terre & dim', & iii partes unius pecie prati vocat' Barowbryggemedow; & reddit xvis̃. viiiđ. & ſectam curie ad Baro. Et notandum, quòd illa pecia prati vocat' Barowbrygge-medow ſemper dividitur inter illos tenentes qui tenent noſtras ii virgatas terre, pro portionibus tenentium.

Wiłłus Walkar tenet molendinum fullonicum & aquaticum ſub uno tectu; & redd' iiiis̃. Idem Wiłłus tenet molendinum aquaticum; & reddit xxđ.

Joħes Sawnder tenet i meſſ', dim' virgatam terre, & quartam partem illius pecie prati que vocatur Barowbrygge-medowe; & redd' vis̃. viiiđ. & ſectam curie ad viſum de Barow.

Et ſolvunt ad commune fyn tenentes noſtri de Querndon viiđ. Et habemus ibi weyfe & ſtreyfe.

Thomas Barbur tenet unum cotagium, iii acras terre, & unam rodam. Redd' iiiis̃.

Mem', quòd vicarius de Barow habet ibi i cotagium, i acram terre & dim'; in quo cotagio quondam fuit conſtructum commune furnum. Et tenens illius cotagii conſueverunt venire ad viſum noſtrum; & faciet ſectam curie abbatis Leyc'. Sed quo titulo vicarius occupat illud cotagium ignoratur; ideò inquiratur.

Mem', quòd quilibet tenens noſter i virgate terre in Querndon ſolebat reddere iii gallinas & xxx ova, & facere certa opera, ut patet infra in fine libri.

Sm^a virgatarum ii, iii acre, & i rod'.

Require terrarium iſtarum virgatarum in terrario fratris W. Charyte[1].

Habemus in Wodbows decimam garbarum & feni, lane, agnorum, hedorum, pullorum, porcellorum, lini, canabi, & aucarum, boſcorum, & omnes oblaciones, & omnes minutas decimas, & Romepenys; ſed vicarius habet medietatem mortuariorum.

Secundùm matriculum epiſcopi, monachi de Sc̄o Severo perceperunt omnem decimam garbarum & minutarum decimarum de Wodhowſe, extra oblacionibus in diebus feſtivis; & denariis beati Petri, & ceragio, pro quibus ſolebamus ſolvere eis lxs̃. per annum. Sed jam ipſas decimas nos emimus ab ipſis monachis pro lx marcis pro perpetuo, ut patet per compoſitionem.

Item habemus ibidem totam decimam feni tam de hadys & leyes quàm de pratis, que eſtimatur ad xii carectas, & valet communibus annis xs̃. & ultra.

Item habemus ibidem deciām de Brakleykar, que redd' ꝑ annum iiiis̃.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono Wiłłi filii Gerardi, unam placeam terre, ubi jam orreum noſtrum decimale ſituatur, ut patet in cartâ ejuſdem Gerardi, in quâ cartâ idem G. dedit nobis quandam partem terre ſue, cum omnibus pertinentiis ſuis; que quidem terra continet in ſe ſeptem perticas & octo pedes in longitudine, & ſex perticas in latitudine.

Item tradidimus, & ad firmam diviſimus, Rob̄to Hole orreum noſtrum decimale in Woodhows, cum totâ decimá garbarum & feni, ſolvendo nobis per annum iiiilĩ.

Item habemus ibidem decimam de molendino, & omnes denarios Sc̄i Petri. Summa, iiiilĩ. iiiis̃.

Mem', quòd barcaria, cum tofto & i pomario, & unâ peciâ prati, reſpondet vis̃. ſicut patet in Rentali fratris Galfridi Sallow in Wodhows.

Mem', quòd habemus ib̄m un' gregem, ſcil', cc & vi ovium.

Decima garbarum ſolebat valere xx marcas, ſicut patet ſuprà in Baro[2].

Reſolutiones.

Heredes Wiłłi filii Gerardi pro ſitu orrei noſtri, ſecundùm aliqua Rentalia, iiiiđ.; tamen recuperantur per aſſiſam ſecundùm Rotulum Rogeri Pynchebeke[3].

Rotul' le Pyn. Wodhowſe nil patet hìc.

Greene, & Bath.

Wodhowſe reddit vis̃. ut patet in Rentali Galfridi Sallowe. Decima redd' viiilĩ.

Wodhowſe redd' viiilĩ. pro decimâ garbarum & feni.

Novum Rentale.

Wodhowſe redd' pro decimâ garbarum & feni iiiilĩ.

Summa, iiiilĩ. preter altaragium.

Capella & firma reddunt iiiiđ.; ſolebant reddere viđ. ad feſta Purificationis & Pentecoſtes.

N° III. BELGRAVE AND BURSTALL.

Secundùm Matriculum epiſcopi, "Eccleſie de Belgrave patronus abbas Sc̄i Ebrulphi; perſona, inſtitut' per H. ep̄m Linc', ſolvens dc̄o abbati x marcas. Et habet capellam de Thurmeſton, ſitam in feodo comitis Wynt'; & capellam apud Burſtall; quarum utraque debet deſerviri per capellanum reſidentem. Eccleſia de Sylby percipit ibi duas garbas de dominico Joħis de Harcurt."

Habemus ibi, ex dono Simonis filii Yvonis de Belgrave, totam placeam illius prati quod jacet inter pratum noſtrum & pratum quod Galfridus de Angulo aliquando tenuit de priore de Drax in prato de Belgrave, & abuttat & extendit ſe uſque in aquam.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Petronille de Cleybrok, duas ſeliones terre in campis de Belgrave inter terras noſtras juxta ſtagnum n̄ri molendini de Belgrave, &c.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Simonis filii Yvonis de Belgrave, totam terram ſuam quam habuit inter viam que tendit de Leyceſtriâ ad molendinum de Belgrave & Soram; ſcil', quinque ſeliones juxta ſtagnum molendini.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Rogeri filii Hugonis de Belgrave, iiii ſeliones terre; ſcil', duas juxta Soram juxta molendinum de Belgrave, & ii alias juxta terram Petri de Cleybrok, cum quodam pratulo predictis ſelionibus adjacente.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Simonis filii Yvonis de Belgrave, totam terram quam habuit inter viam que tendit de Leyceſtriâ ad molendinum de Belgrave.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Walteri filii domini de Belgrave, iii ſeliones in campis de Belgrave, jacentes inter boſcum noſtrum & terram Laurent' de Belgrave, abuttantes in Dalſyk, cum omnibus pertinentibus.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Ric̄i filii Simonis de Belgrave, duas foreras & dim' terre in loco qui vocatur Burbladeſyk, quarum una forera & dim' roda abuttant ſuper terram noſtram versùs Occidentem; & altera forera abuttat ſuper foreram terre Wiłłi de Angulo de Belgrave ſuper Orientem.

Edwardus rex, &c. Conceſſimus & licentiam dedimus Roberto Bryd, vic' de Queniboro, quòd ipſe iiii meſſ', iii virgat' terre, & iiii acras & i rodam prati, in Quenyboro, Belgrave, & Reriſby, dare poſſit & aſſignare cuidam capellano divina ibi celebraturo, &c.

---

[1] Charyte's Rentale, fol. cxxii. b. cxxiii. a.

[2] Ibid. fol. cxlix. a.

[3] Ibid. fol. ccxi.

Edwardus rex, &c. Conceſſimus & licentiam dedimus W. de Aſton & Rob̃to filio Ric̃i de Elmeley, quòd ipſi vi meſſ', lx acras terre, ii acras prati, & iiis̃. cum pertin', in Queniboro, Burſtal, Belgrave, & Rereſby, dare poſſint & aſſignare abbati & conventui Leyc', &c.

Mem', quòd Hugo filius Rogeri de Burſtal tenetur & obligatur nobis, pro ſe & heredibus ſuis, ad acquietand' & defendend', & in perpetuum indempnes ſervand', nos & ſucceſſores noſtros de ſectâ curie đni comitis Leyc', de tribus ſeptimanis in tres ſeptimanas, pro nobis, apud Leyc', vel alibi, ubicunque tente fuerint, faciend' & proſequend' extra ſectam curie fact' bis per annum pro terrâ & ten' que habemus infra limites & libertates de Belgrave.

Habemus, ex dono Laurentii de Belgrave, quicquid juris vel clamei habere potuit in foſſato facto inter terram ſuam & boſcum noſtrum, ut habeamus illud integrum ſine detrimento. Et pro iſtâ terrâ quam ipſe & anteceſſores ſui acchrochiaverunt, ſcil', ſuper dictam vaſtam terram proximiùs dicto boſco quàm de jure debuerunt; ideò in recompenſatione conceſſit, quòd nos & ſervi noſtri poſſumus tranſire & equitare in omnibus placeis juxta predictum foſſatum jacentibus in latitudine v pedum, & ponere ſpinas ſuper terram predicti Ricardi, & facere foſſam ita propriè ſue ley juxta Burbladſyk ſicut volumus, & habere viam noſtram ſuper eandem ley, & tranſire & equitare liberè in latitudine v pedum in perpetuum, ut in cartâ xiiiiª in Gallico.

Habemus, ex dono Richardi Belgrave, totam vaſtam terram ſuam jacentem inter boſcum vocat' Brokkytt, & terram ſuam juxta predictum boſcum in quâlibet placeâ vel campo de Belgrave, ut nos & ſervi noſtri poſſumus tranſire & equitare, intrare & occupare liberè, ſuper eandem vaſtam terram, pro emendatione foſſati & ſepis ejuſdem boſci. Item conceſſit, quòd nec ipſe nec heredes ſui capiant nec acrociabunt, ſed quòd predicta forera terre ſemper erit ita larga ſicut nunc eſt.

Mem', quòd, cùm ſepiùs diſcordie & contentiones iniate fuerunt inter abbatem Leyc' & ejuſdem loci conventum ex unâ parte, & totam communitatem de Belgrave ex alterâ parte, &c. de communâ paſture habendâ in prato & campis dictorum abbatis & conventûs, à prato & campis de Belgrave uſque ad Perſyke exiſtentibus: Predicti abbas & conventus, predictas diſcordias & contentiones pacificare cupientes, conceſſerunt, pro ſe & ſucceſſoribus ſuis in perpetuum, dicte communitati de Belgrave communam paſture ad omnia animalia ſua preterquàm ad porcos, in prato eorum jacentem à molendino ſuo aquatico de Belgrave uſque ad quoddam foſſatum quo includitur eorum terra arabilis uſque Occidentem, que vocatur le Closfurlong, à feſto Michaelis uſque ad feſtum Purificationis; niſi predicti abbas & conventus predictum pratum ſuum bis in anno falcare propoſuerint; &, ſi ſic, tunc à feſto Sc̃i Dionyſii uſque ad feſtum Purificationis. Pro iſtâ conceſſione tota communitas de Belgrave conceſſit dictis abbati & conventui communam paſture habere in prato eorum de Belgrave ſecundùm eandem formam quam ipſi abbas & conventus conceſſerunt eis; quod pratum vocatur Bynethen the halle, quod ſe extendit à ponte de Belgrave uſque ad pratum eorum predictum, inter molendinum aquaticum ſuum & foſſatum prenominatum, & in terrâ arabili dicte communitatis in pratum ſuum predictum quod vocatur Bynethen the halle, & alteram viam que ducit uſque abbathiam, &c.[1]

Burſtal in parochiâ de Belgrave eſt, que debet deſerviri per capellanum reſidentem per matricem eccleſiam, ut patet in Matriculo Epiſcopi.

Dona diverſorum, ſicut patet per cartas eorum.

Habemus ibidem, ex dono & feoffamento đni Joh̃is Tours, capitale meſſuagium ſuum, cum ſtagnis, vivariis, & aliis pertinentibus ſuis, & omnes terras dominicales in eâdem villâ vocat' le Halledemeynes; ſcil', croftum juxta dict' meſſ', novum affartum, le Berhul, Dodemancroft, Holncumbes, Okiſgores, Schortebrechys, Houndyſkin, Grymeſhill, Dedewong, & le Peyſelands, cum pertin' ſuis, ut in gardinis, arboribus, & pomariis, &c.

Habemus, ex dono & feoffamento ejuſdem Joh̃is Tours, per aliam cartam, omnia ut in predictâ cartâ; ſcil', capitale meſſ', cum ſtagnis, &c. ut in le Peyſelands, continent' quadraginta acras per perticam viginti & quatuor pedum menſuratas: Et unam placeam prati jacentem in prato boreali de Burſtal, que vocatur Halleflank, continent' unam acram & dim' per eandem menſuram: Et ii placeas prati in Leyc'; ſcil', Hardhers & Cranfordmedwe, continent' iiii acras per menſuram antedictam: Et duo tofta, cum quadraginta & octo acris terre & prati per dictum perticam menſuratis, in Stanton juxta Berdon.

Habemus ibi, ex dono ejuſdem Joh̃is Tours, per aliam cartam, omnia ut in predictâ cartâ; ſcil', capitale meſſ', &c. & le Peſelandes, continent' xxv acras terre & iii rodas terre & dim' per perticam xxiiii pedum regalis menſurationis: Et ii placeas prati jacentes in le Halleflank & ad le Briggegrave juxta le Milneſley; continentes i acram, iii rodas, ſeptemdecim perticas: Et duo tofta, xxviii acras, ii rodas, & x perticas terre, cum ſuis pertin', in Stanton juxta Berdon.

Habemus ibi, ex feoffamento Joh̃is Tours, iii ſolidatos annui redditûs, cum pertin', & unum par cirotecarum, provenient' de xvii acris terre quas Ric' de Stapulton tenuit, cum homag' & ſervic', &c. ut in cartâ xiª, cum reverſione predictarum xvii acrarum, ſi contingat predictum Ric̃m ſine hered' de ſuo corpore exeuntibus decedere, &c. ut in eâdem cartâ. Ideò, pro defectu heredum ſeyſiti fuerunt ille xvii acre in manus Abbatis, anno regni regis H. VI. undecimo.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Roberti filii Roberti de Burſtal, totum illud pratum quod eſt inter ſtagnum molendini de Burſtal & pratum de Belgrave in longitudine, & aquam que vocatur Sore & paſturam ſuam juxta le Berne in latitudine, &c. ut in cartâ xviª. Item habemus remiſſionem & relaxationem ejus Roberti de eodem prato, &c. ut in cartâ xviiª & xxviª.

Habemus ibi, ex dono Roberti filii Roberti de Burſtall, quandam placeam prati & paſture in Burſtal, ſcil', ab angulo crofti ſui uſque ad quoddam foſſatum, prout dividitur per metas, ad unum caput uſque partem borealem, & ſe extendit in longitudine à dicto angulo uſque ad pratum de Belgrave, & in latitudine à prato abbatis, quod de ipſo habet, uſque terram ſuam arabilem, &c. ut in cartâ xviiiª.

Habemus, ex feoffamento đni Joh̃is Tours, ut in cartâ xixª; &, ex quietâ clamatione Joh̃is filii Roberti de Burſtal, ut in cartâ xxª; quandam placeam prati, cum pertinentiis ſuis, jacent' in prato boreali de Burſtal ſuper Longecolepole, continent' in ſe ix rodas & dim', & extendit ſe ſuper le Halleflank, &c. ut in cartâ xxª.

Habemus confirmationem & ratificationem Roberti de Burſtal, filii Roberti de Burſtal, de donatione Joh̃is fratris ſui de prato in ye Halleflank, &c. ut in cartâ xxiª.

Habemus, ex feoffamento Joh̃is Tours, ut in cartâ xxiiª; &, ex quietâ clamatione Roberti filii Roberti de Burſtal, ut in cartâ xxiiiª; x & ix rodas prati, cum ſuis pertin', jacentibus in pratis de Burſtal juxta le Mylnewey, &c. ut in cartâ xxiiiª.

Habemus, ex conceſſione, remiſſione, & quietâ clamatione Roberti filii Roberti de Burſtal, totum jus & clameum quod habuit vel haberet, ſeu qualitercunque habere poterit, in piſcariâ tocius aque de Sorâ juxta pratum ſuum in Burſtal; ita quòd nec ipſe nec heredes ſui, vel quicunque alius nomine ſuo, in dictâ aquâ de cetero piſcari poterint in perpetuum. Et habemus, ex quietâ clamatione ejuſdem Roberti, totum jus quod habuit, &c. in unâ particulâ paſture in Burſtal jacente inter pratum abbatis Leyc' ex parte unâ, & terram arabilem ſuam ex alterâ in latitudine, & ab angulo muri ſui juxta vinarium versùs Orientem uſque ad pratum de Belgrave in longitudine, prout limitatum eſt foſſato & lapidibus, &c. ut in cartâ xxiiiiª.

Habemus, ex conceſſione Roberti filii Roberti de Burſtal, quòd ipſe & heredes ſui acquietabunt & defendent nos contra omnes gentes de ſingulis firmariorum redditibus & demandis que peti poſſunt de toto prato quod eſt inter Soram & molendinum de Burſtal, &c. ut in cartâ xxvii^{a}.

---

[1] Charyte's Rentale, fol. xvi. a. b.

Mem', quòd Robertus filius Roberti de Burſtal & heredes ſui tenentur & firmitèr obligantur nobis ad acquietand' & defendend' nos & ſucceſſores noſtros in perpetuum pro terris & tenementis que tenemus in Burſtal, de ſectâ curie d̄ni comitis Leyc', de tribus ſeptimanis in tres ſeptimanas, apud Leyceſtriam tente. Item, quòd nec ipſe nec heredes ſui, ratione ſtatuti d̄ni regis facti, nullimodam contributionem de nobis exigere poterint in perpetuum, &c. ut in cartâ xxviii^{a}.

Habemus, ex quietâ clamatione Henrici filii Roberti filii Roberti, totum jus & clameum ſuum quod habuit in omnibus terris, tenementis, pratis, paſcuis, paſturis, piſcariis, vinariis, redditibus, homagiis, & ſerviciis, cum pertin', que habuimus in Burſtall, die confectionis preſentis, &c. ut in cartâ xxxiii^{a}, cujus dat' eſt anno D̄ni m°cccxxxii°, die Mercurii proxmâ poſt feſtum Aſſumptionis beate Marie.

Habemus, ex quietâ clamatione Rob̄ti filii Joh̄is de Burſtal, totum jus & clameum ſuum quod habuit in x rodis prati jacentibus in quodam loco qui vocatur le Halleſlank, quas habuimus de dono patris ſui, &c. ut in cartâ xxxix^{a}.

Habemus cartam d̄ni regis Edwardi . . . .[1], de mortificatione unius meſſuagii, ii toftorum, quatuor virgatarum & octo acrarum terre, & quinque acrarum prati & dim', cum pertin', in Burſtal & Stanton, ex dono Joh̄is Tours, ad inveniend' quendam capellanum divina, pro animâ ipſius & omnium fidelium, in abathiâ noſtrâ ſingulis diebus celebraturum, &c. anno regni ipſius regis xvii°.

Habemus cartam ejuſdem d̄ni regis, de mortificatione xxiiii acrarum prati in Burſtal, ex dono Roberti filii Roberti de Burſtall, anno regni ipſius regis xxix°.

Habemus cartam ejuſdem d̄ni regis, de mortificatione vii meſſuagiorum, ſexaginta acrarum terre, ii acrarum prati, & reddit' iiis̄. cum pertin', in Burſtal, Belgrave, Queniboro, & Reriſby, anno regni ejuſdem xxi°.

Habemus cartam d̄ni regis Ricardi, de mortificatione vi meſſuagiorum, xv cotagiorum, iii virgatarum, unius bovate, unius acre, & unius rode terre, viii acrarum prati, xxiii ſolidatorum & iiiid̄. redditûs, & redditûs i lī. cumini, cum pertin', in Burſtal, Humberſton, Leyceſtriâ, Barkby, Lokyngton, anno xvi°.

Habemus cartam Roberti de Burſtal, per quam cartam dictus Robertus dedit d̄no Roberto Byrwd de Coſyngton, capellano, i meſſ' & i virgatam terre, cum pertin', q^{e} W. Pante tenuit de ipſo in villanagio, unà cum dicto W. & cum omnibus bonis & catallis ſuis, & cum totâ ſequelâ ſuâ. Item dedit dicto Roberto i meſſ' & dim' virgatam terre, cum pertin', que Joh̄es Bywat' tenet de ipſo in villanagio, &c. Item i meſſ' & iii rodas terre, cum pertin', que Robertus Scot tenuit de ipſo. Item iii ſolidatos annui redditûs exeuntis de dim' virgatâ terre & vi rodis prati, cum pertin', que Rad̄us Brown tenuit de ipſo in feodo, &c. ut in cartâ lxxxxiiii^{a}.

Habemus cartam Roberti Bryd, per quam dedit W. de Aſton & Rob̄to filio Ric̄i de Elmeley i meſſ' & x ſolidatos annui redditûs exeuntis de i meſſ' & unâ bovatâ terre que Emma, que fuit uxor Galfridi Gerard, de ipſo tenuit in Queniboro. Item dedit predictis W. & Rob̄to octo ſolidatos annui redditûs exeunt' de unâ bovatâ terre, & de medietate unius acre prati, cum pertin', que Matilda, que fuit uxor Roberti de Ratcliff, in eâdem villâ, &c. ut in eâdem cartâ.

Habemus cartam Roberti Bryd, per quam dedit W. de Aſton & Rob̄to filio Ric̄i de Elmeley xviii denaratos annui redditûs exeuntes de medietate i meſſ' & unius virgate terre, cum pertin', in Burſtal, que Martha Broun tenuit. Item dedit eiſdem W. & R. xviii denaratos annui redditûs exeuntes de medietate unius meſſuagii & unius bovate terre que Simon Stapulton tenuit de ipſo, &c. ut in cartâ 97.

Edwardus rex. Conceſſimus & licentiam dedimus Rob̄to Bryd, vic' de Quenyboro, quòd ipſe[2] . . . . . .

Edwardus rex, &c. Conceſſimus & licentiam dedimus Will̄o Aſton & Rob̄to fil' Ric̄i de Elmeley, quòd ipſi vi meſſ', lx acras terre, duas acras prati, & iiiis̄. cum pertin', in Quenyboro, Burſtal, Belgrave, & Rerſby, dare poſſint & aſſignare abbati & conventui Leyc', &c. ut in cartâ.

Tenentes ad voluntatem.

Joh̄es Boſſe tenet capitale meſſ', ii crofta, iii virgatas terre, ii placeas prati, apud Greneſty, & unam placeam prati quod Halleſlanke vocatur, & redd' xls̄. & ii gallinas.

Thomas Lenton tenet i meſſ', iii crofta, quorum unum vocatur Laydyſzart, cum ſtagno & iiii virgatis terre, & redd' xxxvis̄. & iiii gallinas.

Joh̄es Hanſon tenet i meſſ', i croftum, iii virgatas terre, & unam placeam prati, in prato de Thurmaſton, valens per annum xs̄.; & redd' xxxiiiis̄. iiiid̄. & iii gallinas.

Summa redditûs voluntarii, cxs̄. iiiid̄. Summa virgatarum, x.

Et habemus toftum cum cuſtumâ & redditu xiid̄. adquiſita per fratrem Thomam Broughton.

Habemus ibi unum pratum quod vocatur Burſtalmore, & fenum indè proveniens, eſtimatum annuatim circa $\substack{\text{xx}\\ \text{iiii}}$ carectatas, quod valet communibus annis iiiilī. & continet xxiiii acras; modò iiid̄. nobis, & ixd̄. d̄no de la Ware.

Cotagia.

Thomas Heythe tenet i cotagium, i gardinum, & redd' iiis̄.; jam ſolvit d̄no de Ware ixd̄.

Margareta Farme tenet i cotagium & i gardinum, & redd' iiis̄. iiiid̄.; poſtea vd̄.; modò redd' viiid̄. pro predictâ virgatâ terre, cum crofto & aliis pertinentiis, redd' iiiis̄. vid̄.

Liberi tenentes.

Joh̄es Gardyner tenet i bovatam terre & vi rodas prati, cum pertin', quondam Will̄i Gardyner; redd' iiis̄.

Joh̄es Stanton tenet unam placeam prati, continentem x rodas in Burſtal-medewe, quondam Will̄i Foſter, poſtea Radulphi Braſyar, nuper Ric̄i Hotoft; & redd' iis̄.

Mem', quòd Margeria Stanton tenet i meſſ', vi acras terre, & unam acram prati, que Ric' Walſhe de Anlep perquiſivit de Roberto Burſtal, filio cujuſdam Thome Pante de Burſtal; & redd' per annum vid̄. & i par cirotecarum, & ſectam curie.

Summa liberi redditûs, vs̄. vid̄.

Summa totalis, vilī. iiis̄. vid̄. ix gallinas.

Reſolutiones; ſcil', d̄no de Ware ixd̄.

Mem', quòd Rogerus Pynchebek, celararius, ſeiſivit Agnetem filiam Joh̄is Hopkynſon, & i meſſ', unam virgatam terre & dim', & xv rodas prati, uſque ad plenam etatem predicte puelle, anno regni regis Ric̄i, &c. xxi°; que meſſ', virgat' terre, &c. jam recuperata ſunt per breve de ceſſant' termino Michaelis, anno regni regis Henrici V^{ti} undecimo, de Joh̄e Thorne & Agnete uxore ejus, &c. ut in placito.

Habemus totam aquam de Sorâ juxta pratum noſtrum vocat' Burſtal-more, nobis ſeparabilem ex antiquâ conſuetudine, & ſicut patet C^{a} in cartâ Rob̄ti filii Rob̄ti Burſtal, &c.

Item habemus communem piſcariam in quodam ſtagno vocat' Coll-polle juxta pratum noſtrum ex utrâque parte de Thurmaſton & Burſtall, ex antiquâ conſuetudine.

Habemus ibidem curiam baronis, ad quam quidem curiam venient omnes tenentes noſtri de eâdem. Item preſentatum fuit ad diverſas curias tent' ibi, quod Ric' Walſch de Anlep debet ſectam ad predictam curiam pro certis terris quas tenet in Burſtal de abbate Leyc'.

Require terrarium de Burſtall in libro fratris W. Charyte de terris dotalibus. Item, in Rentali veteri & generali, amerciamenta curiarum tempore fratris J. Sadyngton, celararii, anno regni regis Henrici Quinti nono.

De Hugone Schepey de Belgrave, pro piſcacione in Sorâ juxta pratum noſtrum de Burſtal-more, vid̄. Item de Rob̄to Bayly de Burſtall iid̄. De W. Jeke de Anſty xiid̄. De Waltero Bochar de Thurmaſton xiid̄. Omnes pro conſimili piſcacione.

---

[1] Sic in Originali.

[2] Sic in Originali; ſed vide ſupra, apud Belgrave, p. 11.

N° IV.

N° IV.

BRIEF INDEX to EAST GOSCOTE HUNDRED; to be enlarged hereafter.

Acorn harveſt in Charnwood foreſt, 132
Adams, Richard, account of, 275
Alanſon, Mrs. her bounty, *66
Alderman's haw, 123. *167
Aleyn, Dr. John, 258
Alfreton family, 328
Allen, Thomas, of Glouceſter hall, 244
Allexton 5. 552
Anaf. Hugh de, 250
Andrewes, Gerrard, character of, 456
—— pedigree, 456
Andrews, Dr Richard, 164
Anneſley, Francis, heir to the Cottons, 549—and to the Downings, ib.
Apparitions, 539
Aſfordby, 15
Aſhby Folvile, 20. 553.—charitable foundation there, 552
Aſhby, extracts from regiſters relating to that family, 280—epitaphs, 284—arms, 295
—— of Loſeby, pedigree, 298
—— of Quenby, pedigree, 299. 300
—— George, memoirs of, 284
—— Shukbrugh, memoirs of, 295
—— William, embaſſador in Scotland, 493 515. 557
Aſtley church, 143
Babington, chancellor Zachary, 229
Bagrave, 287—tumuli there opened and deſcribed, 289
Bakepuiz manor and family, 5
Baldock, abbot Walter de, 305
Balguy, Paul, 169. *170. 171
Ballard family, 507
Baning, ſir Paul, 153
Banaſter family, 293
Banbrigge family, 506
Bardon hill, 126. *168
Bareſby, 35
Barkby, and Barkby Thorpe, 44. *61; Appendix, p. 1.
Barnes, Mary, 257
Barrow upon Soar, 61. *167. 553; Appendix, p. 8—antient boundaries of that pariſh, ib.—its matchleſs lime, 81—peculiar foſſils, 82. *169
Beauchief abbey, 505
Beaumont pedigree, 66
—— viſcount, 142
—— ſir Lewis, 549
Beaumanor, 136. 147. *168.—pictures there, ib.
Beby, 167. *170
Beilby, Dr. Samuel, 520
Belgrave, 172. 554; Appendix, p. 10—old houſe deſcribed, 176—mill, ib.—parſonage, 180—vicarage, 181
—— pedigree, 177
—— William de, 172
Bentham, Joſeph, his opinion of incloſures, and account of him, 277
Beresford pedigree, 51
Berkeley family, 1
—— George, 413
Bever, John de, 517
Beveridge family, memoirs of, 69. 109
Bickerton pedigree, 170
Billers pedigree and epitaphs, 188
Biſhop's Fee, 56
Blount, lord Mountjoy, 7—wills of ſeveral of that family, ibid.
—— Richard, a famous Jeſuit, 7
Botham, Hugh, his will, *63
Bowater, John, 253
Bowes family, 276—arms, 356
Braybroke, bp. Robert de, 519
Breton, Clement, his character, 537
Brett pedigree, 400
Bridges family, 514—an error reſpecting them, in the "Anecdotes of Mr. Bowyer," corrected, ib.
Brokeſby pedigree, 406
Brookſby, 189
Browne, John, 171
—— John-Cave, 531
Brudenell family, 525. 544. 545
—— pedigree, 293
Bruyn pedigree, 349
Buckingham, Mary counteſs of, 194
Burdet, of Loſeby, pedigree, 351
—— of Formarke, pedigree, 352
—— ſir William, memoirs of, 337
Burgneſs, or Burgſeit, 333
Burnaby family, 16—epitaphs, 18
—— archdeacon, his great grandfather, grand-father, father, and brother, rectors of Aſfordby, 17—his writings and family, 288. 557
Burrow hill, 531
Burſtall, 185; Appendix, p. 10—ſtorm there, 186
Burton Lazars excellent water, 524
Burton on the Woulds, 363
Burton's Preface of 1604, xv—of 1622, corrected, xvi—Poſtſcript in 1641, xx
—— Robert, memoirs of, 415—his will, 557
Byerley family, 176—pedigree, 178
Cæſar, ſir Julius, 159
Camvile pedigree, 350
Campden, Baptiſt viſcount, and his lady, 250
Cave, of Bagrave and Ingarſby, pedigree, 290
—— of Pickwell, pedigree, 293
—— of Horſpool Grange, pedigree, 293
—— of Barrow, pedigree, 68
—— ſir Ambroſe, 247. 293
—— Francis, 284
—— ſir Thomas, v—x
Carte, Samuel, 178
Chace defined, 127
Chamberlayne's manor, 390
Charles I, his remarkable dream, 531
Charley priory, 120
Charnwood Foreſt, 124. *167—a riot there, 131—boundaries, ib.—nature of the ſoil, 132—produce, ib.—its rock deſcribed, 133—extenſive views, ib.—eclipſe obſerved there, ib.—remarkable flood, 157. 158. 160
Chaveney family, 101. *167
Chaworth monument and arms, 328
Chetwynd, lord, v
—— Walter, ib.
Chippingdale pedigree, 278
Clarke pedigree, 266
—— of Tilton, pedigree, 467
—— Hamlet, his character, 281—memoirs of, ib.
Clerke, ſir Talbot, his family, 326
Comin pedigree, 66
Coningſby family, 458
Conington church and monuments, 546
Coſſington, 221
Cotes, 365
Cotton family, and epitaphs, 546
Crab-trees, abundance of, 132
Cranborne, William lord, 165
Creke abbey, 532
Cromwell, lords Henry and Edward, 8
—— Thomas, earl of Eſſex, memoirs of, 313
—— Gregory, lord Cromwell, 323
Croxton Abbey, 520
—— South, 231. 555—old regiſter burnt, 237
Croyland abbey, 167
Dalby Magna, 240. 555—ſteeple demoliſhed, 242
Dalby on the Woulds, 244. 555—ſite of the preceptory, 256—its revenues, 245. 555
Dannet pedigree, 255
Danvers of Thruſſington Grange, 458—charitable benefaction of two ladies of that family, ib.
Darker, John, his character, 376
Davies, Elizabeth, her will, *64
Delalande family, 826
Deſpenſer family, 136
Dial, a remarkable one, 163
Digby family, memoirs of, 463—fine pedigree, where now locked up, ib.—monuments, 471. 472. 475.—pedigrees, 473. 474. 475
—— Everard, his will, 464
Dod, Thomas, 548
Dorſet, Thomas Grey marquis of, his body preſerved in the grave, 143
Douglas, James, his Nenia Britannica, 289.
Downing College, 549
Dromore (Dr. Thomas Percy) biſhop of, his endowment of Thurmaſton church, *66
Duncombe pedigree, 255
—— John, ſingularly knighted by king Charles I. ib.
Dyngley, ſir Thomas, 247
Eaſt Norton, 489
Edmondthorpe, 521
Edwin family, 286—purchaſers of Bagrave, 288
Englefield manor, 217
—— family, 402—monuments, 404
Erdington pedigree, 67
Empoli, Jacobo de, his character, 557
Farmer, Dr. Richard, vi
Farnham epitaphs, 96. 107—John, a famous warrior, 97—pedigrees, 103. 104.
Farringdon Without, antient mode of electing an alderman there, 151
Fawcett, Dr. Richard, v.
Fenwick, George, his publications, 535
Fern harveſt, 132
Ferrers, earl, his old manſion at Rakedale, 386—modern houſe there, 387
Floods, remarkable, 157
Folvile family, 21—pedigree 22—monuments, 552
Foreſt laws defined, 127
Forteſcue, ſir Adrian, 528
Fortrée, John, 527
Foſs road through Radcliffe, 383
Foſſils at Barrow, &c. 81
Foſter, Vere, memoirs of, 74. 104
Fowke, ſir Thomas, memoirs of, 340
Frewen of Tortworth, 217
—— of Northiam, 518
—— abp. 560
Friſby, 259. 556
—— Hags, 261
—— Richard de, 260
—— Stump croſs, 261
Folke, Dr. Anthony, 555
Fuller, Dr. his opinion on incloſures in the [illegible] century, 377
Fundus explained, 110
Gage, of Ben[illegible] pedigree, 149
Gainſbo[illegible] 52
Galby[illegible]
Gat[illegible]
1[illegible]
Ge[illegible]
Giff[illegible]
Gill[illegible]
Go[illegible]
Go[illegible]

Pt 1

Goſcote Hundred, its owners, 1—courts, 2—payments of Weſt Goſcote in ſubſidy of 1617, 4—church ornaments and epitaphs in 1556, 5—houſes in Eaſt Goſcote rated to window tax, Appendix, p. 15
Gothurſt, fine portraits there, 464
Gough, Richard, his Sepulchral Monuments, 515
Grace, William, 393
Grandiſon, William viſcount, 193
Grange defined, 292
Green, Captain Thomas, 16
Greenaway, Stephen, character of, 257. 551
Gregory of Toloſe, 555
——— Catharine, her will, 265—epitaph, 267
Grevyll, ſir Fulke, 153
Griffith pedigree, 67
Gumley, 534—deſcribed in 1736, ib.
Gutheridge family, *66
Hacket pedigree, 258—memoirs of the family, 239
Hackluit's manor, 6
Hadley church, 546
Halford, Richard, 551
Haliwell haw, 122
Halſted, 476
Hambleton, 58
Hanging-ſtone in Charnwood, 134
Harborough, 528—foſſils, 529—battles in the civil war, ib.
Haſtings, ſir William, 140
——— of Humberſton, pedigree, 278
——— Henry, of Belgrave, 176
Hayne, Thomas, memoirs of, and account of his benefactions, 459
Heanes family, 117. *169. 554
Heathcote, Dr. memoirs of, 425—pedigree, 428
Helminthoſolithus, 519
Henſhaw, Mr. his benefactions to St. John's college, 163
Henton family, 268. 386
Herrick of Beaumanor, monuments, 117. 157—pedigree, 148—memoirs of the family, 150.—portraits, 155. 554
——— of Knighton, pedigree, 148
——— Richard, memoirs of, 159
——— Nicholas, of Colman-ſtreet, 535
——— Robert, the poet, 535
——— William, of Gray's Inn, 535
Heſilrige, ſir Arthur, his public character, 532. 543
Heſketh, William, his epitaph, 455
Hilliard, Nicholas, 490
Hoby, 264. 388
Hodges pedigree, *516
Holbech, Henry, biſhop of Lincoln, impoveriſhed that ſee, 15
Holled, Dr. Knightley, 528
Horton family, 534
Hoton, 372
Houblon family, 366
Houby pedigree, 264
Houghton, abbot William de, 520. 535
Howard, lord William, of Naworth, 240
Howe family, 527
Humberſton, 269. 556—antient religious houſes there, 271
Hungerton, 279—fine painting placed in that church by Mr. Latham, 556
Hyde pedigree, 109. dates, 553
Jennings, Dr. David, 536. 560
Jeruſalem, priory of St. John of, their ſeal, 247
Incloſures, Mr. Monk's remarks on, 376
Inge, Richard, 175—family, ib.
Interdict in the reign of king John, 261
John, king, his illneſs and death, 520
Irwine family, [illegible] 152
Juxon, Joſeph, [illegible]
Keble, ſerjeant [illegible]—inventory [illegible] pedi- [illegible]
[illegible] 383
[illegible] 490
Knights Hoſpitallers, 246—their immenſe conſequence, 241
Lany pedigree, 400
Laſſells pedigree, *169
Latham; ſee Hungerton.
Laud, abp. ſome account of, when preſident of St. John's, Oxford, 163
Laund, 301—foundation of the priory, ib.—its revenues, 307—library, ib.
Law, captain John, his duel, and remarkable ſubſequent hiſtory, 487
Lawrence, Edward, 171
Leake, ſerjeant, 506
Leiceſter abbey, 518
Leigh pedigree, 406
Leland, John, memoirs of, *168. 172
Libraries of monaſteries, 307
Lime of Barrow, 81
Little Haw, 119
Littleton's Tenures, 522
Lodington, 329—conduit, 330
Loſeby, 337—various ſuits for tithes, 344
Lovel, lord, 142
Lubbenham, 539—manor pew, ib.
Malory pedigree, 501
Manners pedigree, 350
Manners, lady, her fine poetry, 518
Manor-pew, 539
Markfield mill hill, 134
Marſhall, Thomas, memoirs of, 46—epitaph, 50
Martevall, Anketell de, 541
Martins, in Skeffington gravel pits, 439
Maſon, Dr. Charles, 541
May, Humphrey, 159. 165. 554
——— Richard, 156
Medbourn, deſcribed by Mr. Burton, 539—antient cuſtoms there, ib.
Melton Mowbray, 522
Meynell family, 101. 553
Mildmay, ſir Anthony, 543
Milton pedigree, 413
Monk's Agricultural Report, 376
Montague, ſir Henry, 153
More, John, 531
Morris, Charles, character of, 330
Morton family, 27
Mountſorell, 85. *167. 553—Appendix, p. 85—its caſtle, 86—rock, 90
Mowbray family, in humble life, 288
Mowdebuſh court, 453. 559
Murray, ſir David, 165
Naunton, ſir Robert, 159—pedigree, 493—memoirs of, 515—family monuments, *513
Naworth caſtle, library removed, 240
Nedd, Mr. his will, 89
Nedham pedigree, 14
Nele family, 353
——— pedigree, 362
——— ſir Richard, chief juſtice, ib.—his monument, 559
Nenia Britannica commended, 219
Nevill family, 6
Newbold Folvile, 35. 553
Newton Burdet, 348
New year's gifts in 1633, 155
Nicolls family, 478—pedigree, 480
Noble pedigree, 461
Noel, Andrew, memoirs of, 249—and of the Noel family, ib.—pedigree, 254—epitaphs, 250. 257
Noone family, 364
Noſeley, 543
Oldys, Dr. William, his epitaph, 220 (and ſee vol. II. p. 860.)
Old John, 134
Oliver, Iſaac, 490
——— Peter, 490
Oneby, dame Mabell, 284
Ormſby church, 371
Orton, John, 392
Ouſton, 543—king Edward I. viſited that abbey in his way to Scotland, ib.
Packe, ſir Chriſtopher, memoirs of, 354 ——— family, their epitaphs, 360—pedigree, 361
Palling family, 267
Parker, John, memoirs of, 543
Paſſelew, archdeacon Robert, 303
Pate pedigree, 524
Pegge, Dr. his Hiſtory of Beauchief Abbey, 505
Pegge, Samuel, his Curialia, 97
Pepper pedigree, 187. 555
Pochin epitaphs, 50—pedigrees, 52
——— of Sileby, pedigree, *66
——— of Eſſex, *66
——— William, vindicated from miſrepreſentation, *66
——— Mary, her bounty, *66
Preſtwould, 353—greatly improved by Mr. Packe's plantations, 355—fine portraits there, ib.—regiſters analyſed, 356
Preſtwould family, 546
Pretyman family, 329
Prior, John, his map, x
Quenby, 294—famous cedars there, 295—houſe, library, and grounds deſcribed, 296
Queneborow, 373—remarks on the incloſure of the common field, 376
Queries propoſed, xiii—fully anſwered as to Barkby, *61
Quincey pedigree, 66
Quornden, 95. *167. 558, Appendix, p. 8
Radcliffe, 380
——— Thomas de, 383
Radnor, earl of, his property at Old Dalby, 253—at Tilton, 468—pedigrees, 155. 468
Rakedale old and modern manſion, 385—remarkable well, 388
Raſtall, Dr. 526
Rawlins, Thomas, his charities, 112. 553
Rawſton, Thomas, memoirs of, 268
Rereſby, 389
Rhodes, city of, deſcribed, 244
Rotherby, 397
Ryther, Skinner, *169
Sacheverell family, memoirs of, 220
——— of Hopwell, pedigree, 394
——— of Radcliffe, pedigree, 220
——— of Rereſby, pedigree, 395
——— of Old Hays, pedigree, 509
——— of Sadington, pedigree, 220
——— of Smiterton, pedigree, 513
——— of Dorſetſhire and London, pedigree, 510
St. John's college, Oxford, benefactors to the building, 163
St. Martin's beads, *169
Savage, archdeacon, 414. 501
——— pedigree, 501
Saunders, Lawrence, 539
Sawbridge, Thomas, 257
Saxulby, 401
Scrope, Thomas lord, 527—his deſcendants, ib.
Seaman family, 397
——— Lazarus, 398
Sefton, William earl of, 553
Seggeſwould, Segs-hill, 384
Sigrave, 407
——— family, 1. 408—pedigree, 413
Sepulture during the Interdict, 261
Serres, John de, 137
Shakeſpeare illuſtrates this Hiſtory, 281
Shallcroſſe family, 364
Sharpe of Friſby, 261. 262. 556
Sherwin, Samuel, 424
Shipley hill, 384
Shipward pedigree, 523
Shirley, ſir Robert, 387
Shouldby, 405
Sileby, 424
Skeffington, 424—gravel pit, 439—altar piece, ib.—pictures at Skeffington hall, 441
——— lord deputy, his will, 433
——— memoirs of the family, 435. 446—their monuments, 443. 444
——— of Skeffington, pedigree, 448. 450
——— of Fiſherwick, pedigree, 441
——— of Tunbridge, pedigree, 437
——— ſir William, ſpeech on preſenting the colours to the Leiceſterſhire volunteer cavalry, 439
Skipwith family, 360—monuments, 370. 371—pedigree, 368
——— of Newbold, memoirs of, 369
——— ſir William, his character, 367

Smalle,

Smalle, or Small, pedigree, 94
Smalley pedigree and ſeals, 93
Smith, lord Carrington, 28. 552—pedigree, 29—monuments, 32. 34
—— ſir John, biographical memoirs of, 36
—— William, bp. of Cheſter, 309
—— of Queneborow, 375
—— Thomas, his will, 455
—— Roger, his letter to Mr. Burton, 520
—— of Withcote, family, 526
—— Robert, his charities, 529
Stanford pedigree, 51
Stanley, lady Venetia Anaſtaſia, 467
Staveley, Thomas, character of, 230
—— William, 229
Stockerſton, 546
Stocks, Adrian, his marriages, 144, 145
Storer, Anthony, memoirs of, 461
Stowe, John, xv.
Stratford, of Merevale, family, 362
Strelley, Nicholas, his property, 536
Stretton, Edric de, 533
Stringer family, 220
Suffolk, Charles Brandon duke of, 143
Sutton family, of Kenſington and Humberſton, 276
Swanimote courts, 130
Syſton, 451
Talbot, earl, v
Tamworth pedigree, 477—monuments, 477. 478
Thorpe Sachvile, 496
Throgmorton, ſir Nicholas, 145
Throſby, John, xi
Thruſſington, 457—two fires there, 459
Thurmaſton, 53 *66; Appendix, p. 4
Tilton, 462—huſbandry there, 469
Trial by duel, 544
Trigg, Daniel, 525
Tugby, 481
Tumulus near Radcliffe deſcribed, 384
Turketyl, chancellor, 167
Twyford, 492
Vergil, Polydore, memoirs of, ib.
Verney family, 9—pedigree, 12—epitaphs 13
Via Devana, 541
Villan, explained by Mr. Burton, 535
Villiers family, 189—wills, 192—pedigree, 197. 198
—— firſt duke of Buckingham, memoirs of, 199—and of the ſecond duke, 213
—— lord Francis, 213
Vincent, Auguſtine, xv
Votier, Daniel, 155
Waltham, 526
Walton on the Woulds, 497
Waſe pedigree, 400
Watkins, John, of Tatten Forge, 541
Wayte, Thomas, the good receiver, 488
Wells pedigree, 60
Whadborough, 332
Wildman pedigree, 374
Wilghes, 388
Williamſon, Dick, the cat-eater, 546
Wilſon family, 10—pedigree, 514
—— beau, his duel and death, 487
Wiſtowe, 550
Withcote, 526
Wimeſwould, 502
Witchcraft at Belvoir, 507
Woodcock, Rev. Henry, *61
Woodford pedigree, 24—family monuments, 32
Woodhouſe, 110—ſchool, 112—ſchoolmaſters, 113
Woollaſton, of Loſeby, family, 339. 344
—— Richard, his character, 234
Wren, dean Chriſtopher, 161
Wrighte, ſir Nathan, memoirs of, 214—family, *216. 555—pedigree, 219
—— lieutenant George, his death and character, 227
Wyrley, William, xv

Houſes in Eaſt Goſcote Hundred rated to the window tax in 1793; Total 1471.

Allexton —	6	Dalby Magna —	36	Lodington —	19	South Croxton	32
Asfordby —	37	Dalby ſuper Woulds	39	Loſeby —	7	Syſton —	149
Aſhby Folvile	15	Eaſt Norton —	12	Preſtwould, —	5	Thorpe Sachvile	17
Barkby —	55	Friſby ſuper Wreke	37	Quenby —	2	Thruſſington —	34
Barkby Thorpe —	6	Gaddeſby —	27	Queneborow	49	Thurmaſton —	36
Brookſby —	2	Grimſton —	18	Radcliffe ſuper Wreke	11	Tilton —	10
Bareſby —	36	Halſted —	10	Rakedale —	9	Tugby —	27
Barrow ſuper Soar	81	Hamilton —	1	Rereſby —	31	Twyford —	27
Beby — —	21	Hoby —	32	Rotherby —	12	Walton ſuper Woulds	15
Belgrave —	56	Hoton —	26	Shouldby —	2	Wartnaby —	11
Burton ſuper Woulds	45	Humberſton —	33	Saxulby —	8	Whadborough	3
Cold Newton —	9	Hungerton —	16	Segrave —	47	Wimeſwould —	73
Coſſington —	27	Keyham —	19	Sileby —	95	Wykeham and Caldwell	14
Cotes —	4	Laund —	5	Skeffington —	15

Vol III APPEN Pt 1

PLATES

PLATES IN VOL. III. PART I.

1. Frontiſpiece[1] by Longmate, To face the Title.
2. Map of Eaſt Goſcote Hundred, — p. 2
3. Allexton Church, Portrait of Blount, Seals, &c. 11
4. Asfordby Church, Town Croſs, Arms, &c. 17
5. Aſhby-Folvile Church, Monuments, &c. 30
6. Barkby Church, Hall, Monument, Arms, &c. 47
7. Barrow Church, Hoſpital, Bp. Beveridge, &c. 71
8. } Foſſils, particularly ſome remarkable Fiſh, } 82
9. } found at Barrow, &c. } 83
10. Mountſorell New Croſs, Caſtle-Hill, &c. 85
11. Mountſorell and Quorndon Churches, 91
12. Seals of the Smalley Family, — 93
13. Mr. Farnham's Houſe at Quorndon, 100
14. Quorndon Hall, Mr. Meynell's Hunting Seat, 101
15. Mr. Hyde's Houſe at Quorndon, — 102
16. Monuments of the Farnhams at Quorndon, 107
17. Woodhouſe Church, School, Arms, &c. 115
18. Monuments and Arms at Woodhouſe, &c. 116
19. An Auguſtine Eremite of Charley, and a Nun, 120
20. Two Cluniac Monks of Alderman's Haw, 123
21. Bardon Hall, and Two Views of Markfield, 126
22. Three Views of Bredon Hill, Lime-kiln, &c. 127
23. Accurate Plan of Charnwood Foreſt, 1754, 131
24. Three Views in Charnwood Foreſt, 133
25. Three Views in Bradgate Park, 134
26. Four Views taken near Loughborough, 135
27. Antient and Modern Views of Beaumanor, 147
28. Portraits of Sir William and Lady Herrick, 152
29. Croyland Boundary Stone, &c. (See XV.) 167
30. Beby Church, and Monument of Villiers, 170
31. Belgrave, Burſtall, Thurmaſton Churches, &c. 178
32. Brokeſby Church, Monument, and Arms, 195
33. Portrait and Monument of Sir Nat. Wrighte, 216
34. Coſſington Rectorial Houſe, Seals, Arms, &c. 228
35. Coſſington Church, Monuments, Arms, &c. 229
36. South Croxton and Great Dalby Churches, 235
37. Old Dalby Church, Monuments, Arms, &c. 256
38. Communion Plate at Nether Broughton, 256
39. Friſby Church, Monuments, &c. — 262
40. Hoby, Hoton, and Humberſtone Churches, 266
41. Hungerton Church, Monument of a Lady, 282
42. Bagrave Hall, and antient Sepulchral Reliques, 289
43. View of Quenby Hall, — — 296
*43. A ſmaller View, with a Ground-plan, 297
44. View of the Manor-houſe at Laund, 301
45. Portraits of Thomas and Gregory Cromwell, 323
*45. Another View of Laund, Chapel, Arms, &c. 326
46. Monuments, Arms, &c. in Laund Chapel, 327
47. Lodington Church, Arms, &c. — 330
48. Loſeby Church, Arms, &c. — 340
49. Preſtwould Hall, — — — 355
50. Portrait of ſir Chriſtopher Packe, — ibid.
51. Preſtwould Church and Monuments, 358
52. Three other Monuments at Preſtwould, 359
53. Queneborow Church and Monuments, 378
54. Radcliffe Church, — — 382
55. Radcliffe New Church, with Monument, &c. 383
56. Earl Ferrers's old Manſion-houſe at Rakedale, 386
57. Rakedale Church, with the modern Houſe, 386
58. Portrait of ſir Robert Shirley, bart. — 387
59. Rereſby and Rotherby Churches, — 391
60. Saxulby Church and Monuments, 403
61. Segrave and Sileby Churches, — 413
62. Portrait of Robert Burton, — 418
63. Skeffington Hall, — — — 440
64. ———— Church and Hall, — 442
65. ———— Monuments in the Church, 444
66. Syſton and Thruſſington Churches, &c. 454
67. Tilton Church, and old Monuments, 470
68. Tugby and Eaſt Norton Churches, Arms, &c. 483
69. Portraits of Iſaac and Peter Oliver, — 490
70. Twyford and Thorpe Sachvile Churches, 494
71. Walton and Wymeſwould Churches, 499
72. } Monuments of the Wingfield Family, }
73. } from Letheringham in Suffolk, } 514
74. Monuments of the Naunton Family, 515
75. ———— of ſir Robert Naunton, from } the original braſs (a folding-plate) } 516

[1] The deſign is a groupe of diſtinct ſubjects; the order alone is fancy. The two ſhields with the letters M and L are to be found in different parts of the county. The arch at top is taken from the outſide at the Weſt end of Gaddeſby; the figure and niche at top from the Eaſt window of Evington. On the left ſide is the eſcutcheon, ſurtout, and penon of ſir Wolſtan Dixie, bart. at Market Boſworth. The helmet, ſpear, gauntlet, and ſword, fancy. The arched ſeat towards the bottom from the North wall of Lubbenham. The figure above the ſeat within the arch is a ſupporter to a beam in Syſton. The font and pillar to the left are from Redmile; and at top the ſpring of the arch and two lions from over the Newark Gate. The ſtalls are from St. Margaret's. The niche on the right hand from Leiceſter Abbey wall; and the figure within it from Arneſby. The large window in the back-ground is the North window of Wigston's Hoſpital. Between the window and abbey niche is repreſented the top part of a circular ſtone ſtaircaſe, which leads to the rood-loft in Buckminſter. The tiles on the floor are from Coſſington. The braſs of Henry de Codyngton is near the North wall at Botteſford. The font on the floor from St. Mary's. The monument of a prieſt behind the font is from Radcliffe on the Wreke. The ſquare ſtone with the two angels from the outſide of the door of the entrance into Wigſton's Hoſpital; but inſtead of Wigſton's arms are thoſe of the Author. The ſtone lying flat on the floor has the arms of the County.

DIRECTIONS to the BINDER.

Title and Dedication; Advertiſement, b—f, p. v—xxii; B, 1—4; B 3, *5, 6; C—Q, 5—60; Q 3—Q 5, *61—*66; R—T t 3, 61—166; U u, 1, 2, 3, *167—168; XX—I i i 169—216; I i i 3, *215, *216; K k k—6 O 3, 217—514; 6 P 1, 2, 3, 515, 516; *513—*516; 6 Q—7 C, 517—560; Appendix and Index, B—F, 1—16.

_ The Portrait of Sir ROBERT SHIRLEY, intended for RAKEDALE, is reſerved for STAUNTON HAROLD, in the Hundred of WEST GOSCOTE.

PRINTED BY JOHN NICHOLS, RED LION PASSAGE, FLEET STREET, JUNE 28, 1800.

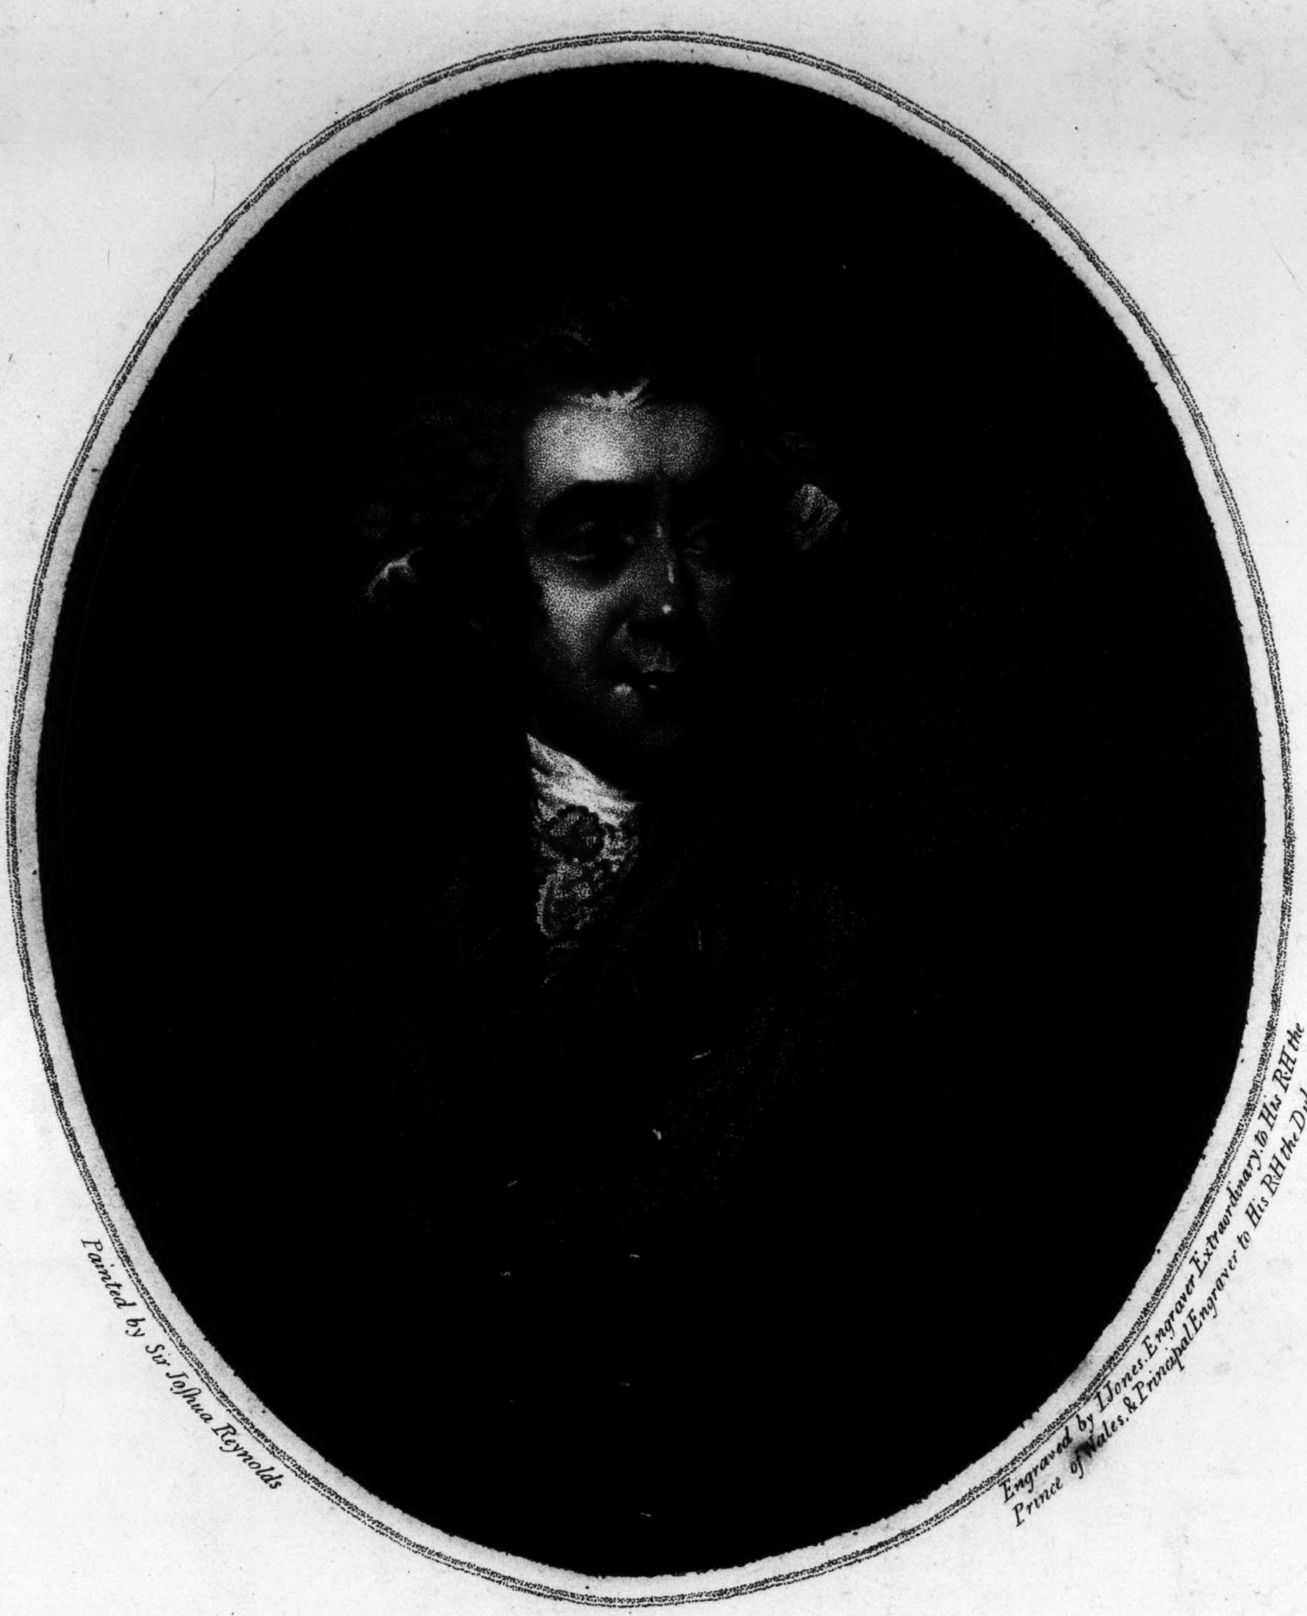
MVSEVM
BRITAN
NICVM

427. i

FRONTISPIECE Vol. III. Part II.



Painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds

Engraved by I. Jones. Engraver Extraordinary to His R.H. the Prince of Wales. & Principal Engraver to His R.H. the Duke of York.

Earl of Moira.

Publish'd by J. Nichols & C°. Jan. 1st 1815.

THE

HISTORY AND ANTIQUITIES

OF THE

COUNTY OF LEICESTER.

BY JOHN NICHOLS, F.S.A. EDINB. & PERTH.

"Si qui ſint in urbe ſuâ hoſpites, in patriâ ſuâ peregrini, & cognitione ſemper pueri eſſe velint, ſibi per me placeant, ſibi dormiant; non ego illis hæc conſcripſi, non illis vigilavi." CAMDEN.

VOLUME III. PART II.

CONTAINING

WEST GOSCOTE HUNDRED.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY AND FOR JOHN NICHOLS AND SON, RED LION PASSAGE, FLEET STREET;
AND SOLD BY F. AND C. RIVINGTON, ST. PAUL'S CHURCH YARD; T. PAYNE, CASTLE STREET, ST. MARTIN'S; AND J. WHITE, FLEET STREET.

1804.

MVSEVM
BRITAN
NICVM

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE FRANCIS RAWDON-HASTINGS,

EARL OF MOIRA, BARON RAWDON, &c. &c.

COMMANDER IN CHIEF OF HIS MAJESTY'S FORCES IN SCOTLAND;

THAN WHOM

THE UNITED DOMINIONS CONTAIN NOT A TRUER PATRIOT;

WHO COULD DISTINGUISH HIMSELF BY HIS PEN,

NOT LESS THAN BY HIS SWORD AND ELOQUENCE;

THIS HISTORY OF THE HUNDRED OF WEST GOSCOTE

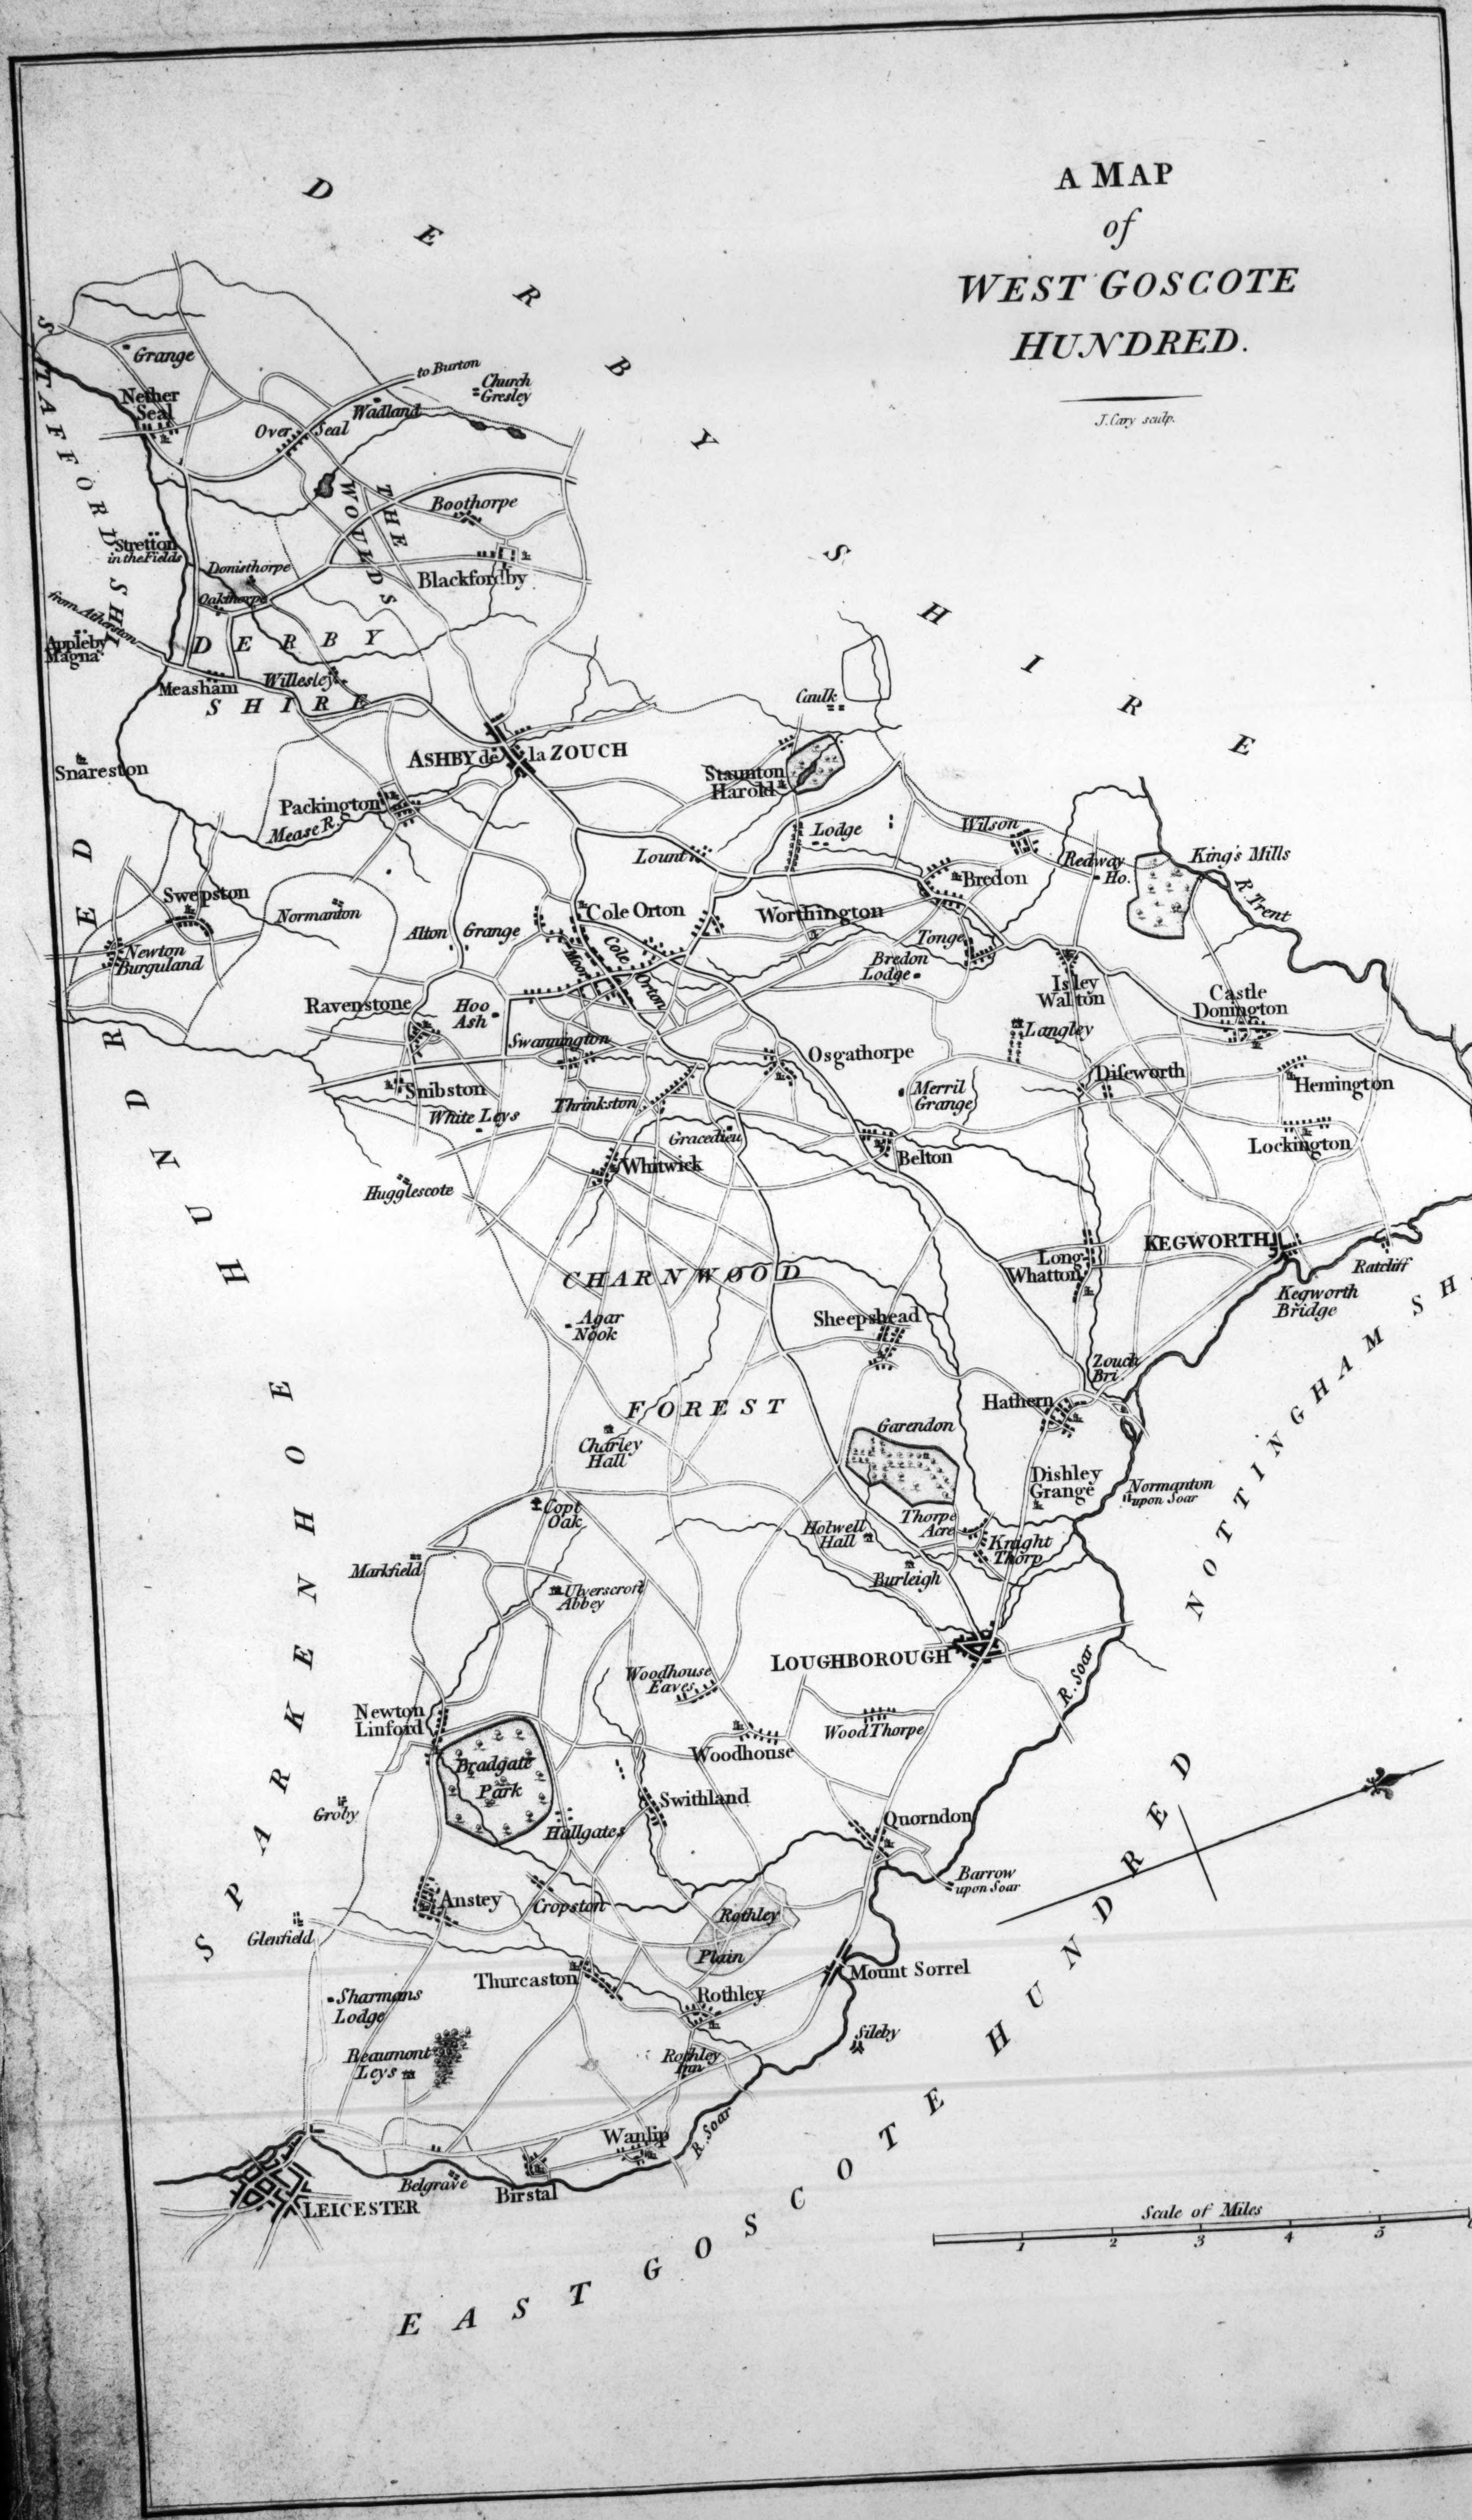
IS RESPECTFULLY INSCRIBED BY

HIS LORDSHIP'S

GREATLY OBLIGED AND VERY FAITHFUL SERVANT,

JOHN NICHOLS.

Feb. 2, 1804.



A MAP
of
WEST GOSCOTE HUNDRED.

J. Cary sculp.

DERBY SHIRE STAFFORDSH
DERBY SHIRE SPARKENHOE HUNDRED
EAST GOSCOTE HUNDRED
NOTTINGHAM SH.
Grange
Nether Seal
Over Seal
Wadland to Burton
Church Gresley
THE WOLDS
Boothorpe
Stretton in the Fields
Donisthorpe
Oakthorpe
Blackfordby
from Atherstone
Appleby Magna
Measham Willesley Caulk
ASHBY de la ZOUCH
Staunton Harold
Snareston
Packington
Mease R.
Lodge
Wilson
Lount
Redway Ho.
King's Mills
R. Trent
Bredon
Swepston
Normanton
Alton Grange
Cole Orton
Cole Orton Moor
Worthington
Tonge
Newton Burguland
Bredon Lodge
Isley Walton
Castle Donington
Ravenstone
Hoo Ash
Langley
Swannington
Osgathorpe
Diseworth
Hemington
Snibston
Merril Grange
White Leys
Thrinkston
Gracedieu
Lockington
Belton
Whitwick
Hugglescote
Long Whatton
KEGWORTH
Ratcliff
Kegworth Bridge
CHARNWOOD FOREST
Agar Nook
Sheepshead
Zouch Bri.
Hathern
Garendon
Charley Hall
Dishley Grange
Normanton upon Soar
Copt Oak
Hotwell Hall
Thorpe Acre
Knight Thorp
Markfield
Ulverscroft Abbey
Burleigh
LOUGHBOROUGH
R. Soar
Woodhouse Eaves
Newton Linford
Wood Thorpe
Woodhouse
Bradgate Park
Swithland
Groby
Hallgates
Quorndon
Barrow upon Soar
Anstey
Cropston
Rothley Plain
Glenfield
Mount Sorrel
Thurcaston
Sharmans Lodge
Rothley
Sileby
Beaumont Leys
Rothley Inn
Wanlip
R. Soar
Belgrave
Birstal
LEICESTER
Scale of Miles
1
2
3
4
5
6

ABBEY GATE,

a ſtreet, or row of houſes, without the North gate of the Borough of Leiceſter, leading from a place called The Hare and Hounds on St. Sunday's bridge, to the Abbey of St. Mary de Pratis; to which, before the diſſolution, it belonged; and undoubtedly received its denomination from being the road or acceſs to and from that religious houſe. It is ſituated within the pariſh of St. Leonard; but in parochial levies, &c. is conſidered as a diſtinct Liberty, and as part of the hundred of Weſt Goſcote.

For the notice which is taken of it in the Rentale of Charyte, and for the payments of the Abbey Liberty to the poors' rates, ſee the Hiſtory of the Church of St. Leonard in Leiceſter.

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, the Abbey Gate was rated at 4*s.*; and in the ſubſidy of 1445 at the ſame ſum, and no abatement was made.

An inventory of plate and church-furniture in the Abbey Gate in the year 1552 (probably in St. Leonard's church) may be ſeen in p. *6.

In a ſubſidy granted in 1627, Robert Owſton, of the Abbey Gate, paid after the rate of £3. for perſonal effects.

ASHBY DE LA ZOUCH,

in antient writings called Aſcebi and Eſſeby, is a ſmall market-town, in the North-weſt angle of the county, adjoining to Derbyſhire; by which it is bounded on the Weſt, and partly on the South; by Packington alſo on the South; Cole Orton on the Eaſt, and its own hamlet of Blackfordby on the North. It is diſtant from Leiceſter 17¾ miles; from Burton on Trent 9 miles; from Derby 14; Loughborough 12; Market Boſworth 12; Nottingham 21; Atherſton 13; and from Hinckley 17 miles; and, in the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, is within the deanry of Ackley.

The pariſh of Aſhby is very extenſive; comprehending the hamlets of Blackfordby and Boothorpe, and containing within its limits the extraparochial lordſhip of Alton Grange.

Kilwardby, a ſtreet beyond the brook at the Weſt end of the town, and The Calais[1], now another part thereof, were antiently deſcribed as diſtinct hamlets.

The manor, and a principal part of the lordſhip, is now the property of the earl of Moira.

The town conſiſts principally of one good ſtreet, in which ſtands a neat croſs; and is ſituated between three parks, Preſtop Park, the Great Park (commonly called Aſhby Old Park), and the Little Park, which laſt was the homeſtead to the caſtle; all of which are now diſparked.

A turnpike-road paſſes through this town from Nottingham to Tamworth and Birmingham; and another from Leiceſter to Burton upon Trent. There is alſo a turnpike-road from Aſhby to Loughborough; and another acroſs the Woulds from Hartſhorn to Bramborough-lane near Doneſthorpe.

In the reign of Edward the Confeſſor, this lordſhip, conſiſting of fourteen yardlands, was valued at ten ſhillings. At the Conqueror's ſurvey, it was worth forty ſhillings; and was held by Ivo under Hugo de Grenteſmainell. The land was equal to ten ploughs. One was employed in the demeſne, and two bondmen; and eight villans, with a prieſt, and ſix ſocmen, and four bordars, had ſix ploughs. There was a wood, a mile long and four furlongs broad, ſufficient for one hundred hogs[2].

Mr. Camden diſtinguiſhes Aſhby by the character of villa amœniſſima; and it is ſufficiently pleaſant to deſerve that appellation, being ſeated in a rich loamy ſoil; though in ſome diſtant parts of the lordſhip the land is neither rich in its own fertility, nor in the outward proſpect it affords. At preſent it is principally remarkable for its antient manor, and the ruins of a once ſtrong and ſtately caſtle. Its original appellation, no doubt, was ſimply Aſhby (of which name there are three other places in this county); and it had afterwards its diſtinction from the Zouches, who were lords of it.

"Soon after the Conqueror's time, the manor of Aſhby was held by Robert Beaumeis, a Norman; of which houſe was Richard Beaumeis, laſt dean of the collegiate church of St. Alkmund's in Shrewſbury; who, about 1145, ſurrendered up that church, with all its eſtates, to the uſe of ſome regular canons of the Auguſtine order, who came from Dorcheſter, and ſettled in an abbey he founded in the wood of Lilleſhull, dedicated to the honour of the bleſſed Virgin. He was nephew to Richard Belmeis, biſhop of London, 1152—1163; who founded the abbey of Chicheſter for thoſe regular canons; of which order he was ſo fond, that he intended to quit his biſhopric, and take it himſelf. Philip de Belmeis, his brother, gave alſo to the abbey of Lilleſhull four yard-lands in Aſhby, with his demeſne lands there called Suartcliffe, and the advowſon of the church, and 60 acres of land at Blackfordby. This Philip left only one daughter and heir, married to Alan la Zouch, who brought to her huſband this manor, and divers lands in other counties, as appeareth by the Legier-book of the ſaid abbey of Lilleſhull, now (1641) in the cuſtody of ſir Richard Leveſon, knight of the Bath[3]."

For the better aſcertaining the ſeveral donations by the different branches of this family, we ſhall inſert the following deeds:

1. "Domino ſuo & patri chariſſimo venerabili Rogero[4] Ceſtrenſi epiſcopo, ceteriſque tam prelatis quàm ſubditis ſancte eccleſie filiis, Philippus de Belmeis in Domino ſalutem. Noſcat paternitas veſtra, ceterorumque tam prelatorum quàm ſubditorum fraterna dilectio, me dediſſe & conceſſiſſe in firmam eleemoſinam & perpetuam poſſeſſionem, pro animabus patris & matris meorum, & uxoris mee, ceterorumque anteceſſorum noſtrorum, necnon pro ſalute meâ, & uxoris & filiorum meorum, totam terram que continetur infra Wathlinge-ſtreete & Merdiche, ad fundandam eccleſiam, in honore Sancte Dei genitricis Marie, canonicis de ordine Arroaſie de eccleſiâ Sancti Petri Dorcaceſtrie egreſſis, Deo ibidem & Sancte Marie regularitèr ſervientibus, ſolutam & quietam & abſolutam ab omni ſeculari ſervitio & exactione. Concedo etiam eis commoditates vicinorum nemorum, tam ad

---

[1] This name had probably ſome connexion with the property of William lord Haſtings in France. See p. 567.

[2] "Ivo tenet de Hugone 14 carucatas terræ in Aſcebi. Terra eſt 10 carucarum. In dominico eſt una, & 2 ſervi; & 8 villani, cum preſbytero, & 6 ſochmannis & 4 bordariis, habent 6 carucas. Silva, 1 leucæ longitudinis, & 4 quarentenarum latitudinis, ad 100 porcos. Valuit 10 ſolidos; modò 40 ſolidos." Domeſday, fol. 233. a. 1.

[3] Burton, MS.—[illegible] whether this Abbey book is not now in the poſſeſſion of the Marquis of Stafford?

[4] Roger de Clinton, biſhop of Coventry and Lichfield (then uſually ſtyled biſhop of Cheſter), 1128—1149.

focum quàm ad materiem edificiorum. Superaddidi quoque eccleſiam Sancte Elene de Aeſſebi, cum eccleſiâ de Blacfordbi, cui ſexaginta acre adjacent; & cum ceteris pertinentiis ſuis. Superaddidi etiam in eâdem villâ de Aeſſebi totam terram de dominio meo que vocatur Suarteclive, & terram Haconis ſutoris; & decimam molendinorum meorum ejuſdem ville; & decimam armenti mei, videlt, equarum & pullorum earum; & decimam paſnagii mei; & quietam paſnagii de porcis ſuis & commoditatem nemoris mei, tam ad focum quàm ad materiem edificiorum ſuorum. Hujus ergo donationis & conceſſionis hii teſtes ſunt ſubſcripti; Robertus epiſcopus Herefordie; Philippus filius Philippi de Belmis, qui non tantùm teſtis, ſed etiam conditor & conceſſor predicte eleemoſine; domina Matilda filia Willielmi Meſchin, uxor predicti Philippi de Belmis; Herebertus de Caſtello; Hugo de Cuilli; Hugo de Say; Philippus filius Odonis, & Rogerus frater ejus; Rogerus de Ewias; Robertus clericus; & Walterus de Aeſſebi. Valeat ſanctitas veſtra in Domino! Amen."

2. "Domino ſuo & patri chariſſimo & venerabili Waltero[1], Dei gratiâ, Coventrie epiſcopo, &c. Philippus, filius Philippi de Belmeis, in Domino ſalutem. Noverit univerſitas veſtra me conceſſiſſe & dediſſe in perpetuam eleemoſinam, & etiam pro ſalute animarum patris & matris meorum, & anteceſſorum meorum, canonicis regularibus Sancte Marie de Lilleſhull, de ordine Arroaſie, totam terram que continetur infra Watlingſtreet & Merdiche, ſolutam & liberam ab omni ſervicio & exactione; necnon eccleſiam Sancte Helene de Aſſeby, & terram Haconis Sutoris, &c. Hujuſque donationis mee ſunt teſtes; Ricardus Londonie epiſcopus, Ricardus archidiaconus Londonie, magiſter Hugo à Londonià, Radulphus de Belmeys frater meus, Petrus filius Willielmi, Rogerus de Arundel, Ricardus de Belmeys, Willielmus de Coſtenteine, milites mei; & Rogerus clericus meus, & Robertus filius Willielmi; Willielmus de Pontefracto, Robertus de Belmeys, Willielmus frater ejus, Petrus Candarius meus, Mauricius pincerna, Robertus camerarius, & alii ſervientes epiſcopi Londinenſis[2]."

3. "Univerſis ſancte matris eccleſie filiis, tam preſentibus quàm futuris, Alanus la Zouch, filius Galfridi vicecomitis, in Domino ſalutem. Noverit univerſitas veſtra me dediſſe & conceſſiſſe canonicis de Lilleſhullâ, pro ſalute meâ, & uxoris mee Adhelize, & puerorum noſtrorum, & pro animabus Philippi de Belmeis ſenioris & Philippi junioris, & ceterorum filiorum ejus, & omnium anteceſſorum meorum, eccleſiam de Eſſeby; cum capellâ de Blackfordby, & omnibus aliis pertinentiis ſuis; ſcilicet, in Blackfordby XL acras; in Eſſeby III virgatas terre, & quartam extra villam, que fuit Willielmi Foreſtarii; & terram Haconis Sutoris; totam terram de Suarteclive, que eſt inter viam de Pakynton ad Bredonam & diviſas per nemus; & terram de Overton; & decimam molendinorum meorum, &c.; & totam terram de Luſard, que eſt inter Watlyngſtreet & Merdiche; & commoditates nemoris mei de Tong-caſtle, &c. Hiis teſtibus; Rogero de Mortemeir, Alchero, Ricardo de Lundoniâ, Willielmo Cardiffe, Rogero clerico, Eliâ Codrel, Roberto de Sudenhall, dominâ Adeliziâ de Belmez, Willielmo de Belmeis filio ejus, & Petro fratre ejus, Roberto de Horſeleyâ, & multis aliis[3]."

4. "Univerſis eccleſie filiis Willielmus de Belmeys, filius Alani la Zouch, ſalutem. Noverit univerſitas veſtra me dediſſe, &c. canonicis de Lilliſhull, pro ſalute meâ, & animâ patris mei Alani la Zouch & matris mee Adhelize de Belmeys, & pro animabus Philippi de Belmeys ſenioris & Philippi junioris, & Rannlphi fratris ſui, & omnium anteceſſorum, &c. eccleſiam de Eſſeby, cum capellâ de Blackfordby, LX acras terre in Eſſeby, & 3 virgatas terre, & quartam extra villam que fuit Willielmi Foreſtarii, liberam & quietam de hidagio, de danegeld, de ſcutagio, de relevamine, de ſtretward, de moteſeig', de murdro, de arcturis, & omnibus aliis exactionibus & ſerviciis, &c. in boſco, in plano, &c. Hiis teſtibus; Philippo de Belmeys, Galfrido de Flie, Ivone Britone de Scun', Rogero clerico, Rogero de Flamville, magiſtro Roberto de Welleſburgh, Roberto capellano, Thomâ & Ranulfo preſbyteris, Henrico perſonâ de Hartiſhorn, Radulpho fratre ejus, Simone nepote abbatis Willielmi, Radulfo Caudrell, Hugone Trullemag[4]."

Sealed with a ſeal about two inches broad; himſelf on horſeback, brandiſhing his ſword; on his left arm a long ſhield, charged with a feſs, circumſcribed, "SIGIL. WILLIELMI DE BELMES, FILIUS[5] ALANI LA ZUCH;" Plate LXXVI. fig. 1.

"The family of Zouch deſcended from Geoffrey ſecond ſon of Alan viſcount of Rohan, in Little Britaine in France, (by Conſtantia his wife, daughter of Conan le Groſſe earl of Britaine, and Maud his wife, natural daughter of Henry I.); who bore, Gules, ten maſcles pierced Or; and this Geoffrey, for his difference, bore, Gules, ten bezants Or, called le Zouch (which in the French ſignifieth a ſtock[6]), for that he, in the reign of king Henry the Second, coming over into England, was the founder of another ſtock, here propagated from him. And, for that this family was deſcended of a daughter and heir of Conan the Groſs, duke of Bretagne, who bore for his arms a ſhield only Ermine, did likewiſe aſſume this addition to their coat from the houſe of Bretagne, viz. a quarter Ermine, which by the cadets and younger houſes was ſtill obſerved and kept, though with ſeveral differences. Some bore the quarter indented in the baſe; ſome the Ermine in chief, ſome in bend, ſome in feſs, ſome in chevron, ſome in bend engrailed; which I have ſeen thus varied in divers old rolls; others charging the quarter Ermine, as with a mullet, annulet, fleur de lis, and cinquefoil, which are yet to be ſeen in Harringworth church, co. Northampton[7]."

That the antient and noble family of the Zouches is branched from the earls of Britanny, all our Genealogiſts agree; though they do not deduce the time of that deſcent in each part alike.

William la Zouche, in a confirmation to the monks of Swaveſey, in Cambridgeſhire, of the grants made by his anceſtors to the abbey of St. Segius and Bachus, in Anjou, (whereunto this abbey of Swaveſey was a cell,) calls Roger la Zouch his father, and Alan la Zouch earl of Britanny (ſon of Geoffrey) his grandfather[8]. Which William died in 1199; for then it appears, that Roger his brother gave to the king £100. for livery of his lands[9]; and in 1203, upon collection of the fourth ſcutage of king John's time, paid 200 marks[10]. This Roger in 1213 attended that king into Poictou[11]; and, ſtanding firm to him in that turbulent time, towards the latter end of his reign obtained a grant of the manors of Petersfield and Maple Durham, co. Southampton[12], which were part of the lands of Geoffrey de Mandeville, one of the rebellious barons then in arms againſt him. In 1218, he procured a grant[13] from king Henry III. of all the lands in the manor of Goſtelei, co. Norfolk, which Falcaſe de Breant not long before held, and which formerly appertained to the viſcount of Roan (Geoffrey la Zouch, father of Alan beforementioned[14]). In 1219, he agreed to pay the king a fine of one palfrey, for a fair to be held yearly on the eve and day of St. Helen, and a market to be held weekly, on Wedneſday, at his manor of Aſhby[15]; and in 1229 was conſtituted ſheriff of Devonſhire[16]. In 1230, he had a confirmation from the king of the manor of Swaveſeye, and of all his lands in Fulburne, co. Cambridge, which he poſſeſſed by the gift of the before-ſpecified Alan viſcount of Roan, in exchange for all thoſe lands which the ſaid Roger then poſſeſſed in Britanny[17];

---

[1] Walter Durdent, conſecrated biſhop of Coventry and Lichfield 1149; died 1162.

[2] Roper, MS. from the original deed in the collection of ſir Robert Cotton, bart. [3] Ibid. [4] Ibid. [5] Sic.

[6] Accordingly William de la Zouch, archbiſhop of York, is complimented in the following verſe for his valour in an encounter againſt the Scottiſhmen at Bear-parke, 1342: "Eſt pater invictus ſicco de ſtipite dictus," &c. Camden's Remains, p. 151.

[7] Burton, MS. [8] Mon. Angl. vol. I. 572. b. n. 60. [9] Oblat. 1 Johan. m. 23.

[10] Rot. Pip. 5 Johan. Devon. [11] Clauſ. 15 Johan. in dorſo, m. 1. [12] Clauſ. 17 Johan. m. 17.

[13] Clauſ. 2 Hen. III. m. 4. [14] Mon. Angl. vol. II. p. 145. b. n. 30. [15] Fines 3 Hen. III. . . . m. 3.

[16] Pat. 13 Hen. III. m. 12. [17] Pat. 14 Hen. III. pars 1. m. 2.

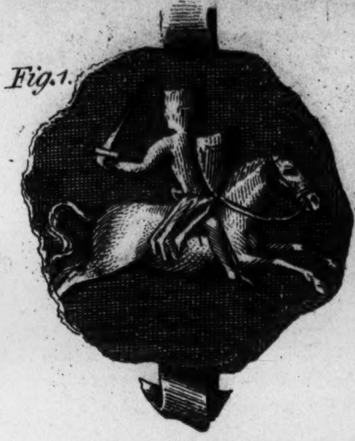

Fig.1.

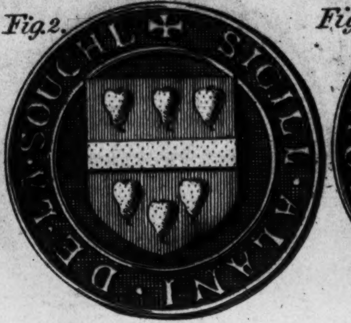

Fig.2.
SIGILL' ALANI DE LA SOUCHE

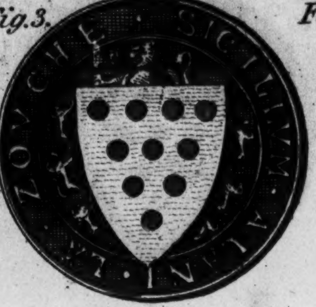

Fig.3.
SIGILLVM ALANI LA ZOVCHE

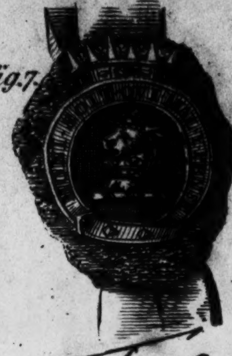

Fig.7.

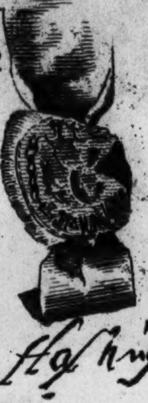

Fig.8.

Francis Hastings

H. Huntyngdon

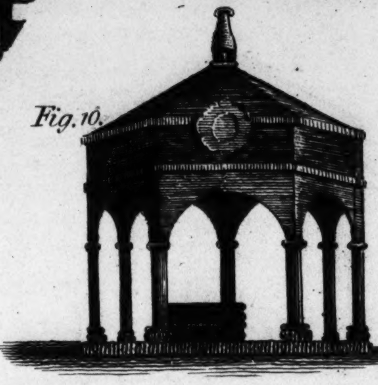

Fig.10.

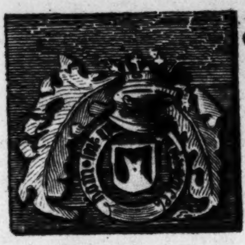

Fig.9.

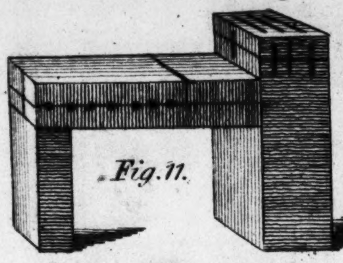

Fig.11.

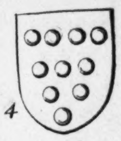
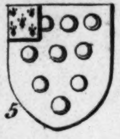
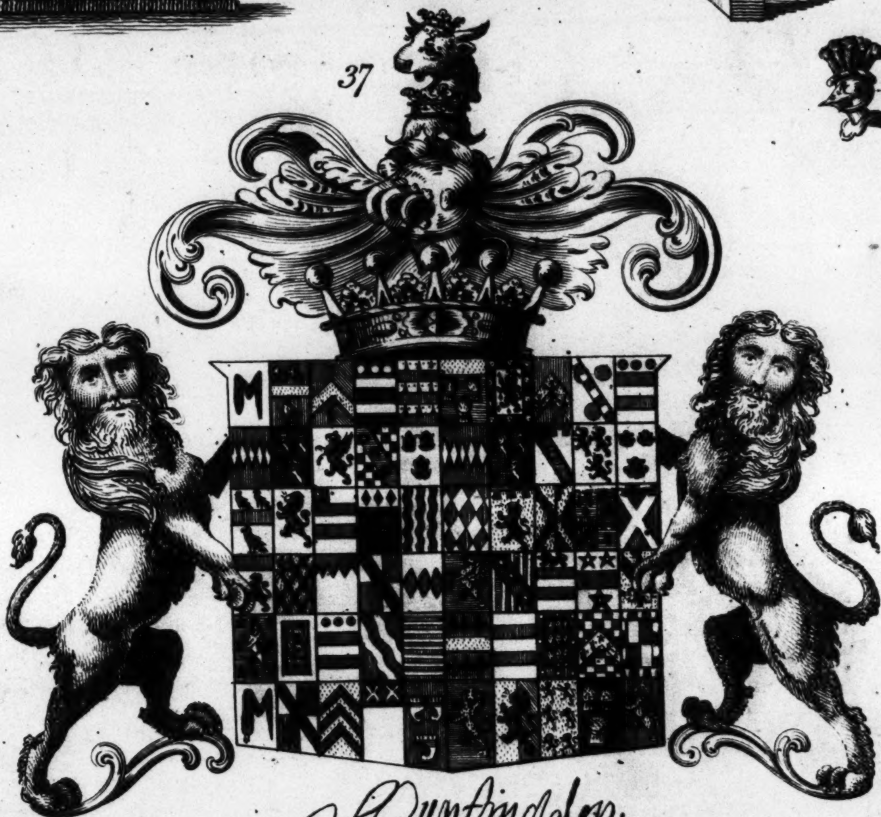


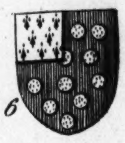
4



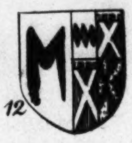
5



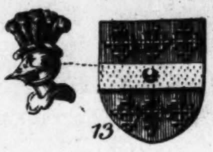
37



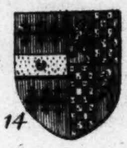
6



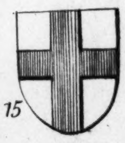
12



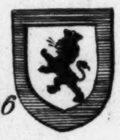
13



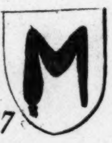
14



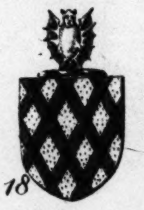
15



16



17



18

19 20

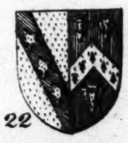
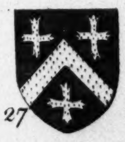
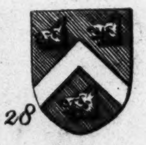
21



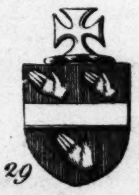
22



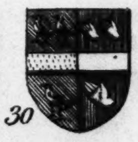
27



28

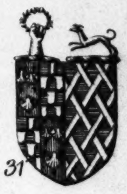


29

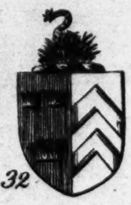


30

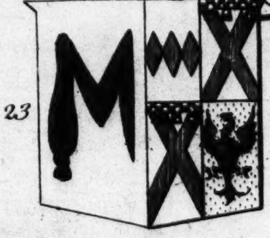
H. Huntingdon



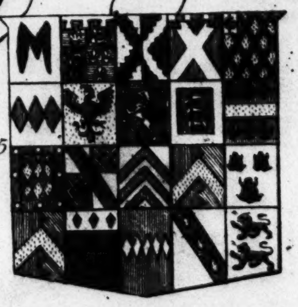
31



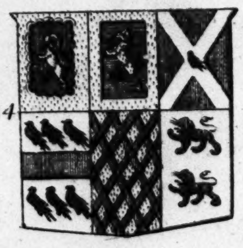
32



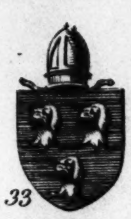
23



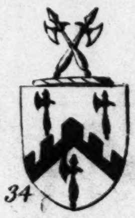
25



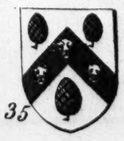
24



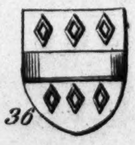
33



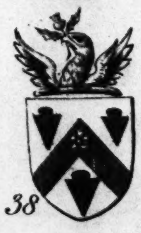
34



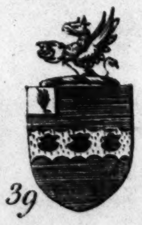
35



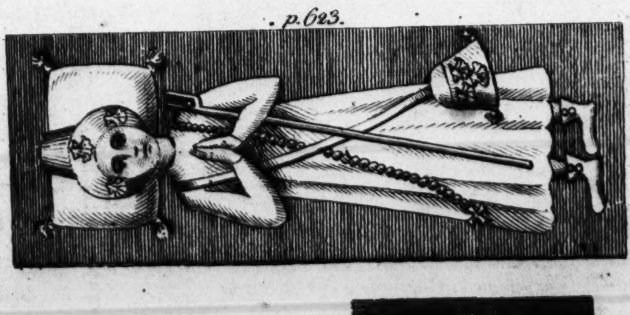
36



38



39

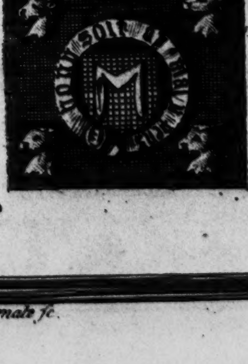


p.623.

Henry R

Edward

Marye the quene



26

Elizabeth R

Philippe

Vol 3 Pt 2

and continued ſheriff of Devonſhire to the end of 1231[1]. “This Roger, being lord of the manor of Tonge, co. Salop, did, by a fair deed under his ſeal, whereon is his portraiture, on horſeback, in a military habit, grant to Henry de Hugefort and his heirs three yardlands, three meſſuages, and certain woods, lying in Norton and Shaw (in the pariſh of Tonge); with pannage for a great number of hogs in the woods belonging to that manor; as alſo liberty of fiſhing in all his manors there, excepting the great pool of Tonge; with divers other privileges, viz. of getting nuts in thoſe woods, &c.; rendering yearly to him the ſaid Roger, and his heirs, a chaplet of roſes on the feaſt-day of the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt, in caſe he or they ſhould be at Tonge; if not, then to be put upon the image of the Bleſſed Virgin in the church of Tonge; for all ſervices, ſuit of court, &c.”[2] And (with Alan his ſon) he gave to the canons of Maiden-Bradley, co. Wilts, a certain tenement in Tudeworth.

Alan his ſon and heir in 1242 had ſummons to prepare himſelf with horſe and arms, and to attend the king into France[3]; and in 1250 had a grant of the cuſtody of all the king's lands in Cheſhire and North Wales, viz. Ros, Rewennyoc, Diffrin-Cloyd, and Englefield; to anſwer the yearly profit of thoſe lordſhips to the king, at Midſummer and Chriſtmas, by equal portions[4]. In 1252, he had the whole county of Cheſter and all North Wales committed to his truſt[5]. In 1256, he had an order on the barons of the Exchequer for the allowance of 20*l.* 19*s.* 2½*d.*; which he had advanced, as juſtitiary of Cheſter, for the repairs of the bridge of that city; and which (as appeared per inſpectionem Libri de Scaccario qui vocatur Domeſday) the county was bound to repair[6]. 4 May, 1261, he obtained the king's charter for a market every week on the Saturday at Aſhby de la Zouch, it being before held on the Tueſday; as alſo for two fairs yearly at his manor of Swaveſey, in Cambridgeſhire, each to continue for eight days; the one to begin on the eve of the feſtival of the Invention of the Holy Croſs; and the other on the eve of its Exaltation[7]. The ſame year he was conſtituted warden of all the king's foreſts South of Trent[8]; as alſo ſheriff of Northamptonſhire[9]; in which ſhrievalty he continued till near the end of 1266[10]; and in 1262 was made a juſtice itinerant for the counties of Southampton, Bucks, and Northampton[11]. In 1264, on the arbitrement made by Louis king of France betwixt king Henry III. and the barons, he was one of thoſe who, on the king's part, undertook the ſame[12]; and ſtood in ſuch great favour with that king, that in 1267 he obtained, for the behoof of his nieces Orabill and Margery, daughters of William de Harecourt, the redemption of the lordſhips of Tonge, co. Salop, and Aileſton, co. Leiceſter, with the ſoke of Stratton[13]; which, by reaſon of Harecourt's adherence to the king's adverſaries in the time of the late troubles, had been forfeited to the crown. In this year alſo he was made conſtable of the Tower[14]; as alſo governor of the caſtle at Northampton[15]. In 1257, he beſtowed on the Knights Templars divers lands in Sibford[16]; and gave to the monks of Bildwas the town of Upton, co. Salop[17]. He married Elen, one of the daughters and heirs to Roger de Quincy earl of Wincheſter[18]; whereupon, in 1267, he had livery of all that purparty of his lands which by inheritance belonged to her[19]. In 1268, he came into the Exchequer, and acknowledged that he had received 63*l.* 0*s.* 11*d.* out of the iſſues of the city of London, towards his maintenance during the time that he was the king's cuſtos of the City and Tower of London[20].

This Alan (as it is reported by Thomas Wikes, canon of Ouſeney, in his Annals) having authority granted unto him by king Henry the Third, amongſt other commiſſioners of the nobility, to convent certain perſons to be examined upon ſeveral articles, but eſpecially by what right and title they held their lands; John earl Warren and Surrey was ſummoned among the reſt; who, being demanded by the ſaid commiſſioners by what title he held certain lands then in his poſſeſſion, ſuddenly drew out his ſword, and ſaid, “By this my grandfather held his lands, and with this I will keep them;” and, being reproved by the ſaid Alan la Zouch for this his miſdemeanor, after ſome interchange of words paſſed between them, made an aſſault upon the ſaid Alan, and ſore wounded him as he ſat in Weſtminſter Hall, 1268; of which wound he ſhortly after died[21]. Theſe circumſtances are alſo ſtated by ſeveral of our hiſtorians; but in this, ſays Dugdale, they are miſtaken; he being only wounded, as was alſo Roger his ſon (at the ſame time with him); as appears by the inquiſition taken after his death, which ſhews that he died nearly two years after, being then ſeiſed of the manor of North Multon in Devonſhire; and alſo of the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch in Leiceſterſhire, held of the heir of the earl of Winton by the ſervice of a knight's fee; and that Roger la Zouch, his ſon and heir, was then 28 years old[22]. It appears alſo that the earl Warren entered into a recognizance, upon forfeiture of all his lands and goods to Edward the king's ſon, to ſtand to the doom of the king's court, for the treſpaſs done to ſir Alan la Zouch and Roger his ſon in Weſtminſter Hall[23].

He left iſſue Roger above-mentioned, and a younger ſon Eudo; from the latter of whom, though the elder branch failed, the Zouches lords of Harrington branched out, and were for many deſcents barons of this realm.

Mr. Burton mentions, in his account of the windows in Aſhby church, the ſurcoat of a knight in armour kneeling, and holding in his hand a banner, with this coat upon it: Gules, a feſs between ſix pears Or; which he calls the coat of Beauchamp. But this is in reality another coat of Zouch; as is evident by a ſeal appendant to a grant made by Alan la Zouch, of lands of c*s.* rent in Tudeworth to the Lazars' Hoſpital at Mayden Bradley, for the health of his own ſoul, and that of Elen his wife[24]. See Plate LXXVI. fig. 2.

In the Teſta de Nevill, compiled about 1240, Aſhby is not ſeparately noticed; being at that time included within the fee of Winton.

“Univerſis, &c. Alanus le Zouch, dn̄s de Eſſeby la Zouch, ſalutem. Noveritis me dediſſe, pro animâ Elene uxoris mee, Domino & uni capellano in eccleſiâ de Eſſeby la Zouch, quinque marcas annui redditûs. Teſtibus; Rogero filio meo primogenito, Alano fratre ſuo, &c.”[25]

In 1270, it was found that Roger de Quinci, earl of Winton, died ſeiſed of four knights fees, in Eſſeby, Blackfordby, Kilwardby, Overton, Glenn, Carleton, and Rolleſton (value £20. each), which Alan la Zouch held; and that Elen de Vaus, relict of the ſaid Roger, held the ſaid fees in dower; and that Roger la Zouch held the ſame [under her and the heirs of the ſaid earl][26].

In 1278, the lady Elen was impleaded by Alexander Comyn earl of Bouchan, in reſpect to her lands in Aſhby, &c.; which the parliamentary records thus explain:

“Elena la Zuche queritur, quòd Alexander Comyn de Boucham traxit ipſam in placitum, in curiâ regis Scotie, de terris & tenementis exiſtentibus infra regnum Anglie; aſſerens ipſam plus habere in proparte ſuâ in Angliâ de terris & tenementis que fuerunt Rogeri de Quency quondam comitis Wyntonie, quàm idem Alexander habet in proparte ſuâ que ad ipſum pertinet ratione propartis Elizabethe uxoris ſue; & unde predicta Elena habuit breve domini regis Anglie de inhibitione, directum eidem Alexandro, nè proſequeretur, in eâdem curiâ regis Scotie, de terris & tenementis infra regnum Anglie ſemel & bis; pro quo mandato non ſuperſedebat in aliquo, ſet perſequebatur ad judicium; & ei adjucatum fuit in eâdem curiâ, XL marcate terre, & $\overset{\text{VIII}}{\text{XX}}$ marce de arreragiis, in abſentiâ ipſius Elene, que ibidem noluit reſpondere contra inhibitionem & dignitatem corone regis Anglie; per quòd tertiò ei mandatum fuit, nè ulteriùs procederet in dicto placito; & quòd eſſet coram domino rege, à die Paſche in XV dies, ubicunque eſſet in Angliâ, ad reſpondendum domino regi de predicto contemptu, & quare perſecutus eſt placitum illud in curiâ regis, de terris & tenementis infra regnum Anglie exiſtentibus, contra mandatum domini regis, in leſionem dignitatis corone ſue. Ad quem diem idem Alexander non venit, neque breve ſuum ei directum returnavit; unde eadem Elena petit ei remedium exhiberi, ſicut idem Alexander homo domini regis eſt, & tenementa que habet in Angliâ de domino rege tenet."—This was anſwered, "Tranſcriptum ultimi brevis domini regis, directi predicto Alexandro, attachiatur iſti petitioni."

---

[1] Rot. de eiſdem annis, Devon.
[2] Ex ipſo autographo penès . . . . . Forſter, de Tonge, an. 1636.
[3] Rot. Vaſcon. 23 Hen. III. in dorſo, m. 3.
[4] Pat. 24 Hen. III. m. 3.
[5] Pat. 37 Hen. III. m. 15.
[6] Madox, Firma Burgi, p. 89; ex Memorand. 40 Hen. III.
[7] Cart. 45 Hen. III. m. 8.
[8] Pat. 45 Hen. III. m. 8.
[9] Ibid. m. 10.
[10] Rot. Pip. de iiſdem annis, Northampton.
[11] Pat. 46 Hen. III. m. 12.
[12] Pat. 48 Hen. III. 18.
[13] Pat. 51 Hen. III. m. 2.
[14] Ib. m. 15.
[15] Ib. m. 25.
[16] Mon. Angl. vol. II. p. 544. b. n. 50.
[17] Ibid. vol. I. p. 780. b. n. 40.
[18] Eſch. 55 Hen. III. n. 36.
[19] Clauſ. 51 Hen. III. m. 12.
[20] Madox, Firma Burgi, p. 252; ex Memorand. 52 Hen. III. Rot. 2.
[21] Matthew of Weſtminſter, Flores Hiſtoriarum, lib. ii. p. 165.
[22] Eſch. 54 Hen. III. N° 16. Devon; and N° 36. Leic.
[23] Rot. Clauſ. 5[illegible] Hen. III.
[24] Orig. penès S. Roper.
[25] From an undated deed, MS. K. p. 52. cited by Mr. Le Neve, penès S. S. S. H.
[26] Eſch. 55 Hen. III. N° 36. Leic.

"Eadem Elena petit remedium de vicecomitibus qui preceptum domini regis habent ad levandum denarios ſuos de comite Warenne, qui nihil indè reſpondent; nec barones de ſcaccario eiſdem vicecomitibus aliquam penam injungunt, nec ipſos amercian; per quod adhuc à retrò ſunt duo mille marce, jam per ſeptem annos. Unde rogat dominum regem, ut ipſe, caritatis intuitu, aliquod remedium indè feſtinet."—The anſwer was, "Subveniatur ei per brevia de cancellariâ [1]."

In the Itinerary of 1280, Aſhby de la Zouch, Blackfordby, Alton, Overton Sauſe, and Overton Quatermers, anſwered collectively as one vill.

In 1285, it was found that Roger la Zouch died ſeiſed of the manor of Eſſebye de la Zouch, with the appurtenances, held of the honour of Winton by the ſervice of a knight's fee; and that Alan la Zouch, ſon and heir of the ſaid Roger, was then aged 18 [2].

In the ſame year, a fine paſſed between Elen la Zouch and Milicent de Montalt concerning the church of Burgell, in Yorkſhire [3]; and in 1296, lady Elen la Zouch died ſeiſed of divers lands in Scotland, &c.; the manor of Brackley; the curia forinſeca called the honour of Winton; and the manor of Shepeſhed in Leiceſterſhire; and ſir Alan de la Zouch, ſon of ſir Roger de la Zouch, ſon of the ſaid Elen, was her next heir, and of the age of 24 [4].

Alan la Zouch, offering his ſervice to king Edward I. in Gaſcoigne, on the feaſt-day of St. Dennis, 1288, was courteouſly by him received; and therefore his homage was at that time reſpited by reaſon of his preſent employment, and a ſpecial precept forthwith ſent to Walter de Laſci, the king's eſcheator-general, to deliver unto him all his lands in that realm which he had ſeized into his hands for neglecting that homage [5]. In 1290, he was one of the competitors for the Scottiſh crown; in which character his ſeal is given, Plate LXXVI. fig. 3. from a copy, in the Heralds College, of the famous letter to the Pope, on the ſubject of king Edward the Firſt's claim to Scotland. He bore for his arms, on a ſhield Gules, ten bezants 4. 3. 2. 1. the ſhield ſurrounded with ſix lions paſſant [6]. In 1294, he was again in the wars of Gaſcoigne [7]; ſo likewiſe in 1296 [8], Edmund earl of Lancaſter (the king's brother) being then commander of the Engliſh army there [9]; at which time the French iſſued out of Bourdeaux, and gave them battle, but with great loſs being forced to retreat [10]. In 1296, he was again in Gaſcoigne [11]; and in 1297 in the wars of Scotland, being then in the company of Roger le Bigod [12]. In 1298, he was ſummoned by writ to the parliament amongſt the barons [13]. In 1305, he was again in the Scottiſh wars [14]; and in 1310, amongſt others of the nobles, had ſummons to be at Roxburgh on the feaſt-day of St. Peter ad Vincula, well fitted with horſe and arms, to march againſt the Scots [15]. The next enſuing year, 1311, he was conſtituted governor of Rockingham caſtle in Northamptonſhire, and ſteward of that foreſt [16]; and, having confirmed to the canons of Leiceſter all thoſe grants which his anceſtors the earls of Leiceſter and Wincheſter had made to them [17], departed this life in 1313, being then ſeiſed of the manor of North Moulton, co. Devon; and 416 acres of land in Hale, co. Northampton, according to the large hundred; likewiſe of the manor of Trene, and advowſon of the chapel there, co. Suſſex; as alſo of £12. free rent in Nutbury, and the advowſon of the church of Chyldington, in the ſame county; moreover of the manor of Great Gateſden, and the advowſon of the church, co. Hertford; and of the manors of Swaveſey and Fulborne, with the advowſon of the priory of Swaveſey. He was ſeiſed alſo in demeſne, as of fee, of the manor of Aſhby la Zouch, held of John Comyn late earl of Boghan, by the ſervice of two knights fees; and was patron of the abbey of Lilleſhull, then valued at £20. Elen [18] the wife of Nicholas de St. Maur, aged 36, Maud the wife of Robert Holand, aged 24, and Elizabeth, a nun at Brewode, co. Stafford, aged 20, were his daughters and next heirs [19].

Having no iſſue male, he gave the manor of Aſhby to William la Zouch of Richard's Caſtle, otherwiſe called William la Zouch of Mortimer, ſecond ſon of his nephew Robert Mortimer, of Richard's Caſtle, in whom the reverſion of the lordſhips of Swaveſey and Fulborne was veſted. This William called himſelf Zouch [20], for that his mother was daughter and heir of William la Zouch, great uncle to the ſecond Alan, as in the Genealogy hereafter ſet down doth appear.

May 16, 1323, king Edward II. ſent his letters to Robert de Gaddeſby, keeper of all his forfeited lands, &c. in Leiceſterſhire; ſignifying, that, whereas he had lately commanded the ſaid Robert to certify him touching the manner and cauſe of his ſeizing the hamlets of Glen, Blackfordby, and Aſhby, in the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch, into the king's hands; and that, whereas he the ſaid Robert had, in return, ſignified that he being given to underſtand that Robert de Holand had forfeited his lands to the king; and that he the ſaid Robert de Holand had, at that time, the ſervices of certain freeholders of the aforeſaid hamlets, which hamlets were parcel of the manor aforeſaid; he the ſaid Robert de Gaddeſby had therefore ſeized the ſame for the king's uſe; and that, at the time of the ſaid ſeizure, William la Zouch had declared that he, and not Robert de Holand, was ſeiſed of the ſervice of the aforeſaid tenants; and that afterwards he the king, being willing to be more fully ſatisfied as to the truth of the premiſſes, aſſigned certain honeſt men to enquire thereupon in preſence of the ſaid Robert de Gaddeſby; and that, by an inquiſition then made and returned into chancery, it was found that Alan la Zouch was ſometime ſeiſed of the manor aforeſaid, with all its appurtenances; and that the ſaid Alan afterwards gave and granted the ſaid manor, &c. to William Por, a capellan, to hold to him and his heirs for ever; by virtue of which gift, the ſaid William was ſeiſed of the aforeſaid manor, &c. with the ſervices of all the freeholders of the hamlets of Glen, Blackfordby, Alton, Overton, Ravenſton, and Aſhby; and that the ſaid William afterwards granted to the aforeſaid Alan, that the manor aforeſaid, &c. ſhould remain to William la Zouch and his heirs lawfully begotten; and, in caſe the ſaid William died without lawful iſſue, that then, after the ſaid William's deceaſe, the ſaid manor, &c. ſhould remain to the right heirs of him the ſaid Alan; and that, the ſaid Alan being ſeiſed of the ſaid manor, &c. for term of his life, after his death, William la Zouch, by virtue of the fine aforeſaid, entered upon the ſaid manor, &c.; and was ſeiſed thereof at what time the above Robert de Holand forfeited his lands, viz. the 30th of December laſt paſt; at what time the ſaid Robert Gaddeſby ſeized the ſervices of certain free tenants of the hamlets aforeſaid; viz. of William Truan, William Gunſone, and Robert Perſone and Edith his wife; as alſo three virgates of land, 40*s.* rent, and the ſixth part of a mill in Glen, as a wardſhip, by the reaſon of the minority of Roger Fitzherbert, whoſe ſervice belonged to the manor aforeſaid; and that, by the abovementioned inquiſition, it was alſo found that, at what time the above William la Zouch ſtood ſeiſed of the manor, &c. aforeſaid, the above Robert de Holand diſtrained the aforeſaid Truan, Gunſone, Perſone and his wife, by grievous diſtreſſes, till they alſo did fealty to him; but that he received no profit from the ſervices of the ſaid tenants; for that the ſaid tenants ceaſed not to do ſervice to William la Zouch, notwithſtanding the fealty which they did to the above Robert de Holand: The king, being unwilling to injure the aforenamed William la Zouch, did therefore command the aforeſaid Robert de Gaddeſby, that, this being the caſe, he ſhould give over inſiſting upon the ſervices and wardſhip aforeſaid, and let William la Zouch remain in the ſame eſtate, as to the premiſſes, as he found him in, when Robert de Holand forfeited.—

---

[1] Petitions in Parliament 6 Edw. I; Rot. Parl. vol. I. p. 13.
[2] Eſch. 13 Edw. I. N° 30. Leic.
[3] Fines 17 Edw. I.
[4] Pat 24 Edw. I. pars 2.
[5] Clauſ. 17 Edw. I. m. 2.

[6] A ſimilar ſeal of the lions paſſant, without the bezants, is appendant to a deed of John de Haſtings, temp. Hen. II. This John will be farther noticed under Kirby in Sparkenhoe Hundred.—Three differences of Zouch's bearings may be ſeen in Plate LXXVI. Gules, ten bezants, 4. 3. 2. 1. fig. 4; the ſame with a canton Ermine, fig. 5; and with a quarter Ermine, fig. 6; from ſir William Dugdale's Warwickſhire, vol. I. pp. 59–79. 118. 564. vol. II. p 650.

[7] Rot. Vaſcon. 22 Edw. I. m. 9.
[8] Rot. Vaſcon. 24 Edw. I. m. 17.
[9] Tho. Walſingham, p. 29. n. 30.
[10] Ibid.
[11] Rot. Vaſcon. 25 Edw. I. in dorſo, m. 5.
[12] Rot. Scot. 26 Edw. I. m. 2.
[13] Rot. Summ. ad Parliamentum, temp. Edw. I.
[14] Rot. Protect. 34 Edw. I. m. 8.
[15] Rot. Scot. 4 Edw. II. in dorſo, m. 5.
[16] Rot. Fin. 5 Edw. II. m. 7.
[17] Mon. Angl. vol. II. p. 311. l. 4.
[18] Which Elen was afterwards re-married to Alan de Charleton. Clauſ. 29 Edw. III. n. 2.
[19] Eſch. 7 Edw. II. N° 36. Leic.

[20] Remembrance of benefits made ſome change their names; as William Mortimer, deſcended from thoſe of Richard's Caſtle, took the name of La Zouch, and named his ſon Alan la Zouch, for favours received from the lord Zouch of Aſhby de la Zouch, in reſpect of alliance, as appeareth by Inq. 21 & 22 Edw. III. Camden's Remains, p. 144.

—"Rex dilecto ſibi Roberto de Gadeſbye, cuſtodi terrarum & tenementorum, forisfactorum, & aliorum, in comitatu Leiceſtrie, in manu noſtrâ exiſtentium, ſalutem. Cùm nuper vobis mandaverimus, quòd nos, ſuper modo & causâ captionis hamelettorum de Glen, Blackfordby, & Aſheby, in manerio de Aſheby la Zouch, per vos in manum noſtram, redderetis certiores; & vos nobis ſignificaveritis, quòd, pro eo quòd datum fuit vobis intelligi, quòd Robertus de Holand, die quo forisfecit versùs nos, habuit ſervicium quorundam liberorum tenentium hamelettorum predictorum; que hameletta ſunt pertinentia ad manerium predictum, eadem ſervicia exiſtentia in manu noſtrâ, ſalvo jure cujuſlibet; & quòd Willielmus la Zouche, die captionis predicte, dixit ſe eſſe ſeiſitum de ſerviciis tenentium predictorum; ac nos poſtmodùm, ſuper premiſſis pleniùs volentes certiorari, aſſignaverimus quoſdam fideles noſtros ad inquirendum indè, in veſtrâ preſentiâ, pleniùs veritatem; & per inquiſitionem illam factam & cancellariâ noſtrâ retornatam, ſit compertum, quòd Alanus la Zouche quondam fuit ſeiſitus de manerio predicto, cum pertinentiis omnibus ſuis; & quòd idem Alanus poſtmodùm dedit & conceſſit predictum manerium, cum pertinentiis, Willielmo Por capellano, habendum ſibi & heredibus ſuis in perpetuum; virtute cujus donationis, idem Willielmus fuit ſeiſitus de manerio predicto, cum ſerviciis omnium liberè tenentium hamelettorum de Glen, Blackfordby, Alton, Overton, Ravenſton, & Aſheby, tanquam pertinentiis ad manerium predictum: & quòd idem Willielmus poſtea dedit & conceſſit predicto Alano manerium predictum, cum pertinentiis, & quòd remaneret Willielmo la Zouche & heredibus de corpore ſuo procreatis; &, ſi idem Willielmus la Zouche obiret ſine herede de corpore ſuo legitimè procreato, tum, poſt deceſſum ejuſdem Willielmi la Zouche, manerium predictum, cum pertinentiis, remaneret rectis heredibus ipſius Alani; & quòd idem Alanus fuit ſeiſitus de manerio predicto, cum ſervitiis omnium liberè tenentium hamelettorum predictorum, tanquam pertinentiis ad manerium predictum, totâ vitâ ſuâ; poſt cujus mortem, dictus Willielmus la Zouche, virtute finis predicte, intravit manerium predictum, cum pertinentiis; & omnes liberè tenentes hamelettorum predictorum eidem Willielmo de fidelitatibus & ſerviciis ſuis, tanquam pertinentiis ad manerium predictum, ſe attornaverunt; & indè fuit ſeiſitus eo tempore quo predictus Robertus de Holand versùs nos forisfecit, videlicet, uſque XXIV Decembris ultimè preteritum; quo die vos ſervicia quorundam liberè tenentium hamelettorum predictorum (videlicet, Willielmi Truan, Willielmi Gunneſone, & Roberti Perſone & Edithe uxoris ejus,) de quibuſdam tenementis ſuis in quibuſdam hamelettorum predictorum; & etiam tres virgatas terre, XL ſolidatos redditûs, & ſextam partem unius molendini in Glen, nomine cuſtodie, ratione minoris etatis Reginaldi filii Herberti (cujus ſervicium pertinet ad manerium predictum) cepiſtis in manum noſtram. Per quam quidem inquiſitionem ſimilitèr compertum eſt, quòd, tempore quo predictus Willielmus la Zouche ſtetit in ſeiſinâ de manerio predicto, & de ſerviciis ſingulorum tenentium hamelettorum predictorum, tanquam ad manerium predictum pertinentiis; predictus Robertus de Holand diſtrinxit predictos Willielmum Truan, Willielmum Gunnſone, Robertum Perſone & Editham, per graves diſtrictiones, quouſque tibi ſimilitèr fidelitatem fecerunt: ſet tamen nullum proficuum de ſerviciis eorundem tenentium aſportavit. Et quòd iidem tenentes hamelettorum predictorum non ceſſaverunt de ſerviciis ſuis faciendis predicto Willielmo la Zouche, ratione fidelitatis quam predicto Roberto de Holand fecerunt. Nos, prefato Willielmo la Zouche injuriari nolentes, in hâc parte, vobis mandamus, quòd de ſerviciis tenentium predictorum, necnon de cuſtodiâ heredis predicti (ſi occaſione predictâ, & non aliâ, cepiſtis in manum noſtram), vos ulteriùs non intromittatis; ſet ipſum Willielmum la Zouche talem ſtatum in premiſſis, qualem tempore predicti Roberti de Holand (à tempore captionis predicte per vos in manum noſtram) habuit, abſque impedimento habere permittatis; ſalvo jure noſtro in omnibus & alterius cujuſcunque. Teſte rege, apud Rothewell, XVI° die Maii [1]."

In 1327, we find a petition to parliament, from William la Zouch of Harringworth, the ſon of Eudo, and nephew of Alan la Zouch of Aſhby, ſtating, that, on an appeal which had been lodged againſt the ſaid Eudo by Alice Beler, as one of the murderers of her huſband Robert Beler in 1325 [2], he had fled into France, where he died at Paris; and praying that an outlawry which had iſſued againſt his ſaid father might be reverſed. He was in conſequence directed to bring proper proofs of the allegations of his petition; and, when he had ſo done, that juſtice would take place [3].

In 1328, it was found that Robert de Holland held, in right of Maud his wife, one of the daughters and coheirs of Alan la Zouch, the manors of Halſo and Brackley, co. Northampton, the moiety of the manor of Gateſdene, co. Hertford, and the view of frankpledge in Shybton and Sibford, co. Oxon, as alſo the advowſons of the churches of Laughton and Markfield, co. Leiceſter, Croxton, co. Lincoln, Yelvertoft, co. Northampton, with the advowſons of the abbey of Lilleſhull, co. Salop, Garendon, co. Leiceſter, the priory of Ware, co. Hertford, and the hoſpital of lepers of Brackley, co. Northampton [4].

William la Zouch of Mortimer, youngeſt ſon of Robert Mortimer, of Richard's caſtle, in 1329 (then poſſeſſing the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch) had a grant of the cuſtody of the lands of Glamorgan and Morgannoc, with power to diſpoſe of the towns, caſtles, and lordſhips, within thoſe territories, as he ſhould think moſt meet for the king's advantage; for which ſervice he was to receive out of the revenue of thoſe lands in time of peace 200 marks, with allowance of 30 men at arms, to beſiege the caſtle of Caerfilly (if it ſhould not be then rendered); and in 1330 he was made chief juſtice of all the foreſts South of Trent, as alſo conſtable of the Tower of London.

---

[1] Clauſ. 16 Edw. II. m. 2.

[2] See vol. II. p. 325.

[3] Petitiones in Parliamento, 1 Edw. III. Rot. Parl. vol. II. p. 432.

[4] Eſch. 2 Edw. III. N° 54. Leic.

Having been a firm friend to Edmund of Woodſtock earl of Kent, uncle to the king, after the fall of that earl was ſought for by the ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire; and at length, rendering himſelf to priſon, was by the king's favour diſmiſſed. In 1330, with Alianore his wife, he accompanied the lady Alianore, the king's ſiſter, in her journey beyond ſea; for which reſpect the king was pleaſed to accept of the debt of £3666. 13*s.* 4*d.* due by him to the Exchequer, to be paid by 500 marks per annum, at Michaelmas and Eaſter, by even portions. He died March 1, 1335-6; and was buried in the midſt of Our Lady's chapel of Tewkeſbury; and in 1336 it was found that he died ſeiſed of this manor; that it was held of Henry de Beaumont, by the ſervice of two knights fees[1].

William la Zouch had been twice married; firſt, to Aliſe de Toeny (ſiſter and heir to Robert de Toeny, of Flamſtead, Herts; and reliċt, firſt, of Thomas lord Leybourn, ſecondly of Guy Beauchamp earl of Warwick[2]); by whom he had Alan la Zouch his ſon and heir; who was 19 years old at his father's death. By his ſecond wife, Alianore (one of the daughters and coheirs of Gilbert de Clare, ſometime earl of Glouceſter, and widow of Hugh le Deſpencer the younger) he had a ſon Hugh; the cuſtody of whoſe lands, by reaſon of his minority, were in 1337 committed to his brother Alan la Zouch[3]; who in 1338, proving his age, and performing his homage, had livery of the lands of his mother's inheritance; and in 1339 attended the king into Flanders.

In 1340, Henry de Beaumont earl of Boghan died ſeiſed of two knights fees in Aſhby la Zouch, held of the king in capite, as of the right of Alice his wife[4].

In 1341, Alan la Zouch was in the expedition againſt Scotland; in 1342 in that againſt France, the king being likewiſe there in perſon; and in 1344 obtained a grant of free-warren in all the demeſne lands at Aſſeby la Zouch, Swartclyffe, Braſthorp, and Balcroft. "Hiis teſtibus; Johanne Cantuarienſi archiepiſcopo, Radulfo Londonenſi epiſcopo, Willielmo de Bohun Northamptonie, & Willielmo de Clynton Huntingdonie, comitibus, Roberto de Sadinton cancellario, Willielmo de Edington theſaurario noſtro, Radulfo de Staffordiâ ſeneſcallo hoſpitii noſtri, & aliis. Dat' per manum noſtram, apud Weſtm', xiiii die Aprilis[5]."

In 1346, he again attended the king into France, and was with him at the famous battle of Creſſy; but, about the feaſt of All Saints that year, he died ſeiſed of the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch, held of dame Alice de Beaumont counteſs of Boghan, by the ſervice of three knights fees, leaving Hugh his ſon and heir then 15 years old, and Alianore, his wife ſurviving[6].

In the ſame year, Hugh ſon of Alan la Zouch (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 70*s.* for a knight's fee and a half, and a quarter of a knight's fee, in Aſhby de la Zouch; the abbot of Lilleſhull 8*s.* for a fifth part of a knight's fee in Blackfordby and Aſhby; and the abbot of Garendon 2*s.* for a twentieth part of a knight's fee in Halton [Alton] and Aſhby; all parcel of the honour of Winton[7].

In 1360, proving his age, and doing his homage, ſir Hugh la Zouch had livery of his lands; and, on his death in 1368, it was found that he held eight meſſuages and eight virgates of land, with the appurtenances, in Aſhby de la Zouch, of the king in capite, by knight's ſervice; alſo one cloſe, called Haſul Cloſe, in Aſhby Park; alſo the manor of Aſhby, held of ſir Henry Beaumont, knt. by knight's ſervice; and that Hugh de la Zouch was his next heir[8].

In 1369, Henry de Beaumont died ſeiſed of two knights fees in Aſhby de la Zouch, held of the king in capite, which Hugh de la Zouch held[9].

In 1373, ſir Hugh la Zouch, being then a knight, attended John of Gaunt duke of Lancaſter, in his expedition into Flanders; and on the 24th of May, 1375, being then lord of the manor of Aſhby, obtained an exemplification of the grant of 1261, for holding the Saturday's market[10].

In 1387, it was found not to be prejudicial to the king, nor to any other perſon, if the king gave permiſſion to Henry Baukewell, vicar of Croxhale, William Brethy, and John de Melton, chaplains, to grant one meſſuage and ten virgates of land in Aſhby de la Zouch to the prior and convent of Repingdon, in the county of Derby; the ſaid meſſuage and lands being held by the aforeſaid chaplain under the prior and convent, who held them of the king by knight's ſervice[11].

In 1396, John de Beaumont died ſeiſed of two knights fees in Aſhby de la Zouch, which was held by Hugh la Zouch[12].

This Hugh died in 1399, ſeiſed of the manor of Aſhby la Zouch (ſeven virgates of land in Culwardby excepted), which he held of the lord Beaumont[13]; and, having no iſſue, Joice, great grand-daughter of ſir John Botetourt, of Weoley caſtle, co. Worceſter (who had married Joice, daughter of William de la Zouch) was found to be his couſin and and heir. This Joice was the wife of ſir Hugh Burnell, knight of the Garter, at that time a very powerful man; who accordingly, in her right, took poſſeſſion of all the eſtates of Hugh lord Zouch. His lady died Jan. 1, 1405-6; and, in 1406, William Gaſcoigne, and John Rome, clerk, releaſed to ſir Hugh Burnell, knt. and others, all their right in the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch, with that of Swaveſea, and the advowſon of the priory or chapel there, the manor of Fulborn commonly called Zouch's Fee, in Cambridgeſhire, and others in Suſſex[14].

In 1413, ſir Henry Beaumont, knt. died ſeiſed of two knights fees in Aſhby, which Hugh la Zouch had held[15].

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Aſhby was rated at 7*l.* 5*s.* 0*d.*; and in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum; but an abatement was then made of 10*s.* Blackfordby and Alton were rated at 1*l.* 0*s.* 0*d.*; and nothing abated. Wodecote at 10*s.*; and 1*s.* abated.

Sir Hugh Burnell died Nov. 27, 1420, ſeiſed of the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch, held of the lord Beaumont by knight's ſervice; and (Edward his only ſon being then dead) Joice, wife of Thomas Erdington junior, Margaret wife of Edmund Hungerford, and Katharine Burnell, were found, on the inquiſition, to be his grand-daughters and next heirs[16].

James Butler, fifth earl of Ormond in Ireland, a firm Lancaſtrian, created by Henry VI. earl of Wiltſhire in 1448, and appointed lord-treaſurer to that king, was taken priſoner after the loſs of the battle of Towton field in 1460, and beheaded at Newcaſtle. He died ſeiſed of the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch. By what title he came into poſſeſſion of it, does not appear[17]; but in 1461, it was found that James earl of Ormond and Wiltſhire, attainted of high treaſon, was ſeiſed of this manor, value 29*l.* 4*s.*[18]

The manor of Aſhby, which thus devolved to the crown, was granted in 1461, inter alia, to ſir WILLIAM HASTINGS knt. only ſon of ſir Leonard Haſtings[19], of

---

[1] Eſch. 11 Edw III. N° 26. Leic.

[2] In 1317 ſhe gave a fine of 500 marks, for licence to marry this William la Zouch. She died in 1324.

[3] Rot. Fin. 11 Edw. III. m. 18.

[4] Eſch. 14 Edw. III. N° 24. Leic.

[5] Cart. 14 April, 18 Edw. III. n. 26.

[6] Eſch. 20 Edw. III. N° 47. Leic.

[7] Rot. Aux. 20 Edw. III.

[8] Eſch. 42 Edw. III. N° 60. Leic.

[9] Pat. 49 Edw. III. per Inſpeximus.

[10] Eſch. 43 Edw. III. pars 1. N° 12.

[11] Ad quod dampn. 11 Ric. II. N° 100. Leic.

[12] Eſch. 20 Ric. II. N° 14. Leic.

[13] Eſch. 1 Hen. IV. N° 20. Leic.

[14] Clauſ. 8 Hen. IV. m. 26.

[15] Eſch. 1 Hen. V. N° 45. Leic.

[16] Eſch. 8 Hen. V. N° 116. Leic.

[17] We find by Leland's Itinerary, vol. I. p. 22. that the manor of Aſhby was afterwards claimed by Thomas Bologne earl of Wiltſhire, who made a title to it by the lord of Rochford, the heir to Zouch.

[18] Eſch. 1 Edw. IV. N° 29. Leic.

[19] Of ſir Leonard Haſtings (who died Oċt. 20, 1455) a farther account will be found under Kirby and Braunſton; and his laſt will ſhall here be given: "Be it knowen to alle trewe Criſten people, &c. that I, Leonard Haſtyngs, knt. of hole minde, notifie and declare my laſt wille in fourme that inſueweth: Where I the foreſeid ſir Leonard, by my dede indentyd, have enfeoffed the right hye and myghti prince my gracious and ſpeciall lorde Richard duke of Yorke, Henry Grey, John Seyvill of Copley, John Perſey, John Skarburght, ſquyers, and John Eſtowe clerke, now on lyve, and William Barowe, John Haſtings, John Walter, and John Mayell, now deed, of and in the maners of Wyſtowe, Flekney, and Newtoun Harcourt, with th'appurtenances, Kirby, knt. an eſteemed ſervant of Richard duke of York; as was alſo his ſon ſir William; who, after his father's death, in 1455, was appointed ranger of Were foreſt, and ſheriff of the counties of Warwick and Leiceſter; and whom the duke of York, in a grant of an annuity of £10. "to the end he ſhould ſerve him before all others, and attend him at all times (his allegiance to the king excepted)," dated at the caſtle of Fotheringay, April 23, 1456, ſtyles "his beloved ſervant." He approved himſelf not leſs faithful to the duke's ſon Edward, afterwards king of England.

Dr. Fuller, mentioning William Haſtings as ſheriff of the counties of Leiceſter and Warwick in 1455-6, ſays, "The Reader needeth not my dim candle to direct him to this illuſtrious perſon. He was ſon to ſir Leonard Haſtings (ſheriff two years before); and was he whom king Edward IV. or rather Edward Plantagenet (becauſe more in his humane than royal capacity) ſo delighted in, that he made him his lord chamberlain, baron Haſtings of Aſhby de la Zouch, &c. [1]" That he was greatly favoured and entruſted by that king, appears by the large grants of lands and honours which he conferred upon him, and by his eminent employments both at home and abroad.

In 1460, he enfeoffed John Pomerie, abbot of St. Mary de Pratis at Leiceſter, and others, in his manor of Fleckney, and all other his lordſhips in Leiceſterſhire (except Newton Harcourt), and alſo in the advowſon of Bruntingthorpe.

From the king's peculiar munificence he obtained, in June 1461, immediately after the coronation, a grant of the office of maſter of the Mint in the Tower of London and town of Calais for 12 years: was appointed ſteward of the honour of Leiceſter, Donington, &c. conſtable of the caſtles of Leiceſter, Donington, and Higham Ferrers; ranger of Leiceſter Foreſt, Leiceſter Park, Barrow Park, Tooley Park, &c.

On the 18th of November, in conſideration of his good and faithful ſervices, he obtained from the king a general pardon, which ſtyles him "delectus & fidelis noſter Willm̃s Haſtyngs, miles, nuper armiger, nuper vicecomes com' Warw' & Leic'; alias dictus Willus Haſtyngs, armiger, filius & heres Leonardi Haſtyngs, militis; alias dictus Willmus Haſtyngs, miles, dñs Haſtyngs de Haſtyngs [2]." Moreover, being then made lord chamberlain of the king's houſhold, and lord chamberlain of North Wales, he was the ſame year, in conſideration of his many eminent ſervices, advanced to the dignity of a baron of the realm [3]; and thereupon obtained a grant, Feb. 17, 1461-2, of the caſtle and lordſhip of Folkingham, &c.; the manors of Loughborough and Shepeſhed, &c.; the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch, with the appurtenances, as parcel of the poſſeſſions of James Butler earl of Ormond and Wiltſhire, attainted; and alſo the manors and lordſhips of Beaumanor, Whitwick, Bocheſton, Newtown, Huckleſcote, Dunnington, Markfield, and Arnſby, which Katharine dutcheſs of Suffolk held for the term of her life, with remainder to William viſcount Beaumont. Alſo, by reaſon of the near alliance in blood of Katharine his wife to Richard Nevill earl of Saliſbury, he obtained a farther grant, to him and his heirs, of the manor, lordſhip, and caſtle of Belvoir, and the park, and all its members; viz. Wolſthorpe, Barkſton, Plungar, Redmile, and Harby, with the advowſon of the priory of Belvoir, and churches of Hoby, Wolſthorpe, and Redmile; of the rent called caſtle-guard (whereſoever throughout England) appertaining to that caſtle; the manor of Bottesford, with the hamlets of Normanton and Eaſtthorpe, the advowſon of Bottesford, &c.; all parcel of the poſſeſſions of Thomas lord Ros, and which, by his attainder in parliament, Nov. 4, 1461, had come to the Crown. And ſo high did he then ſtand in the king's eſteem, that ſundry perſons of honour, taking notice thereof, beſtowed their richeſt favours on him. Among theſe were John Mowbray duke of Norfolk; Anne dutcheſs of Buckingham; John lord Lovel; ſir Henry Stafford, knt. ſon and heir to the duke of Buckingham; Richard Woodvile lord Rivers; and Jaquet of Luxemburgh dutcheſs of Bedford [4]. He had alſo a penſion ſettled on him by Charles duke of Burgundy of 1000 ſcutes, of the value of 48 groats apiece.

In 1462, he was inſtalled knight of the Garter; and obtained a penſion of £20. a year from Anne counteſs of Suffolk. June 20, 1463, he obtained from "Reynold prior of the priory of the hous of St. Bartholmew in Weſt Smythfield, in the ſuburbs of London, and the convent of the ſame place, the leaſe of an houſe, with two ſolers thereupon builded, conteyning in length, Eſt and Weſt, xxIIII foot of aſſiſe, &c. with a voyde place of ground called a yerde, adjoyning to the North part of the ſaid houſe, &c. in the pariſh of Seint Benet at Paulys Wharfe in London, &c.; alſo, &c. a parcell of grounde, parcell of a tenement, dyhous, &c. conteyning in brede, Eſt and Weſt, five fete of aſſize, &c.; to have and to hold, &c. from the feſt of the Nativity of Seint John Baptiſt next coming, &c.; unto the ende and terme of ſixty yere, &c.; yielding therefore, yerely, &c. a red roſe, if it be aſked, at the feſt of the Nativitie of Seint John Baptiſt, &c [5];" and in the ſame year entered into a covenant with John lord Lovel, for the manors of Bagworth and Thornton; and was alſo appointed in a commiſſion to negotiate a truce with Scotland.

April 14, 1464, he entered into agreement with dame Elizabeth Grey, late wife of ſir John Grey, knt. ſon and heir of Edward Grey late lord Ferrers, that he ſhould have the wardſhip of her ſon Thomas Grey (afterwards marquis of Dorſet); who within five or ſix years following ſhould wed the eldeſt daughter that might then be living of the lord Haſtings [6]. He obtained, Oct. 16, another grant of the honour, caſtle, and lordſhip of Belvoir, with the park and all its members [7]; and on the 26th of the ſame month had a new grant of the manor and lordſhip of Aſhby de la Zouch, late parcel of the forfeited poſſeſſions of James Butler earl of Ormond and Wilts. "Teſte meipſo, apud Wycumbe, 26° die Octobris [8]." On this occaſion, it was found, on two ſeveral inquiſitions, that James Butler earl of Ormond and Wilts, at the time of his attainder, was ſeiſed of the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch [9]; and that it was held under William Beaumont viſcount Beaumont, who had alſo been attainted of high treaſon [10].

In 1465, he was ſent, with Richard earl of Warwick, to conclude a league of amity between king Edward and Charles of Burgundy earl of Charoloys; and, being ſtill maſter of the mint, undertook the coining of gold; viz. a piece of 8*s*. 4*d*. ſterling, called a noble, of which there ſhould be 50 ſuch pieces in the pound weight of the Tower; another piece of 4*s*. 2*d*. ſterling; and a third, of the fourth part of the firſt, for 2*s*. 1*d*. ſterling.

In 1466, he was again joined with the earl of Warwick, to treat of peace with the ambaſſador of Lewis tenances, in the ſhire of Leiceſter; and all other londs and tenements, &c. in the ſhires of Leiceſter, Warwick, Northampton, and Yorke, as in the ſaid dede more pleinly appereth; I the aforeſaid Leonard in the moſt humble wiſe beſeche my ſaid lord, and pray and require Henry Grey, John Seyvill, &c. &c. make an eſtate, anon after my deceſe, of the lands, &c. in Burton in the county of Warwick, to my wyef Alys Haſtings, for terme of her life; the remaynder thereof to my right heires, &c. Alſo, &c. to my ſon Richard, of the lands and tenements in Brantyngthorp and Appulby, with the appurtenances, the avowſon of the church of the ſame town of Brantyngthorp all only excepte, for terme of his lyſe, the remaynder thereof to my right heires, &c. Alſo, &c. to my ſon Raufe, of the lands, &c. in Walde Newton in the ſhire of Yorke, for terme of his lyſe, the remaynder thereof to my right heires. Alſo, &c. to my ſon Thomas, of the lands in Lytel-Aſheby, in the county of Leiceſter, and Drakenage in the countie of Warwick, for the terme of his life, &c. Yeven at Derby the viiith day of October, the yere of our Lord MCCCCLV°." Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 13.

---

[1] Worthies, Leiceſterſhire, p. 141.

[2] Harl. MSS. 4881. p. 36.

[3] Pat. 1 Edw. IV. m. 25.

[4] See ſome farther particulars of their bounty, under Beaumanor, p. 140.

[5] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 15.

[6] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 15. b.

[7] For the particulars, ſee vol. II. p. 38.

[8] Pat. 4 Edw. IV. pars 2. m. 18.

[9] Eſch. 3 Edw. IV. N° 12. Leic.

[10] Ibid. N° 30. Leic.

XI. king of France; as alſo to confer with Charles of Burgundy, for a marriage between him and Margaret ſiſter to the king of England; and was afterwards commiſſioned, with Richard earl Rivers, to treat of a league between king Edward and Philip duke of Burgundy. In the ſame year he was again conſtituted ſteward of the honour of Leiceſter, and conſtable of the caſtle there; as alſo warden of all the parks, chaces, and manors belonging to that honour.

In 1467, it was found that a certain fine was levied at York, in the king's court, before Ralph de Hengham and his aſſociates, between Alan la Zouch, plaintiff, and William Por of Swanneſby, a capellan, touching the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch[1]. On the 9th of Auguſt that year, the lord Haſtings obtained a new grant of the honour of Belvoir; and, on king Edward's eſcape from Middleham caſtle, he met him there, and eſcorted him to London with troops of his own raiſing.

In 1469, he enfeoffed George archbiſhop of York and others, inter alia, of the caſtle and manor of Belvoir, the manors of Wolsſthorp, Aſhby de la Zouch, &c. with the reverſion of the manor of Barrow upon Soar; which manor of Barrow dame Joice Erdington, widow, held for life under her huſband's will[2].

In 1470, when, through the danger wherein king Edward then ſtood, by reaſon that the earl of Warwick and others had put themſelves in array againſt him, ſo that he was neceſſitated to quit the realm, and flee to the duke of Burgundy; the lord Haſtings (being ſtill lord chamberlain), embarking with him at Lynn in a ſmall veſſel, landed in Holland on the 9th of October; and, on his ſucceſsful return, arrived with him at Ravenſport; and when news was brought to king Edward, being at dinner, that the marquis Mountague (brother to the earl of Warwick) who had promiſed, it ſeems, to ſerve him againſt his brother Warwick, was mounted on horſeback, with certain others, and cauſed all their men to cry King Henry, he ſtood firm to king Edward, and commanded 3000 horſe in the ſucceſsful battle near Barnet, where the ſtout earl of Warwick being ſlain, and his whole army defeated, king Edward regained the crown.

Shortly after, July 18, 1471, being one of the lords who in the parliament chamber ſwore fealty to prince Edward, the king's eldeſt ſon, he was conſtituted lieutenant of the town and caſtle of Calais, and town of Riſbanke, and marſhes adjoining.

In 1472, ſir Thomas Ormond, knt. releaſed all his right in the manor of Aſhby to William Stephens[3]; and in the ſame year, "die Mercurii ante Paſch', the fraternity of the Holy-rood in the wall, in St. Gregory's church in Northampton, admitted William lord Haſtings, and ſir Ralph Haſtings, knt. his brother, to be founders of the ſaid fraternity, in purſuance of letters patent from king Edward IV. in that behoof[4]."

In that year he was made conſtable of Nottingham Caſtle, and keeper of the gate there; as alſo warden of the foreſt of Shirewood, with the parks of Beſtwood and Clipſton, and woods of Billow, Berkland, Rumwood, Duſland, and Fullwood; likewiſe of the mills at Nottingham, called The Caſtle Mills, and Water of Trent, for life; as alſo chamberlain of the receipt of the king's Exchequer (which office Humphrey Bourchier formerly enjoyed), to hold for life; and the ſame year was conſtituted chief ſteward of the honour of the High Peak; as alſo of Tutbury, by George duke of Clarence, and chief ranger of all the parks and chaces belonging thereto, with the fee of £20. a year for life. Being therefore a perſon of ſuch high favour with the king, and in no ſmall power, about the ſame time, having obtained the wardſhip of Mary daughter of ſir Thomas Hungerford, knt. he entered into an agreement with ſir Oliver Manningham, knt. and Alianor lady Hungerford and Molyns his wife, that Edward his ſon and heir ſhould take the ſaid Mary to wife; and if Edward ſhould die, then George or Richard, his younger ſons, ſhould marry her.

In 1473, on king Edward's retiring at Tewkeſbury; he is ſtated to have joined with George duke of Clarence and Richard duke of York, in the murder of prince Edward, ſon to king Henry VI.[5]

April 17, 1474, king Edward IV. by letters patent, bearing date at Nottingham, gave licence to William lord Haſtings to incloſe and impark 3000 acres of land and wood in Aſhby de la Zouch, of his demeſne lands there; 2000 acres of land and wood, with the appurtenances, in Bagworth and Thornton, of his demeſne lands there; and 2000 acres of land and wood, with the appurtenances, in Kirby, of his demeſne lands there; together with free-warren within them all; and, by the ſame letters patent, gave him farther licence to erect and new-build houſes, with lime and ſtone, at the above manors of Bagworth, Thornton, and Kirby, and alſo in this his manor of Aſhby[6]. The words in the patent for that purpoſe are theſe: "murellandi, tourellandi, kernellandi, imbattellandi, turrellendi, & machecolandi;" which are French words of art for Architecture, latinized, and have this ſignification; murellare, to wall up or immure; tourellare, to make towers, bulwarks, or fortreſſes; kernellare, to pinnacle[7]; imbattellare, to embattle or make defences upon the wall againſt battles in aſſaults or ſieges; turrellare[8], to make holes or loops in walls, to ſhoot againſt the aſſailants; machecolare[9], to make a warlike device over a gate or other paſſage, like to a grate, through which ſcalding water, or ponderous offenſive things, might be caſt down upon the enemy; all which, ſaving the three firſt, are thus interpreted by lord Coke, in the firſt part of his Inſtitutes, or Commentary upon Littleton's Tenures, fol. 5; where it is noted by him, that no ſubject can build a caſtle, or houſe of ſtrength embattled, or other fortreſs defenſive whatſoever, without ſpecial leave of the king, for the danger which might enſue if every man at his pleaſure might ſo do. By virtue of which grant, the ſaid ſir William Haſtings built there a large and fair houſe, and one ſtone ſtately tower of great receipt, height, ſtrength, and excellent workmanſhip, apart by itſelf[10]."

Belvoir caſtle being about that time in his cuſtody, he was ſuddenly driven thence by Mr. Harrington, a partiſan of the lord Ros; but, returning with a ſtrong party, is ſaid to have unroofed the caſtle, and carried the lead to Aſhby de la Zouch, where he was then building; and Stoke Albany, another goodly manor-place of the Ros family, is ſuppoſed to have ſhared a ſimilar fate[11]. How far the tradition is true, there may be queſtion; but certain it is, that this lord built a very noble houſe at Aſhby, intending it for the reſidence of his family, which it continued to be for about 200 years. The ſituation was at the South ſide of the town, on a riſing ground, having three large parks adjoining thereto; The Great Park, which was ten miles in compaſs; Preſtop Park, for fallow-deer; and the Little Park, on the back ſide of the houſe, for red deer; all which were very well ſtored with wood. The houſe itſelf conſiſted of mixed building, brick and ſtone, the rooms therein being large and magnificent; and, adjoining thereto, a fair chapel, ſcarcely to be equalled by any private one, thoſe in the Univerſities excepted. But that which was the greateſt ornament was two ſtately large towers, built of aſhler ſtone, covered with lead, and embattled; which towers ſtand back and towards the garden, on the South and South-weſt ſide of the houſe, as it ſhould ſeem, and by tradition it has been told; built in ſuch a figure that two more might be placed at convenient diſtance to equal them; the greater of theſe being an entire houſe of itſelf, conſiſting of a large hall, great chambers, bed-chambers, kitchen, cellars, and of all other offices. The other, much leſs, and ſtanding Weſtward, was an entire kitchen, of ſo large a dimenſion as is ſcarcely to be paralleled, over which were divers fine rooms: this was called the Kitchen Tower.

---

[1] Eſch. 7 Edw. IV. N° 53. Leic.

[2] "To all trewe Criſten people, &c. Thomas Erdyngton, knt. ſen. deth helth, &c. Ye ſhall know me the ſeid ſir Thomas to have made my laſt wille in the fourme folowyng, &c. I wole, &c. that alle my feofees to myne-uſe in and of the maner of Barowe upon Soure, &c. immediately after my decees, and of dame Joyes my wife, make ſuch aſtate, &c. to ſir Will'm Haſtyngs, knt. lord Haſtings, and to his heires, of the ſeid maner, &c. Yeven at Erdyngton, the fourth day of Auguſt, in the fourth yere of the regn of kyng Edward the IVth." Harl. MSS. 3881. f. 15. b.

[3] Clauſ. 12 Edw. IV. m. 23. dorſ. [4] Pat. 12 Edw. IV. p. 2. m. 8. [5] Polydore Vergil, p. 530.

[6] Cart. 14 Edw. IV. n. 1. [7] From the French crenelle, and modern Latin kernellus, quernellus.

[8] Not in the Gloſſaries in this ſenſe, but only of making towers.

[9] Machicollations were openings in the tops of towers, "pergulæ ſpecies in ſuperiori turrium parte," whence ſtones, &c. might be thrown down on the aſſailants. Du Cange.

[10] Burton, MS. [11] Leland's Itinerary, vol. I. pp. 114. 115.

In 1474, the lord Haſtings was returned to ſerve the king in Normandy and other parts of France for one year, with 40 men at arms, 300 archers, and 80 more for Calais; and was appointed conſtable of Peak Caſtle for life; likewiſe ſteward of the honour of Tutbury, in the counties of Derby and Stafford; alſo of the town and lordſhip of Newcaſtle under Line, Wirkſworth, Aſhburne, and all the caſtles in thoſe counties. Moreover, he was then made conſtable of Tutbury Caſtle, chief foreſter of Needwood and Duffeild, and ſurveyor of that honour; having for that ſervice the fee of £40. per annum for life.

On the 14th of November he obtained a grant of two fairs, to be held within the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch; the one on the eve of Pentecoſt, and to continue four days after; and the other on the eve of the Apoſtles Saints Simon and Jude, and four days after. "Hiis teſtibus; venerabilibus in Chriſto patribus, Thomâ Cardinali, archiepiſcopo Cantuarie; L. Dunelm' cancellario noſtro Anglie, & Thomâ Lincolnienſi cuſtode privati ſigilli noſtri, epiſcopis; ac prechariſſimis fratribus noſtris, Georgio Clarencie & Ricardo Glouceſtrie ducibus; necnon chariſſimo conſanguineo noſtro Henrico comite Eſſexie, theſaurario noſtro Anglie; dilectoque & fideli noſtro Thomâ Stanley de Stanley, milite, ſeneſcallo hoſpitii noſtri; & aliis. Dat', per manum noſtram, apud palatium noſtrum Weſtmonaſterienſe, xiiii° die Novembris."

In the ſame year he was conſtituted ſteward of Derby by that corporation; and, on the peace with France, in 1475, had 2000 crowns for his ſhare of the French king's preſent to the king of England's principal ſervants; which he attributed to his interview with Lewis XI. at Pequigny.

In this year ſo great was the importance of this very exalted peer, that, as Dr. Fuller obſerves, "he had no leſs than two lords [1], nine knights [2], and 58 eſquires, with 20 gentlemen of note, that were retained by indenture during their lives to take his part againſt all perſons whatever within the realm, their allegiance to the king, &c. only excepted [3]."

Comines [4] (who knew him well) reporteth, that he was a perſon of ſingular wiſdom and virtue, in great authority with his maſter, and not without cauſe, having ever ſerved him faithfully; and, making mention of the bounty of the then king of France to king Edward the Fourth's officers, ſaith, that he gave this lord Haſtings, at one time, a preſent of plate of the value of ten thouſand marks. Moreover he ſaith, that this lord Haſtings was long laboured ere he could be won to be the king of France's penſioner, and that he himſelf was the only man that wrought him thereto: inſtancing, that he firſt won him to the friendſhip of the duke of Burgundy (whom he ſerved); and that he advertized the king of France thereof; ſaying, that he would in like manner make him his friend and penſioner. Adding, that he thereupon began his friendſhip by letters; whereupon that king gave him a penſion of two thouſand crowns per annum; which was double to what he had from the duke of Burgundy: and that, upon the payment thereof, he not only refuſed to give him any acquittance, but to give him three lines in writing, to teſtify the receipt of the money; ſaying, "put it here (it being in gold) into my ſleeve, for other teſtimonial you get none of me: for no man ſhall ſay, that king Edward's lord chamberlain hath been penſioner to the French king, nor that my acquittances be found in his chamber of accompts." He farther ſaith, that the king of France more eſteemed him than all the king of England's other ſervants; and that his penſion was ever paid without acquittance.

In 1477, the dean and chapter of the collegiate church of our Lady at Leiceſter, by their inſtrument, bearing date Feb. 12, whereunto their common ſeal was affixed, covenanted, that, whenſoever he ſhould fortune to depart this life, they would keep a ſpecial obit for him, in their church, on the day of his funeral; as alſo every year to celebrate his anniverſary, for the health of his ſoul, and of the lady Katharine his wife; and that the provoſt of that collegiate church ſhould yearly on that day, at the end of maſs, pay to the dean 3*s*. 4*d*. and to every canon then preſent 2*s*.; to every vicar of that choir then alſo preſent 12*d*.; to every clerk 6*d*.; to every choiriſter 4*d*.; likewiſe to the verger 4*d*.; and to every poor man and woman, then being in the almſhouſe within that college, 1*d*. out of the iſſues and profits of the hoſpital of St. Leonard, ſituate near the abbey of Leiceſter, by reaſon that this lord Haſtings had obtained that hoſpital from the king, and given it unto that college for ever.

In 1478, he purchaſed the lands of John St. Andrew, gent. at Lubbeſthorpe for £40 [5]; and the ſame year had a grant of £40. a year from Thomas Chaworth, out of the manors of Medbourne and Welham.

On the death of king Edward IV, the ſituation of the lord Haſtings became totally different; and on the 13th of June, 1483, as has been ſtated on a former occaſion [6], he was beheaded on Tower-hill.

"As he loved the king very well; ſo, after the king's death, he is charged to have loved Jane Shore too well; and Richard duke of Glouceſter, perceiving him to obſtruct the way to his ambitious deſigns, ordered his removal. As to him, living, he was dear; ſo, being dead, his corpſe are near to Edward IV. buried under a very fair monument in Windſor chapel [7]."

It was found in 1483, that William lord Haſtings died on Friday the 13th of June, 1 Edw. V. the Baſtard (for ſo the Inquiſition calls him); and that, at the time of his death, he was ſeiſed, inter alia, of the manor and lordſhip of Aſhby de la Zouch; alſo of 20 meſſuages, 6 virgates of land, 40 acres of meadow, 100 acres of wood, and 100*s*. rent, with the appurtenances, in Aſhby aforeſaid; all which were held of the king [8].

The teſtament of this murdered lord here follows:

"In the name of God, Amen. I William Haſtyngs, knt. lord Haſtyngs, being in hool mynde, &c. the 27th day of June, in the yere, &c. MCCCCLXXXI°. ordeign, &c. my laſt will and teſtament, as well of my land, as of my goods, in the forme articulierly following. Firſt, I com̄yt and byqueth my ſowle unto Almighty God my Maker and Redemer, humbly beſechyng hym to accept hit to his mercy and grace. And, foraſmoche as the kyng, of his abundant grace, for the trew ſervice that I have doon, and at the leeſt entended to have doon, to his Grace, hath willed and offred me to be buryed in the college or chapel of Seynt George at Wyndeſore, in a place by his Grace aſſigned, in the which college his Highneſs is diſpoſed to be buryed; I therefore bequeth my ſimple body to be buryed in the ſayd chapell and college in the ſaid place, &c. and wolle that there be ordeigned a tumbe convenient for me by myne executors; and for the coſts of the ſame I bequeth c marks. Alſo I wolle that myne executors diſpoſe and giff to the miniſters of divine ſervice and funerall obſervances, the day of my burying, and to the pore knights there preſent the ſame day, and in other dedes of almes, by their diſcretion, xx li. of lawful money of England. Alſo I woll, that in all goodly haſte after my deceaſe, a juell of gold or ſylver, to the value of xx li. be given, &c. to the deane and chanons of the ſaid chapell and college, there to remain perpetually, to the honour of God, and for a memorial for me. Alſo I woll that my feoffees, by the overſight of myne executors, gif and amortize lands, &c. lands to the yearly value of xx li. over all charges, to the deane and chanons aforeſayd, and to their ſucceſſors, to the intent that they ſhall perpetually fynde a preſte, to ſay daylie maſſe and divine ſervice at the awter next to the place where my body ſhall be buryed, in the ſayd chapell or college; and there to pray daylie for the king's proſperous eſtate during his life; and after his dethe for his ſowle, for the ſowles of me, my wif, and for alle Criſten ſowles, &c. And the ſame deane and chanons, and their ſucceſſors, ſhall daylie finde, &c. brede and wyne, wex, veſtiments, boke, chalice, and alle other ornaments neceſſarie for the ſame preiſts, &c. and ſhall kepe a ſolempne obite yerely in the ſaid chapell and college, at ſuch day, and under ſuch forme, as by myne executors and the ſaid deane and chanons ſhall be ordeigned and agreed. Alſo I woll that myn executors giff to the ſaid deane and chanons two veſtments, and alle other things thereto belonging, two awter clothes, a maſſe-book, a chalice, a pax brede, and two cruets of ſylver, to be occupied by the ſaid preſte for the time being, and his ſucceſſors, at the ſaid awter. Alſo I wolle that myne executors diſpoſe among pore people, by their diſcretion, at the day of my burying, xx li. of lawful money, &c. Alſo I wolle that myne executors, in all goodly haſte after my deceſe, giff to the abbot and convent of Sulby, in the county of Northampton, XL li. of lawful money of England, &c. to the relief and increce of the ſame houſe, &c. and a ſoote of my beſt veſtments, &c. an awter cloth of like colour to the ſame veſtments, a chalice, two candleſticks, two baſyns of ſylver, and other ornaments of the chirche, &c. to pray for the ſowles of me, my wyf, myn anceſtors there buryed, and all other myn anceſtours, and alle Criſten ſowles. Alſo I woll that lands and tenements, to the yerely valew of v marks, and the chirches of Wiſtow and Lubbenham, be lawfully appropriated for ever to the ſame abbot and convent, and their ſucceſſors, &c.; for the which the ſame abbot and convent, &c. ſhall do ſolempnly, with note, Placebo and Dirige; and on the morow, maſſe of Requiem, with note, in the quire of the ſame abbey, for the ſowles of me, my wife, myn anceſtors there lying ſpecially, with all other my anceſtors, and all Criſten ſowles; and, &c. for ever the ſame day yeirly ſhall ſay Placebo and Dirige, and maſſe of Requiem, on the morrow, for my ſowle, and the ſowles afore reherſed. And, &c. for ever, the day of my ſaid obit, ſhall giff almes, among pore folke, for my ſowle, xx s. in money; and that a preſte, being one of the ſaid convent, ſhall daily for ever ſay a maſſe of Requiem, at an awter to be ordeigned, by the diſcretion of my executors, in the ſaid abbey, for my ſowle, and for the ſowles above rehearſed; and that every preſte of the ſaid convent, ſaying maſſe in the ſaid abby daily, for ever, ſay an eſpecial collect, in every of their maſſes, for my ſowle, and all the ſowles before reherced, after ſuch ordinance, as by me or myne executors ſhal be made. Alſo I will, that myne executors do yerely pay to the ſame abbot and his ſucceſſors XXV marks of lawful money, &c. unto the time that lands to the value of five marks by yere, and the ſaid chirches, &c. be lawfully amortized, and appropriated to the ſaid abby, &c.

---

[1] John Blount lord Mountjoy, and Henry lord Grey of Codnor.

[2] William Truſſell, Bryan Stapleton, Walter Griffith, Robert Tailboys, John Gryſelye, Simon Mountfort, Thomas Statham, Nicholas Longford, and Robert Harcourt.

[3] Their names are enumerated in Dugdale, Bar. Angl. vol. I. p. 583.

[4] Book vi. cap. 2.

[5] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 19. b.

[6] On this ſubject, and for ſome farther particulars of the character of lord Haſtings, ſee before, under Beaumanor, p. 141.

[7] Worthies, Leiceſterſhire, p. 141. See Plates LXXVI. LXXVII.

[8] Eſch. 1 Ric. III. N° 32. Leic.

Alſo I woll that myne executors, at the time of my buriall, or before, as ſoone as notice may come to thaym, &c. of my dethe, &c. ſhall make a thouſand preſtes ſay a thouſand Placebo and Dirige, with M maſſes, for my ſowle; and every preſte therefore to have VI d.; and that all the ſame obſervance be doon in oon day, if hit be reaſonably poſſible, &c. Alſo, &c. that C li. be diſpoſed, &c. among pore folkes, as ſoon as it may be conveniently after my deceſe; and to the friers of Notingham, Northampton, Leiceſtre, and Derby, and to other perſons and pore folkes of the ſaid ſhires, by the diſcretion of my ſaid executors. Alſo, &c. to the abbot and convent of Leiceſtre a ſoot of veſtments to the value of xx li. or elſe xx li. of lawful money, &c. to ſyng Placebo and Dirige with note; and on the morrow maſſe of Requiem with note, for my ſowle, and the ſowles afore reherced. Alſo, &c. that the Gray Friers of Leiceſtre x li. have to pray for me; and either of th'other two houſes of Friers of the ſame towne C s.; and to every pariſh-church of the ſame town XL s. Alſo, &c. that the deane and chapter of the New warke of Leiceſtre, &c. have x li. of lawfull money, &c. to do an obite, and to pray for my ſowle; alſo a jewell of gold or ſylver, to the value of x li. there to remayn for a perpetuall memoriall, with aultar-clothes and other ornaments to the value of xx li. to pray for my ſowle. Alſo, &c. to the Bedehous within the ſame colledge, x li. to pray for my ſowle. Alſo I woll that myne executors do make new and edify the chapell of our Lady, called the Chapell on the Brigge, at Leiceſtre; and for the making thereof C li. Alſo, &c. that they finde a preſte in the ſame chapell by the ſpace of ſeaven yeres next after my deceſe, to ſay daily maſſe, &c. in the ſame chapell, and other prayers, as ſhall be ordeigned by myne executors, and for the performing thereof. Item, &c. to the pariſh-church of Aſheby la Zowche a ſute and veſtments, with an awter-cloth, accordyng, &c. to the value of C s. &c. to pray for my ſowle. Alſo, &c. fynde a preſte, &c. to ſay daylie for me, and the ſowles afore reherced, maſſe there, and other prayers, &c. for the doing thereof I bequethe fifty pounds of lawfull money of England. Alſo I wolle, that . . . . my gown of velvet, to make a veſtment of, and C s. of lawful money of England, to pray for my ſowle and the ſowles before reherced. Alſo I wolle that myne executors giff to my ſiſter dame Elizabeth Donne C marks. Alſo I bequethe to the marriages of my neices, the daughters of John Brokeſby, CC marks. Alſo, &c. to the marriage of the daughter of my brother Ferrers C marks. Alſo where George erle of Shrewſbury, whoſe warde and marriage to me is granted, &c. hath married Anne my daughter; I woll that if the ſame erle ſhould die, as God defend, before any carnall knowlydge betwyne the ſame erle and her had; that then Thomas brother to the ſame erle take to wif her the ſame Anne, if the law of the chirche will ſuffre or licenſe hit. And if it happen the ſame Anne to dye, &c. before any carnall knowlich, &c. that then ward and marriage of the ſame erle, and of his ſaid brother, be ſold, &c. and the money thereof comyng be employed, &c. for the performing of this my will, and for the wele of my ſoul. And if it happen the ſaid erle, or, after his dethe, the ſaid Thomas, after that he be marryed to the ſaid Anne, &c. to diſagree to the ſaid marriage, at ſuch age as they may ſo do by the law, &c.; then I wolle that myne executors giff to my ſaid daughter M li. &c. for her marriage, &c. Alſo I bequethe to my ſaid doghter plate to the value of fifty marks; and beddyng, chamberyngs, and other ſtuff, for her convenient, to the value of C marks, &c. whereof I wolle that ſhe be of the age of 18 yeres. Alſo, where I have the ward and marriage of Edward Truſſell, I wolle, &c. that it be ſold, and the money, &c. employed to the performing of this my will, and for the wele of my ſowle, &c.; and if my brother ſir John Donne woll be the ſaid ward, I will that he be preferred therein before any other, &c. by XL li. Alſo I wolle that my feoffees of the manors of Bewyk and Thurkelby in Holdernes in the county of Yorke; Bolton-percy in the ſhire of the citty of Yorke; the maner of Barowe, and the Hundred of Framland, in the countie of Leiceſtre; the maner called Everingham-fee in the county of Nottingham, the maner of Fynchley in the county of Middleſex; the rape of Haſtyngs in the county of Suſſex, &c.; ſhall ſuffer myne executors to take the iſſues, &c. thereof, &c. unto the time, &c. that they have performed this my will, and payd my debts, &c. Alſo I wille that my feoffees of the maners of Lamley and Bleſeby in the county of Nottingham, the manor of Drakenage in the countie of Warwick, the maner of Sutton in Holderneſſe, &c. make eſtate thereof, to Richard my ſon, when he cometh to the age of 18 yeres, to have to hym and to the heires of his body, &c.; the remaynder to the heires male of my fader's body, &c.; the remaynder, &c. to my right heires. In like wiſe, &c.

of the maner of Arnall in the countie of Nottingham; Flekney, Little Aſheby and Brentyngthorp, in the county of Leiceſtre, &c. make eſtate thereof, to my ſaid ſon William when he cometh to the age of 18 yeres, &c. and to the heires male of his body, &c.; the remaynder to the ſaid Richard my ſon, and to the heires male of his body, &c.; the remaynder to the heires male of my fader's body, &c.; the remaynder to my right heires, &c. Alſo I wolle that every of my ſaid two ſons have plate to the value of cli.; and either of them chamberyng, beddyng, and other ſtuff convenient for them, &c. to the value of c li. &c. Alſo I wille that my feoffees make eſtate to Katharine my wife, immediately after my deceſe, of the maners of Stoke-Daubeny, Wilberſton, and Sutton, in the county of Northampton; the maner of Edmoſton in Totenham in the countie of Middleſex; of Kerby, Lubbeſthorpe, Braunſton, Bagworth, Thorneton, and the parke of Bagworth and Kerby, in the countie of Leiceſter; of the manors of Welborne and Aſlakby in the ſhire of Lincolne, &c. for terme of her life, &c.; ſo that the ſayd Katherine, &c. releſe her dower in all the ſayd manors of Bewyk, Thurcelby, &c. and lands before aſſigned to perform my will, &c. Alſo I, in moſt humble wiſe, beſeche the king's grace to take the governannce of my ſon and heir; and, as ſtraitly as to me is poſſible, I charge myne heir, on my bleſſyng, to be faythfull and true to the king's grace, to my lord prince, and their heires, &c. Alſo I will that myne executors, in the diſpoſition of ſuch goods as in generalitie in this my will be aſſigned to be diſpoſed by theym, for the wele of my ſowle, have tenderly in remembrance and preferment the ſaid abby of Sulby; to the intent that they the more ſpecially ſhall pray for the ſowles of me, my wife, and the ſowles afore reherced[1].—And, for the performyng and executyng of this my laſt will and teſtament, I ordeyne and make myn executors, Kateryn myn entyerly beloved wyffe, myn eldeſt ſon ſir Edward Haſtyngs, knyght, ſir William Huſee, knyght, cheffe juge of the King's benche, Richard Pygotte one of the king's ſerjants at the lawe; and for thayr labours and pyne that they ſhall have for and aboute the performyng and executyng thys my laſt will and teſtament, I wyll that ſir Wylliam Huſe and Rychard Pygotte have eyther of thaym xl li. of lawfull money of Ingland; prayng and requyryng my wyffe and eldeſt ſon, and the ſaid Huſe and Pygotte, to take the charge upon thaym to ſe thexecucon of this my laſt will and teſtament, after the true entent thereof, as my ſpecyall truſt is in thaym, and as they wyll anſwer before God. And, for the more perfite and ſure execucion of this my ſaid laſt wyll and teſtament, I ordayne and make the ryght reverend fader in God John byſhop of Ely my good lord, and alſo John lord Dynham my good lord and coſyn, ſurveyors of this my ſaid laſt wyll and teſtament; humbly and moſt hertyly beſechyng ther good lordſhips to take the labor and chargs therof apon thaym, in whom I put my ſynguler and ſpecyal truſt, for the wele of my ſowle; and, for thayr labor, I wyll that eyther of my ſaid lords have xl marks of lawfull money of Ingland. And, in witneſſe that thys ys my laſt wyll and teſtament, I did wryte thys clauſe and laſt artycle with myn own hand at London, the xxvii day of June, the yere of our Lord God aboveſaid, and in the yere of my ſoverayne lord kyng Edward the IV^{the} xxi; whoſe good grace, in the moſt humble wiſe, I beſeche to be good and tender and gracyous Lord to my ſowle, to be good and gracyous Soverayne Lord to my wyfe, my ſon and myn eyre, and to all my children, whom I charge upon my bleſſyng to be true ſogetts and ſervants to you my Soverayne Lord under God, and to your eyre, and to all your iſſue; and beſeche you, Soverayne Lord, alſo to be good Lord to my ſurveyors and executors in executyng this my laſt wyll and teſtament, as my moſt ſynguler truſt is in your good Grace before all eyrthly greatneſe, as wele for my wyfe and chyldren, and to my executors and ſurveyors in executyng this my laſt wyll and teſtament. Signed with my hand, and ſealed with the ſeal of myn armys, the daye and yere aforeſaid."

This great lord married the lady Katharine, daughter to Richard Nevill earl of Saliſbury, widow of William lord Bonvile and Harrington; which noble lady, at a parliament begun at Weſtminſter Oct. 6, 1472, obtained an eſpecial act, that ſhe ſhould enjoy during her life the manors of Chuton, Thurlebere, and Mariot, in Somerſetſhire, and certain lands in Foxhill in Devonſhire; as alſo the lordſhip and manors of Altingham, the manor and caſtle of Glaſton, and certain lands in other counties, to the yearly value of 500 marks; all which were parcel of the inheritance of the ſaid lord Bonvile. By which Katharine he had iſſue Edward lord Hungerford, his ſon and heir, who at his father's death was 17 years of age and upwards; likewiſe Richard, William, and George; and Anne, a daughter, married to George earl of Shrewſbury.

As to the lady Katharine his wife, it appears that ſhe found ſome favour from Richard (who, after that execrable murder of his brother's ſons, made himſelf king); for, by a ſpecial grant to her, under his ſign-manual and privy ſignet, bearing date July 23, in the firſt year of his reign, "for the entire love and afffection that we bere to our hertly belovede couſine and widowe Katherine lady Haſtings, lat wyf of William, knight, lord Haſtings, and for other grett conſiderations, us moving," (for thoſe are the words thereof) "have graunted, agreed, and promiſed, as hereafter particularly followeth:

"Firſt, we agree and grant to be good and gracious ſovereign lord to the ſaid Katherine, and to her children and ſervants; and to protect and defend the ſame Katheryn, as our well beloved couſin, and widow, and her children, in their right; not ſuffering them to be wronged nor entreated contrary to our laws in their lands ne goods; and that the ſaid William ſhall not hereafter be attainted, but that his heir or heirs ſhall have and continually enjoy ſuch name, preeminence, intereſs, right, poſſeſſion, and inheritance, as are diſtended from the ſame William, without lett of us, or of any other by our aſſent; and that we ſhall remit and pardon the ſaid Katherine, and to the executors, heirs, and feoffees of the ſaid William, all offences and other things done by the ſame William to us or our progenitors, and all forfeitures, payments, and demands, that we may have againſt them, or any of them by reaſon of the ſame William, except accompts for Calais and Guiſnes. Alſo we agree, that the ſaid Katheryn, and ſuch perſons which were ſeiſed or enfeoffed of any caſtles, manors, tenements, or other inheritaments, to the uſe of the ſaid William, the day of his death, have and enjoy the ſame, according to the will of the ſaid William, except the manors of Loughborough, in the county of Leiceſter, which to us and our deareſt wife, in her right, belongeth. Alſo we grant that we ſhall aid and help the ſame Katheryn and her executors of the ſaid William's teſtament, to have and attain the goods, chattels, and debts, to the ſame William on the day of his death due or belonging, as well at Calais or elſewhere, in whoſe hands ſoever they be, to perform therewith his will. Alſo we agree to make the ſaid Katherine, or to her executors, ſufficient grant or grants of the ward and keeping of all the manors, lands, tenements, poſſeſſions, and other inheritaments, deſcended or grown, or that hereafter ſhall come, grow, or deſcend, to Edward ſon and heir of the ſaid William, during his nonage, by the death of any perſon; to have and hold during the nonage of the ſame Edward; and ſo from heir to heir, without any thing therefore to us paying or yielding. Alſo we agree that the ſaid Katherine, as executrix to the ſaid William, ſhall have the wards and keeping of our couſin George earl of Shrewſbury, and Edward Truſſell, ſon and heir of ſir William Truſſell, knight; and of all manors, lands, and tenements, appointed for their findings, according to the ſeveral letters patents of our brother king Edward the Fourth, to the ſaid William made; the reſidue of their lyvelode to be at our pleaſure during their nonages; and as for the lyvelode of our ſaid couſin of Shrewſbury, which the ſaid William had in firm of our ſaid brother, we will ſhe have the ſame unto the end of this year, paying the firm thereof. In witneſs whereof, to this our preſent writing, ſigned with our hands, we have ſet our ſignet. Given at our town of Reading, the 23d day of July, the firſt year of our reign[1]."

---

[1] Thus far Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 19. b. 20. a.—For the concluding clauſe I am indebted to the kindneſs of Edward Dawſon, eſq. by whom it is communicated, with permiſſion of the earl of Moira, from the original probate at Donington Park.

In 1484, after much variance and grudge between Francis viſcount Lovell (a great favourite of king Richard's) and this lady Katharine, with Edward lord Haſtings her ſon, by reaſon of the claim which he the ſaid viſcount made, as well unto the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch and Bagworth, co. Leiceſter, as to the caſtles, manors, and lands of the late lord Beaumont, which ſhe the ſaid Katharine and Edward lord Haſtings her ſon did then poſſeſs: notwithſtanding the ſaid variance could not finally be appeaſed during the minority of the ſaid Edward, nevertheleſs, by mediation of friends, it was agreed, that over and above 200 marks in money, by her then paid to the ſaid viſcount, he ſhould have and enjoy, during the nonage of the ſaid lord Haſtings, certain manors, lands, and tenements of the ſaid Beaumont's lands (then poſſeſſed by her or her ſon) to the value of a third part of the ſaid Beaumont's lands, ſo that the ſame third part did not exceed the value of 200 marks by the year. In conſideration of which money ſo paid unto him, and grant of thoſe manors and lands, he promiſed to be good lord and couſin to her and her ſon, and to all his brethren; and to ſhew unto them and their ſervants his good lordſhip's favour, furtherance, ſupport, and aſſiſtance, in their lawful matters during the ſaid nonage of the ſame lord Haſtings, without interruption of him or his heirs, the enjoyment of the manors of Aſhby and Bagworth, and the reſidue of the Beaumont's lands not aſſigned[1].

In 1489, ſhe made partition, with Edward her ſon (according to the will of her huſband), of all the houſhold ſtuff, plate, and jewels, whereof her huſband died ſeiſed; excepting theſe particulars, which then lay in pawn for money borrowed on them:

Firſt, a croſs with a piece of the Holy Croſs therein,	for £.50
Item, a ring with a flat diamond,
Item, a pair of pots of ſilver and gilt,
Item, ſix bowls ſilver and gilt, and a ſalt of gold with a ſwan, — —	40
Item, a collar of gold, with king Edward's livery,	40
Item, a croſs of ſilver and gilt, —	40
Item, two ſalts with a cover, of ſilver and gilt,	10
Item, ſix bowls, ſilver and gilt, —	20
Item, ſix bowls ſilver, and a tablet of gold,	40
Item, a pair of pots, ſilver and gilt, —	20
Item, an ouche, with three diamonds and 6 pearls,	120
Item, a croſs of diamonds, with a great pearl,
Item, two little quart pots, ſilver and gilt,
Item, two ſalts with covers, ſilver and gilt,
Sum, — —	£. 380

The laſt will of this noble lady ſhall here be given:

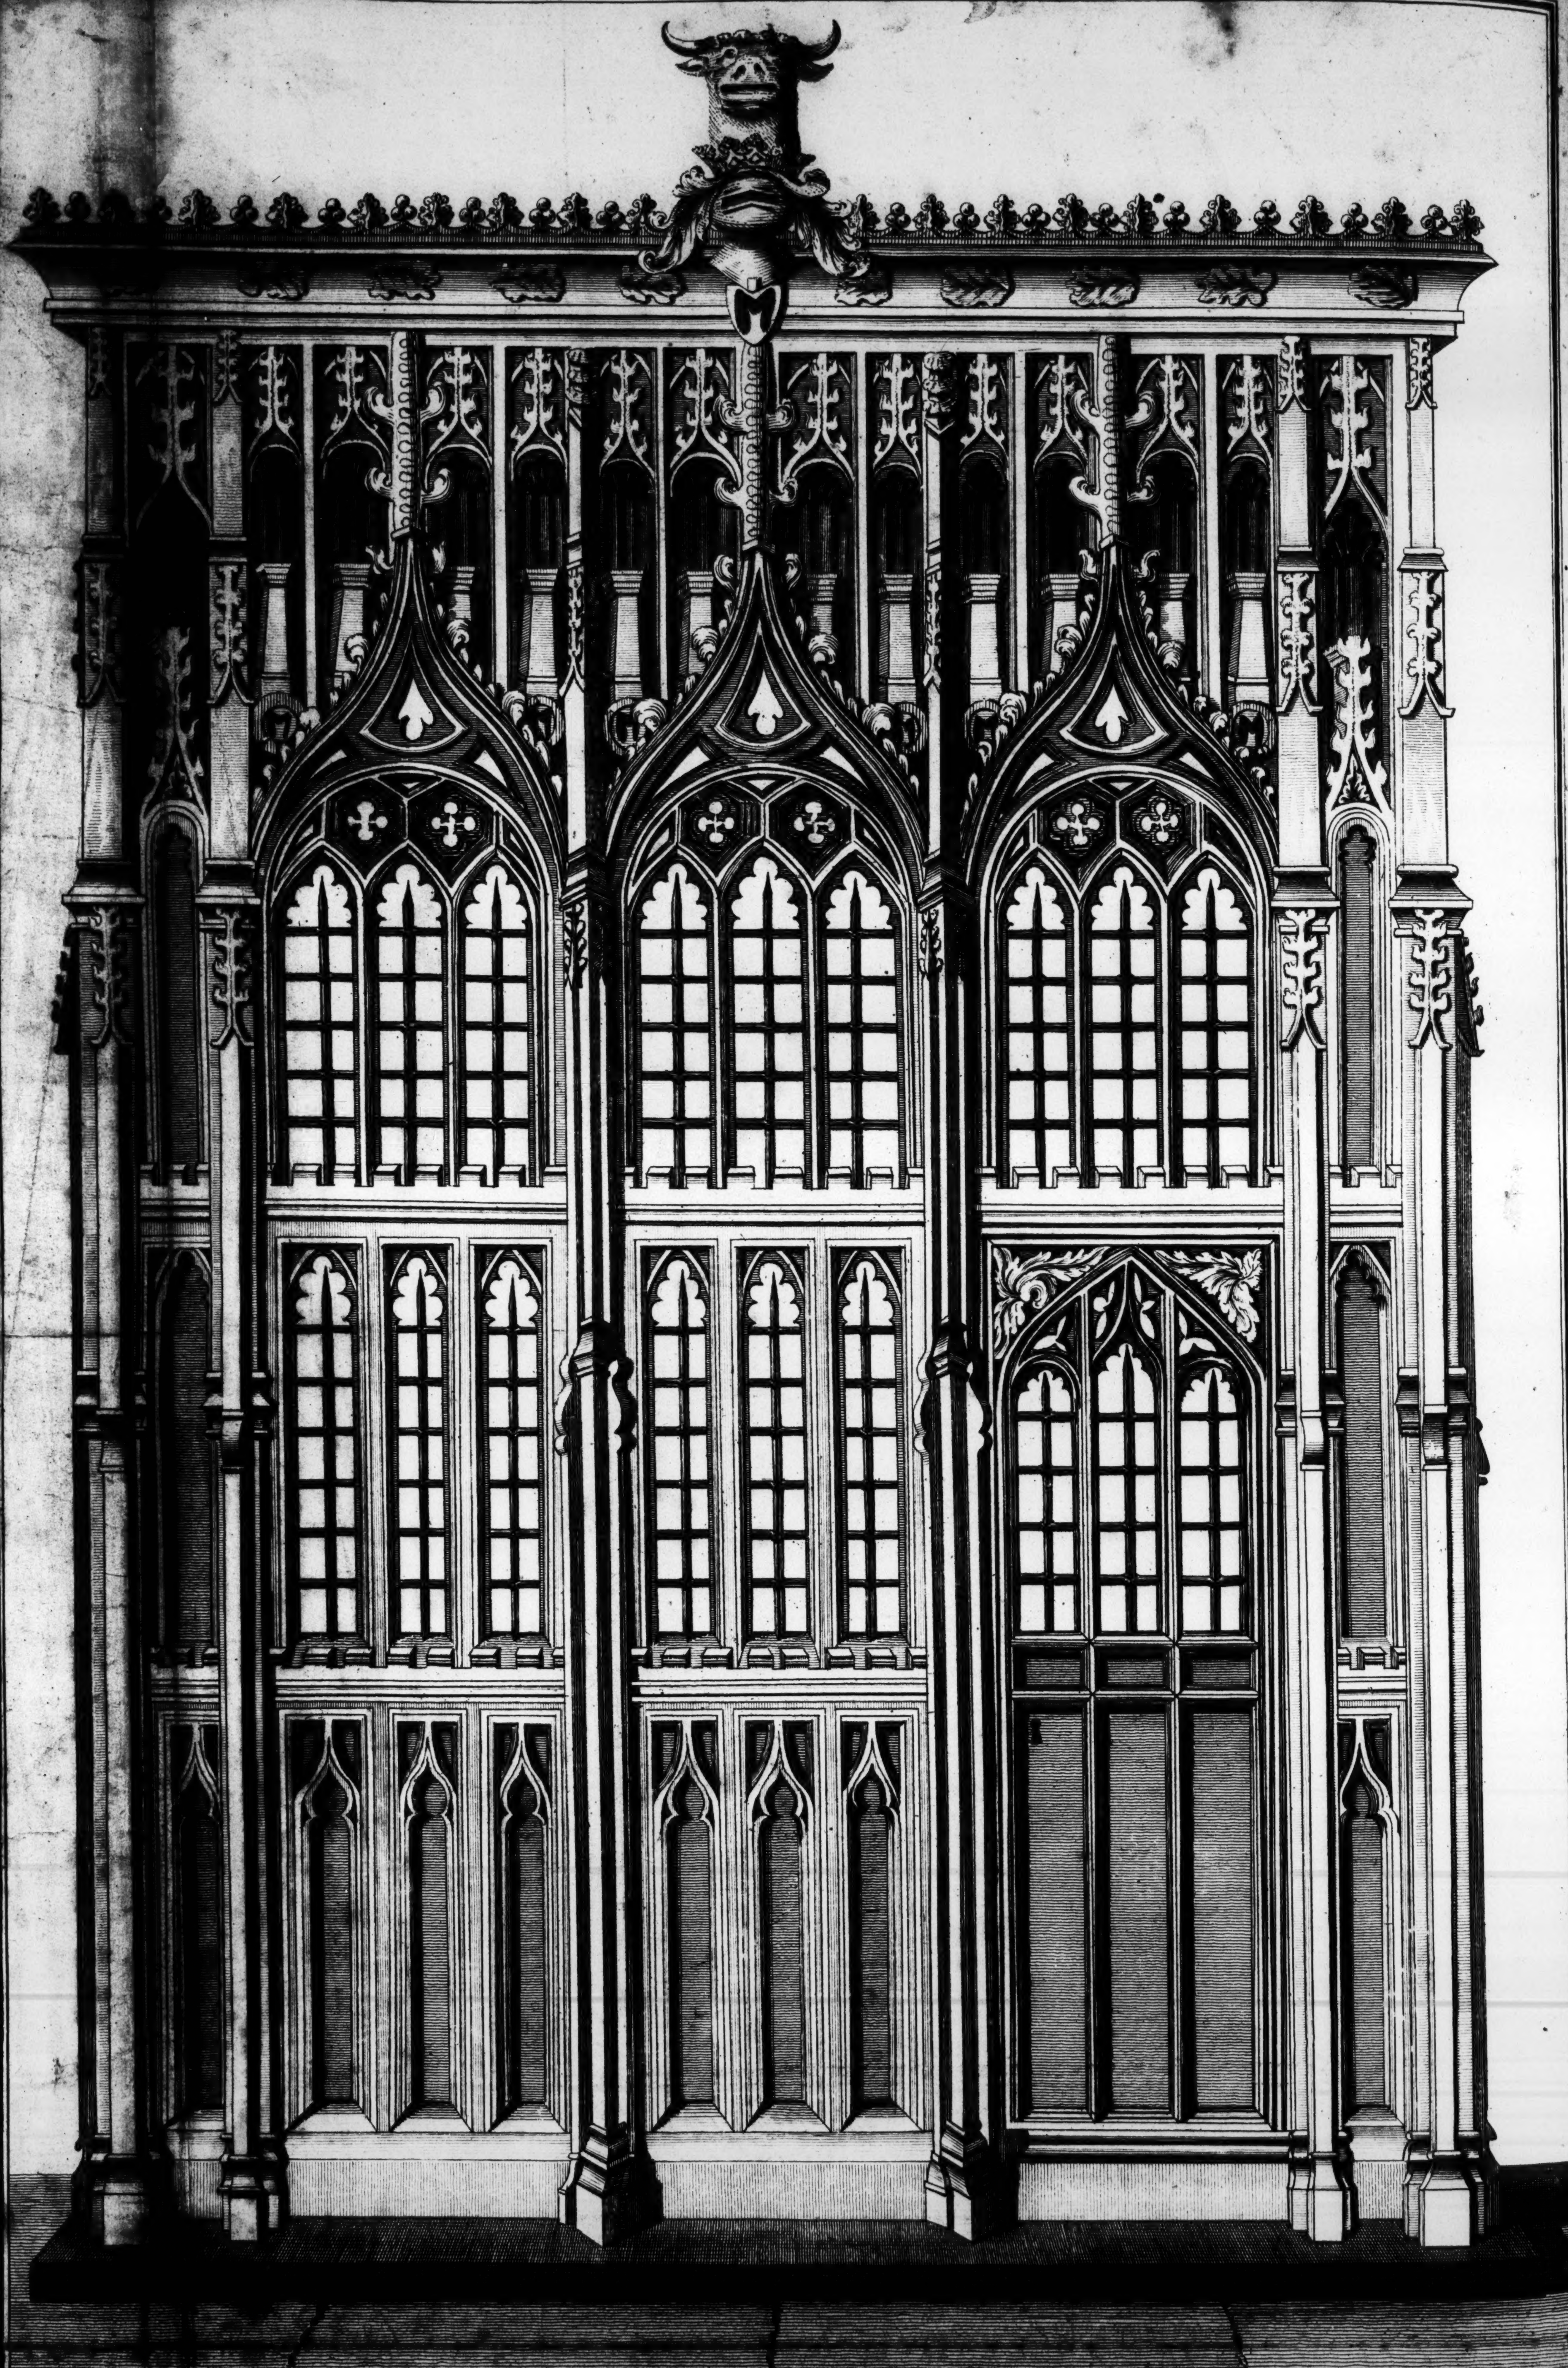
"In Dei nomine Amen. The twenty-ſecond day of November, in the year of our Lord 1503, and in the nyneteenth year of the reigne of king Henry the VIIth, I Katherine lady Haſtings, widow, late the wife of William late lord Haſtings, having perfect memory and hole mind, conſidering that nothing is more certain than death, and therefore at all times willing to be ready unto death, and to look for the time of the coming of the ſame, in ſuch wiſe that death ſtele not upon unprepared; whereunto is required not onely diſpoſition ghoſtly, but alſo of ſuch goods as God of his immeaſurable goodneſs hath lent me the uſe and exerciſe of; intending, through his ſpecial grace, ſo to paſſe by theſe temporalls and momentary goods, that I ſhall not loſe eternal; make, ordaine, and declare, this my teſtament and laſt will, in manner and form following: Firſt, I moſt humbly bequeath my ſoule to God Almighty, my Redeemer, to our bleſſed lady St. Mary the Virgin, and to all the Company of Heaven; and my body to be buried in our Lady Chappell within the pariſh church of Aſhby de la Zouch, between the image of our Lady and the place aſſigned for the vicars' grave. Item, for my mortuary, I bequeath according to my cuſtome. Item, I bequeath to the cathedral church of Lincolne twenty pounds. Item, I bequeath to the high altar in the pariſh church of Aſhby abovesaid xxs. Item, I will that a prieſt be found to ſing in the ſaid chappell for my fadyr and my lady my modar, my lord my huſband's ſoules; for my ſoule, and for all Chriſtian ſoules, and in ſpecial for thoſe ſoules which I am moſt bounden to cauſe to be prayed for, for the ſpace of three years next enſuing after my departing; and the ſaid prieſt to receive yearly during the ſaid three years for his ſtipend ſix pounds: and if my prieſt, ſir William Englonde, be contented to pray for me in the ſaid place, and for the other aboveſaid, then I woll that he be admitted to the ſaid ſervice before any other prieſt: And I bequeath unto the ſaid chappell a ſuit of veſtments of bawdekyn, red and green, and my little gilded chalice, a printed maſs-book, and a printed portvous, which I will my ſaid preeſt have the uſe of, for the ſaid three years, at the times when he ſhall be diſpoſed to ſay his ſervice divine in the ſaid place. Item, I bequeath to the ſaid church of Aſhby ſeaven ſurples, to be occupied and uſed by the miniſters that ſhall doe ſervice in the ſaid church. Item, I woll that my Maſſe, covered with red velvet, that is occupied in the chappell, be given to a poor church after the direction of myne executors. Item, I woll that the colledge of Newarke of Leiceſtre have, to them and their ſucceſſors for ever, all my lands and tenements, with all their appurtenances, in the townes and feilds in Burton Overy and Wigſton, in the countie of Leiceſtre aforeſaid, which I lately purchaſed of Elizabeth Kent, widdow, for a yerely obit, to be kept in the ſaid college, for my lord my fadyr, my lady my moder, my lord my huſband, and for me for ever. Item, where I owe unto Cecilie marqueſſe Dorſet certain ſummes of money, which I have borrowed of her at diverſe times, as appeareth by bills indented thereof made; I woll that the ſaid Cecilie, in full contentation of all ſuch ſummes of money as I owe unto her, have my bed of arres, tillor, teſtor, and counterpane, which ſhe late borrowed of me; and over that I will that ſhe have my tabulet of gold that ſhe now hath in her hands for a pledge, and three curtains of blew ſarcionett, and a traverſe of blew ſarcionett, and three quiſhions of counterfeit arres, with imagery of women, a long quiſhion, and two ſhort, of blew velvet; alſo two carpets. Item, I bequeath to myne eſpecial good lord George earl of Shrewſbury a cope of cloth of gold of white damaſce, with torpens cloth of gold and velvet upon velvet. Item, a veſtment of purpure velvet, with a crucifix and images of St. Peter and St. John embroidered upon that oon of them. Item, I bequeath to my lady of Shrewſbury a cope of cloth of gold with lillyes embroidered, and that oon with the image of the Trinitie, with a frontail for an altar. Item, my Prymar, which is now in the keeping of my lady Fitz Hugh; alſo two cuſhions of counterfeit arres with imagery of women; a long quiſhion, and two ſhort, of blew velvet. Item, a long covering for a quiſhion of purpure velvet, and oon ſhort; alſo two carpets. Item, I bequeath to my ſon Edward lord Haſtings a ſuite of veſtiments, now being in the hands of the abbot of Darley for a ſumme of twenty pounds, which ſuite I will be pledged oute of my proper goods; alſo an owche, being in the keeping of my ſon William; alſo an image of our Lady, now being in the hands of my lady marqueſſe. Item, a ſalt of gold, being now in the hands of my daughter Mary lady Hungerford; alſoe a faire Prymar, which I had by the yeſture of queen Elizabeth. Alſoe where my ſeyd ſon oweth unto me for certain charges which I took upon me for his ſake an hundred markes, as appeareth by his writing thereof made, I, conſidering the kinde demeanor of my ſaid ſon at this time in granting of a certain annuity, remit and pardon unto him the ſaid hundred markes due to me by the bequeſt of William Strote, in part of payment for my debts, and for my ſervants at the next audit. Alſoe, I bequeath unto my ſaid ſon two coverings for quiſhions of counterfeit arres, with imagery of women. Item

---

[1] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 24.

two

Pl. 77. p. 573.



Longmate, del. et sc. 1793

The Screen of St. Stephens chapel at Windsor, wherein WILLIAM LORD HASTINGS was buried, 1483.

[illegible] de tectis honore videre
Vigilat [illegible] doctrina corda virorum
Invidie facibus & sonnisa petentem herodi
Fuisset et emulatie Stephanum plebs impia tractum
Sponte sua lepuit & Saulus vestes lapidantum
Sic a prothomartir pro quibus orans
In dño moritur & deterrere quo vera premiis

tings in LORD HAS el at Windsor

two quiſhions of counterfeit arres with my lord's armes; alſoe two paire of curtaines of green tartarin. Item, two ſhort quiſhions of tawney velvet; alſoe a long quiſhion, and ſhort, of crimſon velvet; alſoe ſuch pieces of bawdekyn, with a frontaile of cloth of gold of blew ſattin, as hath been accuſtomed to be occupied about the ſepulchre of our Lord; alſoe a cloth of bawdekyn, with a frontaile of red bawdekyn for the font. Item, an old hanging of counterfeit arres of Knollys, which now hangeth in the hall; and all ſuch hangyngs of old bawdekyn or lynen paynted as now hang in the chappell, with the altar-clothes and oon ſuper altare, with oon of the veſtiments that now be occupyed in the chappell. Alſoe all ſuch pieces of hangings as I have, of blew and better blew, with my lord's armes, with banquyrs and cupboard-clothes of the ſame ſort. Alſoe three barrehides for carriage; and two barrehides for clothe ſekks. Alſo the third part of my hey that is at Kerby, and all ſuch tymber as I have there. Alſo all the bedding that he hath of mine which late was at London, reſerved only two fedurbedds and a cowcher that I wol Richard my ſon have, and alſo two carpets. Item, I bequeath to my ſons Richard and William four coverings for quiſhions with my lord's armys of counterfeit arres. Alſo two hangings for an aultar, with the twelve Apoſtles embrodered with gold, with a crucifix and the Salutation of our Lady. Alſoe all the pieces of hangings of verd that now hang in my chamber and in the parlour; alſoe all my ſtuffe of napree pertaining to the pantree; alſoe two pair of blankets, and two pair of fuſtians; alſoe four pair of fine ſheets; alſoe my ſtuffe of kitchin, as platters, diſhes, ſawcers, broaches, potts, and pans; alſoe all my hey that is in Lubbeſhorp, provided that William have the more part of the hey; alſoe two parts of the hey at Kerby; alſoe two veſtiments, oon that hath been accuſtomed to be occupied in my high houſe, and oon that's occupyed in the chappell; two Maſſe-books, two ſuper altars, oon of white to Richard, and oon of jett to William; two corporauxes; alſoe to Richard foure pair of brigaunters; and to William two payre; and to them both thirteen ſaletts. Item, to my ſon William all ſuch ſtuffe of bedding as he hath now in his chamber of mine; that is to ſay, a feller, teſter, and counterpoint of rooſemary, a quilt happing, a white mantell, a white ſquare happing; a ſquare happing, white and black. Alſoe to my ſon William all ſuch plate as was in the hands of John Holme, with that he pay unto the ſaid John, at the feaſt of St. Andrew next coming, fifteen pounds, in part of payment of a greater ſume; and over that to doe ſuch charitable deedes of almes as I have appointed to be done by him. Alſo I bequeethe to my ſon William four fedur beds and couchers; and to Richard two fedur beds that he hath, a coucher that was at London, a coucher that's here, and a fedur bedde. Item, I bequeth unto them all the hangings of ſaye which be at Kerbye now, as appeareth by the inventory thereof made; and I woll that William have foure paire of ſheets of ſuch ſorte as he now occupyeth. Item, to my lady Margaret a payre of little ſalts of ſilver and parcell gylt. To my ſiſter Fitz Hugh oon of my ſtanding cupps; alſoe a bedd of tymbre; and ſuch pledges as ſhe hath of mine, I woll they be pledged out by William, and he to have them. Item, to my daughter Hungerford my part of a croſſe, which ſhe hath in her keeping for a pledge. Item, to my ſon George Haſtings a good fedur bedde, a boulſter, a pair of blankets, a paire of fuſtians, and a pair of fine ſheets. Item, to my nephew William Ferrers and to my niece his wife, a fedur bedde, a boulſter, a blanket, a chike happing, an old counterpoint, fillor and teſtor, which they now occupy in their chamber; alſoe four payre of ſheets, and oon of my fineſt gownes. Item, to my lady Mary a ring, which William Bamſell hath for a pledge, to be pledged out of my goods. Item, to my neece Brokeſby, three payre of ſheets, and oon of my beſt gownes: my gownes to be given among my other gentlewomen, and oon to Mrs. Booth, and oon to Margaret Cooke, and oone old gowne to moder Cecill of Leiceſtre, and oon gown cloth of my groome's livery to Richard Twhytull. Item, to ſir Chriſtopher Hayward, my preeſt, in monie or ſtuff, whether he woll, ten marks, towards ſuch chardges of reparations of his chauncell as he ſhall have. Item, I bequeath to the ſame ſir Chriſtopher Hayward a veſtiment of crimſon velvet, and the croſſe of black cloth of gold. Item, I woll that he entre immediately after my departing into the ferme of Kerby appertaining unto him, and to take all ſuch fruits as have growne this year, with thithes, oblations, and other profits belonging to the ſaid ferme; and over that he to perceive in money fifty-tree ſhillings foure-pence, and to content himſelf for the rent of the ſaid ferme for this year, and to pay unto the preeſt of Kerby his full wages unto the Annunciation of our Lady next coming. Alſoe I woll that my houſehold be fully contented and paid for their whole quarter's wages to be finiſhed at Chriſtmaſs next, and all ſuch wages that has been unpaid due unto them; and over this I woll that every oon of my gentlemen ſhall have thirteen ſhillings four pence; and every yeoman ten ſhillings; and every groom ſix ſhillings eight pence. Item, I woll that John Lolls have twenty pounds. Item, I bequethe to Mr. Doctor Chriſtopherſon oon of my beſt horſes, alſo a gowne of my fine black. Item, I woll that ſuch hangings or bedding, as ſhall be ſold for the payment of my debts and performance of my will, be refuſed of my lady marquiſſe and of my ſon Edward lord Haſtings before they be any parcell to be ſold to any other body, ſo that the ſaid lady marquiſs and lord Haſtings woll give as muche for the ſaid as any other woll doe, and make as quick payment. The reſidue of my goods not bequeathed, my debts fully paid, with all my cattall, ſomes of monie, rents, annuities, debts, and arrearages, which it ſhall happen me to have and to be poſſeſſed of, or due unto me, by any grant or lawfull meane, at the time of my departing, I woll be equally divided between my ſons Richard and William. And for the true execution and performance of this my preſent teſtament and laſt will, I make and ordaine Ceicill marquiſs Dorſet, widdow George, earl of Shrewſbury and Anne his wife, my daughter, Edward lord Haſtings, Richard Haſtings, and William Haſtings, eſquires, my ſons, myne executors; moſt humbly beſeeching and praying them, in the way of charity, to take the peyne and labour for the true performance of the ſame, as myn ſpecial truſt is in them [1].”

This great lady died the next year; her will being proved coram Domino, apud Lamehithe, quinto die menſis Martii, anno Domini MDIIII°.” By her directions another obit was founded in St. George's chapel at Windſor, for her huſband, herſelf, and their anceſtors and deſcendants [2]; and in the North aile of the choir, under a North arch, was erected the chapel of St. Stephen [3], wherein her huſband was interred; and in which, Dugdale ſays, a monument was ſtill to be ſeen; but none now remains, unleſs he and Fuller miſtook the chapel for it, as there was no tomb in the chapel; ſee Plates LXXVII. LXXVIII.

This chapel is of ſtone, with the compartments in three ſtories, the two uppermoſt open archwork. At the head and feet is a faſcia of angels with blank ſhields under a dental cornice.

The South ſide is painted with the hiſtory of the patron ſaint in four pannels well preſerved.

Under the firſt of theſe, repreſenting the protomartyr, richly dreſſed, preaching in a pulpit in the open air among the trees to a mixed audience of the doctors of the law, and others; and ladies with the head-dreſs of the time; one doctor appearing to be ſtruck, as if with conviction; is this inſcription:

“ Predicat his X'pum deitatis honore nitentem, Arguit, et mulcet doctrina corda virorum.”

Under the ſecond, repreſenting his arraignment before the high prieſt and council of the Jews, He[illegible] being ſeated on his throne under a tent or canopy, his ſword-bearer at his right hand, a man in a gown bringing the bill of indictment, which is preſented by a man with a mace kneeling on one knee:

---

[1] Harl. MSS. 3881. 4774.

[2] Pote's Windſor, p. 54.

[3] On the North ſide of the chapel there is yet a little houſe, wherein the chantry-prieſt did inhabit, having the arms of lord Haſtings cut in ſtone over the door environed with the Garter.

"Invidie facibus ſuccenſa patenter Herodi, Inſtat, et accuſat Stephanum plebs impia juſtū."

Under the third, repreſenting his martyrdom, Herod with his ſword-bearer, &c. attending, not under a canopy; a dragon's head on his cap; Saul ſits loaded with the coats of the witneſſes:

"Sponte ſua ſervat Saulus veſtes lapidantium; Saxa pluunt torvi: prothomartyr pro quibus orans."

Under the fourth, much narrower than the reſt, repreſenting him kneeling and expiring, his ſoul carried up by two angels to God in heaven:

"In Dn̄o moritur' datur, Et quo vita pennis."

Theſe pictures are unequally divided by purfled finials, at the baſe of which is a maunch thrice repeated; and under the pictures is a cavity for holy water.

Previous to the late repairs of St. George's chapel, this chapel was gilt, and painted with a variety of colours; but it is now plain[1].

Edward ſecond lord Haſtings, eldeſt ſon of the lord William Haſtings, was made a knight of the Bath, with Edward prince of Wales, in 1476; and in 1482 was firſt ſummoned to parliament (his father then living), and ſo again in 1483 though then in his minority, by the title of Edward Haſtings de Hungerford, chevalier, in right of his wife Mary, daughter and ſole heireſs of Thomas baron Hungerford, Botreaux, Molines, and Moels. When king Henry VII. obtained the crown, that monarch, in conſideration of the ſufferings of his father, forthwith reſtored to him all his lands, by patent dated Nov. 22, 1485; with the lands of ſir Thomas Hungerford, his wife's father; and the reverſal of his attainder. He ſhared in the honour of the battle of Stoke, and was ſent to aſſiſt the emperor Maximilian againſt the French.

Under his direction was compiled, in 1489, a MS. now before me, under the title of "Feoda Domini Haſtynges, ratione Mariæ uxoris ejus, dominæ Botreaux, Molins, Moyles; ex mero ſtudio, labore, & ſcriptione mei Thomæ Jakes[2], anno quinto Henrici Septimi regis Angliæ, 1489."

In 1499, he obtained a grant from the king of all the profits ariſing yearly by the lops and crops of trees in the Fryth in Leiceſter, or in the park called The Fryth, as well of trees fallen for repairing the pales of that park, as of the crops called browſings, for the ſuſtenance of the king's deer therein, as alſo of bark of thoſe lops and crops, at a rent of 26*s*. 8*d*.

The account of Richard Sacheverell, receiver-general to Edward lord Haſtings[3], for the year ending at Michaelmas 1500, conveys ſome idea of the great conſequence of this antient family:

The total income of lord Haſtings was 1558*l*. 11*s*. 8*d*.

The receipts in Leiceſterſhire were theſe:	£.	s.	d.
Burton Overy, Billeſdon, and Wheſton,	3	6	8
Carleton Curlieu, —	4	3	4
Burrow wood, — —	9	5	8¾
Leiceſter, — —	0	10	8
Aſhby de la Zouch, —	13	6	8
Recept' forinſec', ſcil', Beaumont's land,	63	13	4

An account is alſo preſerved of fees and annuities paid to his retainers, among whom were ſeveral knights and eſquires of high degree.

Sir Reginald Bray was ſteward of certain eſtates in the counties of Somerſet and Wilts, on a ſalary of £20; and Richard Sacheverell had the ſame ſum as receiver-general. Thomas Keble, ſerjeant at law, had an annual fee of £20; Thomas Jakes was attorney-general to the family on a fee of 56*s*. 8*d*.; and William Cook was auditor-general on a fee of £11.

In 1504, this Edward lord Haſtings, calling to mind that William lord Haſtings, his father, did, by his laſt will and teſtament, declare, that certain lands and tenements, to the yearly value of £20. ſhould be given to the deane and canons of the collegiate church of St. George, ſituate within the Caſtle of Windſor, and to their ſucceſſors for ever, for the founding of a perpetual chantry for ever, for a chaplain and his ſucceſſors, in a certain chapel of the ſame college, where the body of the ſaid William doth lie interred, there to celebrate divine ſervice for the ſoul of the ſaid William and Katharine his wife, and all his anceſtors; as alſo for the ſoul of him the ſaid Edward, his children, and friends, and all the faithful deceaſed; and grant unto the then dean of the college, and to the convent thereof, and their ſucceſſors, for making up the ſum of £20. an annual rent of 35*s*. ariſing out of the manor of Alveſton in Yorkſhire.

By an indenture, Dec. 17, 1505, between Thomas earl of Derby and Edward Haſtings, knt. lord Haſtings and Hungerford, it was covenanted, that the ſaid earl ſhould, before the feaſt of Pentecoſt next coming, wed and take to wife Anne the daughter of the ſaid lord Haſtings; and that the ſaid earl ſhould, at his coſts and charges, obtain the licence of our holy father the pope at Rome for the marriage; and alſo, at his coſt and charges, apparel the ſaid Anne; and bear all the charges, as well for the dinner, as all other things requiſite and convenient for the marriage: The lord Haſtings to make a good eſtate to truſtees, of manors, lands, &c. to the yearly value of 600 marks; and the earl to make a like title to the value of 400 marks. The lord Haſtings farther covenanted to pay, if the marriage take effect, 4000 marks of lawful money; viz. 500 marks in the town or place where the marriage ſhould be had; and, on the firſt of May, 1507, 500 marks in London, in the cathedral of St. Paul, at the font in the ſame church; and 500 more, at the ſame place, on every ſucceeding firſt day of May, till the year 1513 incluſive[4].

His laſt will is here tranſcribed:

"In the name of God, Amen. The 4th day of November, the yere of our Lord 1506, I Edward Haſtings, knt. lord Haſtyngs and Hungerford, hole in mynde, make my teſtament and laſt will, in maner and forme following, &c. My body to be buryed, yf I depart this world in London, or within twenty miles of the ſame, in the colege of Wyndeſore, nyghe to the tombe of my lord my father (whoſe ſoule God pardon) yf it may be conveniently; elſe I remytte the ſame to the diſcretion of myne executors, &c. by the overſight of the erle of Shrewſbury, lord-ſteward of the king's moſt honourable houſhhold, and of my two brethren, yf they be at my ſeid departing. Alſo I wolle that the conveyance of my body to my buriall, with all the obſervances and other things pertaining to the ſame, and alſo to my month's-mind and yere-day, be ordered and done by my ſaid executors, or other above reherſed. Alſo I woll, that an honeſt preſte and virtuous be provided, to ſyng and pray for my ſoule, and the ſoules of my father and mother, and all other my frends, with the ſoules of them that I am bownden to pray for, and all Criſten ſoules, in the chapell or church where my body ſhall be interred, by the ſpace of ſeaven yeares next enſuing my ſeid departing; and the ſame preſt oons in every weeke ſhall ſay Placebo, Dirige, and Commendations, with maſs of Requiem on the morrow, for my ſoule, and the ſoules above-reherſed; and other oriſons and prayers as my ſaid executors ſhall appoint: and that the ſame preſt have yerely, for the doing of the ſame obſervances, during the ſame ſeaven yeare, ten marks. Alſo I woll that my brother Richard Haſtings have oone annuyte of xx marks by yere, out of my lordſhips of Thorneton and Bagworth; not oonly to hym, but alſo to my lady his wyff, or to the longer lyver of them, to be made ſure, as the lerned counſell of my ſeid brother can deviſe. Alſo I woll that my brother William Haſtyngs ſhall have and enjoy the offices and ſtewardſhips and bailyſwyke of my lordſhipps of Thorneton and Bagworth, with the herbage; yielding account of the ſame; to have and occupie to him and to his deputies, with all ſuch fees and profits as to the ſame office in any wiſe appertein or belong, for terme of his lyff oonely. And whereas I have granted unto my ſaid brother William oon annuyte of xx marks be yere, to be percevyd of my londs in the North parts, as by my letters patents to hym made of the ſame more pleynly it doth appere; I wooll, and put it to be in choyſe of my ſeid brother, whether he woll have the ſeid annuytie in the place appoynted in my ſeid letters patents; or els my ſeid recoverers and feoffees to make unto hym an eſtate or graunt thereof, as by his counſell lerned ſhall be thought good, for terme of his lyff, out of ſuch my londs as he ſhall thinke moſt profitable, &c. Alſo, whereas my ſeid lord and father, whoſe ſoule God pardon, had taken a place within the Friers at Calais, for certen yeres, to hym and to his heires; I woll that the ſaid friers and their ſucceſſors, ſaying yerely for evermore for my ſoull an obite upon the ſame day it ſhall pleaſe Almighty God to call me to hys mercy; that is to ſay, a ſolempne Dirige over even, and maſſe upon the morrow, with Commendations; and oons in the weeke for evermore, one frier ſay Dirige and Commendations, with maſſe of Requiem upon the morrow, for the ſoules of my ſeid lord and father and me; and alſo to performe and fulfill certen maſſes, to be ſeid accordyng to the graunt made by the provinciall, and the general chapter of their order at Gippiwic, as it appeareth by a bill ſent unto me of the ſame; that then they ſhall have and enjoy the ſaid place to their moſt profite and advantage, any condition made unto my ſeid lord and father notwithſtanding, &c." He willed laſtly, that his feoffees ſhould make ſale of his manors of Welford, co. Northampton, Lubbeſthorpe, Wyſtow, and Braunſton, co. Leiceſter; as alſo of Bewike, Alacborow, and Slyngeſby, co. York; to pay his debts, and perform this his will [1].

---

[1] For the very elegant plates which ſo ſcientifically elucidate theſe remarks, I am indebted to the liberality of Mr. Gough, from whoſe "Sepulchral Monuments," vol. II. p. 284, they are, by his permiſſion, borrowed.

[2] Attorney-general to Edward lord Haſtings, and to Katharine lady Haſtings his mother.

[3] Whoſe widow ſir Richard Sacheverell afterwards married; ſee p. 575.

[4] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 27. b.

Within four days after the date of which teſtament, viz. 8 Nov. he departed this life, and was buried in the church of the Friers Preachers, commonly called the Black Friers, near Ludgate in the city of London; leaving iſſue, by the before-mentioned Mary his wife, George his ſon and heir; and one daughter, Anne, married to Thomas earl of Derby.

Mary lady Haſtings his wife, ſurviving her huſband, bore ſo great a reſpect to Richard Sacheverell, eſq. who had ſerved her lord in the office of receiver-general of his whole revenue (as hath been formerly ſhewed), as that in Auguſt the next enſuing year (viz. 1507), bearing the title of lady Haſtings, Hungerford, Botreaux, and Molines, in conſideration of his formal continual ſervices, and then calling him her ſervant, ſhe gave him her manors of Stoke Pogeys, Cyppenham, Fulmere, Eyton, and Bechenton, as alſo all her lands and advowſons of churches, chapels, chantries, and other hereditaments whatſoever, in Stoke Pogeys, Cyppenham, Fulmere, Eyton, Bechenton, Bonany, Burnham, Eſt Burnham, and Tadlow, co. Bucks, for term of his life, paying only the yearly rent of one red-roſe upon the feſtival of St. John Baptiſt's Nativity, in caſe it ſhould be demanded; and in 1508, by the title of lady Haſtings, Hungerford, Molines, and Moels, obtained a general pardon of all tranſgreſſions, offences, &c. whatſoever.

The like pardon ſhe had in 1509; and in 1511, having taken the before-mentioned Richard Sacheverell to her huſband, obtained a releaſe from Robert Brudenell, one of the juſtices of the court of King's bench, and other her feoffees, unto George earl of Shrewſbury and William Haſtings. Which eſtate to him the ſaid Richard, and her the ſaid Mary by the title of lady Hungerford and Molines, was confirmed by the before-ſpecified earl of Shrewſbury and William Haſtings the next enſuing year. Before the end thereof, having been employed in the king's army (for that expedition he made to Therouene and Tournay) in the retinue of the ſaid George earl of Shrewſbury, then general of thoſe forces, he obtained a ſpecial pardon for all accounts, by reaſon of his receipts and payments of any ſum in that ſervice, being at that time a knight. And ſhortly after this, by the conſent of the ſaid ſir Richard Sacheverell her ſecond huſband, and George lord Haſtings her ſon, ſhe put her manor and lordſhip of Aller with the More in feoffment, for term of ſeven years next after her deceaſe, to fulfil theſe articles following:

Firſt, whereſoever ſhe ſhould fortune to depart this life, that her body ſhould be buried in the church there, and not to be kept unburied above xxiiii hours after her death; nor any great dinner made for her.

Item, that immediately after her deceaſe xl trentalls be done for her ſoul; as alſo a thouſand maſſes, with Placebo and Dirige; and every prieſt to have 6*d*.

Item, that as ſhortly as could be after the grant ſhe had of the houſe of Charter-houſe to be ſent forth; and that the ſaid houſe have xv*l*.

Item, that li maſſes be done for her at the altars of Scala Cœli in England.

Item, that there ſhould be xx*l*. given to the bed-rid perſons, priſoners, and lazer-houſes, within one year next after her deceaſe.

Item, that xl trentals be ſaid and done for Mr. Kebell's ſoul.

Item, for Roger Whittington's ſoul three trentals.

Item, that there be offered to our Lady of Walſingham for the ſaid Roger 5*s*.

Item, that a prieſt do ſing before the rood of Garradon [co. Leic.] ſeven years after her deceaſe.

Item, to the Univerſity of Oxford, by the ſpace of xx years, cc marks [2].

As to the time of her death and burial, we have not ſeen any thing. But of her huſband, ſir Richard Sacheverell [3], it appears that, in 1529 he was one of the witneſſes produced in that cauſe of the divorce between king Henry and queen Catharine his firſt wife; and depoſed, that the commonalty did greatly diſapprove of the ſaid marriage; accounting it unfit that one brother ſhould marry another brother's wife; alſo, that in 1530 he was one of thoſe which ſubſcribed the letter to pope Clement the VII. intimating that, in caſe he did not comply with king Henry, in the buſineſs of the divorce betwixt him and Catharine of Spain (then his queen), he muſt expect that they would ſhake off his ſupremacy.

George Haſtings, only ſon and heir of Edward, Aug. 23, 1507, (being then a knight, and his father dead), petitioned the king that he might have the benefit of his own marriage, and to marry at his own liberty; as alſo to have ſpecial livery of the manors of Aſhby de la Zouch and Barrow upon Soar, the ſtewardſhip of the town of Leiceſter, the offices of the ſtewardſhip and bailiwick thereof within the ſaid county, and of all officers of the foreſt and chace of Leiceſter; obliging himſelf to pay, in conſideration thereof, 4000 marks to the king; and, on the 3d of December, he had accordingly a ſpecial livery of all the lands whereof his father died ſeiſed, without making proof of his uſe; amongſt which were the manors of Aſhby and Barrow upon Sore; a tenement called Haſtings-place, within the pariſh of St. Benedict in Thames-ſtreet, London; the keeperſhip of Frith-park, Beaumond Leys, Barrow-park, Tolee-park, and Stredey-park in Hinckley.

In 1509, he obtained the ſtewardſhip of the manor of Enderby; and in 1513 was in the expedition made by king Henry into France, when Therouene and Tournay were won. This appears by a liſt of "The names of the Captains and Pety Captains, with the bagges in their ſtanderts of the aremy and vant-gard of the king's lefftenant, enteryng into France, the 16th day of June, in the 5th year of the reign of king Henry the VIIIth;" in which the badges of this noble lord, and thoſe of two of his more immediate friends, are thus blazoned:

"The lord Haſtyng bayryth, blew and bloukett, a bull's head Sabull, raeſſed with a crown abowt his neck Gold, and three ſykells and garbes Gold.

Sir John Dygbe, marſhall of the vant-gard, bayryth a oſtrych Silver, with a iyolet for a difference Aſſur.

---

[1] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 28.

[2] Ibid.

[3] See ſeveral particulars of ſir Richard Sacheverell in the Firſt Part of this Volume, p. 508.

Sir Richard Saucheverell, treſorer of the ſaid vantgard, bayryth a gotts buk apoun a wrayth Gold and Golt; made knyght at Torney [1]."

In 1513, he obtained, with Francis his ſon, from the prioreſs of Gracedieu, that they, or the ſurvivor of them, ſhould be ſtewards to that nunnery, and of all their manors and lands in England, with all fees and rewards thereunto appertaining.

In 1517, in conſideration of the great coſts and charges which Mary lady Hungerford, Molines, and Botreaux (his mother), and ſir Richard Sacheverell, knt. her huſband, had been at, for the ſupport of the honour and eſtate of him the ſaid George lord Haſtings, and furtherance of his profit, he empowered him the ſaid ſir Richard and her to make a good eſtate of and in the manor of Aller, in the county of Somerſet, and of all the lands thereto belonging, unto Francis lord Talbot, ſon and heir to George earl of Shrewſbury, and others, to the uſe of them the ſaid ſir Richard and lady Mary, during the life of her the ſaid lady Mary, without impeachment of waſte; and after her deceaſe, to the end and term of ſeven years, to ſuch uſe and behoof as they the ſaid ſir Richard and lady Mary, Francis lord Talbot, or any one of them, feoffees, by the conſent of her, either by word or writing, ſhould declare. And in caſe ſhe the ſaid lady Mary ſhould ſurvive the ſaid ſir Richard Sacheverell, then to the uſe, and for the performance, of her laſt will. Likewiſe that it ſhould be lawful to the ſaid ſir Richard and lady Mary to appoint out-lands, to the yearly value of 20 marks, to found an almſhouſe of poor people, daily to pray for the good eſtate of him the ſaid ſir Richard and lady Mary, as alſo for the good eſtate of him the ſaid George lord Haſtings and Anne his wife, and for their ſouls after their deceaſes; and for the ſouls of their fathers, mothers, and anceſtors, and all Chriſtian ſouls. And laſtly, that ſir Richard and lady Mary ſhould have power to appoint and aſſign other manors and lands, to the yearly value of £100. and of them to make a good eſtate to the ſaid Francis lord Talbot, and the reſt of the feoffees, to the uſe of them the ſaid ſir Richard and lady Mary, during the life of him the ſaid George lord Haſtings, without impeachment of waſte: and in caſe the ſaid lady Mary ſhould happen to ſurvive him the ſaid lord Haſtings, for the execution and performance of his laſt will, and for the payment of his debts.

In 1527, by the favour of the king, he obtained a grant, to himſelf and the heirs male of his body, of the manor of Evington, which came to the crown by the forfeiture of ſir William Stanley, knight.

Nov. 3, 1529, at York-place, he was advanced to the dignity of earl of Huntingdon [2]; and in 1530, was one of the peers who ſubſcribed the famous letter to Pope Clement VII.

July 5, 1531, he entered into articles of agreement with Margaret counteſs of Saliſbury and Henry lord Montague her ſon, for a marriage to be had between Francis lord Haſtings his ſon and heir, and Katharine eldeſt daughter of the ſaid lord Montague, before the feſtival of our Lady's Purification then next enſuing; and that theſe enſuing covenants ſhould be performed.

Firſt, the apparel of the ſaid lord Francis to be at the coſts of him the ſaid earl; and the apparel of her the ſaid Katharine at the charge of the ſaid counteſs; but the meat and drink for the wedding at the indifferent charge of both.

Second, that the ſaid earl ſhall enfeoff certain perſons, to be named by himſelf and her before the feſtival of our Lady's Purification, of and in certain lands of £900. per annum value, over all repriſes; that is to ſay, of lands to the value of 200 marks by the year to the uſe of the ſaid Francis and Katharine, and to the heirs of the body of the ſaid Francis: and of other lands to the yearly value of 100 marks to the uſe of him the ſaid earl, during the life of ſir Richard Sacheverell, knt.; and after his death, to the uſe of the ſaid Francis and Katharine, and the heirs of the body of the ſaid Francis, in full recompence of the jointure and dower of the ſaid Katharine; and of the reſidue of the ſaid manors and lands of the ſaid yearly value of £900. immediately after the death of the ſaid ſir Richard Sacheverell, and after the laſt will of the lady Hungerford, deceaſed, performed, for ſeven years, to the uſe of the ſaid Francis, and the heirs of his body lawfully begotten.

Third, that the ſaid earl ſhould make the like eſtate in fee ſimple, of and in other manors, &c. to the yearly value of £800.; that is to ſay, of lands to the value of 300 marks; to the intent that he might give to every of his three younger ſons 100 marks apiece yearly for the term of their ſeveral lives: and after their ſeveral deaths, and death of the ſaid earl, to the uſe of the ſaid Francis, and of the heirs of his body lawfully begotten; and of other manors and lands to the yearly value of £400. that the ſaid earl might make to the ſaid Anne, to the uſe of the ſaid Francis, and the heirs of his body lawfully begotten; and of the reſidue of the ſaid manors, lands, &c. for the performance of the laſt will and teſtament of the ſaid earl, for 15 years next after his death; and afterwards to the uſe of the ſaid Francis, and the heirs of his body lawfully begotten.

In conſideration of all which, the ſaid counteſs of Saliſbury covenanted to pay 3000 marks; viz. at the affiance of the ſaid Francis and Katharine, 500 marks; at the Purification of our Lady next coming, 500 marks; and ſo yearly at the feſtival of the Purification, other 500 marks; until the ſaid ſum of 5000 marks ſhould be fully paid. And, to the intent that the ſaid marriage ſhould be ſolemnized before the feſtival of our Lady's Purification as aboveſaid, the ſaid George earl of Huntingdon obliged himſelf to the ſaid counteſs of Saliſbury in the ſum of £5000 marks. After which, viz. upon the 20th of June, certain indentures of covenants were made betwixt the ſaid Margaret and Henry lord Montague on the one part, and the ſaid George earl of Huntingdon on the other part, for the ſettling of certain manors and lands in purſuance of this agreement.

In 1533, he obtained a leaſe from the abbot of Waltham Holy Croſs, and prior commendatory of St. Bartholomew in Weſt Smithfield, of his houſe at Paul's Wharf, in the pariſh of St. Bennet, in length Eaſt and Weſt 24 feet, and in breadth North and South 18 feet, with a piece of ground on the North ſide, containing 20 feet in breadth, for a term of 90 years.

By his teſtament, bearing date June 13, 1534, 26 Henry VIII. (which was many years before his death), wherein he ſtyles himſelf earl of Huntingdon, lord Haſtings, Hungerford, Botreaux, and Molines, he bequeathed his body to be buried in the pariſh-church of St. Elyne in Aſhby de la Zouch; and gave to that church his beſt pair of altar-cloths of crimſon velvet, which were embroidered with the bleſſed name of Jeſus; as alſo the copes and whole ſuits of veſtments belonging thereto; likewiſe one pair of candleſticks of ſilver gilt; a pair of baſons of ſilver gilt; a pair of cenſers of ſilver; a croſs of ſilver and gilt, with a fleur de lis on the top, and a fleur de lis on either ſide; alſo one flat ſhip of ſilver and gilt; and his beſt chalice of ſilver gilt; likewiſe his water-ſtock of ſilver gilt, with the ſprinkle belonging thereto; his beſt pax of ſilver and gilt, with a crucifix, whereon were Mary and John; a pair of cruets of ſilver and gilt; and a ſepulchre cloth of crimſon velvet, embroidered with drops of gold; likewiſe another ſuit of veſtments, of white tinſell, with two copes of the ſame; as alſo a ſuit of veſtments of crimſon velvet, which had the croſs embroidered thereon with acorns. To the abbot and convent of Repyndon, co. Derby, he bequeathed a veſtment, with the tunicles and ſtuff thereto belonging, of black tinſel; and to the chapel of St. Bartholomew at Kirby, co. Leiceſter, he gave another veſtment. To every gentlewoman unmarried, who had done ſervice in the houſhold to his wife within the ſpace of ſix years before his deceaſe, he bequeathed ſix pounds ſterling; and ordained that his executors ſhould cauſe a thouſand maſſes to be ſaid or ſung, in as ſhort a time as might be after his deceaſe, by ſecular prieſts and others, in the county of Leiceſter and other places adjoining. To Francis his eldeſt ſon he bequeathed all his furs of ſables; and appointed, that all the outſides of his gowns and apparel, fit for that purpoſe, ſhould be made in veſtments, and delivered to poor churches within his lordſhips. To his daughter Dorothy he bequeathed a thouſand pounds, to her marriage; to his daughter Katharine the like ſum; and ordained that his executors, out of the revenues of his lands in Woodcote, and Burton Haſtings, co. Warwick, ſhould provide two prieſts, to ſing in the pariſh-church of Aſhby, for the ſpace of 20 years, for all Chriſtian ſouls, with a ſalary of £6. 13*s.* 4*d.*"

---

[1] Cotton MS. Cleopatra, C. V. fol. 56. 60.

[2] Francis his ſon was that day ſummoned to parliament as lord Haſtings. Harl. MSS. 4849; from H. 13. in Coll. Arm.

Two years after the date of this will, on the inſurrection in the North, in 1536, called "The Pilgrimage of Grace," occaſioned by the diſſolution of the monaſteries, the earl of Huntingdon offered his ſervice to the king againſt thoſe rebels.

Leland, who viſited this place about 1540, ſays,

"The lorde of Huntingdon hath three parkes at Aſſcheby de la Zouch. This Aſſcheby hath beene in the Haſtinges name but ſins that the lord Haſtinges, ſo great with king Edward IV. got it partely by a title, partely by mony paid. The late Thomas Boloyne erle of Wileſhire made a title to it by the lorde of Rocheford, which was heire to this Suche; and by him the lorde Rocheford had Fulburne and other landes yn Cambridgeſhire [1]."

George earl of Huntingdon died March 24, 1543; and was buried in the chancel of the church at Stoke Pogeis[2], co. Bucks, where his ſeat was. He left iſſue, by Anne his wife, daughter to Henry duke of Buckingham, and widow of ſir Walter Herbert, knight, (who, ſurviving him, held Stoke Pogeis as parcel of her dower, and was there buried) Francis his ſucceſſor, then aged 30 years or upwards[3]; Thomas, Edmund, Henry, William (who died in 1556, and was buried at Stoke Pogeis), and three daughters.

Before we proceed to ſpeak of Francis the ſecond earl of Huntingdon, two of his brothers ſhall be noticed.

Sir Thomas Haſtings, who was knighted Oct. 2, 1553, and placed in the commiſſion of the peace for the town and county of Leiceſter, was one of the knights for that county in 1554. He married Winifrede, one of the two daughters and coheirs of Henry Pole lord Montacute. His laſt will is thus expreſſed:

"In the name, &c. the 28th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1558. I, ſir Thomas Haſtings, knt. &c. ordeyn this my teſtament, &c. My body to be buried in the pariſh-church of Stoke Pogeis, or within the chapell there, being lately founded and erected at the only chardges of my moſt entirely beloved brother Edward lord Haſtings of Loughborough, lord chamberlayn of the Queen's Majeſtie's houſhold. Item, I give to the ſaid pariſh-church of Stoke, towards the mayntenance of the ſame in reparation xl s̃. Item, to the ſame church my beſt challice of ſilver and gylt, and a veſtment of ruſſet-velvet, with the awbe, and all things pertaining to the furniture of the ſame. Item, &c. to the vicar of Stoke aforeſaid, to pray to God for my ſoule and the ſoules of my anceſtors, xx s̃. Item, &c. to the four almeſmen and two almeſwomen, within the almeſhouſe of Stoke, being of the foundation of my ſaid entirely beloved brother, to every of them xx s̃. apiece. To the fryers of St. Bartholomew in London, xl s̃.; to the fryers of Grenewich, xl s̃.; to the nunns of Langley, xl s̃.; to the priſoners within the four priſons in London, viz. Ludgate, Newgate, the King's Bench, and the Marſhalſea, to every of the ſaid houſes xl s̃. Provided always, that if it ſhall pleaſe God to call me out of this tranſitory life, I being removed out of the citty of London and ſuburbs of the ſame, then I will that the ſum̃es of money, above bequeathed to the priſoners, or priſons, ſhall be diſtributed to and among the poore of the pariſh where it ſhall fortune me to dye, &c. according to the diſcretion of myne executrix, &c.; that ſhe, with ſuch of my goods as ſhall come to her hands, ſhall forthwith after my deceaſe provide and hyer one honeſt virtuous preiſt, to ſay and celebrate the divine ſacrifice of the maſſe, within the church or chapell wherein I ſhall fortune to be buryed, during the ſpace of three years next then following, &c.; in daily celebrating of which ſaid divine ſervice and ſacrifice, I will that ſpecial commemoration and prayer be made for my ſoule, and the ſoules of my late father George earl of Huntingdon and Anne his wife, and for all Criſten ſoules. Item, I will that my wife ſhall keep in houſhold all my houſhold ſervants, &c. which I ſhall fortune to have in my check-roll, for and during the ſpace of one year after my deceaſe, &c. The reſidue of all my goods, &c. not above bequeathed, I do hereby give, &c. to my entirely beloved wife, Winifrede Haſtings, &c. And of the execution, &c. of the ſame my preſent teſtament, I make and ordeyn my ſaid wife chief and ſole executrix, &c. Item, I give, &c. to my right hõble and right wel-beloved brethren, my lord Huntingdon and lord Haſtings of Loughborough, lord chamberlain of the queene's majeſtie's houſhold, to either of them one ſtanding-cup of ſylver and gylt, every one of them being of the value of xx nobles, &c. And I moſt humbly and moſt heartily deſier and pray my moſt reverend father in God, and my moſt ſinguler beloved uncle, my lord Cardinall's grace, to be overſeer of this my preſent teſtament, &c.; and I give and bequeth to his grace, for his paynestaking therein, a cup of ſilver and gylt, of the value of ten pounds, &c. In witneſſe, &c.

"Probat', &c. coram dño archiep̃o Cantuar. xi° die menſis Maii, anno Dñi MDLVIII. 4 & 5 Ph. & Mar."[4]

Sir Thomas Haſtings departed this life ſoon after, as appears by the probate of his will, leaving no iſſue.

Edward Haſtings, eſq. obtained, in 1544, a grant from the king of the alnage of Wiltſhire, for 21 years from the feaſt of Eaſter, and, after that, for the term of 40 years; paying £76. 19*s.* rent a year, and 1*s.* for increaſe. In 1547 he repreſented the county of Leiceſter in parliament; and in September that year accompanied the lord protector, Edward Seymour earl of Hertford, into Scotland, where he was knighted. In 1551 he was ſheriff for the counties of Leiceſter and Warwick; and was ſent the ſame year (with Francis earl of Huntingdon his elder brother) with conſiderable forces, to diſlodge the French then planted betwixt Boulogne and Calais, both which places were then in the hands of the Engliſh.

On the acceſſion of queen Mary to the throne, in July 1553, having a commiſſion from his relation the duke of Northumberland to raiſe 4000 foot (principally in the county of Bucks) for the ſervice of the lady Jane Grey, he went over with them to queen Mary[5]; by whom he was rewarded with the office of receiver of the honour of Leiceſter, parcel of the dutchy of Lancaſter, in the counties of Leiceſter, Warwick, Northampton, and Nottingham; and, being the ſame year made a privy counſellor, maſter of the horſe, and lord chamberlain to her majeſty, was conſtituted collector-general of all her revenues, within the city of London, Middleſex, and Hertfordſhire, being accountable for the arrearages in the Court of Augmentation[6]; and obtained a leaſe of the rectory of Dalby Chaucombe for 21 years, and £13. 6*s.* 8*d.* yearly rent; alſo of the manor of Oxlade, with a piece of land in Rereſby, and of the rectory of Thruſſington, with the tithes of corn and hay in Thruſſington and Radcliffe[7].

Marye the quene

"We will and com̃and you forthwith upon the ſight hereof to deliver, &c. to our right truſty and right well-beloved couſen and counſeller the erle of Suſſex[8], one geldyng out of our own ſtable, allowed unto him upon his clayme for his ſervyce at our coronation, to ride upon from the Tower to Weſtminſter with our cloke, as by a declaration thereof, ſigned with the hands of our commiſſioners appointed for the hearing of thoſe claymes, playnly doth appeare, &c. Yeven under our ſignet, at our palace of Weſtminſter, the xvith of October, the firſt yere of our reigne.

---

[1] Leland's Itinerary, vol. I. p. 22.

[2] So called from the Pogeis, formerly lords of it; from whom it came by marriage to the family of Molines; from them to the Hungerfords; and by the marriage of an heireſs of that family to Edward lord Haſtings, father to George earl of Huntingdon.

[3] Eſch. 36 Hen. VIII.

[4] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 69.

[5] A letter to him from the queen, dated July 9, 1553, is printed in Kennett's Complete Hiſtory of England, vol. II. p. 331.

[6] 1 Pars Original. 1 Mariæ, Rot. 31. & 46.

[7] 4 Pars Original. 1 Mariæ, Rot. 79.

[8] Among the unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, (O. p. 1.) are the claims of Thomas Babington, Henry earl of Suſſex, and Edward earl of Derby, at the coronation of queen Mary.

"To our truſty and right welbeloved counſellor, ſir Edward Haſtyngs, knt. maſter of our horſe."

In 1554, he was one of the knights for the county of Middleſex in the parliament then held; and ſtood ſo highly in favour with king Philip ſoon after his marriage with queen Mary, as that by his letters of privy ſeal, bearing date at London, Aug. 23, 1554, and directed to Dominic de Orbeo, his treaſurer, he granted him a penſion of 500 crowns of Engliſh money, to be yearly paid: and in November that year he was ſent ambaſſador with the lord Paget to the emperor, to invite cardinal Pole[1] into England.

In 1555, he was elected one of the knights companions of the order of the Garter[2]; and obtained the manor of Market Boſworth, co. Leiceſter, and Michelcreche, co. Somerſet, to himſelf and his heirs[3].

Being zealouſly devoted to the Romiſh religion, certain of the monks of Weſtminſter, tranſlated thither from Glaſtonbury upon that grand diſſolution of the religious by king Henry VIII. importuned him, by the following ſpecial letter, to remind the queen, to expedite the deſign ſhe had for reſtoring that ſometime famous abbey; which had been effected but that the queen's death prevented it.

"To the right honourable Lord Chamberlaine to the Queene's Majeſtie.

"Right Honourable, In our moſt humble wyſe, your lordſhipp's daylie beadſmen, ſometime of the houſe of Glaſtonbury, now here monks in Weſtminſter; with all due ſubmiſſion, we deſire your honour to extend your accuſtomed virtue, as it hath bene always heretofore propenſe to the honour of Almighty God, to the honourable ſervice of the kyng and queene's majeſties, ſo it may pleaſe your good lordſhipp again, for the honour of them, both of God and their majeſties, to put the quene's highneſſe in remembrance of her gracious promiſe, concerning the erection of the late monaſterye of Glaſtonbury; which promiſe of her grace hath bene ſo by her majeſtie declared; that, upon the ſame, we your lordſhipp's daily beadſmen, underſtanding my lord cardinall's grace's pleaſure to the ſame, by the procurement here of our reverend father-abbot, have gotten out the particulars; and, through a warant from my lord treaſurer, our frends there hath buylded, and beſtowed moche upon reparation; notwithſtanding all now ſtandeth at a ſtaye. We thinke the cauſe to be want of remembrance, which cannot ſo well be brought unto her majeſtie's underſtandyng as by your honourable lordſhipp's favour and helpe. And, conſideryng your lordſhipp's moſt godly diſpoſition, we have confidence thereof to ſollicite the ſame; aſſuring your lordſhipp of our daily prayer whyle we live, and of our ſucceſſors during the world, if it may ſo pleaſe your good lordſhipp to take it in hand. We aſke nothing in gift to the foundation, but only the houſe and ſcite, the reſidue, for the accuſtomed rent; ſo that, with our labour and huſbandrye, we may live there a fewe of us in our religious habits till the charitye of good people may ſuffice a greater number; and the country there being ſo affected to our religion, we beleve we ſhould ſynde moche helpe amongſt them towards the reparations and furniture of the ſame; whereby we wolde haply prevent the ruine of moche, and repayre no little part of the whole, to God's honour, and for the better proſperitie of the kyng and quene's majeſties, with the whole realme: for, doubtleſſe, if it ſhall pleaſe your good lordſhipp, if there hath ever bene any flagitiouſe dede, ſince the creation of the world, punyſhed with the plague of God, in our opinion the overthrow of Glaſtonbury may be compared to the ſame: not ſurrendered, as other, but extorted; the abbot prepoſtly putt to dethe, with two innocent virtuous monks with him; that, if the thing were to be ſkanned by any univerſity, or ſome learned counſell in divinitie, they wolde finde it more dangerouſe then it is com̄anly taken, which might move the quene's majeſtie to the more ſpedy erection; namely, hit beyng an houſe of ſuch antiquitie and of fame through all Chriſtendome; firſt begon by Joſeph of Arymathia, who tooke downe the dead body of our Saviour Chriſt from the croſſe, and lyeth buryed in Glaſtonbury. And hym moſt heartily we beſeech to enable us to pray unto Chriſt for good ſucceſſe unto your honourable lordſhipp in all your lordſhipp's affaires; and now ſpecially in this our moſt humble requeſt, that we may ſhortly do the ſame in Glaſton for the kyng and quene's majeſtie as our founders, and for your good lordſhipp as a ſyngular benefactor.

Your lordſhipp's daylie beadſmen of Weſtminſter,
JOHN PHAGAN, WILLIAM ADELWOLD,
JOHN NEOTT, WILLIAM KENTWYRE."

May 10, 1556, he declared his teſtament; and thereby appointed that his body ſhould be buried in the pariſh-church of Stoke-Pogeis. To the poor, at his burial, he bequeathed £20; to a preacher, to preach three Sundays after his funeral, 40*s.*; to the pariſh-church of Stoke Pogeis, a pair of altarcloths, a cope, and a veſtment, with his arms wrought on each of them. He likewiſe ordained, that, on every Good Friday, for the ſpace of three years after his death, four marks ſhould be diſtributed amongſt poor people of the pariſh of Stoke Pogeis. To the poor of the pariſh of Harfield (within which he then dwelt) he bequeathed £10.; and £20. to be beſtowed upon the highways in the ſame pariſh; to poor ſcholars in Cambridge £20; to poor ſcholars in Oxford £20; to the New Hoſpital in London £20; to the Obſervant Friers at Greenwich £20; to every priſon in London, Weſtminſter, and Southwark, viz. Newgate, Ludgate, Bethlehem, the Fleet, the Marſhalſea, the King's Bench, both the Counters, and the Gate-houſe, five pounds, to be beſtowed on ſuch as lived on alms. Moreover, he appointed that his executors ſhould build a chapel of ſtone, with an altar therein, adjoining to the church or chancel of Stoke Pogeis, where the late earl of Huntingdon and the lady his wife (his father and mother) lay buried; and that they ſhould cauſe a tomb to be made in the ſaid chapel, with the images of his ſaid father and mother of ſtone; as alſo their arms placed thereon; and a vault under it, for their bodies, and for the body of his brother William Haſtings, in which vault he purpoſed that his own body ſhould lie; appointing, that a plate of copper, double-gilt, ſhould be made, to repreſent his image, in harneſs, with the garter; and a memorial in writing of him, with his arms, to be placed upright, on the wall of that chapel, without any other tomb for him. Alſo that his executors ſhould cauſe to be built, at Stoke aforeſaid, five convenient chambers, with chimneys in each of them, for one chantry-prieſt and four poor bedeſmen; and bequeathed his manor of Boſworth, co. Leiceſter, unto his nephew Henry lord Haſtings, and his heirs, to maintain a prieſt at Stoke aforeſaid, in the lodging before appointed, to ſing and ſay maſs, &c. for the ſouls of his father and mother, his own and his anceſtors' ſouls, in the ſame chapel; and to help the curate there in time of neceſſity; which prieſt to have a yearly ſtipend of £10, as alſo five loads of good firewood. Likewiſe to the four poor men £20. yearly; and every of them four loads of fire-wood, with a blue gown of broad cloth, of four yards, and a bull's head on the ſleeve, once in two years; which poor men to be choſen by his executors out of the pariſh of Stoke aforeſaid, but afterwards by the vicar of Stoke and the chantry-prieſt for the time being, with five of the moſt ſubſtantial men of that pariſh; and to repair daily to the ſame church, to hear God's ſervice, as alſo to pray for the ſouls aforeſaid, and all Chriſtian ſouls. Furthermore, that the ſaid lord Haſtings ſhould pay five pounds a year to ſome learned man or men, for ten ſermons every year, in perpetuity, in the ſame church of Stoke; for every ſermon 10*s.* Laſtly, he bequeathed the profits of all his manor of Michelcreche, co. Somerſet, unto his executors, till Edward his baſe

---

[1] Fox, Martyrs, vol. III. fol. 86. b.

[2] The following inſcription is taken from a plate of braſs in the choir of the Royal chapel at Windſor, fixed in the eleventh ſtall on the Prince's ſide: "Du tres noble ſeigneur Edward baron Haſtings de Lowborow, chevalier & du tres noble ordre de la Jaritiere, & chamberlayn de la maiſon de la Reyne; fuſt enſtalle le 25 jour de May, 1555."

[3] 3 Pars Original. 2 & 3 Phil. & Mar. Rot. 142.

ſon

Vol. III. Pl. LXXIX. p. 579.

EDWARD HASTINGS, Lord LOUGHBOROUGH.

From Painted Glaſs at STOKE POGEIS.

ſon ſhould come to the age of 18 years, for his education; the reverſion to him the ſaid Edward, and the heirs male of his body, and, for want of ſuch iſſue, to his nephew George Haſtings, and the heirs male of his body.

On New-year's day 1556-7 ſir Edward Haſtings, knt. then ſtyled "maſter of the horſe," preſented to queen Mary 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* in piſtolets; and received in return a bowl weighing 26¾ ounces.

In 1557, he was conſtituted deputy-general to Thomas earl of Suſſex, for the office of juſtice in Eyre, throughout all the foreſts North of Trent; and, in that year, complained that the earl of Shrewſbury's bailiff in the Peak Foreſt had impriſoned his ſervants, and impounded his cattle; and requeſted his lordſhip's intereſt to obtain a certain wardſhip [1]. Being then alſo lord chamberlain of the houſhold to queen Mary, who much delighted in his devotion, he was, January 19, 1557-8, in conſideration of his great fidelity, valour, and other virtues, advanced to the degree and dignity of a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Haſtings of Loughborough [2] in the county of Leiceſter; there being preſent at the ſolemnity of the creation, Nicholas archbiſhop of York (then lord chancellor), Thomas biſhop of Ely, William marquis of Wincheſter, lord treaſurer, William lord Paget, lord privy ſeal, Henry earl of Arundel, Henry earl of Weſtmoreland, Henry earl of Rutland, Francis earl of Huntingdon, Anthony viſcount Montague, William lord Howard of Effingham, lord high admiral of England, ſir Thomas Treſham, knt. prior of the hoſpital of St. John of Jeruſalem in England, Edward lord Clinton and Saye, Thomas lord Darcy of Chiche, ſir Henry Jernyngham, then maſter of the horſe, ſir Henry Bedingfield, knt. vice-chamberlain, ſir John Browne, knt. one of the principal ſecretaries of ſtate, ſir William Petre, knt. William Cordell, eſq. maſter of the Rolls, ſir John Man, knt. and others. And, being advanced to that honour, by other letters patent, bearing date March 21, next following, in conſideration of his great, acceptable, and daily ſervices, to the end he might be the better able to ſupport himſelf according to his degree and dignity, had a grant to him, and the heirs male of his body, of the reverſion of the great park in Loughborough, and all thoſe yearly rents, 33*s.*; 34*s.*; £22.; 48*s.* 8*d.*; £5. 19*s.* 2*d.*; £8. 3*s.* 4*d.*; 24*s.*; 21*s.*; 3*s.*; 6*s.*; and 2*s.* Likewiſe of all that lordſhip and manor of Loughborough, with the parks of Loughborough and Burley, and all the deer therein; as alſo the warren of conies, and advowſon of the church, which were part of the poſſeſſions of Henry duke of Suffolk, then attainted, to be held in capite by the ſervice of a fortieth part of a knight's fee, and the yearly rent of £115. 16*s.* 6*d.* payable at the Exchequer at the feaſts of the Annunciation of our Lady and St. Michael the Archangel, by even portions [3]. In 1558, he had a grant of a meſſuage and lands "infra villam Weſtmonaſterii [4]." On New-year's day 1561-2, he preſented to queen Elizabeth, in a red ſilk purſe, 13*l.* in French crowns; and received in return a gilt cup and cover; weighing 25¾ ounces. "He was a gentleman of many worthy parts; ſomething melancholy, and (as I have heard ſpoken) much delighted with cheſs play [5], a game well befitting his humour. He was ſo affectionate to queen Mary, from whom he had received all his honours, and who made him one of her executors, that ſhe departing this life, he alſo bad farewell to the world; and not willing to live any longer to the world, retired himſelf into an hoſpital [6], which himſelf had built at Stoke Pogeis; where with poor people (in ſervice to God and his melancholy thoughts) he ended his courſe in this life [7]," without any legitimate iſſue, March 5, 1572-3 [8]; and was buried in the handſome chapel belonging to that church; where his atchievements till of late did hang up at the upper end: but the only memorial of him now there is in the Eaſt window; his figure in armour and ſurcoat, kneeling at a deſk; the inſignia of the Garter hanging at his breaſt; on one ſide of his head, on a pendent ſhield, "E. H;" on the other, on a ſimilar ſhield, his creſt, a buffalo's head eraſed Sable, gorged with a ducal coronet, and armed Or; a mullet for difference. On his ſurcoat are theſe ſix quarterings twice repeated; but in the ſecond inſtance with variations and a ſeventh quartering: 1. Azure, three garbs Argent, a chief Or, Peverell; 2. Argent, three toads erect, Botreaux; 3. Argent, a maunch Sable, Haſtings; 4. Sable, two bars Argent, in chief three plates Argent, Hungerford; 5. Party per pale indented, Gules and Vert, a chevron Or, Heyteſbury; 6. Argent, two bars Gules, in chief three torteauxes, Moels:—1. Peverell; 2. Botreaux; 3. Haſtings; 4. Hungerford; 5. Barry of ſix, Ermine and Gules, Huſſey; 6. Argent, a griffin ſegreant Gules, Botreaux of Cornwall; 7. Or, three pales wavy Gules, Mauduit. See Plate LXXIX. In the ſame window are two headleſs figures of a male and female ſaint, the colours of which are ſtill remarkably brilliant.

On the South part of the church is a carved ſtone, one foot ten inches ſquare, with the arms of Haſtings, as engraved in Plate LXXVI. fig. 7.

Joan his wife, ſurviving him, had, in lieu of her dower of thoſe lands whereof he died ſeiſed, an aſſignation made unto her, 1573, of the park called Burley Park, parcel of the manor of Loughborough; as alſo of all thoſe grounds called Halliwell Haw, Butcher's Laund, Widon, and the Ediſh; likewiſe of the water-mill called The Upper Water-mill, ſituate by the bridge called Cotes Bridge, with the meadow ground, cloſes, &c. thereunto belonging; and of all thoſe paſtures called Aſhe cloſe, Aſhe cloſe meadow, Pinder's cloſe, Pinder's meadow, and all thoſe woods called Doniland coppice; likewiſe of the advowſon of the churches of Boſworth and Loughborough; and of all lands, tenements, &c. within the village or hamlet of Coton, within the pariſh of Boſworth, for her natural life. She obtained alſo from the queen the grant of an annuity of £6. 13*s.* 4*d.* during her life [9].

---

[1] Unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, P. pp. 303. 315.

[2] Pat. 4 & 5 Phil. & Mar. p. 3.

[3] 2 Pars Original. 4 & 5 Phil. & Mar. Rot. 22; & 5 Pars Original. ejuſdem anni, Rot. 3 & 34.

[4] 1 Pars Original. 5 & 6 Phil. & Mar. Rot. 80.

[5] "This game is much uſed in Barbary, in the kingdom of Feſſe and Morocco, as Leo reports, where, by reaſon of the exceeding heat, they are conſtrained to lie in vaults, cellars, and low ſhadowed rooms, and cannot go abroad; and in Ruſſia and Muſcovia (as Sigiſmund baron of Herberſteine writes), where, through the extremity of cold, they live above half the year in ſtouphes and hot-houſes; and alſo with martial men and ſoldiers, who live in camps, tents, and garriſons, where otherwiſe they have ſmall or no recreations; and is accounted by ſome to be tedious, for the long ſitting and meditating at it, ſome games holding the circuit of many hours. It is a very choleric game, as ſeignior Baldaſſer Caſtiglione, in his Cortigiano, lib. 2. fol. 88. ſhews, where he bringeth in one ſeignior Bernardo, telling a merry tale of an ape, that, being brought before the king of Portugal to play at cheſs with one of his courtiers, giving in a ſhort ſpace the mate unto him, was in a fury ſtrucken by the gentleman; and being challenged to play the ſecond time, having ſpied the opportunity of winning the game again, the ape (with his left hand) got the cuſhion from under the other's elbow, and clapped it on his head (to ſave him from the hurt of a blow), and with his right hand forthwith gave him check-mate. This cheſs play hath been of great antiquity in the Romans' time, as appeareth by Martial in his Apophoreta, Epig. 20.

"Inſidioſorum ſi ludis bella latronum, Gemmeus iſte tibi miles, & hoſtis erit."

Of this game have written Lucas Willielmus, in an Iſagoge of the ſame; and three Italians, Thomaſo Actio di givoco della Scacchia; Hieronymus Vidain, a little poem; but chiefly Gregorio Ducchi, in a fine poem, in manner of a Proſopopœia, of two great kings and their armies. Other games have been invented in imitation hereof, as Rithmoniachia or Ludus Pythagoreus, by Claudus Buxorius, Jacobus Faber Stapulenſis, and Henry Stephanus, 1514. Metromachia, or Ludus Geometricus, made by Dr. Fulke, a Cambridge man, printed at London, 1566." Burton.

[6] For a maſter (ſcil. a prieſt), four poor men, and two poor women, by the name of "The hoſpital of Stoke Pogeis, of the foundation of the lord Haſtings of Loughborough;" which, by act of parliament in 4 & 5 Phil. & Mar. was endowed with a rent of £53. 9*s.* iſſuing out of the manor of Michelcreche, in the county of Somerſet. Mr. Camden ſays, "Edwardus baro Haſtings de Loughborough prochotrophium, ejuſque è fratre nepos Henricus comes Huntingdoniæ perpulchras ædes hic poſuerunt." Britannia, p. 279.

[7] Burton.

[8] "Die Martis, 5° Martis, 1572, 15 Eliz. in nocte obiit Edw. Haſtings, dominus Loughborough, ſine prole."

[9] Mich. Req. 15 Eliz. Rot. 95.

To return to Francis the ſecond earl of Huntingdon. At the parliament holden at London, 3 Nov. 1529, he was ſummoned as a baron of the realm, by the title of lord Haſtings, his father being at that time created earl of Huntingdon. Oct. 3, 1530, he obtained from the prior and convent of Laund (being then ſtyled ſon and heir-general of George earl of Huntingdon) the office of ſteward to that monaſtery. In the ſame month he obtained the ſtewardſhip of the abbey of St. Mary at Coventry; and alſo (jointly with ſir Richard Sacheverell) that of the collegiate church of St. Mary in the Newark at Leiceſter.

In 1543, two days before the coronation of queen Anne Bullein, he was one of the knights of the Bath then made; and in 1546 was diſcharged of 39*s*. 10*d*. part of the fee-farm rent of £12. 18*s*. 5½*d*. paid for the hundred of Framland[1].

Feb. 20, 1546-7, at the coronation of king Edward VI, he carried St. Edward's ſtaff; and at the feaſt in Weſtminſter-hall, together with the earl of Oxford, held water unto the king, which he before had taſted.

In 1548, was paſſed "The accompt of the right honourable Francis earl of Huntingdon, adminiſtrator of all and ſingular the goods, catalls, &c. of, &c. George late earle of Huntingdon, deceaſed, &c. father of the ſayd Francis, &c. from the 14th day of February, anno MDXLIIII, &c. unto the 12th of December, anno MDXLVIII°.

The ſaid accomptant accompteth for the ſum̃e of £184. 11*s*. 8*d*. for the price and value of the ſtuffe of houſhold, napery, and other goods of the ſayd late erle, being at his houſe called Stoke, in the county of Middleſex[2], as appeareth by an inventory, &c.

And for the ſum̃e of £88. 8*s*. for the price and value of the ſtuffe of houſhold, &c. at his houſe called Aſhby de la Zouch, in the county of Leiceſter, &c.

And for the ſum̃e of £82. 3*s*. 6*d*. for the value of the apparell, plate, and other goods of the ſayd erle, being at his houſe in the citty of London, &c.

Sum̃e of the whole £355. 3*s*. 2*d*.

	£.	s.	d.
Payd by the ſaid accomptant to Stephen Kyrton, merchant-taylor —	136	13	4
Item, to Roger Thatcher, of London, potycary — — —	6	0	0
Item, to George Tudwey, of Windſore in the county of Berks, fyſhmonger	10	12	0
Item, to John Carleton, receyvor for the uſe of our ſaid ſovereign lord the king, for the fee-ferme of Chippenham and Burneham in the county of Bucks	7	10	0
Item, to Thomas Stacy, of Windſore, mercer, — — —	23	19	0
Item, to Mathew Gwyne, of Windſore, baker, — — —	68	13	5
Item, to Richard Fawcett, of Windſore, bocher — —	60	14	0
Item, to John Malt and John Stutt, executors of the teſtament of William Holt, late merchant-taylor, of London, deceaſed	8	13	4
Item, to Garard Copleman, of London, goldſmith — —	20	0	0
Item, to Elizabeth Snoddenham, of London, widdow — —	20	0	0
Item, to the right hon. Henry erle of Arundell, in part of a more ſum̃e, &c.	20	0	0
Item, to dame Anne Pargeter, of London, widdow, — —	10	0	0
Item, to Vyncent Mondy, executor of the teſtament of ſir John Mondy, knt. deceſſed	57	17	2
Item, to Richard Holt, of London, merchant-taylor — —	94	14	1
Item, to John Porte, of Etwall in the county of Derby, eſq. —	20	0	0
Item, to Thomas Marten, under-ſheriff of the county of Leiceſter, to the uſe of the king, for iſſues loſt in the Exchequer	16	16	8
Sum̃e — —	[3] £782	3	0

In a letter to the earl of Shrewſbury, dated Aſhby, Sept. 12, 1549, the earl of Huntingdon excuſes himſelf from going to his lordſhip, "to kill a ſtag or two;" upon a ſtir of divers confederators that had intended a rebellion within the counties of Leiceſter and Rutland; for which rebellion ſeveral in the county of Rutland had been condemned, and had ſuffered; and divers others were the next week to be arraigned at Leiceſter, before the earl of Huntingdon and the king's majeſty's juſtices of aſſize, according to his majeſty's laws[4]; and in another, Dec. 8, he deſires that certain perſons confined for ſmall offences in York Caſtle may be freed, and taken in the army[5].

His lordſhip was in this year elected knight of the Garter[6]; and obtained, jointly with Thomas Haſlewood, a grant of lands in Leiceſterſhire[7].

In 1550, he had a licence to retain 100 ſervants, gentlemen and yeomen, over and above thoſe of his family, or in any office or employment under him[7]; and was the ſame year ſent into France, with conſiderable forces, to diſlodge the French then planted betwixt Boulogne and Calais, both which places were then in the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh. In 1551, he was appointed lord-lieutenant of Derbyſhire and Rutland; and, deſerving highly for his many good ſervices, obtained, in conſideration thereof, a grant in fee-farm of the ſite of the capital manſion of the manor-houſe of Gracedieu, in the county of Leiceſter; as alſo the whole manor of Gracedieu, and grange called Myrrell Grange, the rectory and church of Belton, and advowſon of the vicarage, with a meadow and cloſe in the fields of Myrrell; likewiſe the rectory of the church of Caſtle Donington, and advowſon of the vicarage; with all meſſuages, mills, and lands, lying in the towns, fields, pariſhes, or hamlets of Gracedieu, Myrrell, Charnwood, Belton, Oſgathorpe, Thringeſton, Caſtle Donington Spittle, Caſtle Donington, Long Whatton, Diſeworth, Swanington, Overton-Sawſye, Loughborough, Hathern, Knightthorpe, and Shepſhede, in the county of Leiceſter; all which were then lately part of the poſſeſſions of John Beaumont, maſter of the Rolls, and valued at £158. 8*s*. 5*d*. per annum, and to be held in free ſocage of the manor of Greenwich, and paying yearly to the king, his heirs and aſſigns, at the Court of Augmentation, during the natural life of Joan then the wife of Richard Wakerley, £138. 8*s*. 5*d*. on the feaſts of St. Michael the Archangel and Annunciation of our Lady, by even portions; as alſo the ſaid Joan Wakerley £20. yearly, during her life, at the ſame feaſt; and from the death of her the ſaid Joan the whole ſum of £158. 5*s*. 8*d*. at the ſaid Court of Augmentation[7].

In 1552, he was one of the peers on the trial of Edward duke of Somerſet, and one of the privy council to king Edward VI. as may ſeem by certain letters ſent by the lords to queen Mary; and in 1553, obtained the three following general and ſpecial pardons:

"1. "Maria, &c. Sciatis quod nos, de gratiâ ñra ſpeciali, &c. pardonavimus, &c. Franciſco comiti Huntingdon, nuper de Aſheby de la Zouche, in com' Leic', alias d̃co Franciſco comiti Huntingdon, d̃no Haſtyngs, Hungerford, Botreaux, Molyns, et Moyles; alias d̃co Franciſco comiti Huntingdon, prænobilis ordinis Garterii, militi, &c. omnes & ſingulas proditiones, tam majores quam minores, ac crimina læſæ majeſtatis; necnon rebelliones, &c. Teſte, &c. quarto die Novembris, anno regni ñri primo."

2. "Maria, &c. Sciatis quod, &c. pardonavimus, &c. Franciſco comiti Huntingdon, &c. omnes et omnimodas proditiones, &c. Et ulterius mandamus, &c. quod hæc preſens noſtra pardonatio, &c. tam quoad ſententias et intentiones quam ad verba, benignè, favorabiliter, et gratioſè, ac in utilitatem et beneficium ipſius comitis exponantur, &c. et non ſtrictè vel aliter nec alio modo, &c. Teſte &c. octavo die Decembris."

3. "Exhibita eſt regiæ majeſtati in parliamento prædicto Billa quædam formam actûs in ſe continens.

---

[1] Mich. Rec. 37 Hen. VIII. Rot. 83.

[2] So in Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 41. b.

[3] So in Harl. MSS.; but the ſum is only 582*l*. 3*s*.

[4] Lodge's Illuſtrations, vol. I. p. 434.

[5] Unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, B. p. 121.

[6] In the eleventh ſtall of St. George's chapel (being the fifth on the Sovereign's ſide), on a braſs plate of arms, is inſcribed, "Du tres noble & puiſſant ſeigr Françoys conte de Huntingdon, ſeigneur Haſtinges du Hungerford, Butroys, & de Mollines, ch'l'r du tres noble ordre de la Jaritiere; & fuſt enſtallé le 3 an du regne du noſtre ſoverain ſeigneur Edward le VIme."

[7] 5 Pars Original. 3 Edw. VI. Rot. 3.

[8] 2 Pars Original. 5 Edw. VI. Rot. 84; & 4 Pars Original. 7 Edw. VI. Rot. 85.

"In moſt humble wiſe ſheweth unto your highneſſe, your faythfull and obedient ſubjects, Katherine counteſſe of Huntingdon, wife to Francis earle of Huntingdon, and Wenefride Haſtings, wife to ſir Thomas Haſtings, knt. daughters and heires to Henry Poole, knt. lord Mountagu: that where the ſayd Henry, &c. was by the courſe of the cōmon laws of this your realme of England attainted of high treaſon; and by reaſon thereof, your ſaid obedient ſubjects ſtand and are as perſons in their bloud corrupted; it may therefore pleaſe your highneſſe, of your moſt noble and abundant grace, that it may be, at the humble petition of your ſaid ſubjects, ordained, eſtabliſhed, and enacted by your highneſſe, with the aſſent of the lords ſpirituall and temporall, and of the cōmons of this preſent parliament aſſembled, &c.; that your ſaid ſubjects, Katherine and Wenefride, and their heires, may and ſhalbe, by authoritie of this act, reſtored and enbabled, only in bloud, as daughters and heires to the ſaid Henry late lord Mountague, &c.; and, &c. to hold and enjoy all and every ſuch honours, caſtles, manours, &c. lands, tenements, &c. which at any time ſhall, &c. deſcend or revert from any lineall or collaterall anceſtour of your ſaid ſubjects, Katherine and Wenefride; other then ſuch caſtles, mannors, &c. which were of the ſaid Henry late lord Mountague, their father. Quæ quidem billa intellecta, &c. ſic reſponſum eſt; Soit fait come il eſt deſiré."

In the ſame year, being lieutenant of Leiceſterſhire, on the inſurrection of Henry duke of Suffolk, he raiſed forces againſt him; and afterwards brought him priſoner to the Tower of London. On this ſubject the earl of Arundel, in a letter to the earl of Shrewſbury, about the end of January, 1553-4, ſays, "The duke of Suffolk is on Frydaye alſo ſtollen from his howſe at Shene, and roone away, with his two brethren, into Leſyſterſhire[1]; for he was mett at Stony Strattford. My lord of Huntington is goon into thoſſe parts after hym w^{t} . . . . ageynſt hym. The duke is ꝓclaymed trayter[2]."—Another letter to the earl of Shrewſbury, from Robert Swifte, April 12, 1554, adds, "The erll of Huntington, furnyſhed with 11^{c} horſemen with ſtaves and bowes, browght thowrow London upon Saterdaye at afternoon the dewke of Suffolke, and the lord Jhon his brother, and ſo conducted them to the Towre. The lord Thom̄s was taken goynge towards Walles, and is cuming up; and, notw^{t}ſtanding y^{t} y^{e} ſaid dewke and Wyott, w^{t} the moſte ꝑte of his captaynes, remaynes as yet in the Toure, yet ther is nyghtlye wache in the cowrte, on hernes, and day and nyght in London. This day my ladye Jane was behedede in the Towre; and the lorde Gylforde, her huſband, on the Tower-hill[3]."

On New-year's day 1553-4, the earl of Huntingdon preſented to king Edward VI. in a purſe of red ſilk, five whole ſovereigns and eight half ſovereigns, amounting to £10.; and received in return a gilt cup and cover, weighing 20 ounces.

In 1556-7, the earl preſented to queen Mary £15. in piſtolets, and his counteſs £10. in French crowns, in a red purſe. In return the earl had a gilt cup of 22¾ ounces, and the counteſs another of 18¼ ounces; and in May 1558, not long before the queen's death, he was a principal officer in the army at that time raiſed[4].

On New-year's day, 1558-9, the earl preſented to queen Elizabeth, in a red velvet purſe, £20. in half ſovereigns; and at the ſame time his counteſs gave £10. in gold; and the lord Haſtings of Loughborough, in a black velvet purſe, £18. 6*s*. in gold[5]. The earl received in return a gilt cup with a cover, of 19 ounces; the counteſs a gilt cruize, of 19½ ounces; and the lord Haſtings a gilt cup of 21 ounces.

On the 20th of April 1559, this very reſpectable nobleman thus declared his laſt will;

"In the name of the Father, &c. I Francis erle of Huntingdon, knight of the honourable order of the Garter, being in good helthe, &c. do, &c. ordayn my teſtament and laſt will, &c. My body to be buryed in the pariſh-church of Aſheby de la Zouche, in the county of Leiceſter, in the chapell of the South ſide of the chancell; and that a convenient monument and tombe be, &c. made there, over the place where I ſhall be buryed, with ſuch a remembrance of me, my wife and children, as ſhall be thought convenient by my executors, &c. And I the ſaid earle being and ſole ſeiſed of and in the lordſhipps, &c. of Barrow land Barrow-Baſſet, Bagworth, Thornton, Kirby, Braunſton, Kilby, Newton Harecourt, and Wyſtowe, in the ſaid county of Leiceſter; and of and in my part of the honour of Wynton; and of and in certain lands, &c. in Deſford, in the ſaid county of Leiceſter, ſomtime being one Curſon's lands; and of and in the hundred of Framland in the ſaid county; and of and in the honour, &c. and rape of Haſtings, &c. in the county of Suſſex; and of and in the mannours of North Cadbury, South Cadbury, Wotton Courtney, and Newton St. Loe, &c. in the county of Somerſet; and of and in the mannour of Leefield, and wardenſhip of the queen's majeſties foreſt of Leefeild, &c. in the county of Rutland; and of and in the mannour of Slyngſby in the county of Yorke; and the parſonages of Repingdon in the county of Derby, and Aſsheby de la Zouche in the county of Leiceſter; and of and in the mannour of Lee, &c. in the county of Wilts, &c. the rectory of Packington in the county of Leiceſter and Derby, &c.; my mannor of Aller and Aller Chantry, &c. in the county of Somerſet; and alſo of and in divers other manors, meſſuages, lands, &c. in the ſayd counties, or elſewhere, &c. out of my wife's jointure; and none of the honors, caſtles, mannors, &c. appointed for the full third part of all my honors, mannors, &c. limitted in this my teſtament, to deſcend, &c. to my heire, &c. according to the title, &c. of wardſhip, or premier ſeiſin, &c. Wherefore, &c. I the ſayd erle do, &c. deviſe, &c. to my executors, hereafter named, all and ſingular my ſayd honors, caſtles, mannors, &c. lands, &c. to, &c. to execute therewith the contents, &c. of this my laſt will and teſtament: ſaving, &c. ſuch, &c. as be in my wife's joynture; or which be lymited, &c. to come by deſcent to my heire, &c. to have hold, &c. for the only, &c. performance of this my will, &c. I will that my executors ſhall yerely pay, unto every one of my younger ſons, except my ſon George, immediately after my deceaſe, 20 marks to every one of them, at two times in the yeare, by even portions, until, &c. they be of the age of 15 yeres; and, &c. thenceforth, &c. 40 marks by the yere, &c. untill the age of 21 years. And, &c. to every one of my daughters, &c. except my daughter Clinton, &c. £20. yearly, &c. untill the full age of 18 yeres, if they be not marryed before that age; at which age, &c. I will, &c. that every of my ſaid daughters, except my ſaid daughter Clinton, ſhall have £1000. &c. towards her marriage, &c. To Edward my ſon, immediately after he be of the full age of 21 yeares, the mannour of South Cadbury, in the county of Somerſet, of the clere yearly value of £27.; and, &c. my mannor of Kirby, &c. in the county of Leiceſter, the advowſon of the church of South Cadbury aforeſaid, and my capital meſſuage, &c. in Kirby, and parke, &c. called Kirby Parke, &c. to, &c. hold, &c. to the ſaid Edward and his aſſigns, for the term of 80 yeares next enſuing his ſaid age of 21 yeres, &c.; provided that, &c. after the death of the ſayd Edward, and ſuch wife, &c. as he ſhall aſſigne the ſaid terme unto, &c. this preſent deviſe ſhall utterly ceaſe, &c. To Francis my fourth ſon, immediately after he be of the full age of 21 yeares, the mannours of Newton Harcourt, Wyſtowe, and Kilby, &c. of the clere yearly value of £41. to have, hold, &c. from his ſayd full age of 21 yeares, unto the end and terme of 80 yeares; provided, &c. that, after the death of the ſaid Francis, and ſuch wife as he ſhall aſſigne the ſaid terme unto, &c. this preſent deviſe ſhall utterly ceaſe, &c. To Walter, my fift ſon, to have, &c. after he be of the full age of 21 yeares, my ſaid mannors of Lee in the county of Wilts, and, &c. Braunſton in the county of Leiceſter, &c. of the clere yerely value of £41. to, &c. hold to the full end and terme of 80 yeares; provided, &c. that, after the death of the ſaid Walter, and ſuch wife as he ſhall aſſigne the ſaid terme unto, &c. this preſent deviſe ſhall utterly ceaſe, &c. And becauſe I the ſaid erle would every one of my ſayd younger ſons ſhould have, immediately from the time he ſhall be of the full age of 21 yeares, during his life, the yerely ſumme, &c. £60. clere rent, &c. accounting therein as part, &c. the ſeverall termes of the ſayd manors, &c. deviſed ſeverally unto them as aforeſaid: therefore I, &c. ordein, to every one of my ſaid younger ſons, after he be of the full age of 21 yeares, ſo much yearly rent, &c. iſſuing, &c. forth of all and ſingular my ſayd honours, mannors, &c. not being, &c. deviſed, &c. to, &c. any of my ſaid younger ſons, &c. beforeſaid, &c. to make to every of the ſame younger ſons, &c. the clere yerely, &c. value of £60. &c. allowing, &c. as part and portion of the ſaid £60. &c. the terme of yeares in this my will, &c. deviſed. And I, &c. ordeyn, &c. that if I fortune to have any more, &c. younger ſons, &c. that every ſuch younger ſon ſhall have towards his exhibition, &c. 20 marks by the yeare, till he be of the full age of 15 yeares; and thenceforth 40 marks yearly, untill he be full 21 years old, &c; and from his full age of 21 yeares, during his life, £60. of rent yerely, &c. out of my ſaid honors, mannors, &c. And becauſe, &c. my beloved wife the lady Katherine, &c. had lawfully aſſured for her jointure, &c. in the life of, &c. my father, &c. certain mannors, &c. to the clere yearly value of 1000 marks by yere, whereof the clere yerely value of £195. 15*s.* 6*d.* is ſold, &c. by my ſaid father and myſelf, with my ſaid wife's conſent, towards the payment of my ſaid father's debts; therefore I, &c. by theſe preſents ordeyn and deviſe to my ſayd wife, for terme of her life, without impeachment of any waſt, the mannor of Lubbeſthorpe, &c. in the county of Leiceſter, &c. in full recompence of her ſaid jointure aliened, &c. Alſo I will, &c. and leave to deſcend, &c. to ſuch perſon, &c. as God ſhall appoint to be my heire, &c. for the full third part of all my honors, caſtles, mannors, &c. that the quene's majeſtie, her heirs and ſucceſſors, may and ſhal be anſwered of, and have, according to her laws, &c. for and according to the title and intereſt of wardſhip of premier ſeiſin, &c. my mannours of Aſsheby de la Zouche and Evington, in the county of Leiceſter, &c.; the grange or farme called Alton Grange, &c. in the county of Leiceſter, &c.; my mannours of Stoke Pogeis, Eſtburnham, Fulmer, Eyton, New Wyndſore, &c. in the county of Buckingham, &c.; all that my moore or paſture, called Aller moore, &c. in the county of Somerſet; and the yearly rent of £20. by year, for and of my creation-money, paid by the ſhireeve of Huntingdon and Cambridgeſhires, &c.; and mannor of Lamley, &c. in the county of Nottingham, &c.; to the clere yerely value of £480. And I, &c. will, that if it happen the ſaid lady Katherine my wife, and my brother the lord Haſtings of Loughborow, or any of them, do die, &c. before this my will be executed, &c. that then the third part of the mannors, &c. that any of them ſo dying have of my inheritance, ſhall deſcend, &c. to my ſaid heire, &c.; and the other two parts to the performance of this my teſtament, &c. And for and upon the ſpeciall confidence, &c. I have in my ſon Henry the lord Haſtings, that he will have, &c. care that this my laſt will and teſtament be performed, &c. I will, that, immediately after my deceaſe, he ſhall have all and ſinguler my fee-farms at and about Enderby, Gracedieu, Belton, Oſgathorpe, Thringſtone, and Caſtle Donington, and elſewhere in the ſayd county of Leiceſter; and my houſe in London, &c. And alſo will and deſire my verie good lords, Thomas earle of Suſſex, and Edward lord Say and Clinton, high-admirall of England, and my derely-beloved brother ſir Edward Haſtings, knight of the honourable order of the Garter, lord Haſtings of Loughborough, &c. to be overſeers and ſupervisors of this my teſtament, &c. by which I do deviſe and give to every of them, &c. £40. &c. And I, &c. ordeyn, that all my houſhold ſervants, being in wages with me at my deceaſe, remayn in houſhold with my ſaid wife, at the coſts and chardges of my executors, one quarter of a yeare next after my deceaſe, &c.; and that every one of my ſaid houſhold ſervants, at my deceaſe in wages with me, have of my free gift, by my executors, one whole yeare's wages, &c. And I, &c. deviſe to my moſt derely-beloved wife, the lady Katherine counteſſe of Huntingdon, and my ſaid ſon Henry lord Haſtings, all my plate, and all my houſhold-ſtuffe, to be equally divided betwene them, &c. And I alſo deviſe, &c. to ſuch perſon as God ſhall appoint to be my heire, at my deceaſe, my collar of gold of the order of the Garter, and all my harneſſe, weapons, and artillery, &c. Dated the 20th of Aprill, in the ſecond yeare of the reign of our ſovereign lady Elizabeth, &c."—"Probat. apud London, coram Mathæo Cantuar' archiep̄o, . . . die Febr', anno MDLX°[1]."

---

[1] The duke, who left town on the 25th of January, with his two brothers, publiſhed declarations in many places, inviting the people to take up arms againſt the approaching Spaniards; but, finding it was to no purpoſe, he began to think of making his eſcape, when he heard that the earl of Huntingdon, with a body of horſe, was come from the queen to ſeize him. He had then about 50 men with him: he knew it would be in vain to make any reſiſtance with ſo ſmall a party, in a country that was not likely to aſſiſt him; therefore, diſtributing his money amongſt them, he feigned a flight; and, ſending away his brothers and the reſt, he committed his life to the ſole fidelity of one Underwood, whom he had made his ranger at Aſtley. This fellow promiſed to conceal him, till he ſhould have time to reſolve on ſomething for his ſafety: but, whether wrought upon by fear, or by the hopes of a reward, he delivered his maſter to Huntingdon, by whom, with a guard of 200 horſe, he was brought to London, and impriſoned in the Tower, on the 11th of February. Kennett's Complete Hiſtory of England, vol. II. p. 341.

[2] Lodge's Illuſtrations, vol. I. p. 189.—In the unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, preſerved in the library of the College of Arms (C. p. 15.) a letter from lord Wharton to the earl of Shrewſbury (Helaugh, Feb. 4, 1553), contains precautions for the apprehenſion of the duke of Suffolk and others in the North.

[3] Lodge, p. 190.

[4] Ibid. p. 199.

[5] Lord Haſtings's gift to queen Mary was in piſtolets; ſee p. 579; where it might have been mentioned (from Dyer's Reports, p. 208. b.) that on the 3d of May, 1560, a writ of aſſize was iſſued againſt ſir Edward Haſtings, knight, lord Haſtings, being at that time a peer of parliament; a pannel iſſuing from William Skeffington, eſq. ſheriff of the counties of Leiceſter and Warwick, which ſhould have proceeded from Thomas Lacey, eſq. the preceding ſheriff.

Departing this life upon the 20th of June next enſuing, he was buried at Aſhby de la Zouch, agreeably to the directions of his will. By Catharine Pole his lady, daughter of Henry lord Montacute, brother to Reginald Pole the Cardinal, he had Henry his heir and ſucceſſor, and many other children, "who agreed better in temper and affection, than in perſuaſion and principle[2]." The other ſons were, 2. George; 3. William; 4. Edward; 5. Francis; 6. Walter. The daughters; 1. Catharine, wife of Henry earl of Lincoln; 2. Frances, wife of Henry lord Compton; 3. Anne, who died unmarried; 4. Elizabeth, wife of Edward earl of Worceſter; 5. Mary, who was deſigned to be the wife of the lord Bulbeck, ſon and heir to John earl of Oxford, but died unmarried; touching whom, ſir Jerome Horſey, in his Obſervations of certain Tranſactions in Ruſſia, maketh this memorable relation; "that Juan Vaſſillivich, great duke and emperor of Ruſſia, having a deſire to marry an Engliſh lady, was told of the lady Mary Haſtings, daughter to the earl of Huntingdon; whom, being of the blood royal (they are ſir Jerome Horſey's words) he began to affect: whereupon, making his deſires known to Queen Elizabeth (who did well approve thereof), he ſent over Theodore Piſſemſkoie, a nobleman of great account, his ambaſſador; who, in the name of his maſter, offered great and advantageous terms to the Queen, in caſe the marriage took effect; and promiſed that the iſſue by this lady ſhould inherit. The ambaſſador thus arriving in England was magnificently entertained, and admitted audience. The Queen hereupon cauſed the lady to be attended with divers ladies and young noblemen, that ſo the ambaſſador might have a ſight of her, which was accompliſhed in York-houſe garden, near Charing Croſs, London. There was he (attended alſo with divers men of quality) brought before her; and, caſting down his countenance, fell proſtrate before her, and riſing back with his face ſtill towards her. The lady, with the reſt, admiring at his ſtrange ſalutation; he ſaid, by an interpreter, "it ſufficed him to behold the angelical preſence of her, whom he hoped ſhould be his maſter's ſpouſe and empreſs;" ſeeming raviſhed with her angelical countenance, ſtate, and beauty. She was after that by her friends in court called Empreſs of Moſcovia. But the Queen, as well as the young lady, underſtanding (according to the laws of thoſe countries) he might put away his wife when he pleaſed, took occaſion to put a ſtop to that overture."

---

[1] Harl. MSS. 3881. f. 49. a. b.

[2] Camden's Annals, in Kennett's Complete Hiſtory of England, vol. II. p. 385.

Catharine counteſs of Huntingdon ſurvived her huſband many years; and, being niece to cardinal Pole, was made his adminiſtratrix in 1569; and in 1571 ſhe obtained a new grant of lands in Hertfordſhire[1].

Henry the third earl was married, in 1553, at Durham-houſe in the Strand, to Catharine daughter of John Dudley duke of Northumberland; and in that year obtained from queen Mary a general pardon, by the name of Henry lord Haſtings. By that title he alſo obtained in 1557 a grant of the office of ſteward of the Prince's fee in Leiceſter; and in 1559 was ſummoned to parliament, in the life-time of his father.

In 1560, he obtained the office of maſter of the harthounds; and in the ſame year Francis earl of Huntingdon, confiding in the care and diſcretion of his ſon Henry, made him ſupervisor of all his manors and lands, with the power of granting leaſes.

Succeeding to his father's title, June 20, 1561, and being then 26 years old[2]; he next day petitioned the queen for livery of all his honours, caſtles, manors, &c.

On New-year's day, 1561-2, the earl of Huntingdon preſented to the queen, in a red ſilk purſe, £15. in angels; his counteſs, in a like purſe, £10. in demi-angels; and the counteſs dowager of Huntingdon, in a like purſe, £10. in ſemi ſovereigns. Inn return, the earl received a gilt cup with a cover, weighing 34¾ ounces; his counteſs a like cup, weighing 37 ounces; and the counteſs dowager another, weighing 18¾ ounces.

In 1562, he obtained a grant of lands in Leiceſterſhire and Warwickſhire[3]; and was in that year cited to ſhew by what title he held the manor of Wotton Court, in the county of Somerſet[4]. The ſame year (in conſideration of the ſum of £2625.) he purchaſed from Edward lord Haſtings of Loughborough, his uncle, the inheritance of the manor of Boſworth, with the advowſon of the parſonage when the turn of the ſaid Edward lord Haſtings ſhould ſerve; with proviſo, that, if the ſaid Edward, his heirs, executors, &c. ſhould pay unto him the ſaid Henry, at his manſion-houſe near Paul's Wharf, in the city of London, the ſum of £2625. on the 15th day of October then next coming, the ſaid bargain ſhould be void.

In the ſame year he received the following command:

"Elizabeth R. Right truſty and right welbeloved cowſen, we greet you well. Foraſmuch as a meeting and enterview betwixt us and our good ſiſter and coſyn the quene of Scotts hath bene of long time motioned, to be had ſome time this ſum̃er; which, as we are accorded, ſhall take effect about Bartholomewtyde next, eyther at our citty of Yorke, or ſome other convenient place on this ſide neere unto Trent. We, meaning to have you there, to attend upon us, as is meet for the degree and place which you hold, do will and require you to put yourſelf (our cowſen) your wife, and your trains in order to attend on you both, being ſo many in number as at the leaſt 26 of them may remain to attend upon you both about our court, and be ready to meet us on the way, near unto Trent, at ſuch place and day of the month of Auguſt next as ſhall be ſignified to you by our chamberlain, or ſome others of the councell, at the furtheſt before the midſt of July; forſeing that the array of yourſelfe, your wife and your traines, may be according to the beſt of your ſtates and degrees, and meeteſt for the honour and preſence of ſuch an enterview. Yeven under our ſignet, at our mannor of Grenewiche, the 16th of June, in the fourth yere of our reigne[5]."

In 1564, the earl was exonerated from the payment of a fee-farm rent for the demeſne lands of the late monaſtery of Gracedieu and its dependencies[6].

His ſuppoſed title to the Crown (by deſcent from the duke of Clarence) was much talked of about this period; and it appears that he was rendered uneaſy on that account, and received marks of diſpleaſure from the queen, whoſe extreme jealouſy about her ſucceſſion is well known. The following letter on this ſubject, from the earl of Huntingdon to his wife's brother, ſir Robert Dudley earl of Leiceſter, dated in April 1563[7], throws ſome light on Elizabeth's diſpoſition:

"My honourable good lord; I am ſorry that my preſent diſeaſe is ſuch as there are left me but theſe two remedyes; eyther to ſwallow up thoſe bitter pills lately receyved, or to make you a partner of my greiſes, thereby ſomething to eaſe a wounded heart. At my wive's laſt being at court to doe her duty as became her, it pleaſed her majeſty to give her a privy nippe eſpecially concerning myſelfe, whereby I perceive ſhe hath ſome jealous conceipt of me, and, as I can imagine, of late digeſted. How farr I have been alwayes from conceyting any greatnes of myſelfe; nay, how ready I have been alwayes to ſhunne applauſes, both by my continuall lowe ſaile and my carryage, I doe aſſure myſelfe, is beſt knowne to your lordſhip and the reſt of my neareſt friends; if not, myne owne conſcience ſhall beſt cleare me from any ſuch follye. Alas! what could I hope to effect in the greateſt hopes I might imagine to have in the obteyning the leaſt likelyhood of that height? Will a whole commonwealth deprive themſelves of ſoe many bleſſings preſently enjoyed, for a future hope uncertaine? inferiour to many others both in degree and any princely quality, fitt for a prince, for a prince both for excellent qualityes and rare vertues of nature, of great hopes of an ineſtimable bleſſing by her princely iſſue in reaſon of her youth[8]; for a poore ſubject, in years, and without any great hope of iſſue? Noe, noe; I cannot be perſwaded they would, if I ſhould be ſoe fooliſhly wicked to deſire it, or that my minde were ſoe ambitiouſly inclined. I hope her majeſty will be perſwaded of better thinges in me, and caſt this conceipt behinde her; and that a fooliſh booke[9], fooliſhly written, ſhall not be able to poſſeſs her princely inclinacion with ſoe badde a conceipt of her faithfull ſervant, who deſires not to lyve but to ſee her happye. What greife it hath congealed within my poore heart (but ever true), let your lordſhip judge; whoſe prince's favour was allwayes more deare unto me then all other worldly felicityes whatſoever. This I am bold to make knowne to your lordſhip; humbly deſiring the ſame, when you ſee your opportunity, to frame a new heart in her majeſty's princely breſt; whoſe power I know is not little in effecting of farr greater matters then this: for never ſhall there be a truer heart in any ſubject then I will carry to her majeſtie ſoe longe as I breathe. And ſoe I reſt, Your poore ſervant and brother, H. Huntingdon."

May 16, 1565, he purchaſed from Robert Brokeſby, eſq. of Sywoldby, for £360. the lordſhip of Shakerſton[10]; and in the ſame year was cited to ſhew by what title he held the manors of Penſford and Publowe in Somerſetſhire[1]; as he was in 1566 reſpecting the manor of Quorndon[2]; and in 1567 for the manors of Belton and Market Boſworth[3].

---

[1] 1 Pars Original. 13 Eliz. Rot. 10.

[2] In the Inquiſition at Hinckley, 3 Jan. 1561-2, after his father's death, he is ſtated to be "ætatis 23 annorum & amplius."

[3] Henrico Comiti Huntingdon, Humfrido Adderley, & J. Cholmeley, conceſſio comitatibus Warw' & Leic'." 2 Pars Original. 4 Eliz. Rot. 51.

[4] Hil. Rec. 4 Eliz. Rot. 165.

[5] Harl. MSS. 3881. f. 51. b.

[6] Paſch. Rec. 6 Eliz. Rot. 45.

[7] The compiler of the Harleian Catalogue C. N° 787. p. 22. whence this letter, which is only a copy, is taken) ſuggeſts a doubt reſpecting this date. The letter is printed, without any notice of that circumſtance, in Lord Hardwicke's Miſcellaneous State Papers; and thence copied in the Biographia Britannica, vol. V. p. 467, 2d edition. But, as the earl of Leiceſter had not his title till September 1564, there is probably a miſtake in copying the date of the year; and perhaps for "1563" ſhould be read "1565," or rather "1573;" and in the latter caſe "the ſilly book" might be the "Treatiſe of Treaſon," noticed hereafter, p. 585.

[8] At whatever period the letter was written, the queen was one year older than the earl of Huntingdon.

[9] Suppoſed to be, "De jure familiæ ducis Suffolciæ ad ſucceſſionem regni poſt mortem Elizabethæ;" for which the author, John Hales, clerk of the Hanaper, a learned and an active man, and a zealous Proteſtant, was impriſoned in the Fleet. The lord John Grey was alſo kept under confinement at the Court. Strype's Annals, vol. I. p. 411.—But ſee above, note 7.

[10] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 52.

Having obtained a grant from the Crown of divers houſes and lands lying within the town and pariſh of Aſhby de la Zouch (part whereof had been in antient times given to the maintenance of certain obits in the church of Aſhby); he, together with Edward lord Haſtings of Loughborough and others, by deed, dated Aug. 10, 1567, enfeoffed Anthony Kilby and others, for the perpetual maintenance of a ſchool-maſter, to teach the youth in good manners and learning, in a fitting place for that purpoſe to be aſſigned; which houſes and lands were found, on inquiſition, to be of £120. a year value; and are ſtill ſo employed.

In 1568, he purchaſed from John Haſtings, of Kynethorpe, co. Lincoln, for £10. his right in the manor, parſonage, and advowſon of Piddletown, co. Dorſet, being a leaſe for 900 years; and in 1569 purchaſed of John Euler of Raunſton, and Ralph Euler of Leiceſter, gentlemen, July 27, the manſion at Leiceſter called The Lord's Place[4]. The ſame year, on the death of Edward lord Haſtings of Loughborough, he had a grant from the queen in fee-farm of the reverſion of the manor of Loughborough, at the yearly rent of £115. 16*s*. 6*d*.; and had afterwards large grants in the counties of Southampton, Somerſet, York, &c.[5]

In the ſame year the following letter was addreſſed,

"To the right honourable my very good lord the earle of Huntingdon his good lordſhipp:

"My very good lord. After my hearty commendations. Whereas I have received the queene's majeſtie's letters by this bearer Mr. Skipwith, who (as I underſtand) brought her highneſſe letters to your lordſhipp and to my lord Hereford, contayning her majeſtie's pleaſure touching the queen of Scotts; I thought it neceſſary to deſire your good lordſhipp, that, for the better ſervice of her majeſtie, and accompliſhment of her pleaſure and commandment, ye will pleaſe to take the paynes to repaire ſpeedily hither unto me at Wingfeld, with my ſaid lord Hereford, to the end we may, upon conference, determine how to proceed beſt, according to our duties, as well for the ſafe keeping of the ſaid queene from any attempts, as alſo for her remove hence to ſome other place more convenient. And ſo I bid your good lordſhipp right heartily as well to fare as I wiſh to myſelſe. From Wingfeld, this 18th of September, 1569. Your good lordſhipp's aſſured frend, G. SHREWSBURY.

"By reaſon of my needfull attendance upon my chardges, and for want of helth, I am not able to meet you elſewhere, as my deſire is[6]."

This was followed by a regular appointment from queen Elizabeth to the earl of Huntingdon, dated Sept. 22, 1569, to guard the queen of Scots in the earl of Shrewſbury's houſe[7]; to which ſubject the following letter has relation:

"To the right honourable my very good lord the earle of Huntingdon, the queen's majeſtie's lieutenant of Leiceſter and Rutland ſhires.

"I thanke your good lordſhip moſt heartilie for the truſt which I finde you do repoſe in me. Whenſoever I ſhall not diſcharge it like an honeſt man, let me ſuffer the reproche worthy of ſuch a fault. Though it be ſo that ſome favour be, as it ſeemeth of common curteſie, ſhewed to the Scottiſh queen, in ſending and receiving letters in your preſence and my lord of Shrewſbury; yet, I promiſe you, I ſee not but the ſame opinion continueth here of her that was before, and as great regard had to all her doings; whereby no better affection is increaſed towards her for any thing I know; and yet the French embaſſador hath marvellous earneſtly ſollicited her enlargement, which hath not been ſo w[8] . . . . ged as he wiſhed. And yet peradventure that might move this favour that you ſee. Thoſe cyphred letters that you have, I wiſh known to her majeſtie, or at the leaſt the contents of them underſtood: for belike the matter in them is not common that is ſo covered. Surelie, my good lord, it is true that you ſay, the time doth awate every honeſt faythfull Chriſtian to be vigilant in theſe dangerous tempeſts. And though, as it appeares, there be many ill folke and many hollow freinds; yet I doubt not her majeſtie hath a greater number of faithfull, hable to correct the lewdneſs of the other. And I aſſure you, my lord, if there be either fayth or honour in men, I have greater cauſe daylie to like, more and more, the good and ſincere proceedings of (my lord) your brother, both in God's cauſe and the generall cauſe of the ſtate. Indeed, he pleaſeth to conferr ſometimes with me therein, and ſo farr as my ſimple capacitie will ſerve me, I neither do nor will omyt to adviſe and encourage him to perſevere conſtant in the ſervice of God, of our good miſtreſs, and this countrye; whereunto I finde him the leſſe perſwaſion needeth. And becauſe I know how neceſſary it is for the advancement of thoſe moſt neceſſary cauſes, that good intelligence and aſſured freindſhip ſhould be betwene you two, I was the rather bold heretofore to write to your lordſhip ſomewhat in that matter; which I have thought good now again to renew; praying you to give me leave to imploy myſelf therein, like as I have required him, whereof you both ſhall take commoditie, and ſpecially the common cauſe of this time, which is the only reſpect that moveth me. And touching myſelf, albeit I may, for lack of underſtanding, be deceived in ſome things, yet it ſhall never be ſeen that willingly I will be carryed from my duty towards God and my ſovereign: truſting that your lordſhipp will continew that opinion, untill proofe ſhall make you change it. And ſo, my good lord, for this time I leave to trouble you any farther. I pray God direct all your ways, and ſpecially in the ordring of your preſent chardge; from the which I ſee no hope of your delivery yetawhile, untill this Northern tempeſt be over, whereof we looke daylie to heare good news; and have this morning received ſome, of the rebells farther retyre Northwards, which ſheweth theire weakneſſe; and when I heare farther, your lordſhip ſhall be advertiſed. Vitelli, that came from the duke of Alva, toke his leave here on Sunday laſt, and ſo doth returne injectâ re. We have cauſe to be jelous of the duke's doings in Flanders, and therefore her majeſtie armeth further to the ſea. God preſerve you, and guide you with his holy ſpirit; and ſo I humbly take my leave. From Windſor, the 20th of December, 1569. Your good lordſhipp's aſſured to command, WA. MILDMAY."

In 1570, the earl of Huntingdon was one of the peers who ſat on the trial of the Scottiſh queen; and in the ſame year was inſtalled knight of the Garter[9], and appointed lord lieutenant of Leiceſterſhire and Rutland, and one of the lords of the council. On the 2d of Auguſt, 1572, he was appointed lord preſident of the North[10]; and on the firſt of March 1572-3, gave notice of a plot to ſteal away the queen of Scots[11].

In 1573, he ſat upon the trial of Thomas duke of Norfolk; and was again conſtituted lieutenant of the counties of Leiceſter and Rutland, as alſo of the counties of York, Northumberland, Cumberland, Weſtmorland, and the biſhoprick of Durham. In this year he obtained a grant in fee of the lordſhip and manor of Loughborough, with the parks of Loughborough and Burley, then in the crown by the death of Edward lord Haſtings of Loughborough without iſſue male; and granted unto lady Mary Haſtings, his ſiſter, an annuity of 100 marks per annum, during her life, iſſuing out of all thoſe tenements commonly known by the name of Loughborough Park, payable at the feaſts of the Annunciation of the bleſſed Virgin and St. Michael the Archangel.

---

[1] Hil. Rec. 7 Eliz. Rot. 90. [2] Mich. Rec. 8 Eliz. Rot. 82. [3] Mich. Rec. 9 Eliz. Rot. 131. 136. [4] See hereafter, p. 600.

[5] 2 Pars Original. 11 Eliz. Rot. 67. 1 Pars Original. 14 Eliz. Rot. 17. 2 Pars Original. 23 Eliz. Rot. 27. 3 Pars Original. 24 Eliz. Rot. 25. 2 Pars Original. 29 Eliz. Rot. 107. 1 Pars Original, 30 Eliz. Rot. 35. 2 Pars Original. 34 Eliz. Rot. 117.

[6] Harl. MSS. 3881. [7] Printed in Lodge's Illuſtrations, vol. II. p. 21. [8] Sic.

[9] In the eighth ſtall of St. George's chapel at Windſor (the fourth on the Prince's ſide) on a braſs plate of arms is inſcribed, "Du tres noble & puiſſant ſeigneur Henry conte de Huntingdon, ſeigneur Haſtings de Hungerford, Butroys, & de Mollines, ch'l'r du tres noble ordre de la Jarritiere; fuſt enſtallé le 19 jour de June, 1570."—Motto, "In Veritate Victoria."—29 coats; the ſupporters horned.

[10] Lodge's Illuſtrations, vol. II. p. 70. [11] Ibid. p. 97.

Several letters from the earl of Huntingdon, as preſident of the North, to the lord-treaſurer Burghley, in the year 1573, are preſerved in the Britiſh Muſeum[1]; about the muſters in the North, and the good diſpoſition of the Northern people; concerning the militia in Yorkſhire; clearing himſelf from the imputations of miſconduct in his preſidentſhip, thrown upon him; with his opinion of a traiterous libel, called "A Treatiſe of Treaſon," againſt the Treaſurer and Lord Keeper; about Tinmouth caſtle; an account of the Northern Rebellion; and concerning a circumſtance to be conſidered in demiſing the rebels lands.

In January 1573-4, he wrote to the earl of Shrewſbury on the ſubject of the Papiſts in the North[2]; and in May 1574, "inſtructions were given to Henry earl of Huntingdon, preſident of her highneſs's council in the North parts, and others appointed by her majeſtie to be of the ſaid councell, to be obſerved by them and every of them[3]."

In 1576, on the death of Edward lord Haſtings of Loughborough without iſſue male, the earl obtained a grant in fee of the lordſhip and manor of Loughborough, with the parks of Loughborough and Burley; and the ſame year granted to his ſiſter lady Mary Haſtings an annuity of £100. out of Loughborough park. His mother dying at Lubbeſthorpe, 26 September that year, he came to an agreement with the maſter of the wards, for a ſpecial livery of all his lordſhips and lands, of the yearly value of £513. 11*s*. 9*d*.

By a deed dated Oct. 11, 1576, for bettering the eſtate of the chaplains and poor of Wigſton's Hoſpital in the Town of Leiceſter, as alſo for the good and diligent inſtruction of the inhabitants of that Borough in the Chriſtian religion and other charitable uſes, he gave a yearly rent charge of £24. 13*s*. 4*d*. iſſuing out of a certain cloſe called Aſhe Cloſe, and a meadow thereto adjoining; and likewiſe another yearly rent charge of £24. iſſuing out of a cloſe called Pinder's Cloſe (all lying near the Borough of Leiceſter); to be paid at the feaſts of the Annunciation of our Lady and St. Michael the Archangel, by even portions; of which rents, by ſpecial direction, £30. per annum hath ever ſince been employed for the ſupport and maintenance of a lecture every Sunday afternoon and Wedneſday in the morning, in St. Martin's church in the ſaid Borough, to be preached by one of the chaplains of that hoſpital; £10. per annum to the chief ſchool-maſter of the free-ſchool at Leiceſter; £6. per annum for two exhibitions to poor ſcholars of that ſchool (the one to Oxford, the other to Cambridge); £4. per annum towards the ſupport of two poor ſcholars in the ſaid ſchool; and the reſidue to the poor of the ſaid hoſpital.

June 14, 1577, a licence was granted to Henry earl of Huntingdon, Anne counteſs of Pembroke, and Henry lord Compton, to alien the manor of Finchley in Middleſex to truſtees, for the uſe of the counteſs of Pembroke for life; remainder to Thomas ſecond ſon of lord Compton, and his heirs[4].

On New-year's day 1578-9, the earl of Huntingdon preſented to the queen, at her houſe at Hampton Court, £10. in gold; and his lady £8.; delivered to Mr. Sackford. They had each, in return, a gilt bowl and cover.

June 10, 1580, a letter was addreſſed, from the lords and others of the council, to the earl of Huntingdon, ſignifying that, many gentlemen and others in Lancaſhire being fallen away to the Popiſh religion, the queen had thought fit to ſend down an eccleſiaſtical commiſſion into the dioceſe of Cheſter, directed to the archbiſhop of York, the earls of Derby and Huntingdon, the biſhop of Cheſter, and others, to proceed againſt the ſaid parties; and willing the earls of Huntingdon and Derby, and the biſhop of Cheſter, to fix a place for their firſt meeting, and to give notice to the reſt of the commiſſioners to be there; wiſhing them to proceed more ſtrictly againſt the gentry than others, becauſe they had led the reſt to deſert; and to have a ſermon at each meeting[5].

A letter of his to the Lord Treaſurer occurs, Oct. 22, 1580, touching juriſdiction within the Biſhoprick of Durham, which it was endeavoured now to abridge the Council of; and thanking the Lord Treaſurer "for the good anſwer given to his brother Francis in a ſuit to her Majeſty[6]." In 1580 and 1581, letters paſſed between the earl of Huntingdon and Mr. Secretary Walſingham, concerning the wants of the army in the North, and the perturbed ſtate of Scotland; in one of which his lordſhip expreſſes his thanks, "that he is likely to have a larger allowance[7]."

The following letter, addreſſed to Dr. William Chaderton biſhop of Cheſter, will throw ſome light on the earl of Huntingdon's religious opinions:

"Salutem in Chriſto, &c. to youre good lordſhippe, whom I doe hartelie thanke for the letters you ſent me by this bearer Mr. Worſley. I wiſhe Lancaſhire, and all other counties, had manie ſuch gentlemen ſoe well affected. I ame glade youre lordſhip liketh to live in Mancheſter; for, as it is the beſt place in thoſe parts, ſoe doe you well to continue and ſtrengthen them; that they maie increaſe and goe forward in the ſervice of the Lord. And ſurelie, by the grace of God, the well plaintinge of the Goſpell in Mancheſter and the pariſhes nere to yt, ſhall, in time, effect much good in other places; yf in Mancheſter there were an howre ſpent everie morninge from ſix to ſeven, or from ſeven to eight, in prayer and a lecture. As brevis oratio, then as yt is ſaid, penetrare cœlos; ſo ſhorte leſſons often taught, yt ys like no doubte but the grace of God will pearſe manie hartes. The prair & lecture might beginne and end with the clocke. The worke is ſoe good, and for yt that place is ſo fit, as I ame bolde thus to put yow in mind of yt. God direct you, and keepe yow to himſelf ſafe. And ſoe, for this time, I take leave of yow. From London the vii of December, 1581. Youre lordſhipps in the Lord, H. HUNTINGDON[8]."

Mr. Camden, a modeſt hiſtorian, and contemporary with our earl, ſays, that he was of a mild diſpoſition; but, being a zealous Puritan, much waſted his eſtate by a laviſh ſupport of the hot-headed preachers[9]; and another judicious Hiſtorian thus accounts for his cheriſhing that ſort of people:

---

[1] Harl. MSS. 6991. 19. 28. 30. 31. 32. 36.

[2] Lodge's Illuſtrations, vol. II. p. 115.

[3] Ayſcough's Catalouge, 2442. 43.

[4] Pat. 19 Eliz. part 3.

[5] Peck's Deſiderata Curioſa, Book III. 9. In the ſame collection are ſeveral letters from the earl of Huntingdon to the biſhop of Cheſter (Dr. William Chaderton) from 1582 to 1584, relative to Jeſuits and Papiſts.

[6] Harl. MSS. 6992. 66.

[7] Harl. MSS. 6999. 49.

[8] Peck's Deſiderata Curioſa, Book III. 41.

[9] The following inſtance of this is ſtated by Mr. Carte, in his Hiſtory of England, vol. IV. p. 41. "Sir Edward Coke had ſcraped together an eſtate of £20,000. a year, much of it ill-gotten, not ſcrupling any means of enriching himſelf. A ſpecimen hereof appears in his acquiſition of Stoke Pogeis, and other adjoining manors, in Buckinghamſhire. Henry earl of Huntingdon (who died in December 1595) had borrowed large ſums of money of ſerjeant Braithwait: but a little before his death, upon conveying the manors of Chriſt Church and Ringwood in Hampſhire, to the creditors, the mortgages on all other parts of the earl's eſtate were diſcharged; only that on Stoke Pogeis was to continue for the ſecurity of £1500. intereſt money unpaid. As that eſtate was part of counteſs Catharine's jointure, and it was uncertain how long ſhe might live, a proviſion was made that his brother George, and his ſucceſſors in the earldom to the third generation, might, when the inheritance fell to them, pay off the £1500. without any additional charge of intereſt. Coke, being attorney-general, and concerned in Catharine's affairs, made an eaſy compoſition with Braithwait (who knew not when he ſhould receive his money) for an aſſignment of his mortgage, and then, by an agreement with the counteſs for her life, got the preſent poſſeſſion of her eſtate. Catharine lived till the middle of Augnſt 1620; and, had ſir John Davys lived, Henry (the grandſon of George) earl of Huntingdon, whoſe eldeſt ſon Ferdinando had married ſir John's only daughter, would, in all probability, have recovered it; but, ſir John dying juſt as he was made lord chief juſtice of England, no lawyer durſt plead againſt Coke, and the earl could never bring it to an hearing. There are, among the preſent earl's writings, ſeveral petitions preſented from time to time by Henry to the privy council, repreſentieg the caſe, and praying that he might be indulged the liberty of having his cauſe brought into the court of Requeſts, for its diſpatch: but all ſignified nothing; and the troubles of the nation, breaking out ſoon after, put an end to the litigation."

"The earl of Leiceſter and his faction in the Court had their ends apart; which was, to bring the imperial crown of this realm, by ſome means or other, into the family of the Dudleys. His father had before deſigned it, by marrying his ſon Guilford with the lady Jane, deſcended from the youngeſt ſiſter of king Henry VIII; and the projects to ſet it on the head of the earl of Huntingdon, who had married his ſiſter, and looked upon himſelf to be direct heir to George duke of Clarence. And, that they might not want a party of ſufficient ſtrength to advance their intereſt, they make themſelves the head of the Puritan party; the earl of Leiceſter in Court, and the earl of Huntingdon in the country: for him, therefore, he obtained of the queen the command of the North, under the title of the lord preſident of the council of York, to keep out the Scots; and for himſelf the conduct of the Engliſh armies in the Low Countries, to make ſure of all." How far this might be true, is now of no importance. But, if it were ſo, there could be no deſign to put this project into practice till the death of the queen, which neither of theſe great men lived to ſee. That the earl much diminiſhed his large patrimony (and probably on thoſe greedy blood-ſuckers the Puritans) is certain enough; as by the ſale of divers lordſhips and lands on eaſy pennyworths may in ſome ſort appear; the number of ſuch manors ſo ſold by him amounting to no leſs than 94, as by tradition is credibly aſſerted [1].

In 1582, being indebted to the queen £10,685. 19*s.* 9*d.* he engaged the manor of Lubbeſthorpe and other lands for that purpoſe; and in that year, he had conveyed the lordſhip of Aſhby to ſir James Harington, for which he obtained a pardon from the queen [2].

Under the immediate inſpection of this noble lord, the hiſtory of the family was compiled, in his caſtle at Aſhby; under the title of "Collectanea quædam ex chartis & evidentiis Henrici Comitis Huntindoniæ, tangentia familias de Haſtynges, Hungerford, Molyns, Moules, Peverell, Botreaux; è quibus omnibus aliiſque quàm-plurimis idem comes genus ſuum deducere cognoſcitur. Selecta in ædibus dicti Comitis, apud Aſhby la Zouche, in com. Leiceſtriæ, menſe Junii, 1583 [3]."

The two ſmall ſeals, Plate LXXVI, fig. 8, 9, are from a joint bond of Henry earl of Huntingdon and Francis Haſtings, eſq. dated 9 May, 1584, for payment of £600. to William Sugden, at his dwelling-houſe within the pariſh of St. Stephen in Weſtminſter.

Another letter to the biſhop of Cheſter ſhall be given:

"May good lord, The bearer can ſalute you. Litill tyme I have to writt a fewe lynes to yow at this tyme; yet may I nott omytt, both hartelie to thank your lordſhip for your laſt letters, and alſo for your great favor ſhewed to this honeſt godlie preacher and other his aſſociates and fellowe laborers in the Lord's harveſt; which ſuerly ſowndith to your greate creditt amongeſte all honeſt men, and is no doubte in the ſight of the Lord moſt acceptable. God proſper your lordſhip in that good courſe, and graunt that others of your country may tread the ſuer paths with yow. I aſſure you yt did not a litle rejoiſe mee to heare that of you, which the good viker did tell me. I do all that I can to gett good preachers planted in the markett townes of this country; in which ſomewhat is alreadie done; but much remayneth to be done. Wee hold opinion heare that the univerſities have not ſtore of preachers to ſend furth. But I ame not of that mynd altogether. Well; God increaſe the numbre. To whoſe mercyfull tuition I do comytt your lordſhip; and ſoe, for this tyme, hartely take my leave. At Yorke the 27th of June, 1584.

Your aſſured frend in . . . . H. HUNTYNGDON [4]."

In 1584, upon the foundation of Emmanuel College in Cambridge, by ſir Walter Mildmay, knt. then chancellor of the Exchequer, this earl, to advance the preaching of God's moſt holy word, and preferment of ſuch men to complete livings [5] in the miniſtry as for thoſe gifts of the ſame underſtanding and knowledge ſhould be found fit and able (as are the words of the deed), granted and confirmed unto the ſaid ſir Walter Mildmay and Francis Haſtings, eſq. (his own brother), and to their heirs, all thoſe his advowſons of the rectories and churches of North Cadbury and Aller, in the county of Somerſet; the rectories and churches of Loughborough and Thurcaſton, in the county of Leiceſter; as alſo his advowſon of the vicarage of Puddletown, alias Piddletown, in the county of Dorſet [6]; to the only uſe of him the ſaid earl during his natural life; and, after his deceaſe, to the uſe and behoof of the maſter, fellows, and ſcholars of the ſaid college, and their ſucceſſors for ever.

In 1588, the earl of Huntingdon renewed his correſpondence with the lord treaſurer, concerning the want of neceſſary furniture for war at Newcaſtle, and about raiſing and having of men in Yorkſhire, in expectation of the Spaniſh invaſion [7]; and in 1589 was ſent by the queen to Plymouth, April 7, to prevent the earl of Eſſex from going to Portugal [8].

On New-year's day, 1588-9, the earl of Huntingdon preſented to the queen £10. in gold; and the counteſs £10. In return, they had each a preſent of gilt plate. The earl had a grant in fee, Jan. 25, of the manor of Aſhby, with the three parks there, parcel of the manor; the land called Southwood; and all the paſtures and meadows that were parcel of the manors; with five mills (three water-mills, one horſe-mill, and a wind-mill); the rents of the freeholders and cuſtomary tenants, perquiſites of the court and leet, with the profits of the fairs and markets; the manor or grange of Alton, the manors of Packington, Knightthorpe, and Braunſton, the hundred of Framland, and the monaſtery of St. Mary in the Meadows near Leiceſter; with a rent of £20. out of the manor of Kirby; undertaking to pay to the queen, for 18 years, the annual ſum of £600. at the receipt of the Exchequer, in full ſatisfaction for debts due to the queen from John lord Lumley, for himſelf and Henry late earl of Arundel.

Feb. 18, 1589-90, he requeſted the earl of Shrewſbury that Mr. Cardinall's finding a man at arms for the county of Nottingham might be diſpenſed with, he being obliged to attend the council at York conſtantly. Another letter on money matters, occurs March 11; and a third, Oct. 4, 1590, on the diſturbances at Doncaſter, and requeſting that the charters and evidences of that town might be ſent to London [9].

On the death of the earl of Shrewſbury, he addreſſed a ſhort letter of condolance to his ſon; which has been ſelected from many on the ſame ſubject, as a ſpecimen of the ſtyle then uſed on ſuch occaſions:

"As I was ſorrye when I dyd have the fyrſte newes of your honorable fathyr his end, ſo, w^{t} others, I was gladde to knowe howe fytte a perſon God in mercye hathe apoynted to ſuccede hym. Your lordſhip hathe juſte cauſe to underſtand y^{t} to be ye Lorde's doynge; and therefore I have no dowbtte but you wyll ever remember to geave unto hym that wch ys dewe; then ſhall God and hys churche be honoryd and comfortyd, ye prynce and com̃onwelthe welle ſervyd and proffytyd by you, in ſuche ſorte as beſte agreeth w^{t} a man of your place and callynge, to your owne greate honour in earthe, and your everlaſting comforte in heaven, wch is ye marke we all ſhote at, and moſt myſerable ys he that at laſte myſſyth yt. In thys rude playne ſorte I am bolde hartelye to ſalute your lordſhip, this bearer by hys comynge to me offerynge] me ye occaſion; and ſo, reſtynge at your lordſhip's devotion, I comytte you to ye protection of ye Almyghtye. At London, the 11 of Jan. 1590.

---

[1] Harl. MSS. 4774. p. 130.

[2] 1 Pars Original. 25 Eliz. Rot. 115, 116.

[3] A very fair copy of this compilation is preſerved in the Britiſh Muſeum, Harl. MSS. 4774; and the curious documents on which it is grounded; are in two other MSS. 3881. and 4849.

[4] Peck's Deſiderata Curioſa, Book IV. 46.

[5] The unpubliſhed Talbot papers (G. p. 251.) contain a letter to him from the earl of Shrewſbury, in June 1584, refuſing to preſent Edward Clayton to the parſonage of Kiveley, becauſe, "the place being of ſufficient value to maintain a preacher," he means to preſent a perſon of learning, judgement, &c.

[6] This laſt benefaction, by ſome flaw in the deed, was loſt to the college.—The vicarage of Puddletown was held by Cardinal Pole from 1532 to 1535; and came, with the manor, into the poſſeſſion of the Huntingdon family by the marriage of Francis the ſecond earl with Catharine, daughter and coheireſs of Henry Pole viſcount Montacute.

[7] Harl. MSS. 6994. 66. 67.

[8] Lodge's Illuſtrations, vol. II. p. 385.

[9] Unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, I. pp. 43. 58. 98.

Your lordſhip's aſſured couſyn, H. HUNTYNDON[1]."

In 1592, he was conſtituted one and the chief of the commiſſioners in the county of Leiceſter, to enquire and examine what perſons were come from beyond ſea ſince Michaelmas 1588; or of any other perſon then reſident in that county or elſewhere, which, from their manner of life or otherwiſe, could be ſuppoſed to have come from beyond ſea in the quality of ſeminary prieſts, Jeſuits, or fugitives, and alſo to apprehend and examine them; and in caſe any one were found juſtly culpable, to commit him to priſon. A letter from the earl of Huntingdon to the earl of Shrewſbury, dated Stoke, Dec. 13, 1592, recommends a clergyman for the rectory of Drax; and ſtates that the news of the deaths of the king of Spain and duke of Parma was forged[2]. In the ſame year are ſeveral from his lordſhip to ſir John Puckering, lord keeper, relating principally to recuſants and ſeminary prieſts[3]; and to the cauſe of Mrs. Mary Holcrofte[4], in which the earl deſires that ſhe may have juſtice done her, though againſt himſelf[5]. The latter ſubject of Mrs. Holcrofte he again renews, in two letters to the lord keeper, in 1593[6]; in which year are ſeveral other letters from him on ſeminary prieſts[7].

A letter is preſerved from the earl of Huntingdon, lord lieutenant of all the Northern counties, to Thomas lord Scrope of Bolton, lord warden of the Weſtern Marches, Sept. 19, 1593, concerning the inconveniencies accruing to his wardenſhip from the Scots abroad, and bad ſubjects at home, with propoſal of ſuitable remedies[8].

In 1594, we find a letter to the earl of Shrewſbury, from York, July 20, with friendly advice concerning his diſpute with his brother; and another, Nov. 13, on the cauſe had between Wharton and the town of Beverley, and with profeſſions of eſteem[9].

From this time till within a few weeks of the earl's death, which happened at York, Dec. 14, 1595, are ſeveral other letters, between the lord treaſurer, lord keeper, and himſelf[10], on affairs of ſtate and on private grievances[11]. He died in his 61ſt year, without iſſue, and inteſtate; and was interred at Aſhby de la Zouch on the 28th of April next enſuing; the charges of his funeral (which was honourably ſolemnized by the Queen's command), amounting to £1392. 15*s.* 8*d.* as by theſe particulars is evident[12].

	£.	s.	d.
Blacks at York —	109	0	7
Blacks at Coventry —	273	12	4
Blacks at London —	109	0	8
Blacks at Leiceſter —	19	11	6
Allowance to the officers at arms	162	5	8
For hire of blacks, waſte and carriage thereof to and fro —	20	0	0
For embalming the corpſe —	28	4	1
The charges of his houſhold ſervants at York, and expences in conveying the body from York to Aſhby —	29	18	10
Houſhold expences for the diet and riding charges — —	333	11	0
Liveries to 60 poor men —	60	0	0
In alms to the poor of divers pariſhes	26	13	4
Laid out by the bailiff of Aſhby, as appeareth — —	71	0	9
More in my lord's riding charges in the burial of his brother —	10	0	0
For obtaining the adminiſtration	4	10	0
The ſheriff's charges and other of the jury, four times —	13	6	8
For exhibiting and engroſſing the inventories double —	4	0	0
For paſſing the account and expences of his ſervants in that time —	5	0	0
Expences of my lord's ſervants riding into the North and other places to get accounts — —	5	0	0
Charges about the vendition of my lord's goods in the county of Bucks	8	0	0

The two following letters were written on this occaſion from his lordſhip's brother and ſucceſſor:

"To Mr. Edward Stanhope:

"Sir,——&c. Now for my lord's entombing at York, good Mr. Stanhope, be not a meanes to procure it. My reaſons; my honourable father in his life-time took orders for a large vault to be made in Aſhby church for that purpoſe, and himſelf led the way: and my honourable brother in his life-time alway ſhewed the like deſire. Beſides, it hath pleaſed God to call my ſon away, upon the Wedneſday after his uncle's departure; a ſtrange precedent, and to me a diſcomfortable accident; ſo as, if he, in his life-time, in alteration of his minde, hath not left other order, yf I may, with her majeſtie's favour (as I deſire this) ſo will I performe it——&c. Yours in my love, Donington Parke, Dec. 23. GEORGE HUNTINGDON."

"To Mr. Humfrey Purefey.

"Good Mr. Purefey,——&c. For my ſweet boy, I find all your loves and care of his good to be ſuch, as, without ſpecial direction from my honourable good ſiſter (by whom as well in that as in any other private cauſe I reſt to be directed), I purpoſe he ſhall be yet at your diſpoſitions. For the intombing of my ſon at Yorke, as I have written to Mr. Stanhope and the reſt; ſo I heartily pray you ſurceaſe that requeſt. I doubt not but you will allow of ſome reaſons I have to the contrary. Firſt, my honourable father, by his life cauſed a fayre and large place to be builded in Aſheby church; a thing, as I thinke, known to yourſelf; where his body lyeth, accompanied with my honourable mother's. I have heard my lord (my deare brother) when he lived, ſay that he hoped, whereſoever he ſhould end his life, his friends would cauſe him to be brought thither, there to be layd with his anceſtors; which, for my own part, if it may ſo ſtand with her majeſtie's gracious favour, I wiſh may be performed; where (God willing) my poore ſon ſhall wayt on him to the grave——&c. Yours, &c.

GEORGE HUNTINGDON[13]."

"The accompt of the right honourable George earle of Huntingdon, adminiſtrator of all and ſingular the goods, &c. of the right honourable Henry late earle of Huntingdon, deceaſed, &c.; alſo of all ſuch payments, &c. which he hath, &c. diſburſed by virtue of the ſaid adminiſtration[14].

Inprimis, the ſaid earl hath in his hands all the goods of the ſaid late deceaſed earl, mentioned in an inventory exhibited into this court, amounting in the whole to the ſum of —	908	4	3
Item, that there were divers goods, &c. in the province of York, to the value of	532	18	9
The total, — —	1541	3	0
Whereof the ſaid earl hath laid out, and craveth allowance, as followeth:
Inprimis, for the funeral of the ſaid earle, &c. (as before, p. 658.)
The ſum total of the diſburſements is	1392	15	8
So that there remaineth in his lordſhip's hands the ſum of —	148	7	4

---

[1] Lodge's Illuſtrations, vol. III. p. 25.

[2] Unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, I. p. 157.

[3] Harl. MSS. 6995. 76. 94.

[4] Who ſtated, that the earl's ſiſter, lady Mary Haſtings, had left her a large legacy, though ſhe had turned her out of her ſervice. Her humble petition to the lord keeper, April 8, 1594, is in Harl. MSS. 6991. 49.

[5] Harl. MSS. 6999. 105. This letter is dated from Stoke, Nov. 18, 1592.

[6] Harl. MSS. 9996. 11. 39.

[7] Ibid. 19. 34. 35. 37. 40; and tranſcribed by Mr. T. Baker, in 7042. p. 141.

[8] Harl. MSS. 851. 1.

[9] Unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, I. pp. 202. 207.

[10] Two of theſe (6997. 6. 71.) relate to the marriage portion of his friend ſir Walter Raleigh's wife, who was ſiſter to Mr. Arthur Throckmorton.

[11] Harl. MSS. 6996. 38. 57; 6997. 3. 31. 63; and Ayſcough's Catalogue of MSS. 4160. 104.

[12] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 56.

[13] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 69.

[14] Ibid. p. 59.

On the 9th of January, 1595-6, a letter was addreſſed to the lord keeper, from Humfrey Purefey and Edward Stanhope, with thanks for “his care of ſo good a lady as the counteſs of Huntingdon, the widow of ſo worthy a noble gentleman, who lived and died moſt careful of God's, her majeſty's, and his country's ſervices;” and praying his lordſhip to be a mean to her highneſs for furniſhing another preſident and lieutenant[1]. The counteſs, who had a ſeparate grant of lands in Hertfordſhire in her huſband's life-time, obtained, after his death, another grant of lands, in 1603, in the counties of Leiceſter, Somerſet, and Dorſet[2]. She died Aug. 4, 1620, and was buried the 14th, at Chelſea; where, cloſe to the magnificent monument of her mother the ducheſs of Northumberland[3], under the canopy, ſtands an altar-tomb, the top of which is inlaid with a ſmall ſlab of white marble to the memory of “Catharine, relićt of Henry earl of Huntingdon.”

Among the MSS. of Mr. Carte, preſerved in the Bodleian Library, it is noticed that “Henry earl of Huntingdon, who died in 1595; ſir George Haſtings his brother, who ſucceeded him, and died in 1604; and ſir Francis Haſtings, another brother; were all three perſons of great fame and renown, as many of that moſt antient and honourable family have been. They left many manuſcripts concerning queen Elizabeth's reign, as I have heard ſome antient perſons of great quality and credit affirm who have ſeen them[4].”

Of Francis Haſtings, eſq. high-ſheriff of the counties of Leiceſter and Warwick in 1572, Dr. Fuller ſays, “I believe him the ſame perſon with ſir Francis Haſtings, fourth ſon to Francis, ſecond earl of Huntingdon of that ſurname, to whoſe many children Mr. Camden[5] giveth this commendation, that “they agreed together in brotherly love, though not in religion;” ſome Proteſtants, other Papiſts, all zealous in their perſuaſions. Our ſir Francis wrote a learned book in the defence of our Religion (rather carped at than confuted by Parſons in his “Three Converſions”); and was an eminent benefactor to Emmanuel College. But, if I be miſtaken in the man, and theſe peradventure different perſons, the reader will excuſe me for taking occaſion by this his nameſake and near kinſman of entering here the memorial of ſo worthy a gentleman[6].”

“This learned knight wrote that judicious treatiſe, called ‘A Watch-word to all religious and true-hearted Engliſhmen[7], 1598,’ 8vo; which drew him into a controverſy with N. Doleman, alias Robert Parſons, who, in revenge, in his ‘Ward-word,’ printed 1599, calls him, very unworthily, ‘the meaneſt beagle of the houſe of Huntingdon[8].’ He was educated in Magdalen college, Oxford, under Dr. Lawrence Humphrey; from whoſe inſtructions he imbibed thoſe opinions which formed him a very ſevere Puritan and Predeſtinarian. He received the honour of knighthood from queen Elizabeth; was choſen knight for the county of Leiceſter, together with his brother ſir George Haſtings, in 1588. He was alſo of divers other parliaments[9] both in that and the ſucceeding reign; and was a frequent ſpeaker in debates, and very violent againſt the Roman Catholics; but afterwards cooled, and joined ſir Richard Knightley of Northamptonſhire in preſenting a petition for their toleration; on which obſervers remarked, that the Puritan could join the Papiſt againſt the Church of England. He was a gentleman of learning, eſpecially in controverſy between the churches of England and Rome; and his printed works declare it[10]. Though this county gave him birth, he lived moſtly, after he was married, at North Cadbury in Somerſetſhire, for which county he acted in the commiſſion of the peace. Death put an end to all his controverſial engagements in September 1610; and he was buried in the chancel of North Cadbury church the 22d of that month, near the body of his lady (Maud, daughter of ſir Ralph Langford, and widow of ſir George Vernon); who died in 1596; to whoſe memory he erected, on the North ſide of the chancel, a large tomb, covered with Gothic ornaments, carving, and cherubs holding the family arms (now defaced).”

On this tomb is his effigies in armour, and his lady by his ſide; and on the wall over it, on a braſs plate,

“The epitaph of that worthy religious lady the Ladye Magdalen Haſtings, wife to Francis Haſtings, knight; who departed this vaine and tranſitory life 14th of June, 1596; and continued a conſtant profeſſor of God, his holye Truth and Goſpell, to her life's end.

“This Ladie's bed, that heare you ſee thus made,
Hath to itſelf received her ſweete gueſt:
Her life is ſpent, which doth like flower fade,
Freede from all ſtorms; and heere ſhe lies at reſt,
Till ſoul and body joined are in one.
Then farewell, grave! from hence ſhe muſt be gone.

This Lady was well borne and eke well bred;
Her virgin's time ſhe ſpent with worthy praiſe;
When choiſe of friends brought her to marriage-bed,
With juſt renowne ſhe paſſed thoſe her daies;
And, though her youth were tyde to age farr ſpent,
Yet without ſpot ſhe liv'd, and was content.

Her ſecond match ſhee made by her own choice,
Pleaſing herſelfe, who others pleas'd before;
Her ears ſhe ſtopp'd from all diſſwaders' voice,
Who did her tender wealth and goods great ſtore;
With honour greate which bothe ſhe did refuſe,
And one of meaner ſtate herſelf did chuſe.

With this her choice full twenty yeares and nine
She did remain, with joy and comfort greate.
He liveth not that ever went between
Theſe twoe, to move a peace, or to intreate:
God made the matche, and God the knot hee tyde,
Who in his feare did both their heartes ſtill guide.

This feare of God was grafte in her by grace,
And her whole tymé ſhee ſpent in this true feare;
God's Goſpell pure with harte ſhe did embrace,
The fruits whereof to all men did appear;
To huſband true, to kindred ſhe was kinde,
And to all friends did beare a lovinge minde.

The preachers ſhe did uſe with great regarde,
Which ſhew'd her love unto this Goſpell pure;
Where want there was, ſhee preſt was to rewarde,
And by her will no ſuch ſhould want endure;
Unto the truth ſuch was her zeal moſt rare,
As to helpe ſuch ſhee from herſelfe would ſpare.

The poore ſhe willing was ſtill to relieve
With heart and hand, not ſeeking worldlie praiſe;
For, few or none ſhould know what ſhe did give,
This courſe to keep ſhee careful was alwaies:
Both rich and poore they taſted of her love;
More ready ſhe to give than they to move.

If any one of theſe her helpe did neede,
By being ſicke or ſore of any ſorte,
Let them but ſend, they were moſt ſure to ſpeede
Of what ſhee had that might them yield comforte;
And yeare by yeare ſhe ſought ſuch thinges to make,
To ſerve ſuch turns as might be fitt to take.

---

[1] Harl. MSS. 6997. 85.

[2] 2 Pars Original. 45 Eliz. Rot. 101.

[3] See ſome curious extracts from the ducheſs's will, in Mr. Lyſons's “Environs of London,” vol. II. p. 101. She gave “to her daughter Catharine Haſtings a gown of purple velvet, a ſummer gown, and a kirtle of new purple velvet to it, and ſleeves.”

[4] Carte's MSS. in the Bodleian Library, MMMM. N° 155.

[5] See before, p. 582.

[6] Worthies, Leiceſterſhire, p. 142.

[7] “The “Watch-word” was publiſhed in 1598, 8vo; and, being anſwered by Parſons, in “A temperate Ward-word to the turbulent and ſeditious Watch-word of ſir Francis Haſtings, knight; who endeavoureth to ſlander the whole Catholique Cauſe, and all profeſſors thereof, both at home and abrode, 1599,” 4to; was followed by “An Apology or Defence of the Watch-word, againſt the violent and ſeditious Ward-word, publiſhed by an Engliſh Spaniard, lurking under the title of N. D.; London, 1600,” 4to. Sir Francis wrote alſo “The Waſt-word, 1601,” 8vo; which Parſons anſwered by “The Warn-word, 1602.” He was the author of “Meditations,” which paſſed through ſeveral editions; and ſeveral of his Speeches in Parliament are printed in “H. Townſhend's Collections.” He left alſo a MS “Remonſtrance to his Majeſty and Privy Council, on the Behalf of perſecuted Proteſtants; ſetting forth his Majeſty's Intereſt lying ſafely in protecting them, and encouraging the preaching of the Goſpel, and in being more watchful againſt the Papiſts;” and “A Diſcourſe of Predeſtination,” which he alſo left unprinted. See Wood, Athen. Oxon. vol. I. p. 363; and for ſome account of Parſons, ſee ibid. p. 355.

[8] Gaſcoigne's MS Notes on Burton, in Jeſus College Library, Cambridge, p. 21.

[9] 13 Eliz. for Leiceſterſhire; 27, 28, ditto; 31, for Somerſetſhire; 35, for Leiceſterſhire and Somerſetſhire; 39, for Leiceſterſhire; 43, for ditto and Bridgewater; 1 Jac. I. for Somerſetſhire; 12, ditto. Willis, Notit. Parl.

[10] Athen. Oxon. vol. I. fol. 311.

In government of thoſe that did her ſerve
  Moſt wiſe, moſt ſtout, moſt kind, ſhee ever was;
Moſt kind to ſuch as ſought well to deſerve,
  Moſt ſtout to thoſe who did negle&#x0063;t their place,
    She wiſely could correct the fault of theſe,
    And thoſe incourage that would ſeek to pleaſe.

Theſe guiftes of grace from God ſhee did receive,
  And ſhee in theſe her life did wholly ſpende;
When ſickneſs came that did her health bereave,
  On God's good will ſhee whollie did depende;
    And then his grace did worke in her with might,
    For Him to pleaſe it was her whole delight.

She did not grudge or murmur at her paine,
  Though paines were greate, and laſted very long,
She reſted on her hope of future gaines,
  Than heart could thinke or could be tould with tongue;
    Comfortes ſhe ſought, becauſe her fleſh was frail,
    By preachers ſounde which never did her faile.

When that her ſickneſs did her ſoe reſtraine,
  As that her houſe ſhe forced was to keepe,
Shee did intreate three preachers to take paine
  Her to inſtructe, and ſtay from dangers deepe;
    And this they did by turns one weeke beſtowe,
    In love moſt ſound, till ſhee too weake did growe.

When pangs grew great, ſhe found but little reſt;
  Yet faith was ſtrong in God her Father deare;
And from this faith ſhee found it alwaies beſt
  To praiſe her God, and praie to him in fear;
    And to this end the preachers ſhee would call
    To come to her, who fail'd her not at all.

In all her dangers ſhee did never faile
  From day to day to crave their help in this;
For them to ſeeke it did not much availe,
  For them to call ſhee did but ſeldom miſs;
    Thriſe many times, and moſt times twiſe a day,
    That ſhe with them and they with her might pray.

Theſe weare the fruits of one that learned had
  To ſerve her God in ſickneſs health and all;
In health to feare, in ſickneſs to be gladd,
  Though fleſh be fraile, and find itſelfe in thralle.
    This fruite came not from father Adam's tree:
    Our Second Adam taught her ſuch to bee.

This then ſhee was, and was unto the ende;
  This did ſhee ſhew, many can witneſs this;
This to be true none neede doubt to defende,
  Wee reſt in woe, and ſhe is gone to bliſs;
    Where God this Ladie in his armes doth take,
    And crowne with glorie for Chriſt Jeſus' ſake.

VIVIT POST FUNERA VIRTUS."

A blank was left on the tomb for the name of ſir Francis; which has never been inſerted.

brothers

Sir George Haſtings (who on his ~~father~~'s death became the fourth earl of Huntingdon) married in July 1557 Dorothy, ſecond daughter and one of the coheirs of ſir John Port, of Etwall, co. Derby; after which he ſettled at Gopſal. He was returned to parliament for the county of Derby in 1562; knighted in 1566; and in 1568 reſided at Loughborough.

In 1571, he was high-ſheriff for Leiceſterſhire; in 1573, ~~one of the commiſſioners~~ for arming and arraying all perſons in that county between the ages of 16 and 60, as well horſe as foot, for the queen's ſervice; in 1586, was elected into parliament for the county of Leiceſter; and in 1590 purchaſed, from Thomas Butler and Walter Coppinger, of London, gentlemen, a tenement at Loughborough, called The Great Houſe, with all ſuch lands, in the counties of Leiceſter and Nottingham, as had belonged to the guild called Jeſus and St. George Guild, in Loughborough, or to the maintenance of any chantry prieſt, chaplain, or clerk, or other ſuperſtitious uſe, in the church of Loughborough.

In 1595, he purchaſed, from Robert earl of Eſſex, Gellye Merrick, and Henry Lindley, eſqrs. the park of Donington, otherwiſe Caſtle Donington, parcel of the dutchy of Lancaſter, with all the herbage, pannage, and agiſtments thereof (which herbage and pannage, excepting ſufficient pannage for the deer, had been demiſed to the ſaid ſir George, Oct. 25, 1590, for 41 years, at a yearly rent of £5. 2*s*.); as alſo of the keeperſhip thereof, with the lodges, wages, and fees actually due and payable, for the term of 43 years; by which bargain and ſale he had full liberty to diſpark it; but was to pay the ſaid rent of £5. 2*s*. during the remainder of the term of 41 years, to the receiver-general of the dutchy of Lancaſter, and afterwards the rent of £10. 13*s*. of current Engliſh money, by half-yearly payments.

In 1594 (having then ſucceeded to the title of earl of Huntingdon) he was appointed lord lieutenant of the counties of Leiceſter and Rutland; and a letter to him from the earl of Eſſex, Feb. 10, 1596-7[1], is preſerved in the Britiſh Muſeum.

In 1597, an order was made by the corporation of Leiceſter, againſt diſcloſing a ſecret letter from the earl of Huntingdon about removing Thomas Jeſſon, head-maſter of the ſchool[2].

In 1598, as lord-lieutenant of the county, he addreſſed the following letter:

"To my loveing Mr. Mayor of Leiceſter.

"Mr. Mayor; Foraſmuch as I have received letters from the lords of her Majeſtie's moſt honourable privy conſell, for the preſent ſupplying and putting in readineſs her Majeſtie's forces heretofore levied within this her Majeſtie's county of Leiceſter: and whereas in the former orders and proportions, taken in my late honourable brother's time, for the 500 trained ſoldiers in this county levied, the town of Leiceſter was then charged with the furniſhing of forty men, with twelve calivers, four muſkets, eleven bows and arrows, eight carſlets and pikes, and five bills; now their lordſhips' pleaſures are, that all the bows and arrows and bills generally muſt be refuſed, and ſupplyed with muſkets; ſo that then your proportion is twelve calivers, twenty muſkets, and eight carſlets with pikes. All which I require you, and in her Majeſtie's name charge and command you, forthwith to have in good readineſs; and withall to ſelect and make choiſe of the forty men to be very ſufficient and able men, and like to be reſiant, and no ſtarters or ſhifting perſons; and preſently to ſee them armed accordingly, that I may have them ready at an hour's warning to take the view of them myſelf; and ſo to deliver them over to ſuch as I ſhall appoint for the arayneing and ordering of them. And hereof I pray you not to fail. Given at my manor of Aſhby de la Zouch, this 29th day of Aprill, 1598.

Your loving friend, GEORGE HUNTINGDON."

In 1599, the earl of Huntingdon obtained a grant of certain lands in Leiceſterſhire; and on the following New-year's day he preſented to the queen £10. in gold; and the counteſs of Huntingdon widow, and the counteſs junior, gave each £8. The earl, in return, had 20 ounces of gilt plate; the dowager 29¼ ounces, and the young counteſs 19¼ ounces.

Jan. 15, 1599-1600, he was directed by a letter from the queen to levy 50 able men, to be ſent to Ireland; and in 1601 had a like order for 50 more, and for 25 from Rutland; and for collecting £3. 10*s*. a man, to arm and apparel them.

A letter is preſerved, from George Belgrave, eſq. dated July 29, 1602, to the earl of Shrewſbury, excuſing himſelf for not having made his public ſubmiſſion to the earl of Huntingdon, becauſe he durſt not appear publicly at the aſſizes for fear of being arreſted; and requeſting, therefore, that the ſentence of the ſtar-chamber for his contempt might be ſuſpended[3]. Mr. Belgrave was knighted July 23, 1603.

On the death of the queen, in March 1602-3, he received an order from the lords of the council to proclaim king James; by whom, on the 19th of April 1603, he was appointed lord-lieutenant of the counties of Leiceſter and Rutland; and ſhortly after, when queen Anne, the royal conſort of king James, with their ſon prince Henry, were on the road from York to London, the following letter was addreſſed to the earl of Shrewſbury:

"Right Honourable; Preſuminge that your lordſhip will beare with my bowldneſs whearin my intent is honeſt; This daye ſir William Skipwith and myſelfe mett att my honourable lord of Huntingdon's att dinner. After that ſir William was gonne, his lordſhip talked with me in pryvat, and ſeemed to be very deſyrous to have the quien to come to his howſe; and ſpake yt to that end as I didd verry well parſeyve y^{t} yt might come to your eares; and further willed me to uſe my witts in this matter, ſo as y^{t} your lordſhip might alſo know y^{t} yf you pleaſed to be a meanes to effect yt, he would take yt as a great kyndnes proſedinge from yourſelfe. He would not be a mediator of this himſelfe (I pſeyved by him) becauſe pſons of his place would not wyllingly reſſeyve a denyall in ſo indyfferent a cawſe. Yf your honour thynke yt will be donne to his lordſhip's content, though yt be uppon this ſoddeyn, he wyll be well provyded according to the time this bearer ſhall ſpidily retowrn to bringe anſwer. The wey from Wooleatton, I dare aſſure your lordſhip, will be eaſie and fayr, and is juſt tenn myles. So, with my hartie preyer to Allmyghty God to bleſs your lordſhip with all honour as my hart deſyreth, I moſt humbly take my leave. Your honour's moſt bounden duringe lyffe, ROBERT BAINBRIGG.

---

[1] Ayſcough's Catalogue, 4117. 79.

[2] Corporation Records.

[3] Unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, M. p. 65.

Calke, this 13th day of June, 1603.

"As I was wrytinge, my lorde writte me a very earneſt letter, which att my attendinge uppon your honour I will ſhewe you. This accompliſhed will breed a continewall love betwixt your howſes for ever. Your lordſhip's geſt, Mr. Rowe of Leiceſter, is newly dead, but not of any contagious ſicknes.

"To the right hon^{ble} my approved good lord the earl of Shrewſbury theſe be d^{d}."[1]

The reſult of this requeſt was favourable to the wiſhes of the noble earl; who had the honour of entertaining the royal viſitors at his hoſpitable board on the 22d of June. They departed to Leiceſter on the 23d; and on the 24th were entertained at Dingley[2].

In 1604, the earl of Huntingdon was appointed chief foreſter of Leiceſterſhire, and ſteward and receiver of the honour of Leiceſter; and, on the 30th of December that year, died ſeiſed of one ninth of the honour of Winton, held (with the office of the bailiwick of Carleton) of the king in capite, by the 100th part of a knight's fee; the hundred of Framland, &c.; Alton Grange; the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch, worth 30*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* and the rectory and vicarage 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* held of the king, as of the manor of Caſtle Donington, in ſocage; the manors of Barrow and Segrave, worth 66*l.* 3*s.* 9½*d.* held of the king, as part of the fee of Cheſter, by fealty only; the manor of Evington, worth 45*l.* 13*s.* 0½*d.* held of the king in capite by the 100th part of a knight's fee; the manor of Loughborough, worth 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* held of the king in capite, and by an annual rent of 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; the manor of Packington, &c. worth 5*l.* 10*s.* held by the 20th part of a knight's fee; and the rectory of that church, then held of the king in free-ſocage as parcel of the manor of Donington; Donington Park, containing 300 acres of paſture, worth 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* held of the king, but by what tenure unknown; the manor of Gopſhall, worth 5*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* tenure unknown; and the manors of Belton (with the vicarage), Thringſton, Oſgathorpe, &c. held in fee-farm, as of the manor of Eaſt Greenwich, in free ſocage[3]. The inquiſition ſtates, that Henry, his grandſon and heir, was aged 18 years and 6 months on the 10th of December, 1604.

His lordſhip was buried at Aſhby[4]; but has no monument. By Dorothy his counteſs he had three ſons and two daughters; Francis, who died in his father's life-time; Henry (of whom hereafter); ſir Edward, who died at Vienna, unmarried; Catharine, wife of ſir Edward Horton, of Wardley, Berks, knt. remarried to ſir Walter Chetwynd, of Ingeſtry in Staffordſhire, knt.; and Dorothy[5], born Jan. 12, 1578-9; married, firſt, to ſir James Stuart, K. B. eldeſt ſon of Walter firſt lord Blaintyre, and godſon to king James I. (remarkable for the duel he fought at Iſlington with ſir George Wharton, in which both loſt their lives[6] 1609); and, ſecondly, to Robert Dillon earl of Roſcommon.

Francis lord Haſtings, the eldeſt ſon, who reſided in The Old Place, otherwiſe called The Lord's Place, near Aſhby caſtle, ſold, in 1586, to the corporation of Leiceſter, one half part of the grange near that town, which he held by leaſe from the queen. A very curious letter from his lady, illuſtrative of the manners of the time, dated from Aſhby, Auguſt 22, 1592, has been given in a former volume[7]. This lady elſewhere ſays, "I praye you ſend me by this bearer ſix dozen of the beſte trenchers you have, and half a dozen of your beſte Vennis glaſſes with covers for drinking-glaſſes; like wiſe, yf you have any more of the ſame bole-glaſſes which I had of, I praye you ſend them, and let them be ſafely packed up for breakinge."

Francis lord Haſtings died in 1595; and was buried in Aſhby church, as appears by the pariſh regiſter. He left four ſons; 1. Henry, who in 1604, at the age of 18, ſucceeded to his grandfather's honours; 2. ſir George Haſtings, of Gray's Inn, who was knighted at Whitehall Nov. 5, 1615; and in 1626 obtained a grant of lands in the counties of Leiceſter, Somerſet, and Derby[8]; and, dying in 1641, was buried in the church of St. Bartholomew the Great, London, where, on a tablet (or painting on canvas) in the South aile, are 70 quarterings blazoned, and this inſcription:

"P. M.
Georgii Haſtings, filii ſecundi Franciſci Dñi Haſtings, de Aſhbye de la Zouch, militis;
qui duxit in uxorem Seymour, filiam et cohæredem Gilberti Prin de Allington, com. Wintoniæ, militis; per quam quatuor filios et tres filias habuit.
Obiit 1 Julii, 1641.
Poſuit marito bene mœrenti uxor ejus mœſtiſſima,
1° die Junii, 1655.

1. Georgius, filius primus, natus 22 April, 1621; obiit .... die Junii, 1627.
2. Carolus, filius ſecundus, natus 29 die Novemb. 1623.
3. Ferdinandus, filius tertius, natus 12 Jan. 1626; obiit die Conceptionis B. Virginis, a° 1645.
4. Franciſcus, quartus, natus 2 Decembris, 1628; obiit a° 1631, apud Weybridge.
5. Katharina, innupta 1655.
6. Martha, nupta Oweni Owens, arm. die Purificationis B. Virginis, 1652.
7. Margareta ob. die Aſſumptionis B. Mariæ, A. 1654, ætat. 19."

---

[1] Unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, K. 84.—The article which immediately follows is, a letter from ſir Francis Newport to the earl of Shrewſbury, dated Eyton, June 13, with a preſent of ſome proviſions from his lady to the counteſs, againſt the queen's coming to Workſop.

[2] King James's Progreſſes, p. 117.

[3] Inq. at Aſhby, 30 Sept. 5 Jac. I; Cole's Eſcheats, vol. III. (Harl. MSS. 758.) p. 200.

[4] "A ſpeech which was pronounced by Garter, after the funeral rites were performed at the interment of this honourable perſon hereunder ſpecified: Thus it hath pleaſed Almighty God to call forth of this tranſitory life to his divine mercy the moſt honourable George earl of Huntingdon, lord Haſtings, baron Hungerford, Botreaux, Molynes, and Moyles, lieftenant for the king's majeſty in the counties of Leyceſter and Rutland. Let us therefore pray, that it may pleaſe Almighty God to bleſs with long life, health, honour, and happineſs, the moſt honourable Henry now earl of Huntingdon, lord Haſtings, baron Hungerford, Botreaux, Molines, and Moyles, &c. to the glory of God, the ſervice of his prince and country, and the upholding of the antient and honourable reputation of his moſt noble name and family." Harl. MSS. 304. p. 92. b.

[5] Chriſtened at Loughborough, Jan. 15, 1578-9 (ſee the extracts from the Regiſter of that pariſh). Mr. Francis Haſtings was her god-father; the lady Stanhope and the lady Throgmorton, wife of Mr. Stocks of Beaumanor, god-mothers.—Sir Dudley Carleton, in a letter to ſir Ralph Winwood, dated Greenwich, March 10, 1604, noticing a robbery that had been committed on ſir Adolphus Carey at the laſt remove from Whitehall, adds, "At the ſame time lady Dorothy Haſtings (who lay in the chamber above him) was ſpoyled of all that ever God had ſent her, ſave that ſhe had on her back." Memorials, vol. II. p. 52.

[6] See the particulars of this unfortunate rencontre, in which both combatants were killed, in the Hiſtory of Canonbury, in the Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica, N° XLIX. pp. 29. 34; and the challenge, in Gent. Mag. vol. LXX. p. 1019.

[7] See vol. II. p. 622. (where read "1592;" and for William lord Haſtings, read Francis, ſon of the fourth earl, and father of the fifth). In the ſame volume, Plate CV. fig. 7, may be ſeen this lady's remarkable hand-writing. She had four huſbands: lord Haſtings was her firſt; to whom ſhe was married, at Exton, co. Rutland, Aug. 24, 1585. Her ſecond was ſir George Kingſmill, who died March 21, 1606. Her third, Edward the laſt lord Zouch, who was a widower, and died in 1625. And her fourth, ſir Thomas Edmonds, who ſurvived her. It does not appear that ſhe had any iſſue except by lord Haſtings.

[8] "Georgio Haſtings, militi, & Thomæ Gerardo, firm' Leic', Somerſet', Derb'." 4 Pars Original. 2 Car. I. Rot. 19.

The other two ſons of Francis lord Haſtings, were; Edward, a captain in the navy (of whom ſee p. 600); and Francis, who died an infant.

“ The Account of the right honourable Henry earl of Huntingdon, adminiſtrator of the goods, &c. of George late earl of Huntingdon, deceaſed, &c.[1]

	£.	s.	d.
Inprimis, this accomptant charges himſelf with all the goods, chattels, &c. of the ſaid deceaſed, &c. comprized, &c. in an inventory thereof, made and exhibited into the court, amounting in the whole to the ſum of —	3733	3	11
In diſcharge whereof he craveth to be allowed; for keeping of the family from the 30th of December till the 25th of March next following, being the day of the funeral, —	300	0	0
For mourning apparel for the kindred and friends —	700	0	0
For diet for thoſe noblemen and others which attended the corpſe to the burial, and for bread and money given to the poor, — —	200	0	0
For the heralds, in coming from London to Aſhby, and eſcutcheons for the funeral — —	160	0	0
To the Dutchy receipt, for a debt due by the ſaid earl —	200	0	0
To the lady Katharine Chetwynd (one of the daughters of the ſaid earl) for a debt due to her — —	500	0	0
To William Goodall, of Boſworth, for a debt due to him —	60	0	0
To .... Bezzie, of London, executor to William Horobin, a taylor, for a debt	30	0	0
To ..... Smith, of Nottingham, for a debt — —	12	0	0
To ſir William Stone, of Cheapſide in London, for a debt —	25	0	0
To his Majeſtie's exchequer for a ſubſidy — —	40	0	0
For another debt to his Majeſty paid into the dutchy receipt —	481	19	0
Item, for farther ſubſidies	70	0	0
For a debt to William Agard, of Coſton, co. Derby, by bond,	230	0	0
Item, to William Frend, for a debt by bond — —	440	0	0
Item, to Gervaſe Pigot, for a debt by bond — —	130	0	0
Item, to the lady Sarah Haſtings, for a debt — —	300	0	0
Item, for a debt to William Mountney, John Hull, and ..... Wolverſon, of Newbold, co. Leiceſter —	110	0	0
Item, to Richard Goodall, one of the proctors in the Arches, for a debt	9	8	0
Item, for letters of adminiſtration	1	6	4
Item, for double engroſſing the inventories, and proctor's fees —	5	10	0
Item, for drawing and double engroſſing the account, proctor's fees, and other charges at London —	5	0	0
The total —	4010	3	8

So that he hath paid more than he hath received £276. 13*s*. 9*d*.”

The laſt will of his dowager here follows:

“ In the name of God, Amen. I, Dorothy counteſs dowager of Huntingdon, &c. do, &c. make my laſt will and teſtament, &c. My body, &c. to be buried in the chancel of the pariſh church of Aſhby, ſo near to the body of my late huſband, lord George, as conveniently may be, &c.

Item, I give to the poor, &c. of the pariſh of Aſhby £6. 13*s*. 4*d*. to be diſtributed amongſt them at my ſaid burial, &c.; to the poor, &c. of the pariſh of Packington, £3. 6*s*. 1*d*. And whereas I the ſaid Dorothy, &c. by my deed indented, bearing date the 24th day of September, in the third year of king James, have aſſured, &c. unto Henry Haſtings, of Woodland, in the county of Dorſet, eſq. one of the ſons of the ſaid counteſs; and ſir John Harpur, of Swarkſton, in the county of Derby, knt. for the only uſe of the lady Dorothy Haſtings, natural daughter of George late earl of Huntingdon and me, all that my manor, &c. of Dale, in the county of Derby; and all that Grange, called Ockbroke Grange, &c. to and for the only uſe of me the ſaid counteſs during my natural life, without imprudence or waſt, &c.; and after, &c. to the uſe, &c. of the ſaid lady Dorothy, &c. her heirs and aſſigns for ever; with divers proviſos, &c. Now therefore know ye that I the ſaid Dorothy, &c. for the ſpeedier preferment of my ſaid daughter, &c. do hereby declare, &c. that the uſe and eſtate in the ſaid recited indenture limited, &c. unto my ſaid daughter, &c. ſhall ceaſe, &c. Nevertheleſs, in conſideration of £4000. to be levied, &c. for the preferment in marriage of the ſaid Dorothy, &c. I have aſſured unto the right honourable William lord Compton, &c. and ſir John Holles, of Houghton, in the county of Nottingham, knt. and to their heirs, all that my manor of Dale; and all that Grange, &c. called Boia Grange, &c. and &c. farm, called Ockbroke Grange, &c. as by a deed indented, &c. may appear: in which there is this proviſo, that if, &c. Henry now earl of Huntingdon, his heirs, &c. do pay, &c. unto the ſaid William lord Compton, &c. the ſum of £4000. &c. upon the 20th day of Auguſt, which ſhall be in the year of our Lord 1608, &c. then the ſaid William lord Compton, &c. do, &c. promiſe to convey, &c. in fee-ſimple, unto the ſaid Henry, now earl of Huntingdon, his heirs, &c. premiſſes, &c. And whereas I promiſed unto my daughter the lady Katharine, now wife of ſir Walter Chetwynd, for the augmentation of her portion, &c. £300.; whereof £260. is yet unpaid; my full mind is, that it be paid by my executors, &c. Item, to my ſaid daughter the lady Katharine £50. Item, to my god-daughter, the lady Alice Haſtings, &c. £13. 6*s*. 8*d*. to buy a cup withall, &c. and if ſhe be not then living, &c. then my well-beloved daughter the counteſs of Huntingdon to accept the ſame, in remembrance of me. Item, to my gentleman uſher £10.; to my two ſervants, each of them £6. 13*s*. 4*d*.; to my two maid ſervants, each of them, £5.; to my coachman, £5.; to Dorothy Riding[2] my god-daughter, £5. &c. To William lord Compton, my beloved ſiſter the lady Margaret Stanhope, and my loving nephew ſir John Holles, knt. three gilt cups of £10. apiece. Deſiring my well-beloved grand-child, Henry earl of Huntingdon, with my other executors, &c. that my body may only, with ſome comelineſs and fitting reverence, be carried, &c. with ſome few blacks, to my neareſt kindred and friends; all which my will is, in total, not to exceed the charge of £203. 6*s*. 8*d*. Item, whereas ſir Percival Willoughby, of Wollaton, in the county of Nottingham, &c. hath in his hands £400. of my money, &c. my will is, that both the money and the profit thereof ſhall be to my grand-child Francis Haſtings, one of the younger ſons of my ſaid ſon Henry Haſtings, of Woodland, in the county of Dorſet, &c. To my daughter the lady Katharine, my black velvet gown, my black ſattin kirtle, and a petticoat of ſeveral coloured ſilk. To my gentlewoman, Mary Gifford, my ſtitched ſilk gown, my wrought velvet night-gown, and all my wearing linen. To my daughter the lady Dorothy Haſtings, all my ſilver and gilt plate, jewels, houſhold goods, my horſes and coach, and all my other goods whatſoever unbequeathed, &c. To my grand-child the lady Stanhope, a gilt cup of the value of £10. To my nephew George Haſtings, her brother, £10. Item, to my nephew Edward Haſtings, £10. Item, to my grand-children, the children of my ſon Henry Haſtings, George, Ralph, Henry, William, and Dorothy, to each of them, £10. Item, I do, &c. make executors of this my will, &c. my well-beloved grand-child, Henry now earl of Huntingdon, my good couſin William lord Compton, my dear and faithful ſiſter my lady Margaret Stanhope, and my loving nephew ſir John

---

[1] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 60.

[2] Dorothy, daughter of George Ruding, eſq. of Weſtcotes, immediate anceſtor to the preſent owner of that lordſhip. See p. 600.

Holles, knt. &c. And I ordain overſeers of this my will, &c. ſir Thomas Gerard, of the court, knt. and George Shirley, of Staunton, eſq. and do give to either of them a gold ring of 20*s.* value, to wear in remembrance of me[1]."

The following undated letter was written, about the year 1610, by Elizabeth counteſs of Huntingdon, to earl Henry her huſband:

"Dear Sweet harte; I prayes God, wee came very well hither, and about forr a'cloke. Y^{e} waters wear deepe, and not paſſable, at Bellgrave: wherfor Mr. Rydeings[2] guyded us another waye, over St. Sundayes bridge. Your much love and care of mee makes mee trouble y^{o} with my paſſadge hither. God willing, I will bee in ye coache to-morrow by ſeaven a'cloke; for 'tis a long journey. Your mayrs goe very well; and the chariot-mayer I will ſend backe as y^{o} appoynted. I will from hence wryte to my La. Graye[3] y^{r} excuſe and my owne. My Lo. is gone to my La. Sherwood's[4]; butt his eldeſt ſonn[5] fell ſicke, and ſtayed my La.'s jorneye. Newſe I know non. Mr. Rydeings will wayte on y^{o}. Badger purpoſed, before I came, to coum to Don.[6] to-morrow or next daye; and I wiſhe y^{u} any company till I coum to foole up and ſuplye ther rooms. I beſeech God ſend y^{u} healthe, and ſend us a happy meeting. Indeed, I ſhall wiſhe myſelf with y^{o} much ſooner than I can coum; and to haſtne my couming I will looſe noe tyme: I will make it mayny dayes ſooner downe, rather than ſtaye, ſhould the weather be ill, after I have dun my buſines; and I hope in God I ſhall be ſooner backe than y^{o} expect mee; and as longe as I have lyffe, I will praye for yours; and ever reſt,

Your moſt affectionat wyffe till deathe,

Leaceſter, Tueſdaye night. E. HUNTINGDON.

As ſowne as I have ſupte, God willing, I will to bed; and wiſhe y^{o} ther, and in y^{r} owne bed agayne, with as much eaſe as I uſe to walke betweene my little cabbin and yours.

Sir J. Rad. remembers his ſervice to y^{o}; he brings mee to Northehampton; I take S. Holk ſoe far[7]."

Henry Haſtings, eſq. ſecond ſon of George the fourth earl, ſhould here be particularly noticed. The manor of Piddletown in Dorſetſhire was given to him by his father; who reſerved, however, the advowſon to himſelf and to his heirs; and with them it ſtill continues[8]. He afterwards, by his firſt wife[9], Dorothy, ſecond daughter and coheir of ſir Francis Willoughby, of Wollaton hall, co. Nottingham, obtained the manor of Woodland, in the pariſh of Horton, co. Dorſet, where he had a capital manſion, and principally reſided; but, being one of the keepers of the New Foreſt, had a lodge there, in which he paſſed a part of every hunting ſeaſon; and, April 26, 1601, granted a leaſe to R. Wareham and L. Wareham, for their lives, of the office of conſtable of Chriſt-church caſtle, and the office of keeping Sturvile chaſe[10]. One of his neareſt neighbours at Woodland was the lord chancellor Cooper, firſt earl of Shafteſbury. Two men could not be more oppoſite in their diſpoſitions and purſuits. They had little communication therefore; and their occaſional meetings were rendered more diſagreeable to both, from their oppoſite ſentiments in politics. Lord Shafteſbury, who was the younger man, was the ſurvivor; and the following account of Mr. Haſtings, which is ſaid to have been the production of his lordſhip's pen, ſtill remains in gold letters, at Winborne St. Giles, the ſeat of the earl of Shafteſbury[11], under an original portrait, here copied in Plate LXXX.

"In the year 1638 lived Mr. Haſtings, by his quality ſon, brother, and uncle, to the earl of Huntingdon. He was peradventure an original in our age, or rather the copy of our antient nobility, in hunting, not in warlike times. He was low, very ſtrong, and very active, of a reddiſh flaxen hair; his cloaths always green cloth, and never worth, when new, £5. His houſe was perfectly of the old faſhion, in the midſt of a large park, well ſtocked with deer; and near the houſe, rabbits for his kitchen; many fiſh-ponds; great ſtore of wood and timber; a bowling-green in it, long, but narrow, full of high hedges, it being never levelled ſince it was ploughed; they uſed round ſand bowles, and it had a banquetting-houſe like a ſtand, a large one built in a tree. He kept all manner of ſport hounds, that ran buck, fox, hare, otter, and badger, and hawkes long and ſhort winged. He had all ſorts of nets for fiſh. He had a walk in the New Foreſt, and the manor of Chriſtchurch; this laſt ſupplied him with red-deer, ſea, and river-fiſh; and indeed all his neighbours grounds and royalties were free to him, who beſtowed all his time on theſe ſports, but what he borrowed to careſs his neighbours wives and daughters; there being not a woman in all his walks, of the degree of a yeoman's wife, or under, and under the age of 40, but it was her own fault if he was not intimately acquainted with her. This made him very popular; always ſpeaking kindly to the huſband, brother, or father, who was to boot very welcome to his houſe. Whenever he came there, he found beef, pudding, and ſmall-beer, in great plenty: the houſe not ſo neatly kept as to ſhame him or his dirty ſhoes; the great hall ſtrewed with marrow-bones; full of hawkes, perches, hounds, ſpanniels, and terriers; the upper ſide of the hall hung with fox-ſkins of this and the laſt year's killing; here and there a pole-cat intermixed; game-keepers and hunters poles in great abundance. The parlour was a large room, as properly furniſhed. On a great hearth, paved with brick, lay ſome terriers, and the choiceſt hounds and ſpanniels. Seldom but two of the great chairs had litters of cats in them, which were not to be diſturbed; he having always three or four attending him at dinner, and a little white ſtick, of 14 inches long, lying by his trencher, that he might defend ſuch meat that he had no mind to part with to them. The windows, which were very large, ſerved for places to lay his arrows, croſs-bows, and ſtone-bows, and ſuch like accoutrements; the corners of the room full of the beſt-choſen hunting or hawking poles; his oyſter-table at the lower end, which was of conſtant uſe, twice a day, all the year round, for he never failed to eat oyſters, both dinner and ſupper-time, all ſeaſons: the neighbouring town of Poole ſupplied him with them. The upper part of the room had two ſmall tables, and a deſk, on the one ſide of which was a Church-Bible, and on the other ſide, the Book of Martyrs: on the tables were hawkes' hoods, bells, and ſuch like; two or three old hats, with their crowns thruſt in, ſo as to hold ten or a dozen eggs, which were of the pheaſant kind of poultry; theſe he took much care of, and fed himſelf. Tables, dice, cards, and boxes, were not wanting. In the hole of the deſk were ſtore of tobacco-pipes that had been uſed. On one ſide of this end of the room was the door of a cloſet, wherein ſtood the ſtrong beer and the wine, which never came from thence but in ſingle glaſſes, that being the rule of the houſe, exactly obſerved; for he never exceeded in drink, or permitted it. On the other ſide was the door of an old chapel, not uſed for devotion; the pulpit, as the ſafeſt place, was never wanting of a cold chine of beef, veniſon-paſty, gammon of paſty, or a great apple-pye, with thick cruſt, extremely baked. His table coſt him not much, though it was good to eat at. His ſports ſupplied all but beef or mutton, except Fridays, when he had the beſt of ſalt-fiſh, as well as other fiſh he could get; and this was the day his neighbours of beſt qua-

---

[1] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 60.

[2] Mr. Ruding of Weſtcotes; ſee p. 591.

[3] Anne daughter of William lord Windſor, and wife to Henry lord Grey of Groby, who then reſided at Bradgate.

[4] Iſabel, daughter of ſir John Harpur of Swarkſton, and wife to ſir Philip Sherard, of Stapleford, knt.—In a letter to the earl of Shrewſbury, June 10, 1604, ſir John Harpur complains of "the unkindneſs of his ſon-in-law Sherard."

[5] Sir John Grey, knt. who died in his father's life-time.

[6] Donington Park.

[7] Carte's MSS. in the Bodleian Library, FFF. N° 87. See this lady's ſignature in Plate LXXVI.

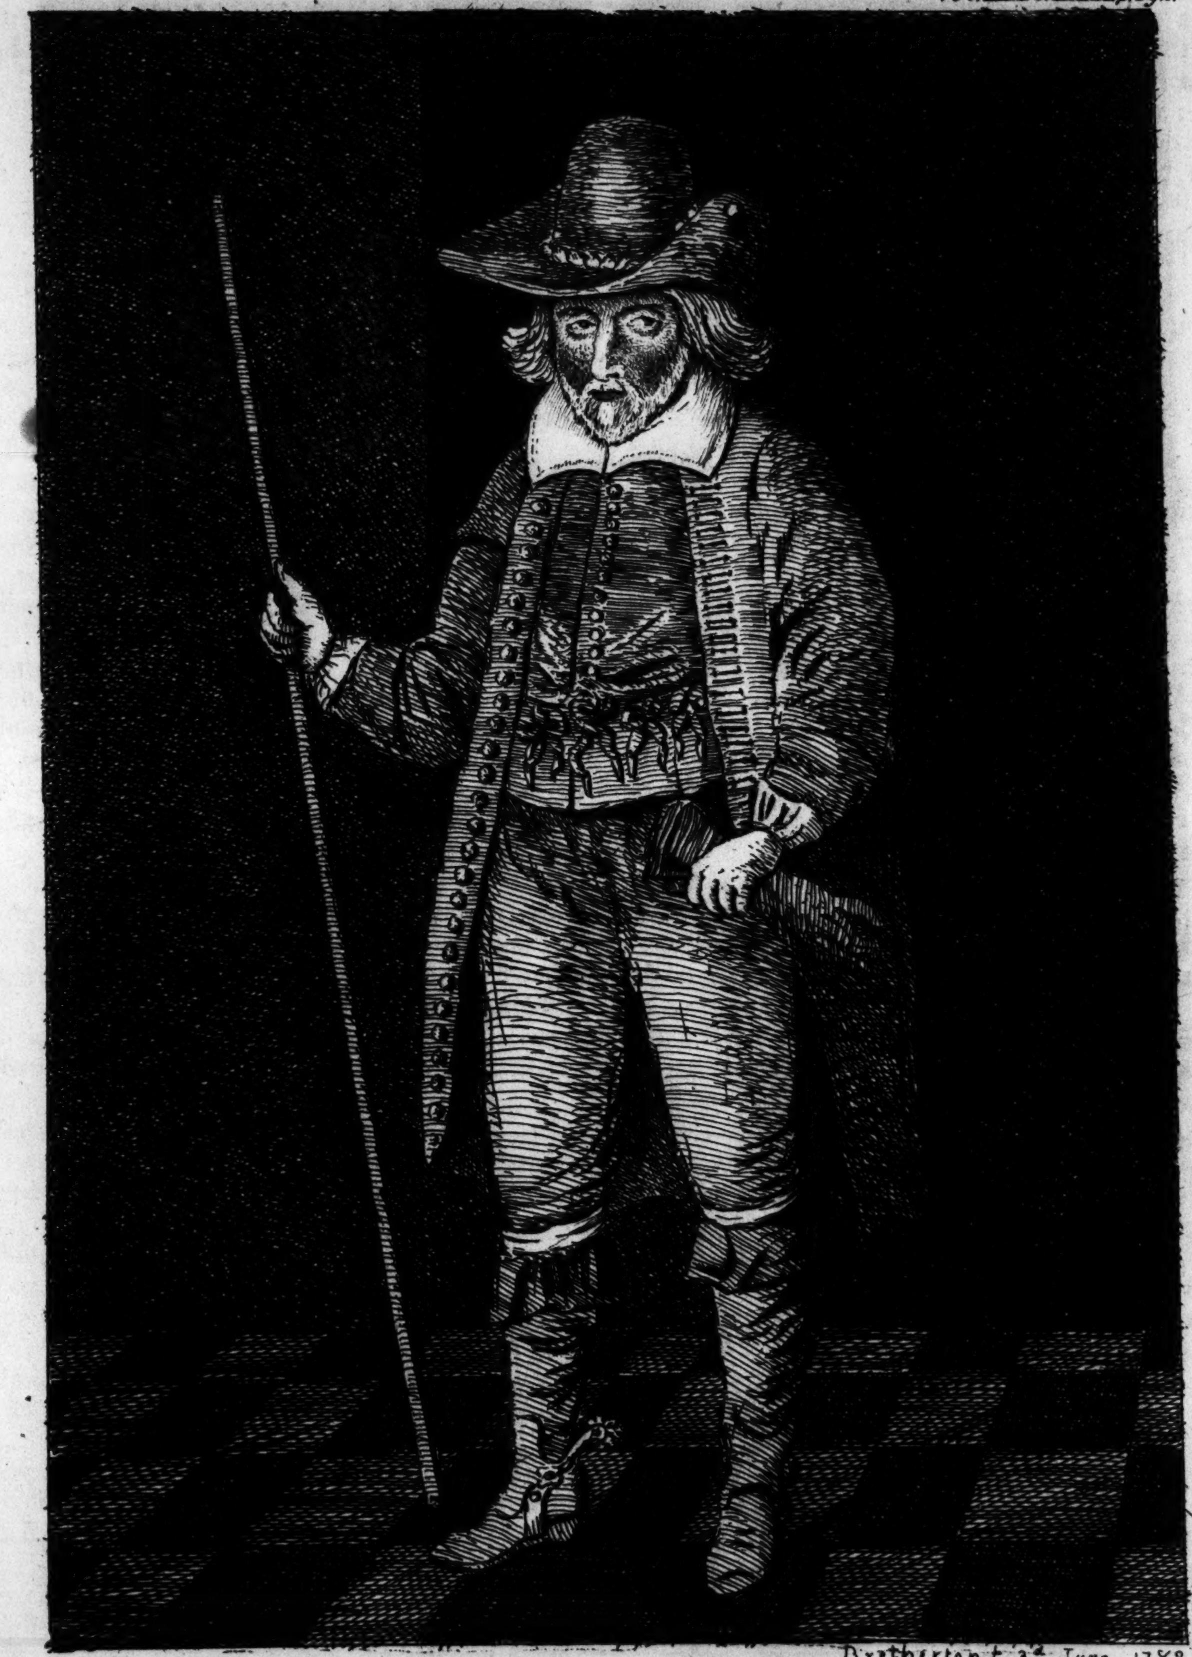
[8] Hutchins's Dorſetſhire, ed. 1774, vol. II. pp. 207. 209.

[9] By his ſecond wife he had a ſon, named Henry, born before marriage; but no child afterward. Harl MSS. 4774. p. 137.

[10] Harl. MSS. 4774.

[11] Gent. Mag. vol XXIV. pp. 160. 215.

Vol. III. Pl. LXXX. p. 592.



Bretherton f 3d June 1782.

Mr. HASTINGS.

From the Original Picture in the Collection of the Earl of Shaftesbury to whom this Plate is humbly inscribed by his Lordship's obedient humble Servant

Js. Bretherton.

lity viſited him. He never wanted a London pudding, and always ſung it in. "With my pert eyes [1] thereina." He drank a glaſs or two of wine at meals; very often put ſyrop of gilly-flowers in his ſack, and had always a tun-glaſs, without feet, ſtood by him, holding a pint of ſmall beer, which he often ſtirred with roſemary. He was well-natured, but ſoon angry, calling his ſervants baſtards and cuckoldry knaves, in one of which he often ſpoke truth, to his own knowledge, and ſometimes in both, though of the ſame man. He lived to be an hundred, and never loſt his eye-ſight, but always wrote and read without ſpectacles, and got on horſeback without help. Until paſt fourſcore, he rode to the death of a ſtag as well as any."

In the Haſtings' aile at Horton is this epitaph:

"The hononrable Henry Haſtings of Woodland, ſecond ſon to George Haſtings, E. of Huntingdon, departed this life the 5th of October, 1650, ætatis 99;
and Dorothy his wife, one of the coheirs of ſir Francis Willoughby, knt. of Woollaton in the county of Nottingham, who departed this life the 5th of December, 1638, ætatis 84.
And ſir George Haſtings, knt. their ſon and heir, who died 25th of October, 1651, ætatis 63."

Nov. 10, 1652, a motion for inſerting the name of Henry Haſtings, eſq. late of Woodland, in the bill for ſale of delinquents' eſtates, was negatived [2].

All our Peerages are miſtaken about this extraordinary man, whom they make a knight [3]. His eſtate at Woodland (which in 1641 was valued at £300. a year) was ſequeſtered in 1645. Jacob gives him a ſecond wife, Mrs. Jane Langton, who is mentioned by Dugdale [4]. By his firſt wife (who died in 1638) he had two ſons, George (knighted by king James at Whitehall, Nov. 3, 1619,) and Henry; and one daughter, Dorothy, married, firſt, to ſir John Ryves, knt.; ſecondly, in 1625, to Thomas Tregonwell, eſq. [5]

Sir George Haſtings, knt. his ſon and heir, died Oct. 25, 1651, aged 63, and was buried at Horton; leaving iſſue by his wife Alice, daughter of ſir Thomas Freake, two ſons, Edward, who died in 1654, and John, who died in 1656, both ſ. p.; alſo two daughters, Frances, married to John Roy, of London, merchant; and Dorothy, wife of —— Eyres, barriſter at law; ſo that the eſtate came to the Roys. Henry Haſtings, ſecond ſon, was living at Amerſham, in Buckinghamſhire, in 1634; and had then, by his wife Suſan, daughter of Robert Offley, a daughter Anne, aged 9 years [6].

Henry the fifth earl of Huntingdon was born at Exton, co. Rutland; where his baptiſm is thus curiouſly entered in the Regiſter: "1586, Mr. Henry Haſtings, ſon and heir of Mr. Francis Haſtings, was born on St. Mark's even, April 24, between the hours of ten and eleven of the clock at night; ſign, Sagit'; ſecund' die plenilunii; Marte in Taurum intrato die precedente; and was chriſtened May 17."

He married in or about June 1603, Elizabeth, one of the daughters and heirs of Ferdinando earl of Derby [7]; and, ſucceeding next year to his grand-father's honours, obtained in 1604-5 a royal grant [8], which ſhall be noticed in his own words:

"King James, of bleſſed memory, Feb. 18, in the ſecond year of his majeſty's reign, granted unto Henry now earl of Huntingdon, by his patent under the Dutchy ſeal, the office of chief foreſter of Leiceſter-foreſt; fee per diem 2d. yearly; the office of keeping the ward called the Thwayt, fee 30*s.* 4*d. per annum*; the office of keeping Heathly ward, in the ſame foreſt, 1½*d. per diem*; agiſtment for 12 kine, one bull, two horſes; and 16 loads of fire-wood yearly in the ſame ward; the office of keeper of Burned Lodge (within the ſame foreſt) with agiſtment for 12 kine, one bull, two horſes, and 16 loads of wood yearly. To have and to hold the ſaid offices and fees, during the life of the ſaid earl, in as large and ample manner as Francis earl of Huntingdon, Henry earl of Huntingdon, and George earl of Huntingdon, or any other, heretofore held the ſame.

Fees yearly in money —	£9	2	5
Cattle to be kept yearly, 34,	51	0	0
The wood yearly, being 32 loads,	16	0	0
	76	2	5

Beſide the killing of 80 bucks and 40 does yearly; and the fiſhing of his majeſty's ponds; the pleaſure and command of taking pheaſants and partridge; the overſight and command of the wood, where no lord could ſell any without licence. The keepers had, over and above theſe former profits granted to me, each of them incloſure about their houſes for 40 ewes and lambs apiece, with the fees of their ſeveral places, which were uſual preferments for 30 of my ſervants [9]."

On New-year's day 1604-5, the earl of Huntingdon preſented to king James £20. in gold; and received in return 18 ounces of gilt plate.

The ceremonial on this occaſion is here given in his lordſhip's own words:

"The manner of preſentinge a new-yere's guifte to his Matie from the Earle of Huntingdon.

"You muſt buy a new purſe of about v*s.* price; and put therinto xx peeces of new gold of xx*s.* apeice; and go to the preſence-chamber where the Court is, upon new-yere's day in the morninge, about 8 a'clocke; and deliver the purſe and the gold unto my Lord Chamberlin; then you muſt go downe to the Jewell-houſe for a ticket to receive xviii*s.* vi*d.* as a gifte to your paines, and give vi*d.* there to the box for your ticket; then go to Sr Wm Veall's office, and ſhew your ticket; and receive youre xviii*s.* vi*d.* Then go to the Jewell-howſe againe, and make choice of a peece of plate of xxx ounces waight, and marke it; and then in the afternoone you may go and fetch it away; and then give the gentleman that delivers it to you xl*s.* in gold; and give to the box there ii*s.* and to the porter vi*d.* [10]."

In a letter to the earl of Shrewſbury, dated Aſhby, the laſt day of March, 1604-5, the earl of Huntingdon demands the court-rolls of the manor of Melborne, which had been purchaſed by his grandfather not long before his death; and laments that the ſcantineſs of his fortune was ſuch, that he could not immediately complete the payment for that eſtate, which was then held in truſt for him by divers of his good friends [11].

In another letter, Aug. 12, 1606, he apologizes for not writing to the earl of Shrewſbury, as "my lady of Derby was coming into Warwickſhire," whither he was going; but adds, "I have ſent your lordſhip a buck: though lean, yet is the beſt I have. I hope your lordſhip will do me the favour as to hunt in the Foreſt, where I would have waited upon you if this had not prevented me [12]."

In 1606, a charge occurs at Leiceſter, of £10. 10*s.* for two barrels of gun-powder, for the uſe of the town, by command of the earl of Huntingdon, lord-lieutenant, to compel the people of that town and neighbourhood to deſiſt from aſſembling to lay open incloſed grounds [13]; and with the ſame view a gibbet was erected.

---

[1] It ſhould be "my part lies thereina."

[2] Journals of the Commons, vol. IV. p. 212.

[3] By confounding him with his firſt couſin, ſir Henry Haſtings of Humberſton; who was knighted by king James, at Belvoir caſtle, April 23, 1603; and obtained from that king, in conſideration of the ſum of £4000. paid by him and Henry Cutler, gent. the manor of Whitwick, with the lands thereto belonging, formerly the property of the duke of Suffolk, attainted of high treaſon; together with Bardon park, and all the meſſuages, lands, &c. in Charnwood Foreſt, belonging to the ſaid manor of Whitwick. Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 69. b.

[4] Baronage, vol. I. p. 589.

[5] Hutchins's Dorſetſhire, vol. I. p. 96; 2d edit.

[6] See Collins's Peerage, vol. III. p. 97. Hutchins's Dorſetſhire, vol. II. pp. 63, 64. 320.; ed. 1774.

[7] See ſome particulars of the marriage ſettlement hereafter, under Caſtle Donington.

[8] 4 Pars Original. 2 Jac. I. Rot. 26.

[9] Carte's MSS. in the Bodleian Library, FFF. N° 3.

[10] Carte, ubi ſupra, N° 139.

[11] Unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, M. p. 287.

[12] Ibid p. 507.

[13] "Yeſterday, being at Leiceſter upon a commiſſion for Mr. Walter Haſtings, I found there the earl of Huntingdon, ſerjeant Nicholes, and others, enquiring of depopulation, or converting of tillage into paſture; wherein they proceed ſo preciſely, that ey take the oaths of the miniſter and two of the ſubſtantialleſt men in every town for any particular which occurs to the com-erected in the Cornwall; which the mob having demoliſhed, Mr. Chamberlain (then mayor), and Mr. Robert Eyrick, were confined to their houſes by order of the earl; to appeaſe whoſe wrath, Mr. Hunter was ſent to Aſhby, by the appointment of the mayor and his brethren, to preſent a gelding to the younger counteſs of Huntingdon, for her uſe, as a token of their contrition. The gelding was not accepted; but was kept at Aſhby twelve weeks at the expence of the corporation, in hopes that time would have favoured their offer [1].

The mediation of the earl of Huntingdon, ſir Walter Haſtings, and ſir Walter Harcourt, was ſucceſsfully exerted, in December 1607, in healing an unpleaſant breach between ſir John Harpur, of Swarkeſton and his ſon and heir Richard [2].

May 16, 1608, the earl of Huntingdon was appointed lord-lieutenant of Leiceſterſhire.

In the houſhold-book [3] eſtabliſhed at Aſhby Caſtle in Auguſt 1609, the prudence and the liberality of this young nobleman (who was then not 24 years old) are equally conſpicuous.

"Certeyne orders and dyrections, to bee obſerved by the houſehold officers and other perſons, ſervantes to the right honourable Henry earle of Huntingdon, for the better and more exquiſite performance of everie man's dutye in his ſeverall place, as well toward his lordſhip, as alſo towards the right honourable the ladye Elizabeth counteſs of Huntingdon his wife, to their moſt honour and profitt; which orders their Honours pleaſure and expreſſe commaundent is to have kept and obeyed from the tyme of the declaration and publiſhing of them; viz.

"Whereas their Honours, both by the adviſe of their frends, examples of perſons of their owne ranke, and by their owne diligent obſervations (having ſome fewe yeres paſt ben houſe-keepers) do finde that nothing is a greater ruine to their eſtates then diſorder, have entred into a dew and mature conſideration for the avoyding of the former evill; that thereby their houſe and family may be well guyded; have determined and hereby ſett downe and preſcribed to their officers and ſervants theſe precepts inſuinge, to thend that everie officer maie the more ſurelie bee eſtabliſhed and aucthorized in the execution of his place, without controlment, for dooeing his dutie, and every other hould themſelves ſatisfied with their dooeinge according to their orders, and learn thereby to demeane themſelves, as well particulerly to officers, as alſo generally one to another. And foraſmuche as their Honnours knowe yt to bee vaine, and to no purpoſe, to preſcribe rules and orders, unles care be therwall had to the obedience and practize of them: therefore their Honnours doe ſtraightelie charge and commaunde their cheif officers, namely, the ſtewarde and comptroller of their houſehould, to ſee the ſame in all pointes dulie performed: and for the encouragement of thoſe that are tractable to well-dooinge, and the aſſuraunce of ſuche as ſhalbee otherwiſe what they are to truſt unto, their Honours doe perſwade, exhort, and enjoyne all their lovinge ſervants, to applie their uttermoſte endevoures to the obſervation thereof; geeving them heereby to underſtand, that ſuch as will conforme themſelves ſhall reape the bennifitte of their good favoures; and that others diſobedient (at leaſte wiſe upon admonition) are to incurr their Honours heavy diſpleaſure; and, if they perſevere without reformation, to be removed from their ſervice. And for that everie one may knowe the charge and dutye as well of certayne perticuler officers as of their owne, his Lordſhip hath firſt ſett down the ſame as followeth; viz.

The Office of the Stewarde.

Firſt, that he have a perfect check-rowle of the names of all the ſervants in ordinarye and reteyners, with addition of their places of ſervice; and as the ſame ſhalbe increaſed or altered, ſo to keepe the check-roll accordinglie.

Item, that he have a ſpeciall regard not to exceed the nomber of ſervants in ordinarye hereafter ſett downe; aud yf any be tendred to his Lordſhip to any place that ſhalbe voide, to make dilligent enquirie of his ſufficiencye, judgement, and honeſtie, and thereof to enforme his Lordſhip before he be accepted or refuſed: in the choiſe of which ſervante care is to be had, that none of the ordinary retinue bee maryed, ſpecially of thoſe that are in any place or office.

And foraſmuche as the daunger may growe greate by taking of reteyners; to be provident therefore that none have his Lordſhip's lyverye other then ſuche as ſhalbe appointed to ſome place of office under his Lordſhip, as bailiff, woodwarde, keeper, or other like; in the choiſe of which adviſe would be taken, and conferrence had with the forreigne officers that deale for his Lordſhip's revenue, becauſe ſuch as are fitt are beſt knowen unto them.

Item, that he have a perfecte inventarye of all the ordinarye ſtuf, furniture, and plate, that ſhalbe in the charge of any perticuler perſon within the houſe; and that he cauſe ſeverall inventaries indented to be made between him and everie inferior officer in the houſe, of the things committed to their ſeverall charges, for which they are to be anſwerable, upon the accompt that is to be taken of them every half yeare.

Item, that he have lykewiſe a check roll or inventarye, from the gentleman of the horſe, of all the horſes and geldings in the ſtable or elſewheare, and of the furniture to them; and as the ſame ſhall decay, and be worne out, and others provided in their roomes, ſo to alter the inventary accordinglie; which inventary ſhalbe indented betweene them.

Item, that he have care to examine everie perticuler office (weeckelie or monthlie) within the houſe, as well concerning the orderly keeping of all things within their ſaid office, as alſo to ſee that there be perfect ſkores and bookes kept for every ſeverall officer; and thereupon to ſee reformation of whatſoever ſhalbe amiſſe within the ſame.

Item, that he wicklie examine the houſeholde-booke, to ſee the recepts and expenſes of all manner of proviſions, as well of ſtore as of conſumptions, and whatſoever ſhall concerne the ſaid booke; after which examination and caſting up, to ſigne the ſame himſelfe; and yf he ſhall find the charg to exceede the proportion ſett downe, to enforme their Honnors with the reaſon thereof, to the ende order may be taken to redreſſe the ſame.

Item, that he adviſe with the clarke of the kitchin of all manner of proviſions to be made for the houſe, ether in groſſe or in perticuler, reſpecting the ſeaſon of the yeer, and how the ſame may bee made with leaſt charge and trouble.

Item, that he doe carefully, every quarter at the leaſte, examine all ſkores, recepts, and expences; and thereuppon to ſee how the remeaynes doe anſwer thereunto; and yf any defect be in the officers, to ſee reformation.

Item, he ſhall canſe all the orders and ſtatutes which my Lord hath appointed for the better government of his houſe, to be reade openly before all the houſehold once every quarter, that they, knowing them, may yeelde the more ready obedience.

Item, that every Friday at night he ſhall call unto him the houſehold chaplin, gentleman uſher, gentleman of the horſe, and clarke of the kitchin, or ſome of them, for aſſiſtance, and conſulte with them concerning all diſorders and miſdemeners of the ſervants in the houſe, admoniſhinge and reprehending the offenders according to the qualitie of their offences committed; and in caſe he doe not thereupon reforme himſelfe, then their Honnors to be made acquainted, and the partie or parties to be removed.

All theſe orders before ſett downe, their Honnors doe not onely approve, but alſo promiſe to be ready with their owne aucthorities to maynteyne and countenance their ſteward and abovenamed officers, from tyme to tyme, in the due execution of them.

All other orders by the ſaid ſteward to be directed and put in execution (which are here omitted) are referred to his diſcreation as belonging to his office; whereof their Honnors will alſo allow, and do hereby give him full aucthoritie in that behalfe.

The Gentleman Ussher's Office.

Firſt, that he have a check-roll of all my Lord's ſervants in ordinary, viz. of gentlemen, yeomen, and groomes, with addition of their places of ſervice, and the like of all my Lord's reteyners; and that as the ſaid ſervants ſhall chang, either in perſon or place of ſervice, ſo to renewe the check-roll accordinglie.

Item, that he give directions to them that ſhall ſupplie the place of groome of the chamber what they ought to doe in the due execution of the ſaid office; and that he cauſe them to make cleane the dyning and withdrawing chambers; and that the tables, formes, ſtooles, and all things be ſett up, and layde in very good order, every morning by ſeaven of the clock in ſomer, and eight in the winter; and the ſaid groome be alwaies there attendant, to make fyeres, and to doe ſuche other ſervice as the ſaid gentleman-uſher ſhall commande him; and beſides to ſee the chappell ordered, for their Honnors and others, as apperteyneth.

Item, that he take order that, as well gentlemen as yeomen wayters, doe give their daylie attendance upon their Honnors perſons; and that he appoint one geutleman and one yeoman at the leaſte to waite on his Lordſhip when he walketh abrode.

Item, that he have a ſpeciall care that the gentlemen and yeomen waiters give their dayly attendance in the great chamber, for furniſhing of the ſame, when any ſtrangers ſhall come to the houſe.

Item, that himſelfe (in good example to others) be at the chappell in prayer and preaching tyme; and that not only he himſelfe have a vigilant eye to marke who is abſent, but alſo doe appoint the uſher of the hall, or ſome other, diligently to obſerve the ſame, and to informe him of them, that he may reprehende miſſion; and in Northampton the commiſſioners have already ſitten twelve days, and have not yet ended." Sir John Harpur to the earl of Shrewſbury, Sept. 25, 1607; from the unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, M. p. 450. Two letters alſo occur, from Henry earl of Kent, in June 1607, on ſimilar complaints of depopulation in Bedfordſhire; L. pp. 82. 92.

---

[1] Corporation Records.

[2] Unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, M. p. 468.

[3] From a copy taken at the time, and now communicated by the Rev. Rogers Ruding.

them for their negligence in that behalfe; whearein yf any (notwithſtanding) will continue, aad yeelde no good reaſon of his abſence, that he command the uſher of the hall not to ſuffer him to dyne or ſuppe there, the next meale, after ſuch offence committed.

Item, when any ſtranger ſhalbe at my Lord's houſe, that he goe to the kitchen betweene ten and eleaven of the clock in the morning, and betweene five and ſix in the evening, to ſee the forwardnes of dynner or ſupper, and thereupon to ſende warning to the pantrey, buttery, and cellar, to make ready for their Honnors.

Item, that he would every night ſend word to the clarke of the kitchin what bread, wine, and ſuger, hath been ſpent at my Lord's table that day.

Item, that himſelfe doe attende before the ſalt, for my Lord's board, when it ſhalbe brought up, when ſtrangers ſhalbe there.

Item, that he ſuffer not the ſewer to goe to the dreſſer without two gentlemen and two yeomen at leaſt to waite on him.

Item, that he ſuffer no ſwearing, ſinging, noyſe, or diſorder, to be uſed at the dreſſer, at the ſerving forth of their Honnors meate; but that every man, in ſilent manner, doe abide there to receave the ſame, as the ſewer ſhall appoint, and doe goe up withall accordingly.

Item, that he appoint ſome of the gentlemen and yeoman waiters, with himſelfe, after he and they have dyned and ſupped, to come up to the great chamber, there to give their attendance (ſpeciallie when ſtrangers bee there) as apperteyneth.

Item, that he ſuffer no gentleman or yeoman waiter to ſtand with his hat on his head, or to ſitt or walke in the great chamber, after the bourdes be covered.

Item, that upon the repaire of any ſtrangers to the houſe, he give notice to the clarke of the kytchin of them and their company; and that himſelfe be ready to give their enterteynment, and to ſee them brought to their lodgeings; and to keepe them company as to their ſeverall callings ſhall appertayne, taking order that their lyveries be ſerved into their chambers accordinglie.

Item, that he do everie morning himſelfe, or ſome one of the gentlemen by his appointment, repare to the chamber of ſuche honnorable or worſhipfull perſonages as ſhall lodge in the houſe, to know what they want, and whether they pleaſe to have their breakfaſt.

Item, that he do ſpecially charge the groome of the chamber and the reſt of the waiters, not to ſuffer any diſhe of meate to be had or conveyed out of the chamber by any man whatſoever, except by the gentleman-uſher's appointment; nether any meate to be taken ſecretly out of any diſhe by any perſon whatſoever; but that all be ſtayed till the ſewer have voyded their Honnors' table; and that, in the carrying downe, none be ymbeſelled, taken, or broken.

Item, that he cauſe the uſher of the chamber every night to give intelligence to the clarke of the kytchin of the names of ſuche perſons as doe dyne or ſupp that day at their Honnors' table.

Item, that upon Frydayes and faſtinge-dayes, at night, he appoint, beſide himſelfe, fowre or ſix, as he thinketh beſt, to waite on their Honnors' bourd; and that none other but thoſe fowre or ſix, with the pantler, butler, and cellerer, be admitted to their Honnors' reverſion on thoſe nights; and yf any preſume (without his leave) to ſitt downe with them, that he cauſe the uſher of the hall to remove them thence.

Item, that he ſuffer no yeoman to play at cardes, tables, or cheſts, in the great chamber; and that ſuch gentlemen-waiters as ſhall play in the afternoone, do it at the ſyde bourde, and not at their Honnors' bourde, nor after the bourdes bee covered; nether at all upon the Sabboth or Lord's day.

Item, that he ſuffer no drawing or ſhewing of ſwords or daggers in the chamber, or withdrawing chamber; nor any wreſtling or ſtriving, or any noyſe or diſorder there to be uſed..

Item, that every gentleman whatſoever, other then the ſteward and comptroler, doe give their attendance for ſerving, or any other dutie to be performed at their Honnors' table, as they ſhalbe required and directed by the gentleman-uſher; and that ſucke of them as by turnes and his appointment ſhall ſitt at the ſtewarde's table, doo ymmediatly after dynner and ſupper repaire up to the greate chamber, to give their due attendance whilſt the waiters eate their meate; which yf he neglect to doo, then he to ſende for them.

Item, that he be carefull in theire Honnors' ſervice at home and abroade, both for himſelfe and others their Honnors' ſervants, to call upon them, that, in waiting abrode upon their Honnors, they keepe together in decent and comely order, gentlemen before, and yeomen after, as in his diſcreation ſhalbe thought moſt fitt for the ſhewe of their Honnors, and creditt of his officers and ſervants; avoiding all lyngring or ſtaying behind their Honnors, as though they were of divers companies.

Item, that he have a care to ſee the pages and footemen well governed, and do from tyme to tyme give them inſtruction for ſervice; and by no meanes to ſuffer them to uſe dicyng, gaming, or frequenting of alehouſes.

Item, that he diſcreetlie diſpoſe and appoint to everie the ſervants their lodgeinge in the houſe or elſewheare, with ſuch conveniencie as may beſt fitt their qualitie and place of ſervice; and ſee that the ſame be not altered but by his pryvitie and conſent.

Item, for all other orders by him to be directed and put in execution (which here are omitted), the ſame are referred to his diſcreation, as belonging to his office; wheareof his Lordſhip will allowe, and doe hereby give him full aucthoritie therin.

The Gentleman of the Horsse his Office.

Firſt, that he have a check-roll of all my Lord's ſervants in ordinarye, viz. of gentlemen, yeomen, and groomes, with addition of their place of ſervice; and the like of all my Lord's reteyners; and that as they ſhall alter in perſon or place, to renewe the clerk-roule accordinglie.

Item, that he have the like roule of all my Lord's horſſes and geldings, with the difference of thoſe that beare the name of houſe and winter geldings, and of ſommer nagges; and as the ſame horſſes, geldings, or naggs, ſhall decaie and be made away; and others renewed in their places, or for further ſtore, ſo to alter his roule from tyme to tyme accordinglie; and to give to the ſteward a copie thereof.

Item, that he make difference of horſſes, geldings, or naggs, for gentlemen, yeomen, and groomes, with preferment to the better ſorte, according to the mens places, and the beſt ſhewe for my Lord's ſervice; and that hee ſuffer no man to ryde upon any horſſe, geldinge, or naggs, but by his appointment, except their Honnors ſpecialiie do give commaundmente in that beehalf.

Item, that hee take order with the coachmen and groomes of the ſtable, for the ſafe-keeping and well-ordering of the coaches, ſaddles, bridles, clothes, and all other furniture belonging to that office, as maye bee for the beſt preſerving of them, and their Honnors' profitt; and that hee ſee them carefullie to keepe the ſame, according to his appointment; wherein yf they be negligent, or faile in performance of their duties, then to ſee them puniſhed.

Item, that hee take order with them, for huſbandlie uſage of the haye, and to apportionate the provender to be allowed to everye man's charge, according to the nomber of horſſes that are in houſe; the ſame provender to be beſtowed on the horſſes, without ymbeſeling or diminiſhing anye parte theareof; and that they receave in no man's hors, nor deliver forthe any provender or heye, but by the appointment of the gentleman of the horſſe, or of ſome other cheeſe officer in his abſence; and that he cauſe all the haye to bee ſpent in the ſtable to be made in bottles, foreſeeing alſo that the racks wante no ſtaves, therebie to avoyde waſte and ſpoile.

Item, that hee admitte no man to have anie horſſe or gelding kept in my Lord's ſtable, paſtures, or parks, but ſuche as are allowed by their Honnors' commaundment and appointment; and that ſuch as have horſſes ſo allowed, doo ryde them in my Lord's and their owne private buſines, and not his Lord's, except it be upon ſpeciall occaſion, which is lefte to the conſideration and diſcretion of the gentleman of the horſſe.

Item, that hee ſuffer none to take any my Lord's geldings out of the paſture without his lycenſe; nether ſuffer any of the groomes to lend out anye ſaddle, bridle, or other furniture, without his privytie or leave.

Item, to avoide over-many bills and reckonings, and to reduce all houſeholde expence into one accompt of the ſteward's, his Lordſhip's pleaſure ys, that theire bee no newe furniture, of what kinde ſoever, bought or taken upon credytte from the ſadler's, or anye other place, before the ſteward have ſeene the decaye and unſerviceablenes of the ould.

Item, to avoyd exceſſyve charge, his Lordſhip doth expreſslie commaund that there bee henceforth no fees, ether of horſſe, or any furniture to them, taken or required by the ſaid gentleman of the horſſe, other then ſuche as, after viewe taken of the unſerviceablenes of them by the ſteward, his Lordſhip ſhalbee pleaſed to give by his ſpeciall warrant or commaund.

Item, his Lordſhip's pleaſure ys, that the gentleman of the ſaid horſſe, twice in everie yeere at the leaſte, or oftener as occazion maie requier, ſhall deliver to the ſteward a note of all the horſſes and furniture decayed, and of every thing bought or ſould concerning the ſtable, or for the furniture of horſſes.

Item, hee ſhall weekelie exhibitte to the ſteward, in writing under his hand, a true note of all provender ſpente, and of all pettie proviſions belonging to the ſtable, as ſhooing, mending of ſadles, and ſuche like; which bills the ſteward ſhall ſee ſatiſfied, and make entrie of them into his booke of houſehold, and in the title of Stable Charges.

The Clerke of the Kitchen his Office.

Firſte, thet hee keepe a perfecte booke of all manner of proviſions made or to be made for the uſe of their Honnors' houſe, from tyme to tyme, as well ſuche as ſhalbee brought in of my Lord's ſtore and of preſents, as alſo of other that ſhalbee brought and provided, ether in groſſe or perticuler; and ſhall ſee to the keeping of the ſkoares and tallis of ſuche as ſhalbee received or delyvered out to or for the uſe of their Honnors' houſe.

Item, that he appointe the dyett for their Honnors, and for all other in the houſe, dailye, according to a proportion from tyme to tyme to bee conſulted and agreed uppon with his Lordſhip's ſteward and comptroller; and that hee have due conſideration herein according to the ſeaſon of the yeere, and as maye beſte be provyded in that countrey or place wheare their Honnours ſhall abide.

Item, that hee bee carefull in the yſſuing and expence of ſuche proviſions and accates as ſhalbe brought in, and to keepe his booke perfect for the ſame, wheareby maie appeare the cauſe of the expending of the ordinarie charge; which booke being caſte upp, hee ſhall exhibite once weekelie to the ſteward or comptroller, to be examined and ſubſcribed by one of them.

Item, that he ſuffer no ordinary breakfaſts to be allowed by the cookes, but upon occaſion to ſtrangers, for the better enterteynement of them and their ſervants, or els upon his owne diſcreation, or by his leave.

Item, that hee have a vigillant eye to the cooke, to ſee to the well and orderlie dreſſing and uſinge of ſuche victualls, ſpice, and fruite, as ſhalbee committed to their charge, and for the well huſbandringe of the ſame, as apperteyneth.

Item, that he bende his ſpeciall care to ſee that the yeomen of larrder, or ſuche as ſhall have the charge thereof, doo keepe the ſame, and the proviſions committed to him, cleanelie and ſweete; whearin yf hee faile of his dutie, then to enforme the ſteward of his defaulte.

Item, that hee doo everie weeke call to the pantler, butler, baker, and brewer, to yeelde their rekonings; what graine hath ben receaved, and what bread, flower, beare, or ale, hath ben delivered oute againe and expended; and that hee incerte the ſame into his owne booke, to be exhibited to the ſteward or comptroller at the ende of every weeke as aforeſaide.

Item, that he ſuffer no ſervant of the houſe, nor any other perſons, to come into the kitchin, or to have any recourſe into the ſame (except it be uppon ſpeciall cauſe); but to keepe the ſame cloſe and privat, to the end he himſelfe and the cookes maye performe their ſervice, and doe their duties, with quietnes, and not be diſturbed in the ſame.

Item, that the clarke do take ſpeciall regard to the expence of wood and cole in the kytchen, not ſuffering any more to be ſpent but as much as neceſſarilie may ſerve the turne, without waſte.

Item, that he doe diligently take heed to the ſkullerye-man, that hee doe ſkower and keepe his pewter veſſell verie cleane and unbruſed; and that daylie after dinner and ſupper he doe cauſe the ſaid ſkullerie-man to make ſearche for ſuche peeces of pewter as ſhalbe lacking, and to bring them into the ſkullerye againe for his diſcharge.

Item, that he ſhall call to the butler, pantler, cellerer, and other officers, for a true accompt of ſuche things as are expended in their offices, ether dayly or weekelie, as he ſhall thinke fitt.

Item, that he ſhall deliver no ſpices or ſuger to the cookes or others, but according to the allowance of the head officers; and thereof to the ſaid officers to give accompt weeklie.

For all other things here omitted concerning the office of the clarke of the kytchen, the ſame are referred to his diſcreation; the execution whearof their Honnors will allowe, and doo hereby give him full aucthoritie in that behalfe.

The Cooke's Office.

Firſt, that the cheefe cooke, for the tyme being, ſhall have ſpeciall regard for the dreſſing of their Honnors' dyet; and that he joyne with the clarke of the kitchin for their Honnors' better ſervice, as well for preſerving of all things within the larrder as otherwiſe.

Item, that he uſe all kinde of huſbandrye in the yſſuing oute of the meate, as may be for my Lord's honnor and profitt; and be carefull for his part that nothing be ymbeſelled or waſted by any of the kitchin, or other of my Lord's followers or ſervants.

Item, that he ſuffer no breakfaſts to be given ordinarilie within or withoute his charge, but by the appointment of the clarke of the kytchin, or of ſome one of my Lord's cheefe officers.

Item, that he have great regard to ſee the under-cooke to doo his dutie, and that the boyes of the kitchin be kept in due obedience, as well from raunging abroade, as for other abuſes within the houſe; and that he take order, as muche as in him lyeth, that they may come to prayers in the houſe, and ſpeciallie upon the Sabbath-day, to the publick exerſiſe of God's worſhipp.

Item, that he keepe his kitchin cloſe from repaire of charefolkes and other perſons having no neceſſarie buſines there; and eſpeciallie have good regard for harboring within his office any ſtranger, other then his appointed nomber.

The Usher of the Hall's Office.

Firſte, that hee bee in the hall, and ſee that the almoner (or ſome other appointed) have ſweeped and ordered the hall, by ſix of the clock in the morning in ſommer, and in winter by eight of the clock.

Item, that hee give dilligent attendaunce theare, for the enterteyninge of ſuche ſtraungers and ſerving-men as ſhall come in, and curteouſlye to offer them drynke at the barr.

Item, that hee ſuffer no ſervaunt of houſehold to tarry in the hall in the tyme of divine ſervice, but that he will him to goe in the chappell or place of prayer; and yf he refuſe to goe, to acquaint ſome one of the head officers therewith.

Item, that as ſoone as their Honnors' bourde in the great or withdrawing chamber is covered, he be ready, for dinner and ſupper, to ſee the boardes in the hall covered, and a baſon and ewer for the ſteward's table every Sabbath-day, or when ſtraungers be in the houſe.

Item, that hee ſuffer no man to play at cards, tables, or other game, during the tyme of prayer, or on the Sabbath-day, nor after the bourdes be covered; and that he ſuffer no dyce play at all in the hall.

Item, that, after the bourdes be covered, he doe in decent order bare-headed walke up and downe by the hall, to ſee all things orderlie obſerved; and that he depart not thence till all dinners or ſuppers be done.

Item, that, uppon the appearing of the ſewer, and his going to the dreſſer, he, ſtanding towards the upper end of the hall, doo, with a loude voice, ſay, "Gentlemen and yeomen, waite on the ſewer;" and, at the coming of their Honnors' meate, he be ready at the ſkreene to receave the ſewer, and then ſay, with a loude voice, "By your leave;" and cauſe all men in the hall to come to the other ſide of the hall, and be bare-headed whilſt their Honnors' meate paſſeth through.

Item, that when their Honnors' meate is ſerved up to the chamber, and the gentlewomens, that he call with a loude voice, ſaying, "Gentlemens ſervants, to the dreſſer;" and come himſelfe with the ſteward's meſſe; and that, when there are ſtraungers, he call the groomes of the ſtable to waite in the hall; and yf any refuſe, to give knowledge to ſome of the head officers.

Item, that he ſuffer no ſtraunger to ſitt downe with thoſe that waite, but by the appointment of ſome one of the head officers; and that all thoſe that attende in any office take their diett at the waiters' table, excepting the cooks and thoſe under them.

Item, that hee ſuffer none to ſitt at the ſteward's table, but ſuch as ſhalbe appointed to be called thereunto.

Item, that he cauſe all men to keepe ſilence in the hall, eſpeciallie in dynner and ſupper tyme.

Item, that he cauſe every man in the hall to be bare-headed when their Honnors' ſecond courſe or fruit doth paſſe through.

Item, that hee ſuffer no waiter to ſit downe before all the meate be brought out of the chamber, nor before the gentleman uſher be come downe, and be ready to ſit himſelfe.

Item, that he ſuffer no dogg to be fedd in the hall in the tyme of dynner and ſupper, but cauſe the porter to have them oute of the gates before dynner bee begonne.

Item, that he give notice, by the groome of the hall, to the porter, of the going of the ſewer to the dreſſer, that thereuppon he maye ſhut up the gates.

Item, that he ſuffer no man to drawe or ſhewe any ſworde or dagger in the hall.

Item, that he ſuffer no ſupper in the hall upon faſting-nights, but for the gentleman uſher, and ſuche waiters as he ſhall appoint to be with him, at their Honnors' reverſion.

Item, that he ſhall every night after ſupper give intelligence to the clerke of the kytchin what bread and beare was ſpent that day in the hall, and what nomber of ſtraungers dyned and ſupped there.

Item, that yf any loude talke ſhalbe made in the hall at any of the tables, and the ſame be not forborne upon the uſher's commandment to ſpeake ſoftlie; then ſhall the uſher, with a loude voyce, call the almoner to take away, which he ſhall doe preſently.

The Almoner's Office.

Item, that he purloyne no meate from the almes; but that he put the ſame in the place appointed for the poore, which place or veſſells he ſhall alwaies keep ſweet and cleane; and that he give the ſaid almes, with the conſent and helpe of the uſher of the hall and porter, to ſuche as are aged, poore, and in want, and not to ſtout rogues and idle perſons.

Item, that he ſhall every morning, by ſeven of the clocke in ſommer, and by eight in wynter, ſweepe the hall and places neare adjoyning, and make cleane the bourdes, benches, and fourmes thereof.

Item, that hee ſhall keepe a booke or ſkoare of all the wood and coll that is brought into the wood-yard; and ſhall ſee the ſame delivered forth to the fewiller, kytchin boyes, or others, according to the directions which he ſhall receave from the head officers.

Yoman of the Pantrye, Cellerer, and Ewyre.

Firſt, that hee be readie in his office at eight of the clocke in the morning to ſerve for breakfaſte, and before nine to cover for dynner; and beefore ſix at night to cover for ſupper; and at eight at night for lyverye.

Item, that hee ſuffer no breakfaſts in his office; but ſerve everie man at the barre, and ſuffer no man to come in, unleſſe it bee by the appointenient of ſome one of the cheefe officers.

Item, that hee bee readie, with his portepane on his arme, to ſerve the hall, when the uſher ſhall call for him.

Item, that hee keepe his booke perfecte of all ſuch breade as hee ſhall receave from the baker, both of manchette and cheate, of bothe ſortes, and the true nomber of the caſts and everye of them.

Item, that hee doe in tyme give warning to the baker for want of bread, to the end hee maye bake in tyme, therebie to have breade ſomewhat ſtale before it be eaten.

Item, that he chipp his bread orderlie without waſt, and that hee ſerve all tables in the hall with ſuch breade as ſhalbe ſtale.

Item, that hee bring his booke at everie weeke's end, and caſt upp, to the clerke of the kitchin, that it maie appeare what bread and what lightes have been receaved and ſpente everie daie the weeke before.

Item, that hee be carefull for the well uſinge of ſuche plate and other things apperteyning to his office, and of the naprie committed to his charge, that it be foulded up, and not caſte aboute, nether otherwiſe occupied then apperteyneth.

Item, that hee keepe an inventarye, indented betweene him and the clerke of the kitchin, of all ſuche plate, naprie, and other things committed to his charge; and that hee doe once a month give an accompt thereof to the clerke of the kitchin accordinge to the ſame inventarye.

The Yoman of the Buttrye.

Firſt, that hee bee readie in his office by eight of the clocke in the morning to ſerve for breakfaſts, and at eleven for dynner, and three in the afternoone for beaver, and at ſix for ſupper, and at eight at night for lyverye.

Item, that hee ſuffer no extraordinarie drinking in his office; but that hee doo ſerve all men at the barre, and ſuffer no man to come in unles hee bee brought in by ſome one of the cheiſe officers.

Item, that hee ſuffer no breakfaſts in his office, excepte hee bee appointed by ſome one of the cheiſe officers.

Item, that he preſerve ſo the beare and ale appointed for their Honnors' owne table, as yt be not made common, but ſo uſed as hee have veſſells and bottles one under another, and thoſe ſtale, to ſerve the ſame.

Item, that hee bee readye to ſerve the hall, at breakfaſts, dynner, and ſupper, when the uſher ſhall call.

Item, that he bring in writing, at everie weeke's end, to the clerke of the kitchin, what beare hath been ſpent that weeke.

Item, that hee keepe a perfecte note, from tyme to tyme, what beare he receaveth from the brewer; and at everye comming in of the ſame to give knowledge theareof to the clerke of the kytchin.

The Porter's Office.

Firſte, that he bee attendaunte at the gate, as well for repaire of ſtrangers, as repulſe of ſuche diſordered perſons as would come yn.

Item, that, upon notice had of the goeing of the ſewer to the dreſſer, he doe ſtraighte ſhutte the gates, and ſuffer no man to come in untill dynner be donne.

Item, that hee have a vigillant eye that no ſilver or other veſſell be carried oute of the gates.

Item, that hee ſuffer none in ſecreate manner to carrye awaye any breade or meate oute of the gate.

Item, that hee ſitt not at the gate without his ſtaff.

Item, that hee ſuffer no doggs, ſo neere as hee can, to lye in the cowrte, nor to come within the gate.

Item, that hee doo ſaffelie keepe all ſuch perſones as ſhalbee committed unto him, either by his Lordſhipp or his cheif officers.

Item, that hee ſuffer no vagabonds, rogues, or diſeazed perſones, to linger aboute the gates.

Item, that hee ſhall ſhutte the gates at neine of the clocke in wynter, and tenn in the ſommer; and after thoſe howers, that hee open not them againe beefore five of the clocke in the morninge in ſommer and ſix in winter, withoute urgent cauſe.

Item, that hee ſhalbee carefull that ſuch perſones as are forbidden by any of the head officers to come within the gates bee not ſuffered at any tyme hereafter to come in untill the ſaid head officers have ſignified unto him theire conſent thereunto.

Item, that yf at any tyme hee ſhall ſuſpecte any perſon to carry or convey oute of the gates any plate, pewter, lynnen, victuall, or any other thing whatſoever, under his cloake, coate, or otherwiſe, hee ſhall ſtaie the ſaid partie, and require of him from whence he received it, and whither he is to carrie the ſame; and therewith to acquainte ſome of the head officers.

Item, that none be ſuffered to carrie either wood or cole out of the gates, ſaving ſuch as have allowance, of whom he ſhall have ſpeciall warning.

Item, that hee doe ſee the great court within the gates to be kept clenlye, in as good order as it ought to be.

Item, that hee ſuffer no laundres to come within the gates to fetche any ſhirtes or lynnen from anye man to waſhe; but everie man ſo to order that matter, that the howſe be not incumbered with the reſorte of any ſuche perſonne.

THE OFFICE OF THE YOMAN OF THE WARDROPP.

Item, that he ſhall looke carefullie to all ſuche things as are committed to his charge, mending ſuche things as need, and preſerving the reſte by all good meanes he can.

Item, he ſhall eayre the bedding, and all other furniture, from tyme to tyme, as the ſame ſhall neede, that my Lorde ſuſtaine no loſſe thorough his defaulte.

Item, that he ſhall make readie and trimme up the chambers when ſtraungers doe come, according to their qualitie and degree.

Item, that he ſhall everie daye, when occaſion ſerveth, bringe downe out of the chambers ſuche plate, lynnen, pewter, and all other things, to the ſeverall offices whearunto they belonge.

THE YEOMAN OF THE GRANNARYE.

Item, that he ſhall receave all ſortes of grayne, and thereof keepe a perfett booke.

Item, he ſhall keepe ſweete, by often turning, all ſuche corne and graine as he receiveth; and deliver the ſame to the millner from tyme to tyme, as he ſhall have direction from ſome of the head officers, weying itt to the millner, and receiving it by weight againe, and the ſame to deliver to the baker and brewer accordinglie.

Item, hee ſhall give up weekely a true note, to ſome of the head officers, of all ſuche corne and graine as hath been delivered to the baker and brewer the ſame weeke.

THE BAKER.

Item, that he give diligent attendance in his office, and to be in readines to receave ſuche meale as the milner ſhall bringe, accordinge to the weight delivered by the yeoman of the granarie; and the ſame to bake, from tyme to tyme, as he ſhall receive direction from the clerke of kytchin and yoman of pantrey.

Item, that he ſhall make of everie ſtrike of meale . . . . of wheate loaves, every loafe weying . . . . ounces, and of manchetts . . . . . . every caſte weying . . . . . . ounces.

Item, that he ſhall deliver upp into the counting-houſe, everye weeke, to the head officers, a true note, what meale he hath received, what bread hath been baked, what flower hath been delivered into the paſterie, and what remeaneth in his cuſtodie.

THE BREWER.

Item, that he ſhall give dilligent attendance in his office at all tymes, and keepe his brewing-houſe and brewing veſſells cleane and ſweete.

Item, that he keepe his hoggſheads and other brewing-veſſells from bruſeing or rotting; and he carefullie looke to the hoopinge of his hoggſheads and other veſſells, that there be no loſſe to my Lord by his negligence.

Item, that he ſhall receave his malte from the millner by weight; and ſhall, from tyme to tyme, brewe ſuche and ſo muche beere of every quarter of malte as he ſhalbe appointed by the head officers.

Item, that he ſhall give knowledg to the butler, or ſome of the head officers, when his beere is readie to be tunned up, that they may appoint the groomes of the ſtable, fewiller, hindes, and ſome other which have their dyet in the houſe, to helpe to beſtowe the ſame in the butteries; and that they uſe no chare folkes at any tyme.

Item, their Honours' pleaſure and commandment is, that no officer of houſehold whoſoever ſhall challendge or take any fees, of what nature or kinde ſoever the ſame bee, unles their Honours, or one of them, do by their owne guifte and warrant appoint the ſame. Alſo their Honours' pleaſure and expreſſe commandment is, that no officer or ſervaunt in their houſe ſhall (without the knowledge or conſent of ſome of the head officers) uſe any chare folkes; but that all things which are to bee doone ſhalbe performed by his houſeholde ſervants.

Remembrances to be given in charge generally to my Lorde's officers and ſervauntes, gentlemen, yomen, and groomes.

Firſte, for the ſervyce of God and advauncemente of his glorye, and that everie one in his ſeverall callinge may the better learne to knowe his dutye, principallie towards God, and next towardes their Lordſhips and their ſubſtitutes, as likewiſe one to another, their Lordſhips pleaſure ys, that everye one without exception bee readie to bee at morninge and eveninge prayers upon the ringinge of the bell; and that none bee abſent at that tyme, excepte they bee ſpecially imployed aboute neceſſarie buſines, and that knonen to ſome of his Lordſhip's officers; for, thoughe their Lordſhips, uppon occaſion, may be ſometymes abſent themſelves, yet the exerciſe ſhalbee perfourmed for their houſehold; and therefore his pleaſure is, that ſuche as offende in this principall ſervice ſhall not be admitted to the next meale in the houſe with their Honnours' houſehold ſervaunts; and he that ſhall goe aboute to provide meate for ſuche an offender, ſhall incurr their Lordſhips' diſpleaſure, and bee puniſhed himſelfe alſo.

Item, that they uſe no manner of othes, or other irreligeous behaviour, wheareby God's name may be diſhonoured, or any other offended; but that they conforme their ſpeeche to ſuche good order, as all vayne and blaſphemous othes may be aboliſhed: for, after this admonition and warning given, their Honours' pleaſure is, that ſuche as ſhall continue that evill cuſtome, upon admonition given by my Lord's chaplin, or any other the head officers (if hee be not reclaymed) ſhall ſett in the ſtocks; and yf after he ſtill perſevere in that evill courſe, be diſcharged his Lordſhip's houſe, to avoide God's juſtice, threatned not onely towards them that ſweare, but alſo towards ſuch as ſuffer ſwearers to bee in their houſe.

Item, for the better performaunce of his Chriſtian dutie towards God and his ſervice, their Lordſhips inſtanlie deſier their houſehold chaplin for the tyme beeing to have a vigilant eye over all their ſervants, and to admoniſhe them in that behalfe, as they ſhall finde occazion; and alſo to enforme their Honors of thoſe whome hee perſeaves to be negligent herein, or to goe on in evell doeing, to the end they maye bee further reprooved, and, if cauſe require, to be diſmiſſed from their ſervice.

Item, that every one that wanteth inſtruction in the grounds of their faith and religion, doe duely repaire to the chaplin and preacher, at ſuche place and tyme as hee ſhall appoint, for their better helpe in that behalfe.

Item, that none other gentleman or yoman do preſſe into any office; but to take ſuche things as are neceſſarie for them at the barre, unleſſe upon ſpeciall cauſe.

Item, that the gentlemen and yeomen doe accompany all ſtrangers, according to their ſeverall degrees, and uſe ſtrangers with all kyndnes.

Item, that no gentleman or yeoman, or any other inferior, do depart the houſe without the lycenſe of the cheef officer, or ſome one of them; and for that ſome perhaps will contemptuouſly refuze to aſke lycenſe of any officer, their Lordſhips make it knowen heerebye, that himſelfe will not be troubled therein by anie his ſervants, withoute his ſaid officers, or ſome one of them, bee acquainted therewith, and ſo be a meane for them in that behalf.

Item, that none preſume to lodge out of the houſe, at any tyme, that hath lodging provided within the ſame, except hee give notice before to the officers, or ſome one of them, what moveth him ſo to doo.

Item, that none of my Lord's ſervants or followers be frequenters of ale-houſes or tavernes, to my Lord's diſhonor, and their own diſcredit.

Item, their Lordſhips pleaſure is, that there be due difference had betweene gentlemen, yomen, and groomes, both at home in his Lordſhip's houſe, and abroade in their waiteringe and following their Lordſhips; and that the ſame yeomen do not preſume to take to themſelves the gentlemens place, nether the groomes the yeomens place; but that they yeld place at all tymes, according to the places of ſervice that their Honnors have appointed them unto; and that they ſo accoumpte of all officers whome his Lordſhip hath or ſhall make choiſe of for the governmente of the houſe as apperteynethe.

Item, that there be no unſeemelie wordes given, or compariſons made one with another, to breede quarrells, nor anie ſwearinge or undecent wordes uttered one towards another, ſpeciallie to anye of the cheif officers.

Item, that they demeane themſelves curteouſlie to the cheif officers of the houſe; namelie, the ſteward, receyvor, comptroller, ſecretarie, gentleman uſher, gentlemen of the houſe, and clerke of the kytchen, and alwaies geve them that reverence that apperteinethe.

Item, that none adventure to picke or breake up anye lockes or dores of any houſe of office or chamber, but by the ſpeciall appointment of ſome of the head officers.

Item, that yf anye of his Lordſhip's ſervants finde himſelfe greeved with his or their allowance, they ſhall not uſe grudgeing or ſlanderous ſpeeches, tending to my Lord's diſhonor, or diſcreditt of any his officers; but ſhall come to the counting-houſe, to the head officers, to make his or their greevance knowen.

Item, that yf anie officer ſhall not give knowledge to the head officers of ſuch offences as belonge to his office (he knowing the ſame), he himſelfe for that his negligence or connivance ſhalbe puniſhed, as the offender ſhould have been.

Item, for all orders to be keapt in the houſe, their Honours have directed the ſteward and comptroller of the houſehold to ſee them executed; and yf anye gentleman, yoman, or groome whatſoever, ſhall hereafter ſeeme to finde faulte with any of the particuler officers for reſtraininge them the coming into his office, or other extraordinary commaundmente, let them not ympute yt as a faulte to the officers, but to their Honours' expres comandment and orders appointed in that behaulf.

Item, that their Honours doe will, commaunde, and enjoyne, all and ſingular their houſehold officers, and ſervants whoſoever, to ſhewe and behave themſelves reverendlie, orderlie, and obedientlie, to his ſteward and comptroller of houſehold, in the due execution of his office; remembring that they are appointed his Lordſhip's deputies, to governe and order his houſe, and have given unto them, by their Honours, full power and authoritie to execut that office, and thoſe orders before-mentioned.

Fynallie, their Honours doo hereby notifie, that ſuche as ſhall ſhewe themſelves willing and forward to obey theſe orders, and to take in curteous and thankfull manner the admonitions and reprehenſions given by the ſteward, comptroller, or other cheefe officers; they will, uppon their commendation, ſo ſtand and continue their good countenaunce and favoures for their preferments, as that they ſhalbee herebye incouraged to proceede in weldooinge. Contrariwize, thoſe that wante their commendation ſhall remeane uncountenaunced and alſo unrewarded; and upon their ſaid offence, after admonition for breaking theſe orders, or any of them, their Honours pleaſure and commaundemente ys, they ſhalbee diſcharged from their ſervice, and with diſpleaſure expelled the houſe.

Whereas the orders before written, and my abſolute pleaſure concerning the ſame, have been openlye read and declared, in the preſence of yourſelfe and my whole famylie, this preſent . . . .
Theſe are therefore to appoint and authorize you, yea and ſtraitlye to charge and command you, to putt in execution, and to ſee executed, as much as in you doth or maye conſiſte, all orders and directions before preſcribed, and any other heere omitted which maye any waie concerne my houſhold, as in your judgment and diſcreation ſhall ſeeme meete and convenyent for my honour and profitt, and not to omytt or ſuſpend the ſame in any wiſe. And whatſoever you ſhall doe, or cauſe to be doone, in the due execution of your office, I the Earle doe promiſe and bind myſelf to ratifie, confirme, and allowe, as my own act and deed, by theſe preſents. Given under my hand and ſeale, &c.

A breefe of all the charges and expences for the proviſion of my Lord's houſe.

	£.	s.	d.
Item, for fyftie-five beeves at £3. 10s. the beefe — —	191	10	0
Item, for 25 ſcore of muttons at £8. the ſcore — —	200	0	0
Item, for linges and other ſalte fiſhe	70	0	0
Item, for hopps, vineger, and other things — —	30	0	0
Item, for wines[1] for the yere	80	0	0
Item, for grocerie —	140	0	0
Item, for ſweetemeates —	20	0	0
Item, for freſhe acates for the whole yeere — —	260	0	0
Item, coles — —	80	0	0
The charge for the yeere[2]	1071	10	0
Item, for the ſupplie of lynnen for the whole yeere — —	20	0	0
Item, for the ſupplie of pewter, braſſe, and other kitchen furniture —	20	0	0
Item, for the ſupplie of flaſk, potts, and jackke — —	6	10	0
Item, for the ſupplie of bruſed and unfaſhioned plate —	5	0	0
The charge of the ſupplie of linnens, and other things for the yeere	51	10	0
Item, paid to his majeſtie for lands extended — —	55	0	0
Item, payable to the old countiſſe of Huntingdon — —	66	13	4
Item, payable to the mills and ferry at Donnington — —	26	0	0
Item, paieable for ſubſidies and fifteenes
Item, payable for divers annuities	50	0	0
The charges of rent and annuities for the yeere — —	197	13	4
Item, in wages to my ſervaunts of all ſorts — —	140	0	0
Item, for the footmens coats and other charge to them — —	20	0	0
Item, for their expences in going to London and other places —	20	0	0
Item, the charge of apparrell and other things for the pages —	30	0	0
The charge of wages, and of the pages and footmen, is — —	210	0	0
Item, for charge in buylding and repayring my houſes for a yeere —	100	0	0
Item, for paling and rayling in all my parkes — —	50	0	0
Item, for the charge of locks, caſements, and other yron things, for all my houſes, for the yeere —	20	0	0
Item, for the charge of hooping of hoggſheads, and mayntening of the brewing veſſels, for the yeere —	10	0	0
Item, the charge of keeping and weeding the gardens yeerely —	20	0	0
The charge of buylding, paling, and other things for the repaire of my houſes	200	0	0
Item, for the charge of horſes for his ſervants — —	60	0	0
Item, for the charge of ſadles, bridles, and other furniture, for my owne horſes	30	0	0
Item, for the charge of ſadles, bridles, and other furniture for the gentlemen, pages, yomen, and groomes —	40	0	0
Item, for the charge of coaches, and all other things belonging thereunto	30	0	0
Item, for the charge of ſhooinge my horſes of all ſorts yeerelie —	15	0	0
Item, for the yerelie charge of oxen for my lord's draught, and for waynes, ſhooing, and other things —	30	0	0
The charge of horſes, ſadles, and other ſtable furniture, for myſelf and my attendants, for the yeere —	205	0	0

Item,

---

[1] In 1577 the price of claret was £10. a ton; and in 1579 the price of ſack was raiſed from ten ducats the butt to thirteen. Unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, P. pp. 823. 991.

[2] "In the reign of Philip and Mary, ſir Thomas Cokaine, of Aſhbourne, Derbyſhire, the beſt houſe-keeper of his quality in the county, allowed his lady £50. a year for maintaining the family, one pound a year wages to each ſervant, and two pounds to the ſteward;" as I am told, ſays Dean Swift, "by a perſon of quality, who had ſeen the original account of his œconomy. The ſum of £50. (added to the advantages of a large domain) might be equal to about £500. a year at preſent." This note is from a pamphlet of Dean Swift, written in 1723, againſt enlarging the powers of biſhops in granting leaſes.

Item, for hawkes and the charge of them for the yeere —	20	0	0
Item, the charge of my houndes for the yeere — —	20	0	0
The charge for hawkes and houndes[1] for the yeere — —	40	0	0
Item, the charge of my apparrell for the whole yeere — —	200	0	0
Item, my ladie's allowance for the whole yeere — —	200	0	0
Item, the charge of my childrens apparrell for the yeere —	30	0	0
Item, for theire attendance for the yeere	30	0	0
Item, the charge of extraordinarie expences, in rewardes, guyftes, and otherwiſe — —	100	0	0
The charge of my apparrell and my ladie's, childeren, and other extraordinarie expences, for the yeere —	560	0	0
Item, the charge of my lord's ſuites in lawe yeeraly — —	120	0	0
Item, the charge of my lord's goinge to London in the terme —	200	0	0
The charge of my ſuits in lawe and going to London —	320	0	0
The total ſum of al manner expences for the whole yeere —	2855	13	4

A check roll of all my officers and ſervants which are allowed their diet in my houſe, taken the 20th day of Auguſt, 1609.

Mr. Harvey, ſteward
Mr. Davinport, Mr. Kerrey, gentlemen uſhers
Mr. Wright, clerk of the kitchin
. . . . . . gentleman of the horſe
Michaell Baughtye, yeoman of the horſe
John Burrowes, John Holland, yomen uſhers
Raph Goodwin, head-cooke
John Judſon, uſher of the hall
Davyd Parry, yeoman of the cellar
Georg Tompſon, yeoman of the butterie
Thomas Wallis, yeoman of the pantrey
Thomas Maſham, yeoman of the wardrop
Edward Hibbard, Richard Kinſey, baker and brewer
John Dutton, yeoman of the granarie and porter
Richard Burke, under-cooke
Robert Midleton, almoner
George Flynthurſt, feweller
Thomas Biſhopp, ſlaughterman
Robert Mantle, ſcullerieman
Thomes Lawkin, John Yates, ſcullions
Thomas Wright, ſen. Thomas Wright, jun. gardeners
Fardarra and Davyd, footmen

Gentlemen waiters, pages, yeomen, and groomes;

Mr. Chetwin
Mr. Nevell Pañe
Mr. Bewley
Mr. Henſhaw
William Waſhington
Nyc. Martu
Edw. Foſter, faulkner
Thomas Poyner
Thomas Blaze
William Faulkner
George Willſon
Henrie Armeſton
Henry Ford

William Smith, coachman
John Meller, huntſman
HughSpenſer, Thomas Hall, huſbandmen
Mr. Harvie's man
Mr. Davenport's man
Mr. Kerrey's man
Mr. Chetwin's man
The faulkner's man
The huntſman's boye
The boye of the ſtable
The coachman's boye

Theſe two have their meat in the houſe:

Henry Butler
Richard Vincent
Old Nurſe Hoogh
Wydow Weaver
Edward Audytor
Thomas Chicken
Mrs. Fiſher, Mrs. Clavers, gentlewomen
Margaret Watts, Elizabeth Weever, chamber-maids
Nurſe Sheepey
Nurſe Jomſon
Sara Daubney, to attend the children
Elizabeth Butler, Elizabeth Clarie, Ruth Midlelon, launder-maides

The number of my ſervants, both men and women, are — — 61
The number of my gentlemen — 4
The number of all that dine and ſup daylie, beſides ſtrangers and others that come out of the towne, are, — — — 68

Aug. 18, 1614, the king, in his progreſs, came to The Lord's Place[2], the earl of Huntingdon's houſe in Leiceſter; and there lay. The mayor and his brethren, and the forty-eight, attended the king at the ſaid earl's houſe, and there received him; where Mr. John Wincoll made a ſpeech in Latin unto his Majeſty at the court-gates, where the King ſate in his coach, and heard the ſame very pleaſantly; and his Highneſs did much commend the ſaid ſpeech, and gave Mr. Wincoll his hand to kiſs; and Mr. Mayor carried the mace before the King up into the preſence chamber[3].

An indenture, dated April 23, 1615, between Henry earl of Huntingdon, and George Haſtings, of Aſhby, eſq. his brother, witneſſes, that whereas Sarah lady Zouch had theretofore claimed an eſtate at Evington, for term of her life, as parcel of her jointure; which eſtate was void in law, by reaſon that Henry earl of Huntingdon that made it was, at the time of making thereof, but tenant for life of the ſaid manor, the reverſion being then in the late queen, &c. Nevertheleſs, the ſaid Henry, &c. was pleaſed, at the inſtance of the ſaid lady Zouch, and in recompence of her ſaid pretended right, to give to George Haſtings and Edward Haſtings his brothers (the natural ſons of the ſaid lady Zouch) the yearly annuity of £300. (£200. to George, and £100. to Edward): And further, at the ſpecial inſtance and requeſt of the ſaid lady Zouch, and in conſideration of natural affection, and for the better encouraging of him towards the ſtudying of the common laws of the realm, granted to the ſaid George an annuity of £200. out of lands parcel of the manor of Packington on the Heath[4].

July 18, 1615, the earl of Huntingdon was appointed lord-lieutenant of the counties of Leiceſter and Rutland; cuſtos rotulorum for Leiceſterſhire, ſteward of the dutchy of Lancaſter, and maſter of the royal hart-hounds.

To this noble earl was addreſſed a compliment to the Engliſh nation on its excellent race of hounds:

"Illuſtri et prænobili domino, domino Henrico Haſtings, comiti Huntingdoniæ, venationis cervinæ apud ſereniſſimum Magnæ Britanniæ regem præfecto.

"Johannes Sigiſmundus[5], Dei gratiâ, marchio Brandenburgenſis,

---

[1] See note 5.

[2] This houſe was formerly much noted for the entertainment of perſons of the greateſt quality. The firſt mention that I find made of it, it was called Reynolds Houſe or Place. In 1569 it was purchaſed by Henry earl of Huntingdon. It afterwards came to a gentleman of Northamptonſhire, from whom the Corporation purchaſed it about 1642; and in 1702 ſold it to Simon Barwell, who in part demoliſhed it. Carte, MS.

[3] King James's Progreſſes, p. 118.

[4] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 61. b.

[5] John Sigiſmund, elector of Brandenburg, third ſon of Joachim the Second, ſucceeded his brother Joachim Frederic in the electorate of Brandenburg in the year 1608. He had been married at Konigſburg to Anne, only daughter of Albert duke of Pruſſia, who was heireſs of that dukedom and of the ſucceſſion of Cleves. This ſucceſſion conſiſted of the countries of Juliers, Berg, Cleves, Marck, Ravenſburg, and Ravenſtein; too delicious a morſel not to tempt the avidity of thoſe who had the expectation of any ſhare in it. The elector John Sigiſmund, and Wolfgang William duke of Neuburg, agreed to put themſelves in poſſeſſion of the conteſted ſucceſſion; with a reſervation, however, of their reſpective rights. This convention was forwarded by the conduct of the emperor Radolph, who wanted to ſequeſter the duchies belonging to this ſucceſſion. In fact, the archdenburgenſis, Boruſiæ, Sedinorum, Pomeraniæ, Caerſſuborum, Vandalorum, Croſnæque & Camoſiæ in Sileſiâ dux; burgravius Norenbergenſis, Rugiæque princeps. Salutem benevolentiſſimam, & officiorum noſtrorum promptitudinem. Nos, illuſtriſſime & generoſiſſime domine comes, ſemper animum in illud, quomodo eâ, quæ in venatione uſui ſunt, eoque ſpectantia, nobis, tum in noſtris, tum etiam vicinorum & aliorum terris comparemus intentum habemus. Ad verò cum jam temporis canes nobis venatici deſunt; & ex relatum multorum (qui ob idem generoſitatem veſtram ſummis laudibus efferunt) cognovimus generoſitatem veſtram, non ſolum inſtrumentis venatoriis, verùm etiam omnibus eo pertinentibus, præſertim ejuſmodi canibus, ſatis abundè inſtructum eſſe (quod & laudabile & glorioſum eſt); rogamus, ſi fieri poteſt, ne nobis aliquot canes, ad venationem bene educatos V. G. qui, quales optamus & volumus ex noſtrâ à pedibus cognoſcet deneget. Nos viciſſim, ſi ſimile, vel majus quid generoſitas veſtra deſideraret atque exoptaret, nequaquam recuſabimus; ſed cum voluntate benevolâ promptâque & dementiani[1]."

May 15, 1616, he was one of the peers on the trial of the earl and counteſs of Somerſet, for poiſoning ſir Thomas Overbury. In the ſame year he obtained from king James I. a grant of lands in Leiceſterſhire[2]; and in December purchaſed certain lands at Packington, which had been ſettled on his brother captain Edward, who was then embarking with ſir Walter Raleigh on his expedition againſt the mines of Guiana:

"Be it known, &c. that I, Edward Haſtings, of Aſhby de la Zouch, in the county of Leiceſter, eſq. have made my ſpecial and humble ſuit unto the right honourable Henry earl of Huntingdon, my dear brother, that he will be pleaſed, for the ſum of DCLXXXli. of lawful money, &c. paid unto me by my brother George Haſtings, eſq. for the furniſhing me towards my intended voyage to Guiana, to accept my ſurrender, as well of one annuity, &c. of cli. which his lordſhip was formerly pleaſed, out of his mere bounty and brotherly love, &c. to grant unto me for a term of years, if I ſhall ſo long live, out of certain lands in Packington on the Heath, in the counties of Leiceſter and Derby; as alſo of another annuity, &c. of xxli. which his lordſhip, out of his mere bounty and love, hath been pleaſed to pay unto me; and, &c. that his lordſhip will pleaſe to grant unto my ſaid brother the ſaid annuities for term of his life, in conſideration of the ſaid ſum of money paid unto me by my ſaid brother, &c. In witneſs whereof I have hereunto put my hand and ſeal, the 2d day of December, in the 14th year of, &c. king James, anno 1616[3]."

In 1617, the corporation of Leiceſter agreed to give to the earl of Huntingdon, againſt the king's coming to Aſhby, one yoke of fat oxen, worth £13. 6*s.* 8*d.* or £14.[4] In the ſame year the earl obtained a grant of free-warren for his lands in Leiceſterſhire[5]; and alſo, by letters patent, March 11, 1617-18, licence to keep yearly within the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch two fairs, the one on the Tueſday in Whitſun week, and the other on St. Bartholomew's day; together with a court of pie-powder to be held by the ſteward of the manor during the ſaid fairs[6].

Dec. 27, 1627, the earl of Huntingdon was thus vindicated, by the lords of the council, againſt ſome aſperſions which had been unhandſomely caſt on him[7]:

"After our very hearty commendations to your lordſhip; we perceive, by your letters, that upon ſome cauſes lately fallen out, you think yourſelf to ſuffer much in honour, until you be righted. We therefore have ſtrictly examined the account, tendred on your lordſhip's behalf by Mr. Riding[8]; as alſo queſtioned ſir Henry Shirley for his carriage towards you, and your deputy-lieutenants: and as we found reaſon to juſtify your lordſhip, though perhaps by the directions you had given the country were put to ſome more charges than the occaſions of ſervice did ſince require; ſo for the diſreſpect given your lordſhip, and the ſlighting your deputy-lieutenants by ſir Henry Shirley, we have thought fit to cenſure and to puniſh him, as the cauſe well deſerveth: aſſuring your lordſhip, that both your honour and your actions, tending to advance the king's ſervices, as hitherto they have done, will ever be nobly eſteemed and preſerved by us. And ſo we bid your lordſhip very heartily farewell. Your lordſhip's loving friends,

Tho. Coventry, L. S. Marleburgh. H. Mancheſter.
Pembroke. Montgomery.
Theo. Suffolk. J. Bridgwater. Morton. Conwey.
Carliſle. Holland. R. Dunelm.
Guil. Bathon. & Wells.
T. Edmonds. John Savile. J. Coke. Rich. Weſton.
Hum. May."

This buſineſs was again diſcuſſed in the Houſe of Peers, June 11, 1628; when the following proceedings were entered on the records of the Houſe:

"The Lords, having examined the carriage of ſir Henry Sherley towards the earl of Huntingdon, lord lieutenant of the county of Leiceſter, and heard what could be ſaid on both ſides, do order, that the ſaid ſir Henry Sherley ſhall ſtand committed during pleaſure; and that he ſhall, here at the bar, acknowledge his ſorrow for the great offences he hath committed, in laying aſperſions and ſcandals upon the honour of ſo noble a perſon and peer of this realm as the ſaid earl of Huntingdon is, and aſk pardon of all the Lords in general for it, and of the earl of Huntingdon in particular, and promiſe that, by his future carriage, he will endeavour to make amends to the Lords in general, and to the ſaid earl in particular, for his former offences. And becauſe divers things, tending to the diſhonour of the ſaid earl, were ſpoken by the ſaid ſir Henry Sherley in the hearing of many; their Lordſhips have thought it agreeable to their juſtice, and care of ſo noble and well-deſerving a member of this Houſe as the ſaid earl is, that thus much may be publiſhed by the Judges at the next aſſizes at the borough of Leiceſter, that all men may know how clear from the leaſt blemiſh the honour of the ſaid earl doth ſtand."—"Sir Henry Sherley, priſoner in The Fleet, for ſcandalizing the earl of Huntingdon (by order of June 7), was this day brought to the bar, where he made the acknowledgement and ſubmiſſion aboveſaid, which the Lords accepted of; and then he was withdrawn.—The earl of Huntingdon gave the Lords thanks for their noble care to clear his honour; and promiſed not to trouble the ſaid ſir Henry Sherley by any other ſuit for the ſaid ſcandals; and deſired the Lords that ſir Henry might be enlarged. All which was ſignified unto the ſaid ſir Henry, being at the bar again, and that they were ordered by the Houſe; and that the publication of his ſubmiſſion (ut ſupra) at the next aſſizes is left unto the ſaid earl of Huntingdon[9]." Oct. 19, 1628, the earl of Hunt-duke Leopold was going to ſeize them, but was prevented by the Proteſtant princes, who formed the famous alliance, known by the name of The Union, into which John Sigiſmund was one of the firſt that entered. In order to counteract this Union, the Catholic princes concluded a treaty of the like nature at Wurtzburg, which was called The League. The elector had the Dutch on his ſide, who were afraid of the Imperial ſequeſtration; and the duke of Neuburg was favoured by Henry IV. king of France; but at the very time this prince was preparing to aſſiſt him, he was aſſaſſinated by Ravaillac. The elector had tried to come to an agreement with the duke of Neuburg: they had an interview for this purpoſe; but in the heat of this diſpute, John Sigiſmund happening to give this prince a box on the ear, the conferences were broke off. By this ſpecimen we may form a judgement of the politeneſs and manners of that time. John Sigiſmund had the adminiſtration of Pruſſia during the madneſs of his father in law duke Albert. He received alſo of Sigiſmund III. king of Poland, the inveſtiture of Pruſſia, for himſelf and his deſcendants; which was the third inveſtiture that had been granted to the electoral family. On the death of Albert in 1618, John Sigiſmund entered into the entire poſſeſſion of Pruſſia. This elector had embraced the ſect of Calvin in 1614 to pleaſe the inhabitants of the country of Cleves, who were to become his ſubjects. And in 1619, finding himſelf broken with age and infirmities, reſigned the government to his ſon George-William, and died not long after.

---

[1] The laſt word is evidently wrong; but ſo it is in the tranſcript in Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 60.

[2] 4 Pars Original. 14 Jac. I. Rot. 192.

[3] Harl. MSS. 3881. f. 61. b.

[4] Corporation Records.

[5] 3 Pars Original. 15 Jac. I. Rot. 13.

[6] 6 Pars Original. 15 Jac. I. Rot. 38.

[7] The particulars of this unpleaſant diſpute, which originated from a quarrel concerning ſir Henry Shirley's hawking in the grounds of the earl of Huntingdon, are related in Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 62. b. &c.

[8] See p. 590.

[9] Journals of the Lords, vol. VIII. p. 849.

ingdon was in like manner vindicated in the Star-chamber, from a ſimilar attack which had been made on his character by ſir William Faunt [1].

In 1630, his lordſhip was at the head of a general commiſſion of knighthood [2]; for the execution of which office he received the following inſtructions;

"1. Firſt, upon the receipt of this our commiſſion, you are to meet together, and by your joint conſents to adviſe and reſolve of the fitteſt times and places, and manner, for the executing of this our commiſſion with the moſt expedition and beſt advantage for our ſervice.

"2. Againſt the times of your farther meeting, you ſhall uſe your beſt endeavours, by yourſelves and by others, to inform yourſelves of all the perſons who by the law and by the tenor of this our commiſſion ought to make gree with us for their fines in this caſe, and of their eſtates, lying as well within this county as in any other county of this realm.

"3. To that end you ſhall ſend for the under-ſheriff, eſcheator, and feodary of the county, for the high conſtables, bailiffs, petty-conſtables, and ſuch others as in your judgements ye think fitteſt, for true information herein; all which, or as many of them as you ſhall find for, we charge and command to attend you accordingly, and give their beſt aſſiſtance for this our ſervice.

"4. That, beſides theſe informations, ye ſhall inſtruct yourſelves, by the view of the ſubſidy-rolls, and the book of the freeholders of that county, the muſter-rolls, and the books for collection for the poor in the ſeveral pariſhes; all which we command to be brought and ſhewed unto you when you ſhall require the ſame.

"5. In making your compoſitions with any, ye ſhall not accept of any ſum under £10.; and ye ſhall raiſe it to a greater proportion, according to the ability of the party compounding; wherein, in the general, we direct that he that is ſet at lands in the ſubſidy-book ſhall pay at leaſt double the rate at which he is aſſeſſed; viz. if at £20. lands, to pay £50.; and if at £20. goods, to pay £40.; and ſo in that proportion.

"6. If you find any who hath a leſs proportion of revenue in lands, yet enough to charge him according to the law, and he hath a better eſtate in goods or other perſonal eſtate; ye ſhall then have reſpect to his entire eſtate, both real or perſonal, in making your compoſition.

"7. In making theſe compoſitions, you may guide yourſelves by the precedents which the lords and other our commiſſioners have made here above, that as near as may be there may be an equal proceeding with all, having due reſpect to their eſtates and qualities; and with thoſe who are in commiſſion of the peace, ye ſhall make no compoſition with any under the ſum of £25. it being to be preſumed that they are all of good eſtates anſwerable thereunto.

"8. For your better diſcretion with whom you are to deal in this caſe, you are to take knowledge, that all baronets who were not knighted at our coronation or before; all knights who have received that order ſince that time; all who have lands or rents to £40. yearly value, although held in ſocage, or though held of common perſons, or of us by a meſne tenure; all who have but an eſtate of freehold for life only; are liable to this fine.

"9. If any ſhall refuſe or neglect to come before you, or when they are come to make gree with you on your behalf, you ſhall certify their names and places of habitation.

"10. If any ſhall alledge they have already compounded and paid, and ſhall ſhew their tally or conſtat, they are to be diſcharged; or if they ſhall alledge that they are not yet returned by the ſheriff, or ſhall make any other excuſe, or give any reaſon for their diſcharge or refuſal, you are to certify the ſame particularly, with the names of the parties, and ſeveral allegations, to the lords our commiſſioners reſiding here, that, upon conſideration had thereof, ſuch farther courſe may be taken concerning them as ſhall be agreeable to the law, and beſt for our ſervice.

"11. When any do compound with you, you ſhall either receive thoſe monies in hand, or appoint them a ſhort day when to pay the ſame, which ſhall be within ten days after, to be paid to ſuch of you as we ſhall appoint to be our collector; and ye ſhall make a certificate thereof alſo particularly to our lord treaſurer, or to our court of Exchequer, under your hands, or the hands of two of you at leaſt, not being our collector; and the acquittances of our collector, teſtifying the receipt thereof, ſhall be their diſcharge who pay the ſame.

"12. The moneys being received, the collector is to ſend the ſame unto our receipt within ten days after it is received for the counties near hand (for the North and the more remote counties 30 days); to be paid to the hands of Edward Carue, eſq. one of our tellers there.

"13. You ſhall certify us, or the lords of our council, or our lord treaſurer, from time to time, of your proceedings as often as you have cauſe and opportunity; but the commiſſion itſelf to be returned as is thereby directed. Jo. West [3]."

The names of ſuch as Mr. Chamberlaine, the under-ſheriff, did return unto my lord and the reſt of the commiſſioners, at Aſhby, Sept. 30, 1630.

East Goscote, 33.

Willielmus Jeater, de Skeffington, ar.
Robertus Barford, de Skeffington, ar.
Valentinus Bale, de Humberſton, ar.
Georgius Smyth, de Queniborough, ar.
Johannes Danvers, de Thruſſington, gen.
Georgius Savadge, de Walton ſuper Would, ar.
Samuel Ballard, de Wimeſwould, gen.
Jacobus Olliver, de Eaſt Norton, gen.
Willielmus Goddard, de South Croxton, gen.
Valentinus Allen, de South Croxton, gen.
Robertus Pauley, de South Croxton, gen.
Robertus Sharpe, de Friſby ſuper Wreake, gen.
Thomas Bickerton, de Beby, gen.
Theophilus Cave, de Barrowe ſuper Sore, gen.
Laurencius Maidwell, de Barrowe ſuper Sore, gen.
Radulphus Woodcocke, de Keyham, gen.
Georgius Noble, de Rereſby, gen.
Sampſonus Wayes, de Rotherby, gen.
Henricus Pillington, de Gaddeſby, gen.
Willielmus Barrett, ſen. de Wimeſwould, gen.
Henricus Ironmonger, de Burton ſuper Ould, gen.
Thomas Bennett, de Queniborough, gen.
Gilbertus Berrey, de Queniborough, gen.
Willielmus Reade, de Segrave, gen.
Radulphus Wells, de Thurmaſton, gen.
Thomas Wells, de Thurmaſton, gen.
Georgius Segrave, de Walton, gen.
Godfridus Morrice, de Walton, gen.
Johannes Storer, de Thruſſington, gen.
Johannes Morrice, de Aſfordby, gen.
Willielmus Gregorye, de Aſfordby, gen.
Johannes Barrowes, de Lipton, gen. et Thomas Bodeley, de Syſon, gen.

West Goscote, 20.

Thomas Babington, de Rothley, ar.
Henricus Skipwith, de Knighthorpe, ar.
Johannes Davenport, de Burley Parke, ar.
Henricus Duport, de Shepeſhead, ar.
Devereux Aſton, de Onlip, ar.
Willielmus Danvers, de Rothley, gen.
Thomas Grey, de Langley, gen.
Gilbertus Morewood, de Nether Seale, gen.
Robertus Bainbrigge, de Aſhby de la Zouche, gen.
Thomas Digby, de Aſhby de la Zouche, gen.
Johannes Swyndell, de Bredon, gen.
Willielmus Eyre, de Belton, gen.
Hamlett Toone, de Belton, gen.

---

[1] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 68. b.

[2] This was one of the grievances complained of in parliament in the beginning of the diſputes with king Charles; and produced in 1641 (17 Car. cap. 20.) an act "that none ſhall be compelled to take the order of knighthood;" which ſtates in the preamble, "that it had been an antient cuſtom, or uſage, of the realm of England, that men of full age being not knights, and being ſeiſed of lands or rents of the yearly value of £40. or more (eſpecially if their ſeiſing had ſo continued by the ſpace of three years next paſt) might be compelled by the king's writ to receive or take upon them the order or dignity of knighthood, or elſe to make fine for the diſcharge or reſpite of the ſame; and that many which were altogether unfit, in regard either of eſtate or quality, to receive the ſaid order or dignity, were put to grievous fines or other vexations for the ſame." Scobell's Acts, p. 20.

[3] Carte's MSS. in the Bodleian Library, FFF. N° 18.

Henricus Smyth, de Longe Whatton, gen.
Willielmus Raundon, de Kegworth, gen.
Ambroſius Saliſbury, de Raunſton, gen.
Franciſcus Smalley, de Mountſorrell, gen.
Jacobus Marſhall, de Oſgathorpe, gen.
Thomas Hebb, de Loughborrowe, gen. et Thomas Monck, de Mountſorrell, gen.

FRAMLAND, 16.

Edwardus Hartopp, de Buckminſter, baronettus.
Henricus Berkley, de Wymondham, baronettus.
Rogerus Smyth, de Edmondthorpe, ar.
Robertus Boothbey, de Dalby Parva, ar.
Rutland Terwhitt, de Hoſe, ar.
Johannes Warringe, de Eaſtwell, ar.
Jervaſius Warringe de Eaſtwell, gen.
Arthurius Noell, de Stoneſby, ar.
Thomas Armſtrong, de Harby, gen.
Willielmus Coleby, de Harſton, gen.
Ricardus Elſton, de Muſton, gen.
Rogerus Waldram, de Scalford, gen.
Edwardus Darker, de Scalford, gen.
Samuel Wrey, de Nether Broughton, gen.
Jacobus Aſkew, de Sewſterne, gen. et Willielmus Hurſt, de Hollowell, gen.

SPARKENHOE.

Willielmus Noel, de Kirkby Malory, ar.
Thomas Plumbe, de Marſton, ar.
Johannes Stafford, de Huncote, ar.
Willielmus Burton, de Linley, ar.
Robertus Bradſhawe, de Orton ſuper Montem, ar.
Jacobus Beverley, ſen. de Huccleſcote Grange, ar.
Thomas Everard, de Heather, gen.
Ricardus Bennett, de Newparke, gen.
Mr. . . . . . . Jackſon, de Horſepoole Grange, gen.
Thomas Baniſter, de Upton, gen.
Willielmus Wilkinſon, de Shakerſton, gen.
Radulphus Burton, de Higham, gen.
Nicholaus Foxley, de Baſſett-houſe, gen.
Edwardus Stourton, de Narborough, gen.
Johannes Roe, de Normanton, gen.
Henricus Meade, de Narborough, gen.
Robertus Hinde, de Witherley, gen.
Thomas Crofts, de Peckleton, gen.
Willielmus Bent, de Enderby, gen.
Abrahamus Wright, de Oſbaſton, gen.
Thomas Goodall, de Sheepey Parva, gen.
Thomas Hoode, de Bardon Parke, gen.
Thomas Bayly, de Le Mythe, juxta Shepey Magna, gen.
Johannes Swynfen, de Sutton Cheyney, gen.
Brianus Bell, de Coventrie, gen. ꝑte in Stoke-gouldinge.
Galfridus May, de Sutton Cheyney, gen.
Henricus Styan, de le Fryth, juxta Leic. gen.
Franciſcus Shenton, de Barwell, gen.
Johannes Farmer, de Carlton, gen.
Robertus Tarlton, de Shenton, gen. et Edwardus Bray, de Stoke-goldinge, gen.

GOODLAXTON, 18.

Anthus Fawnte, de Cleybrooke, ar.
Henricus Stareſmore, de Frolleſworth, ar.
Willielmus Huit, de Dunton, ar.
Nicholaus Benſon, de Shawell, gen.
Edwardus Wright, de Sutton, gen.
Willielmus Yard, de Coſby, gen.
Richardus Bent, de Coſby, gen.
Thomas Belgrave, de North Kilworth, gen.
Willielmus Sherman, de le Newarke, prope burg. Leic. gen.
Johannes Bowrne, de Knaptofte, gen.
Fulcus Button, de Kimcott, gen.
Johannes Coates, de Knighton, gen.
Willielmus Stephens, de Glenn Parva, gen.
Thomas Simpkin, de Glenn Parva, gen.
Richardus Jacombe, de Glenn Parva, gen.
Willielmus Brookes, de Glenn Parva, gen.
Thomas Wyatt, de Arnſby, gen. et Richardus Maunsfeild, de Arnſby, gen.

GARTRIE, 37.

Arthurus Haſelrigge, de Noſeley, baronettus.
Willielmus Halford, de Welham, ar.
Thomas Digby, de Keythorpe, ar.
Willielmus Cave, de Pickwell, ar.
Willielmus Borough, de Borough, ar.
Thomas Brudnell, de Staunton Wivell, ar.
Edmundus Bale, de Saddington, ar.
Willielmus Streete, de Halloughton, ar.
Georgius Neale, de Glen Magna, gen.
Robertus Tirringham, de Leic'. gen.
Thomas Chapman, de Foxton, gen.
Willielmus Bent, de Billeſdon, gen.
Thomas Nurſe, de Leic'. gen.
Henricus Wigley, de Scraptofte, gen.
Thomas Wigley, de Scraptofte, gen.
Johannes Needham, de Burton Overy, gen.
Franciſcus Chamberlayne, de Newton, gen.
Willielmus Sharpe, de Roulſton, gen.
Franciſcus Hunt, de Halloughton, gen.
Georgius Walker, de Harborowe, gen.
Georgius Ward, de Carlton Curlue, gen.
Johannes Needham, de Ilſton, gen.
Philippus Gueſt, de Ilſton, gent.
Rogerus Dale, de Knoſton, gen.
Gamaliel Purefey, de Mowſeley, gen.
Edmundus Haſſlewood, de Friſby, gen.
Georgius Buſwell, de Kibworth Harcourte, gen.
Elias Strelley, de Weſt Langton, gen.
Thomas Smyth, de Tur Langton, gen.
Edwardus Dent, de Biſhopp's Fee, gen.
Richardus Wilcock, de Knoſton, gen.
Willielmus Newby, de Ilſton, gen.
Auguſtinus Fiſh, de Bowden Magna, gen.
Johannes Johnſon, de Bowden Magna, gen.
Willielmus Johnſon, de Bowden Magna, gen.
Thomas Hopkins, de Theddingworth, gen. et Willielmus Collins, de Gumley, gen.[1]

In 1634, the corporation of Leiceſter preſented to the earl of Huntingdon and his counteſs, and the counteſs of Derby, a tierce of claret wine, four gallons of ſack, and two ſugar-loaves of 6 or 7 pounds apiece; and in 1637 they agreed to take the maſterſhip of the Hoſpital, and to give to the earl of Huntingdon the ſum of money which he paid to Mr. Fowkes, late maſter of it[2].

The two following letters to this noble earl relate to the public ſtate of the kingdom at that period:

"Whitehall, the laſt of June, 1638.

1. "After our hearty commendations to your lordſhip. It is well known how neceſſary it is to continue the muſtering and exerciſing of the trained bands, and with what care and particular directions we have recommended the ſame unto you, from time to time: Leſt, therefore, it ſhould be conceived that there is at this preſent leſs cauſe of the ſame than formerly, for that we have not this year written unto you ſo early as we were accuſtomed; the true cauſe hereof being the fear of ſpreading the infection by theſe or the like aſſemblies of people together (which danger is now, thanks be to God, averted); we have therefore thought good hereby to pray and require your lordſhip to give order to your deputy-lieutenants for the muſtering and exerciſing of the trained bands, &c. And we do expect and require that your lordſhip, &c. return unto the hands of Mr. Meantys, muſter-maſter general, a perfect and exact certificate and muſter-roll by the 20th of October next, &c.

Your lordſhip's loving friends,
W. Cant. Tho. Coventry, E. H. Mancheſter.
Arundell and Surrey. J. Bridgwater. Dorſet.
Fr. Cottington. J. Coke. Fran. Windebank.

To our good lord the earl of Huntingdon, his Majeſty's lieutenant of the counties of Leiceſter and Rutland."

"From Whitehall, April 10, 1639.

"After our hearty commendations to your lordſhips. Whereas it is his Majeſty's expreſs command, that all his lieutenants of counties ſhould reſide within their ſeveral lieutenancies, but for ſuch of them who with his majeſty's knowledge and good allowance are employed otherwiſe upon occaſions importing his Majeſty's ſervice; that they ſhould be careful to have ſuch deputy-lieutenants reſiding conſtantly there; for whoſe care, diligence, and ſufficiency, in the execution of their places, and doing his Majeſty's ſervice, they will be anſwerable: We are thereby to ſignify the ſame unto your lordſhips; and accordingly in his Majeſty's name to require your obedience thereunto, &c.

---

[1] Carte's MSS. in the Bodleian Library, FFF. N°48.

[2] Corporation Records.

Your lordſhips' loving friends,
W. Cant. Tho. Coventry, C^{s}. Guil. London.
H. Mancheſter. J. Bridgwater. Berkſhire.
Tho. Jermyn. E. Newburgh.
Fran. Windebank.

To our very good lords the earl of Huntingdon and the lord Haſtings, lieutenants of the counties of Leiceſter and Rutland, and to either of them."

"Henry earl of Huntingdon," ſays Mr. Burton, "married Elizabeth daughter of Ferdinando Stanley earl of Derby, a worthy lady, deſcended of royal blood, and adorned with all beauteous ornaments of nature and honourable parts." This lady died Jan. 20, 1633; and was buried Feb. 9, at Aſhby de la Zouch; and the following epitaph on "the excellent Counteſs of Huntingdon" was written on that occaſion by the lord Falkland:

"The chief perfection of both ſexes join'd,
With neither's vice nor vanity combin'd.
Of this our age the wonder, love, and care,
The example of the following, and deſpair.
Such beauty, that from all hearts love muſt flow;
Such majeſty, that none durſt tell her ſo.
A wiſdom of ſo large and potent ſway,
Rome's Senate might have wiſh'd, her Conclave may.
Which did to earthly thoughts ſo ſeldom bow;
Alive ſhe ſcarce was leſs in Heaven than now.
So void of the leaſt pride, to her alone
Theſe radiant excellencies ſeemed unknown.
Such care there was: but let thy grief appear,
Reader, there is not: Huntingdon lies here.
By him who ſays what he ſaw,
FALKLAND."

Mr. Granger notices a portrait, by Marſhall, inſcribed, "Elizabeth nuper comitiſſa Huntingdon;" two angels holding a coronet over her head. There is alſo a neat print of this lady, by J. Payne, before the Sermon preached at her funeral[1]. One of her letters has been printed in p. 592.

At the commencement of the unhappy civil war in the laſt century, Henry earl of Huntingdon was one of the firſt that appeared for his Majeſty in Leiceſterſhire, his name being foremoſt in the commiſſion of array; but, as he was far advanced in years, it was beyond his power to be ſo active in the cauſe as his inclination prompted him to be. He died at Aſhby, Nov. 14, 1643, and is buried there with his anceſtors, as appears in the regiſter of the pariſh; but he has no monument. Mr. Granger mentions a ſmall oval print of this earl by Hollar.

Henry, the ſecond ſon of earl Henry, a perſon of great valour and military conduct (whoſe indefatigable zeal and activity in the ſervice very amply atoned for the age, the infirmities, and retirement of his father[2]) diſtinguiſhed himſelf very early in the cauſe of his royal maſter. Being one of the original commiſſioners of array for this county, he was ſent for by the Houſe of Commons, as a delinquent, June 18, 1642; but in the ſame month was proclaimed ſheriff of Leiceſterſhire, under the ſanction of the following writ: "Carolus, &c. archiepiſcopis, epiſcopis, ducibus, comitibus, baronibus, &c. de comitatu Leiceſtræ, ſalutem. Cum conceſſimus dilecto nobis Henrico Haſtings, armigero, officium vicecomitis comitatûs noſtri predicti, cum pertinentiis, habend' quamdiu nobis placuerit, prout in litteris noſtris patentibus ei inde confectis plenius continetur; vobis mandamus, quod eidem Henrico Haſtings, tanquam vice noſtro comitatûs predicti, in omnibus quæ ad officium illud pertinent intendentes ſitis, auxiliantes, et reſpondentes. Teſte meipſo apud Ebor. 25 Junii, anno regni noſtri 18°." On the 13th of Auguſt, he was impeached of high treaſon; and on the 30th a proclamation was voted for his appearance on a certain day[3]. Having given manifeſt proofs of ſincere attachment to his Sovereign, by conducting the Queen with ſafety out of the North, where ſhe landed, notwithſtanding the power of the enemy at that time in ſundry places, to Oxford, (where he was created Doctor of the Civil Law[4], Nov. 1, 1642); and having planted divers garriſons with his own forces, particularly at Aſhby de la Zouch; he was conſtituted general of the forces raiſed in the counties of Leiceſter, Derby, Nottingham, Lincoln, Rutland, and Stafford, for the ſervice of the King; and, in further conſideration of his loyalty and great ſervices, was, by letters patent, dated Oct. 29, 1643, created baron of Loughborough[5] in the county of Leiceſter, to him and the heirs male of his body. His various ſervices in the royal cauſe will be found detailed in the Hiſtory of the Civil Wars in Leiceſterſhire, in the Appendix to this volume. By our hiſtorians he has been particularly noticed for "his ſervices during the firſt war, in commanding the garriſons of his country very vigilantly; and in the ſecond in diſperſing of the proviſions in Colcheſter ſo carefully and unweariedly (attending it every hour in the day for a long time); and alſo for his impriſonment, eſcape, and exile[6]." His banner was, Gules; from the feſs, and in pale, nearly extending to the top of the chief, an arch, maſoned proper; repreſenting a burning oven, fiery furnace, proper; in feſs, or a little under it, on a ſcroll, its ends raiſed, and then bending inwards, points downward and turned, Argent, ſhaded Vert, lined Or, in Roman letters Sable, QUASI IGNIS CONFLATORIS; fringed Argent and Purple[7]."

May 18, 1646, a paſs was granted to colonel Henry Haſtings, with his relation ſir Aſton Cokaine[8] and others, to go beyond the ſeas[9].

Nov. 10, 1648, an order was made that ſeven of the perſons that had been in the late engagements againſt the parliament, from Jan. 1, 1647, ſhould be baniſhed; and that Henry Haſtings, eſq. (then called lord Loughborough) ſhould be one[10]; but on the 13th of December following this vote was revoked, as "deſtructive to the peace and quiet of the kingdom, and derogatory to the juſtice of the kingdom[11]."

After the Reſtoration, he was appointed lord lieutenant of Leiceſterſhire, Jan. 15, 1660-61; and in January 1664-5, his reſidence being then at an old manſion in the pariſh of Lambeth, ſtill called Loughborough-houſe, he obtained an act of parliament, "to make the river and ſewer navigable, from or near Briſtow-cauſeway, in the county of Surrey, into the river of Thames;" and ſoon after thus declared his laſt will:

---

[1] "A Sermon preached at Aſhby de la Zouch, in the countie of Leiceſter, at the Funerall of the truly noble and virtuous Lady Elizabeth Stanley, one of the daughters and coheirs of the Right Honourable Ferdinand late earl of Derby, and late wife to Henrie Earle of Huntingdon, the fifth Earle of that Familie: the 9 of February, Anno Domini 1633. By J. F. 1635," 4to.

[2] Lloyd's Memoirs, p. 649; who adds, "Sir Richard Haſtings, a Colonel in the King's Army, deſerves to be inſerted into this Catalogue." Richard Haſtings, eſq. of Humberſton, was fined 72*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* for delinquency.

[3] Journals of the Commons, vol. II. pp. 631. 719. 745.

[4] Wood's Faſti Oxonienſes, vol. II. p. 23.

[5] Dr. Fuller, ſpeaking of the firſt baron of this title, adds, "The foreſaid (and that a very fair) town of Loughborough hath ſince again afforded the title of a baron to a younger branch of the ſame honourable family, Henry Haſtings, ſecond ſon to Henry (ſecond of that Chriſtian name) earl of Huntingdon, who by his virtues doth add to the dignity of his character." Fuller's Worthies, Leiceſterſhire, p. 141.

[6] Lloyd's Memoirs, p. 649.

[7] Preſtwich's Reſpublica, p. 71.

[8] This ſir Aſton was a Romaniſt, and ſuffered much for his religion and the cauſe of king Charles I. in the civil wars; and then pretended to be a baronet, made by that king after he had been by violence compelled to leave the parliament, about 11 Jan. 1641-2; yet not deemed ſo by the officers at arms, becauſe no patent was enrolled to juſtify it, nor any mention of it made in the Docquet-books belonging to the clerk of the crown in chancery, where all patents are noticed which paſs the great ſeal. Sir Aſton, who lived moſtly at his ſeat at Pooley in Warwickſhire, and ſometimes in the great city, married Anne, daughter of ſir Gilbert Kniveton, of Mircaſton, bart. and was eſteemed by many an ingenious gentleman, a good poet, and a great lover of learning; yet by others a perfect boon fellow, by which means he waſted all he had. His eſtate at Pooley he ſold to Humphrey Jennings, eſq. to pay a life-annuity, which he enjoyed ſeveral years; and dying at Derby, on the breaking of the great froſt, in February 1683-4, was buried in the chancel of Poleſworth church on the 13th of that month. See ſeveral topographical extracts from the Poem of ſir Aſton Cokaine, in the Topographer, vol. IV. pp. 38. 112; particularly one, p. 115, "to his noble couſin Mr. Henry Haſtings of Braunſton."

[9] Journals of the Commns, vol. IV. p. 548.

[10] Ibid. vol. VI. pp. 72. 76.

[11] Ibid. p. 96.

"In the name of God, Amen. The firſt day of Auguſt, in the year of our Lord 1665, I Henry Haſtings, baron of Loughborough, being at this preſent time in good health, &c. do declare and publiſh this to be my laſt will and teſtament, &c. My body, &c. to be laid in the chapel of Windſor Caſtle, with the body of my great uncle Edward lord Loughborough (if leave may be obtained), and that I die nearer that place than Aſhby de la Zouch: otherwiſe in the vault of Aſhby de la Zouch, with my anceſtors, &c. Something to be given to the poor at the diſcretion of my executors, &c. viz. Francis Coles, gentleman, now my agent in Ireland; and Francis Eaton, yeoman, now my ſervant at Baily-lodge in the county of Suſſex. And I deſire my worthy friends, John Morris, gentleman, and Robert Clayton, gentleman, both living at the ſign of the Flying-horſe in Cornhill, near the Royal Exchange in London, to be overſeers of this my laſt will and teſtament, &c. I give and bequeath to my ſaid executors, &c. my manor of Oakthorpe, in the county of Derby, and all the delves and coal-mines there, for the term of 99 years, commencing from my deceaſe; upon truſt, that with the profits of the ſame, together with my perſonal eſtate, they may raiſe monies for payment of my debts and legacies hereby bequeathed. And I alſo give to my ſaid executors all other my eſtate real and perſonal, lands, leaſes, goods, and chattels; ordering them in the firſt place to have eſpecial care for the diſcharge and payment of my debts, &c.; which being paid, and allowed to be ſo by my overſeers, I give unto my dear ſiſter, the right honourable the lady Alice Clifton, £200. a year during her life, to be paid every firſt day of Auguſt yearly, out of the profits and clear benefit riſing from my coal-mines or delves at Oakthorpe: and after my debts and legacies paid and ſatisfied, I give and bequeath the reſidue of the ſaid term of 99 years, and of my perſonal eſtate, together with the inheritance of my ſaid manor of Oakthorpe, to my dear nephew, the right honourable Theophilus earl of Huntingdon, and his heirs, &c. In witneſs whereof I have hereunto put my hand and ſeal, this 28th day of Auguſt, in the year of our Lord 1665[1]."

This noble lord died at London, unmarried, in January 1666; and was buried, without an epitaph, in the collegiate chapel of St. George, within the caſtle at Windſor, in the aile on the North ſide of the choir, not far from the grave of his illuſtrious anceſtor William lord Haſtings.

Ferdinando, the elder brother, who ſucceeded as ſixth earl of Huntingdon, was born at Aſhby, January 11, 1608. He was joined with his father, in 1630, in the lieutenancy of the counties of Leiceſter and Rutland; and was ſummoned to parliament Nov. 13, 1641, amongſt the barons of the realm, during his father's life, by the title of lord Haſtings[2]. He married Lucy, daughter and heir to ſir John Davys, of Englefield, Berks, knight, premier-ſerjeant at law to king James and king Charles I, as alſo ſolicitor and afterwards attorney-general in Ireland, by the lady Eleanor his wife, youngeſt daughter to George lord Audley, earl of Caſtlehaven; and ſettled at Donington Park. Succeeding to the earldom at a period when the civil war was raging in its utmoſt fury, he experienced a conſiderable ſhare of the hardſhips which were inflicted on the Royaliſts by the Uſurping Powers. This appears, with authority, in a petition which he preſented to the Houſe of Lords, Nov. 4, 1645; ſhewing, "That he continued his attendance upon the Parliament a year after the loſs of his eſtate in Ireland, till he could no longer ſubſiſt in London; and then, with the leave of the houſe, he returned into the country, to his houſe at Donington Park, where he remained during his father's life; in whoſe life-time Aſhby de la Zouch was made a garriſon: but, after his father's deceaſe, by reaſon of the uncivil carriage of captain Hotham's ſoldiers, who took him priſoner, and carried him ſo to Nottingham, he was forced for his ſecurity to go to Aſhby, where he continued; in which time of his continuance, he neither took arms, nor gave contribution, nor joined to their councils or commiſſions, and, though he was divers times ſent for to Oxford, never went; in which time of his abode at Aſhby, the Committee at Leiceſter ſequeſtered his eſtate, which, in reſpect of the premiſſes, he hopeth their Lordſhips will be pleaſed to free, becauſe he hath loſt in Ireland near £1000. a year; and that which he hath in England being ſubject to armies, and Aſhby by reaſon of the garriſon uſeleſs to him, and the whole eſtate (making no deductions for taxes) not amounting to £900. a year; and, conſidering his great charge of ſeven children, unbrought up and unprovided for; beſides, for his degree, there are ſome thouſand pounds' debts whereinto he fell in his father's time, his lands being ſo entailed, that, if he ſhould die, all are like to ſuffer: Therefore he deſires that his ſequeſtration may be taken off his eſtate." This petition was recommended to the Houſe of Commons[3].

He continued after this in tranquil retirement at Donington Park, where he died Feb. 13, 1655; but was buried with his anceſtors at Aſhby; as were Henry lord Haſtings, his eldeſt ſon, a young nobleman of great worth, parts, and learning, who died of the ſmall-pox, unmarried, June 24, 1649; and John, the ſecond ſon, who died an infant in December 1639. Ferdinando, the third ſon, died unmarried May 8, 1647, and was buried at Donington[4].

The death of lord Henry (at that time an only ſon) called forth the poetical talents of ſeveral of the moſt diſtinguiſhed writers of that period, under the title of "Lachrymæ Muſarum; The Tears of the Muſes: Expreſt in Elegies written by divers perſons of Nobility and Worth, upon the Death of the moſt hopefull Henry Lord Haſtings, onely ſonn of the Right Honourable Ferdinando Earl of Huntingdon, Heir-generall of the high-born Prince George Duke of Clarence, brother to King Edward the Fourth, Collected and ſet forth by R. B. 1649;" 8vo. The writers were, Mildmay Fane, earl of Weſtmoreland; the celebrated lord Falkland; ſir Aſton Cokaine[5] ("a remembrance from a kinſman"); ſir Arthur Gorges; Mr. Robert Milward; Mr. Thomas Higgins; Mr. Charles Cotton; Mr. Thomas Peſtell ſenior; Mr. George Fairfax; Mr. Francis Standiſh; Mr. J. Joyce; Mr. Samuel Bold; Mr. J. Cave; Mr. Phil. Kindar; Mr. Robert Herrick; Mr. John Denham; Mr. Jo. Hall; Mr. J. B.; Mr. John Benſon; Mr. J. Bancroft; Mr. William Peſtell; Mr. R. P.; Mr. Jo. Roſſe; Mr. Alexander Brome; Mr. Edward Standiſh; Mr. R. Brome; Mr. Andrew Marvel; Mr. M. N.; Mr. John Harman; Mr. John Dryden[6]; Mr. Cyril Wyche; Mr. Edward Campion; Mr. Tho. Adams; and the hon. Ralph Montague, youngeſt ſon of Ralph lord Montague of Boughton.

The lines by lord Falkland ("whom every man of his time was proud to praiſe[7]") ſhall here be given:

"On the death of my worthy friend and kinſman, the noble, virtuous, and learned lord Haſtings:

Farewell, dear Lord and Friend, ſince thou haſt choſe
Rather the Phœnix life, than death of Crows;
Though Death hath ta'en thee, yet I'm glad thy fame
Muſt ſtill ſurvive in learned Haſtings' name.
For thy great loſs, my fortune I'll condole,
Whilſt that Elizium enjoys thy ſoul."

The hopes of the family were revived by the birth of Theophilus, a fourth ſon, Dec. 10, 1650.—"Deus abſtulit, & Deus dedit," ſays a preacher on this occaſion; "for one, and that then an only ſon, lately taken into the kingdom of Glory, He has given them another this day to be admitted into the kingdom of Grace[1]."

---

[1] Harl. MSS. 3881. p. 66.

[2] He was introduced into the Houſe Nov. 21, 1640; and appears to have been a regular attendant till Auguſt 21, 1641, when he had leave to go into the country; and again till Nov. 19, 1642, when he had leave of abſence for a month. Journals of the Lords, vol. IV. pp. 95. 360; vol. V. p. 95.—Aug. 23, 1643, the Lady Alice Haſtings had a paſs to go to Donington, with three men and three women and their horſes. Ibid. vol. V. p. 194.

[3] Journals of the Lords, vol. IV. p. 675.

[4] See his epitaph, hereafter, in Donington church.

[5] See p. 603.

[6] Dr. Johnſon obſerves, that "Dryden's poem on the death of lord Haſtings is compoſed with great ambition of ſuch conceits as, notwithſtanding the reformation begun by Waller and Denham, the example of Cowley ſtill kept in reputation. Lord Haſtings died of the ſmall-pox; and his poet has made of the puſtules firſt roſe-buds, then gems, and at laſt exalts them into ſtars."

[7] This line is Dr. Johnſon's.

In an act which was paſſed Nov. 9, 1653, to enable Ferdinando earl of Huntingdon to ſell ſome lands, for the payment of his own debts and his father's, and to reſtrain him from making leaſes of other lands to the prejudice of his iſſue, it is enacted, that the ſaid earl ſhall, after Sept. 30, 1653, be ſeiſed of an immediate and entire eſtate, &c. in fee ſimple, of and in the manor of Loughborough, with the rights, members, and appurtenances thereof, &c. in Loughborough, Knighthorpe, Searle-Thorpe, Wood-Thorpe, Burton, Preſtwould, Hoton, and Cotes; and alſo of and in the wood and under-grounds, called Buddon-Wood, or Bowden-Wood, with the appurtenances, &c. and of an eſtate in remainder in fee-ſimple (immediately expectant upon the eſtates for lives of Henry Haſtings, brother of the ſaid earl, and of ſuch woman as ſhall be his wife at the time of his death) of and in all the granges, farms, cloſes, lands, &c. called by the name of Alton Grange, &c. And that, for the payment of debts, the ſaid earl ſhall have full power and authority, at any time after the ſaid 30th of September, to grant, bargain, ſell, &c. the ſaid manor and wood, and all and ſingular other the premiſſes, &c. unto any perſon or perſons whatſoever, &c.

Another act was paſſed in 1662, to confirm the ſale of Buddon-wood, Loughborough park, Alton Grange, and ſeveral percels of the manor of Loughborough, made by Ferdinando late earl of Huntingdon, for and towards the payment of his own and his father's debts; dame Lucy his wife, and Henry lord Loughborough his brother, conſenting thereto.

The lady Mary Haſtings, a daughter of earl Ferdinando, was married to William Joliſe, eſq.; and, dying in 1678, was buried at Aſhby[2].

Theophilus, the ſeventh earl of Huntingdon, who was an infant at his father's death, was born at Donington park Dec. 10, 1650; and a ſermon at his baptiſm has been already noticed[3]. He received his ſummons to parliament, by deſcent, April 15, 1672; and firſt took his ſeat as a peer (by his proxy the duke of York) Feb. 15, 1672-3[4].

As his lordſhip's name is frequently mentioned by hiſtorians among the adherents of the duke of Monmouth in the reign of Charles II; it is neceſſary, in juſtice to his character, to obſerve here, that, when he ſuſpected their views to be deſtructive of the conſtitution, he quitted their party, and was by his majeſty in 1683 appointed of the privy council; and Aug. 11, 1684, lord-lieutenant of the county of Leiceſter.

In September 1684, the corporation of Leiceſter having ſurrendered their charter on the perſuaſion of judge Jeffries, the earl of Huntingdon was appointed recorder of Leiceſter, and Nathan Wrighte, eſq. deputy-recorder, under the new charter, by which the common council were reduced to 36[5].

On the death of the king, Feb. 6, 1684-5, the earl of Huntingdon was one that ſigned the order at Whitehall for proclaiming James II; and on the 26th of that month he was conſtituted cuſtos rotulorum of the county of Leiceſter, and nominated of the privy council; conſtituted chief juſtice in Eyre of all the king's foreſts, chaces, parks, and warrens, North of Trent; lord lieutenant of the counties of Huntingdon and Derby; captain of the band of gentlemen penſioners; and colonel of the 13th regiment of foot.

In this year he preferred a claim to carry the third ſword, and to be pantler, at the coronation (April 23) as lineal deſcendant of the Beauchamps earl of Warwick[6]. After the Revolution, he was diveſted of all his offices; excluded from the benefit of king William's act of indemnity, May 23, 1690; and about two years afterward, upon advice of an intended deſcent from La Hogue, in favour of king James, was ſent to the Tower. In 1701, he was one of the peers who proteſted againſt the act of ſettlement; and on the 30th of May following departed this life at his houſe in Charles-ſtreet, St. James's[7]; and was buried at Aſhby[8], where his coffin-plate is thus inſcribed:

"THEOPHILUS HASTINGS,
EARLE OF HUNTINGDON,
LORD HASTINGS, HUNGERFORD, BOTREAUX, MORELS, NEWMARCH, AND MOLINS.
Died at London, the xxxth day of May, anno Domini MDCCI, aged fifty years."

The inſcription on his monument in the family chapel[9], which, together with the chancel of the church, he had fitted up at a conſiderable expence, ſets forth his exemplary character, his marriage, and iſſue.

Of this nobleman there is an eminently-beautiful metzotinto, by R. Williams, from a portrait by Kneller, dated 1687; under which are theſe arms quarterly: 1. Haſtings; 2. Clarence; 3. Pole; 4. Moules.

He was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon George, eighth earl of Huntingdon; who carried the ſceptre at the coronation of queen Anne; and the ſame year, 1702, diſtinguiſhed himſelf at the ſieges of Venlo and Ruremond. He died unmarried, Feb. 22, 1704-5; and was buried at St. James's, Weſtminſter; where, pretty high on the North ſide of the altar, is a large and curious monument, by Bird, of white marble, and white veined with blue, with columns fluted, the lower part twiſted, and entablature of the Compoſite order, enriched with Cupids (each holding a helmet), trophy-work, an urn, and under all the face of Envy. Arms, Haſtings, 16 coats quarterly. The inſcription runs thus:

"Hic ſitus eſt GEORGIUS comes de HUNTINGDON, præclarâ Haſtingorum proſapiâ natus,
et nepte, ex Plantagenetorum ſtemmate oriundus.
Literarum humanarum cultor indefeſſus;
in aulâ ſplendidus, in acie imperterritus, ubique probus.
Tanta fuit ei morum ſuavitas, cum gravitate comitas, cum fide benignitas, tantus animi candor ingenuus,
ut tot numeraverit amicos quot familiares.
Procul habuit mollitiem atque inertiam;
turpe exiſtimans quos dignitate præſtitit ab his virtute ſuperari.
Flagrante per Europam bello, ſalutis publicæ quam ſuæ ſtudioſior,
ad rem militarem exercendam ſe contulit.
Obſeſſis Venlóâ, Ruremondâ, Cæſaris inſulâ quæ fortitèr ſub duce Marlburgenſi tentavit felicitèr perfecit,
quorum tamen oblivionem maluit quam gloriam.
Obiit calend. Mart. VIII. æræ Chriſtianæ MDCCIV. ætatis XXVI.
Monumentum hoc poſuit mœrens ſoror, prænobilis domina ELIZABETHA HASTINGS."

The pious, the benevolent, the amiable, lady Elizabeth, whoſe affection for her brother is teſtified in the above inſcription, is characterized by Congreve under the appellation of "the divine Aſpaſia." She was univerſally eſteemed, revered, and admired. Her charities, private and public, which were perhaps never equalled by any of her ſex, do her the higheſt honour. Though the ſplendour of her birth was truly great, it ſeemed as it were eclipſed by her ſhining qualities. She was amiable in her perſon, her mien genteel, polite her manners, agreeable her converſation, her judgement ſolid, her regard to friendſhip ſacred, and her ſenſe of honour ſtrict to the laſt degree; of ſo rare modeſty and humility, that a more diſagreeable thing could not be done than publiſhing her good deeds, and rendering her due praiſe. She was above all a ſincere Chriſtian, and a genuine daughter of the Church of England. Her piety towards God was ardent and unaffected, and her benevolence towards her fellow-creatures was ſuch as the good angels are bleſſed with. Thouſands had ſhe comforted and relieved, many enriched and advanced. Her patience and reſignation under her laſt long and tedious ſickneſs, her mourning for the ſins of men, her unwearied endeavours for their eternal welfare, her generous and charitable appointments to her phyſicians, require whole pages to ſet them in a proper light. In ſhort, ſcarcely any age has afforded a greater bleſſing to many, or a brighter pattern to all.

---

[1] "A Sermon preached in the year of our Lord 1650, January 9, at the Baptizing of Theophilus (then Lord Haſtings) now Earl of Huntingdon. By John Joynes, M. A. one of the Prebends of Lincoln, and Chaplain to the Right Honourable Ferdinando then Earl of Huntingdon, 1668." 4to.

[2] "A Sermon preached at the Funeral of the Right Hon. the Lady Mary, Daughter to Ferdinando late Earl of Huntingdon, and Wife to William Joliſe, of Caverſall caſtle, in the County of Stafford, Eſq. at Aſhby de la Zouch, Dec. 12, 1678. By Samuel Willes, M. A. and Preacher at Allhallows in Derby, 1679." 4to.

[3] See the preceding note.

[4] "Mem. I came to my full age in Dec. 1671, and made the proxy to James duke of York." From a memorandum written by himſelf. See alſo the Journals of the Lords, vol. XII. p. 532.

[5] Corporation Records.

[6] See a copy of his lordſhip's petition, in French and Engliſh, in Harl. MSS. 4849.

[7] Three letters to Mr. Staveley, 1676—1679, are printed in vol. II. p. 683; where a fac ſimile of his neat ſignature is given.

[8] Le Neve miſtakes in ſaying he was buried at St. James's, Weſtminſter.

[9] See this inſcription in p. 619.

Her corpſe was interred with great funeral ſolemnity in the family-vault at Ledſtone, near her grandfather ſir John Lewis; the following inſcription being put upon her lead coffin:

> "The right hon. the lady ELIZABETH HASTINGS, daughter of Theophilus earl of Huntingdon, > by Elizabeth his firſt wife, daughter and coheir of ſir John Lewis, knt. and bart. from whom deſcended > to her the manors of Ledſtone, Ledſham, Thorp Arch, Collingham, Wheldale, Wyke, and Shadwell.
> In the four firſt ſhe erected charity-ſchools, and, for the ſupport of them and other charities, > ſhe gave, in her life-time, Collingham, Shadwell, and her eſtate in Burton-Salmon.
> Born the 19th of April, 1692; died the 22d of December, 1739.
> A pattern to ſucceeding ages of all that's good, and all that's great [1]."

Succeſſor to earl George in titles and eſtate was his half-brother Theophilus, the ninth earl, who, aſſiſting at the coronation of George II. Oct. 11, 1727, carried the ſword of ſtate. He died of an apoplexy, October 13, 1746; and was buried at Aſhby de la Zouch; where his monument bears an elegant inſcription from the pen of the celebrated lord Bolingbroke.

His ſon Francis, who ſucceeded as tenth earl of Huntingdon, was the 23d in paternal deſcent from Robert de Haſtings. He was born March 29, 1728-9; and, being endowed with very excellent abilities, ſet out to cultivate them in travelling to foreign parts, 1747. In 1756, he was appointed maſter of the horſe to his preſent Majeſty, then Prince of Wales. His lordſhip alſo carried the ſword of ſtate at the coronation, 1761, and continued in ſeveral high offices till his reſignation of groom of the ſtole in 1770. He died Oct. 2, 1789; and was buried at Aſhby de la Zouch.

Selina his venerable mother was the ſecond daughter, and one of the three coheireſſes, of Waſhington ſecond earl Ferrers; born Aug. 13, 1707; married June 3, 1728, to Theophilus earl of Huntingdon, by whom ſhe had four ſons and three daughters, of whom the counteſs of Moira is the only ſurvivor. June 9, 1758, an order was made for the attorney-general to ſhew cauſe why the ſheriff ſhould not pay to the counteſs of Huntingdon, as relict and adminiſtratrix of Theophilus late earl of Huntingdon, 24 years of creation-money due in the counties of Cambridge and Huntingdon [2]. This excellent lady, whoſe piety and philanthropy were ſupereminently proverbial, died June 17, 1791, in the 84th year of her age. Her ladyſhip had been a widow 45 years; and ſo long had a fine buſt of her, by Kent, been placed on the tomb of her deceaſed lord, at Aſhby de la Zouch, where, by her will, ſhe directed her own remains (dreſſed in the ſuit of white ſilk which ſhe wore at the opening of a chapel in Goodmans fields) to be depoſited, in as plain a manner as poſſible; the coffin to be covered with black, and the officiating clergyman (Mr. Jones, of the Spa-fields chapel) to receive £10. for his trouble. Her very great religious concerns, as head of a very numerous ſect in Great Britain and Ireland, were left by will in the hands of committees for managing them in both kingdoms. Her religious principles were long ſince known; and her unbounded benevolence bore the beſt teſtimony of the purity of her intentions, having, in the courſe of her life, expended above £100,000. in public and private acts of charity. She left an annuity of £100. to lady Anne Erſkine; and £4000. to be diſpoſed of in charitable gifts, at the diſcretion of the earl of Dartmouth, ſir Richard Hill, the honourable Thomas Erſkine, and her chaplain Mr. Hawes. The reſt ſhe bequeathed for the ſupport of 64 chapels, which ſhe had eſtabliſhed throughout the kingdom.

The late earl had very conſiderable property in the county of Leiceſter. Donington Park, where he reſided, with the demeſnes thereunto belonging, were purchaſed by his anceſtor George earl of Huntingdon of the unfortunate earl of Eſſex, who had a grant thereof from queen Elizabeth; but the manor of Caſtle Donington was ſold in the reign of Charles I. to ſir John Coke, knt. from whom it deſcended to the preſent lord Melbourne. The earl of Huntingdon, on the other hand, was lord of the manor of Melbourne adjoining to Donington Park, as well as the antient manor of Aſhby de la Zouch.

The earldom of Huntingdon is extinct; but the baronies of Haſtings, Hungerford, Peverell, Botreaux, Moels, Molines, Newmarch, and de Humet, deſcended to the earl of Huntingdon's ſiſter, Elizabeth, who married, Feb. 26, 1752, to John, then lord Rawdon, afterwards, Dec. 15, 1761, created earl of Moira; whoſe eldeſt ſon, Francis Rawdon-Haſtings, the preſent owner of Aſhby de la Zouch, born Dec. 7, 1754, was created baron Rawdon March 4, 1783; and obtained licence, Feb. 9, 1790, to aſſume the name and arms of Haſtings. Of this reſpectable Nobleman I ſhould ſay what I think in common with his countrymen, if I had not ſeen enough of him to know that ſuch language, however true, would not be acceptable. His Lordſhip's character, therefore, I leave to the American and the Engliſh Hiſtorian.

The late earl of Huntingdon left a natural ſon, Charles Haſtings, eſq. (now a major-general in the army); to whom he bequeathed landed property in Packington and Aſhby to the amount of £2090. a year. This gentleman married, June 2, 1788, Parnel, only daughter and heireſs of Thomas Abney [3], eſq. of Willeſley hall [4], in the county of Derby, two miles from Aſhby de la Zouch; where he at preſent reſides.

---

[1] A gold medal of this excellent lady was offered by Sylvanus Urban in 1735 (Gent. Mag. vol. V. p. 778.) to the author who ſhould write the beſt poem under the title of "The Chriſtian Hero;" which, from her unaffected modeſty (vol. VI. pp. 42. 99), was not permitted to take place. Her death is recorded in vol. X. p. 36; and in 1742 appeared "An Hiſtorical Character relating to the holy and exemplary Life of the Right Honourable the Lady Elizabeth Haſtings. To which are added, 1. One of the Codicils of her laſt Will, ſetting forth her Deviſe of Lands to the Provoſt and Scholars of Queen's College in Oxford, for the Intereſt of 13 Northern Schools. 2. Some Obſervations therefrom. 3. A Schedule of her other perpetual Charities; with the principal Rules for their Anminiſtration. By Thomas Barnard, M. A. Maſter of the Free-ſchool in Leeds." 12mo.—She was alſo celebrated in "Verſes to the Memory of the late illuſtriouſly pious Chriſtian, the right honourable the lady Elizabeth Haſtings, 1740," folio. See alſo a ſplendid liſt of her charities, together with a detail of her character, in Welford's "Memorials," &c. p. 779. & ſeqq.

[2] Jones's Index to the Records, art. Creation-money.

[3] Son and heir of ſir Thomas Abney, one of his majeſty's juſtices of the Common Pleas, who was killed in 1750 by the gaol diſtemper. The character of the ſon, who died Aug. 15, 1791, in his 65th year, was that of a good huſband, a good father, a good maſter, and a good landlord: ſincere and warm in his attachment to his friends, liberal in his benefactions to the poor, and ſtrictly juſt in his dealings to all men. It was of this gentleman the late Governor Thickneſſe ſpeaks, when he ſays, "The comfortable ſeat of Mr. Abney ſhould be particularly noticed, not only for the houſe, but the good old man, his ſon, and the wife. It is a Maiſon Carrée, has extenſive views each way, but the poſſeſſor ſees no man's land but his own; and all his farm-houſes too are as well found as his own. An hoſpitable table once covered, and in the comfortable ſtyle of our fore-fathers, made me think myſelf a hundred and fifty years back." Gent. Mag. vol. LXI. p. 782.

[4] The lordſhip of Willeſley, containing one ploughland, belonged, at the general ſurvey, to Henry de Ferieres, under whom it was then rented by Aluric. In the time of king Edward it had been valued at twenty ſhillings; but at the ſurvey was worth only ſixteen ſhillings. The land lay waſte; yet three villans had on it five ploughing oxen. Domeſday, fol. 274. a. 2.

Pedigree of HASTINGS, of KIRBY, ASHBY DE LA ZOUCH, and DONINGTON PARK.

Robert de Haſtings, portreeve of Haſtings in Suſſex, ſaid to be lord of Fillongley in Warwickſhire, and ſteward to William the Conqueror. = ...

Walter de Haſtings, ſteward of the houſhold to king Henry I. and lord of the manor of Aſhele in Norfolk by grand ſerjeanty [1]. = Hawiſe.

Hugh de Haſtings, of Fillongley. = Erneburga, daughter of Hugh de Flamenville, of Aſton Flamvile, niece and heir of Robert de Flamvile.

Maud, daughter of Thurſtan Banaſter, and widow of William Cumin; firſt wife = 1. William de Haſtings. = Ida, daughter of Henry earl of Ewe; ſecond wife. 2. Richard de Haſtings, rector of Barwell. Milicent, wife of Robert de Wyfort.

Henry de Haſtings, died ſ. p. 1195. William de Haſtings, ſteward to king Henry II; died 1199. = Margaret, dau. of Roger Bigod earl of Norfolk. 1. Thomas de Haſtings. = ... 2. John. = ...

Henry de Haſtings, 1250. = Ada, fourth dau. to David earl of Huntingdon. Ida, wife of Stephen de Segrave. Hugh de Haſtings, died 1208. = Helen, ſiſter and heir of Torphine Alveſton. Henry, ſon and heir.

Henry de Haſtings, died 1268; buried at Coventry. = Joan, ſiſter and heir to George de Cantalupe, baron of Bergavenny. Margaret. Hillaria, wife of ſir William Harcourt. Thomas de Haſtings, died before 1246. = Amicia; re-married to ſir Robert de Boys, of Fersfield.

Sir Nicholas de Haſtings, died 1268. = Emeline [3], daughter of Walter de Heron; living a widow in 1300.

1. John de Haſtings [4], lord Haſtings and Bergavenny, ſeneſchal of Aquitaine, and in 1290 one of the competitors for the crown of Scotland in right of his grandmother Ada; died March 9, 1312-13. = Iſabel, ſiſter and coheir of Aymer de Valence earl of Pembroke; died 1305. 2. Edmond, liv. 1313. 2. Lora. 3. Joan. 1. Auda.

1. Sir Hugh de Haſtings, died 1300. = Beatrice [3], a widow in 1300. 2. Henry. 3. Edward. 4. Nicholas. 5. Richard. 6. William.

Sir Nicholas de Haſtings, living 1307. = ...

1. John lord Haſtings, Bergavenny, and Weiſhford, died 1325. = Juliana, daughter and heir of Thomas Leyburne, lady of Eltham. She married, 2dly, to Thomas le Blount; and, after his death, to William de Clinton earl of Huntingdon. 1. William, 2. Robert, died ſ. p. 3. Henry. 4. Joan. 5. Elizabeth. 6. Margaret.

1. Sir Ralph de Haſtings, of Wiſtow, co. Leic.; governor of York; died 1346. = Margaret, ſiſter and heir of ſir Robert Herle, of Kirby, co. Leic. knight. 2. Sir Nicholas de Haſtings. = . . .

Laurence de Haſtings, created earl of Pembroke Oct. 13, 1329; died Aug. 30, 1348. = Agnes, dau. of Roger Mortimer, earl of March; died 1368.

1. Iſabel, daughter and heir of ſir Robert de Sadington, knt. = Sir Ralph de Haſtings, knt.; died 1398. = 2. Matilda, daugh. of Roger St. John; and, according to others, a daughter and heir of John Sutton, of Sutton in Holderneſs. 1. Nicholas. 2. Edward.

Margaret, fourth daughter of king Edward III; firſt wife. = John de Haſtings, earl of Pembroke, died in France, April 16, 1375. = Anne, dau. of ſir Walter Manny, K. G. ſecond wife; died 1383.

Margaret = Sir Roger Heron. = Sir John Blaket, 2d huſb.

2. John de Haſtings, earl of Pembroke; killed in a tournament, in Chriſtmas 1389, æt. 17, ſ. p. = Philippa, daughter of Edmund Mortimer earl of March; re-married to Richard earl of Arundel; and after to John lord St. John.

1. Sir Ralph de Haſtings, attainted and beheaded 1405; ob. ſ. p. = Anne, dau. of ſir James Fines, knt. [5] 2. Sir Richard Haſtings, knt. reſtored from his brother's attainder, married Elizabeth dau. of Henry lord Beaumont, and widow of William lord Deincourt; died ſ. p. 1437. 3. Sir Leonard Haſtings, of Kirby, knt. brother and heir to Ralph and Richard; died 1455. = Alice, dau. of Thomas lord Camois. 4. Bartholomew. Matilda.

1. William lord Haſtings, knight of the Garter, beheaded 1483. = Catharine, daughter of Richard Neville earl of Saliſbury, widow of William lord Bonville; died 1504, and bur. at Aſhby. 2. Sir Richard de Haſtings, baron Welles 1482, married Joan daughter of Richard lord Welles and Willoughby; died 1503; and his lady 1504 [6]. 3. Sir Ralph de Haſtings, captain of Guiſnes, and eſquire of the body to king Edward IV, had ſeven daughters his coheirs [7]. 4. Thomas de Haſtings. 1. Anne, married to Thomas Ferrers, of Tamworth Caſtle. 2. Joan, married to John Brokeſby, eſq. 3. Elizabeth, married to John Donne.

1. Edward lord Haſtings, K. B.; had ſpecial livery, 23 Jan. 1487-8; died Nov. 8, 1506; buried at Black Friers. = Mary, daughter and heir of Thomas lord Hungerford; re-married to ſir Richard Sacheverell, of Radcliffe upon Soar, co. Nott. 2. Sir Richard Haſtings. 3. Sir William Haſtings. = ... Anne, firſt wife of Geo. Talbot, fourth earl of Shrewſbury. =

George lord Haſtings, created earl of Huntingdon, 1529; died March 24, 1543-4; buried at Stoke Pogeis. = Anne, daughter of Henry Stafford duke of Buckingham, relict of ſir Walter Herbert, 2d ſon of William earl of Pembroke, ſ. p. William, ſecond ſon. Anne, married firſt to Thomas Stanley, earl of Derby; and after to John Radcliffe earl Fitzwalter. 1. Elizabeth, daughter and coheir, married to John Beaumont, of Gracedieu, eſq. maſter of the Rolls. 2. Mary, married to Thomas Saunders, of Haringworth, co. Northampton. Two of their children, both named John, died infants, and were buried at Aſhby.

1. Francis ſecond earl of Huntingdon, knight of the Garter and Bath; died June 20, 1561; bur. at Aſhby. [See p. 608.] = Catharine, dau. and coheir of Henry Pole viſcount Montacute, ſon of Richard Pole, K. G. and Margaret his wife, counteſs of Saliſbury, dau. of George duke of Clarence, and heir at length to Edward Plantagenet, earl of Warwick, her brother. 2. Sir Thomas Haſtings, marr. Winifred dau. and coheir of Henry Pole viſcount Montacute (re-married to ſir Thomas Barrington, of Barrington, Eſſex); died 1558, ſ. p.; bur. at Stoke Pogeis. 3. Edward lord Haſtings, of Loughborough, K. G. died March 15, 1572-3, ſ. p.; bur. at Stoke Pogeis. 4. Henry. 5. William. 1. Dorothy, married ſir Richard Devereux, ſon and heir of Walter lord viſc. Hereford. = 2. Mary = Thomas lord Berkeley. 3. Catharine.

Walter Devereux, earl of Eſſex.

Francis ſecond earl of Huntingdon.=Catharine, daughter and heireſs of Henry Pole viſcount Montacute, &c.

1. Henry third earl of Huntingdon, knight of the Garter, lord preſident of the council at York; died there ſ. p. Dec. 14, 1595; buried at Aſhby the 28th of April following.=Catharine, dau. to John Dudley, duke of Northumberland; died Aug. 14, 1620.
2. George fourth earl of Huntingdon, died Dec. 30, 1604; buried at Aſhby.=Dorothy, dau. and coheir of ſir John Port, knt. of Etwall, co. Derby, died Sept. 30, 1607.
3. William, died ſ. p.
4. Sir Edward Haſtings[8], knt. of the Abbey-gate, Leiceſter; married Catharine, dau. of ſir Will. Devereux, knt. of Merevale-abbey, co. Warwick (younger brother of ſir Richard Devereux); died 1603.
5. Sir Francis Haſtings[9], of North Cadbury, co. Somerſet.
6. Walter Haſtings[10], eſq. of Braunſton, married Joice, dau. of Chriſtopher Roper, eſq. of Linſted, Kent.
1. Catharine, married to Henry Clinton earl of Lincoln.
2. Frances, married to Henry lord Compton.
3. Anne, died unmarried.
4. Elizabeth, married to Edward Somerſet earl of Worceſter.
5. Mary, died unmarried.

1. Francis lord Haſtings, died Dec. 16, 1595, two days only after his uncle; bur. with him.=Sarah, daughter to ſir James Harrington, knt. and ſiſter to John lord Harington of Exton; married, 2dly, to ſir George Kingſmill; after to Edward lord Zouch of Harringworth; and, laſtly, to ſir Thomas Edmonds; died in September, and buried Oct. 3, 1629.
2. Henry Haſtings, of the Woodland in Dorſetſhire (of whom ſee p. 592.)
3. Sir Edward Haſtings, died at Vienna, unmarried, Jan. 24, 1603.
4. William, b. 1593; died an infant.
1. Catharine, married firſt to ſir Henry Unton, knight; ſecondly, to ſir Walter Chetwynd.
2. Dorothy, married firſt to ſir James Stuart, K. B. who was killed in a duel 1609; and ſecondly to Robert Dillon earl of Roſcommon.

1. Henry fifth earl of Huntingdon, b. at Exton 1586; died Nov. 14, 1643.=Elizabeth, youngeſt of the three daughters of Ferdinando earl of Derby; died 1633.
2. George Haſtings, of Gray's Inn, married Seymour Prin, and died of the plague in 1641[11].
3. Edward Haſtings, a captain in the expedition to Guaiana under ſir Walter Raleigh; died unmarried.
4. Francis, born 1593; died young.
1. Catharine, married Philip lord Stanhope of Shelford, and earl of Cheſterfield; and died Aug. 28, 1636; leaving eleven ſons[12].
2. Theodoſia, ſecond wife of ſir Francis Bodenham[13], knt. died 1671.

1. Ferdinando ſixth earl of Huntingdon, born Jan. 18, 1607-8; died Feb. 13, 1655.=Lucy, dau. and heir of ſir John Davys, of Englefield, Berks, knt. ſerjeant at law.
2. Henry Haſtings, created baron Loughborough, Oct. 23, 1643; died in January 1666.
1. Alice, born 1606; ſeventh wife of ſir Gervaſe Clifton, bart.; whom ſhe ſurvived but a ſhort time, both dying in 1666[14].
2. Elizabeth, born and died in 1612.
3. Eleanor, born 1633.
4. Elizabeth, born 1635; married to ſir Hugh Calveley, knt.

1. Henry lord Haſtings, died June 24, 1649; buried at Aſhby.
2. John, born 1632; died in December 1639; buried at Aſhby.
3. Ferdinando, died May 8, 1647; buried at Caſtle Donington.
Elizabeth, dau. and coheir of ſir John Lewis, bart. died Dec. 24, 1678.=4. Theophilus, ſeventh earl of Huntingdon, died May 30, 1701.=Frances[15], daughter and ſole heir to Francis-Leveſon Fowler, of Harnage-Grange, co. Salop. eſq. died at Bath, Dec. 21, 1723.
1. Alice } both died
2. Eleanor } young.
3. Elizabeth, married to ſir James Langham, bart.; died 1664.
4. Lucy, died unmarried.
5. Mary, married to ſir William Jolliffe, knt.
6. Chriſtiana, died unmarried 1681.

George-Foot, eighth earl of Huntingdon, died unmarried, Feb. 22, 1704-5.
1. Lucy } both died
2. Elizabeth } unmarried.
Theophilus ninth earl of Huntingdon, married June 3, 1728; died Oct. 13, 1746; buried at Aſhby.=Selina, ſecond daughter and coheir of Waſhington earl Ferrers; died June 17, 1791, aged 84; bur. at Aſhby.
1. Anne-Jaqueline.
2. Alice, died 1692.
3. Frances.
4. Catharine-Mary.
5. Margaret.

1. Francis tenth earl of Huntingdon, born March 29, 1729; died unmarried Oct. 2, 1789; buried at Aſhby.
2. George, born 1730; died Dec. 10, 1743.
3. Ferdinando, born 1732; died April 21, 1743.
4. Henry, born 1739; died Sept. 13, 1758, unmarried.
1. Elizabeth, on the death of her brother, in 1789, ſucceeded to the titles of baroneſs Hungerford, Newmarch, Botreaux, Molins, and Moel; third wife.=John lord Rawdon, of the kingdom of Ireland; created earl of Moira 1761; died June 20, 1793.
2. Selina, born 1735; died an infant.
3. Selina, born 1737; died unmarried May 12, 1763.

1. Francis Rawdon Haſtings, born Dec. 7, 1754; created baron Rawdon of the county of York, March 4, 1783; ſucceeded his father as earl of Moira in 1793, the preſent owner of Aſhby and Donington Park.
2. John-Theophilus Rawdon, born November 29, 1757; M. P. for Launceſton; married Oct. 30, 1792, Fanny, dau. of J. Hall, eſq. of Shelton caſtle, co. York.
3. George, b. June 9, 1761; a colonel in the army; and M. P. for Lincoln; died March 25, 1800.
Three ſons and one daughter; all died young.
1. Anne, born in 1753; married Feb. 14, 1788, to Thomas Bruce earl of Aileſbury.
2. Selina-Frances, born April 9, 1759; married in June 1779, to George Forbes earl of Gramond.
3. Charlotte, born Feb. 25, 1769.

---

[1] His office was, to take care of the napery at the coronation.

[2] Dugdale, Bar. Angl. vol. I. p. 574.

[3] This appears by a ſuit in which Emmeline was plaintiff, and Beatrice defendant.

[4] This John had a ſecond wife, whoſe male deſcendant contended with Grey for the arms of Haſtings, after the death of John earl of Pembroke ſ. p.

[5] Dugdale, ubi ſupra, p. 579.

[6] He had one ſon, Anthony, who died before him.

[7] 1. Florence, married to Edward lord Grey of Wilton; 2. Catharine, to ſir John Norwich of Brampton; 3. Iſabel, to ſir John Dyve, knt. of Bromham; 4. Elizabeth, to ſir John Longueville, knt. of Walverton, Bucks; 5. Emma, to ſir John Greſley; 6. Anne, to ſir Humphrey Elton of Suſſex; and 7. Cecilia, to ſir Thomas Harcourt, of Stanton and Ellenhall.

[8] See their deſcendants under Humberſton, p. 278.

[9] Of whom ſee before, p. 588.

[10] See their deſcendants hereafter, under Braunſton.

[11] See vol. II. p. 529.

[12] See her epitaph, at Shelford, co. Nottingham, in Thoroton, p. 148.

[13] In the church of Ryall, in Rutland, is the following epitaph: "Ultimum Chriſto adventum hic expectant Franciſcus Bodenham, alias Bodenden, eques auratus, & duæ ejus uxores; quarum prima fuit Penelope, filia Edwardi Wingfeild, de Kimbalton caſtle, equitis aurati, ſecunda Theodocia filia prænobilis Franciſci domini Haſtings de Aſhby de la Zouch. Ultimam hujus lucis uſuram amiſerunt, annis 1625. 1645. 1671."

[14] She was buried in St. Giles's church, London, as was ſir Gervas's third lady.

[15] Widow of Thomas Needham viſcount Kilmory; and afterwards married, thirdly, to the Chevalier de Ligondes, a colonel of horſe in the French ſervice. She died Dec. 27, 1723.

ASHBY CASTLE

is ſituated on a gentle eminence, in an open paſture field, on the South ſide of the town. A good idea of this noble manſion in its original ſplendour may be formed by the deſcription in p. 568; particularly of "the two ſtately towers[1], one of which was an entire houſe within itſelf, the other the kitchen tower; both built in ſuch a figure, that two more might be placed at convenient diſtances to equal them." Mr. Burton mentions but one of theſe towers. His words are, "Sir William Haſtings built there a large and fair houſe, and one ſtone ſtately tower, of great receipt, ſtrength, and excellent workmanſhip, apart by itſelf[2]."

It is not the leaſt intereſting part of the hiſtory of Aſhby caſtle, that within its walls Mary queen of Scots, "who has given celebrity to ſo many caſtles and old manſions by her melancholy impriſonment beneath their lofty turrets," was for ſome little time a captive. To this circumſtance the traditional account in the family, the notice of Aſhby in one of the following letters, and a room now remaining having been always diſtinguiſhed by the name of Mary Queen of Scots' room, furniſh pretty ſtrong teſtimony.

After this unfortunate queen's remarkable eſcape from Lochleven caſtle, ſhe found means to convey herſelf into England; and, landing May 17, 1568, at Wokington in Cumberland, wrote letters in French, with her own hand, to queen Elizabeth, detailing her misfortunes, and requeſting protection. Elizabeth affected to comfort her; but, under pretence of greater ſecurity, directed her removal to Carliſle; whence, July 13, ſhe was conducted to Bolton caſtle, a houſe of the lord Scrope's, on the borders of Yorkſhire; but, this being in a Papiſh neighbourhood, ſhe was ſent, through Coventry, to Tutbury[3], a more inlaid part of the country, under the care of George earl of Shrewſbury; who, about the latter end of Auguſt 1569, obtained permiſſion to remove her to his own reſidence at Sheffield; ſoon after which the earl of Huntingdon was aſſociated in this important charge, as appears by the following authentic documents, with which I have lately been favoured by Mr. Dawſon:

1. "To our right truſty and right welbeloved couſyn therle of Huntingdon.

"Elizabeth R. By the Quene.

"Right truſty and right welbeloved couſyn, we grete you well. Having certain matters of ſom importance to be imparted unto youe for our ſervice, wherin we do aſſure ourſelf of your faithfulnes, we have thought good to ſend unto youe our truſty and welbeloved ſervaunt Henry Skipwith, eſquier, one of our eſquierys, to declare our mynd unto you; whom we requier youe to creditt, and accordyng to the ſame to employ your diligence: and, as tyme ſhall requier, to advertiſe us of any thing that ſhall ſeme to youe mete for our underſtandyng. Yeven under our ſignet, at our town of Southampton, the xiith day of September 1569, the xith yere of our reign."

Endorſed, in the earl of Huntingdon's hand-writing, "Brought by Mr. Skypwyth the 17th of 7ber 1569."

2. A letter to the earl of Huntingdon from the earl of Shrewſbury, dated Sept. 18, from South Winfield manor-houſe, another manſion of that noble earl, where the queen then was, may be ſeen in p. 584.

3. "To our right truſty and right welbeloved coſin therle of Huntingdon[4].

"Elizabeth R. By the Quene.

"Right truſty and right welbeloved coſin, we grete you well. Where we underſtand that our coſin of Shroueſbury is much trobled with ſicknes, and like to fall furder into the ſame, in ſuch ſort as he neither preſently is able, nor ſhalbe, to continue in the charge which he hath, to kepe the quene of Scots: We have, for a preſent remedy, and to avoyd the danger that might enſew, made choice of yow to take the charg of the cuſtody of hir, untill we ſhall otherwiſe order. And therfore we erneſtly require yow with all ſpede to repaire to our coſin of Shroueſbury, with ſome of your owne truſty ſervants, and there to take the charge of the ſaid quene; wherewith our ſaid coſin wilbe ſo well content, as we dowte not but yow ſhall have all that he can com̃and to be ſerviceable unto yow. And though this direction of yow may ſeme preſently ſodayne and ſtrange, for yow to take charge of hir in any other perſon's howſe then in yowr owne; yet the infirmity[5] of our ſaid coſin, with the miſtruſt he hath of a greter, and the requeſt he hath made unto us to have ſome help in this cawſe, with other cawſes that we have to dowte of ſome eſcape of the ſaid quene, moveth us to uſe this ſpeedy order; meaning, as ſone as occaſion may furder permitt, to deviſe either ſhortly to deliver yow of this burthen wholly, or at the leaſt to deviſe that ſhe ſhalbe removed to ſome other meter place, where yow may have the wholl com̃andement. We wold have yow alſo, after conference with our ſaid coſin of Shroueſbury, to deviſe how the nomber of the quene of Scotts' trayne might be diminiſhed, and reduced only to thirty parſons of all ſorts, as was ordered, but, as we perceave, to much enlarged of late time. Yow ſhall alſo, joyntly with the erle of Shrewſbury, give order that no ſuch com̃en reſort be to the quene as hath ben; nor that ſhe have ſuch liberty to ſend poſts as ſhe hath don, to the great burden of owr poore ſubjects. And if ſhe ſhall have any ſpeciall cawſe to ſend to us, than you ſhall ſo permitt her ſervant with the warrant of your hand, and none to come otherwiſe. And if yow ſhall think of any meter place to kepe hir, we requier yow to advertiſe us therof, ſo as we may take order for the ſame. We have written to our coſin of Shroueſbury, whom we have willed to impart to you the contents of our lr̃e. And ſo we will have yow to do theſe; truſting that yow will ſo conſider herof as the cawſe requireth for our honour and quietnes, without reſpect of any parſon[6]. Yeven under our ſignet, at the manour of the Vyne, the xxiid of September 1569, the xith yere of our reigne. [Verte.]

"P^{t}ſcript. After we had conſidered of ſome part of the premiſſes, we thought in this ſort to alter ſome part therof. We will that no parſon ſhalbe ſuffered to come from the quene of Scotts with any meſſage or lr̃e. But if ſhe will write to us, yow ſhall offer to ſend the ſame by one of yours. And ſo we will yow to do; for our meaning is, that for a ſeaſon ſhe ſhall nether ſend nor receave any meſſage or lr̃es without our knowledg."

Endorſed, by the earl of Huntingdon, "Hir majeſtyes fyrſte lr̃es for the takyng of the charge of Q. of Sc. w^{t} my lord of Shr. Broughte to me by Broune my lord of Shr. man."

4. "To the right honorable my very good lord therle of Huntingdon.

"My honorable good lord. After that hir ma^{tie}

---

[1] Mr. Groſe, in 1759, mentions "the two ruined towers;" but, when he ſays "the other parts are evidently of later date," he could only mean the detached building called The Lord's Place.

[2] Burton, p. 17; corrected by his own MS.

[3] In the Town-book of Coventry is this entry: "1566, William Smalwood, draper, mayor. In his year was Mary queen of Scots brought to Coventry, and kept priſoner in the mayoreſs's parlour; and from thence removed to Tutbury."—An extract, of the ſame date, is given by Dr. Thomas, in the Liſt of Mayors, in his edition of Dugdale's Warwickſhire, vol. I. p. 150; and in a ſimilar Catalogue publiſhed by Hearne, at the end of his edition of Fordun's Scoto-Chronion, p. 1457, the ſame event is placed in 1567. As the mayoralty commences in November, this variation of a year might eaſily be reconciled: but it is evident that they are both one year too early, as the queen of Scots was not a captive in this kingdom till 1568.

[4] I am aware that this letter has been printed both by Mr. Haynes and Mr. Lodge; but it is here copied from the original.

[5] The ſickneſs of the earl of Shrewſbury afforded a flimſy pretence for placing a ſpy over him; but the declaration that he deſired aſſiſtance is not true; a letter from him to Secretary Cecil, Sept. 29, proving that the coadjutor was forced on him in oppoſition to his expreſs requeſt. Lodge's Illuſtrations, vol. II. p. 22.

[6] The reader cannot but obſerve great anxiety on the part of queen Elizabeth for the ſafe keeping of the unfortunate queen Mary. How very myſterious are the words here printed in Italics!

had ordred hir lr̃e to be wrytten, ſhe commanded my lord of Leceſter and me to wryte unto your L.; and ſo I did cauſe a lr̃e to be wrytten, wch cõeth unto yow ſigned by us both. Here hath bene this daye ſondry opinions in conſell w^t^ hir ma^tie^: ſome that your L. ſhuld have charge of the Q. of Scotts at Aſhby; others y^t^ Mr Chanceller of the Duchy ſhuld come to Tutbury, and delyver your L. and accompany ye erle of Shrowſbury; others, that he ſhuld have the charg alone at Tutbury, and both my lord of Shrowſbury and your L. diſcharged; others, that Mr Chanceller ſhuld be with yow at Aſhby, wherein no miſtruſt was had of yow, but to excuſe the challendg[1] wch ye Q. of Scotts maketh to yow. The dyverſite of theſe opinions wold produce no certen reſolution. Hereupon it was concluded that Mr. Skypw^t^ ſhuld be ſent, to thend, upon ſome furder knowledg, we might better fall to ſome on reſolution. And thus I am bold to impart many things, praying your L. to uſe them well, and as yow ſee cauſe to impart any thyng of your mynd, as you will have me uſe it faythfully and honeſtly towards you; for ſo I am reſolved to be towards your L. I alſo in ſecrett ſend you a copy of the Q. ma^ties^ lr̃es. Your L. ſhall doo well to contynew your good opinion of me, but not to utter it, as I perceave yow doo, wherby percaſe by ſome miſlykyng I may fynd ſome lack to doo as I wold doo. And ſo I end with my humble com̃. From Wyndſor caſtle, 28 of October 1569. Your L. at com̃, W. CECILL."

Endorſed by his lordſhip, "Mr S. ꝑ Sk. 30 October, 1569."

5. "To our right truſty and right welbeloaved coſin therle of Huntingdon. S.

"ELIZABETH R. By the Quene.

"Right truſty and right welbeloved coſin, we greete you well. And let yow wite our pleaſure and commandement is, that, for certeyn good and weighty conſiderations us therunto moving, yow ſhall, furthwith upon the receipt herof, prepare yourſelf, with all the force yow can poſſibly make, to convey the Scottiſhe queene from Tutbury, where ſhe now remayneth, unto our towne of Coventry[2]; and there to ſee her ſafely kept and gardid, untill we ſhall ſignify our further pleaſur unto yow. And for the better doing hearof, we have written our lr̃es of the lyke effect of theſe, to our coſins of Shrewſbury and Hereford, to joyne with yow, and accompany yow in this ſervice, with ſuch forces as they can prepare for the pourpoſe. Gyven under our ſignet, at our caſtle of Windeſore, the xxii^th^ of November 1569, in the twelveth yere of our reign."

Endorſed, by the earl of Huntingdon, "Y^e^ Q. lr̃es to goo to Coventre."

The time of the Scottiſh queen being at Aſhby caſtle was in the laſt week of November, 1569, in her way from Tutbury to Coventry; where, as appears by a letter, dated Dec. 20, from ſir Walter Mildmay, then chancellor of the Exchequer, ſhe was in the joint cuſtody of the earls of Huntingdon and Shrewſbury[3], where ſhe continued more than two months[4]. Jan. 15, 1569-70, the earl of Shrewſbury, in a letter from Tutbury caſtle, complains that "two tons of wine in a month was not ſufficient for his ordinary conſumption, excluſive of what was occupied at times by the queen for her bathings and ſuch like uſes[5]." In 1570, the earl of Huntingdon, having received letters from ſir Walter Mildmay, advertiſing him, that though the queen had the favour to receive letters in the preſence of his lordſhip, and of the earl of Shrewſbury and viſcount Hereford, who were joined with him in the commiſſion; and the French ambaſſador did at that time earneſtly ſolicit her enlargement; yet that the contents of thoſe decyphered letters which ſhe had received ſhould be made known to queen Elizabeth; much commending the ſincerity of his brother (Robert earl of Leiceſter, whoſe ſiſter the earl had married) in God's cauſe, and the general cauſe of the ſtate; wiſhing good intelligence and aſſured friendſhip between them; and offering his ſervice for furthering thereof[6].

The earl of Huntingdon's truſt continued till Auguſt 1572, when he was appointed lord preſident of the North. In the January following, a letter of his ſuggeſts ſome uſeful advice to the earl of Shrewſbury; and in March he gave notice of a plot to ſteal away the royal captive[7].

After this period, the Talbot Papers in the College of Arms furniſh ſome notices that may be worth mentioning[8]. In Auguſt 1573, the queen of Scots deſired to go to Buxton for her health, and obtained permiſſion with much difficulty; in March 1573-4, ſhe was terrified by an earthquake; and in June 1576, was removed from Buxton to Sheffield. On the 5th of July queen Elizabeth formed a plan for honouring the earl of Huntingdon with a long viſit at Aſhby; but next day changed her mind[9]. In September 1577, the queen of Scots was removed to Chatſworth; and thence, on the 26th of July, 1580, again to Buxton, where ſhe was cloſely confined. On that day the earl of Shrewſbury ſtates the amount of the wine, ſpice, and fuel, ſpent in his houſe yearly, to be at leaſt £1000.; the loſs of plate, buying of pewter, and houſhold ſtuff ſpoilt and waſted, £1000. more; and extra annuities to ſervants, to keep them faithful, £400.; excluſive of charges for ſoldiers. Feb. 12, 1580, he declares, "that if his allowance for the queen of Scots' diet is not punctually paid, he will ſeek to be diſburdened of that weighty charge;" on the 22d he complains heavily "of the expence of keeping the queen, for which he can get no allowance granted;" and Nov. 2, 1581, deſires that "wax lights and torches, and table-linen, may be ſent him for the queen of Scots; that he is ill treated by Frobiſher; and muſt ſell his ſhip for want of ready money."—Nov. 23, the queen of Scots deſired "the attendance of phyſicians and ſurgeons;" May 30, 1582, ſhe was "attended by phyſicians, and going to Buxton;" June 20, the earl of Shrewſbury writes for "40 ounces of pepper, ſaffron, mace, and cloves;" and Nov. 3, 1583, the earl denies that ſhe was permitted to walk in Sherwood foreſt while ſhe was at Workſop[10].

About this period begins an intereſting ſeries of letters relating to the queen's confinement at Tutbury; which Mr. Shaw has lately communicated to the publick from the originals in the poſſeſſion of Thomas Clifford, eſq.[11]. After an impriſonment of fourteen years, ſhe was, in 1585, under the care of ſir Amyas Pawlet, removed from Tutbury caſtle, to Chartley; and thence, in September 1586, to Fotheringay caſtle; where, on the 8th of February following, her unhappy

---

[1] This probably might be on account of the earl of Huntingdon's alliance to the crown, as directly deſcended from George duke of Clarence, brother to king Edward IV; ſee p. 583.—Dr. Robertſon ſays, "Haſtings earl of Huntingdon, who pretended to diſpute with the Scottiſh queen her right to the ſucceſſion, being joined in commiſſion with Shrewſbury, rendered her impriſonment more intolerable, by the exceſs of his vigilance and rigour." Hiſtory of Scotland, vol. I. p. 504; referring to Haynes.

[2] Dr. Robertſon, p. 508, ſays, "Mary was removed to Coventry, a place of ſtrength, which could not be taken without a regular ſiege."

[3] Already printed in p. 584.

[4] This appears by the following extract from the Town-book of Coventry: "1569, Richard Hawten, mayor. In this year was a great rebellion in the North; on which account Mary queen of Scots was removed from Tutbury to Coventry, and there kept priſoner in the cuſtody of the earl of Shrewſbury and earl of Huntingdon, at the Bull Inn, from St. Andrew's tide until Candlemas; during which time the citizens kept watch and ward, day and night, at every gate, that none paſſed by without examination."

[5] Lodge's Illuſtrations, vol. II. p. 28.

[6] Harl. MSS. 4774.

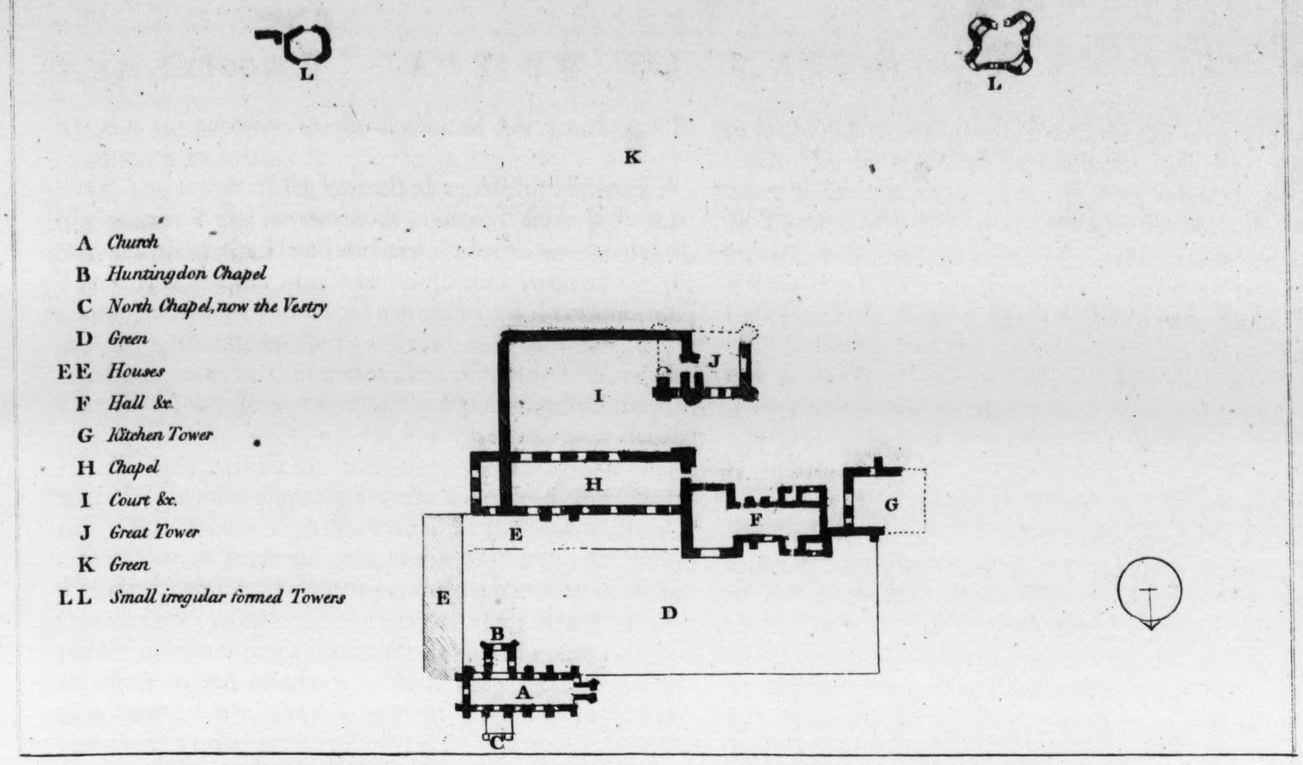
[7] Lodge's Illuſtrations, vol. II. p. 97.

[8] Theſe brief extracts are partly from Mr. Lodge, and partly from the Unpubliſhed Talbot Papers.

[9] The intended progreſs was to have been to Grafton, Northampton, Leiceſter, and thence to Aſhby, to remain there 21 days, that the waters of Buxton might be daily brought thither, for the earl of Leiceſter, or any other, to have uſed, the phyſicians having preſcribed that the earl of Leiceſter ſhould drink and uſe thoſe waters for 20 days together.

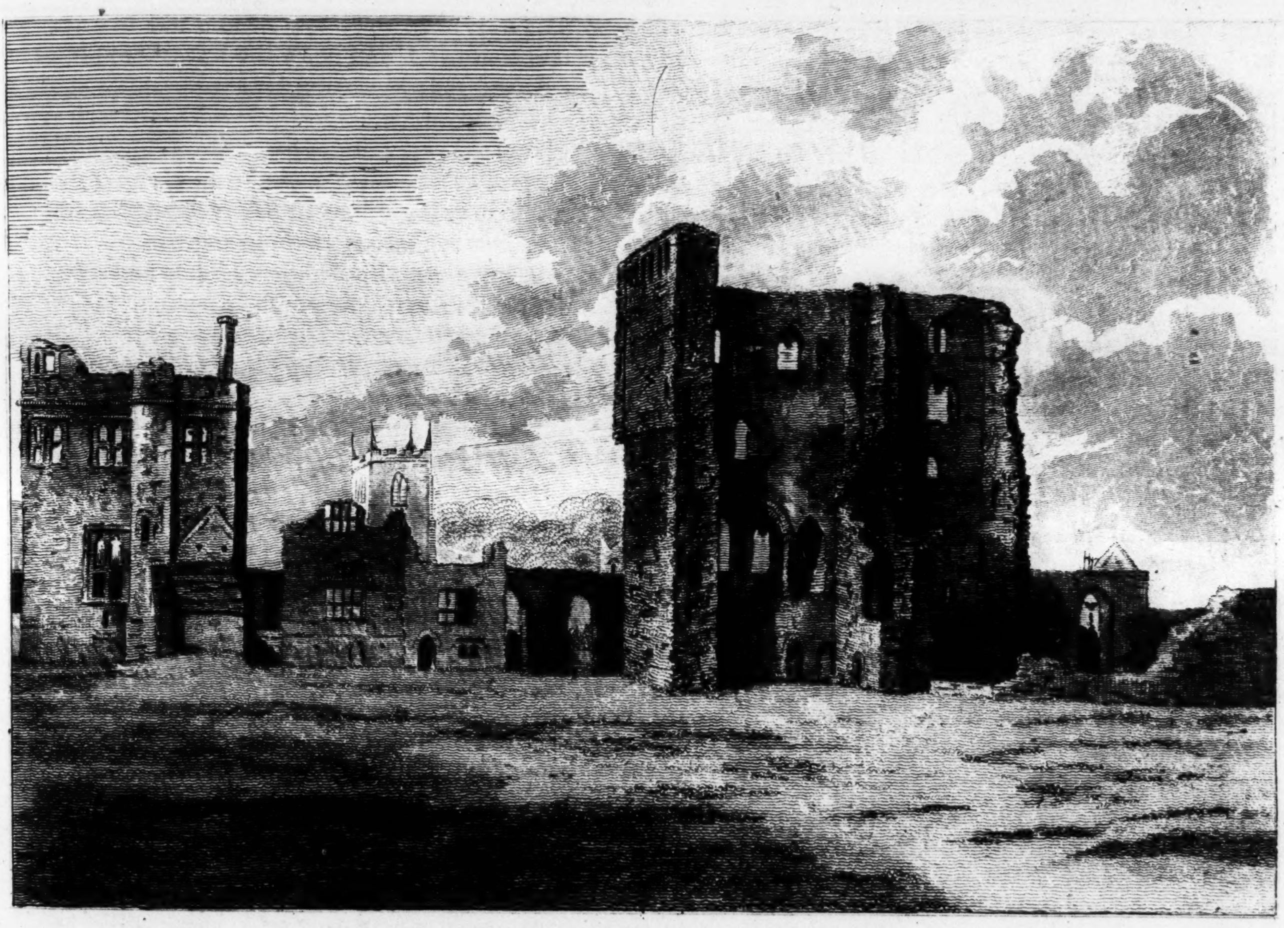
[10] By a letter of Richard Torre to the earl of Shrewſbury, dated Workſop-lodge, April 19, 1585, it appears that "thirty orange-trees were then planted in the gardens at Workſop."

[11] Appendix to Shaw's Staffordſhire, vol. I. pp. 5—18.



L
L
K
A Church
B Huntingdon Chapel
C North Chapel, now the Vestry
D Green
EE Houses
F Hall &c.
G Kitchen Tower
H Chapel
I Court &c.
J Great Tower
K Green
LL Small irregular formed Towers
J
I
H
F
G
E
E
D
B
A
C

General Plan of Ashby Church and the Castle as it remains at present drawn by Memory. 1800.



General South West View of Ashby de la Zouch Castle. taken 782.

J.Basire sc.

View (looking South East) in the Kitchen of Ashby de la Zouch Castle.

Taken 1800.

life was terminated, in the flower of her youth and in the bloom of beauty [1].

Of the hoſpitalities exerciſed at Aſhby caſtle in the beginning of the ſeventeenth century, ſome idea may be formed by the Houſhold regulations already copied. The noble framer of thoſe reſolutions lived to ſee his country involved in all the horrors of civil commotion; and, though too infirm to take himſelf an active part, ſtood foremoſt in the commiſſion of array [2] iſſued by king Charles I. June 11, 1642. His two only ſons alſo were zealouſly engaged on the part of their Royal Maſter. Colonel Henry Haſtings, the younger of them, who appeared eminently for the king from the beginning, was joined with his father in the commiſſion of array; and in June that year was appointed high-ſheriff of Leiceſterſhire, for the expreſs purpoſe of "confining the county within the limits of their duty, by the power of that office, as well as by the intereſt and relations of his family [3]." This drew on him an impeachment from the Parliament [4]. "Having raiſed, however, a good troop of horſe, he charged bravely at the head thereof, Oct. 23, at the battle of Edgehill [5]; and, after the king was ſettled at Oxford, with his own troop of horſe only, and ſome officers which he eaſily gathered together, went into Leiceſterſhire with the commiſſion of colonel-general of that county, and fixed himſelf at Aſhby de la Zouch, the houſe of the earl of Huntingdon, his father, who was then living [6], which he preſently fortified; and, in a very ſhort time, by his intereſt there, raiſed ſo good a party of horſe and foot, that he maintained many ſkirmiſhes with the lord Grey (who had placed a garriſon in the town of Leiceſter); the king's ſervice being the more advanced there by the notable animoſities between the two families of Huntingdon and Stamford; between whom the county was divided paſſionately enough, without any other quarrel. And now the ſons fought the public quarrel with their private ſpirit and indignation. But the King had the advantage in his champion, the lord Grey being a young man of no eminent parts, and only backed with the credit and authority of the Parliament; whereas colonel Haſtings, though a younger brother, by his perſonal reputation, had ſupported his family; and, by the intereſt of it, and the affection that the people bore to him, brought, no doubt, an addition of power to the very cauſe; inaſmuch as he not only defended himſelf againſt the forces of the Parliament in Leiceſterſhire, but diſquieted ſir John Gell in Derbyſhire, and fixed garriſons in Staffordſhire [7]."

During theſe troubles, Aſhby caſtle ſerved as a place of refuge to ſeveral learned and pious Divines [8].

The King marched to Aſhby May 25, 1645 [9], where Mr. Simmonds, who at that time attended his Majeſty, obſerved in the old hall windows "the arms of Haſtings often ſet up, new;" and alſo Haſtings; impaling, 1. Quarterly, 1. and 4. Quarterly, Argent, three maſcles in feſs Gules, Montacute; 2. and 3. Per pale, Or and Sable, a ſaltire engrailed, counterchanged, Pole; 2. Gules, a ſaltire Argent, a label of three points gobony, Argent and Azure, Nevil earl of Saliſbury and Warwick; 3. as 2; 4. as 1 [10].—On the taking of Leiceſter by his Majeſty's army, June 1, the lord Loughborough was appointed governor of that garriſon.

The royal gueſt unfortunately too ſoon had occaſion to repeat his viſit at Aſhby caſtle.—"Towards night, on that diſmal Saturday, June 14, we marched (for we had left running) to Aſhby.—Sunday, his Majeſty left Aſhby about 10 in the morning, and went to Lichfield that night [11];" and thence into Wales [12].

On the 18th, on the ſurrender of Leiceſter, the lord Loughborough returned to Aſhby; and on the 20th, ſir Thomas Fairfax's army, notwithſtanding their hard ſervice, marched from Leiceſter, and ſate down before Aſhby [13]; which for ſeveral months after was cloſely beſieged. In September the town was much viſited with ſickneſs, and the garriſon reduced to 60 men [14]; but at the latter end of October near 600 more of the King's forces joined them; and Nov. 29, 1645, Thomas Davenport, of Hinckley, was fined £20. for ſelling them wine [15]. In the January following, this garriſon made ſeveral ſucceſsful ſallies [16]; but on the 7th of February at night a ſtrong party of horſe came from Leiceſter undiſcovered, ſurprized the centinels, fell-in at the turnpike, broke the chain, and entered the town, took 100 horſe, with much pillage, and returned to Leiceſter without oppoſition [17]. After this, the following articles for the ſurrender of this maiden garriſon (ſo ſtyled as having never been actually conquered) were ſent up to the Parliament [18]; and, after a debate, whether the ſequeſtration of the earl of Huntingdon, the lord Loughborough, and colonel Perkins, then governor, ſhould be taken off, were agreed to by both Houſes, Feb. 24; and on Saturday the 28th, were finally ſigned.

"Articles for the rendition of the king's garriſon of Aſhby caſtle, made between colonel-general Haſtings (lord Loughborough) and colonel Needham (then governour of Leiceſter for the Parliament) dated the laſt day of February, 1645.

"1. Imprimis, that all the officers and ſouldiers now at Aſhby, and under the command of colonell-generall Haſtings, and that are over and above the number hereafter ſpecifyed, ſhall, upon Monday next after the ſigning hereof (being the ſecond day of March) depart and quit the garriſon; and march away without further ſtay or continuance there.

"2. Item, that, upon the Tueſday following, colonell-generall Haſtings ſhall begin to ſleight the works and fortifications of the town and garriſon of Aſhby; and to that end ſhall endeavour and procure aſſiſtance from the countrie, as well as receive all ſuch as be ſent to that purpoſe; and not forbear untill the whole be ſleighted and unfortifyed.

"3. Item, that, at the end of three months hereafter ſpecifyed, colonell-generall Haſtings ſhall deliver up Aſhby houſe itſelf, being now a garriſon of the king's, into the hands of his brother the earl of Huntingdon.

"4. Item, that, upon ſigning theſe articles, all priſoners of this countie whatſoever to be ſett at libertie, and to have ticketts to go home.

"5. That ſufficient hoſtages (and ſuch as ſhall be thought fitt by colonel Needham) be given for the ſafe return of any convoy that ſhall be graunted by him.

"6. Item, that colonell-generall Haſtings, with his officers, gentlemen, and ſouldiers, ſhall have libertie (if they pleaſe) to march away to Bridgenorth or Worceſter, with their horſes, armes, and amunition, bagg and baggage, trumpets ſounding, drums beating, colours flying, matches lighted on both ends, muſkets loaded, one braſs gun, and a caſe of ſacks in boxes; and have ſufficient carriage allowed them, and ſix days libertie for their paſſage.

"7. Item, that colonell-general Haſtings, his officers and gentlemen, and alſo all manner of perſons, as well ſouldiers as others, and that are now members of that garriſon, and now belonging to it, ſhall have libertie to lay down their armes, and have protections to live at home, if they pleaſe, they ſubmitting to all ordinances of parliament.

---

[1] In the Hiſtory of Fotheringay (Bibl. Top. Brit. N° XL.) may be ſeen a very particular account of the death and funeral of this fair and royal Unfortunate; to which the curious reader is referred, as containing an authentic copy of her laſt will, and many genuine particulars not to be met with in any other work. A fac-ſimile engraving of that part of the will which is written with her own hand, together with the beginning and ending of one of her letters, both preſerved in the Cotton collection, are given in Plate LXXXV. p. 633. from a copy which firſt appeared in the above-cited publication.

[2] This commiſſion was firſt put in execution, June 20, by the earl of Derby, in Lancaſhire; and the example was followed, by the earl of Huntingdon and his ſon Henry Haſtings, June 22, in Leiceſterſhire. Dugdale's View, p. 97.

[3] Clarendon, vol. I. p. 540.

[4] See before, p. 603.

[5] His eldeſt brother Ferdinando lord Haſtings, who had the year before been called to parliament as baron Haſtings, had alſo a command of horſe in that battle; but is mentioned in a very ſlighting way by lord Clarendon, vol. II. p. 46; as having entered the Houſe of Lords, in the afternoon of the day following the battle, with frighted and ghaſtly looks, declaring poſitively all to be loſt; though it was evident that he had run away from the beginning, and only loſt his way thither.

[6] Earl Henry died in the following year, Nov. 14, 1643.

[7] Clarendon, vol. II. p. 113.

[8] See p. 632.

[9] Harl. MSS. 911. p. 47.

[10] Plate LXXVI. fig. 10.

[11] Harl MSS. 911. p. 76.

[12] Heath, p. 80. See Carte, vol. III. p. 44.

[13] Whitlock, p. 147.

[14] Mercurius Veridicus, Sept. 27.

[15] Original Minutes of the Committee of Sequeſtration.

[16] Whitlock, p. 192.

[17] Ibid. p. 197.

[18] Journals of the Lords, vol. VIII. p. 185; of the Commons, vol. IV. p 453.

"8. Item, that all the ſequeſtrations of colonell-generall Haſtings, the earl of Huntingdon, and colonell Perkyns (governour of Aſhby-houſe) be taken off upon the ſleighting of Aſhby garriſon.

"9. Item, that ſir Richard Skeffington and colonell Needham ſhall have libertie and power to compound for the eſtates of ſuch officers and gentlemen as are expreſſed in the liſt given in; whether of Leiceſter, Derby, Stafford, Notingham, or Warwick ſhires; or ſo many of them as ſhall think fitt to compound with them for their eſtates.

"10. Item, colonell-generall Haſtings, with the ſaid gentlemen and their ſervants that deſire to ſtay with him, not exceeding the number of one hundred, may have free libertie to ſtay at Aſhby, for three months after the ſigning of theſe articles; and not to be moleſted, during the ſaid term, for any debts or engagements, or otherwiſe, by any of the Parliament's party, they doing nothing prejudiciall to the Parliament.

"11. Item, that colonell-generall Haſtings, and the ſaid gentlemen, with their ſervants and horſes, not exceeding in number of horſe one hundred and fiftie, ſhall have a ſufficient convoy and paſſe to Hull or Briſtoll; and therefrom, by order of Parliament, to have a ſhipp provided, to tranſport them either to France or Holland, whither they pleaſe.

H. LOUGHBOROUGH, JOHN NEEDHAM."

Aug. 29, 1648, the command of Aſhby de la Zouch was given by the Parliament to Thomas lord Grey of Groby; who was deſired to take care for the ſecuring and ſafe-keeping duke Hamilton a priſoner there [1].

On the 28th of November, it was referred to a Committee of the Houſe of Commons, to conſider of all the caſtles, garriſons, and places of ſtrength in the kingdom; what were fit to be kept up, and what to be ſlighted and made untenable; and on the ſame day it was reſolved that the garriſon of Aſhby de la Zouch ſhould be forthwith ſlighted, and made untenable; and that James earl of Cambridge, then a priſoner in that caſtle, ſhould be committed cloſe priſoner to Windſor caſtle for high treaſon [2]. Thus was this noble ſtructure ſoon after permitted quietly to diſſolve, with the downfall of the Monarchy and the King's intereſt; thoſe unworthy ends being effected by the Parliamentary committee then ſitting at Leiceſter; which committee, having ſent ſome of their members to view the place, employed divers perſons to demoliſh theſe goodly towers by undermining; William Bainbrigg, of Lockington in the ſaid county (commanding a party of horſe for that occaſion) having the overſight thereof.

After this event, the earl of Huntingdon, having fixed his abode at Donington Park, was the leſs anxious to keep in repair the habitable part of this family manſion. Some conſiderable walls, however, ſtill remain; and the different parts of the old building, with the ſpacious cellars and ſubterraneous drains and paſſages, may readily be diſtinguiſhed. On the higheſt fragment, under a rich arch, are ſtill the arms of Haſtings, which are alſo viſible in ſeveral of the ruins; but it is rather remarkable that there is no ivy on the walls, which are built of the faireſt and cleareſt aſhler ſtone, admirably fitted together and cemented. Behind the caſtle, to the North, are two cavities, parallelogram, like ponds; and at the North-eaſt corner of the garden is a hexagon brick ſummer-houſe, with a circular ſtaircaſe and ſtone door-way, joined by an outer terrace to another, which ſtretches over a ſecond terrace, and is of brick, four-ſided, round and ſquare.

Among the topographical prints collected by Dr. Combe, is a North view in the old palace of Aſhby de la Zouch, ſomething in Place's manner.—Buck engraved, in 1730, South and North views of this caſtle.—Views of it were alſo publiſhed, by Groſe, Sparrow, and Godfrey, in 1759;—and in 1786 two ſmall, but accurate etchings (one of them a view within the great court of the caſtle) by Mr. Carter, one of the firſt architectural draughtſmen of the preſent age.—Another South view was engraved in 1791 by Mr. Walker [3].

Having been favoured in 1800 by Mr. Carter with two beautiful drawings of theſe noble ruins; one of them, his general South view (which, compared with Buck's, will ſhew the dilapidations of 70 years); the other, an internal view of the remains of the Kitchen Tower; and alſo with a ſlight plan of the ſite of the caſtle and church, &c. (Plate LXXXI.); it would be injuſtice not to add the ingenious artiſt's brief notes:

"I ſhall not enter into the cauſes which have reduced this once ſplendid pile of buildings to their preſent ſtate of ruin and curtailment; but confine myſelf to a few ſlight remarks on ſome of its principal remains.

"This caſtle, in its dimenſions, ſeems to have known no bounds, either in the lines of arrangement, or in the altitude of the ſeveral ſtories. We can in particular trace out the great hall, kitchen, various chambers of ſtate, the chapel, &c. wherein are found, in good preſervation, rich door-ways, chimney-pieces, arms, devices, and other ornamental accompaniments; all which ſerve to ſhew that this caſtle muſt have once vied, if not ſurpaſſed, all its caſtellated competitors for architectural fame that this country has produced. And yet do not theſe ſentiments take poſſeſſion of our imaginations when engaged in the like ſurvey of any other of our antient lordly abodes? How is it poſſible then to confine the meed of praiſe, ſince all theſe towering glories have alike claims for wonder and commendation? How endleſs muſt have been the track of journeying round the land in former times, that brought to view ſuch proud ſcenes of array and triumph, and of hoſpitable reception! Enthuſiaſm muſt then have been one general impulſe, inſpiring each ardent ſoul to run the road of glory, in laws, in arts, in honour, and in arms!"

In Plate LXXXII, is an inſide view of the caſtle chapel, taken in 1795 by Mr. R. W. Baſire.

HISTORICAL and MISCELLANEOUS REMARKS.

In 1564, there were 64 families in Aſhby, and 11 in Blackfordby; and in 1630 the freeholders at Aſhby were, Joſeph Tomlinſon, Nathanael Aſh, and Thomas Sherwood; at Blackfordby, William Joyce, Gilbert Cuxley, and Ralph Joyce; and at Boothorpe, Henry French and William Beck.

In 1655, there was collected in Aſhby, for the relief of the poor Proteſtants in Piedmont, the ſum of 3*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*; and at Blackfordby 8*s.* 7*d.*

A token of John Allatt (at the three woolpacks) Aſhby dal Zouch, 1670, is in Pl. LXXVI. fig. 8.

In 1722, 46 freeholders polled from Aſhby, and 9 from Blackfordby; and in 1775 we find 50 names from Aſhby, 18 from Blackfordby, and 2 from Boothorpe.

Mr. John Mackay, who publiſhed "A Journal through England" in the beginning of the reign of king George I. ſays, "There are ſome fine good old ſeats in Leiceſterſhire, with their parks. The moſt conſiderable that I ſaw is that of Haſtings earl of Huntingdon, a noble family, who have a great intereſt in this county, and have a fine burial-place, with ſome good monuments, at Aſhby de la Zouch. By the ruins, and what is left ſtanding of the walls of the caſtle here, it muſt have been one of the principal in England. King James I. quartered himſelf and his whole court upon the then earl of Huntingdon for many days together [4]. Every day the dinner was ſerved up by 30 poor knights, with gold chains and velvet gowns.

"Aſhby de la Zouch is famous for being the beſt market for ſtrong horſes in England. It affords as good ale as Burton. The town is the earl of Huntingdon's; as is alſo Packington, a moſt delightful retired town, within two miles of Aſhby. The inhabitants, eſpecially the better ſort, are generous and ſociable beyond thoſe of moſt other towns [5]. They treat one another in turn very ſplendidly in the Chriſtmas holidays. In the ſummer time they bowl, having a good green, and I think the only one in thoſe parts. On Mondays the neighbouring noblemen and gentlemen reſort thither to dine together, and bowl in the ſeaſon."

---

[1] Journals of the Commons, vol. V. pp. 689. 692.

[2] Ibid. vol. VI. p. 87.

[3] This was a private plate, for the uſe of George Stacpoole, eſq. See p. 635.

[4] This expenſive viſit gave riſe to the following traditional anecdote. The nobility at that time, for many miles round, came to Aſhby caſtle, to pay their reſpects to the king, except lord Stanhope of Harrington, who was ſomewhat flighty. The king, hurt at his not coming to pay his reſpects with the other nobility, ſent for him, and reproved him for lack of duty; "but," concluded the king, "I excuſe you; for, the people ſay that you are mad." "I may be mad, my liege ſovereign," replied lord Stanhope; "but I am not half ſo mad as my lord Huntingdon, who is worried by bloodhounds."

[5] This place has long been famed for convivial muſical meetings; at which the late Dr. Kirkland was particularly diſtinguiſhed.

July 12, 1753, a terrible fire happened at Aſhby, which conſumed 150 bay of buildings.

In 1761, "the ſkeleton of a man was dug up in a garden at Aſhby, late in the poſſeſſion of Richard Springthorpe; where, from the teeth being all perfectly ſound, and not one miſſing in the ſkull, and from ſome fleſh then remaining on the bones, there was reaſon to believe it had been but a few years; and, as no perſon had been miſſing in that neighbourhood, it was ſuppoſed to have been the body of a ſtranger that was murdered[1]."

In an act of parliament paſſed in 1768, for incloſing ſeveral open and common fields, called The Great Field, The Middle Field, and The Lion's Well Field, and alſo three ſeveral commons, called The Horſe or Brick-kiln Common, The Gooſe Pen, and The Drift, within the lordſhip of Aſhby de la Zouch, containing together about 1040 acres; Francis earl of Huntingdon is deſcribed as lord of the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch, lord of the ſoil of and in the ſaid commons, and entitled to the minerals therein; as impropriator of the great tithes ariſing within the ſaid fields, meadow grounds, and commons; patron of the vicarage of Aſhby de la Zouch; and the greateſt proprietor and owner of lands and grounds within the ſaid open and common fields and meadow grounds, and of the rights of common within the ſaid ſeveral commons; the reverend Peter Cowper, clerk, as vicar of Aſhby de la Zouch, and thereby entitled to the tithes of hay, wool, and lamb, and all vicarial tithes ariſing or happening within the ſame fields, meadow grounds, and commons; and Thomas Richards, eſq. John Piddocke, gent. Edward Aſhpinſhaw, Henworth Newton, and ſeveral other perſons, as entitled to the reſidue of the lands and grounds and right of common within and upon the ſaid fields, meadow grounds, and commons. The firſt allotment is directed to be made to the lord of the manor, for his right in the ſoil, and to the minerals within the commons; then, as a full compenſation for all rectorial and vicarial tithes, a ſeventh part of the reſidue to the impropriator and vicar, from which the vicar's portion to be of the full yearly value of £50; the remainder to be the property of the earl of Huntingdon; to whom are reſerved the ſoil and herbage of the roads, with all manerial rights. None of the turnpike roads to or from Aſhby were to be altered by the incloſure.

Oct. 27, 1773, a fire broke out at Mr. Benſon's, a hatter in Aſhby; which burned down five houſes.

In October 1788, in repairing the head of a fiſh-pool in a place called Mill-ſtone Gutter, on Aſhby Woulds, about 450 antient ſilver coins were found by the workmen. They were incloſed in a ſmall leaden box, of an oblong form, which, from the length of time it had lain in the ground, was reduced to a perfect calx, and, on being moved, directly mouldered to pieces. The coins are of various dies; but almoſt all of them the pennies of king Stephen, except a few of Henry I, Henry II, and Henry III. Upwards of ſixty of them were cut into halves, as may be ſuppoſed, for half-pennies. About a dozen are in quarters, all clearly divided, for the conveniency of paying quarter-pennies, or farthings. From the name of the place where they were found, and the appearance of the ſituation, it is probable the ſpot may have been the ſite of an antient water-mill; and they the treaſure of ſome miller and his family, who concealed them in thoſe turbulent times. The reaſon, perhaps, of their being moſtly of the reign of king Stephen is, that he granted to Walter biſhop of Coventry, and his ſucceſſors, a mint at Lichfield, which is not above 14 miles from the place where they were found. A few of theſe pieces were diſperſed at their firſt being diſcovered; but by far the greater part of them were ſecured for Lord Rawdon (the preſent earl of Moira) as owner of the manor; and in his Lordſhip's poſſeſſion they ſtill remain. Amongſt them were the ſeven following ſpecimens, engraved in Plate LXXXII.

1. ✠ STEPHANVS REX. The head of Stephen crowned, to the right, with a ſceptre before it.

Rev. ✠ WHICHELINVS DERBI. A croſs between four martlets, as on the coins of Edward the Confeſſor[2].

2. ✠ . . . . NE ⁚ Head as before, with a ſceptre in the right hand.

Rev. ✠ . . . . AN—D ⁚ ONS. A croſs moline, ornamented with four fleurs de lis, pointed towards the centre.

3. ✠ STIEFNE R. As N° 2.

Rev. ✠ ĀLFǷINE ⁚ ON ⁚ SVD ⁚. As N° 2.

4. ✠ STIEFNE ⁚ R. As N° 2.

Rev. ✠ SǷEIN ⁚ ON ⁚ SNOT ⁚. As N° 2.

5. ✠ ST . . . . RE. As N° 2.

Rev. ✠ HVEMRI ⁚ : OTCNS. As N° 2.

6. ✠ . . . . F E RE. As N° 2.

Rev. ✠ . . . AV . . SNR . . O ONS . . . As N° 2. except a roſe in the centre of the croſs.

---

[1] The king's pardon was offered, and a reward from the churchwardens of £50. for the diſcovery of the offenders, excepting the perſon who actually committed the murder. Gent. Mag. vol. XXX. p. 601.

[2] This very rare coin, at the requeſt of Mr. Southgate (who at firſt ſight pronounced it to be worth ſeven guineas) was communicated to the Gentleman's Magazine, vol. LXVI. p. 843; which produced, p. 983, the following remarks from Mr. Shaw: "The engraving of this coin was, if I am not miſtaken, copied from the drawing of the original * ſtill in my poſſeſſion, which I ſent ſome time ſince to Mr. Nichols, with the imperfect account I was then able to obtain of the diſcovery: but, being lately induced, by a letter from a learned friend, in conſequence of his having ſeen that drawing, to make farther enquiries about the reſt of that curious collection, I ſtole, the other day, a few hours from my own purſuits, to gratify a double curioſity; that of inſpecting theſe coins, and the beautiful new Gothic manſion of the earl of Moira at Donington Park, where they now moſt of them are, in the cuſtody of his lordſhip's worthy ſteward, Mr. Dawſon, whom I was delighted to find not only an amateur in ſuch antiquities, but in the noble treaſure of antient records, and other valuable papers there, relating to Leiceſterſhire and Staffordſhire, from which Mr. Nichols and myſelf are likely to derive much curious information. The above very intelligent and communicative gentleman, I found, had made a ſelection of the moſt rare and beautiful ſpecimens of the coins, and drawn up a ſhort account of them, for Mr. Nichols's inſpection. It is remarkable, and a farther confirmation of the great rarity of the Stephen's penny with the martlets on the reverſe, that, out of more than 400 of thoſe coins of that king's reign, only three and one half are of that particular die †. By ſuch accidental diſcoveries, and the induſtry of our Engliſh Antiquaries, antient coins are greatly diminiſhed in their value ſince the time of Thoreſby, who (in his Muſeum, p. 349) ſays, that his utmoſt diligence could procure but one of either king William I. or II. till a neſt of 250 were found at York, in 1703-4, after a fire, in digging up the foundation for a new edifice."—Mr. Ruding, to whom the ſtudy of Saxon coins is perfectly familiar, ſuggeſted, p. 1005, that "this penny of king Stephen came in a moſt queſtionable ſhape. The type of the obverſe," he ſays," is rude far beyond the rudeneſs of Stephen's other coins; and the Confeſſor's martlets on the reverſe, added to the omiſſion of ON before the place of mintage, give me great reaſon for ſuſpicion. Perhaps ſome correſpondent will have the goodneſs to ſuggeſt a probable reaſon for Stephen's adoption of that reverſe." This produced from Mr. Laſkey, vol. LXVII. p. 37, the following explanatory remarks: "The letter of Mr. Shaw muſt entirely do away every queſtionable ſhape which may be entertained in reſpect to the authenticity of the penny of Stephen. Your correſpondent ſeems a great ſceptic, and will ſcarcely allow the verſatility in the Britiſh antient mints, which it is well known they poſſeſſed. If he wants a clue for diſcovering why a coin of Stephen ſhould have the martlets on the reverſe, let him ſearch the Heralds' office, who will inform him what baron, noble, or prelate, uſed martlets on their arms, or perhaps their creſt; for, when Stephen uſurped the crown, he was obliged to indulge his encroaching ſubjects with many parts of his prerogative, to prevent their revolting, one of which was that of coining their own money. This will in part corroborate what Mr. Shaw ſays, that the coins of Stephen are of various dies." Mr. Ruding, p. 120, replies, "Since my laſt, I have not only read Mr. Shaw's account of the diſcovery of the ſuſpected pennies of Stephen, but alſo have been favoured by him with the inſpection of one of them. The external evidence is, I acknowledge, perfectly ſatisfactory; but I muſt ſtill repeat that the coin itſelf bears a moſt queſtionable ſhape. If a reverſe copied from a well-known Saxon coin, and a buſt on the obverſe rude, even affectedly ſo, beyond the workmanſhip of the other parts of the coin, will not juſtify heſitation, I muſt content myſelf with being conſidered as an unreaſonable ſceptic."

* The engraving was from a drawing made by Mr. Schnebbelie from a coin in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Dawſon.

† One of theſe came into the poſſeſſion of Mr. Sharpe of Coventry; who much laments that he parted with it to his deceaſed friend Mr. Southgate.

7. ✠ . . . . RILVS. The head of Henry I. nearly full-faced, with a ſceptre in the right hand.

Rev. ✠ . . . EM . . . ON LVN. A maſcle ſaltirewiſe, pointed with fleurs de lis, ſurmounted by a croſs fleury, with a pellet in each angle.

In 1794, an act was paſſed, for making a navigable canal, from the Coventry canal navigation at Bedworth in Warwickſhire, through ſeveral intermediate townſhips, to the cloſe called Ipſwell, or Black Ditch, in the pariſh of Aſhby de la Zouch; with a branch from Furlong cloſe, in the hamlet of Blackfordby, to and through Aſhby and Nether Seile, and alſo through High Swadlincote, and Church Greſley in Derbyſhire; the ſaid canal to be alſo kept navigable from Black Ditch through other parts of Aſhby, and to Repton and Ticknall, co. Derby; with a cut or branch, when required by earl Ferrers, to Staunton Harold[1].

This extenſive undertaking is advancing rapidly to maturity: and coal delphs[2] are now actually at work on the Woulds by a new-invented ſteam-engine called a whimſey; ſeveral workſhops being alſo erected.

Three rail-roads are already made from the canal; 1. to Bredon lime-works; 2. through earl Ferrers's wood-lands, in ſome parts by tunnels many yards under ground, to Cloud-hill lime-works; 3. through South wood, the earl of Moira's, to Ticknall.

In an act of parliament paſſed in 1800, for incloſing the common or waſte ground called Aſhby Woulds, containing about 3000 acres, Francis-Rawdon Haſtings, earl of Moira in the kingdom of Ireland, baron Rawdon of Rawdon in the county of York, is deſcribed as lord of the manor of Aſhby, and as ſuch entitled to the ſoil and minerals of and within the ſaid manor or waſte ground; owner of a coney or rabbit-warren in the ſaid common; and alſo as impropriator of the great tithes, and patron of the vicarage; the rev. John Prior, as vicar, entitled to the vicarial tithes within the pariſh; and the ſaid earl of Moira, Robert Earl Ferrers, Major-general Charles Haſtings, Sir Francis Burdett, bart. Sir Nigel-Bowyer Greſley, bart. the Rev. William Greſley, and ſeveral other perſons, as owners of meſſuages, cottages, lands, and hereditaments, were entitled to right of common. The commiſſioners are authorized, under proper reſtrictions, to divert the courſe of any ſtreams, or currents of water; and to ſet out eight acres for the purpoſes of public watering-places for cattle, and for obtaining materials for repairing the public roads. To the earl of Moira as lay-impropriator, and Mr. Prior as vicar, a ninth part of the whole is next directed to be allotted in ſeveralty, according to their reſpective intereſts; and a ſixteenth of the remainder to the ſaid earl, in recompence for his right of ſoil, and extinguiſhment of his coney-warren; with ſuch further part of the ſaid common as ſhall be of the full clear yearly value of £50. in compenſation for the damages his Lordſhip may ſuſtain, in making full ſatisfaction to ſuch owners of land as may any way be injured, by digging for, ſinking, getting, and working, any beds and mines of coal, iron ſtone, or other minerals. The commiſſioners, after March 25, 1801, are empowered to cauſe the rabbits then remaining in the warren to be effectually removed or deſtroyed. Intakes and incloſures made above 20 years, and the ponds, to belong to the Earl of Moira; and if within 20 years, to be transferred to his Lordſhip as part of the manerial allotment. The commiſſioners are alſo required to ſet out, as part of the ground for the ſaid Earl, one allotment altogether (roads excepted) containing 150 acres, or thereabouts, ſo as to include his Lordſhip's preſent coal-work upon Aſhby Woulds, and the rail-ways therefrom to the Aſhby de la Zouch canal; and alſo one other allotment altogether (roads excepted) containing 300 acres, or thereabouts, around, and ſo as to include, the reſervoir now making for the uſe of the ſaid canal; and alſo one other allotment altogether (roads excepted) containing 150 acres, or thereabouts, ſo as to contain a conſiderable portion of the clay uſed in porcelain, pot, and other manufactures, commonly called ſagger, or fire-clay, between the Burton turnpike-road and the preſent warren-houſe, and between the Hartſhorne turnpike-road and Greſley and Swadlincote common; which allotments the ſaid commiſſioners are required to ſet out for the ſaid Earl, or the lord or lords of the ſaid manor for the time being, ſo as ſhall appear to them the ſaid commiſſioners moſt convenient to him and them, or the leſſee or leſſees of him and them, or any other perſon authorized by him and them, for the uſe or exerciſe of his or their mineral rights, or works that he or they may think fit to commence, carry on, or eſtabliſh. Power is given to allot lands in lieu of rectorial tithes or moduſes, from certain eſtates, incloſures, or incloſed lands or grounds, in the pariſh of Aſhby, and townſhips or liberties of Blackfordby and Boothorpe; and in like manner for vicarial tithes of homeſteads or old incloſures. The vicar is empowered to leaſe his allotment; and coals and minerals[3] are reſerved to the lord of the manor, making ſatisfaction for damages. All ſeignories and manerial rights are alſo fully reſerved.

Aſhby Old Park is now incloſed; and has four large farms, in the tenure of Mr. Moor, Mr. Bacon, Mr. Hall, and Mr. Litherland; beſides ſeveral ſmall tenements in the part leading to Staunton Harold.

Preſtop Park, formerly two farms, now only one, is let to Mr. Pilkington; and Heath End is a ſmall hamlet, containing ſeven houſes, two of which are inns.

Mr. Haſlam rents a wind and a water mill on Aſhby Woulds, called Barrot Mills; and a large pool of water well ſtocked with fiſh. Near this mill are 5 or 6 dwellings. Many very large potteries are alſo eſtabliſhed on the Woulds for inferior ſorts of earthen ware.

Wm. Pickering, warrener, rents the rabbit-warren, ſeveral large fiſh-ponds, and a place called Littleworth.

John Sutton, now living on Aſhby Woulds, aged about 60, was born blind; yet can threſh corn, ſet up hay-ricks, and perform other articles of huſbandry.

KILWARDBY, antiently called Culwardeby, a ſtreet beyond the brook at the Weſt end of the town of Aſhby, is deſcribed in old deeds as a diſtinct hamlet. In 1327, William la Zouch of Mortimer, at his death, had ſeven virgates and an half of land in Kilwardby of the king in capite, as of his crown, by the ſervice of a quarter of a knight's fee; Alan la Zouch, his ſon and next heir, being then 19 years old[4]; and this Alan, at his death, in 1346, held the ſame land under the like tenure[5].

STATISTICAL and GENERAL OBSERVATIONS.

Four fairs are now held at Aſhby: 1. on Eaſter Monday and Tueſday; 2. Whitſun Monday and Tueſday; 3. Old St. Bartholomew; and 4. on the 8th of November. A ſtatute alſo for the hiring of ſervants is held on the 22d of September.

The market, which is very plentiful, is kept on Saturday weekly; and the ſtone market-croſs (ſee Plate LXXVI. fig. 10.) is ſuperior to any in the county.

In March 1797, the total number of dwellings in the pariſh was 484; of teams 27, of farm-houſes 24.

In the vivary within the grounds of the little Park at Aſhby the river Meſe takes its riſe:

> "——— a dainty rill,
> Near Charnwood riſing firſt, where ſhe begins to fill
> Her banks, which all her courſe on both ſides do abound
> With heath and finny olds, and often gleaby ground,
> Till Croxall's fertile courſe doth comfort her at laſt
> When ſhe is entering Trent[6]."

---

[1] The particulars of this act have been already fully abſtracted in vol. I. p. clxix.

[2] "In the night of Oct. 12, 1800, the plank locked over the boring ſhaft of the earl of Moira's coal-mine, on Aſhby Woulds, was forcibly ſplit, the mouth of the hole uncovered, and two lengths of iron rods (11 yards each) maliciouſly and wickedly thrown into the pit, and wedged in ſo faſt together that they cannot be got out, whereby the works at the ſaid ſhaft are completely ſtopped, to the great injury of his lordſhip, the proprietors of the Aſhby canal undertaking, and the country, by preventing that ſpeedy and expected ſupply of coal, of which the trials at this mine afforded a confident proſpect, and which greatly wanted in the country. His lordſhip has ſince offered a reward of 50 guineas for the diſcovery of the offender." Gent. Mag. vol LXX. p. 1201.

[3] On theſe Woulds there is a fair proſpect of obtaining a mine of iron.

[4] Eſch. 11 Edw. III. N° 26. Leic.

[5] Eſch. 20 Edw. III. N° 47. Leic. Theſe two inquiſitions have (in vol. II. p. 877.) erroneouſly been aſcribed to Kilby.

[6] Drayton's Polyolbion, Song 26.

Forming a ſmall brook at the lower part of the town of Aſhby, this river ſoon after becomes a boundary of the two counties of Leiceſter and Derby[1], and ſo continues till it empties itſelf into the Trent.

Aſhby is alſo well watered with ſprings, by the names of Lyon's Well, Perring's Well, and Holywell; and on the Woulds are many conſiderable pools.

The ſoil is principally ſand, with ſome portions of clay; which, by a mixture of Bredon lime, makes excellent corn-land. The air is clear and healthy; very few fogs, except on a fine ſpring morning or night, when they are very favourable to the clay paſtures.

Large ſheep are bred here, with heavy black horns; weighing from 23 to 40 pounds a quarter; about 500 in a year. Many cows are alſo bred.

Sir Frederick-Morton Eden, in a late valuable publication, has favoured us with the following ſtatements:

“ Aſhby de la Zouch contains, by eſtimation, about 11,200 acres; and 195 houſes pay the window or commutation-tax. The inhabitants are ſhopkeepers, inn-keepers, manufacturers of woollen and cotton ſtockings and hats, farmers, and labourers. The preſent war has been very injurious to the commercial intereſts of this town. There is here one of lady Huntingdon's chapels, one Methodiſt chapel, and one Preſbyterian chapel; but the pariſhioners are chiefly of the Eſtabliſhed Church. The prices of proviſions are, beef 3½*d.* to 5*d.* the pound; mutton 5*d.*; veal 3*d.* to 4*d.*; butter 9*d.* to 10½*d.*; bread-flour 4*s.* a ſtone; potatoes 5*d.* the gallon; which about autumn are generally 2*d.* or 3*d.* the gallon; milk 1½*d.* the quart. Spinners of wool earn from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 3*s.* a week; wool-combers from 12*s.* to 14*s.* a week; ſtocking weavers, in general, from 7*s.* to 17*s.* a week; but a few earn £1. 1*s.* a week; hatters from 12*s.* to 20*s.* a week; labourers in huſbandry, till within the laſt year, had 4*s.* a week in winter, and 6*s.* in ſummer; but they have now 6*s.* in winter, and from 7*s.* to 9*s.* in ſummer, and victuals. The number of alehouſes in the pariſh has been much reduced ſince laſt winter, from 25 to 21. Here are eight friendly ſocieties, which have 40 to 80 members in each: only two have had their rules confirmed by the magiſtrates.

The rent of land, on large farms, is from 20*s.* to 30*s.* an acre; one ſmall farm near the town is let at £2. an acre. The land-tax is 1*s.* 6*d.* in the pound.

In 1768, when about 1040 acres were incloſed, part of which were common, and part common-field, the vicar had an allotment of land in lieu of tithes. Farms are from £40. to £300. a year; but chiefly from £50. to £90. a year. Wheat, barley, oats, turnips, and clover, are cultivated. There is much paſture ground.

The poor are partly maintained in the work-houſe, and partly at their own homes. There are at preſent 52, who are chiefly old women and children, in the work-houſe. The children are taught to read, to ſpin jerſey, to do common houſe-work, ſpinning, knitting, ſewing, working in the fields, &c.; by which means they become early attached to induſtrious principles, and are thereby made truly uſeful and valuable ſervants. The bedding and wearing-apparel are chiefly manufactured in the houſe; excluſive of which work the poor generally earn, by ſpinning jerſey, &c. about 10*s.* 6*d.* a month. The bill of fare has been much varied of late, on account of the dearneſs of bread, &c. Two pudding-dinners in a week were formerly allowed; and the ſupper, every day, was about one pound of bread and one pint of ſmall-beer for each grown perſon; children had a proportionate allowance. Potatoes and vegetables are now generally ſubſtituted for bread, as will appear by the following general bill of fare:

Sunday, milk-pottage, water-pottage, or gruel, for breakfaſt; hot meat and vegetables and broth, for dinner; and maſhed potatoes, with milk or haſhed meat, for ſupper.

Monday, the ſame as before for breakfaſt; cold meat, vegetables, and broth, for dinner; ſupper as before.

Tueſday, the ſame breakfaſt as before; the ſame as Sunday for dinner; ſupper as before.

Wedneſday, the ſame breakfaſt as before; the ſame as Sunday for dinner; ſupper as before.

Thurſday, the ſame breakfaſt as before; the ſame as Monday for dinner; ſupper as before.

Friday, the ſame breakfaſt as before; the ſame as Sunday for dinner; ſupper as before.

Saturday, the ſame breakfaſt as before; the ſame as Sunday for dinner; ſupper as before.

Thirty-three weekly-penſioners receive allowances, amounting to £3. 5*s.* a week.

	Net amount of aſſeſſments.			Total expenditure.			Rate in the pound.
1782	457	5	3¾	456	12	6½	2	3
1783	379	18	9¾	374	4	8¾	1	10½
1784	455	0	10	460	19	3	2	3
1785	378	14	11½	424	14	8	1	10½
1786	404	4	8½	427	15	3½	2	0
1787	379	13	1	475	1	2½	1	10½
1788	451	19	5	546	1	10¾	2	3
1789	405	0	7½	510	12	11½	2	0
1790	460	14	10½	529	9	11½	2	3
1791	510	16	1¼	611	8	3	2	6
1792	506	3	5½	662	19	3½	2	6
1793	406	13	5	520	16	9	2	0
1794	510	5	2½	739	11	9	2	6
1795	559	0	7½	764	6	7¾	2	9
						14)1	10	10½
					Average nearly	0	2	2½

Theſe rates are as fixed about 30 years ago, at three-quarters of the net rent: at preſent, perhaps, they may not much exceed one half of the net value.

No account of the rates could be obtained prior to 1782; but by information they appear to have been nearly the ſame for a few years previous to that period. About 30 years ago they were very low, and are ſaid to have riſen as manufactures increaſed. It is obſerved that near four-fifths of the now chargeable inhabitants here belong to manufactories; and that, notwithſtanding they have higher wages than the labourers in huſbandry, the latter maintain their families much better than the former. The labourer is more œconomical, and does not ſo much frequent the public-houſe; by which means he can ſupport a family of three, four, or five children, without any parochial aſſiſtance; while the manufacturer, being more expoſed to temptation, and too often connected with drunken aſſociates, generally ſpends that money in alehouſes, which ought to be appropriated to domeſtic purpoſes; and, having once applied to the pariſh for relief, he becomes totally regardleſs of that ſenſe of ſhame which is the beſt preſervative of independence.

That the poor might not experience any inconvenience from the incloſing of the commons and common-fields, the lanes were reſerved excluſively for their uſe: they pay 2*s.* 6*d.* a year for a horſe or cow-gait therein. About £10. a year are paid out of the poors' rates towards the county-ſtock. A doctor, who attends the work-houſe, receives a ſalary of £10. a year; and the veſtry-clerk is paid £15. a year[2].”

Mr. Monk, who viſited this county under the ſanction of the Board of Agriculture, obſerves, that “the ſoil in Leiceſterſhire at large varies pretty much, from a light ſandy or gravelly loam to a ſtiff marly loam, including all the intermediate degrees poſſible between theſe two extremes. Very little of the land can (with propriety) be called a mere ſandy or gravelly ſoil; nor is there any great quantity of it that may properly be called clay. The beſt ſoil is generally upon the hills; and the worſt, or neareſt approaching to clay or cold lands, in the valleys; though there are many exceptions from this rule. The ſoil, or what the farmers generally call mould, is generally deep; which makes it very proper for graſs, ſuch deep ſoils not being very ſoon affected by dry weather. At Aſhby de la Zouch, and the Northern part of the county, the ſoil is various; ſand, gravel, loam, and clay; but moſtly clay. At Market

---

[1] Mr. Wyrley ſays, “Aſhbie de la Zouch villa pulchra & amœniſſima eſt. Meſe fluvium ſuum elavat caput e vivario domini Haſtingi, feſtinans villam illam irrigare, & ſub ponte ſaxei præteriens inferiorem emporioli iſtius partem ad Darbiæ comitatum ſtatuat, & inde ſe facit a capite uſque ad pedem inter Leiceſtrenſem & Darbiam.” Wyrley's Church Notes, p. 36, b.

[2] Sir Frederick-Morton Eden's State of the Poor, 1797, 4to, vol. II. p. 376.

Harborough, the ſoil in general is a very ſtrong clay, chiefly in graſs. About Lutterworth, ſome part is a light rich loam, excellent for turnips and barley; a part ſtiff, inclining to marle or rich clay; the remainder chiefly a ſort of medium between both, with a ſub-ſoil inclining to marle, bearing excellent crops of oats and wheat, and good turnips alſo, though not ſo well adapted for their being eat off the land with ſheep.

The general ſize of farms is from 100 to 200 acres, though there are many much more extenſive, and many much under 100, eſpecially in the great market-towns, which are occupied by tradeſmen or manufacturers. The greateſt improvements are made on large farms, from 200 to 500 acres; many of which are occupied by the proprietors themſelves, and chiefly in the Northern part of this county.

The land is employed for the moſt part in paſture for ſheep, in dairies, feeding neat cattle, a conſiderable part for breeding horſes, and a proportionable quantity in meadow for hay for winter uſe. The farms employed chiefly for dairies, of which there are a great number, have always land in tillage to produce ſtraw, turnips, &c. for the cows in winter. A farm of 200 acres may perhaps have about 30 or 40 acres of various ſorts of grain, &c. Thoſe pariſhes where the land is of an inferior quality have a greater proportion of arable ground than where the ſoil is richer.

About Aſhby de la Zouch and Loughborough, three parts in four are in paſture. Near Melton Mowbray, there is very little arable, not more than one acre to thirty. Market Harborough has alſo very little arable. The paſture near Lutterworth is in proportion of eight to one. At Hinckley, five parts in ſix are in paſture. The paſtures in general are the natural produce of the land, and conſiſt of white clover, &c. The ground to be laid down, as it is here termed, is generally ſown with red and white clover, trefoil, or rye-graſs; and frequently with a mixture of all theſe ſeeds. They are for the moſt part ſown with a crop of barley. Mr. Lynes (Lord Wentworth's ſteward) harrowed a piece of old ſward, which was very full of moſs and weeds; and it anſwered very well. He harrowed another piece, and manured it afterwards, which anſwered ſtill better. The laſt piece would ſcarcely maintain two ſheep per acre the ſummer through. The moſs and weeds by the harrowing were entirely eradicated.

Grain cultivated.

Oats, wheat, barley. Oats generally, upon turf, feed about ſix buſhels to the acre. Wheat after oats; the ſtubble having been firſt harrowed, as ſoon as the crop cleared, that the ſeed ſcattered might vegetate; then fed and deſtroyed by ſheep as much as poſſible before the ſowing of the wheat. A ſprinkling of dung is uſually thrown upon the ground, and ploughed in; frequently ſix or eight quarters of lime per acre are ſpread, immediately after the ploughing, and harrowed in with the ſeed. One bag (or three buſhels) to the acre, which is generally ſoaked in brine, to prevent the ſmut, &c. The quantity of barley ſown upon turf, upon the beſt turnip-land, is from three to three and a half buſhels per acre, after turnips three buſhels.

Average produce.		Buſhels.
	Oats.	Wheat.	Barley.
From the beſt management,	50	30	40
Second rate, —	40	25	35
Third rate, —	30	20	26

Rotation of crops.

Oats, wheat, turnips, barley, clover; but upon the light gravelly and loamy ſoils barley is more frequently the firſt crop ſown early, and bruſh-turnips after it, which are very ſerviceable for ſpring-keep; ſecond, turnips; third, barley and ſeeds. Oats upon the turf on this ſort of land are uſually followed in the ſame order. In this rotation, wheat, which is by no means an advantageous crop for this ſort of land, is thrown out, and the land, with very little trouble, kept in the beſt poſſible condition, both in heart, and from twitch, weeds, &c. which are ſure to over-run this kind of ſoil in every wheat crop. The above are the general rotations of crops; but in the practice of individuals they vary very conſiderably, and in no part of the country is there any regular ſyſtem of cropping[1]."

Charitable Benefactions.

Among the charitable returns for this pariſh is a houſe in Aſhby, called The Day Houſe, ſaid to have been given by a perſon who had been loſt, for the purpoſe of ringing a bell at 4 in the morning[2].

William Lolly, of Aſhby, gent. by will dated 30 Nov. 1531, gave a houſe at Cales, and another at Kilwardby, with lands in the field there, to found an obit in Aſhby church; and his body to be buried in the choir of St. Katharine within that church; and gave to Ralph Shirley, eſq. £20. and a copyhold, which he held under the abbot of Garendon, by the will of John Golſmith[3].

Mr. Arthur Hilderſham, miniſter of this town, gave a leaſe for 60 years to come of 7*s. per annum*, for the uſe of the poor of this town. See p. 626.

Mrs. Margery Wright, born in this town, gave £43. to this town; the uſe of the ſaid ſum to buy gowns for certain aged poor people for ever. See p. 623.

Dr. Joſeph Hall, biſhop of Norwich, gave 30 twenty-ſhilling pieces of gold, to be improved for the uſe of the poor of this town. See p. 628.

Elizabeth counteſs of Huntingdon gave, Aug. 28, 1677, a gilded chalice and cover to this church, weighing 41 ounces; and Theophilus earl of Huntingdon gave, by his will, a large ſalver, weighing 40 oz.

Mr. Henry Curſon gave £50. to this town; the uſe of them to buy gowns for four poor people.

Mrs. Margaret Dent, of this town, widow, gave a ſilver bowl to this church; ſince changed to a ſalver.

Mrs. Sarah Seagrave, born in this town, gave by her will £5.; the uſe thereof annually to the poor.

The Rev. Simeon Aſh, born in this town, gave £50. per annum for ever; £10. thereof to ſet out two poor boys apprentices yearly into corporations, and 12*d.* every Sunday in the year in bread to the poor; and four Bibles yearly to be given to poor people.

Francis Aſh, eſq. merchant and citizen of London, gave £20. per annum, ariſing from land in the Fens, to maintain a weekly lecture in this town for ever. The ſame gentleman ſettled the manor of Sharnborne, in Norfolk, on Emanuel college, Cambridge, as a fund for buying books for their Library, and other uſes of that College; and for the founding of Ten Exhibitions; giving a preference to his own relations; then to the ſchools of Derby and Aſhby de la Zouch; and for want of ſuch, to clergymen's ſons.

William Burton, once ſcholar at the ſchool of this town, gave £5. for the uſe of the poor of this town.

John Dickinſon, of this town, gave £5. to the poor of this town for ever, the intereſt of it to be paid in bread 6*d.* for ten Sabbath days next after Candlemas.

James Orme, of this town, gave £1. 6*s. per annum*, to be given in bread, 6*d.* every Sunday to the poor for ever.

Mr. Henry Sikes, apothecary in London, born in this town, gave £140. for the uſe of the poor for ever; viz. 2*s.* in wheaten-brown-bread every Sabbath; and 16*s.* for a dinner for the truſtees the firſt Thurſday after Chriſtmas day.

Richard Hinckley, late of this town, tanner, did by his laſt will, dated April 14, 1710, bequeath to the poor of this town the ſum of 20*s. per annum*, chargeable upon his lands in Farwell, Charley, and Longden, in the county of Stafford.

Mrs. Mary Lines, of this town, left by her will £20. the intereſt to be diſtributed amongſt poor widows on St. Thomas's day yearly for ever.

John Caſey, of London, gent. born in this town, left £150. which in the year 1726 was laid out to purchaſe lands in Whitwick; the profits whereof are to buy bread, which is to be diſtributed every firſt Sunday in the month to ſuch poor of this pariſh as the miniſter and churchwardens ſhall think fit.

Mr. William Hackett, mercer, left £5.; the intereſt to pay 6*d. per* week in bread the 10 Sundays next after Candlemas-day.

Mrs. Elizabeth Aſhpinſhaw, widow, left £6.; the intereſt to buy ſhoes for orphans, to be diſpoſed of on St. Thomas's day.

Mrs. Mary Clarke, widow, left £20. the intereſt to be divided amongſt 20 poor widows upon St. Thomas's day.

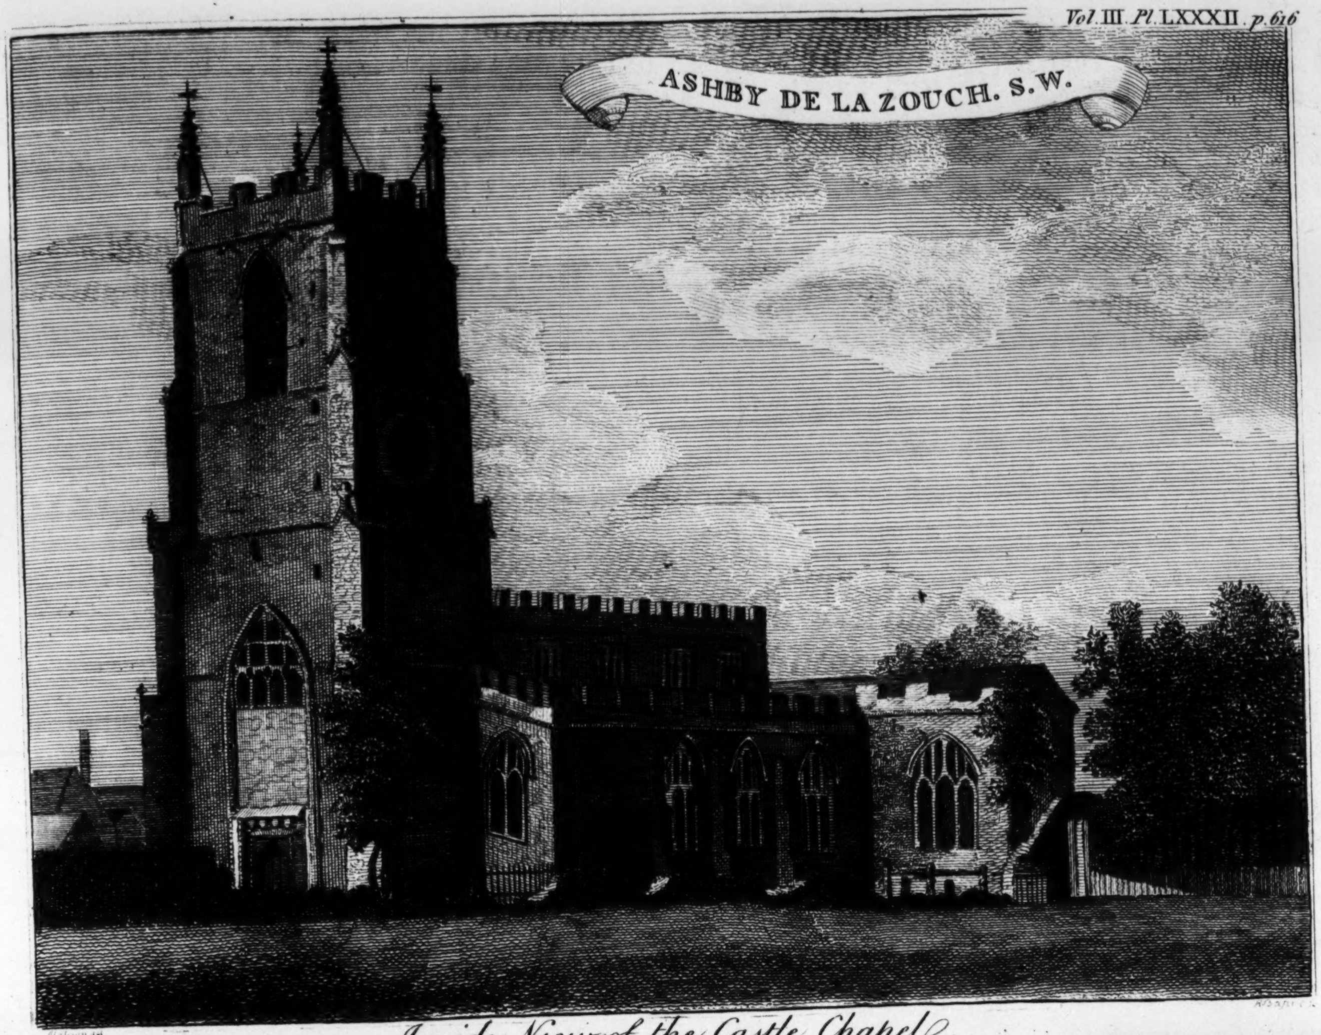
---

[1] Agricultural Report for Leiceſterſhire.

[2] See vol. I. p. 60.

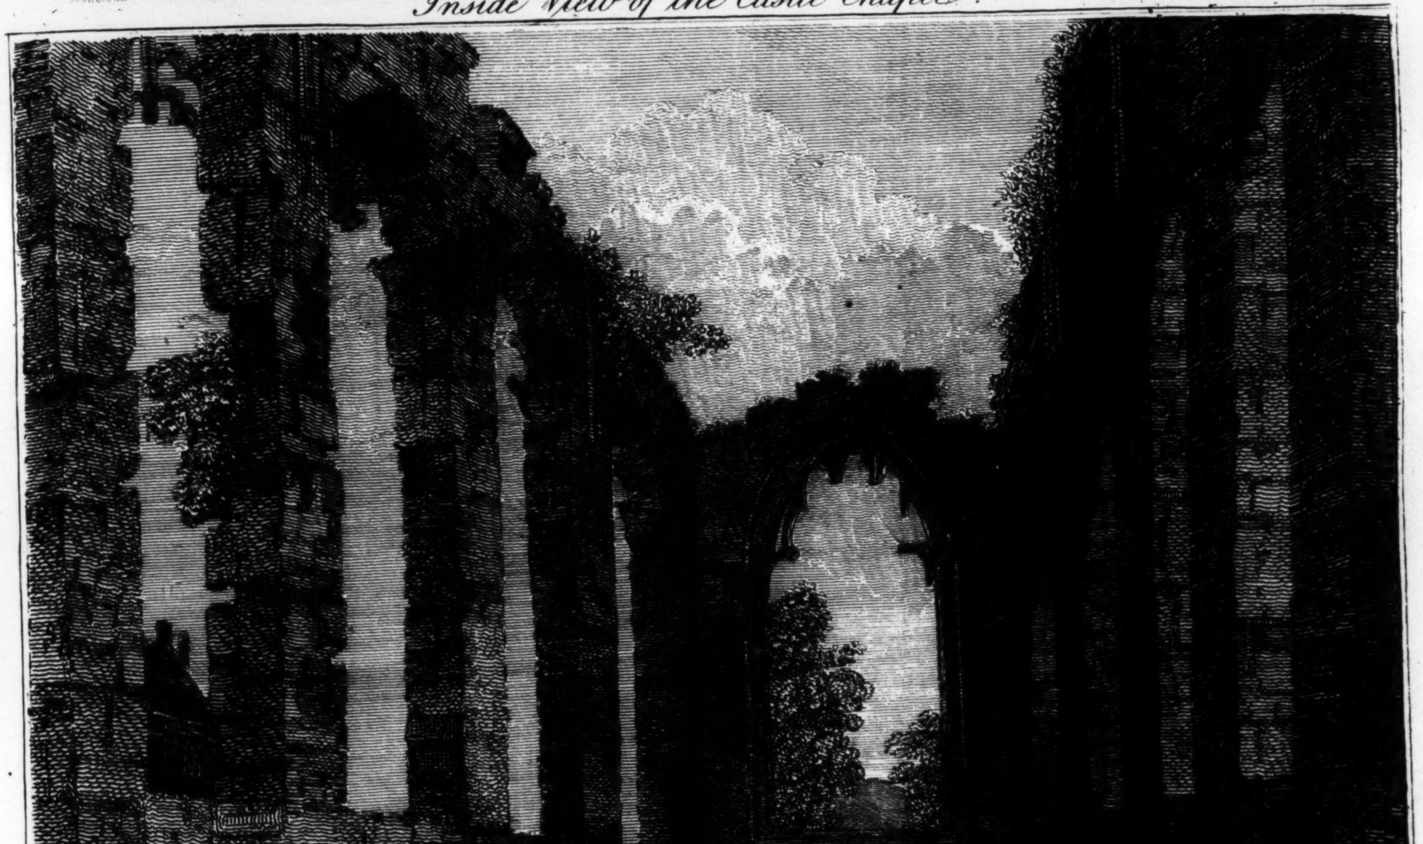
[3] Among the witneſſes were Thomas Beyre, curate. Harl. MSS. 4023. p. penult.

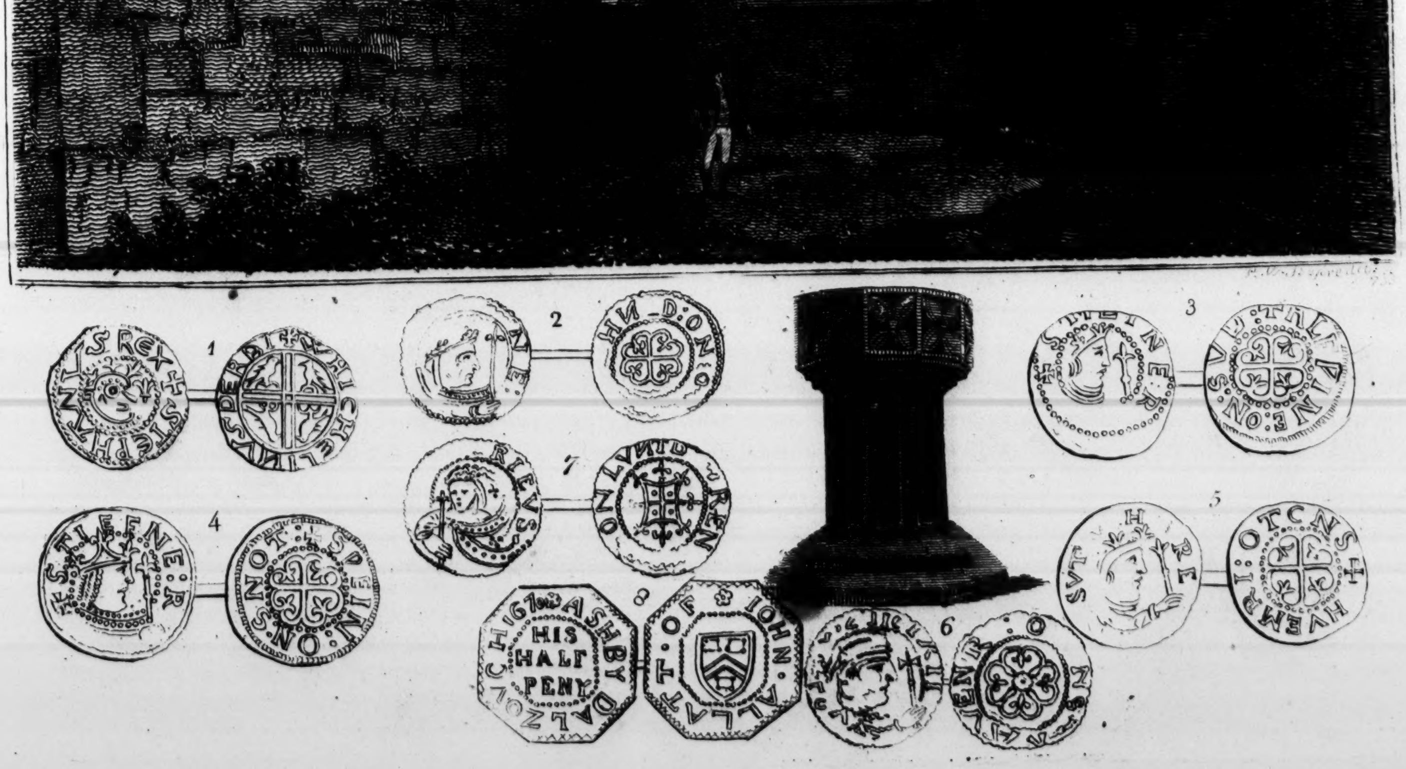
Mrs.



ASHBY DE LA ZOUCH. S.W.

Inside View of the Castle Chapel.





1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
HIS HALF PENY
ASHBY DALZOVCH
IOHN ALLATT OF

Mrs. Mary Piddocke, widow, left £20. the intereſt to be divided amongſt 20 poor widows upon St. Thomas's day.

John Kaddier, born in this town, left 10*s. per ann.* for ever to the poor; the land lying in Doniſthorpe.

Gabriel Newton, gent. alderman of Leiceſter, gave by his will, dated the 15th of March, 1760, to the miniſter, church-wardens, and overſeers of the poor of this pariſh, £26. yearly for ever, to be paid by the mayor, bailiffs, and burgeſſes of the borough of Leiceſter, for cloathing and teaching of 25 boys in reading, writing, and arithmetick. The maſter and boys to be choſen by a majority of the miniſter, church-wardens, and overſeers of the poor [1].

Thomas Gregory, gent. by his laſt will, dated the 2d day of September, 1762, gave to the poor of this town £30. to buy a warm coat or coats, gown or gowns, for one or two poor people at Chriſtmas, to be diſpoſed of by the miniſter, church-wardens, and overſeers of the poor, or the greater number of them. Widows of ſuch as have not pay out of the pariſh to have the preference.

Mrs. Mary Pratt gave by will 20*s.* a year for the uſe of four old maids.

Mr. John Needham gave by his will, June 20, 1782, a rent-charge of £5. to provide ſhoes and cloaths for the poor. But this intended benefaction was barred by the ſtatute of mortmain.

Adjoining to the vicarage-houſe is a library, given by the Rev. Mr. Bate, for the uſe of the vicar and his ſucceſſors.

Free Schools.

A Latin free-ſchool in this town [2], founded in 1567, by Henry earl of Huntingdon and others, "for inſtructing youth in good manners, learning, knowledge, and virtue," is endowed with an annual ſtipend of nearly £70. per annum, ariſing from houſes and land; of which the leaſes being now expired, a conſiderable increaſe in value may reaſonably be expected. The management of this ſchool is veſted in truſtees; but the maſter is nominated by the Earl of Moira.

There is a ſeparate free-ſchool, founded in or after the year 1669, by Mr. Iſaac Dawſon [3] and others, for inſtructing 26 boys in reading, writing, and arithmetic; and cloathing them once a year in blue coat, hat, and breeches; to continue in the ſchool three years; the ſalary £20. a year [4].

Mr. William Langley, late of Aſhby Old Park, left the ſum of 3*l.* 12*s.* yearly to a miniſter, to inſtruct 12 girls belonging to the pariſh, for three years, in reading, ſewing, and knitting; their books to be found them, and books when they leave ſchool.

Extracts from the REGISTER, which begins 1563.

Francis Haſtings, ſon of Francis Haſtings, baptized March 10, 1593.

Henry erle of Huntingdon (obiit Dec. 1595), and Francis lord Haſtings, buried April 28, 1596.

Alice Haſtings, daughter to the right honourable earl of Huntingdon, baptized Jan. 4, 1606.

Ferdinando Haſtings, ſon of the ſame earl, was baptized July 3, 1608.

Elizabeth Haſtings, daughter of the ſame earl, was born the 2d and died the 23d of May, 1612.

The right honourable Sara lady Haſtings, mother to Henry erle of Huntingdon, buried Oct. 3, 1629.

John, ſon of Ferdinando lord Haſtings, baptized Aug. 7, 1632.

Mrs. Elinor Haſtings, daughter of the ſaid right honourable Ferdinando, baptized Oct. 27, 1633.

Elizabeth, daughter of ditto, bapt. Feb. 22, 1635.

Sir Edward Haſtings, knt. obiit 24 Jan. 1603.

George earl of Huntingdon died Dec. 30, 1604; buried March 25, 1605.

Mr. Arthur Hilderſham, a worthy and faithful ſervant of God, a famous divine, and a painful preacher, the comfort of God's people in his time, departed this life the 4th of March, and was interred in the chancel of our pariſh-church in Aſhby the 6th of March, 1631.

The right honourable Elizabeth counteſs of Huntingdon was interred the 8th of February, 1633; renowned for grace and virtue.

The right honourable Henry earl of Huntingdon was interred the 16th day of December, 1643.

Aubrey de Vere earl of Oxford was married, Nov. 1, 1661, to Heſter Barber, daughter of George Barber, eſq. of Aſhby de la Zouch.

Mr. Ithiel Smart was buried in the chancel Nov. 26, 1661; [and the ſame words uſed in the Regiſter as for Mr. Hilderſham.]

On Sunday Feb. 10, 1754, two children were baptized at the pariſh-church of Aſhby de la Zouch; and the godfathers and godmothers were related to the children as under: One of the godfathers was grandfather and great grandfather to them; the other godfather was uncle and great uncle: the godmother was aunt and great aunt; and the youngeſt child was uncle to the eldeſt.

The Regiſters are in general extremely perfect.

	Baptiſms.			Burials.			Marriages.
Years.	Mal.	Fem.	Total.	Mal.	Fem.	Total.
1680	30	24	54	(incluſive)		55	11
1685	26	24	50	——		66	6
1690	23	18	41	——		44	8
1691	26	30	56	——		42	2
1692	22	20	42	——		34	4
1693	27	17	44	——		38	6
1694	13	13	26	——		26	2
1695	22	18	40	——		46	7
1696	26	16	42	——		60	6
1697	22	12	34	——		32	10
1698	22	15	37	——		30	9
1699	23	15	38	——		32	10
1700	23	20	43	——		22	14
1720	24	16	40	——		35	10
1740	24	20	44	——		27	Reg. loſt
1760	29	36	65	——		39	Ditto
1775	42	42	84	23	22	45	20
1776	39	43	82	32	24	56	23
1777	37	36	73	23	23	46	20
1778	43	32	75	29	31	60	24
1779	34	37	71	30	21	51	18
1780	35	37	72	12	24	36	19
1781	42	37	79	20	29	49	19
1782	31	36	67	27	16	53	21
1783	36	33	69	20	16	35	22
1784	35	36	71	28	23	51	27
1785	30	33	63	19	22	41	14
1786	31	32	63	36	38	74	19
1787	31	31	62	17	20	37	21
1788	28	31	59	32	29	61	16
1789	31	36	67	35	26	61	22
1790	38	34	72	27	18	45	22
1791	34	33	67	28	32	60	13
1792	32	43	75	33	32	65	18
1793	30	30	60	36	36	72	31
1794	28	31	59	35	23	58	28
			2086		36)	1685	34) 522
	Average		58¼			46⅚	15⅓

---

[1] On the ſubject of this intended benefaction, ſee the Returns to Parliament in vol. I. p. 59.

[2] Of the Rev. Samuel Shaw, who, after being ejected from the rectory of Long Whatton, came to Aſhby de la Zouch in 1666, and was elected maſter of the free-ſchool in 1668, a full account will be found hereafter under Long Whatton. At the time of his election to this ſchool, the revenue was but ſmall, the ſchool-buildings quite out of repair, and the number of the ſcholars but few. But, by his diligence, he ſoon got the ſalary augmented; and, by his intereſt among the neighbouring gentry, collected money for building a good ſchool and ſchool-houſe, and a gallery for the convenience of the ſcholars in the church. Calamy's Ejected Miniſters, 1713, vol. II. p. 429.

[3] A tradition concerning this ſchool is worth notice. It is ſaid that Mr. Dawſon, during his apprenticeſhip at Aſhby, was diſpatched by his maſter on a journey into Lincolnſhire, where he was robbed by three highwaymen, left tied to a tree, and his horſe exchanged by one of the robbers. After getting releaſed, chance led him to an inn, where he found his own horſe in the ſtable. The highwaymen were in conſequence apprehended, tried, and condemned; and Dawſon, receiving the uſual reward, beſtowed it on founding this ſchool, and for an annual commemorative ſermon.

[4] A cloſe was purchaſed at Blackfordby, by the feoffees, for the uſe of the poor, with money ariſing out of the charity.

	£.	s.	d.		£.	s.	d.
Money raiſed for the poor of Aſhby within the year ending at Eaſter 1776,	332	1	6	Money raiſed at Blackfordby.	33	16	9
Expended in county rates, &c.	26	11	10	———	0	0	0
——— on the poor, &c. —	305	9	8	———	32	2	10
Rent of workhouſe and habitations,	1	19	0	———	2	16	6
Expended in litigations, —	2	15	10	———	0	0	0
Money raiſed for 1783, —	429	2	8	———	36	19	1
——— 1784, —	402	18	5	———	55	16	11
——— 1785, —	404	16	5	———	51	17	2
Medium of theſe three years,	412	5	10	———	48	4	4
——— of county expences,	10	18	8	———	0	0	0
——— of expences not relating to the poor; repairs of the church, roads, &c.	24	18	6	———	1	2	10
——— of nett annual expences,	376	8	8	———	47	1	6
——— of attending upon magiſtrates,	1	11	8	———	1	4	6
——— of entertainments at meetings,	0	14	0	———	0	12	3
——— of law expences, —	16	0	7	———	8	10	0
——— of ſetting the poor to work,	8	16	8	———	0	0	0

The return made to the houſe of commons in 1786, in anſwer to an enquiry reſpecting the charitable donations in Aſhby de la Zouch and Blackfordby, may be ſeen in vol. I. p. 59.

The CHURCH, (ſee Plate LXXXII.)

dedicated to St. Helen, is a good old ſtructure, handſome and lofty. It is built of ſtone; and conſiſts of a tower-ſteeple, in which are ſix large bells and a ſet of chimes; a nave and two ailes ſeparated by four lofty arches, the pillars finely fluted.

The pannel over the altar is hung with damaſk richly embroidered; on which is, "I. H. S. 1699;" and at top the arms of Haſtings.

The chancel, which is ſpacious and well wainſcoted, is fitted up with neat pews, placed there by the late earl of Huntingdon for the different branches of his own family.

On each ſide of the chancel is a large chapel, which projects conſiderably wider than the church.

Of the North chapel the moſt conſiderable part is converted into a large veſtry-room, with a convenient fire-place in it. That on the South is the burial-place of the family of Haſtings.

Facing the deſk and pulpit is an excellent large braſs chandelier, with a dove on the top, and fixteen neat ſconces projecting from it, to light the miniſter at funerals; the gift of Leonard Piddock, gent.

The body of the church is decently pewed; and contains a beautiful little organ; the ſalary of the performer being paid by voluntary ſubſcriptions.

Under the organ-loft is a handſome octagon font[1].

At the Weſt end of the church, under three large lofts, are two fire-engines, with a large quantity of leathern buckets; and at the Weſt end of the North aile is, what I do not recollect to have elſewhere obſerved, "a ſingular curioſity," to uſe the words of Mr. Carter, "called a Finger-pillory. No doubt this mode of puniſhment was formerly common in ſuch ſituations, for the prevention of indecorous behaviour; at once efficacious, by detaining the offender in public view, and by not degrading him to the more ſevere affliction of being ſet in the ſtocks, expoſed to unreſtrained inſult, and the inclemency of the elements. The conſtruction of this contrivance may be thus deſcribed. Two upright poſts, about three feet in height, and of a proportionate thickneſs, ſupport an horizontal beam of an equal length; which beam is divided into two parts. The upper part is held by a hinge at one end; while the other end is faſtened down by a lock unto the lower part, in which are different-ſized holes, for containing the fingers of the diſorderly, from very ſmall to extremely large; which being placed therein, the upper part is let down and faſtened as ſhewn in the annexed ſketch;" Pl. LXXVI. fig. 12.//

This church was robbed, a few years ago, of a fine crimſon covering for the deſk and pulpit, and a cuſhion for the pulpit, all richly fringed with gold, which had been given by the lady Anne Haſtings.

Mr. Burton deſcribes theſe arms; fig. 13—21.

In a South window.

Gules, on a feſs between ſix croſs croſſlets Or, a creſcent Sable, Beauchamp; and by it an helmet with a plume of feathers upon it of ſeveral colours.

Under this is written,

Virgo gerens florem floris mihi fundat odorem.

On the ſurcoat of a knight in armour, the ſame coat; impaled with, Quarterly, 1. and 4. Gules, a lion rampant Or, Fitzalan earl of Arundel; 2. and 3. Checquè, Or and Azure, Warren earl Warren and Surrey.

Under which is written,

Cœlica da tota mihi quæ Baptiſta Propheta.

In another South window.

The coat of Beauchamp with the ſix croſſlets, as before.

Alſo, on the ſurcoat of a knight in armour, kneeling and holding in his hand a banner, with his coat up, Gules, a feſs between ſix pears Or, Beauchamp[2].

At his knee ſtandeth an helmet, charged with an eſcutcheon Argent, a croſs Gules; under which is written, Sancte poli quibus arma ſoli tibi gero, Georgî.

Gules, nine bezants Or; Zouch; as fig. 4.

Argent, a lion rampant Sable, crowned Or, a border Azure; Burnell.

Argent, a maunch Sable; Haſtings.

Or, fretty Sable, on every joint a croſs croſſlet fitchè Argent; creſt, a bat Argent. This is the coat of Champaine, ſometime lord of Thurleſton, whoſe inheritance after came by deſcent to Boug; and here it is ſet up for Boug, whoſe creſt is the bat.

Quarterly, Argent and Gules, in the firſt quarter a mullet Sable. Creſt, a griffin's head Sable.

Barry of ſix Nebulé, Argent and Sable, a canton Gules. Creſt, a boar's head couped Sable, Brokeſby.

Checquè, Argent and Sable, Hamlyn. Creſt, a wolf paſſant Argent.

On the arch of the tower door is a border of lions paſſant guardant, another of ornaments. Above the pilaſter, under a rich flowered arch, is a maunch ſupported by crouching men. The maunch is alſo painted under projections, and carved over a ſmall window.

In the Matriculus of 1220, Aſhby de la Zouch is deſcribed to be under the patronage of the abbot of Lilleſhull, who held it to his own uſe ab antiquo; and having the chapel of Blackfordby, where divine ſervice was to be performed three times in the week from the mother-church. Roger the then vicar had been inſtituted by Hugh then biſhop of Lincoln[3].

In 1344, the procurations were, 7*s.* 6½*d.*; the rectory was taxed at 30 marks, and paid 3*s.* for Peter-pence; the vicarage (with the chapels of Blackfordby and Wodicote) at 7 marks and a half.

In 1534-5, the procurations and ſynodals were 3*s.*; and the value of the vicarage 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

In 1650, Aſhby de la Zouch was returned as an impropriation; the rectory worth £40, the vicarage £30; and the incumbent as "ſufficient." The chaplain at Blackfordby was alſo ſtyled "ſufficient."

In the king's books it is entered as a diſcharged living, worth, "in pecuniâ, cum manſo & aliis proficuis," 14*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.*; clear yearly value, £44.

The epiſcopal procurations are, for the rectory 5*s.* 6*d.* for the vicarage 2*s.* 1*d.*; the archidiaconal 3*s.*

A penſion of 13*s.* 4*d.* ſtill continues to be paid to the biſhop of Lincoln at the feaſt of the Annunciation.

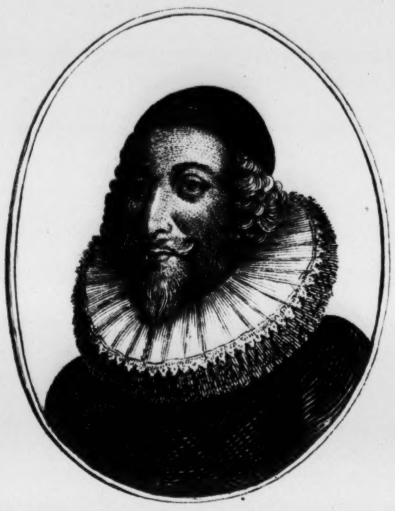
---

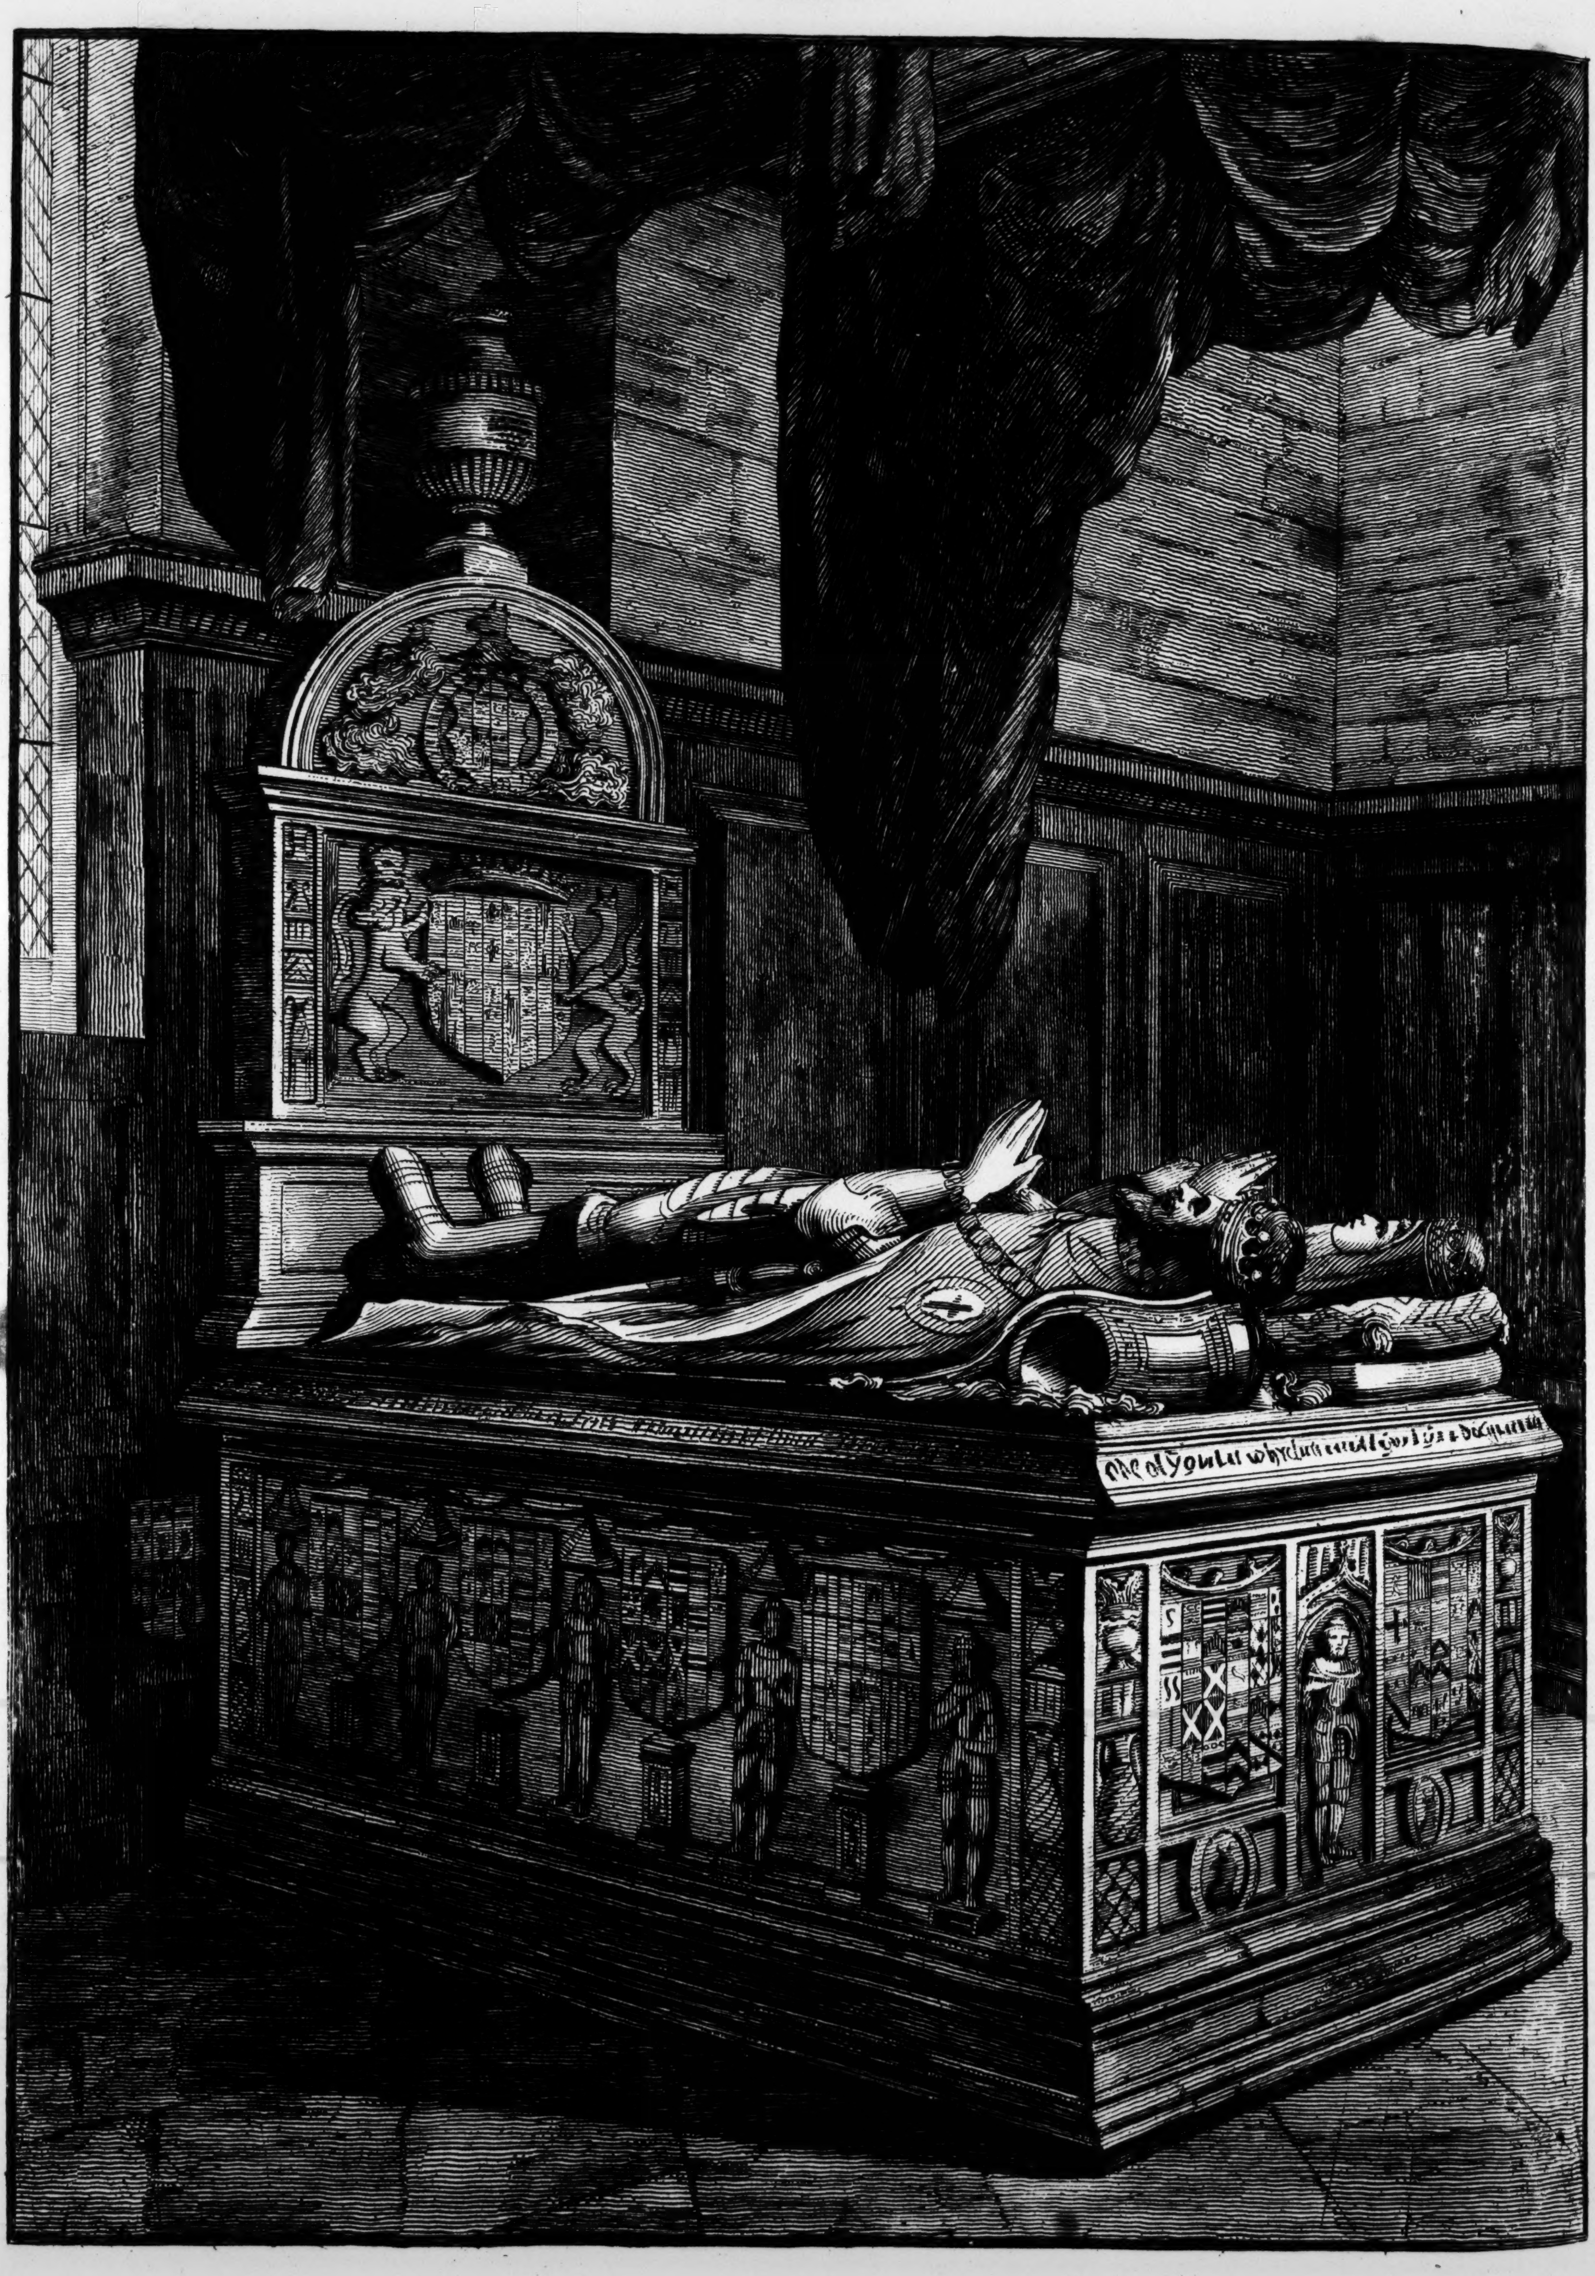
[1] See Plate LXXXII.

[2] For this coat, ſee before, p. 563; and the ſeal, fig. 2.

[3] See the Introductory Volume, p. lviii.

Vol. III. Pl. LXXXIII. p. 618.





Monument of Francis Earl of Huntingdon, at Ashby, taken in 1800.

VICARS.	PATRONS.
Roger, 1200.	Abbot and convent of Lilleſhull.
Reginald the chaplain, 1224.
Elias capellanus, 1240.
Elias de ..... 1246.
.... 7 id. Dec. 1314.
John Harriſon, died 1503-4.
Edward Fox, preſbyter, March 10, 1504; died 1508.	RichardChaplyn, virtute conceſſionis per abbatem & conventum de Lilleſhull.
William Shelton, Jan. 21, 1508-9; living 1535.	Geoffrey bp. of Coventry and Lichfield.
George Harriſon[1], May 15, 1552.	Francis earl of Huntingdon.
Anthony Gilby[2], M. A.	Henry earl of Huutingdon.
Nathanael Gilby[3], Dec. 8, 1582.
Thomas Wyddowes, 1583; died 1593.
Arthur Hilderſham[4], M. A. Oct. 4, 1593; died March 4, 1631-2.
Anthony Watſon, 1632; buried April 23, 1644.	George earl of Huntingdon.
William Coke, 1646.	Ferdinando earl of Huntingdon.
Ithiel Smart[5], M. A. 1652; died November 22, 1661.
Alexander Jones, May 10, 1662.	Lucy counteſs of Huntingdon.
Gowyn Knight, Feb. 21, 1671.	Theophilus earl of Huntingdon.
Francis Chapman, June 3, 1673.
Ithiel Smart[6], M. A. Sept. 13, 1676.
Henry Hooton[7], May 7, 1691; reſigned.	King William and Queen Mary.
John Lord[8], Feb. 15, 1693; buried June 27, 1711.	Theophilus earl of Huntingdon.
Anthony Johnſon, Sept. 17, 1711.	Theophilus earl of Huntingdon.
Joſeph Smith, March 9, 1715-16; buried March 21, 1720.
Samuel Holbrooke, June 5, 1721; removed to Oſgathorpe in 1729.
Peter Cowper[9], M. A. June 30, 1729; died in October 1732.	Francis earl of Huntingdon.
John Prior[10], B. D. Jan. 2, 1783; the preſent vicar, 1801.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

Before I proceed to deſcribe the monuments at Aſhby de la Zouch, it may be neceſſary to introduce the following ſcientific remarks by Mr. Carter:

"The chapel on the South ſide of the church appears to have been repaired and fitted up about the latter end of the ſeventeenth century; not alone from a monument of that time ſet up in it for Theophilus ſeventh earl of Huntingdon, but by the mode of the wainſcoting, its architecture, and ornaments; which, however ill they may accord (being in the Roman and Grecian ſtyle) with the antient work, yet it was certainly a moſt praiſe-worthy act of thoſe who thought it an incumbent duty on them to render this chapel a decent and reſpectable repoſitory, which contained the remains of ſo illuſtrious a family as the Huntingdons, and ſo fine a ſculptured memorial of one of its nobleſt names, a tomb to the memory of Francis earl of Huntingdon, and his counteſs the lady Katharine.

"This tomb is in that mixed ſtyle of architecture which prevailed near the end of the ſixteenth century. It ſhews much of our antient modes of deſign, and much of the Roman and Grecian compilations, which were then gaining ſuch an aſcendancy in all our public works. On the ſides of the tomb are ſeveral antient ſhields, with Grecian enriched pilaſters, pedeſtals, and ſwaggs of drapery, all unaccountably joined together. Our antient tomb arrangement, however, here ſtill predominates; for we notice, amid the above ſhields and pilaſters, ſmall ſtatues of the ſeveral ſons and daughters of the deceaſed, placed in niches, &c. with their reſpective names underneath, according to ſeniority. On the top of the tomb are the recumbent ſtatues (ſee Plate LXXX.) of the noble perſonages here meant to be commemorated.

---

[1] "An. 1552, Maii 15. Geo. Harriſon, ſoc. perpet. coll. S. Petri Cant. oriund. apud Willeſley, com. Leic. ordinatus diaconus." Harl. MSS. 7031. p. 155.

[2] Mr. Peck, from the MSS. of Thomas Baker, obſerves, that Mr. Anthony Gilby lived at Aſhby "as great as a Biſhop." For an account of him (who was a native of Lincolnſhire, and a member of Chriſt's college, Cambridge), B. A. 1531. M. A. 1535, ſee Bp. Hall's Life by himſelf, p. 3; and of his ſon Nathanael Gilby, born at Aſhby, ſee pp. 6. 9, 10.

[3] "Nat. Gilby, coll. Chr. admiſſus in matriculum acad. Cant. Dec. 8, 1582, cùm eſſet cooptandus in ordinem bacc." He was a native of Aſhby; and in 1589 fellow of Emanuel college.

[4] See ſome Memoirs of Mr. Hilderſham in p. 624.

[5] This Mr. Smart had been inducted to the vicarage of Womborne, with the chapel of Treſle annexed, in the county of Stafford, Aug. 31, 1631; which he reſigned May 16, 1652, on being preſented to Aſhby. That the Regiſters of Womborne retain an honourable teſtimonial of his induſtry and ability, may be ſeen by the many curious extracts which Mr. Shaw has given under that pariſh in the ſecond volume of his Hiſtory of Staffordſhire.

[6] Ithiel Smart, vicar of Packington, formerly vicar of Aſhby, was buried Jan. 27, 1692.

[7] Mr. Hooton was preſented in 1695, by Theophilus earl of Huntingdon, to the vicarage of Piddletown in Dorſetſhire, where he died in 1721, and was buried in the chancel; and againſt the South wall is a tablet, with the following epitaph:

"Hic infra quieſcit corpus Henrici Hooton, A. M. quondam prænobilis Theophilo comiti de Huntingdon,
a ſacris domeſticis, necnon hujus eccleſiæ per annos magis viginti octo paſtoris vigilis: obiit 22° die
Jan. A. D. 1721, æt. 47."

Arms: On a bend Vert, three mullets Or; impaling, Gules, a chevron Ermine, between three pheons Or; fig. 22.

[8] The following letter of Mr. Lord to his noble patron (from Mr. Carte's MSS. at Oxford) may be conſidered as a curioſity:

"Right Hon. my Lord, Jan. 27, 1693.

"By a letter to Mr. Hitchcock, your Lordſhip, writeing about Aſhby, was pleaſed to ſignifie your favourable intentions to me in the preſentation thereof, and on what conditions you deſigne it. Your Lordſhip's propoſitions are ſo faire and commendable, that I cannot but approave them, and wiſh they were every where obſerved, according to your Honr's direction; and therefore ſhall not myſelf faile in that duty which the beſt churches, good authority, and ſo great a perſon, enjoyne and patronize me in.

"Your Lordſhip's propoſitions are as follows:

"That on Sundaies and holy daies the communion ſervice be read before and after ſermon at the altar.—To this I aſſent.

"Allſo, that at all times when there are praiers and preaching, viz. on Sundaies, in the afternoon, as well as in the morning; alſo on lecture days, though there bee noe communion ſervice, the ſurplice ſhall be worn in the pulpit.—To this I aſſent.

"Allſo, that the churching of women bee performed at the communion table, as it is at St. Martin's, St. James's, and St. Anne's, in London.—To this I aſſent.

"Allſo, that at burials the body be brought into the church where the pſalms and leſſons are read; and then, if buryed in the church-yard, to bee carried out of the church to the grave. All theſe particulars to be obſerved at Blaugherby.

"Theſe, my Lord, are what you require; and to all and every of them I declare my aſſent, and that they ſhall be truly obſerved by Your Lordſhip's moſt devoted and obedient ſervant, John Lord.

"When your Honour commands, I ſhall give my bond."

[9] Formerly rector of Sutton with Ducmanton, co. Derby. He died at Overleigh in Cheſhire, in October 1782, having been 53 years vicar of Aſhby.

[10] Mr. Prior is a native of Swithland, where his father (ſteward to ſir Joſeph Danvers) was buried at a good old age. Mr. Prior holds alſo the donative curacy of the neighbouring church of Willeſley; and is maſter of the free-ſchool at Aſhby, in which he now reſides 1801. He has new-built the vicarage, which is let on leaſe.

Round the verge of the tomb is this inſcription:

"Here lyeth ye corps of Francys late erle of Huntingdon, lord Haſtynges, Hungerford, Botreaux, Molyns, lord Moyles, knight of the honourable order of the Garter, whiche deceaſed ye xxth daye of June, a^{o} Dñi 1561. And of the lady Katharine[1], counteſs of Huntingdon his wife, whiche deceaſed ye xxiii^{d} day of Sep^{br}, anno Dñi 1576."

"The ſtatue of the earl is ſhewn in exceedingly rich armour: from his ſhoulders depends the robe of the order of the Garter, faſtened at the neck by an elaborate worked broche, from which fall the cordons. Over the ſhoulders is hung a collar of the order. On his head is a coronet, ſupported by his helmet, bearing his creſt, a bouffler's head, eraſed Sable; and his feet reſt on a lion. The veſtments of the counteſs are of a far older make than either the faſhion of the earl's armour, or the date of the tomb, leads us to expect. She is habited in a looſe garment, brought into ſmall folds by her girdle. Her hair appears on the forehead; and the lower part of her face is covered by the wimple; under which a looſe robe, faſtened on the breaſts by the cordons, flows to the feet. From the top of her head, whereon is a coronet, a light drapery falls as far as the elbows, adding much grace to the general dreſs of this lady. Her feet are ſupported by a griffin; a circumſtance not common; as in ſuch inſtances we uſually meet with one or more repreſentations of dogs.

"The features of the earl ſhew him of a middle age; with a ſtern, though dignified aſpect. The lady has much ſoftneſs in her looks; and a pleaſing ſweetneſs is diffuſed over her whole countenance.

"It would be difficult, perhaps, to ſpeak in terms adequate to the merits of the work of this tomb, either in its architectural parts, enrichments, or ſtatues. The mouldings are ſharp cut, the ornaments delicately made out, the forms of the ſtatues well imitated from the life, and the armour and draperies finely ſtudied from the real objects; ſo that from this intereſting performance much information may be obtained of the progreſs of the arts and the coſtume of this kingdom. Though the tomb at preſent ſtands with its Eaſt end directly againſt the Eaſt wall of the chapel, I am inclined to think that it originally was detached from it, and was ſituated in the centre of this building, as is the uſual cuſtom with the tombs of founders of chapels, or other patrons to ſuch edifices, as in many inſtances ſuch examples may yet be found: and the chancel of the collegiate church at Warwick, with the adjoining chapel, may juſt be noted in proof, where are the tombs of many of the earls of that name, the great patrons of that church and town. And further, on the Eaſt wall of the chapel now under diſcuſſion, are ſtuck ſhields of arms like thoſe on the ſides of the tomb; which, if we allow the removal of it to have been the caſe as premiſed, muſt have decorated its Eaſt end in like manner as on the Weſt end. Hence we may account for ſetting up the tablets and ſemi-circular arch, containing ſhields of arms, with an urn on their ſummit, againſt the Eaſt wall, and directly before the tomb, which are of a taſte not known among us before the time of the fitting up of this chapel in 1698.

"And here I cannot but lament the preſent neglect and deſertion of this chapel and tomb. Whatever damage, however, the latter has ſuſtained, I muſt conclude, has been perpetrated ſince its reparation; as the yet viſible care of that time muſt convince us of its then perfect ſtate. To the preſent noble owner of the Huntingdon poſſeſſions no apology can be neceſſary for the freedom of this remark."

In a round ſhield immediately under the urn which ſurmounts the monument are theſe arms:

1. Argent, a maunch Sable, Haſtings.—2. Sable, two bars Argent; in chief three plates, Hungerford.—3. Party per pale dancetty, Gules and Vert, a chevron Or, Heytiſbury.—4. Barry of ſix, Ermine and Gules, Huſſey.—5. Azure, three garbs Argent, a chief Or, Peverell.—6. Argent, three toads erect Sable, Botreaux.—7. Argent, a griffin ſegreant, Gules, Botreaux of Cornwall.—8. Or, three pales wavy Gules, Mauduit.—Argent, two bars Gules, in chief three torteauxes, Moels.—10. Or, three torteauxes, in chief a label of three points Azure, bezanty, Courtenay.—Creſt, on a wreath, a bouffler's head eraſed Sable, gorged with a ducal coronet, armed Or.

On a large ſhield immediately under the above:

1. Quarterly, 1. Haſtings; 2. Hungerford; 3. Heytiſbury; 4. Huſſey.—2. Peverell.—3. Botreaux.—4. Botreaux of Cornwall.—5. Mauduit.—6 Moels.—7. Courtenay: Impaling, 1. Quarterly, France and England, a label of three points Argent, on each point a canton Gules, Clarence.—2. Per pale, Or and Sable, a ſaltire engrailed, counterchanged; Pole.—3. Gules, a ſaltire Argent, a label componé, Argent and Azure, Nevil earl of Saliſbury and Warwick.—4. Gules, a feſs between ſix croſs croſslets Or, Beauchamp earl of Warwick.—5. Checqué, Or and Azure, a chevron Ermine, Guy earl of Warwick.—6. Argent, three maſcles in feſs Gules, Montacute.—7. England within a border Argent, Plantagenet earl of Kent.—8. Or, an eagle diſplayed Vert, armed Gules, Monthermer.—9. Or, two bars Gules, in chief three torteauxes, Wake.—10. Quarterly, 1. and 4. Or, three chevronels Gules, Clare; 2. and 3. Quarterly, Argent and Gules; in the ſecond and third a fret Or; over all a bend Sable, Spencer.—Supporters, on the dexter ſide a lion Or; on the ſiniſter a griffin.

In front of the tomb is the effigies of Henry the ſucceſſor to the title; who has on his right hand a ſhield of arms, with theſe quarterings:

1. Haſtings.—2. Gules, a feſs Or, between three ſhovelers Argent; Herle.—3. Hungerford.—4. Heytiſbury.—5. Peverell.—6. Botreaux.—7. Moels.—8. Ermine, a lion rampant Gules, crowned Or, a border engrailed Sable bezanty, Cornwall.—9. Gules, on a chevron Argent, three roſes of the field; Cobham.—10. Courtenay.—11. Barry of ſix, Ermine and Gules; Huſſey.—12. Botreaux of Cornwall.—13. Mauduit.—14. Sable, on a chief Argent, three lozenges Or; Molines.—15. Argent, a bend Sable, in chief a label Gules; St. Loe.—16. Or, a lion rampant Azure, crowned Gules; Clyfden.—17. Maſculy, Argent and Gules; Poges.—18. Paly of ſix, Or and Gules; Moles.—19. Clarence.—20. Pole.—21. Beauchamp.—22. Guy earl of Warwick.—23. Montacute.—24. England, and bordure.—25. Monthermer.—26. Wake.—27. Clare.—28. Spencer.

On his left hand are the quarterings of his lady:

1. Or, a lion rampant Vert, tail forked, Dudley.—2. Gules, a cinquefoil Ermine, old Earls of Leiceſter.—3. Moels.—4. Haſtings.—5. Gules, ſeven maſcles voided and conjoined Or, Quincy. (Over the laſt four coats a label of three points Vert.)—6. Argent, a croſs flory Gules, ...; 7. two lions paſſant, in pale Or, ...—8. Barry of eight, Argent and Azure, an Orle of martlets Gules, Valance.—9. Ermine, a lion rampant Gules, crowned Or, a border engrailed Sable bezanty, Cornwall.—10. Guy earl of Warwick.—11. Beauchamp.—12. Gules, a chevron between ten croſſes pattée, ſix above, and four below, Argent, Berkeley.—13. Or, a feſs between two chevrons Sable, Liſle.—14. Or, a lion rampant Azure, crowned Gules, Clyfdon.—15. Or, a ſaltire between four birds . . . .—16. Argent, a bend Sable, on a chief Gules, a Harrington's knot Or, Harrington.—17. Argent, a chief dancetté Sable, Butler.—18. Quarterly, 1. and 4. Gules, a lion rampant; 2. and 3. Gules, three leopards' faces jeſſant de fleur de lis Or, ...—19. Barry of ſix, Or and Azure, an ineſcutcheon Ermine, on a chief three pallets of the ſecond, between two eſquires baſes dexter and ſiniſter of the ſecond, Mortimer.—20. Argent, three bendlets enhanced Gules, Byron.

Cantilupe

On the North ſide of the tomb are repreſented the five younger ſons, in the following order: 2. George; 3. William; 4. Edward[2]; 5. Francis; 6. Walter[3];

---

[1] A portrait of this lady is at Badleſmere in Norfolk.

[2] Afterward ſir Edward Haſtings, of the Abbey-gate, Belgrave, and Humberſton; ſee vol. III. pp. 176. 278; and his arms, in 30 quarterings, ib. p. 228. Plate XXXIV. fig. 6.

[3] Afterward of Braunſton, in the pariſh of Glenfield; where ſee an account of him, and his arms in 30 quarterings.

each bearing on a ſeparate ſhield the following coats.

1. Haſtings.—2. Hungerford.—3. Heytiſbury.—4. Huſſey.—5. Peverell.—6. Botreaux.—7. Botreaux of Cornwall.—8. Maudut.—9. Moels.—10. Courtenay.—11. Clarence.—12. Pole.—13. Nevile earl of Saliſbury and Warwick.—14. Beauchamp.—15. Guy earl of Warwick.—16. Montacute.—17. Plantagenet earl of Kent.—18. Monthermer.—19. Wake.—20. Clare.—21. Spencer.

To the above coats the figure of George lord Haſtings, the eldeſt ſon, adds the following impalement:

1. Azure, a feſs engrailed Or, between three birds Argent, in each beak a croſs croſſlet fitché Or, Port.—2. Argent, three torteaux, each charged with a fleur de lis of the field; on a chief Azure a hunting-horn ſtringed between ten pheons' heads, points downward, of the field Barow.—3. Per bend ſiniſter, Ermine and Erminois, a lion rampant Or, Lloyd.—4. Or, an eagle diſplayed Azure, beaked and legged Gules, Montgomery.—5. Ermine, on a bordure Gules, eight horſeſhoes Or, Marchington.—6. Port.

On the South ſide are the five daughters:

1. Catharine. Arms: Quarterly, 1. and 4. Argent, ſix croſs croſſlets fitché, 3. 2. and 1. Sable; on a chief Azure, two mullets of ſix points pierced Or, Clinton; 2. and 3. Quarterly, Or and Gules, Say; over all a label of three points Vert: Impaling, 21 coats of Haſtings.

2. Frances. Arms: 1. Sable, a lion paſſant guardant Or, between three helmets Argent, Compton.—2. Argent, a chevron Vert, within a border Azure bezanty, Alanby.—3. Argent, a feſs engrailed between ſix billets Gules, Aylworth.—4. Argent, on a chevron Azure three fleur de lis Or, Burghopp.—5. Argent, two bars; and in chief a mullet Sable, Brereton.—6. Gules, three pheons heads Argent, ...—7. . . . . . a croſs flory . . . .—8. Or, a lion rampant Gules, within an orle of pheons heads Gules, Proppe.—9. Or, two ravens Sable, Corbet.—10. Ermine, three chevrons voided of the field Gules; on a canton of the laſt a lion paſſant guardant Or, Orreby.—11. Gules, two lions paſſant Argent, a label of three points Or, Orby.—12. Berkeley: Impaling, Haſtings, 21 coats.

3. Anne. Arms: Haſtings, 21 coats.

4. Elizabeth. Arms: Quarterly, 1. and 4. a feſs charged with, Quarterly, France and England, within a border compony Argent and Gules, Somerſet; 2. and 3. Per pale, Azure and Gules, three lions rampant Argent, Herbert: Impaling, Haſtings, 21 coats.

5. Mary. Arms: Haſtings, 21 coats.

This monument, which had been materially injured during the civil war[1], was repaired by the direction of Theophilus ſeventh earl of Huntingdon; who placed on an urn, beneath the canopy which overhangs the tomb, the following inſcription:

"I. H. S.
Theophilus comes Huntingdon inclytæ memoriæ progenitorum maximè illuſtrium,
quorum exuviæ hic reconduntur,
ſacellum hoc decorari,
et tumulum inſtaurari,
pro munere extremo
F. F.
MDCXCVIII."

Mr. Symonds, in 1645, calls this "a ſtately monument of alabaſter;" obſerves, that "it had many eſcocheons, with large quarterings;" and adds, "There are two or three new monuments of other families, lately ſet in the walls, ſmall."

Mr. Wyrley, who viſited Aſhby about 1590, found theſe arms in a window of the Huntingdon chapel:

Haſtings; impaling, 1. and 4. Montacute and Monthermer; 2. and 3. Argent, a ſaltire Gules, a label checky of three points, fig. 23.

In the ſame window were theſe quarterings of George Talbot[2] earl of Shrewſbury, who married Anne daughter of William lord Haſtings[3], and aunt to George the firſt earl of Huntingdon): 1. Gules, a lion rampant within a bordure engrailed Or; De Beleſme.—2. Azure, a lion rampant within a bordure Or; Talbot.—3. Gules, a ſaltire Argent, charged with a martlet Sable; Nevill.—4. Argent, a feſs between ſix martlets Gules; Furnivall.—5. Or, fretty Gules; Verdon.—6. Argent, two lions paſſant in pale Gules; Strange of Knockin[4]; fig. 24.

2. On the Weſt ſide of the chapel, on a mural monument:

"D. O. M. S.
Depoſitum honoratiſſimi & nobiliſſimi domini
Theophili comitis Huntingdoniæ, baronis de Haſtings, Hungerford, Botreaux, Moels, Newmarch, & Molines, capitalis juſticiarii,
& juſticiarii itinerantis
omnium foreſtarum, chacearum, parcorum, & warrenarum, citra Trentam, penſionariorum generoſorum capitanei,
provinciarum Leiceſtriæ & Derbiæ locum-tenentis, & ex ſanctioribus conſiliis auguſtiſſimis & ſereniſſimis principibus
Carolo & Jacobo regibus, dominis ſuis colendiſſimis.
Hic illuſtriſſimus comes
duas duxit uxores;
Elizabetham, filiam & unicam hæredem
Johannis Lewys, equitis aurati & baronetti;
& Franceſcam[5] filiam unicam & hæredem
Franciſci Fowler, armigeri, in cognomen de Leviſon adopt',
Thomæ vicecomitis de Killmorey relict'.
Deceſſerunt in Chriſto cum ſigno fidei, & requieſcunt in ſomno pacis;
quorum mortales reliquiæ,
donec illa dies retributionis advenerit,
ut reſurgant immortales,
hic deponuntur.

Nati,		Denati,
Donington, x Dec. MDCL,	Ille,	Londini, xxx Maii, MDCCI.
Londini, xv Junii, MDCLV. Kinderton, xi Augusti, MDCLXIV.	Illæ,	Londini, xxiv Dec. MDCLXXXVIII. Bathoniæ, xxiv Dec. MDCCXXIII.

Prolem habuit,

Ex conjuge primâ,		Ex conjuge ſecundâ,
Thomam dominum Haſtings, Luciam,	H.S.S.	Annam-Jaquelinam. Aliciam, H. S. Franceſcam.
Georgium dominum Haſtings,		Theophilum.
Saram, H. S.		Catherinam-Mariam.
Elizabetham, Mariam, Dorotheam, Saram,	H. S. S.	Ferdinandum, H. S. Margaretam."

3. On a mural monument of rich ſtatuary marble, adorned with a beautiful buſt of the weeping relict:

"Here lie the remains of the Right Honourable THEOPHILUS earl of HUNTINGDON, lord Haſtings, Hungerford, Botreaux, Moels, Newmarch, and Molins.

---

[1] There is reaſon to ſuppoſe that, previous to that period, there were ſome other monuments in this chapel.—A few fragments lay looſe in the chapel in 1790, particularly one ſtone with the following coats: 1. Haſtings.—2. Clarence—3. Pole.—4. Nevil earl of Saliſbury and Warwick.—5. Or, fretty Gules, on a canton per pale, Or and Ermine, a galley with ſails furled, Sable, Nevil.—6. Montacute.—7. Monthermer.—8. Azure, a ſemée of fleurs de lis, a lion rampant Argent, Holland.—9. Gules, three lions paſſant guardant, in pale Or, within a border Argent, Edmund earl of Kent.—10. Beauchamp earl of Warwick.—11. Lozengy, Or and Azure, on a border Gules, ſemé of plates, Newburgh.—12. Spencer.—13. Or, three chevronels Gules, Clare;—14. Hungerford.—15. Botreaux.—16. Moels.—17. Molines.—18. Five lozenges in feſs.—19. Argent, On a bend Azure, three bucks' heads caboſhed Or, Stanley earl of Derby.—20. Strange of Knockin; Plate LXXVI. fig. 25.——In the ſame Plate, fig. 37. are engraved (from Harl. MSS. 1113.) the arms of George earl of Huntingdon, with 60 quarterings, which will be noticed in a future page.

[2] Two infant ſons of this nobleman were buried at Aſhby de la Zouch. Dugdale, Bar. Angl. vol. I. p. 332.

[3] The arms of William lord Haſtings, with his creſt at the four corners, from a ſtone in the South wall of St. Mary's church at Leiceſter, are engraved fig. 26.

[4] Theſe ſix coats, impaling Haſtings, were formerly in St. Mary's church in Leiceſter. See vol. I. p. 512.

[5] Frances died in 1723. See the Hiſtorical Regiſter, 1724, p. 4.

If his birth deſerved reſpect, his life deſerved it more.
If he derived his title from a long roll of illuſtrious anceſtors, he reflected back on them ſuperior honours.
He ennobled nobility by virtue. He was of the firſt rank in both;
good in every relation of natural duty, and of ſocial life.
The learning he acquired at ſchool, he improved at Oxford, under the care of that excellent perſon, the preſent biſhop of Glouceſter[1].
Acquainted by his Studies with the characters of paſt ages, he acquired by his Travels a knowledge of the men and manners of his own.
He viſited France, Italy, and even Spain.
After theſe excurſions into other countries, he ſettled in his own.
His own was dear to him.
No man had juſter notions of the true conſtitution of her government:
no man had a more comprehenſive view of her real intereſts, domeſtic and foreign.
Capable of excelling in every form of public life, he choſe to appear in none.
His mind fraught with knowledge, his heart elevated with ſentiments of unaffected patriotiſm, he looked down from higher ground on a low level of a futile and corrupt generation.
Deſpairing to do national good,
he mingled as little as his rank permitted in national affairs.
Home is the refuge of a wiſe man's life; home was the refuge of his.
By his marriage with the lady SELINA SHIRLEY, ſecond daughter and one of the coheirs of WASHINGTON earl FERRERS, he ſecured to himſelf in retreat a ſcene of happineſs
he could not have found in the world; the uninterrupted joys of conjugal love, the never-failing comforts of cordial friendſhip.
Every care was ſoftened, every ſatisfaction heightened,
every hour paſſed ſmoothly away, in the company of one who enjoyed a perpetual ſerenity of ſoul, that none but thoſe can feel in this life,
who are prepared for greater bliſs in the next.
By her this monument is erected, to record the virtues of the deceaſed, and the grief of the living.
He was born Nov. 12, 1696; and married the ſaid lady June 3, 1728.
By her he had four ſons[2], and three daughters;
Francis, the preſent earl, born March 13, 1728-9;
George, born March 29, 1730, who died of the ſmall-pox, aged 14;
Ferdinando, born January 23, 1732, who alſo died of the ſmall-pox, aged 11;
Henry, now living[3], born Dec. 12, 1739;
Elizabeth, the eldeſt daughter, born March 23, 1731;
Selina, born June 1735, who died an infant;
Selina[4], the third daughter, born December 3, 1737.
The ſaid earl died[5], of a fit of the apoplexy,
October 13, 1746, in the 50th year of his age."

In the chancel.

On the South ſide, on a ſmall mural monument:
Arms: Sable, a chevron between three croſſes patonce Or, fig. 27.
"M. S.
Near to this place lieth interred the body of ARTHUR HILDERSAM[6], honourably deſcended from Sir RICHARD POOL, by his wife MARGARET, Counteſs of SALISBURY; but more honoured, for his ſweet and ingenuous diſpoſition, his ſingular wiſdom in ſettling peace, adviſing in ſecular affairs, and ſatisfying doubts, his abundant charity, and eſpecially for his extraordinary knowledge and judgement in the Holy Scriptures, his painful and zealous preaching, together with his firm and laſting conſtancy in the truth he profeſſed. He lived in this place for the moſt part of forty-three years and ſix months, with great ſucceſs in his miniſtry, love and reverence of all ſorts, and died with much honour and lamentation
March the 4th, 1631."

On mural tablets in the veſtry:

1. "In memory of Robert Dickinſon, eſq.
He was one of the aldermen of the borough of Leiceſter;
and died in his mayoralty, Sept. 25, 1788, aged 46.
Alſo Robert and Mary Dickinſon, his father and mother.

$$\left.\begin{array}{r}\text{He}\\ \text{She}\end{array}\right\}\text{ died }\left\{\begin{array}{l}\text{Jan. 28, 1774,}\\ \text{April 13, 1779,}\end{array}\right\}\text{ aged }\left\{\begin{array}{l}\text{81.}\\ \text{79.}\end{array}\right.$$

This monument was erected at the expence of Mr. John Dickinſon, of Pontefract, in Yorkſhire."

2. Arms: Vert, a chevron between three boars' heads couped Argent; fig. 28.
"Sacred to the memory of Anne Briſcoe Hayes, daughter of John Hayes, of South Carolina, gent.
She was virtuous, modeſt, prudent;
chearfully devout, as ſincerely religious,
adorned with every quality of a ſincere Chriſtian;
an amiable woman.
She ſubmitted to a tedious and ſevere illneſs with the utmoſt calmneſs, and died on the 17th of February, 1744,
in the 36th year of her age."

On flat ſtones in the veſtry:

1. "Here lies the body of Gerard Jaques[7], gent.
ſteward to the right honourable Theophilus earl of Huntingdon, and ſervant in that moſt noble family near 50 years.
He departed this life the 20th of December, 1689,
in the 61ſt year of his age."

2. "Quod reliquum eſt Johannis Lord, hujus eccleſiæ vicarii,
ſpe reſurrectionis beatæ hic requieſcit;
qui, poſtquam ſedecim annos curam animarum
ſummâ fidelitate ſuſtinuiſſet, tandem, relictâ uxore & unicâ filiâ,
animam Deo reſignavit primo calend. Julii, anno Domini 1711, ætatis ſuæ 52."

---

[1] Dr. Martin Benſon, who died in 1752.

[2] In the North croſs of Weſtminſter-abbey is a grave-ſtone with the following inſcription: "Here lie interred the bodies of the honourable George and Ferdinando Haſtings, ſecond and third ſons of Theophilus and Selina, earl and counteſs of Huntingdon. Ferdinando, third ſon, born Jan. 23, 1732-3, departed this life April 21, 1743, in the 11th year of his age; and George, ſecond ſon, born March 29, 1730, died December 20, 1743, in the 14th year of his age."

[3] Henry died Sept. 13, 1758, unmarried.

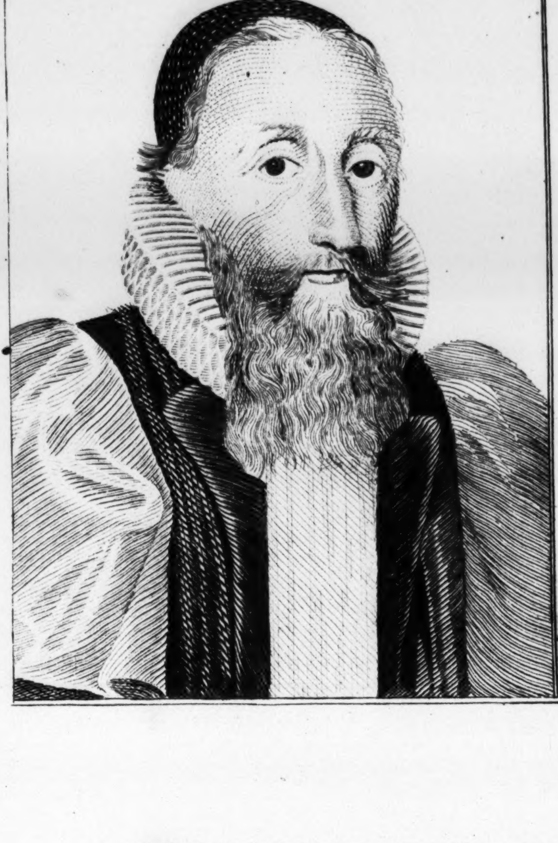
[4] She died, unmarried, May 12, 1763.

[5] At his houſe in Downing-ſtreet, Weſtminſter.

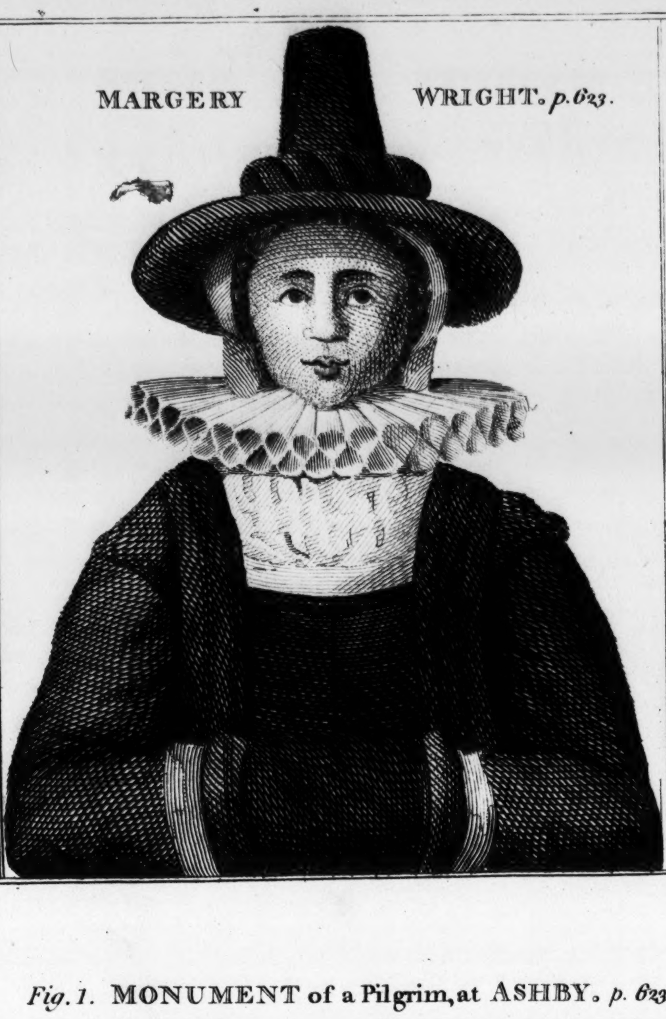
[6] Of whom ſee ſome memoirs, p. 626.

[7] A deſcendant probably of Mr. Thomas Jakes, whoſe compilation on the family of Haſtings has been noticed in p. 574.

BISHOP HALL. p. 628.



MARGERY WRIGHT. p. 623.



ARTHUR HILDERSHAM. p. 626.

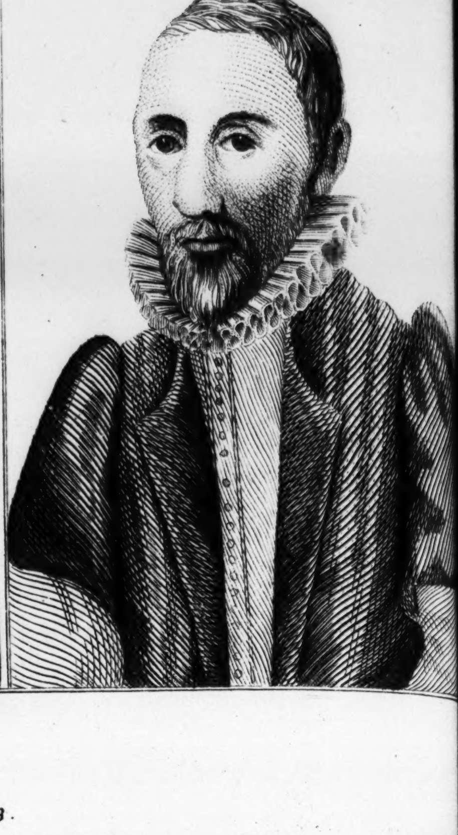


Fig. 1. MONUMENT of a Pilgrim, at ASHBY. p. 623.

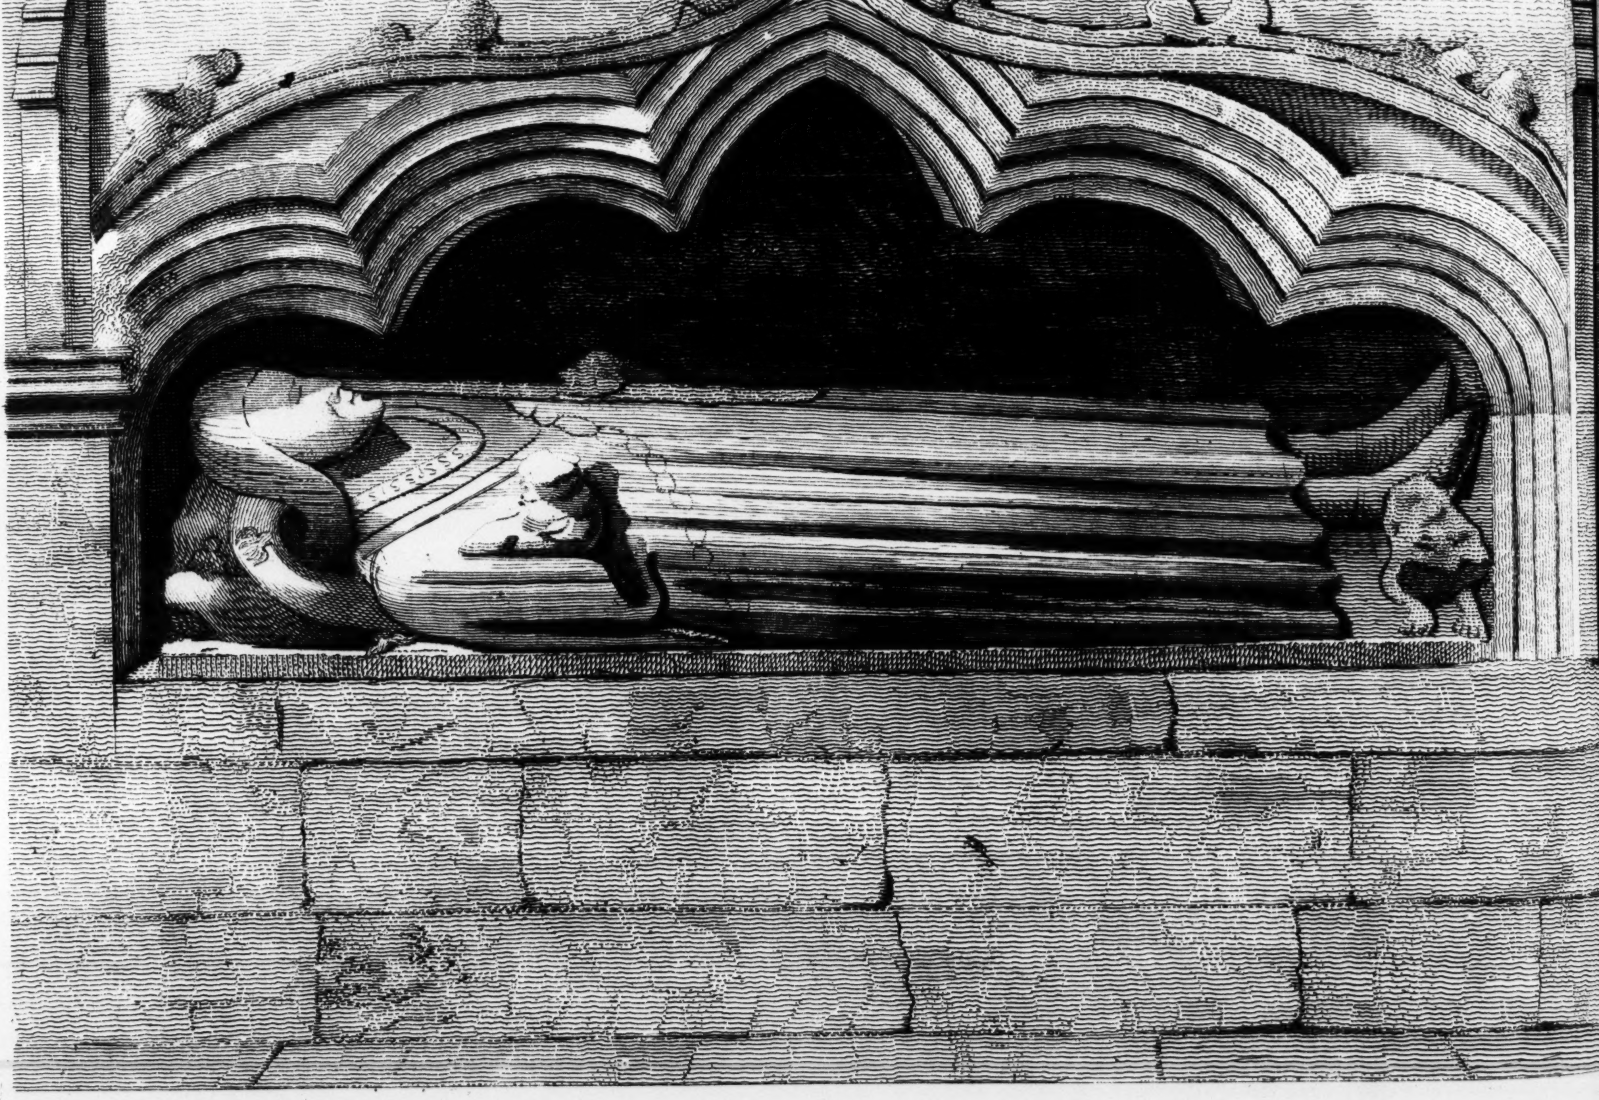

Fig. 2. Birds-eye View of the Pilgrim.

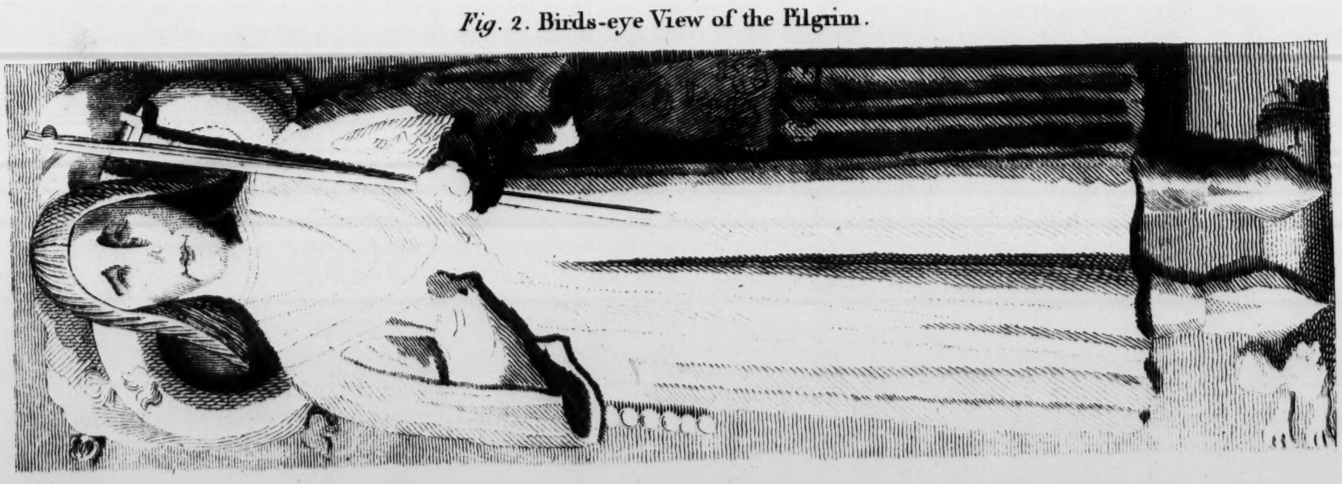

3. "Gulielmus Huſbands, ſcholæ apud
Aſhby de la Zouch præceptor eruditus, rector de Scampton, in agro Lincolnienſi, et honoratiſſimo comiti Ferrers à Sacris,
Omnipotenti piam animam reſignavit
28 Octobris die, 1745, æt. 60.
Maria, ſupradicti Gul. Huſbands relicta, ſubtus etiam depoſ.
ob. 22 Decembris, 1750, æt. 69."

In the nave.

On a white tablet againſt the North wall:

Arms: Gules, a feſs between three ſiniſter hands Argent; fig. 29.

"M. S.
Thomæ Bate, gen.
cujus, inter cætera animi ſui ornamenta verè eximia, flagrans Liturgiæ Anglicanæ amor & reverentia, & ϛοργὴ erga liberos prudentiâ feliciter temperatâ, pulchrè eminebant.
Natus Weſt Broughton, in com. Derb. Dec. 21, 1648, Uxorem duxit Dorotheam Olderſhaw, de Kegworth,
in agro Leic';
Ex quâ prolem habuit,
Annam, H. S. Dorotheam,
Thomam, Carolum, H. S.
Jacobum, Elizabetham.
Janam.
Piam animam cœlo reddidit Jan. 9, 1707, æt. 59."

On a mural tablet on the South ſide:

Arms: Vert, a feſs Or, between three magpies Argent; Jackſon; impaling Bate; fig. 30.

"Near this place lieth the body of Ann, wife of Richard Jackſon, ſecond ſon of William Jackſon, of Coleraine,
in the county of Derry, in the kingdom of Ireland,
eſq. daughter of Thomas Bate, of Aſhby, gent.
and Dorothy his wife;
who departed this life July 13, 1698,
in the 24th year of her age;
having had iſſue two ſons, William and Thomas;
and one daughter Suſannah, who only ſurvived her."

On a very old white ſlab in the nave:

"THOMAS EVERARD, DIED DEC. 18, 1772, AGED 46."

Immediately above this is a large ſlab of variegated marble, without any remaining inſcription.

On flat ſtones in the nave:

1. "In joyful hopes of a happy reſurrection, here lieth the body of James Bate, gent.
who departed this life Sept. 25, 1757,
in the 80th year of his age."

2. "Here lieth the body of Elizabeth Flavell, who departed this life Dec. 20, 1762, aged 9 years.
Alſo in the ſame grave lieth
the body of Mary Flavell, who departed this life July 17, 1777, aged 84.
Likewiſe in the ſame grave lieth interred
the body of Thomas Flavell, who departed this life May 13, 1791, aged 71."

Dr. Kirkland[1] is buried at the Eaſt end of the nave, near the chancel; but has no monumental inſcription.

Mr. Carter, whoſe ſkill enables me to give an accurate reſemblance (Plate LXXXIV. fig. 1. 2.) of a remarkable monument in the North aile of this church, thus deſcribes it: "In an arched receſs of the North wall is the ſtatue of a pilgrim; and, if we may judge from the architecture of the receſs and the dreſs of the ſtatue, this work is of a remote period, and is rendered intereſting from the information which it affords of the habit of ſuch a character, as repreſentations like theſe are very rare in our antient ſculpture. At the back of this ſtatue is the broad hat with cockle-ſhells; the hair is of a peculiar cut; a veſt covers the body, with large and open ſleeves; on the feet are ſhort boots laced; and we likewiſe notice the ſtaff, ſcrip, beads, and round the neck a collar of SS. denoting that this perſon was of high conſequence. This remarkable effigies has loſt part of the noſe and the hands, part of the ſtaff, and of the ſtring of beads, and the head of the lion at the feet of the figure." There is no tradition to determine whom this figure repreſents; but Mr. Gough thinks that it was ſome perſon of authority, perhaps a keeper of the caſtle, or a bailiff of the town[2]."

This monument, I ſince find, had been noticed by Mr. Burton, ſubſequent to the publication of his Hiſtory; for, in the margin of his volume, is this note, and a ſlight ſketch of the tomb, when the ſcrip and ſtaff were more perfect than they are at preſent: "On the North ſide of the church, near to the great North door, lieth in the wall an antient monument of a Palmer in alabaſter, which I gueſs to be of ſome of the family of Zouch; which, for the expreſſing of the manner of the habit, I cauſed to be cut and inſerted[3]." This ſketch is alſo engraved in Plate LXXVI.

"Near the above receſs," adds Mr. Carter, "is placed againſt the wall a monument; which, though of a later date than the time which uſually attracts the notice of an Antiquary, yet, from the faſhion of the dreſs of the lady whoſe half-length figure is placed therein, the unaffected attitude and the engaging delicacy of the countenance, I could not but eſſay to catch a ſemblance of it. The circumſtance of the muff making part of this female's dreſs is worthy of particular notice. See Plate LXXXIV."

The tomb is thus inſcribed:

"April 1, 1631.
The monument of Mrs. Margery Wright, late wife to Gilbert
Wright, of London;
who, being borne in this towne, did (out of her charitable and pious diſpoſition) give in her lifetime £43. to provide gowns yearly, for ever, for certain aged and poore people here.
She died Auguſt 11th, 1623."

On another mural tablet in the North aile:

1. Arms: Argent, a ſaltire Gules; impaling, Azure, three ſpread eagles Argent; a creſcent for difference; fig. 24.

"Nere to this place lieth ſir Thomas Gerard[4], knight, juſtice of the peace, and late ſervant to the right honourable Henry Earl of Huntingdon. He died the 16th of March, 1634; and left, at his deceaſe, 3 ſons and a daughter; Henry, Ferdinando, John, and Lucy."

Below, round the ledge of a large flat ſtone:

"IN MEMORY OF SIR THOMAS GERARD, KNIGHT, AND LADIE ELIZABETH GERARD HIS WIFE.
SHE DIED IN 1636;
AND SIR THOMAS DECEASED MARCH THE 16TH, 1634."

On other mural tablets in the North aile:

"In memory of Mrs. Jane Pilkington; whoſe conſtant liberality to the poor,
and benevolence to all her acquaintance, rendered her death truly lamented.
She departed this life May 15, 1778."

2. "Beneath lie the remains of Mr. John Mynors, apothecary, who by a ſucceſsful practice carried on many years here, enjoyed the pleaſure of doing good both to himſelf and thoſe about him;
and departed this life June 26, 1749, aged 73 years.
He married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Pilkington, of Stanton, in the county of Derby, eſq.
by whom he had one ſon, named Pilkington,
who died young, and was buried near this place.
Elizabeth, relict of Mr. John Mynors, died July 19, 1752, aged 79 years.'

3. "In memory of Richard Hardy, only ſon of the Rev. Richard Hardy, rector of Langor, in Nottinghamſhire;
who died June 19, 1766, aged 19.
He was a ſprightly, yet pious youth,
and bore his ſufferings well:

---

[1] Of whom ſee ſome Memoirs in p. 632.

[2] Sepulchral Monuments, vol. II. p. ccxx.

[3] Burton, MS.

[4] Sir Thomas Gerard, of the Court (ſee p. 592.) was knighted at Whitehall, June 29, 1628.

Reaſon reſigns, and Faith gives thanks;
but Inſtinct and Affection mourn."

4. "In memory of William Reaſon, who departed this life the 21ſt of December, 1768,
aged 66 years.
Alſo of Elizabeth his wife, who was one of the daughters of the Rev. Mr. Thomas Peſtell, rector of Ravenſtone.
She died the 11th of December, 1770, aged 52 years."

5. "Sacred to the memory of John Mynors, gent.
He had many amiable qualities to endear him.
His exemplary piety to God, his generous benevolence to men, and his extenſive goodneſs to all his relations and friends, rendered his ſudden death truly deplorable.
He died June 30, 1775, aged 45."

6. "In memory of Lucinda Alſopp, third daughter of the rev. William Browne, late rector of Stretton en le Field,
in the county of Derby,
and Lucy his wife;
who departed this life the 23d day of December, 1791,
in the 46th year of her age."

On flat ſtones in the North aile:

1. "Mary, relict of the Rev. John Muxloe, A. M.
rector of Congeſton;
who died January 18, 1749, aged 85."

2. "Mary Aſhpinſhaw, daughter of John Farren, of Claycoton,
in the county of Northampton, gent.
died Sept. 20, 1759.
John and Lucy, ſon and daughter of Edward and Elizabeth, died April 7, 1764, aged 2 weeks.
Edward their ſon died Aug. 10, 1773, in his 7th year."

3. "Under this ſtone lie the remains of Edward Aſhpinſhaw, who departed this life June 13, 1792, aged 85.
Alſo under this ſtone lie the remains of Elizabeth, widow of the above Edward Aſpinſhaw;
who departed this life May 23, 1792, aged 55.
Likewiſe Edward, ſon of Edward and Elizabeth; who died Auguſt 10, 1773, aged 7."

On the wall of the South aile, on a table of alabaſter, with pillars on each ſide, gilt and painted[1]:

"Neere to this place lieth the body of Urſula, daughter to Liſley Cave, eſq.
and wife to William Davenant, gent.
and had iſſue by him two ſons and one daughter,
John, William, and Mary.
She died the 25th of November, 1636, her age 46."

Over which table are theſe arms, cut in an eſcocheon of alabaſter as finiſhings to the table, baron & femme; the one on one pillar, and the other oppoſite to it.

Quarterly, 1. and 4. Gules, three eſcalop-ſhells Ermine, between eight croſs croſſets fitchée Or, Davenant; 2. and 3. Vaire, Argent and Azure, a canton of the ſecond, ...: Impaling, Azure fretty Argent; Cave. The creſt over the arms of Davenant is a cubit-arm, with a garland in the hand, all Or. Over the arms of Cave a greyhound courant Sable, collared Or; fig. 23.

On the nether part of the pillars are Davenant's and Cave's coats, cut in ſeveral eſcocheons.

On another mural tablet in this aile:

"To the memory of Thomas Richards, eſq.
whoſe affection to his family,
benevolence to his neighbours,
and integrity in all his actions, rendered his death greatly lamented.
He died June 11, 1755, in the 58th year of his age.
Alſo Elizabeth his wife, who died Aug. 9, 1779,
aged 69,
whoſe life was exemplary in every relation.
Thomas Richards, eſq. obiit Jan. 6, 1788."

On flat ſtones:

1. "Here lies the body of James Richards, gent.
who departed this life Sept. 80, 1735, aged 71.
Here alſo lies the body of
James, ſon of Thomas and Elizabeth Richards.
He died Oct. 2, 1737, aged 16 years.
Thomas Richards, eſq. 1755.
Elizabeth his wife, 1779.
Thomas Richards, eſq. 1788."

2. "Under this ſtone lie the remains of James Gardiner, youngeſt ſon of Thomas Gardiner, late of Oſbaſton.
He departed this life Jan. 21, 1778, aged 3 years.
Alſo is interred here his daughter Anne Gardiner.
She departed this life Jan. 30, 1778, aged 2 years."

3. Thomas Tyndale died 2 Aug. 1779, aged 4 months."

On flat ſtones at the Weſt end of the church, in the paſſage leading from the North door to the South:

1. "To the memory of the Rev. Mr. John Simpſon, late rector of Desford,
who departed this life the 17th of June, 1773,
in the 66th year of his age."

2. "Beneath are the remains of Francis-Wayte Huſbands, ſon of the Rev. Mr. John Huſbands, of Aſhby de la Zouch.
He died the 22d of April, 1774,
in the 24th year of his age.
Alſo the remains of Martha Muriell;
ſhe died July 18, 1780, aged 87."

3. "Beneath are the remains of Mary, late wife of the Rev. John Huſbands.
She was daughter of the Rev. Jacob Mould, rector of Appleby, in the county of Leiceſter.
She died May 9, 1753, in the 32d year of her age.
In a grave adjoining lies the body of
Mr. Iſaac Mould, brother to the ſaid Mrs. Huſbands.
He died April 20, 1749, aged 32.
Underneath are alſo the remains of the Rev. Mr. John Huſbands.
He died Auguſt 18, 1762, aged 41 years."

4. "Here lies the body of Harington Farmer, who departed this life March 9, 1760,
in the 47th year of his age.

5. "Here lieth Jane Jordan, wife of Robert Lindſay,
of Middlewick, in the county of Cheſter.
She was a faithful ſervant twenty-one years to Frances counteſs of Huntingdon.
A child, the play-fellow,
a widow, the friend,
of Lady Anne Haſtings;
who, lamenting her death
with a ſincere and affectionate ſorrow, laid this ſtone.
Born at Bretby the 2d of Auguſt, 1680;
died at Aſhby Place the 7th of January, 1747."

6. "Here lies the body of Charles Swedes[2], gent.
a native of Germany;
who departed this life March 24, 1770, aged 56."

In the church-yard.

On a tablet immediately behind the altar:

"M. S.
THOMÆ ORME, A. M.
honoratiſſimo Roberto comiti Ferrers à Sacris, & rectoris de Gareſden in agro Wiltonienſi;
qui uxorem duxit Annam Hewitt,
ex eâque liberos ſeptem ſuſcepit;
Thomam, H. S.; Elizabetham, Johannem, Thomam, Jacobum, Carolum, Annam.
Obiit Nov. 16, A. D. 1715, ætatis 61."

"Mrs. Anne Orme, wife of the Rev. Mr. Thomas Orme, died Feb. 9, 1725, aged 67.
Charles, ſon of the above Charles Orme, died Nov. 20, 1737, aged 8 years."

---

[1] This tomb ſtood formerly on the South ſide of the nave next the chancel; whence the inſcription is copied into Carte's MSS. in the Bodleian Library, FFF. No. 43.

[2] He was the firſt perſon who had the appointment of organiſt at Aſhby.

On a very ſmall braſs plate:
"C. Orme[1] died Jan. 20, 1747, aged 59."

A ſmall adjoining ſtone for "Bainbrigg Orme."

On altar-tombs near the South part of the church:
1. "Here lieth the body of
the Rev. William Lynes, A. M.
many years maſter of the free-ſchool in this town.
He died March 31, 1727.
Alſo the body of Mrs. Sarah Lynes his wife, who died Jan. 4, 1728.
As alſo of Mrs. Mary Lynes, their daughter, who died June 1, 1741."

[Mr. Lynes was curate to Francis Coke[2], M.A. rector of Yoxall in Staffordſhire; with whom Mr. Lynes lived for ſome years, in his old age, in the parſonage-houſe.]

2. On the North ſide of another tomb:
"Here lieth the body of Mrs. Anne Savidge, daughter of Mr. Tho. Ward, of Burton upon Trent, the late wife of Mr. John Savidge, of Aſhby Old Park,
who died Auguſt the 24th, 1735,
in the 78th year of her age.
Here lyeth interred the body of the above-mentioned
Mr. John Savidge, who was born at Chillington in Staffordſhire;
he died June the 23d, 1739,
in the 82d year of his age.
He was a ſingular example of dutiful obedience to his mother; of a fatherly love and care of his brethren and ſiſters;
a loving huſband; a tender father;
a wiſe and prudent adviſer;
ſtudious and laborious in agriculture;
in religion a moderate Non-conformiſt;
pious towards God; a friend to all men.
This couple was happy in themſelves, and a bleſſing in their ſtation."

On the South ſide of the ſame tomb:
"Near this place lieth the body of Mr. Edward Savidge, a younger brother of Mr. John Savidge, of Aſhby Old Park; who died June the 27th, 1738,
in the 76th year of his age.
Here lieth interred the body of Dr. Thomas Savidge, youngeſt ſon of Mr. John Savidge, who died December the 24th, 1763,
in the 78th year of his age.
Here alſo lieth the body of Mrs. Alice Savidge, youngeſt daughter of Mr. John Savidge, who died February the 6th, 1792,
in the 90th year of her age.
Her piety to God was exemplary;
her benevolence to man univerſal;
her charity to the poor extenſive."

3. "In memory of Mrs. Dorothy Johnſon, daughter of Thomas Bate, of this town, gent.
and relict of the rev. Anthony Johnſon, A. M. ſometime vicar of this pariſh, and rector of Swarkeſton in the county of Derby.
She died Jan. 7, 1752, in the 71ſt year of her age."

On two very ſmall braſſes on the above ſtone:
1. "In this tomb are alſo the remains of Jane relict of George Pilkington, and youngeſt daughter of Mr. Thomas Bate, of this town.
She died Oct. 28, 1759, aged 72 years."

2. "In a grave near this tomb lieth the body of Middlemore Pilkington, ſon of George and Elizabeth Pilkington, of this town.
He died Feb. 13, 1763, aged 2 weeks and 4 days."

On upright ſtones:
1. "Here lieth the body of John Litherland, gent.
ſon and heir of Michael Litherland, of the city of Cork in the kingdom of Ireland, gent. deceaſed, who was the couſin and deviſee of
of Samuel Litherland, gent. alſo deceaſed, of his eſtate in Thringſton.
He died 1723, July the 10th, aged 42."

2. "In teſtimony of reſpect to the memory of John Grundy, a man of unblemiſhed character, and a valuable member of the Muſical Society of this place;
who died of an apoplexy
May the 23d, 1776, aged 40.
This ſtone is erected by voluntary ſubſcription.
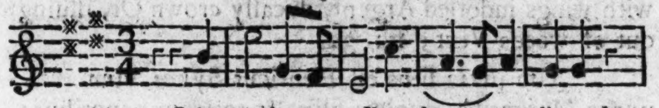
I know that my Redeemer liveth."



3. "In memory of John Needham;
who died June 24, 1782, in her 85th year."

4. "Here lieth the remains of Sarah, wife of John Hood the younger, of this town, and daughter of Chriſtopher Tebbutt, late of Kingſtone in the county of Nottingham;
who died Oct. 9, 1783, aged 83 years.
Here alſo lie the remains of the ſaid
John Hood, who died June 17, 1788, aged 87 years.
Not more with ſilver hairs than Virtue crown'd,
The good old pair take up this ſpot of ground.
Tread in their ſteps, and you will ſurely find Their reſt above—below, their peace of mind."

5. "Here lieth interred the body of Sarah the (deſervedly much loved) wife of John Enſor, of Oakthorpe, and daughter of John and Mary Almey, of this town. She was virtuous, modeſt, prudent in every capacity of life.
She lived eſteemed; and died lamented,
Oct. 9, 1761, in the 38th year of her age."

6. "Here lieth interred the body of Elizabeth Wilkins, who died Jan. 5, 1798, aged 51.
Affectionate, patient, diſintereſted;
ſhe diſcharged the relative duties of her ſtation with exemplary fidelity;
and, having lived under the influence of genuine piety,
departed, on a haſty ſummons,
full of its comforts,
and confident, through her Saviour,
of its reward.
Reader, go, and imitate her in life,
if thou wouldſt reſemble her in death."

7. "William Uſherwood fell aſleep,
April 5, 1794, in the 75th year of his age.
Mary Uſherwood fell aſleep,
Oct. 2, 1794, in the 76th year of her age."

8. "William Hackett, 23 May, 1794, aged 63.
Suſanna Hackett, 2 Feb. 1794, aged 73."

Samuel Martin, of Aſhby, a young man about 21 years of age, and very near-ſighted, belonged to Blackfordby. The pariſh officers, thinking he could not get his livelihood by hard labour, had him inſtructed in muſic. He was in love with a young woman in Aſhby; and the 1ſt of March, 1791, took a large quantity of arſenic. Dr. Kirkland and others of the faculty endeavoured to expel it; but in vain.

---

[1] Of this family is Dr. David Orme, a celebrated phyſician and man-midwife, and a no leſs ingenious mechanick; having been the inventor of the double-tubed barometer.

[2] Mr. Coke (not Cook, as Walker, Sufferings of the Clergy, p. 225.) was 37 years rector of Yoxall; and was one whom the Parliament approved of, for the county of Stafford, to be conſulted with on the buſineſs of the church, April 25, 1642. (Journals, vol. III. p. 545.) Oct. 23, 1643, being one that had not taken the Covenant, he was ordered to appear in the Aſſembly of Divines within 14 days at fartheſt. (Ib. p. 287.) He was ejected from his rectory; but, ſurviving his troubles, was admitted to the archdeaconry of Stafford, Dec. 6, 1666; which he held till his death in 1682. Smyth's MS Notes.

He lived eight days; the doctor opened him, and found it glutted in lumps. The coroner's inqueſt brought it in wilful murder of himſelf; and he was buried in the common turnpike-road leading from Aſhby to Tamworth on the 11th of the ſaid month, and a ſtake driven at the end of the coffin.

Hannah Sturges died in 1797, aged 106. She well remembered the rejoicings on the peace of Utrecht in 1713, when ſhe was 19 years old, and that booths were erected in the town, and barrels of ale wheeled about, and diſtributed to the poor inhabitants [1].

On a ſtone fixed in the fourth pillar on the South ſide of the church of St. Andrew Underſhaft, in the city of London, is the following inſcription, the letters of which are very ſhallow, and much decayed:

Arms: Gules, three tufts of graſs Or, Sykes; impaling two chevronels Argent, Peynell. Creſt, a ſwan with wings indorſed Argent, ducally crown Or, iſſuing out of weeds Vert; fig. 32.

"Hic juxta ſitus eſt Henricus Sykes, cum uxore Margarita, duobus filiis, & totidem nepotibus:
pharmacopœïus æquè probus ac peritus; & verè Opifer;
ſocietatis ſuæ decus, olim præfectus, & tandem pater.
In vico Aſhby de la Zouch, in agro Leiceſtrenſi, natus, Ubi benefacta [2] ejus, magis quam ipſe voluit innoteſcunt; et, quod ſolum voluit, in perpetuum durabunt.
Uxor illius erat EDVARDI PENDEL, gen.
filia, pia, prudens, amantiſſima,
ſuis in omni officiorum genere mater optima:
liberis aucti erant duodecim, quorum tres ſuperſunt,
filius qui marmor hoc poſuit, & filiæ duæ.

Ille Hæc	anno æt.	83, 61,	ob.	April 22, 1710. Dec. 31, 1694."

On a braſs plate at Eltham in Kent (now loſt) [3].

"Pray for the ſowl of John Morton, ſonne and heire of Margaret Morton, of Aſhby de la Zouch, in the county of Leiceſter, late wife to Thomas Squier, who died 23 Aug. ...."

"This town, if not of birth, yet was the place of abode, of that moſt grave and ſound Divine, Mr. ARTHUR HILDERSHAM; and now renowned as well by his birth; whoſe mother was daughter of ſir Geffrey Pole, of Lordington, in Suſſex, knight, brother to Reginald cardinal Pole, and to Henry Pole lord Montague (that had iſſue Katharine, married to Francis Haſtings earl of Huntingdon); and they three were the ſons of ſir Richard Pole, knight of the Garter, and of Margaret his wife counteſs of Saliſbury, daughter of George duke of Clarence, brother to king Edward the Fourth, and ſiſter and heir of Edward earl of Warwick; as alſo by his moſt learned Lectures upon the fourth chapter of St. John, ſet forth and publiſhed in 1629 [4]." He was nominated to the vicarage of Aſhby (where he had for a few years before been an aſſiſtant lecturer) by the following very honourable invitation from his noble kinſman and patron, who had liberally contributed to his ſupport at Cambridge:

"Since that it hath pleaſed the Lord to call Tho. Wyddowes to his mercye, who was (in my opinion) both faithfull, carefull, and diligent in his function, according to his talent; I do wiſh with all my heart the ſupply of that place to be ſuch, as that the good which father Gilbie and he, by the good providence and mercy of God, have planted in and about Aſhby, may be continued and increaſed. Therefore I chuſe to preſent you unto that paſtoral charge of Aſhby; which, I truſt, by that time I have finiſhed my long-intended purpoſe, ſhall be a ſufficient place for any learned preacher. And with this letter I ſend you my preſentation to the vicarage, with a letter to the Bp. of Lincoln, who, I hope, will eaſily accept of you, with all honour. Yet let this be your care, to advance the glory of God by exerciſe of your miniſtry, which you ſhall do beſt when you are in the paſtoral charge. I am forced to end. God ever direct you, and ever aſſiſt you with all neceſſary graces!

To the comfort of the poor widowe I will take ſome care. At York, haſtily, this 5 July, 1593.

HEN. HUNTINGDON [5]."

Mr. Hilderſam [6] died March 4, 1631-2; and was buried in the chancel of the church in which ſo large a period of his life had been uſefully employed [7].

Dr. Fuller ſays, "This year ended the days of Mr. Arthur Hilderſam, born at Strechworth in the county, bred at Chriſt college in the Univerſity of Cambridge; whoſe education was an experimental remark on the words of David, 'When my father and mother forſake me, then the Lord taketh me up [8].'

My Father	Thomas Hilderſham, a gentleman of an antient family.
And Mother	Anne Pole, daughter to ſir Geffrey, niece to cardinal Pole, grandchild to ſir Richard Pole, and Margaret counteſs of Saliſbury, who was daughter to George duke of Clarence.
forſake me,	Quite caſting him off, becauſe he would not be bred a Papiſt, and go to Rome.
THEN	An emphatical monoſyllable, juſt in that nick of time.
The Lord taketh me up.	Not immediately (miracles being ceaſed); but in and by the hands of Henry Earl of Huntingdon (his honourable kinſman) providing plentiful maintenance for him.

However, after he was entered in the miniſtry, he met with many moleſtations, as hereby doth appear.

1.	ſilenced by	The High Commiſſion, 1590, in June.
2.		Biſhop Chaderton, 1605, April 24.
3.		Biſhop Neile, 1611, in November.
4.		The Court at Leiceſter, 1630, March 4.
1.	reſtored by	The High Commiſſion, 1591, in January.
2.		Biſhop Barlow, 1608, in January.
3.		Dr. Ridley [9], 1625, June 20.
4.		The ſame Court, 1631, Aug. 2.

And now, methinks, I hear the Spirit ſpeaking unto him, as once to the Prophet Ezekiel [10], "Thou ſhalt ſpeak, and be no more dumb;" ſinging now with the celeſtial choir of Saints and Angels. Indeed, though himſelf a Nonconformiſt, he loved all honeſt men, were they of a different judgement; minded like Luther herein, who gave for his motto, "In quo aliquid CHRISTI video, illum diligo." He was miniſter of Aſhby de la Zouch forty and three years. This putteth me in mind of Theodoſius and of Valentinian (two worthy Chriſtian Emperors) their Conſtitutions making thoſe Readers of the Civil Law Counts of the firſt order [11], "when with daily obſervation and diligent labour of teaching they ſhall arrive at twenty years." Surely the Readers of God's Law which double that time ſhall not loſe their reward [12]."

In his "Worthies" alſo, under Cambridgeſhire, Dr. Fuller ſays, "Arthur Hilderſham deſcended, by his mother's ſide from the blood royal, being great-great-grandchild to George duke of Clarence, brother to Edward the Fourth. Yet was he not like the proud Nobles of Tecon, who counted themſelves 'too good to put their hands to God's work.' But, being bred in Chriſt's college in Cambridge, he entered into the miniſtry. How this worthy Divine was firſt run aground with poverty, and afterwards ſet afloat by God's providence; how he alternately loſt and rece-

---

[1] An elder brother died, two years ago, at Clifton, near Aſhbourn, aged 109; and another ſiſter at Aſhby, about 20 years ago, aged 80; ſo that the united ages of a brother and two ſiſters were 295 years.

[2] See p. 616.

[3] Thorpe's Cuſtumale Roffenſe, p. 953.

[4] Burton, MS.

[5] Tranſcribed by Mr. Peck, ex MS. cl. Baker, vol. XXXII. fol. 426.

[6] So he ſpelt his own name. There was a William Hilderſham, of Emanuel college, B. A. 1623.

[7] See his epitaph, p. 622.

[8] Pſalm xxvii. 10.

[9] Vicar-general to Abp. Abbot.

[10] xxiv. 27.

[11] "Cùm ad viginti annos obſervatione jugi, ac ſedulo docendi labore pervenirent." C. Th. lib. vi. fol. 21.

[12] Fuller's Church Hiſtory, Book XI. p. 142.

vered his voice, being ſilenced and reſtored by two Biſhops; how, after many intermediate afflictions, this juſt and upright man had peace at the laſt; is largely repeated in my 'Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory;' which (except I add to the truth) I can add nothing on my own knowledge remarkable [1]."

His portrait is copied in Plate LXXXIV. from an engraving by R. Vaughan.

Lilly the Aſtrologer, in the Memoirs of his own Life, tells us, "that he diſſented not from the Church in any articles of Faith, but only about wearing the ſurplice, baptizing with the croſs, and kneeling at the ſacrament;" and, though he might be ſtyled a Nonconformiſt, he publiſhed a Letter againſt Separation [2]."

His publications were as follow:

1. "The Doctrine of Faſting, Praier, and Humiliation, for Synn, containing eight Sermons upon Pſalm xxxv. 13, at the Public Faſt in 1625; and one Sermon on Eccl. xi. 8, by Arthur Hilderſham," entered in the Stationers' books, 14 Nov. 1632, by Mr. Brewſter; and re-publiſhed in 1636, 12mo.

2. "Lectures on the Fourth Chapter of John's Goſpel, preached at Aſhby de la Zouch in Leiceſterſhire [3], by Arthur Hilderſham, 1629," fol.; a ſecond edition in 1632. Theſe Lectures, CVIII in number, were delivered in a regular ſeries, at Aſhby church, from Jan. 31, 1608-9, to Nov. 12, 1611; and, in a dedication dated June 1, 1628, are inſcribed, "To the Right Honourable Henry earl of Huntingdon, Lord Haſtings, Hungerford, Botreaux, Mullins, and Moiles, lord lieutenant of the counties of Leiceſter and Rutland." "Theſe Lectures," ſays the Author, "which I have for ſo many years kept by me, and refuſed to let them ſee the light (as judging them both unworthy in themſelves to be brought into public view, and altogether needleſs alſo, though they had been much better, in an age that doth ſo abound with all variety of excellent gifts, both for preaching and writing), I am at length (through the importunity of ſundry that think better of them than myſelf could ever do) enforced to give way that they may be publiſhed. And this I have done the more willingly, that I might have opportunity by this dedication of them to give public teſtimony unto the world, of my duty and thankfulneſs unto your Honour, and unto your noble Houſe; unto whom (next under God) I do owe whatſoever poor abilities he hath been pleaſed to give unto me for the ſervice of his Church. For, as that noble uncle of yours (whom his wiſdom and ſerviceableneſs to his Prince and Country, even with the great neglect of his own eſtate and family, and ſpecially his zealous care to promote the Goſpel of Chriſt, did make much more honourable than the nobleneſs of his great birth could poſſibly do) did firſt maintain me in the Univerſity, and after brought me to the exerciſe of my miniſtry in this place; ſo have I been, by the favour of your noble grandfather, and of your Honour, continued here more than 40 years. And unto your Honour eſpecially, above all other men, is thanks due for whatſoever benefit may redound to the Church by theſe Lectures; becauſe of that encouragement I did receive from your Lordſhip in the preaching of them; not only by your honourable beneficence in maintaining of me, and confirming that unto me, which, by the bounty of your noble anceſtors, I did enjoy; but by that worthy example alſo you gave unto all my auditory, in your conſtant and diligent frequenting of them; which as you would never have done if you had not liked them well, or if you had heard any thing taught in them that did diſagree with the doctrine of our Church, or that had any way tended unto ſchiſm or faction; ſo have you made me the more bold even in this reſpect humbly to commend the patronage of them unto your Honour."—In a ſeparate preface, ſigned I. C. much is ſaid in commendation of Mr. Hilderſham; and ſome tracts of his are noticed; particularly "thoſe Queſtions and Anſwers, wherein he hath compriſed the doctrine of the Lord's Supper; which, though without his name, they be annexed to a little treatiſe of the like argument, ſet forth by a godly learned divine, Mr. Bradſhaw; yet have they been of ſingular good uſe to many poor ſouls for their worthy preparation to that ordinance. And that one letter of his to a gentlewoman againſt the Separation, which, without his conſent, a Separatiſt printed and refuted, hath ſo ſtrongly and clearly convinced the iniquity of that way, that I could not but acknowledge in it both the wiſdom of God, and the weakneſs of the Separatiſt. His wiſdom, in bringing to light ſuch a beam of the Light of his Truth by the hand of an adverſary againſt the Author's mind; and the weakneſs of the other, to advance the hand of his adverſary, to give himſelf and his cauſe ſuch a deadly wound in open view, as neither himſelf nor all his aſſociates can be able to heal. In which reſpect I conceive it was, that the induſtrious Dr. Willet (in his dedicatory epiſtle to Chriſt's college, before his Harmony upon the firſt of Samuel) ſtyleth this our Author Schiſmaticorum (qui vulgò Browniſtæ) malleum; the hammer of Schiſmatiques, whom they commonly call Browniſts."

3. "Treatiſe of the Miniſtry of the Church of England, in anſwer to Fr. Johnſon," 4to.

4. CLII Lectures upon Pſalm LI. to verſe 7; preached at Aſhby de la Zouch in Leiceſterſhire, by that late faithfull and worthy Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt, Mr. Arthur Hilderſam, 1642," fol. This volume is inſcribed, by Samuel Hilderſham, "To the right honourable and religious lady Katharine Counteſs of Cheſterfield, in teſtimony of his humble and thankful acknowledgement of her noble favour and reſpect ſhewed to the Author both living and dying [4]."

JOHN DARREL, or DORRELL, was at firſt entered into the ſtudy of the common law; from which, after one year, he ſays [5], "God withdrew him by laying a ſtrange and extraordinary ſluggiſhneſs on him in that ſtudy." It is hard to gueſs by what rule of Scripture, or ſound reaſon, he could conclude that an extraordinary ſluggiſhneſs was an indication that Providence deſigned him for a Divine; but that notion was ſo ſtrongly impreſſed in his imagination, that we find him ſoon after a preacher among thoſe who in that age were called Puritans, firſt at Mansfield, and then at Aſhby de la Zouch; and one of the firſt works he undertook was the caſting out of devils [6]. This fanatick, who turned prieſt becauſe by his own confeſſion he was fit for nothing elſe, and ſet up the trade of an exorciſt, was of ſome notoriety in his time [7]. Having driven the devil out of a whole family in a day, he recorded it in "A brief and true Diſcourſe, contayning the certayne Poſſeſſion and Diſpoſſeſſion of ſeven perſons in one familie in Lancaſhire, as namely of John Starkie, Ann Starkie, Margaret Hurdman, Ellynor Hurdman, Ellen Holland, Margaret Byrom, and Jane Aſhton, which may ſerve (as an interim) for a peece of an anſwer to that fraudulent Diſcoverie lately come out, which depraveth theſe, as well as the reſt of thoſe great and mighty Works of God, which be of the ſame kind; Lond. 1595," 12mo. He was formally invited in 1597 to Nottingham, by a ſiſter of his then living there, and by Mr. Aldridge, vicar of St. Mary's, to diſpoſſeſs one William Sommers, then living in that town, but who had before been a ſervant to Mr. Brackenbury near Aſhby (where he had had ſome odd kind of fits, which Darrel believed was a poſſeſſion); and by this juggle he got to be choſen preacher of St. Mary's in Nottingham. This tranſaction produced,

1. "A brief Narration of the Poſſeſſion, Diſpoſſeſſion, and Repoſſeſſion of W. Somers, and of ſome Proceedings againſt Mr. John Dorrell, Preacher; together with Anſweres to ſuch Objections as are made to juſtifie the pretended counterfeiting of the ſaid Somers, 1598-9;" black letter.

---

[1] Worthies, Cambridgeſhire, p. 158.

[2] Lilly's Life, 1718, p. 4.

[3] Entered at Stationers' Hall. by Edward Brewſter, June 11, 1628.

[4] Entered at Stationers' Hall, 26 Aug. 1633.—The firſt Lecture is dated Sept. 28, 1625; and the laſt (the 152d) Dec. 27, 1631, not long before his death.

[5] In the 20th page of his "Detection," &c.

[6] Hiſtorical Eſſay concerning Witchcraft, by Francis Hutchinſon, D. D. 1718, p. 194.

[7] Athen. Oxon. vol. I. p. 732. Wood mentions John Dorel, or Darrel, dean of Agen. Ibid. p. 383.

2. "A Diſcovery of the fraudulent Practices of John Darrell, Bacheler of Artes, in his Proceedings concerning the pretended Poſſeſſion and Diſpoſſeſſion of William Somers at Nottingham; of Thomas Darling, the Boy of Burton at Caldwall; and of Katherine Wright at Mansfield and Whittington; and of his Dealings with one Mary Couper at Nottingham, detecting in ſome ſort the deceitful Trade in theſe latter Days of caſting out Devils; Lond. 1599;" 4to; ſigned S. H. i. e. Samuel Harſnet[1], who, for this and the "Declaration of Popiſh Impoſtures," was raiſed to the ſees of Chicheſter, Norwich, and York.

3. "The Triall of maiſter Dorrell, or a Collection of Defences againſt Allegations not yet ſuffered to receive convenient Anſwers; tending to clear him from the Imputation of teaching Somers and others to counterfeit Poſſeſſions of Devils, that, the Miſt of pretended Counterfeiting being diſpelled, the Glory of Chriſt his Royal Power in caſting out Devils (at the Prayer and Faſting of his People) may evidently appeare; 1599;" 12mo.

4. "A Detection of that ſinnful, ſhameful, lying, and ridiculous Diſcours, of Samuel Harſhnet, intituled, "A Diſcoverie of the fraudulent Practices of John Darrell, wherein is manifeſtly and apparantly ſhewed in the Eyes of the World, not only the unlikelihoode, but the flate impoſſibilitie of the pretended counterfayting of William Somers, Thomas Darling, Kath. Wright, and Mary Couper, togeather with the other Seven in Lancaſhire, and the ſuppoſed teaching of them by the ſaid John Darrell. Imprinted 1600;" 4to.

5. "A true Narration of the ſtrange and grevous Vexation by the Devil of 7 Perſons in Lancaſhire, and William Sommers of Nottingham[2]: wherein the Doctrine of Poſſeſſion and Diſpoſſeſſion of Demoniakes out of the Word of God is particularly applyed unto Somers, and the reſt of the Perſons controverted: togeather with the Uſe we are to make of theſe Workes of God. By John Darrell, Miniſter of the Word of God, 1600."—In this pamphlet Darrel gives the Common Prayer Book a great foil; for the ſeven perſons whom he diſpoſſeſſed in Mr. Starkey's family in Lancaſhire found by experience that ſtinted prayers out of a book had little effect upon the ſpirits; but at conceived prayers the parties were moſt troubled[3].

6. "A true Diſcourſe[4] concerning the certain Poſſeſſion and Diſpoſſeſſion of ſeven Perſons in one Family in Lancaſhire, 1600," 8vo.

7. "A Summarie Anſwere to al the material points in any of Maſter Darel his Bookes; more eſpeciallie to that one Booke of his, intituled, The Doctrine of the Poſſeſſion and Diſpoſſeſſion of Demoniakes out of the Word of God, by John Deacon and John Walker, Preachers; 1601;" 4to.

8. "Dialogical Diſcourſes of Spirits and Devils, by John Deacon and John Walker, Preachers; London, 1601;" 4to.

9. "The Replie of John Darrel to the Anſwer of John Deacon and John Walker, concerning the Doctrine of the Poſſeſſion and Diſpoſſeſſion of Demoniakes. Imprinted 1602;" 4to.

10. "A Survey of certaine dialogical Diſcourſes, written by John Deacon and John Walker, concerning the Doctrine of Poſſeſſion and Diſpoſſeſſion of Devils. Wherein is manifeſted the palpable Ignorance and dangerous Errors of the Diſcourſers, and what, according to proportion of God his Truth, every Chriſtian is to hold in theſe Poyntes. Publiſhed by John Darrell, Miniſter of the Goſpell. Imprinted 1602;" 4to.

This fanatical impoſtor was ſoon after proſecuted, by a ſpecial commiſſion iſſued under the authority of the archbiſhop of York; which was afterwards removed into the High Commiſſion court; by whoſe ſentence he was degraded from the miniſtry, and committed to cloſe priſon in York caſtle[5].

"This town (ſays Mr. Burton in MS.) is the native place of the mirror and ornament of our times, the right reverend father in God JOSEPH HALL, now biſhop of Exeter; whoſe own worth and worthineſs is ſufficiently expreſſed by his many works both in Divinity and Humanity." The name of this good biſhop is remembered with veneration at the diſtance of almoſt two centuries from the period in which he flouriſhed. Few, if any, of the fathers of our church have left behind them ſuch illuſtrious memorials of learning, piety, and unwearied induſtry in the cauſe of truth. The innocence of his life—the fervour of his charity[6]—the variety and importance of his theological writings, have been ſo many irreſiſtible claims on poſterity to preſerve him from the oblivion into which moſt of his cotemporaries have fallen.

Of his birth and parentage let us take his own account: "I was born July 1, 1574, at Preſtop park, within the pariſh of Aſhby, of honeſt and well allowed parentage. My father was an officer under that truly honourable and religious Henry earl of Huntingdon, preſident of the North; and under him had the government of that market-town, wherein the chief ſeat of that earldom is placed. My mother Winifrede, of the houſe of the Bainbridges, was a woman of that rare ſanctity, that (were it not for my intereſt in nature) I durſt ſay, that neither Aleth the mother of that juſt honour of Clareval, nor Monica, nor any other of thoſe pious matrons, antiently famous for devotion, need to diſdain her admittance to compariſon."

This excellent Divine received the firſt rudiments of his education in the free-ſchool of his native town; and was about to be removed to Leiceſter, under the care of Mr. Preſcot, then lately come from Cambridge to be the public preacher of Leiceſter, who was a man very eminent for his learning, eſpecially for his ſound oratory; but his deſtination was accidentally changed.

Dr. Fuller informs us, that "ſo ſoon almoſt as Emanuel college was admitted into Cambridge, he was admitted into that college, within a few years after the firſt foundation thereof. He paſſed all his degrees with great applauſe; firſt noted in the univerſity for his ingenious maintaining (be it truth or paradox) that Mundus ſeneſcit, "The world groweth old;" yet, in ſome ſort, his poſition confuteth his ſuppoſition, the wit and quickneſs whereof did argue an increaſe rather than a decay of parts in this latter age. He was firſt beneficed (Dec. 2, 1601,) by ſir Robert Drury at Hawſted[7] in Suffolk, and thence removed (1608) by Edward lord Denny (afterwards earl of Norwich) to

---

[1] Dr. Harſnet, when biſhop of Norwich, had a like controverſy about Popiſh poſſeſſions with Edmondes, alias Weſton, a jeſuit. Athen. Oxon. vol. I. p. 591.

[2] Republiſhed under the title of "A true Relation of the grievous handling of William Sommers of Nottingham, being poſſeſſed with a Devill; ſhewing how he was firſt taken, and how lamentably from time to time he was tormented and afflicted; publiſhed by John Darrel, miniſter of the Word of God; Lond. 1641," 4to.

[3] Hutchinſon on Witchcraft, p. 195. In New England the profeſſed could read the Scriptures in the Common Prayer, but not in the Bible itſelf. Ibid. pp. 73, 74.

[4] In his Faſti, vol. I. p. 108, Wood, and the Bodleian Catalogue after him, aſcribes the "true Diſcourſe" to one George More, a miniſter, at that time priſoner in the Clink, for bearing witneſs to and juſtifying the ſaid matters.

[5] Hutchinſon on Witchcraft, pp. 193. 209.—"There was one John Dorrell, a prieſt of no ordinary fame, priſoner in York caſtle; between whom and Edward Fairfax, who tranſlated Taſſo, there paſſed ſeveral letters on various ſubjects, on the Pope's Supremacy, Infallibility, Idolatry, &c. which deſerve to be publiſhed." Memoirs of Edward Fairfax, in Atterbury's Epiſtolary Correſpondence, 1799, vol. I. p. 378.

[6] Even in the ſharpeſt of his controverſial works, 'An Anſwer to Pope Urbane his Inurbanitie,' innumerable traces are to be found of this benignity and gentleneſs of diſpoſition whereof we ſpeak.

[7] "To this living, which was his firſt eccleſiaſtical preferment, he was invited by a letter from lady Drury, which was delivered to him in the ſtreet as he was going to receive from judge Popham the appointment to the maſterſhip of Tiverton ſchool in Devonſhire. He accepted moſt thankfully the lady's offer; ſaying, "he was going to the Weſt, but God had pulled him back, and he muſt turn Eaſtward." Being thus ſettled in the "ſweet and civil" country of Suffolk, as he expreſſes it, his firſt work was to re-build his ruinous parſonage-houſe; which, if we may judge from its preſent appearance, he did in a very humble ſtyle

Waltham Abbey in Eſſex. Here I muſt pay the tribute of my gratitude to his memory, as building upon his foundation, beholding myſelf, as his great grandchild in that place, three degrees from him in ſucceſſion; but, oh! how many from him in ability! His little Catechiſm hath done great good in that populous pariſh; and I could wiſh that ordinance more generally uſed all over England. Being doctor of divinity, he was ſent over by king James to the ſynod of Dort [1]; whence only indiſpoſition of body forced him to return before the reſt of his colleagues. He was preferred, firſt, dean of Worceſter; then biſhop of Exeter; then biſhop of Norwich; then biſhop of no place; ſurviving to ſee his ſacred function buried before his eyes. He may be ſaid to have died with his pen in his hand, whoſe writing and living expired together. He was commonly called our Engliſh Seneca [2], for the pureneſs, plainneſs, and fulneſs of his ſtyle; not unhappy at controverſies, more happy at comments; very good in his characters, better in his ſermons, beſt of all in his meditations. Nor will it be amiſs to tranſcribe the following paſſage out of his will: "In the name of God, Amen. I Joſeph Hall, D. D. not worthy to be called biſhop of Norwich, &c. Firſt, I bequeath my ſoul, &c.; my body I leave to be interred, without any funeral pomp, at the diſcretion of my executors, with this only monition, that I do not hold God's houſe a meet repoſitory for the dead bodies of the greateſt of Saints [3]."

For his advancement in the church, this meek, humble, and incomparable prelate was indebted to no patronage whatever, but ſuch as his own abilities and virtues procured him. By theſe he was introduced to the notice and protection of Henry prince of Wales [4]—and, after the lamented death of that royal youth, to his unfortunate and injured brother. In ſeveral of the dedications, which (in compliance with the cuſtom of the age) he prefixed to detached portions of his works, he dwells with unaffected gratitude on the favours he received from Charles as well as Henry. In the turbulent times which ſucceeded the murder of his ſovereign, he was expoſed for a ſeries of years to the tyranny of ferocious uſurpers [5]; and died, in an honourable and dignified poverty, at his houſe at Heigham, in the Weſtern ſuburbs of Norwich; where he was buried in the chancel of the pariſh-church [6], privately and without ſolemnity, according to his laſt will. Over his body is a marble, thus inſcribed,

"Induviæ JOSEPHI HALL, olim Norwicenſis ecclefiæ ſervi, repoſitæ 8° die menſis
7^bris, anno 1656, æt. ſuæ 82.
Vale, lector; & Æternitatem reſpice."

On the South wall, over his grave-ſtone, is a mural monument erected to his memory; whereon a golden picture of Death holds in his right hand,

"Debemus Morti nos noſtraque."

In his left hand (as it were with an eccè):

"Perſolvit; & quietus eſt.
Obiit 8 Sept. a° æræ X'tianæ 1656, æt. ſuæ 82."

On the foot of the monument:

"JOSEPHUS HALLUS, olim humilis Eccleſiæ ſervus."

Arms: Azure, three talbots' heads eraſed Argent, langued Gules; at the top a mitre; fig. 33.

His wife was buried by him, with this inſcription:

"Mrs. ELIZ. the deare and virtuous conſort of JOSEPH HALL biſhop of Norwich, with whom ſhe comfortably lived 48 years, changed this mortal life for an eternal,
Aug. 27, 1652, æt. 69.
Farewel, reader; and mind Eternity [7]."

A life of this worthy prelate, in whom the Chriſtian world had long a friend of no common value, is ſtill a deſideratum in Engliſh literature. Among the religious tracts in the Britiſh Muſeum, is a letter of his from the Tower, 1642, juſtifying his former conduct, and throwing light on his whole character. It was extorted from him by a friend, who pretended to be diſſatisfied with him; and I do not remember its occurrence in any liſt of the Biſhop's Works. He prefixed a Commendatory Preface of ſeveral quarto pages to Brinſley's "Ludus Literarius, or the Grammar Schoole," London, 1616, 4to, which he ſigned at the end "Jos. Hall, D^r in Divinity." And his Verſes "To Mr. Joſhua Silveſter, on his Du Bartas metaphraſed," have been reprinted by Mr. Dunſter, in his work on the early reading of Milton, p. 38, as very ſimilar in ſentiment and language to a part of Milton's Vacation Exerciſe, "anno ætatis xix."

Mr. Granger mentions ſeveral portraits of him; particularly one, whilſt biſhop of Exeter, by J. Payne, copied by Marſhall before his "Caſes of Conſcience;" another, the beſt of him (here copied in Plate LXXXIV.) with a book in his hand, mathematical inſtruments, &c. before his "Shaking of the Olive Tree, 1600," 4to; two others, as "Norwici nuper epiſcopus;" and one before his Funeral Sermon, "Joſephus Hall," &c. a book in his hand, and a Miſſal of the Synod of Dort at his breaſt.

His Works, not including his Satires, are contained in five volumes folio and quarto; and his "Contemplations" have been frequently re-publiſhed; but all the ſeparate dedications have been improperly omitted. One of theſe ſhall be given as a ſpecimen:

> "To the right honourable Henry earl of Huntingdon, lord Haſtings, Hungerford, Botreaux, Molines, and Moiles, his majeſty's lieutenant in the counties of Leiceſter and Rutland, my ſingular good lord; all increaſe of true honour, and Heaven begun upon earth.

"Right Honourable; I have undertaken a great taſk, to teach men how to be happy in this life: I have undertaken and performed it; wherein I have followed Seneca, and gone beyond him; followed him as a Philoſopher, gone beyond him as a Chriſtian, ſtyle of architecture. About two years after, he married a daughter of Mr. George Wenyeve, of Brettenham, in this county; and his eldeſt ſon Robert was chriſtened here, Dec. 26, 1605. That year he attended ſir Edmund Bacon to the Spa; and in that journey had an opportunity to inform himſelf, with his own eyes, of the ſtate and practices of the Romiſh church. Upon his return, he found not that ſatisfaction which he expected in this place; his patron ſir Robert Drury refuſing to reſtore to the rectory about ten pounds a year, and inſiſting, as tradition reports, upon his acceptance of a modus for the herbage of the park. By this unjuſt detention, as he called it, the living was not a competent maintenance; and he was forced to write books, in order to buy ſome. He reſolved therefore to embrace the firſt opportunity of quitting this place, which he did in 1608, when lord Denny gave him the donative of Waltham Holy Croſs in Eſſex. I conjecture he did not much reſide here; for, during his time there are not above two years in the regiſter of the ſame hand. While he did reſide, he preached three times a week. Till within a few years, there was (as I am informed by a gentleman who has ſeen it) in the parſonage-houſe a plate of lead, with his motto, "Imum nolo; ſummum nequeo: quieſco;" adopted, I ſuppoſe, when he firſt ſettled here, and expreſſive of a mind not totally unambitious, yet content; and it is probable, if his ſituation here had been comfortable, he would have lived and died in the ſame obſcurity with his predeceſſors and ſucceſſors in this rectory." Cullum's Hawſted, p. 64.

---

[1] See a letter of his, deſcribing what paſſed in that memorable aſſembly, in Fuller's Church Hiſtory, Book X. p. 85.

[2] This eminent Prelate was ſo ſtyled by a wiſe and judicious writer, ſir Henry Wotton; who might have proceeded further. He might have called him the Chryſoſtom of England. See Preface to Biſhop Hall's Contemplations, by G. H. Glaſſe, A. M. &c. &c. 1791.

[3] Fuller's Worthies, Leiceſterſhire, p. 133.

[4] Perhaps there does not exiſt a more affecting compoſition, though much quaintneſs of diction is to be found in it, than his "Farewell Sermon" to the domeſticks of Henry prince of Wales, at the ſeparation of his houſehold.

[5] He has himſelf been the hiſtorian of his own misfortunes, in a work, intituled, "Biſhop Hall's hard Meaſure;" a work which it is impoſſible to read without a degree of honeſt indignation at the meanneſs as well as barbarity of his perſecutors.

[6] Lloyd and others ſay he was buried in the church yard; which miſtake aroſe from the above-noticed clauſe of his will; they ſuppoſing that, according to the monition, his executors had not buried him in the chancel.

[7] Blomefield's Norfolk, vol. II. p. 415; where ſee an account of the Biſhop's ſons, one of whom became biſhop of Cheſter in 1662. See alſo "Ισραὴλ ἀγχιθανὴς: Death's Alarum; or the Preſage of approaching Death. Given in a Funeral Sermon, preached at St. Peter's in Norwich, Sept. 30, 1656, for the Right Reverend Joſeph Hall, D. D. late Lord Biſhop of Norwich; who, upon the 8th day of September, 1656, anno ætatis ſuæ 82, was gathered to the Spirits of the Juſt that are made perfect. By John Whitefoote, M. A. and rector of Heigham near Norwich; 1657," 12mo.

as a Divine. Finding it a true cenſure of the beſt Moraliſts, that they were like to goodly ſhips, graced with great titles, the Save-guard, the Triumph, the Good-ſpeed, and ſuch like, when yet they have been both extremely ſea-beaten, and at laſt wrecked. The volume is little, perhaps the uſe more; I have ever thought acceding to the Greek proverb, μέγα βιβλίον μέγα κακόν. What it is, even juſtice challengeth it to him, to whom the Author hath devoted himſelf. The children of the bondman are the goods of the parent's maſter. I humbly betake it to your Honour's protection, and your Honour to the protection of the Higheſt. Your Honour's moſt humbly devoted in all duty and ſervice, Jos. HALL [1]."

Biſhop Hall's "Occaſional Meditations" and "Balm of Gilead" have more than once been preſented, in various forms, to the publick; and three ſeveral editions of his "Contemplations" have very lately appeared, by no ordinary editor, with many alterations [2]. A miſcellaneous collection from his works has been printed in a ſmall octavo volume; and a beautiful little tract, intituled, "Henochiſmus, ſive Tractatus de modo ambulandi cum Deo, Oxford, 1762," might alone ſerve as a ſpecimen of his genius and piety.

Among his neglected works are two of the earlieſt pieces of genuine ſatire that our nation can boaſt of. His Virgidemiarum, ſix books of Satires, publiſhed 1597: and his Mundus alter et idem, 1643. Of the Virgidemiarum (a performance of which Mr. Pope has in converſation been known to ſay high things [3]) a new edition, with Illuſtrations and Remarks, may be ſhortly expected. Theſe Satires, though written by him at the age of twenty-two, are nervous, witty, and poetical; abounding in the moſt pointed alluſions to the literature and the cuſtoms of the Elizabethan age, and containing many imitations from the Satyriſts of Antiquity. One of the laſt of theſe from the firſt Satire ſhall be here exemplified; where the author compliments Surry, Wyat, Dyer, Spenſer, and perhaps the inimitable Shakſpeare, on whom Fancy had already beſtowed her varying pencil [4].

"Trumpets, and reeds, and ſocks, and buſkins fine,
I them bequeath; whoſe ſtatues wand'ring twine
Of Ivy mix'd with bays, circlen around," &c.

Evidently from the Prologue to Perſius's Satires.

"Heliconidaſque pallidamque Pyrenen
Illis remitto, quorum imagines lambunt
Hederæ ſequaces."

Theſe Satires, with the Mundus alter et idem, were attacked by the celebrated Milton, in his Apology for the Smectymnuans, in a manner which plainly evinces how much the candour of the critic was leavened by the acrimony of the Puritan. The latter he unjuſtly termed but a wretched pilgrimage over Minſhew's Dictionary.—The Mundus alter et idem is a work, if poſſible, leſs known than the Satires. The plan, perhaps, originated with ſir Thomas More's Utopia; except that, as ſir Thomas had ſhewn what the world ſhould be, biſhop Hall, under a pretended deſcription of the Terra Auſtralis, tore aſide the veil, and in a vein of forceful ſatire exhibited the reigning follies and the vices of mankind. In the Virgidemiarum, biſhop Hall's talent for Engliſh poetry appears to great advantage; nor did he write Latin verſe with leſs facility; though I am ſorry to add, the only ſpecimen of it remaining, if we except ſix lines prefixed to his Engliſh Satires, is to be found in a Collection of Funereal Verſes, entitled, "Album ſeu nigrum amicorum in obitum Horat. Palavicini," Lond. 1600, 4to.

The firſt of them is ſigned J. Hall, Imman.

"In obitum viri ampliſſimi Domini Horatii Pallavicini Equitis, Epitaphium.

Utra mihi patria eſt, utra eſt peregrina viator?
Itala terra tulit, terra Britanna tegit.
Natus ibi, hic vixi, moriorque ineunte ſenectâ,
Illa mihi cunas contulit, hæc tumulum.
Deſerui Latium vivus, meque illa reliquit
Quodque ortu meruit, perdidit exilio.
Hoſpitio excepit, fovitque Britannia longo,
Jure ſit illa ſuo patria ſola mihi,
Non tamen illa mihi patria eſt, non ulla ſub aſtris
Sed teneo ætherei regna ſuprema Poli."

Thoroughly to underſtand the alluſions of the epitaph, the reader is to underſtand that ſir Horatio Pallavicini was born at Genoa; and, leaving Italy, reſided in the Low Countries; and, after the death of his father, came and ſettled in England. Queen Mary appointed him receiver of the papal taxes in this kingdom; and at her death, having a conſiderable ſum of money in his hands, he abjured the religion of Rome, and retained the treaſure. Queen Elizabeth, diſtinguiſhing his talents, gave him a patent of denization, and other marks of her favour; and he accumulated wealth [5], and was employed in her ſervice. He died in 1600, and his widow re-married ſir Oliver Cromwell, K. B. [6]

At the firſt publication of our author's Satires they were attacked by Marſton (a rival ſatyriſt, a player, and a playwright, the friend of Shakeſpeare and Ben Jonſon) in a ſtyle ſcarcely inferior to our author's own. In an attack like this, it would hardly be expected that the aſſailant would purloin from the very author he was criticizing; but ſuch was the caſe with Marſton, who frequently not only copies Hall's thought, but the very ſimile by which it was illuſtrated; his alluſions to antient hiſtory are continually the ſame with Hall's; but his uſe of it is far leſs philoſophical. The characters he has painted are deſtitute of thoſe ſtriking lineaments which diſtinguiſh the portraits of Hall; his ſentiments are of a looſer turn; and his ſatires, generally ſpeaking, leſs poetical.

Another imitator of theſe Satires was Oldham, who has, however, worked too artfully on Hall's materials to be termed a copyiſt. His imitations too diſplay the power of his genius; for he has dilated Hall's ideas, without detracting from their force.

We have dwelt on the Satires of this illuſtrious Prelate, becauſe, though re-edited in 1753 by Mr. Horne, afterwards biſhop of Norwich, they are ſtill neglected. They will perhaps prove, that in conſidering him as one of the fathers of Engliſh Poetry, we rate him not too highly. He was not only the firſt who wrote legitimate Satire, but was the firſt who made a true uſe of the writings of the Antients. He ſummoned the faculties of his mind to exert themſelves to great and uſeful purpoſes. And that his faculties thus exerted had ſome effect on the prevailing taſte may be gathered from the attacks his work ſuſtained.

JOHN BAINBRIDGE, ſon of Robert Bainbridge by Alice his wife, daughter of Richard Everard, of Shenton, was born at Aſhby de la Zouch in 1582. He received the firſt rudiments of his education at the grammar-ſchool of his native town; whence he was tranſplanted to Emanuel College, Cambridge, under the tuition of his kinſman Dr. Joſeph Hall, afterwards biſhop of Norwich. When he had taken the degrees of B. A. and M. A. he returned into Leiceſterſhire, where he taught a grammar-ſchool for ſome years, and at the ſame time practiſed phyſic. He employed his leiſure-time in the ſtudy of the mathematics, eſpecially aſtronomy, which had been his favourite purſuit from his earlieſt years. By the advice of his friends, who thought his abilities too great for the obſcurity of a country life, he removed to London, where he was admitted a fellow of the college of Phyſicians. His deſcription of the Comet which appeared in 1618, greatly raiſed his character, and by this means he became acquainted with the right worthy ſir Henry Savile, knight, warden of Merton College, Oxford; who, in 1619, appointed him his firſt profeſſor of Aſtronomy at that Univerſity, where he was incorporated M. D. as he ſtood at Cambridge; and was entered a maſter commoner of Merton college, the maſter and fellows whereof appointed him junior reader of Linacre's lecture 1631, and ſuperior reader 1635.

---

[1] Dedication to "Heaven upon Earth; or, of true Peace and Tranquillity of Mind; 1627."

[2] Candour itſelf muſt allow that ſome paſſages, in their original form, were tinctured too ſtrongly with the principles of Calviniſm, and others almoſt unintelligible. To ſoften the one, and throw a light on the other, was the object of Mr. Glaſſe. See Gent. Mag. vol. LXII. p. 1094; vol. LXIX. pp. 290. 388. 678.—Mr. Bridges, in the new edition of the "Theatrum Poetarum" by Phillips, mentions an edition of the Contemplations lately publiſhed in Scotland. They were likewiſe edited by Dr. Dodd, in two volumes duodecimo, who inſerted in the margin explanations of many obſolete words.

[3] We are told by Dr. Johnſon, that "when in Pope's laſt years Hall's Satires were ſhewn him, he wiſhed that he had ſeen them ſooner."

[4] See Gray.

[5] Among the New-year's gifts preſented to queen Elizabeth, 1588-9, is "a bodkin of ſilver gilt, having a pendant jewel of gold, like a ſhip, garniſhed with opals, ſparks of diamonds, and three ſmall pearls pendant, given by ſir Oratio Paulavizino;" who received in return 23½ ounces of gilt plate.—In 1593-4, alſo he gave a pair of writing tables, covered with gold, enameled on both ſides with a falcon and a ſceptre; garniſhed with ſmall ſparks of rubies like roſes; and the lady Paulavizino gave a comfit box of gold, enameled like a roſe, the one ſide ſet with ſmall diamonds and rubies. In return, ſir Horatio had 25¾ ounces of gilt plate, and his lady 18¾ ounces.

[6] See Noble's Memoirs of the Cromwells.

Doctor Pope, in his life of Biſhop Ward, c. 3. tells us a ſtory, which was in many ſcholars' mouths when he was firſt admitted at Oxford; that he put upon the ſchool-gate an affiche, or written paper, as the cuſtom is, giving notice at what time, and on what ſubject, the profeſſor will read; which ended in theſe words, lecturus de polis & axis, under which was written by an unknown hand:

"Doctor Bainbridge
Came from Cambridge,
To read de Polis & Axis.
Let him go back again,
Like a dunce as he came [1],
To learn a new Syntaxis."

This finding a place in ſome jeſt-book, provoked Dr. Smith to defend the Profeſſor; forgetting that it was only a pleaſant banter upon a miſtake, which he, or one of his ſcribes, or the beadle, might have committed through haſte and inadvertency [2].

As Dr. Bainbridge reſolved to publiſh correct editions of the antient aſtronomers, agreeably to the ſtatutes of the founder of his profeſſorſhip; in order to make himſelf acquainted with the Arabian aſtronomers, he began the ſtudy of the Arabic language when he was more than 40 years old. Some time before his death, he removed to a houſe oppoſite Merton college, where he died, Nov. 3, 1643, in his 62d year. His body was conveyed to the public ſchools, where an oration was pronounced in his praiſe by the Univerſity orator; and was carried thence to the church of Merton college, where, in the choir, againſt the North-wall, near the altar, a grave-ſtone of black marble, inlaid with white, is thus inſcribed:

"Si cupias, viator, quis et quantus hic jacet, alibi quæras oportet: dicere ſatis nequeo;
Britannia tota viri famam non capit;
ne cætera tamen ignores, in rem tuam pauca hæc accipe.
Joannes Bainbridgius,
vir famæ integerrimæ, et do[illegible]comparabilis;
medicinæ profeſſor [illegible]eſeos,
morborum tam felix expugnator novorum,
quam ſagax indagator ſyderum;
quem primum Aſtronomiæ profeſſorem et dignum Savilio collegam, in mathematicis prælecturis quas magnificè erexerat prudens hominum et librorum æſtimator elegit Savilius;
quem Cantabrigiæ educatum
Academia Oxonienſis benignè fovit ut ſuum, defunctum publicè deflevit ut par utriuſque ornamentum, qui Scaligerum felicius correxit, quam Scaliger emendavit tempora.
In non levem literarum jacturam immaturus obiit.
MDCXLIII.
Abi jam, cætera quære vel ab exteris [3]."

Over this tomb is a globe betwixt two quadrants, on each of them a rule with a pair of compaſſes. His arms are upon a ſquare piece of marble; Argent, a chevron crenelle between three poleaxes Sable; the creſt, two poleaxes in ſaltire; fig. 34. Above it, on each ſide, ſundry mathematical figures and inſtruments.

Dr. Bainbridge left ſeveral works, many of which were never publiſhed. The three following were all that were uſhered into the world:

1. "An Aſtronomical Deſcription of the late Comet, from the 18th of November, 1618, to the 16th of December following. London, 1619." 4to. This piece was a ſpecimen only of a large work, which the author intended to publiſh in Latin, under the title of "Cometographia [4]."

2. "Procli Sphæra Ptolomæi de Hypotheſibus Planetarum liber ſingularis." To which he added Ptolomey's "Cauſa Regnorum." He collated theſe pieces with antient manuſcripts; and has given a Latin verſion of them, illuſtrated with figures; printed in 1620, 4to.

3. "Canicularis: a Treatiſe concerning the Dog-ſtar and the Canicular Days." Publiſhed at Oxford in 1648, by Mr. Greaves; together with a "Demonſtration of the heliacal Riſing of Sirius, or the Dog-ſtar, for the Parallel of Lower Egypt." Dr. Bainbridge undertook this work at the requeſt of Archbiſhop Uſher; but left it imperfect, being prevented by the civil war or death [5].

There were ſeveral diſſertations prepared for and committed to the preſs the year after his death; but the editions of them were never completed. The titles of them are as follows:

1. "Antiprognoſticon; in quo Μαντικης Aſtrologiæ, cœleſtium Domorum, & Triplicitatum Commentis, magniſque Saturni & Jovis (cujuſmodi anno 1623 & 1643, contigerunt, & viceſimo ferè quoque deinceps anno, ratis Naturæ Legibus recurrant) Conjunctionibus innixæ, Vanitas breviter detegitur."

2. "De Meridianorum ſive Longitudinum Differentiis inveniendis Diſſertatio."

3. "De Stellâ Veneris Diatriba."

There were alſo ſome celeſtial obſervations of his, which may be ſeen in Iſmael Bullialdus's "Aſtronomia Philolaïca," publiſhed at Paris in 1645. Beſides thoſe we have mentioned, there are ſeveral other tracts, which were never publiſhed, but left by his will to Archbiſhop Uſher. Among others are the following: 1. "A Theory of the Sun." 2. "A Theory of the Moon." 3. "A Diſcourſe concerning the Quantity of the Year." 4. Two volumes of "Aſtronomical Obſervations." 5. Nine or ten volumes of miſcellaneous papers on different branches of the Mathematics. He undertook alſo "A Deſcription of the Britiſh Monarchy, in order to ſhew the Advantages of the Union of England and Scotland under one Monarch;" but this treatiſe was either loſt or ſuppreſſed by the author [6].

The following lines are in "Camdeni Inſignia," 1624:

"Fortunate ſenex, cui tota Britannia laudes
Concinet æternas, & monumenta ſtruet.
Quemque ſuum condum, promum, magnumque patronum
Hiſtoria agnoſcet docta per ora virûm.
Donec erit (quæ ſemper erit) noſtra Inſula, donec
Oxonii colles ſacra Minerva colet:
Nomen erit, Camdene, tuum, claruſque manebis,
Et tu Savili fulgida Stella poli.
J. Bainbridge, Med. D. Aſtronomiæ
Profeſſor Savilianus."

---

[1] Or, as ſome gave it, "Doctor Bainbrigge, go back to Cambridge."

[2] Biographia Britannica, art. Bainbridge. A modern academic anecdote è converſo, with reſpect to the introduction of the word "paginibus" into a celebrated preface, will perhaps occur to the recollection of ſome of our readers.

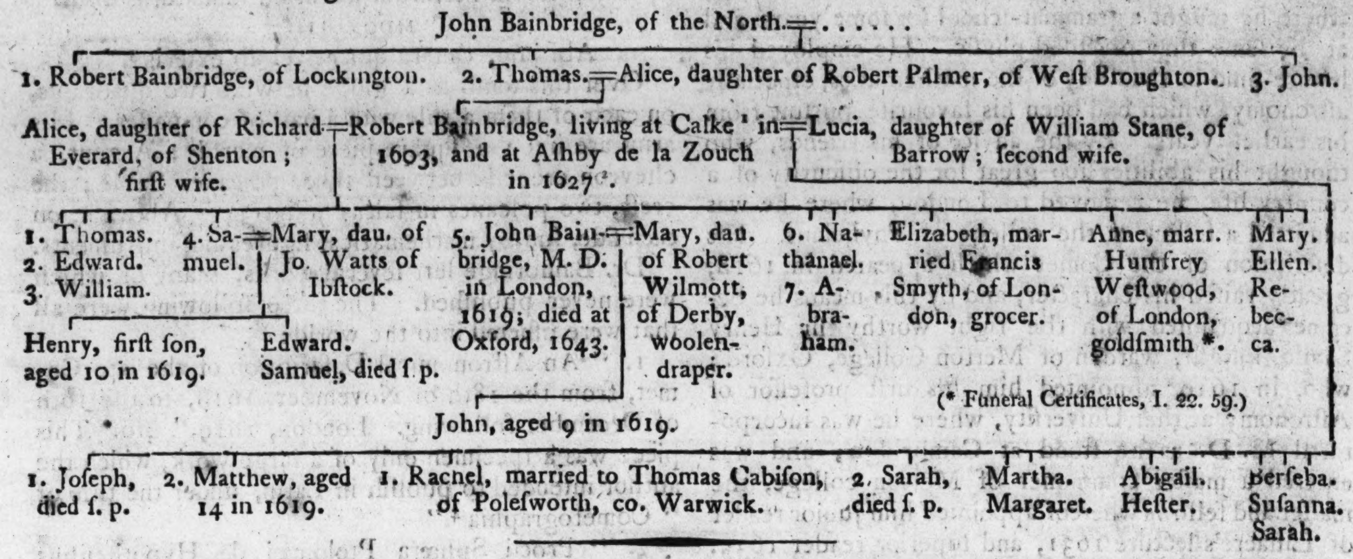
[3] This epitaph is ſaid to have been compoſed by John Greaves, M. A. fellow of this college, and his immediate ſucceſſor in the profeſſorſhip. (Rawlinſon's MS. Bodl. Lib.) Dr. Smith (Comment. de vit. et ſtud. J. B. p. 13, apud Vit. quorund. erudit. et illuſtr. viror. Lond. 1708, 4to.) tells us he is not certain it was written by Mr. Greaves, though many aſſert it was; and that he had tranſcribed the following epitaph from a manuſcript of that gentleman's: "Quod ſupereſt clariſſimi viri D. Johannis Bainbridge, in academiâ Oxonienſi publici Aſtronomiæ profeſſoris, ſub hoc marmore clauditur. Quod vero amavimus, quod ſuſpeximus, quod mœſti deſideramus, fruſtra hic quæras: illud cœlo, cui vivus animo cogitationeque incubuit, receptum eſt. Obiit A. D. CIↃ. IↃↃ. XLIII. 9bris III. ætatis ſuæ LXII. horâ ſextâ matutinâ."

[4] Thomas Smith, Comment. p. 5.

[5] Ibid. p. 14.

[6] Biographia Britannica, art. Bainbridge.

Pedigree of BAINBRIDGE, of Aſhby de la Zouch.



John Bainbridge, of the North.=.....
1. Robert Bainbridge, of Lockington.
2. Thomas.=Alice, daughter of Robert Palmer, of Weſt Broughton.
3. John.
Alice, daughter of Richard Everard, of Shenton; firſt wife.
=Robert Bainbridge, living at Calke[1] in 1603, and at Aſhby de la Zouch in 1627[2].
=Lucia, daughter of William Stane, of Barrow; ſecond wife.
1. Thomas.
2. Edward.
3. William.
4. Samuel.=Mary, dau. of Jo. Watts of Ibſtock.
5. John Bainbridge, M.D. in London, 1619; died at Oxford, 1643.=Mary, dau. of Robert Wilmott, of Derby, woolen-draper.
6. Nathanael.
7. Abraham.
Elizabeth, married Francis Smyth, of London, grocer.
Anne, marr. Humfrey Weſtwood, of London, goldſmith *.
Mary.
Ellen.
Rebecca.
Henry, firſt ſon, aged 10 in 1619.
Edward.
Samuel, died ſ. p.
John, aged 9 in 1619.
(* Funeral Certificates, I. 22. 59.)
1. Joſeph, died ſ. p.
2. Matthew, aged 14 in 1619.
1. Rachel, married to Thomas Cabiſon, of Poleſworth, co. Warwick.
2. Sarah, died ſ. p.
Martha.
Margaret.
Abigail.
Heſter.
Berſeba.
Suſanna.
Sarah.

Among the Divines alluded to in p. 611, were Richard Clerke, rector of Aſton upon Trent, co. Derby, who retired thither[3] with his worthy friend ſir John Harpur, of Swarkſton, knight; and Nicholas Bent, ſequeſtered rector of Braybrook, co. Northampton, another of the king's garriſons, who died in Aſhby caſtle[4].

THOMAS KIRKLAND, M.D. honorary member of the Medical Society of Edinburgh, died, at Aſhby de la Zouch, Jan. 17, 1798, at the age of 77, after about two months' illneſs, during which there appeared, at times, flattering hopes of convaleſcence; but, being worn out, he departed, having endured his laſt ſufferings with the patience and fortitude of a Chriſtian and philoſopher. His funeral was obſerved, on the 22d, with the reſpect due to his merit. The corpſe was preceded by three of the elder clergymen; and, after them, his friend and colleague, Thomas Fiſher, eſq. of Caſtle Donington, James Richards, eſq. with ſix other gentlemen and tradeſmen in Aſhby de la Zouch, who for many years had been in habits of intimacy with him. The pall was borne by ſix clergymen in their robes, long the friends of the Doctor. The corpſe was followed by his only ſurviving ſiſter, his ſons, daughters, grand-children, and other branches of the family. The ſcene was ſolemn, and the utmoſt decorum was obſerved while the ſervice was read, though a great concourſe of people attended. His memory will be for ever held in eſtimation by a very numerous ſet of relations and friends, who can never forget his general hoſpitality, diſintereſtedneſs, and benevolence. His whole life had been employed in the moſt unremitting attention to the ſtudy and practice of the duties of his profeſſion; and his genius ſhone moſt conſpicuouſly in the ſcience and practice of the various parts of Medical-ſurgery, wherein he had few equals, none ſuperior. His different publications, on many of the moſt material branches of the ſcience, of the moſt melancholy and dangerous tendency to the patient, and the unrivaled practical ſucceſs of his doctrines in every part of the country, have immortalized his fame, and render every attempt at eulogium unneceſſary and vain.

His publications were, 1. "A Treatiſe on Gangrenes, in which the Caſes that require the Uſe of the Bark, and thoſe in which it is pernicious (unleſs joined with proper correctives), are aſcertained; and the Objections to its Efficacy in the Cure of Gangrenes conſidered; 1754;" 8vo. 2. "An Eſſay on the Methods of ſuppreſſing Hæmorrhage from divided Arteries, 1763," 8vo. 3. "An Eſſay towards an Improvement in the Cure of thoſe Diſeaſes which are the Cauſes of Fevers, 1767," 8vo. 4. "A Reply to Mr. Maxwell's Anſwer to Mr. Kirkland's Eſſay on Fevers, wherein the Utility of the Practice of ſuppreſſing them is farther exemplified, vindicated, and enforced; 1769;" 8vo. 5. "Obſervations upon Mr. Pott's General Remarks on Fractures, &c. 1770," 8vo. 6. "Appendix to the Obſervations upon Mr. Pott's General Remarks on Fractures, 1771," 8vo. 7. "A Treatiſe on Childbed Fevers, and on the Method of preventing them, &c.; 1774;" 8vo. 8. "Animadverſions on a late Treatiſe on the Kink Cough, 1774," 8vo. 9. "Thoughts on Amputation; being a Supplement to the Letters on Compound Fractures, and a Comment on Dr. Bilguer's Book on this Operation; to which is added, a ſhort Eſſay on the Uſe of Opium in Mortification, &c.; 1780;" 8vo. 10. "An Inquiry into the preſent State of Medical Surgery; including the Analogy betwixt external and internal Diſorders, and the Inſeparability of theſe Branches of the ſame Profeſſion;" vol. I. 1783, 8vo; vol. II. 1786, 8vo. It is hoped that a third volume of this work, which he had nearly, if not wholly, finiſhed before his laſt illneſs, will be given to the world by ſome of his ſucceſſors in the profeſſion, the publick having teſtified their approbation and high opinion of the former parts, in the ſcience and practice they treat of. 11. "A Commentary on Apoplectic and Paralytic Affections, and on the Diſeaſes connected with the Subject; 1794;" 8vo. 12. "Obſervations on the Uſe of Sponge after Amputations[5]." 13. "Obſervations on the Uſe and Abuſe of Mercury in the Cure of the Syphilis; in a Letter to Samuel-Foart Simmons, M. D. F. R. S."[6]

The following tribute to his memory may for the preſent ſupply the place of an epitaph:

"Accept, reſpected and lamented Shade,
Theſe artleſs lines, yet fraught with love for thee,
While Mem'ry holds her ſeat in this frail frame.
What, tho' thy healing power (which oft has ſnatch'd
A father, mother, or relation dear,
From dreaded diſſolution;—and which oft
The fever raging with increaſing heat
Timely aſſuag'd) is now no more; yet ſtill
Thy worth, dear man! remains freſh in the breaſt
Of ev'ry feeling and afflicted ſoul:
But far more in the minds of thoſe to whom
Thy bounteous care extended: they, indeed,
Inſpir'd by gratitude, and pleaſing thought
Of thy good deeds, will gladly ſpeak thy praiſe.
Long didſt thou ſhine 'midſt thy contemporaries
With juſt and envy'd glory; till, at laſt,
Stern Death, ſure end of all the human race,
Remov'd thee hence, and ſent thee to receive
The bleſſings of a Merciful Redeemer!"

---

[1] See before, p. 590.
[2] He was taxed in a ſubſidy that year, after the rate of £4. for perſonals.

[3] This was the occaſion of Mr. Clerke's being deprived of the above-mentioned rectory (to which he had been inducted about the beginning of the year 1637), by an order dated July 11, 1644. He lived, however, to be reſtored to his church; and died lamented in 1686, in a very advanced age, having held his preferment nearly 50 years.

[4] Mr. Bent, who became rector of Braybrook in 1620, died at Aſhby about the 23d of Auguſt 1644; when an ordinance was paſſed by the Houſe of Commons in favour of Jonas Ury, M. A. then in poſſeſſion of the rectory by ſequeſtration; ſir Edward Griffin, the patron, being in arms againſt the Parliament, and the livings of delinquents being declared to be in the ſequeſtration of the two Houſes. Sept. 6, it was ordered by the Commons, the ſaid Nicholas Bent being lately dead at the garriſon of Aſhby de la Zouch, ſequeſtered for his great unworthineſs, that their ordinance ſhould be the preſentation of Ury. Sept. 24, the ordinance paſſed both Houſes; but, June 9, 1646, came down another ordinance for Thomas Hill, Mr. Ury being then either dead or removed. (Journals of the Commons, vol. III. pp. 603. 619. 638; vol. V. p. 47; of the Lords. vol. VI. p. 706.)—The Regiſters of Aſhby having been obligingly and carefully examined for me by Mr. Prior from 1640 to 1652, I am able to ſtate, that Mr. Bent's name does not occur there; but among the burials in 1643 are, "A criſom child of Mr. Bent's, Oct. 5;" and "William Bent, gent. buried Nov. 5."

[5] Medical Obſervations and Inquiries, vol. II.

[6] London Medical Journal, vol. VII.

ALTON, or HALTON GRANGE, formerly belonging to Garendon abbey, is an extra-parochial lordſhip, ſituate within the precincts of Aſhby de la Zouch.

Roger de Croft gave to the abbey of Garendon two yard-lands, and paſturage for 300 ſheep and their lambs, in Alton[1].

In 1313, Ralph Baſſet of Sapcote held the twelfth part of one knight's fee in Alton and Ravenſton, of Alan la Zouch, deceaſed[2].

In 1326, William de Bereford died ſeiſed of 51*s.* rent, ariſing out of certain free tenements in Alton, held of William la Zouch by the ſervice of 3*s.* 4*d.* a year[3].

In 1328, ſir Robert Holand died ſeiſed, in the right and inheritance of Maud his wife, of a twelfth part of a knight's fee, with the appurtenances, in Raunſton and Alton, value 20*s.* which Ralph Sapcote held[4].

In 1346, the abbot of Garendon (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 2*s.* for a twentieth part of one knight's fee in Alton and Aſhby de la Zouch, parcel of the honour of Winton[5].

A leaſe of Alton Grange was granted in 1534, by the abbot and convent of Garendon, to George earl of Huntingdon, for the term of 60 years, at the rent of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*[6]

On the diſſolution of religious houſes, Thomas Manners earl of Rutland obtained a grant of this manor, or grange, as parcel of the abbey of Garendon; and in 1541 conveyed it to Henry Digby, of Tickencote, co. Rutland, gent.; from whom it paſſed to ſir Richard Manners[7], of Gracedieu, younger brother to earl Thomas; who about 1549 ſold it to Francis earl of Huntingdon.

In 1554, a writ of enquiry was iſſued, for Francis earl of Huntingdon to ſhew cauſe why the manor of Alton ſhould not be ſeized into the hands of the king and queen, having been alienated without licence[8].

Sept. 22, 1597, Henry earl of Huntingdon died ſeiſed of the grange called Alton Grange, held of the queen in capite by the ſervice of 100th part of a knight's fee[9].

This Grange, which contains about 400 acres, conſiſts at preſent of two farms; one belonging to Mr. William Fowler, who occupies it himſelf; the other to Mr. Burſlem, who lets it to Mr. Hatchett.

---

[1] MS. Burton; è Reg. Abb. de Garendon.

[2] Eſch. 9 Edw. II. N° 36. Leic.

[3] Eſch. 20 Edw. II. N° 45. Leic.

[4] Eſch. 2 Edw. III. N° 54. Leic.

[5] Rot. Aux. 20 Edw. III.

[6] Miniſters Accompts, 31 Hen. VIII. in the Augmentation Office.

[7] Whoſe lady was buried, at the end of the high altar, in Chriſt church, London, Feb. 16, 1550; and his heart in Croxton Abbey. See before, under Belvoir, vol. II. p. 45.

[8] Paſch. Rec. 1 & 2 Phil. & Mar. Rot. 1.

[9] Eſch. 22 Sept. 39 Eliz.

Pedigree of PERIN, of Ashby de la Zouch.

Arms: Argent, on a chevron Sable between three pine-apples Vert, three leopards' faces Argent; Plate LXXVI. fig. 35.

Gilbert Perin, of Shropſhire. = Elizabeth, daughter of Scrimſhawe, of Shropſhire.

Thomas Perin, of Aſhby de la Zouch. = Katharine, daughter of Thomas Parrett, of Aſhby de la Zouch.

Thomas Perin, of Aſhby, aged 34, 1629. = Anne, daughter of Ralph Potter, of Lichfield.

Thomas Perin, aged 19.
1. Katharine, aged 8.
2. Elizabeth, aged 6.
3. Sarah, aged 3.
4. Mary, aged 3 months.

BLACKFORDBY

is a hamlet of Aſhby, bounded from Smitheſby by a part of the Woulds. It maintains its own poor; pays a ſixth part to the church rate, and a fourth to the conſtable's diſburſements.

In 1270, Roger de Quinci earl of Winton died ſeiſed of four knights fees in Eſſeby, Blackfordby, Culwardby, Overton, Glen, Carleton, and Rolleſton, (value £20. each,) which Alan la Zouch held. Eleanor de Vaus, relict of the ſaid Roger earl of Winton, held the ſaid four knights fees in dower; and Roger la Zouch held the ſame under her and the heirs of the ſaid earl[1].

In 1313, the abbot of Lilleſhull held half a knight's fee in Blackfordby of Alan la Zouch, deceaſed[2].

In 1328, ſir Robert Holland died ſeiſed, as of the right and inheritance of Maud his wife, one of the daughters and coheirs of Alan la Zouch of Aſhby, of the moiety of a knight's fee, with the appurtenances, in Blackfordby, (value 40*s.*) which the abbot of Lilleſhull held; alſo the twelfth part of another knight's fee (value 100*s.*) which William Truan held[3].

In 1346, the abbot of Lilleſhull (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 8*s.* for a fifth part of a knight's fee in Blackfordby and Aſhby de la Zouch, parcel of the honour of Winton[4].

As a member of Aſhby de la Zouch, this hamlet became the property of William lord Haſtings; whoſe immediate deſcendant, the preſent earl of Moira, has moſt of the ſurrounding property, and is the preſent lord of the manor.

Mr. John Joyce, who owned an eſtate at Blackfordby, very pleaſantly ſituated on an eminence, well-wooded, and excellent land both for tillage, ſheep, and dairy, died more than 20 years ſince, leaving four ſons, William, Nicholas, John, and Henry. The eldeſt, William, an attorney, died a few years after his father; when the eſtate came to Nicholas, the preſent poſſeſſor, who now lives at Billeſdon, and was an apothecary there. John, the third ſon, who was likewiſe an apothecary at Coleſhill, on the death of William, relinquiſhing buſineſs, came to reſide at Blackfordby, and farmed the eſtate, which he rented of his elder brother Nicholas. This John died very lately, and has left a family, among whom is a ſon, alſo named John. Henry, the fourth brother, lives unmarried at Aſhby.

Almoſt a mile North-weſt from the church, upon the turnpike-road which leads from Burton to Aſhby, and is a boundary both to this pariſh and the counties of Derby and Leiceſter, ſtands a neat commodious houſe, called The Butt-houſe, which was purchaſed, about 20 years ſince, by the Rev. Mr. Aſtley, who retired hither from the laborious office (which he had long filled with credit) of head-maſter of the free ſchool at Repton in Derbyſhire. He added the preſent wing to this houſe, but did not live many years to enjoy his retirement; and was buried in the neighbouring church of Hartſhorn, of which he was the rector. After his death the Butt-houſe devolved to one of his ſiſters, wife of John Cave Browne, eſq. of Stretton le Field, and was afterwards ſold to Mr. Leech; who built the new garden-walls, and made other improvements. He has ſince ſold it to John Simmonds, eſq. whoſe taſte and generous diſpoſition do ample juſtice to the bold proſpects this ſituation affords, by a moſt excellent collection of Dollond's teleſcopes, and other optical and philoſophical inſtruments.

To the North the rugged features of the Peak are very diſtinguiſhable from hence; and to the Weſt, Cank foreſt, and the greateſt part of Staffordſhire, &c.

---

[1] Eſch. 55 Hen. III. N° 36. Leic.

[2] Eſch. 7 Edw. II. N° 36. Leic.

[3] Eſch. 2 Edw. III. N° 54. Leic.

[4] Rot. Aux. 20 Edw. III.

The CHAPEL (ſee Plate LXXXV.)

is ſmall, and very antient, though it contains nothing curious, either of Saxon or Gothic work. It conſiſts of a nave and chancel, and has three lancet-windows; but the roof, being open to the top, gives it the appearance of a barn rather than a place of worſhip.

There is a good female head crowned, and ſome trifling relicks of painted glaſs, in the Eaſt window.

At the Weſt end is an old round font of ſtone, and two bells; and near the pulpit a ſtand for an hour-glaſs.

A very fine ſpring of water iſſues from a rock beneath ſome large trees by the road-ſide, a little below the church. This water, it has been obſerved, is never frozen in the hardeſt winter, neither in the large reſervoir which receives it from the rock, nor in the broad ſtream which runs thence down the village-road.

Divine ſervice at Blackfordby is only performed once a fortnight, by the vicar of Aſhby; to which church it is a very ſmall appendage.

On a tablet of wood againſt the North wall is an account of the money left for the poor of Blackfordby:

	£.	s.	d.
William Joyce	5	0	0
Henry Cantrel	0	10	0
Thomas Cherribough	1	0	0
Richard Mugleſton	0	10	0
William Elliot	1	0	0
William Aldridge	2	0	0
Mary Lindford	0	5	0

To be paid yearly to the widows upon May-day.
William Mugleſton churchwarden, 1776.”

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

Againſt the South wall of the chancel is a ſmall mural marble, thus inſcribed:

“Sacred to the memory of Edward Newcomen, and Ann his wife, whoſe remains are depoſited in the chapel-yard near this place.
They were Chriſtians without guile;
ſincere in faith and practice.
He died June 28, 1722, aged 70;
ſhe April 10, 1727, aged 63;
——— All muſt to their cold graves;
But the religious actions of the juſt
Smell ſweet in death, and bloſſom in the duſt.
Mary, wife of Humphry Jackſon[1], clerk, their only ſurviving daughter, from a dutiful regard to her truly Chriſtian and tender parents, erected this ſmall piece of marble.”

In the chapel-yard, at the Eaſt-end of the chapel, is an old altar tomb of ſtone, for William Joyce, gent. who died 1706, aged 51; and Sarah his wife, who died 1731, aged 67. There are ſeveral headſtones for their deſcendants (ſee p. 633); who have long inhabited the houſe oppoſite.

A flat ſtone for John Chamberlaine, who died Oct. 25, 1702, aged 76; and Katharine his relict who died Feb. 4, 1716, aged 67.

Pedigree of CUTLER, of BLACKFORDBY.

Arthur Cutler, of Blackfordby = Margaret, daughter of Henry Herne.

1. Henry Cutler, ſon and heir, 1629. = Iſcah, daughter of George Fiſh. | 2. George Cutler, died ſ. p. | 1. Elizabeth, died ſ. p. | 2. Margaret, married to John Draycott, of Loſco, co. Derby.

1. George Cutler, ſon and heir, born Aug. 2, 1600. | 2. John, b. March 25, 1605. = Theodoſia Rud, of Northamptonſhire. | 3. James, born 22 Sept. | 4. Timothy, born May 4, 1616. | 1. Mary. | 2. Elizabeth, born March 2, 1608. | 3. Anne, born Dec. 3, 1614. | 4. Judith, born 1619.

1. Henry Cutler, heir, aged 19 and upwards, 1619. | 2. John. | 3. Richard. | 4. James. | 1. Mary. | 2. Jane. | 3. Iſcah.

BOOTHORPE,

antiently called Bertrod and Baxthorp, a ſmall hamlet, containing about 143 acres, adjoins to Blackfordby on the Weſt, and conſiſts of about ſix dwellings. It is principally within the pariſh of Aſhby, but a ſmall part of it belongs to Seile.

In the reign of king Edward the Confeſſor, Bertrod, conſiſting of one ploughland, was valued at eight-pence; but at the general ſurvey was worth four ſhillings, and was then held by Robert under Henry de Feriers. One villan had one plough there[2].

In the Teſta de Nevill, compiled about 1240, half a ploughland is mentioned in Boothorpe and Wodeſcote[3].

In 1347 the prior of Griſeley paid 2*s*. for the 20th part of a knight's fee in Baxthorp[4].

The earl of Moira is the preſent lord of the manor; and the principal land-owners are William Hill, eſq. Mr. Nicholas Joyce, and Mr. Toone.

WOODCOTE, antiently called Wodecote and Wodeſcote, a village ſometime in the pariſh of Aſhby de la Zouch, not far from Smitheſby, is noticed in the Teſta de Nevill about 1240; but is now ruinated and clean gone, no memory of it being left, except in the giving name to eight antient incloſures, ſtill called Woodcote cloſes, containing about 53 acres (in ſome of which the village probably ſtood), and to an antient road from the town of Aſhby, which paſſes along the lane on one ſide of them, now corruptly called Woodcock-lane.

“It is laid out,” ſays Mr. Burton, “by an old roll of all the churches in this ſhire (which I have ſeen and copied) made about the 18th year of king Edward III. (1344) that then it had a chapel within it[5].

“In 7 Hen. V. (1419) this was a village, as appeareth by deeds which I have ſeen. It is of the fee of the Dutchy of Lancaſter; and is now (1641) the inheritance of Henry earl of Huntingdon[6].”

In a rent-roll of the manor of Aſhby de la Zouch, for the 8th year of Edward IV. (1468), it appears that a ſuit-fine of twenty ſhillings per annum was then paid to the dutchy of Lancaſter, as iſſuing from the paſtures of Woodcote field, held of the honour of Tutbury; and that ten ſhillings per annum was paid to the abbey of Lilleſhull, in right of the rectory of Aſhby, for tithes of the paſtures of Wodecote field[7].

---

[1] He was an eminent maſter of the free ſchool at Burton upon Trent, and ſhe likewiſe remarkable for her erudition, &c.

[2] “Robertus tenet de H[enrico de Ferieros] 1 carucatam terræ in Bertrod. Ibi unus villanus habet unam carucam. Valuit 3 denarii, modò 4 ſolidos.” Domeſday, fol. 233. b. 1.

[3] Vol. I. p. lxv.

[4] Rot. Aux 20 Edw. III.

[5] Vol. I. p. lxv.

[6] Burton, MS.

[7] Communicated by Mr. Dawſon, from the original roll.

Hand writing of MARY Queen of SCOTS. Vol. III. Pl. LXXXV. p. 634.

Mester Ceciles legrute dont vous aunes le nom desb're amateur & la fidelle &

……

……

Votre bien bonne amye
marie R

Bib. Cotton. Caligula I. 75.

de touz mes droitz en angleterre ou ailleurs

……

de toutz & dacquns mes droitz que ie pretendz & puis pretendre a la couronne d'angleterre & autres droits signeuries ou royaulmes & en dependantz au Roy Catolique ~~tant pour~~

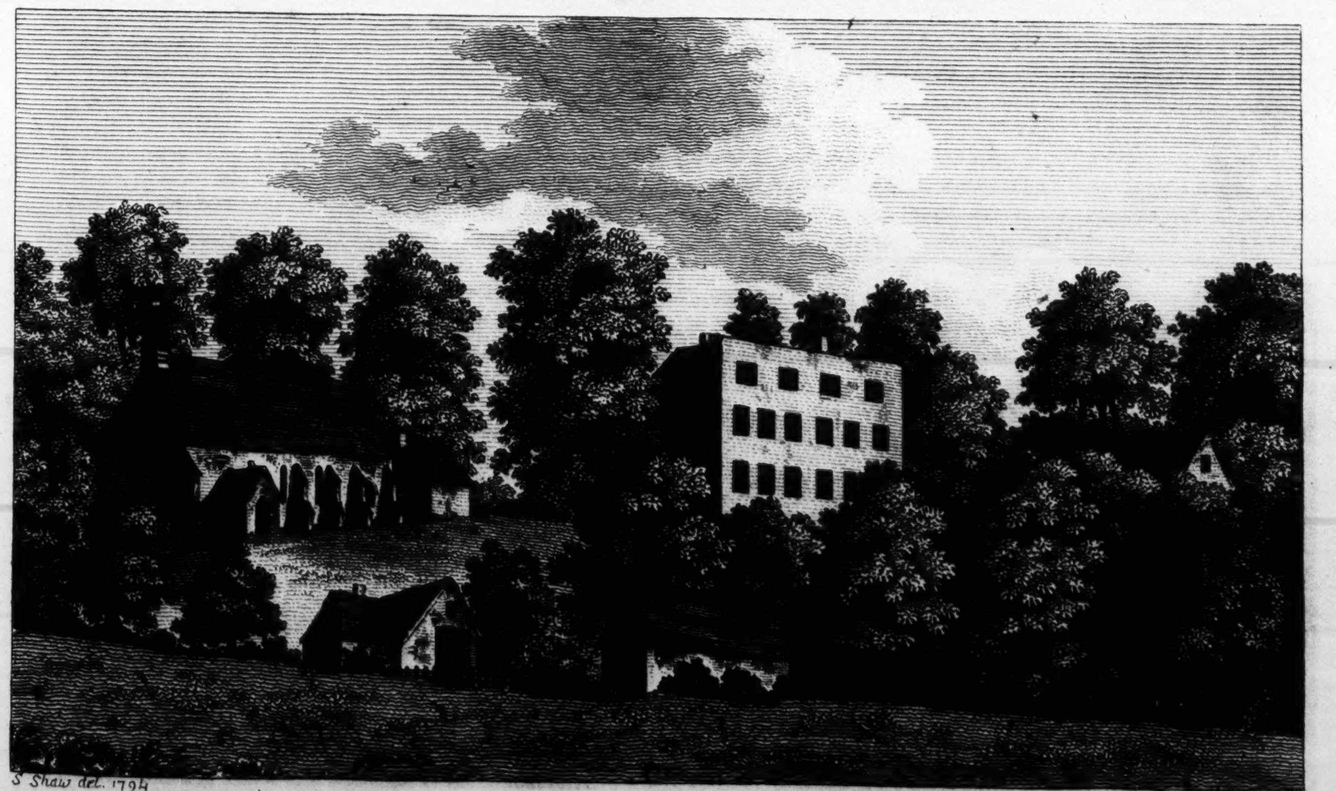
Bib. Cotton. Vesp. C. XVI. p. 145.

B. sc.

BLACKFORDBY, S.W.



S Shaw del. 1794

F. Cary sculp.

Pedigree of the Lords ZOUCH, of ASHBY DE LA ZOUCH.

Alan[1] viscount of Rohan in Britanny in France. = Constance, daughter and heir of Conan the Groſe, duke of Britanny, and of Maud, daughter of king Henry the Firſt; which Conan died in 1148.

1. Alan, from whom deſcended the viſcounts of Rohan.

2. Geoffrey, vicecomes temp. Hen. II. =

Alan la Zouch, alſo called earl of Britanny. = Alice, ſiſter and heir of Philip de Beaumes.

William la Zouch died 1199, ſ. p.

Roger de la Zouch, 1199; living 1231. = Margaret . . . .

1. Sir Alan de la Zouch, lord of Aſhby; one of the king's juſtices, and conſtable of the Tower; died 1270. = Helen, dau. and coheir of Roger Quincy earl of Wincheſter; died 1296.

Alice. = Sir Robert de Harcourt, of Market Boſworth, and of Oxfordſhire.

Mabell, dau. and heir, who marr. Fulke de Pembruge.

2. William la Zouch. = . . .

Joice, dau. and heir. = Sir Robert de Mortimer, of Richard's Caſtle.

1. Roger de la Zouch, lord of Aſhby, died 1285. = Eleanor, dau. and heir of Stephen de Longſpe.

2. Sir Eudo de la Zouch, knt. died 1289. = Millicent Cantelupe.

[See their deſcendants under Lubbeſthorpe.] 1.38

Alice, ſiſter and heir of ſir Ralph Toeny, of Flamſted, Herts; and relict, firſt, of Thomas de Leybourne; and, 2dly, of Guy de Beauchamp earl of Warwick[2]; died 1325. = Sir William Mortimer, who called himſelf Zouch of Mortimer on being poſſeſſed of the manor of Aſhby; died March 1, 1335-6. = Alianor, ſecond wife.

Hugh de la Zouch, only ſon.

Alan[1] lord Zouch of Aſhby, ſummoned to parliament Sept. 9, 1297; died 1314. = Eleanor, dau. of ſir Nicholas de Segrave.

Nicholas de St. Maure; died 1317. = 1. Helen[1], eldeſt dau. and coheir; married, 2dly, to ſir Alan de Charleton, of Apley caſtle, brother to John lord Charleton of Powis.

2. Maud, marr. to ſir Rob. Holland, knt. of Holland in Lancaſhire; afterward a baron; beheaded 1328; from whom Henry Holland earl of Kent, &c.

3. Elizabeth, a nun at Brewode, co. Stafford.

Alan lord la Zouch, died 1346, æt. 30. = Alianor.

Hugh lord la Zouch, d. 1368. = . .

Hugh lord la Zouch, died ſ. p. 1399; when the male line of lords Zouch of Aſhby became extinct.

1. Iſabella, married to Robert Stacpoole[3]; who, ſettling in Ireland, was the founder of the family in the county of Clare in that kingdom.

2. Joice. = Sir John de Botetourt, of Weoley caſtle, co. Worceſter, died 1385.

Thomas de St. Maure. = ...

Nicholas de St. Maure, knt. died 1360. = Muriel, dau. to James, ſon of Richard lord Lovell.

1. Nicholas de St. Maure; born 1353; died young.

2. Richard de St. Maure, d. 1401. = Ela[4], dau. of ſir John St. Lo.

1. Richard de St. Maure, died 1408, æt. 30. = Mary.

2. John.

3. Nicholas.

William[5] lord Zouch of Haringworth (ſon of William who died in 1415, and Elizabeth who died in 1425); born in 1401; living in 1432; died 14 . . = Alice St. Maure, ſole dau. and heireſs, born 1410; living 1432; died 14 . .

John de Botetourt, died before his father. = Maud, dau. of John lord Grey of Rotherfield.

1. Maud, abbeſs of Poleſworth.

2. Agnes, a nun at Elſtow.

3. Alice. = ...

Joan. = . . Wikes.

Agnes.

Joice.

John de Botetourt. = . .

Catharine. = Maurice de Berkeley.

Maurice Berkeley.

Joice, dau. and heir, couſin and heir to Hugh de la Zouch; d. Jan. 1, 1405-6. = Sir Hugh Burnell, K. B. died Nov. 27, 1420.

Sir William Zouch of Haringworth, lord Zouch and St. Maure, born 1432; died 1468. = Katharine Lenthall.

Edward Burnell, died before his father. = Alice, dau. of . . . . lord Strange.

1. Joice, born 1396; wife of Tho. Erdington, junior[6], who ſurvived her huſband.

2. Margaret, b. 1406; wife of Edmund Hungerford, ſon to ſir Walter Hungerford, knt.

3. Catharine, born 1409; married to ſir John Ratcliffe, knt.

John lord Zouch of Haringworth, attending king Richard III. in Boſworth field, was attainted 1485. = Joan, ſiſter of John lord Dinham.

Dorothy Capell, firſt wife. = John lord Zouch of Haringworth, reſtored 1551. = Suſan Welby, ſecond wife.

[See their deſcendants under Thorpe Ernald, vol. II. p. 372.]

---

[1] This Alan and his grand-child bore a feſs between ſix maſcles (fig. 37.) as appears by ſeveral of their charters and ſeals.

[2] Guy earl of Warwick, who died Aug. 12, 1365, deviſed to his wife Alice "a proportion of his plate, with a cryſtal cup, and half his bedding; as alſo all the veſtments and books pertaining to his chapel."

[3] Deſcended from Guillaume Stacpoole * de Mountvalai, who came over with the Conqueror, and with Alan de la Zouch.

[4] By her will, dated Nov. 28, 1409, ſhe bequeathed her body to be buried in the new chapel of Staverdale priory, next the grave of her huſband; and gave to her ſon Nicholas £20.; and to her ſon John a ſet of beads of coral, garniſhed with gold. She died the ſame year; leaving her ſon John her heir male; and Alice † her grand-daughter (daughter and heir to Richard her eldeſt ſon, then dead) her heir female.

[5] This deſcent is omitted in the pedigree given in vol. II. p. 372; and alſo in Bridges, Northamptonſhire, vol. II. p. 318. It is warranted by Eſch. 7 Hen. V. and 4 Hen. VI.; and clears up ſome difficulties in Dugdale's Baronage, vol. I. p. 690; vol. II. p. 90.

[6] See p. 568; and the pedigree of Erdington, under Barrow, p. 66.

* Sir Richard Stacpoole, of Pembrokeſhire, was knighted by the Conqueror; and in 1091 is mentioned by the different Welſh hiſtorians, and the old records of that principality, among their moſt reſpectable gentry. He married Margaret, ſecond ſiſter of ſir Richard Turbervile, lord of Coyty; and died without iſſue. Robert, the only brother of ſir Richard Stacpoole, married a daughter of ſir John Sitſylt, or Cecil, anceſtor to ſir William Cecil, lord Burghley, and lord high-treaſurer of England in the reign of queen Elizabeth. Sir William Stacpoole, his eldeſt ſon, married a daughter of Howel ap Ithel, lord of Roos and Rywonloc, now Denbighland. The ſaid ſir William had a command in an army raiſed in the reign of king Stephen, againſt David king of Scots; but died young, leaving three ſons and one daughter. His eldeſt ſon, ſir Richard Stacpoole, of Stacpoole in the county of Pembroke, married a daughter of ſir Henry Vernon, of Haddon in the Peak. No mention is made of the ſecond ſon; but Robert, the youngeſt, encouraged by his couſin, Robert Fitz Stephen, went over to Ireland with Richard earl of Striguſe, known by the name of Strongbow, and was a captain of archers in that diviſion of the army which Fitz Stephen commanded under Strongbow in 1168, 14 Hen. II. The old manſion of Stacpoole court, and a large eſtate in Pembrokeſhire, deſcended to a grand-daughter of the ſecond ſir Richard Stacpoole; and is now the property of lord Cawdor (ſon of the late Pryſe Campbell, eſq. who was member for that county, and died in 1769.)—John Stacpoole, eſq. of Cragbrien caſtle in the county of Clare, a lineal deſcendant of the above-mentioned marriage of Robert Stacpoole and Iſabella Zouch, died April 11, 1771, at the advanced age of 97, without iſſue. (See Gent. Mag. vol. LXIV. p. 715.)—His nephew, George Stacpoole, eſq. of Groſvenor Place, who ſucceeded to his eſtate, is the heir-general to the antient and noble family of Zouch, of Aſhby de la Zouch. The deſcendants in the female line of the lord Zouches of Haringworth in Northamptonſhire have been miſtaken by ſome, and conſidered as of the line of the lord Zouches of Aſhby de la Zouch in Leiceſterſhire, though they were two diſtinct peerages.

† On proof of the age of this Alice in 1423, it appeared that ſhe was born in the houſe of Thomas Creſſy, citizen and mercer of London, in the pariſh of St. Lawrence, in Cripplegate Ward, in that city, July 24, 1410, and baptized in the church of St. Lawrence; as alſo that ſhe became the wife of ſir William la Zouch, knt.; who, performing his fealty, had livery of the lands of her inheritance, 2 Hen. VI.

Pedigree of BATE, of Ashby de la Zouch[1].

Arms: Gules, a feſs between three ſiniſter hands Argent. Creſt, a croſs patée; Plate LXXVI. fig. 29.

Robert Bate, of Little Cheſter, co. Derby, a draper in London. = Elizabeth, dau. of —— Naſhe, of London.

Jane, dau. of Edward Turvile, of Thurleſton and Newhall, eſq.; firſt wife. = Nathanael Bate, of Little Cheſter. = Catharine, dau. of Thomas Hull, of Godalmin, Surrey, 2d wife.

Thomas Bate, a major in the ſervice of king Char. I. ſlain at Strelford houſe, co. Nott. ob. cœlebs, vitá patris.

Richard Bate, of Weſt Broughton, in the pariſh of Sidbury, co. Derby, living 1682, æt. 60. = Anne, dau. of Ja. Bellachous, of Hardwicke, co. Derby, died about 1670.

1. Catharine.
2. Margaret.
3. Anne.

Nathanael.
John.
Humphrey.

Dorothy.
Frances.
Elizabeth.
Sarah.

Catharine.
Bridget.
Mary.

1. Anne, wife of Thomas Browne, of Stretton le field, co. Derby.
2. Dorothy, wife of Richard Spenſer, of Longſton Magna, co. Derby.
3. Jane, unmarrried in 1682.

4. Richard Bate, of Eſſex, clerk. = ... Palfreman.

Anne.

1. Robert Bate, of WeſtBroughton, co. Derby, living 1682. = ... dau. and ſole heir of .... Wakelin.

Robert Bate. Mary. Anne.

2. Nathanael Bate, of Uttoxeter, co. Stafford, living 1682. = Urſula, dau. of ...... Ferne, of Crakemerſh, co. Stafford.

William Bate. Anne. Mary. Elizabeth.

3. Thomas Bate, of Aſhby de la Zouch, gent. died Jan. 7, 1707, æt. 59. = Dorothy, dau. of Will. Olderſhaw, of Kegworth.

1. Anne, born 1674; married Richard Jackſon, and died 1698[2].
2. Thomas, born 1676.
3. James, born 1678; died Sept. 25, 1757, æt. 80.
4. Dorothy, born 1680.
5. Charles.
6. Elizabeth.
7. Jane.

Pedigree of SMART, of Ashby de la Zouch[3].

Arms: Argent, on a chevron between three pheons Sable, a cinquefoil Or. Creſt, a hawk's head between two wings Argent, in his beak a thiſtle proper; fig. 38.

Robert Smart, of Preſton, co. Northampton. = ...

1. Ithiel Smart, vicar of Aſhby de la Zouch, died Nov. 22, 1661, æt. 62. = Dorcas, dau. of William Holbroke, of Weſt Ham, Eſſex, clerk; ſhe died in September 1680.

1. Ithiel Smart, M. A. vicar of Aſhby, æt. 45 in 1682; buried Jan. 27, 1692. = Mary, dau. of Robert Heydon, of the city of London.

Ithiel, an only child, an apprentice to a mercer at Nottingham, æt. 18.

2. Daniel, died young.

3. Nathanael Smart, an apothecary in London, living 1682, æt. 35. = ...

Ithiel Smart. A daughter.

1. Elizabeth, wife of Abraham Armeſon, of Aſhby de la Zouch, mercer.
2. Dorcas, died unmarried.
3. Mary, wife of Edward Laſcelles, of London, drugſter.
4. Catharine, wife of Richard Clark, of Burton upon Trent.
5. Sarah, died an infant.

Pedigree of THICKBROME, of Ashby de la Zouch[4].

Arms: Azure, on a feſs engrailed Or, three eſcalops Sable; in a canton a ſprig of broom Vert. Creſt, a demi-griffin Vert of the ſecond, holding between the paws an eſcalop Argent[5]; fig. 39.

John Thickbrome, of Thickbrome, co. Stafford, temp. Hen. VIII. = Iſabel ....

Humphrey Thickbrome, of Thickbrome, ſon and heir. = ...,

..... dau. of .... Harman, of Moorhall, near Sutton Colfield, firſt wife. = Thomas Thickbrome. = Mary, dau. of .... Blackford, of Henley, co. Herts, ſecond wife.

1. Humphrey Thickbrome, = ...

Hannah, wife of Hugh Cateſby, of Hinton, in Northampton.

1. Humprey Thickbrome, of Thickbrome, which he ſold about 1620, and died ſ. p. about 1650. = Barbara, dau. of ſir Tho. May, of Mayfield, Suſſex.

Other daughters.

2. Richard Thickbrome, a lieutenant of horſe in the ſervice of king Charles I.; ſlain at Birmingham, unmarried.

Anne, dau. of Adam Claypole, of Weſt Deping, co. Linc. firſt wife. = 3. George Thickbrome, born at Thickbrome, living at Aſhby de la Zouch 1683, æt. 60. = Lucy, dau. of ſir Tho. Gerard, of Brin, co. Lancaſter, died ſ. p. ſecond wife.

1. Adam, unmarried 1683, æt. 26.
2. George, died young.
3. Anne, died unmarried.

Margery, wife of Ric. Littlehales, of Wike, in the pariſh of Wenlock, in Shropſhire.

---

[1] Entered at Aſhby, Sept. 12, 1682, by Thomas Bate.

[2] See his epitaph, p. 623.

[3] Entered at Aſhby, Sept. 12, 1682, by Ithiel Smart.

[4] Entered at Leiceſter, Auguſt 3, 1683, by George Thickbrome.

BELTON,

ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS IN ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH.

P. 564. b. l. 38. for his nephew, r. his relation.

P. 580. b. l. 26. r. obtained in 1552.

P. 581. a. l. 41. for April 12, r. Feb. 12; and l. 54. r. 1552-3.

P. 584. b. l. 44. r. one of the three peers who had the cuſtody of the Scottiſh queen.

P. 592. b. l. 69. r. gammon of bacon.

P. 593. The marriage of Henry lord Haſtings, grandſon of George earl of Huntingdon, in June 1603, with the daughter of Ferdinando earl of Derby, has been already mentioned. This amiable young nobleman ſucceeded to his grandfather's titles and rich inheritance in December 1604; and the ſplendid yet œconomical ſtyle in which he lived at Aſhby will have appeared from his Houſhold Book and Domeſtic Regulations. For the following additional article I am indebted to my worthy friend Mr. Todd[1].

"Marſton wrote a Maſk, entitled, "The Lorde and Lady of Huntingdon's Entertainement of their right Noble Mother Alice Counteſſe Dowager of Darby[2], the firſte nighte of her Honor's arrivall att the houſe of Aſhby[3]." This Maſk is in manuſcript, and belongs to the very curious collection of his grace the [late] duke of Bridgewater. It has never been publiſhed. It is dedicated, in the following terms, "To the right Noble Ladye Alice Counteſs Dowager of Darby. Madam,

"If my ſlight Muſe may ſute yor noble merit,
My hopes are crownd, and I ſhall cheere my ſpirit;
But if my weake quill droopes, or ſeems unfitt,
'Tis not yor want of worth, but mine of witt.
The ſervant of yor honor'd virtues, John Marſton."

I truſt that a farther account of this Maſk may be acceptable to the curious and liberal reader. It opens thus: "When her ladiſhipp approached the parke corner, a full noiſe of cornetts winded; and when ſhe entered into the parke, the treeble cornetts reported one to another, as giveinge warninge of her honor's neerer approach; when preſently her eye was ſaluted with an antique gate, &c.

When the counteſſe came neare the gate, an olde inchauntres, attired in crimeſon velvet, wth pale face, black haire, and diſlykinge countenance, affronted her ladiſhipp, and thus rudely ſaluted her:

"Woman, Lady, Princes, Nimph, or Goddes,
(More, ſure, you are-not, and you ſeeme no leſſe)
Stay, and attempt not paſſadg through this porte:
Heere the pale Lorde of ſadnes keeps his courte,
Rough-viſadg'd Saturne, on whoſe bloudles cheeks
Dull Melancholy ſitts, who ſtraightly ſeekes
To ſeaſe on all that enter through this gate, &c.
Myſelf Merimna, who ſtill waight uppon
Pale Melancholy and Deſolation, &c."

The whole of this ſpeech is among the manuſcripts in the Britiſh Muſeum; but no more of the Maſk. I proceed therefore with the deſcription in the duke of Bridgewater's manuſcript: "This ſpeach thus ended, preſently Saturne yſſued from forth the porte, and curyouſly behoulding the counteſſes ſpake thus:

"Peace; ſtay, it is, it is, it is, even ſhee:
Hayle happy honors of Nobilitye!
Did never Saturn ſee? or nere ſee ſuch?
What ſhoulde I ſtyle you? &c.
Sweete glories of your ſex, know y^{t} yor eyes
Make milde the rougheſt planet of the ſkies;
Even wee, the lorde y^{t} ſitts on ebon throanes
Circled with ſighes and diſcontented groanes,
Are forc'd at yor faire preſence to relent;
At yor approach all Saturn's force is ſpent—
Hence, ſolitary Beldam, ſinke to nighte;
I give up all to joye, and to delight:
And now paſſe on, all-happye-making Dame, &c.

Then paſſed the whole troupe to the houſe; untill ye counteſſe hadd mounted the ſtaires to the greate chamber; on the topp of wch Merimna, having chaunged hir habitt all to white, mett her, and, whilſt a conſorte ſoftely played, ſpake thus: "Madam,

"See what a chaunge the ſpiritt of your eyes Hath wrought in us, &c."

After which "the counteſſe paſſed on to hir chamber." Then follows "The Maſque, preſented by four knights, and four gentlemen, &c. The forme was thus. At the approach of the counteſſes into the greate chamber, the hoboyes played untill the roome was marſhaled; which once ordered, a travers ſlyded away; preſently a cloude was ſeen move up and downe almoſt to the topp of the greate chamber, upon wch Cynthia was diſcoveryd ryding; hir habitt was blewe ſatten, fairely imbrodered with ſtarres and cloudes; who looking downe, and earneſtly ſurvaying the ladies, ſpake thus:

"Are not we Cynthia? and ſhall Earthe diſplaye
Brighter then us, and force untimely daye?
What daring flames beame ſuch illuſtrous light,
Inforcing darknes from the claime of night?
Upp, Aryadne, thie cleare beauty rouſe,
Thou Northerne crowne, &c.

In the mideſt of this ſpeech Ariadne roſe from ye bottome of the roome, mounted upon a cloud, wch waved up untill it came neere Cynthia; where reſting, Ariadne ſpake thus:

"Can our chaſte Queene, ſearching Appollo's ſiſter,
Not know thoſe ſtars that in yon valley gliſter?
Is vertue ſtrange to Heaven? &c."

After many more compliments to the ladies, Cynthia replies:

"Lett's viſitt them, and ſlyde from our aboade:
Who loves not virtue, leaves to be a god.
Sound, Spheares; ſpreade yor harmonious breath;
When mortalls ſhine in worth, gods grace the earth.

The cloudes deſcend, whilſte ſofte muſique ſoundeth: Cynthia and Ariadne diſmount from theire clouds, and, pacing up to the ladies, Cynthia, perceaving Aryadne wanting hir crowne of ſtarrs, ſpeaks thus:

"But where is Ariadne's wreath of ſtarrs,
Her eight pure fiers that ſtudd with goulden barrs
Her ſhyning browes? Hath ſweete-toungy'd Mercury
Aduanc'd his ſonnes to ſtation of y^{e} ſkye,
And throan'd them in thy wreath, &c.?

Ariadne. "Queene of chaſte dew, they will not be confyn'd,
Or fyx themſelues where Mercury aſſynde;
But every night upon a forreſt ſide
On which an eagle pearcheth they abyde,
And honor her, &c.

Cynthia. "Tell them thei err; and ſay y^{t} wee, the Queene
Of Night's pale lampes, have now the ſubſtance ſeene Whoſe ſhadowe they adore: goe, bring thoſe eight
At mighty Cynthia's ſummons, &c.

Preſently Ariadne ſings this ſhorte call:

"Muſique, and gentle night,
Beauty, youthes cheefe delighte,
Pleaſures, all full invite
Your due attendance to this glorious roome;
Then, yf you have or witt or vertue, come,
Ah come, ah come.

Suddenly upon this ſonge the cornetts were winded, and the travers that was drawn before the Maſquers ſanke downe. The whole ſhewe preſently appeereth, wch preſented it ſelfe in this figure: The whole body of it ſeemed to be the ſyde of a ſteepely aſſending woodd; on the topp of wch in a fayre oake ſatt a goulden eagle; under whoſe wings ſatt in eight ſeverall thrones the eight Maſquers wth wiſards like ſtarres, their helmes like Mercurye's, wth the addition of fayre plumes of carnation and white; their antique doubletts and other furniture ſutable to thoſe cullours; the place full of ſhields, lights, and pages all in blew ſatten robes imbrodered *w*th ſtarres. The Maſquers, thus diſcovered, ſatt ſtill untill Ariadne pronounced this invocation, at wch thei deſcended:

---

[1] See the late very excellent edition of Milton, vol. V. pp. 149—154.

[2] Alice counteſs dowager of Derby married Ferdinando lord Strange; who, on the death of his father Henry, in 1594, became earl of Derby, but died the next year. She was the ſixth daughter of ſir John Spenſer, of Althorpe in Northamptonſhire; and was afterwards married, in 1600, to lord chancellor Egerton, who died in 1617. She died Jan. 26, 1635-6; and was buried at Hanfield. This lady had the honour of being celebrated both by Spenſer and Milton; and Harrington has an Epigram in her praiſe.

[3] The Maſque is undated, but was probably performed in Auguſt 1606; at which period we find the earl of Huntingdon engaged to meet his mother-in-law in Warwickſhire; ſee p. 593.

"Mercurian iſſue, ſonnes of ſonne of Joue;
By the Cyllenian rodd, and by the love
Deuotely chaſte you vow Paſithea,
Deſcende, &c.
And O, if ever you were worthe the grace
Of viewing majeſty in mortalls face,
Yf ere to perfect worth you vow'd hart's duty;
Shew ſpiritt, worth yor vertues and theire beuty.

The violins upon this played a newe meaſure, in wch the Maſquers danced; and ceaſing, Cynthia ſpake:

"Stay a little, and now breath yee,
Whilſt theis ladies grace bequeath yee;
Then mixe faire handes, &c.
Cynthia charmes hence what may diſpleaſe yee.
From ladies y^{t} are rudely coy,
Barring their loves from modeſt joy;
From ignorant ſilence, and proud lookes;
From thoſe that aunſwer out of bookes;
From thoſe who hate our chaſt delight;
I bleſſe the fortune of each ſtarry knight.
From gallants who ſtill court with oathes;
From thoſe whoſe only grace is cloathes;
From bombaſt ſtockings [1], vile legg-makers;
From beardes, and greate Tebecca-takers;
I bleſſe the fortune of each ſtarry Dame.
Singe, that my charme may be more ſtronge;
The goddes are bounde by verſe and ſonge.

The ſonge.

"Andatious Nighte makes bolde the lippe;
Now all court chaſter pleaſure,
Whilſt to Apollo's harpe you trippe,
And tread the gracing meaſure.
Now meete, now breake, then fayne a warlike ſalley;
So Cynthea ſports, and ſo the godes may dalley, &c.

During this ſonge the Maſquers preſented theire ſheelds, and tooke forth their ladyes to daunce.

After they hadd daunced many meaſures, galliards, corantos, and lavaltos, the night being much ſpent; whilſt the Maſquers prepared themſelves for theire departing meaſure, Cynthea ſpake thus:

"Now, pleaſing, reſt; for ſee the nighte
(Wherein pale Cynthea claimes her right)
Is allmoſt ſpent; the morning growes,
The roſe and violett ſhe ſtrowes
Uppon the high cœleſtiall floore,
'Gainſt Phœbus riſe from's parramore:
The Faieries; y^{t} my ſhades purſue,
And bath theire feete in my colde dew,
Now leave their ringletts and be quiett,
Leaſt my brother's eye ſhoulde ſpy it.
Then now let every gratious ſtarr
Avoide at ſound of Phœbus' carr.
Into your proper place retyre
Wth boſomes full of beauties fier.
Hence muſt ſlide the Queene of floodes,
For day beginnes to gilde the woodes.
Then whilſt we ſinge, though you departe,
Ile ſweare y^{t} heere you leaue yor harte.

After this a ſhepherd ſings "a paſſionate ditty att my lady's departure:" he then preſents the counteſs with a ſcarf, and adds,

"Farewell, farewell:
Joy, love, peace, health,
In you longe dwell;
Wth our farewell, farewell.

So the counteſs paſſed on untill ſhe came through the little park, where Niobe preſented hir wth a cabinet; and ſo departed."

There is a looſe ſheet in the copy of the Maſk, on which are written 14 ſtanzas of ſix and four verſes, each ſtanza being appropriated to a different lady, and exhibiting a complimentary addreſs to lady Derby. The firſt ſtanza is a ſtanza of thanks from the counteſs herſelf. There is no direction in what part of the Maſk theſe verſes were to be ſpoken.

The ſpeakers are in the following order: "lady Derby, lady Huntington, lady Hunſdon, lady Berckly, lady Stanhope, lady Compton, lady Fielding, Mrs. Greſly [2], Mrs. Packer, Mrs. K. Fiſcher, Mrs. Saychoverell [3], Mrs. M. Fiſcher, Mrs. Davers, Mrs. Egerton.

I have been induced to make the preceding large extracts from the Maſk, in order that the reader may comprehend the nature of theſe dramatick entertainments; which, in the ſixteenth and ſeventeenth centuries, were performed frequently at Court, and in the private houſes of the nobility [4], not without prodigious expence in machinery and decoration."

P. 593. b. l. 25. r. "1605-6."

P. 610. "Maria regina Scotiæ quondam tranſibat iſtam villam, 21° Septembris, 1586, uſque Burton [5]."

P. 612. In a ſubſidy of 1627 are theſe entries:
Aſhby-de-la-Zouch, Robert Bainbridge in bonis £3.
Blougharbye, George Cutler, gent. in bonis £3.

P. 614. The earl of Moira has erected a fire engine on Aſhby Woulds, to raiſe coals; and a furnace, to melt iron ſtone. A large rail-road is alſo already made from the canal, which paſſes through the Lawn hill in Aſhby Old Parks, by a tunnel many yards under ground, through earl Ferrers's Lount Wood, then over The Smoil and Worthington Field (where a fine quarry of excellent free-ſtone has been lately diſcovered, in earl Ferrers's land, which has proved of eſſential ſervice in making the rail-road), from whence it extends to Cloud Hill lime-works. A branch from the aforeſaid tunnel goes through The South Wood in Aſhby liberty, belonging to lord Moira, and proceeds to ſir Henry Harpur's lime-works at Ticknall.

Ibid. Earl Ferrers poſſeſſes four incloſures in Aſhby pariſh, adjoining Staunton Harold, which were purchaſed by George Shirley, eſq. (afterwards ſir George Shirley, bart.) from George earl of Huntingdon. They contain about 30 acres of land; and pay a modus of 3*s*. 4*d*. yearly, in lieu of tithe, to the vicar of Aſhby. The following is an extract taken by the preſent earl Ferrers from the purchaſe-deed:

"This indenture, made the 10th day of October, in the nine and thirtieth year of the reign of queen Elizabeth, between the right honourable George earl of Huntingdon, &c. of the one part, and George Shirley, of Staunton, within the ſaid county of Leiceſter, eſq. of the other part, witneſſeth, that the ſaid George earl of Huntingdon, for the ſum of ...... hath granted, bargained, ſold, &c. unto the ſaid George Shirley, thoſe cloſes lying and being in or near the lordſhip of Aſhby, in the ſaid county of Leiceſter, on the Eaſt ſide of the park of Aſhby called Aſhby Great Park, and betwixt the ſaid park pale and the lordſhip of Staunton, called by the name or names of Little Heath cloſe and Calling Wood cloſe, or cloſes, butting on the North ſide upon Staunton, and upon the South ſide upon Staunton Lownt, together with all other the lands, tenements, and hereditaments, of the ſaid George earl of Huntingdon, lying in or near the lordſhip of Staunton aforeſaid, and adjoining to the Eaſt ſide of the ſaid park, or between the ſaid park pale and the ſaid lordſhip of Staunton. Excepted, &c. unto the ſaid George earl of Huntingdon, &c. the bank of the ſaid park, whereupon the ſaid park pale now ſtandeth, between the ſaid park pale and the ditch without the ſaid park, for the paling or fencing the ſaid park, or for the mending of the ſaid pale or fence, &c. &c. &c. In witneſs whereof, &c.

(Signed) GEORGE HUNTINGDON.

Signed, ſealed, and delivered, in the preſence of HENRY HASTINGS, ROBERT BAYNBRIGG.
BASIL BROOKE. ROBERT FIREBRACE.
T. THROKMORTON."

---

[1] Marſton here ſeems to ſneer at the ſpindle-ſhanked gentry of thoſe days; who probably ſtuffed out their ſtockings with cotton, in order to exhibit a good leg. To bombaſt or bumbaſt was, in this ſenſe, a common expreſſion. T.

[2] Suſanna wife of Thomas Greſley, of Drakelow, eſq. (afterwards a baronet); and daughter of ſir Humphrey Ferrars.

[3] Probably Elizabeth wife of Jacinth Sacheverell, eſq. of Morley; and daughter of ſir Richard Harpur, of Littleover, knt.

[4] Not to mention the celebrated Maſque of Milton, let it ſuffice here to notice that a ſimilar entertainment was exhibited on Twelfth-night 1639, at Bretbye in this neighbourhood, the ſeat of Philip Stanhope earl of Cheſterfield, from the pen of his nephew ſir Aſton Cokayne.

[5] From a memorial in the window of the manor-houſe at Abbots Bromley. See Shaw's Staffordſhire, vol. I. p. 17.

P. 618. "Alanus de la Zouch confirms Philip de Belmei's grant to Lilleſhull, co. Salop; viz. eccleſiam de Eſſebi, cum capellâ de Blacfordeby, & omnibus aliis pertinentiis ſuis; ſcil. in Blacfordby 60 acras; in Eſſebi tres virgatas terre, & quartam extra villam, que fuit Willielmi Foreſtarii; & terram Haconis Sutoris; & totam terram de Suarteclyve, que eſt intra viam de Pakynton ad Bredonam, & diviſas per nemus. Et decimam molendinorum, &c."

In 1529, Redd' aſſiſ' (terr' ſpectant' ad Lilleſhull Abbey, com' Salop') in Aſhby-de-la-Zouch & Blakerby, com' Leiceſt', £8. 13*s*. Redd' aſſiſ' in Greenlow, com' Derby, per ann' £7.[1]

Ibid. In 1552, the church of Aſhby contained,

In primis, tow chalices of ſylver.

It̃m, fyve belles, and a hande-belle.

It̃m, one croſſe and one pyxe of coper and gylte.

It̃m, tow ſewte of veſtments of crymyſon velvet.

It̃m, one ſewte of veſtments of whyte, grene, and red.

It̃m, one veſtmente of blewe velvet, and one of tawnye.

It̃m, one veſtmente of blacke wolſtyde, and one cope of the ſame.

It̃m, one veſtment of ronynge wyre, and one cope of the ſame.

It̃m, tow veſtments of ſatyn, one of blwe, and one of whyte.

It̃m, one veſtment of whyt foſtyon.

It̃m, one cope of duñe velvet.

It̃m, one hangynge of an alter of red velvet, and one of duñe ſatyne, and one of whyte ſyngill ſarſnet, and one wyth foſtyon.

It̃m, one croſſe clothe of grene ſarſnet.

It̃m, ſyxe alter clothes, and x towels.

P. 619. Add to the vicars, Mag' Helias de Trykingham, 1364[2].—Mr. Harriſon died March 10, 1503-4; Mr. Cowper in "1782," not "1732."

Ibid. Anthony Gilby publiſhed, 1. "A Comment on Micha, 1551," 8vo; 2. "A brief Treatiſe on Predeſtination;" 3. "Admonition to England and Scotland, 1558," 8vo; 4. "The Pſalmes of David, truly opened and explained by Paraphraſis, 1579," 12mo, dedicated to the lady Katherine counteſs of Huntingdon; to whom he ſays, "As the Latin Pſalms of Beza belong to my moſt honourable lord by right, as dedicate and ſent unto him from far; ſo theſe Engliſh Pſalms, tranſlated at home by one of your ſervants, who is wholly my lord's and yours in the ſervice of the great Lord, do as by good right pertain to your Honours.—Aſhbie, 7 of March, 1579."

Ibid. Since this page was printed, we have to record the death of Mr. Prior (who had reſigned Willeſley to his ſon). He was born at Swithland in Auguſt 1729. His father[3] was for more than 40 years ſteward to ſir Joſeph and ſir John Danvers; and, by his ability and integrity, merited and enjoyed their confidence, and the general reſpect of all who knew him. Mr. Prior was, at a very early age, ſent to the endowed ſchool of Woodhouſe; where his proficiency in learning, and his premature ſolidity of underſtanding and conduct, were ſo remarkable, that, upon the death of Mr. Boley the maſter, in 1744, though he was then only 15 years old, he was, by the truſtees, appointed to ſucceed him. In converſation with his friends he would ſometimes mention with pleaſantry the miſtakes which, for the firſt few years of his acting in this capacity, were often made by perſons who came to the ſchool and queſtioned him, as one of the pupils, concerning the maſter; the elevated ſeat upon which he placed himſelf during the hours of buſineſs, and the other methods which he made uſe of to appear important. The inconveniences, however, which were ſuſtained by his immaturity of age were of no long duration; and, being compenſated by a maturity of intellect, and an unremitted attention to the improvement of his pupils, the ſchool was never in a more flouriſhing ſtate than when under his direction. In this ſituation he continued many years, availing himſelf of every opportunity of increaſing his knowledge with which books and the converſation of the literary perſons in his neighbourhood could furniſh him, and devoting his leiſure hours to muſick, in the theory of which, with the aſſiſtance he was able caſually to obtain, he became, in a few years, a perfect maſter, and attained to great excellence as a performer. Among the literary characters with whom he aſſociated at this period, the preſent biſhop of Worceſter, at that time the learned and refined Mr. Hurd, rector of Thurcaſton, honoured him with peculiar marks of his attention, and, when he was of proper age, ſigned his teſtimonials for orders; and his friendſhip with this diſtinguiſhed prelate continued till his death. The duties of his ſchool being incompatible with a ſtated reſidence at college, although he entered himſelf at Emanuel College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B. D. in 1772, he only attended the terms neceſſary for degrees during his vacations. He was curate of Woodhouſe and Quorndon from 1755 to 1763, and deſervedly admired as a judicious and intereſting preacher, and beloved as a faithful and affectionate paſtor. In 1762 Mr. Prior was, by the recommendation of ſome gentlemen who were acquainted with his merit, without any ſolicitation on his part, appointed, by the late earl of Huntingdon, maſter of the grammar-ſchool at Aſhby, in which he reſided till his death. The income ariſing from eſtates belonging to the ſchool was only £60 a-year, although, at the expiration of the leaſes, a little before his death, the tenants offered him £600 a-year for their renewal.—In 1763 he married Miſs Cox of Quorndon, with whom he lived, in the full enjoyment of all the bleſſings of domeſtic life, for eleven years. On the death of the rev. Mr. Cowper, vicar of Aſhby, in 1782, Mr. Prior was, by his former patron, the earl of Huntingdon, whoſe perſonal knowledge of him was now a ſufficient recommendation, preſented to the vacant vicarage; and in 1792 General Haſtings, from ſimilar motives, preſented him to that of Packington; which was all the preferment he received, and with which his limited deſires were fully gratified. The vicarage-houſe at Aſhby, being very much decayed, he entirely re-built.—His mild and unaſſuming temper, his perfect freedom from ambition, his love of muſick, and his reliſh for the calm delights of literature, friendſhip, and domeſtic ſociety, preſerved him from thoſe painful ſenſations which ariſe from diſappointed expectations, and rendered his life a ſcene of almoſt uninterrupted enjoyment. The circumſtance of an afflictive nature which made the deepeſt impreſſion on his mind was the death of Mrs. Prior, which happened in 1774. Supported, however, by the conſolations of religion, happy in his children, and poſſeſſed of ſo many internal ſources of enjoyment, he in time recovered his wonted tranquillity, and ſhewed that he could both ſuffer and act as a Chriſtian. Mr. Prior, for ſome time before his death, was afflicted, as he apprehended, with the ſtone in a ſlight degree, which rendered him incapable of taking his uſual exerciſe of riding. In 1800 his friends were apprehenſive of a ſlight paralytic ſeizure; after which, he himſelf complained of a partial loſs of his memory; and from this period, though his mind was capable of conſiderable exertions, yet his bodily ſtrength gradually declined. So anxious, however, was he to fulfil his duty, that he taught ſchool within eight days of his death. He ſpoke of his diſſolution with perfect calmneſs; and died, as he had lived, with the chearfulneſs of a Chriſtian, thankful for the bleſſings which he had enjoyed here, and expreſſing his firm belief of a future ſtate of immortal felicity. Mr. Prior was not only an accurate and elegant claſſical ſcholar and ſound mathematician, but a perſon of refined taſte and extenſive erudition. After he was 60 years of age, he acquired ſuch a knowledge of Hebrew as to be able to read a chapter of the Old Teſtament in the original with tolerable facility. Poſſeſſed of great intellectual energy, and accuſtomed to keep his faculties always in exerciſe, he diſcovered the ſources of knowledge for himſelf, and drank of them with peculiar avidity. Theological controverſy by no means

[1] Valor 20 Hen. VIII.

[2] Of whom ſee Dr. Pegge's edition of the "Annales Eliæ de Trickingham," Ded. p. 9.

[3] He died in 1767, at the age of 80. See his epitaph under Swithland, p. 1054.

ſuited his taſte. With a ſtrong ſenſe of religion on his mind, he liked to conſider it, not ſo much a matter of ſpeculation as a principle of practice. His attention was directed leſs to thoſe points on which Chriſtians differ, than to thoſe on which they are agreed. Towards the cloſe of life, however, from the chearful views which he took of the divine adminiſtration, and from his own benevolence of temper, he was fond of reading works in favour of the doctrine of univerſal reſtitution. If he was an enemy to ſuperſtition and enthuſiaſm, he was ſtill more ſo to every ſpecies of perſecution. With an undeviating affection for the eſtabliſhed church, he was candid to all, a friend to freedom of enquiry, and felt his mind in ſympathy with every pious and ſincere Chriſtian. With reſpect to political opinions, Mr. Prior was a Whig of the old ſchool; his loyalty could not be exceeded. He was warmly attached to the Conſtitution of his country, and not leſs ſo for wiſhing that its health and vigour may never be impaired. With a high ſtandard of intellectual and moral excellence ever before his eyes, he ſaw clearly his own defects, but ſeemed to think they did not attach to the character of his friends; and, while he probably thought of them more highly than he ought to think, he entertained too low an opinion of his own attainments. Humility was the characteriſtic feature of his mind; and, with abilities of the higheſt order, both natural and acquired, he was, perhaps, of all men, the leaſt obtruſive. Mr. Prior, among many other good qualities, was an excellent mathematician; and to his abilities the county of Leiceſter was indebted for an excellent map, from an actual ſurvey taken 1775—1777, and publiſhed in 1778; for which he received a premium from the Society for the Encouragement of Arts. He likewiſe publiſhed, on a reduced ſcale, a hunting-map of the ſame county. His children, all of whom are his ſurvivors, are, the rev. John Prior, B. A. perpetual curate of Willeſley near Aſhby; a daughter, married to Mr. James Anſtead, of Pentonville; and two daughters unmarried.

P. 627. add, "The Doctrine of Faſting, and Prayer, and Humiliation for Sinne; delivered in ſundry Sermons at the Faſt appointed by publike Authority, in the yeare 1625; by that late faithfull and worthy Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt, Arth. Hilderſam, 1636," 12mo; inſcribed by Samuel Hilderſam, from "Weſt Felton in the county of Salop, Dec. 8, 1632, to his moſt worthy and much honoured Patron, Maſter William Cokayne, merchant, at his houſe in Auſtine Fryers in London;" contains ſeven ſermons printed in 1625; and one particularly ſtated to have been preached in Aſhby chapel, Oct. 4, 1629.

The following epitaph on Mr. Hilderſam[1] is copied from Bancroft's "Epigrams and Epitaphs, 1639-40:"

"Whoſe fervent praire cold hearers boſoms warm'd,
Whoſe ſharpe, ſweet ſtrains our deafeſt paſſion charm'd;
From whoſe bright preſence dark prophaner fled,
Wiſe, holie, noble Hilderſam is dead!
Aſhbie, thy lampe is quencht, and thou art madd
At heart, or elſe at heart thou wilt be ſadd.
Where will you runne to find a font ſo pure,
That could ſo full and ſtill ſo freſh endure?
Can that faire orbe, whence radiant fire he threw,
With glow-wormes fill, or candle-ruſh renew?
Yet all his learning was but as a limme
To the maine body, as a piece of him:
Father and founder to the poor he was;
The layman's counſellour, the clergies glaſſe;
His high blood ſwell'd him not, in wealth of witt
Excelling; he as trifles rated it.
And from full ſtore of tryalls I may ſpend
This ſurpluſage: he was a faithfull friend.
His life, a woven roabe without a ſeame;
His heavenly temper, an eternal theme
For tongues and penns; but his immortall mind
Raignes with Eliah, in a throne deſign'd
'Twixt him and Eſay. Harke! Cœleſtial Quires,
Prophets, Apoſtles, ſtrike their ivorie lyres;
And peales of joy reſound on golden ſtrings,
While ſeraphims doe clapp their ſilver wings."

The two following articles are alſo by Bancroft:

Epitaph on Mrs. Anne Port.

Here lyes a creature to be moſt admir'd,
So good, and yet a woman; who aſpir'd,
To ſum all virtues up before her years,
And ſcale by ſuch aſcent the heavenly ſpheres
Whereon ſhe ſits, comparing with the ſun
The diadem of glory ſhe hath won;
And, joying to outſhine her, makes the flame
Of Heaven reſound her mirth, as Earth her fame;
Whilſt we, half wrackt with loſſes of this ſort,
Like ſeamen ſigh, that want their wiſhed Port.

To Nathaniel Bate, gentleman.

Kind Sir, you once did ſend me (to your coſt)
Where a loath'd life uſurping Richard loſt:
So may I loſe mine own, when once I prove
To you ingrate, or bate you aught in love.
For, ſith the Patron minds the Poet's art,
Well may you claim the tribute of my heart;
Who wiſh your Muſe's induſtry repaid
With high reſpect, and mine her waiting-maid.

The three following articles are by ſir Aſton Cokaine:

Epitaph on Mr. Ralph Fitzherbert, who died at Aſhby-de-la-Zouch about the 22d year of his age, and there lies buried.

Cornet Fitzherbert (who in many a fight[2] Lord Loughborough's colours bore in the king's right)
Lies here interr'd; his ſkill in muſick gone,
And his good parts all cover'd with this ſtone.
He was too brave to find an enemy
To kill him; and therefore in's bed did dye.
Yet was he young and virtuous: but, alas!
On Youth and Virtue Death no pity has.
Learn, therefore, Reader, that no human ſtate
Is ſafe; and always live prepar'd for fate.

Epitaph on Colonel Ferdinand Stanhope, ſon to the Earl of Cheſterfield, who was ſlain about Shelford, and lies there buried.

Here underneath this monumental ſtone
Lie Honour, Youth, and Beauty, all in one:
For Ferdinando Stanhope here doth reſt,
Of all theſe Three the moſt unequal'd teſt.
He was too handſome and too ſtout to be Met face to face by any enemy;
Therefore his foe (full for his death inclin'd)
Stole baſely near, and ſhot him through behind.

Epitaph on my worthy couſin-german Colonel Michael Stanhope, ſlain at Willoughby fight, and lies buried in the church there.

Here Michael Stanhope lies, who fought and died,
Where proſp'rous fortune left the Royal ſide:
He of a dauntleſs mind by all was known,
And of a noble diſpoſition;
Yet his conditions, and his valiant heart,
Could not prevail with Death to ſtay his dart;
For here he lies, and doth (by 's fall) expreſs,
Great courages do often want ſucceſs.

P. 630. Joſeph Hall has, in the "Lachrymæ Muſarum," an "Elegy on the Death of Henry Lord Haſtings, 1640."

P. 633. Mr. Fowler's and Mr. Hatchet's farms at Alton Grange contain more than 500 acres.

P. 636. l. 8. r. Shelford houſe.

Ibid. l. 31. After Vert, ſtrike out of the ſecond.

ADDITIONS TO BELTON.

P. 645. b. l. 71. r. "The manor of Belton and its appurtenances were ſoon after diſpoſed of," &c.

P. 646. Thomas was vicar of Belton 1334.

P. 650. Of the three daughters of the rev. Charles Clerke, Catharine the eldeſt married to Hugh Platt; who died Auguſt 25, 1780, and had one ſon, John, who died an infant. The other two ſiſters died unmarried.

---

[1] Afterwards altered by the author to "An Elegy on Mr. Sacheverell," a famous lecturer at Leiceſter; ſee vol. I. p. 342.

[2] Major Pate (brother to ſir John Pate) was ſlain at or near Aſhby-de-la-Zouch.—Sir John Beaumont of Gracedieu was ſlain near Thorpe Hanger; and Mr. Bale, ſon to ſir John Bale, died in the ſame action. Sir Aſton Cokaine addreſſes a ſhort poem, to his "worthy Friends the two Colonel William Bales."

BELTON,

In antient writings ſtyled Beleton and Belinton, ſtyled by Wyrley, in 1590, "a pretty village near unto Gracedieu," is ſeven miles Weſt by North diſtant from Loughborough; and, in the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, is within the deanry of Akeley. The ſituation of this "pretty village" is truly pictureſque. See a diſtant view of it in Plate LXXXVI.

This manor, conſiſting of ſix ploughlands and a half, was in the reign of Edward the Confeſſor of the yearly value of ten ſhillings. It was increaſed at the time of the Conqueror's ſurvey to ſixty ſhillings; and was then the property of Hugo de Grenteſmainell, under whom it was held by Ernald. The land was equal to four ploughs; and two were employed in the demeſne, and four bondmen. Twenty-five villans, with one knight and four bordars, had alſo eight ploughs. There were forty acres of meadow; a wood one mile long, and half a mile broad; and a mill worth two ſhillings a year [1]. Ernald held alſo, under Hugo, two ploughlands in Stantone; and it is ſtated that both the lands in Ernald (Belton and Stantone) belonged to the fee of earl W.; and that Swain held them both freely in the time of king Edward [2].

Belton is not noticed in the Teſta de Nevill, compiled about 1240; but in the Itinerary of 1280, Belton and Long Whatton anſwered collectively as one vill.

The noble family of Verdon was of ſuch conſiderable conſequence in this county (poſſeſſing not only Belton, but Newbold Verdon alſo, to which they gave name, with lands at Lutterworth, Cotteſbach, Bitteſby, &c.) that ſome account of them may reaſonably be expected.

At the time of the general ſurvey, Bertram de Verdon (being of French extraction) poſſeſſed Farnham in Buckinghamſhire, ſince moſt commonly known by the name of Farnham Royal, being held by grand ſerjeanty, viz. by the ſervice of providing a glove, upon the day of the king's coronation, for his right hand, and to ſupport his right arm the ſame day during the time that the royal ſcepter is in his hand.

To this Bertram ſucceeded Norman de Verdon, who took to wife Laſceline, the daughter of Geffrey de Clinton, lord chamberlain and treaſurer to king Henry I. and had with her in marriage, as it ſeems, the lordſhip of Brandon, co. Warwick, where was antiently a caſtle, built, as it is probable, by the ſame Norman. In 1140, he gave 100*s.* to the king for livery of thoſe lands in Leiceſterſhire which were of his own inheritance.

To him ſucceeded Bertram de Verdon, his ſon and heir, whoſe principal ſeat was in Staffordſhire, as it ſeems by a certificate in 1166, whereby he ſignifies his knights' fees, which were at that time no more than two in number. But it is very likely that he had his reſidence, for the greateſt part of that king's reign, either in Warwickſhire, at his caſtle of Brandon; or in Leiceſterſhire, at the manor-houſe at Belton, which was his "antient inheritance [3];" for it is evident that he was ſheriff of thoſe two counties from 1155 to 1169. By this Bertram nine virgates of land in Loughborough, which were within his fee of Belton, were granted to Walceline ſon of Baldwin de Doyle, at an annual rent of 20*s*.

"Sciant preſentes & futuri, quod ego Bertram de Verdon dedi Walcelino filio Baldewini de Doyle, ꝑ homagio & ſervicio ſuo, heredibus & aſſign' ſuis, novem virgatas terre, cum toftis & croftis, &c. in Whatton, que quidem virgate terre ſunt de feodo meo & dominio de Belton, cum aquis molendinis, viis & ſemitis, &c. & omnibus aliis ſervitiis, ſalvis forinſecis ſerviciis, & omnibus conſuetudinibus conſuetis tam de ſpiritualibus quam de temporalibus, communiâ meâ de Belton mihi ſemper reſervandâ; reddendo annuatim mihi & heredibus meis, ipſo & aſſignatis ſuis, viginti ſolidos ꝑ annum; ſcil', ad feſtum Mich̄is Archangeli decem ſolidos, & ad feſtum Beate Marie Matricis decem ſolidos, &c. Hiis teſtibus; Ricardo Verdon, Henrico Jothe, Wiłło Brito, & aliis [4]."

In 1176, Bertram de Verdon being with the king at Harleberg, was thence ſent to thoſe ambaſſadors of the king of Spain (to whom the king, in his great council held at London a little before, had given diſpatch) with his letters, upon ſundry concerns, whereof one was the king's ſafe conduct in that pilgrimage which he had deſigned to St. James in Galicia, in regard that city lay within his dominions. In 1183, he had the cuſtody of the honour of Cheſter, Hugh Kevelioc earl of Cheſter being then dead, and Ranulph his ſon within age, as it is like; and in 1190 attended king Richard I. into the Holy Land; where being preſent at the agreement made betwixt him and Tancred king of Sicily (whoſe country our heroic king was to paſs through) was one of thoſe who undertook for the performance of what was covenanted on the Engliſh monarch's part; and the next year, when king Richard had taken the city of Acon (wherein the queens of England and Sicily, as alſo the daughter of the emperor of Cyprus, were then reſident) he committed it to his cuſtody. This Bertram in 1176 founded the abbey of Croxden, co Stafford, for Ciſtercian monks, and plentifully endowed it with lands and revenues; amongſt which he gave thereto the church of Alveton (commonly called Alton) where his capital ſeat in that county was, viz. the caſtle there; and beſtowed on the monks of St. Mary's abbey at York the church of Boſworth, and two hides of land there. Moreover, to the hoſpital of St. John Baptiſt in Stanford, co. Lincoln, he joined with Richard de Humet, in the grant of that part of the meadow there, which lies Northward of the bridge; and confirmed to the canons of Kenilworth that grant of the church of Dethe, co. Oxon, which Laſceline his mother had made to them; and departing this life in 1192, at Joppa, in the Holy Land, was buried at Acon.

Bertram de Verdon had two wives; the firſt Maud, daughter to Robert de Ferrers earl of Derby, with whom her father gave in frank-marriage four knights fees; Crakemerſe and Creyton, containing one fee and an half; Fornewarke, half a fee; New Hall and Stanton, half a fee; Worthington and Newbold, half a fee; and Staunton Harold, the fourth part of a knight's fee; but by her he had no iſſue. His ſecond wife was Roheſe; but whoſe daughter appears not; which Roheſe ſurvived him, and in 1198 gave £20. to the king for liberty to marry again.

After the death of this Bertram, William Fitz-Richard (a great man at that time in Warwickſhire) accounted in 1196 for the profits of his lands whilſt he had the cuſtody of them; and amongſt his diſburſements reckons £10. laid out for the maintenance of thoſe ſoldiers and ſervants who were in his caſtle at Alveton for the half year preceding; as alſo £7. more for thoſe who kept his caſtle at Brandon, by the king's appointment.

To this laſt-mentioned Bertram ſucceeded Thomas de Verdon, his ſon and heir, who married Euſtachia, the daughter of Gilbert Baſſet; and in 1195 gave a fine to the king of 300 marks to have livery of his father's lands and caſtles; but in 1199 he died in Ireland; after which, in 1200, Gerard de Camvill gave £1000. to the king for the guardianſhip of his widow with her lands, and liberty to diſpoſe of her in marriage unto Richard de Camvill his ſon.

---

[1] "Ernaldus tenet de H[ugone] 6 carucatas terræ & dimidiam in *H*eletone [l. *B*eletone]. Terra eſt 4 carucarum. In dominico ſunt 2; & 4 ſervi & 25 villani, cum 1 milite & 4 bordariis, habent 8 carucas. Ibi molinum de 2 ſolidis, & 4 acræ prati. Silva 1 leugæ longitudinis, & dim' leugæ latitudinis. Valuit 10 ſolidos; modò 20 ſolidos." Domeſday, fol. 233. a. col. 1.

[2] "Ernaldus tenet 2 carucatas terræ de Hugone in Stantone. Hæ duæ terræ Ernaldi ferunt de feudo W. comitis. Suain utraſque liberè tenuit tempore regis Edwardi." Ibid.

[3] See before, under Stapleford, vol. II. p. 351; and a pedigree of the Verdons, ib. p. 344; in which ſeveral material corrections may be made from that here printed in p. 640.

[4] MS. Roper, ex Original. penès Rob. Cotton, baronet.—The ſeal about 3 inches broad, the out-ring broken; on his ſhield and capariſons the fret.

To which Thomas ſucceeded Nicholas de Verdon his brother; to whom William Waſtneis, ſon of Walter Waſtneis and Dina his wife, gave a wood and meadow called Snape, for the further enlarging of his park at Belton. This Nicholas in 1204 gave to the king £100. as alſo a courſer and a palfrey, for livery of the lands in Ireland whereof his father died ſeiſed; and the ſame year came to an agreement with the before-ſpecified Richard de Camvill and Euſtachia then his wife, touching her dowry out of the lands of his brother Thomas de Verdon her former huſband; by which it was concluded, that the ſaid Richard and ſhe ſhould, inter alia, hold the manor of Farnham, co. Buckingham, and Hethe, co. Oxon. Moreover, in 1214, upon the death of Roeſe de Verdon his mother, he had livery of thoſe lands in the county of Lincoln which were of her inheritance; and the ſame year paid 57 marks to the king, on levying the ſcutage of Poictou, in regard he did not attend him thither in that expedition. But in 1216, taking part with the reſt of the rebellious barons, his lands were ſeized, by ſpecial precepts to the ſheriffs of Warwick, Leiceſter, Stafford, Lincoln, Bucks, and Oxon (in which counties they lay), and put into the hands of William de Cantelupe, to hold during the king's pleaſure. Howbeit, on the death of the king (which happened Oct. 19, that year), he ſubmitted to his ſon king Henry III. and thereupon had livery of them in the firſt year of his reign. Furthermore, in 1218 he paid 200 marks to the king, in ſatisfaction for the ſum of 500 marks, in which his father was indebted to the exchequer, ſince he executed the office of ſheriff for the counties of Warwick and Leiceſter in king Henry the Second's time. In this year alſo, he became one of the ſureties to the king for Robert Marmion the younger, that he ſhould faithfully keep the caſtle of Tamworth, co. Warwick, and bear true allegiance to the king; and in 1221, when William de Fortibus earl of Albemarle broke out in rebellion, and, having fortified his caſtle at Bitham, co. Lincoln, waſted the country thereabouts, he attended the king in perſon at the ſtorming and taking of that caſtle; for which ſervice he obtained the king's warrant for levying eſcuage upon all the knights' fees which were held of him; and in 1227 procured a charter of free-warren in all his demeſne lands at Brandon, co. Warwick.

In 1231 he received authority from the king to take reaſonable aid of his tenants towards the payment of his debts; but he died that year, leaving iſſue one ſole daughter his heir, called Roheſe; who, in 1232, paid 70 marks for her relief and livery of the lands of her inheritance, as alſo that ſhe might not be compelled to marry; and, in caſe ſhe ſhould make choice of a huſband, it to be with the king's approbation. It ſeems ſhe was then a widow; but an huſband ſhe had in the life-time of her father, Theobald le Butiller (a branch of the noble family of the Butillers of Ireland); for, in 1224, the king, much deſiring that ſhe ſhould take to huſband this Theobald, wrote ſpecially to her to recommend him for that purpoſe; and likewiſe to Nicholas her father, deſiring him to perſuade her thereto.

This Roheſe being ſo great an heir, though ſhe matched with an huſband of a very honourable family, did not bear his ſurname, as it is generally uſual for all married women to do, but retained her own; and ſo did her poſterity (as will be ſeen anon); and in her ſeal repreſented herſelf in the habit of that time, with her own paternal arms upon her ſurcoat; Fretté, in her right hand holding a ſhield of the like; and in the left hand another of her huſband's arms[1].

From the ſplendid pedigree of the Sherards an undated grant of this lady to William Grendon, of all her liberties in her wood at Whytheſtane, witneſſed by Ralph de Normanvill, Robert Paynell, William de Normanvill, Jordan de Brett, &c. has been printed in a former volume[2].

In 1234, the lady Roeſia paid a fine of 10 marks to the king, to be exempted from ſending ſoldiers into Wales, that being the time when the king himſelf marched thither againſt Richard Marſhall earl of Pembroke; and by this lady, or her heirs, the whole or the greater part of the lordſhip of Belton was given to the nunnery of Gracedieu, which ſhe had founded and plentifully endowed, for nuns of the Ciſtercian order; and the advowſon alſo was appropriated afterwards to the ſame by Robert Kilwardby archbiſhop of Canterbury, 1277; though others (which affirm they have ſeen the original compoſition) ſay, that it was appropriated April 20, 1274, in the 16th year of the conſecration of Richard de Graveſend, then biſhop of Lincoln[3].

Lady Roeſia died Feb. 20, 1248; and was buried, in the nunnery which ſhe had founded, at Gracedieu. "At the diſſolution thereof," ſays Mr. Wyrley, "her monument, which is fair, emboſſed in marble, was removed to Belton church, where it ſtill remaineth[4]."

Her ſon and heir[5], John de Verdon baron of Weobley, paying 1300 marks to the king, had livery of all thoſe lands which deſcended to him by his mother's death. She had alſo a younger ſon, called Nicholas, who had the manor of Clumore in Ireland by the gift of John his brother, but died without iſſue; and a daughter called Maud, wife of John Fitz-Alan earl of Arundel.

John de Verdon, in 1258, obtained the king's charter for free-warren, to himſelf and his heirs, in all his demeſne lands at Newbold, Lutterworth, Buttelſby,Otteſbach, and Keſtington, co. Leiceſter; and in 1260, on the incurſions of the Welſh, being one of the barons-marchers, was, amongſt others, commanded to keep his reſidence in thoſe parts; but, in 1264, the king being conſtrained to ſtoop to thoſe unreaſonable ordinances which were formed at Oxford by the rebellious barons, and to ſtand to the award which Lewis king of France ſhould make betwixt him and them, he was one of thoſe who then undertook for the king; and in 1266, after the battle of Eveſham, in which the rebellious barons were totally vanquiſhed, Kenilworth caſtle excepted, wherein ſome of them holding out made divers bold excurſions, and did much miſchief in the country, the king made ſpecial commiſſion to this John, to raiſe forces in Worceſterſhire, to purſue thoſe rebels; it being about this time that his caſtle at Brandon (near Kenilworth) was demoliſhed. After thoſe wars, he was in 1270 ſigned with the croſs, together with prince Edward, in order to a voyage to the Holy Land; who, devoting themſelves to that warfare, painted a croſs on their ſhoulders as a badge of their profeſſion; and embarked in 1271. This John granted to William de Ferrers earl of Derby his manſion-houſe, garden, and court, ſituate in London, in Sholande; which houſe, &c. Roheſe his mother had by the grant of Michael Belet. He married two wives; firſt, Margaret, the daughter of Gilbert de Lacy, and heir to Walter de Lacy her grandfather; by which means the caſtle of Weobley, co. Hereford, firſt came to this family; the ſecond, Alianore, daughter of . . . . ; and departed this life upon Nov. 1, 1274, being then ſeiſed in fee of the manors of Belton, Cotteſbach, Lutterworth, and Bitteſby, co. Leiceſter; and Wynelesford, co. Wilts; of a moiety of the manor of Gwyas-Lacy, co. Hereford; a moiety of the manor of Ludlow, co. Salop; as alſo of the manor of Stoke-Say in that county; leaving iſſue Theobald, his ſon and heir, at that time 26 years of age; and the before-ſpecified Alianore his ſecond wife ſurviving[6]; which Alianore, in 1276, on agreement betwixt this laſt-mentioned Theobald and her, had divers lordſhips lying in the counties of Warwick and Leiceſter aſſigned for her dower.

---

[1] See this ſeal, from Vincent's Staffordſhire, p. 75, under Gracedieu, Plate LXXXVI.

[2] See under Stapleford, vol. II. p. 351; and her ſeal, without her huſband's arms, ib. Plate LXVII. p. 353.

[3] Burton, MS.

[4] See hereafter, p. 647.

[5] The Sherard pedigree erroneouſly ſtates this John to be the great grandſon of Roeſia.

[6] Eſch. 2 Edw. I. Nº 34. Leic.

This Theobald, in 1275, doing his homage, had livery of all thoſe lands which deſcended to him both by his father and mother; paying £100. for his relief. He then bore the office of conſtable of Ireland; and in 1282, having paid 200 marks fine for livery of his lands in that realm, was in the expedition then made into Wales. In 1284, he obtained the king's charter for divers markets and fairs at ſeveral of his lordſhips in Ireland; viz. Loxmelie, Inchelefer, Wydone, Adleke, and Dyneleke, in the county of Meath; as alſo Dundalke and Roche, in the county of Limerick; but in 1291 was arraigned for high treaſon, and divers other miſdemeanors, at Bergavenny, before the king and his council, and, upon full hearing, had judgement to be committed to priſon, as alſo to forfeit all his royalties in the lands of Gwyas-Lucy. Howbeit, the king taking into conſideration the good ſervices of his anceſtors, done to himſelf and his progenitors, and becauſe he acknowledged his offence and ſubmitted himſelf, granted that, after his death, his heirs ſhould again enjoy thoſe privileges; and, for 500 marks fine, freed him of his impriſonment. In 1294, on the apprehenſions of danger which the king then had from the French, being one of the chief lords ſummoned to attend him with his advice in that great affair, he ſoon after received another precept, to fit himſelf with horſe and arms, and to be at Portſmouth on the firſt of September, to ſail with him into France; and in 1297 ſtood ſo well in favour, that he received ſummons, with the reſt of the earls and barons, to attend prince Edward (at that time the king's lieutenant for the realm of Scotland) at Newcaſtle upon Tyne, on St. Nicholas's day, thence to march againſt the Scots. So likewiſe the next year following, to be at Carliſle, well fitted with horſe and arms, to advance again into Scotland. In 1301 he was one of the barons then ſitting in the parliament at Lincoln, who by a public inſtrument under their ſeals (ſent to Boniface the Eighth, then pope), aſſerted the right of king Edward, as ſuperior lord of the whole realm of Scotland. Moreover, in 1306, he was again ſummoned to attend the king at Carliſle in the quindene of the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt; thence to march into Scotland againſt John de Brus, at that time aſſuming the title of king there; and, having had ſummons to parliament, amongſt the reſt of the barons, from 1297 to 1306 incluſive, departed this life at his caſtle of Alveton, on Sunday the feaſt-day of St. Bartholomew the Apoſtle, 1309; whence his corpſe was carried with great honour to the abbey of Croxden, and there interred on the 12th of October next enſuing; leaving Theobald, at that time his ſon and heir (for John his eldeſt ſon died in Ireland in his lifetime, June 6, 1297); which Theobald in 1298 came out of Ireland, and received the honour of knighthood the ſame year, upon the feaſt-day of the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt, together with ſir Philip Barington his fellow ſoldier. He was ſummoned to parliament, whilſt his father lived, in 1301; ſhortly after which, Aug. 29, 1302, he married Maud, the daughter to Edmund lord Mortimer of Wigmore; and in 1309, performing his homage, had livery of all his father's lands, being at that time 28 years of age. In 1310 he received ſummons to fit himſelf with horſe and arms, and to be at Roxborough, in Scotland, within a month after the feaſt of the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt, to march againſt the Scots; and in 1312 was conſtituted juſtice of Ireland; having likewiſe the lieutenancy of that realm, and the fee of £500. a year then granted to him; in which year Maud his wife, departing this world, Oct. 19, at his caſtle of Alveton, was honourably buried in the abbey church of Croxden, before the altar of St. Benedict, upon the feaſt-day of St. Dennis and his fellow martyr; Thomas earl of Lancaſter and many other nobles being preſent at her funeral.

In 1314, he was made chief juſtice of Ireland, and went thither before Midſummer, but ſoon after received command to make all poſſible haſte into England with what power he could raiſe, deputing ſome truſty perſon in his ſtead to rule there in his abſence (the Scots having then invaded the North of England, and advanced almoſt as far as York), and to be at Newcaſtle upon Tyne on the feaſt-day of the Bleſſed Virgin, well fitted with horſe and arms, to march againſt them.

Feb. 3, 1315, he wedded, at Briſtol, to his ſecond wife, Elizabeth the daughter of Gilbert de Clare earl of Glouceſter (by Joan of Acres, daughter to king Edward I. widow of Richard de Burgh earl of Ulſter); and departing this life at his caſtle at Alveton, Aug. 27, 1316, was buried in the abbey of Croxden upon the 13th of October following, Elizabeth his widow being then great with child, and afterwards, on the feaſt day of St. Benedict, delivered of a daughter named Iſabel; he being then ſeiſed of the caſtle of Alveton, with its appurtenances, co. Stafford; of the manors of Newbold and Lutterworth, co. Leiceſter; Farnham, with the hamlet of Sere, co. Bucks; Stoke-Verdon, co. Wiltſhire; as alſo of the caſtles and manors of Weobley and Gwyas-Laci, co. Hereford. By Maud his firſt wife he had iſſue three daughters, who were coheirs; Joan, then 13 years of age; Elizabeth, ten; and Margaret, ſeven: which daughters were afterwards thus married; viz. Joan, to Thomas the ſon and heir of Thomas lord Furnival, who died in childbed Oct. 2, 1334, being then about 30 years of age: whereupon, on the 7th of January following, ſhe was honourably interred in the abbey church of Croxden, before the high altar, betwixt Nicholas de Verdon, ſon to the founder of that abbey, and John de Verdon her great grand-father, by Richard Shepeſheved the then abbot; for on the South ſide (apart) before thoſe two altars, were interred Theobald her grandfather, Theobald her father, and Theobald her ſon, who died an infant; there being preſent at her funeral the abbots of Burton, Cumbermere, Delacres, Hilton, and Beauchief, with the priors of Wirkſop and Eccleſfield. The ſecond daughter, Elizabeth, wedded to Bartholomew de Burgherſh; and Margery, the third, firſt, to William le Blunt; afterwards to Marcus Huſee; and laſtly, to John Crophull. By Elizabeth de Burgh, his ſecond wife, he had only one daughter called Iſabel (born after his death) and afterwards wedded, firſt to Henry lord Ferrers of Groby, and ſecondly to ſir Simon Hawberk. Amongſt which daughters the lands of this great family being afterwards divided; Joan the eldeſt had for her purparty the caſtle of Alveton, with its members, Wotton, Stanton, Farleye, Rammeſovere, Cotene, Bradeleye, Spenne, Denſton, Strongſhull, Shene, Wytſtone, and Bedulf, all in the county of Stafford. Elizabeth, the caſtle of Gwyas-Lacy, with its appurtenances, co. Hereford, and the manor of Stoke upon Terne, co. Salop. Margery, the caſtle of Weobley, co. Hereford, and the manor of Hethe, co. Oxon. And Iſabel, the manor of Lutterworth (excepting Cotteſbach and Bitteſby, parcel thereof); with the manor of Fleckenho, co. Warwick; certain lands in Lodelowe, co. Salop; and the manor of Balterdeleye, with divers lands in Bokenhale and Fenton, co. Stafford[1].

In 1307, ſir Robert de Verdon, knt. granted to John Houſton his manor in Handeſacre, co Stafford; which the ſaid John in 1318 releaſed to ſir Robert; who in the ſame year granted the manor to Robert, ſon of ſir Henry Mauveſyn, knight, by a deed, to which is affixed a neat ſeal of arms, a croſs fretty, circumſcribed, S. ROBERTI DE VERDUN[2].

A ſimilar ſeal of ſir Thomas Verdon, from a deed dated at Dunſter, 1357, is here engraved in Plate LXXXVI.

In 1320, we find the following petition, to the king in parliament, from Nicholas the brother of Theobald;

"A noſtre ſeigñr le roy prie, ſi lui pleſt, Nichol de Verdoun, que come noſtre ſeigñr le roy lui eit grauntie de ſa grace aſcunes terres que furent a Theobald de Verdoun ſoen frere, pur l'eſtente, des queux terres il n'ad ſi noun ꝑtie de celes que fount en Marche, & rien des autres que ſount en terres de pes, dount il ne port mye taunt de profiſt come il y mette couſtages; q'il lui pleſe de cel la avoir regard, et comaunder que aſcun alowaunce lui ſoit fait en ceo q'il deveroit rendre, qare les terres ne ſe eſtendent mye a les cuſtages qu'il y mette." Ita reſponſum eſt: "Soit enquis comebien il rent par an, & ſemble a la juſtice que x livres ſuffirent, & de taunt lui ſoit fait alowaunce par an, ce q'il paie devaunt la gard [1]."

---

[1] Clauſ. 18 Edw. III. p. 1. m. 27.

[2] Shaw's Staffordſhire, vol. I. p. *208.

Elizabeth his ſecond wife, ſurviving him, had for her dowry an aſſignation of the manors of Newbold, Lutterworth, and certain lands in Cotteſbach, co. Leiceſter, the manor of Farnham and hamlet of Sere, co. Bucks, as alſo the manor of Braundon, with its members, and hamlet of Bretford; and likewiſe 40*s.* yearly rent out of the manor of Fleckno, co. Warwick, with the manor of Stoke Verdon, and certain lands in Wynelesford, co. Wilts. It is obſervable that this great lady (who held theſe lands thus in dower) ſtyled herſelf, in all thoſe grants which ſhe made in her widowhood, Elizabeth de Burgh lady of Clare; retaining the ſurname of her firſt huſband, a perſon of higher dignity than Verdon (a cuſtom ſtill continued by great ladies), and yet calling herſelf Domina de Clare, not willing that her paternal name ſhould be forgot.

In 1344, the prioreſs of Gracedieu (on the aid then granted for knighting Edward of Woodſtock, the king's eldeſt ſon) was aſſeſſed 10*s.* for a quarter of one knight's fee in Belton, Whatton, and Diſeworth, parcel of the honour of Leiceſter [2].

By the laſt will and teſtament of the lady Elizabeth de Burgh, bearing date Sept. 25, 1355, ſhe bequeathed her body to be buried in the monaſtery of nuns called Minoreſſes without Aldgate, in the ſuburbs of London; and gave a legacy of £140. to pray for the ſouls of ſir John de Burgh and ſir Theobald de Verdon, her former huſbands; as alſo for ſir Roger Damory her laſt huſband; and all her honeſt ſervants which were either dead or ſhould die in her ſervice; and this to be done with all poſſible ſpeed after her deceaſe. Moreover ſhe gave 100 marks to five ſoldiers, who would be content, within ſeven years next after her deceaſe, to make a journey to the Holy Land, for the ſervice of God, and deſtruction of his enemies. And likewiſe farther bequeathed to thoſe Minoreſſes without Aldgate £20. in money, with a relique of cryſtal, a great chalice of ſilver gilt, and two cruets, one veſtment of white cloth of gold, with what belonged thereunto, three claſps, with 1000 pearls, and a robe of ruſſet, with its appurtenances. Furthermore, to her daughter Elizabeth counteſs of Ulſter ſhe gave all the debt due from her ſon, father to the ſaid Elizabeth, at the day of his death. To her young daughter, Elizabeth Bardulf, a cup of gold; to Agnes her ſiſter a croſs of ſilver; and to the counteſs of Athol, her daughter, two beds of tawney [3].

This great lady died in 1360; and, agreeably to the directions in her will, was buried in the church of the Minoreſſes near Aldgate; but we find no memorial of her in the hiſtories of that nunnery.

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Belton was rated at £1. 19*s.*; and, in the ſubſidy of 1445, at the ſame ſum: but an abatement was then made of 2*s.*

Pedigree of VERDON; compiled principally by Mr. BURTON from the Croxden Regiſters.

Bertram de Verdon, lord of Aulton, co. Stafford, temp. William I. = ...

Norman de Verdon. = Laſceline, dau. of Geffrey de Clinton, of Kenelworth caſtle, co. Warwick; founder of that monaſtery; lord chamberlain and lord treaſurer to king Henry I.

Maud, dau. to Robert Ferrers earl of Derby, firſt wife; ſ. p. = 1. Bertram de Verdon, ſheriff of the counties of Leiceſter and Warwick 1155—1164; ſeneſchal of Ireland [4]; founder of Croxden abbey 1176; died in 1192 at Joppa in Paleſtine, ſ. p. buried at Acon. = Roeſia, joint foundreſs of Croxden abbey; married a ſecond huſband; died 1215.

2. Thomas de Verdon, died in Ireland, in 1199, ſ. p. = Euſtachia, dau. of Gilbert Baſſet (remarried to Richard Camvill).

3. Nicholas de Verdon, afterward abbot of Burton. = ...

1. Roeſia, founded, in her widowhood, the nunnery of Gracedieu about 1229; and, jointly with her ſon, was the founder of the hoſpital at Lutterworth; died 1248. = Theobald le Boteler.

2. Aleva. = William Pantulf, baron of Wemme.

Margaret, dau. and heir of Gilbert de Lacy. = 1. John de Verdon, ſo called from his mother, who kept her name; lord of Weobley, in right of his firſt wife; died 1274. = Alianor, 2d wife, living 1276.

2. Nicholas de Verdon, knt. joint-founder of Lutterworth hoſpital; living at Oddeſton in 1277. = ...

Elias de Oddeſton, 1292 = ...

John de Verdon, 1313. = ...

Theobald lord Verdon, conſtable of Ireland; died 1309. = Maud, ſiſter of Roger Mortimer, earl of March.

Elias de Verdon, lord of Oddeſton, 1361. = . .

Alice, marr. to ſir Hugh de Meignell, knt.

1. John de Verdon, died in Ireland in 1297.

Maud, dau. of Edmund Mortimer, lord Mortimer of Wigmore, firſt wife; died 1312. = 2. Theobald lord Verdon, lord juſtice of Ireland; died at Allen caſtle 1316. = Elizabeth, dau. of Gilbert de Clare earl of Glouceſter (widow of John Burgh earl of Ulſter); 2d wife, married 1315; and thirdly to ſir Roger Damory; died 1306.

3. Nicholas de Verdon, living 1320.

Richard de Verdon, died ſ. p.

Maud, = Sir Richard Chetwynd, of Grendon, knt.

1. Joan, born 1304; marr. to Thomas, ſon and heir of Thomas lord Furnival, the fourth of that name (then called lord Furnival junior) died 1334 [5].

2. Elizabeth, born 1307; married to ſir Bartholomew de Burgherſh.

3. Margaret, born 1310; firſt married to ſir Will. Blount, knt.; 2dly, to Marcus Huſee. = Sir John de Crophull, of Sutton Bonington, Notts, 3d huſband; d. 1384.

4. Iſabel, poſthuma, born 1316; marr. firſt to Henry lord Grey of Groby; and, 2dly, to ſir Simon Hawberk.

Sir Thomas de Crophull, knt. = ...

Agnes, dau. and heir, married to ſir Walter Devereux, knt. of Bodenham Devereux, co. Hereford; anceſtor to the earl of Eſſex; died 1403.

---

[1] Petitions in Parliament, 14 Edw. III; Rot. Parl. vol. I. p. 385.
[2] Rot. Aux. 20 Edw. III.
[3] Iſlip, p. 184. b.

[4] "Bertram de Verdon ſeneſchallus Hiberniæ antequam Johannes filius regis fuit dominus ibidem." Harl. MSS. 6148. p. 68; citing Chart. 10 Edw. II.

[5] By this lady a great increaſe of inheritance was brought to the Furnival family; in which it continued but two ſucceſſions; when falling to another female heir Joan, ſhe brought the whole by marriage to Ralph earl of Weſtmorland; whoſe only daughter Joan in like manner carried it to the famous John Talbot, created earl of Shrewſbury in 1442.

William Ward, of Belton, plowman, received letters of pardon from Henry V. 1414, as did many others, who, like him, had been convicted of holding "heretical opinions, and other manifeſt errors, contrary to the Catholic law; and of conſpiring to annul the regal and epiſcopal, and every religious order in the kingdom; rob and deſtroy the cathedrals and religious houſes, and chooſe ſir John Oldcaſtle, of Cowling caſtle, regent of the kingdom; and to this purpoſe intending to raiſe privately a body of 20,000 men in military array, to make an inſurrection, and meet on the Wedneſday after Epiphany, in the firſt year of his reign, in a large field in the village and pariſh of St. Giles's without the Old Temple Bar, London." The parties ſo pardoned, having been convicted of the above treaſons and felonies, were ſentenced to be drawn through the city of London to the ſaid field in St. Giles's, and there hanged on a new gallows. Among them was Nicholas Selby, iremonger, of Leiceſterſhire[1].

In the pariſh of Belton the nunnery of Gracedieu had, amongſt other poſſeſſions, a water-mill, which was in 1540 under leaſe to Thomas Rigmaiden, at the yearly rent of £3. 6*s.* 8*d.* The tithes of the pariſh belonged likewiſe to that nunnery, and were valued at the diſſolution at £9. a year; and the Crown's receiver declared them to have been reſerved to the uſe of the houſhold of the nunnery. At this period there was a cuſtom here called Beuryppys (valued at 7*s.* 2*d.* yearly), being ſome kind of compoſition for the works of 37 tenants there, declared not to be accounted for to the Crown, becauſe they appertained to the farmers of the demeſne lands of Gracedieu. The tenants of Belton paid alſo 13*s.* 4*d.* to have common of paſture in Charnwood[2].

The manor of Belton reverting to the crown, was granted to ſir Humphrey Foſter[3], knight; who ſoon after aliened it to John Beaumont, eſq. who had been appointed, Jan. 30, 1534-5, to take the eccleſiaſtical ſurvey of the county of Leiceſter; and by king Edward VI. was named maſter of the Rolls, Dec. 13, 1550[4]; but, having forfeited this manor, it was included, June 22, 1553, in the following very ample grant to Francis earl of Huntingdon:

"Edwardus, &c. Sciatis quod nos, in conſideratione boni, veri, fidelis, & acceptabilis ſervicii, per dilectum, &c. Franciſcum comitem Huntingdon nobis antehac multipliciter preſtita, &c. conceſſimus, &c. prefato comiti Huntingdon, totum illud ſcitum, &c. capitalis manſionis manerii noſtri de Gracedieu, ac grangiam noſtram, &c. vocatam Myrrell Grange, ac rectoriam & eccleſiam noſtram de Belton, &c. in comitatu noſtro Leic', nuper parcellam terrarum, &c. Johannis Beaumont, &c. necnon advocationem, &c. vicarie de Belton predict'; ac etiam totum illud clauſum terre, &c. necnon totum illud manerium noſtrum de Belton, in dicto comitatu noſtro Leic', &c. parcell' dictarum terrarum, &c. dicti Johannis Beaumont; ac totam illam rectoriam & eccleſiam de Caſtle Donyngton, in dicto comitatu noſtro Leic', &c. parcellam poſſeſſionum, &c. dicti Johannis Beaumont; necnon advocationem vicarie de Caſtle Donyngton predict'; ac omnia & ſingula meſſuagia, molendina, & terras, &c. in villis, campis, parochiis, ſeu hamelettis, de Gracedieu, Myrrell, Charnewood, & Belton, &c. ac omnia & ſingula meſſuagia, &c. terras, &c. in villis, campis, parochiis, ſeu hamlettis, de Oſcharthorpe, Thringeſtone, Caſtle Donyngton Spittle, Caſtle Donyngton, Whatton, alias Long-Whatton, Dyſworthe, Swanyngton, Overton Sawſye, Loughborowe, Hatherne, Knightthorpe, & Shepeſhede, in dicto comitatu noſtro Leic', ac nuper parcell' terrarum & poſſeſſionum, &c. dicti Johannis Beaumont, &c.; que quidem maneria, &c. et cetera premiſſa, &c. extendunt ad claram annuam valorem clviii lī. viii s̃. v d̃. Habend', &c. prefato Franciſco comiti Huntingdon, ac heredibus & aſſignatis ſuis, ad feod' firm' in perpetuum, &c.; tenend' de nobis, heredibus & aſſignatis noſtris, in ſocagio, ut de manerio noſtro de Eſt-Grenewich, in com' noſtro Kanc', &c.; ac reddendo inde annuatim nobis, &c. durante naturali vitâ Johanne Wakerley, modò uxoris Ricardi Wakerley, cxxxviii lī. viii s̃. v d̃. legalis monete Anglie, ad curiam noſtram Augmentationum, &c. ad feſta Sancti Michaelis Archangelis & Annunciationis beate Marie Virginis, per equales portiones, &c.; ac etiam reddend', &c. dicte Johanne Wakerley, durante vitâ ſuâ naturali, xx lī. ad eadem feſta, &c.; ſolvend' ac reddend' annuatim nobis, heredibus & ſucceſſoribus noſtris, de et pro premiſſis, immediatè poſt mortem dicte Johanne Wakerley, clviii lī. v s̃. et octo denarios, legalis monete Anglie, ad curiam noſtram Augmentationum, &c."[5]

In 1564, there were 50 families in Belton.

In 1567, Henry earl of Huntingdon was required to ſhew by what title he held the manor of Belton[6]; which he afterwards ſold to ſir Francis Beaumont, knt. chief juſtice of the common pleas (ſon of the former poſſeſſor); who died April 12, 1598, ſeiſed of divers meſſuages in Belton, held of the queen in capite, by knight's ſervice, leaving Henry his ſon and heir[7].

Jan. 30, 41 Eliz. On motion made this day in court, by Mr. Serjeant Williams, on the behalf of Henry Beaumont, eſq. her majeſty's ward, ſon of Mr. Juſtice Beaumont, lately deceaſed, Thomas Michell, Francis Pickering, and others: That whereas our late ſovereign lord king Edward the Sixth, by his letters patent, dated the 22d of June, in the 7th year of his reign, granted unto the right honourable Francis earl of Huntingdon certain lands in fee-farm, in Belton, Oſgathorpe, Overton Saucie, Thringſton, Whatton, Sheepſhed, and other places within the county of Leiceſter, lately accrued unto him by the forfeiture of John Beaumont, eſq. reſerving a rent of £158. per annum; which lands Henry earl of Huntingdon, laſt deceaſed, ſold unto Mr. Juſtice Beaumont lately deceaſed, the ſaid Henry Beaumont, and divers others, reſerving the ſaid rent of £158. or ſomewhat more, together with the royalties of the ſaid manor; and tied therein by covenant to pay the ſame rent unto him, and he being patented to anſwer the ſame into the receipt of the Exchequer, or to her Majeſty's general receiver of that county; ſince whoſe death, the ſaid tenants, or the moſt part of them, have paid their rents for theſe three years laſt paſt unto the right honourable George now earl of Huntingdon, who hath not anſwered the ſame unto her Majeſty in diſcharge of the ſaid fee-farm for theſe three years laſt paſt: Whereupon the purſuivant being ſent to divers of the ſaid tenants to diſtrain their goods, they, for ſafeguard of their cattle, entered into bond to ſtand unto the order of the Court for payment of the ſaid money, notwithſtanding they had before paid the ſame unto the ſaid earl: Whereupon, at the motion of the ſaid Mr. Serjeant Williams, it is this day ordered by the Court, that all ſuch money as the ſaid tenants, or any of them, have paid unto the ſaid earl for theſe three years laſt paſt, parcel of the fee-farm of the ſaid £158. per annum; and ſuch other money as remaineth in any of the tenants' hands of the ſaid fee-farm, which they have neither paid to the ſaid earl nor her Majeſty, ſhall be forthwith brought into this Court by the ſaid earl and the reſt of the tenants, unleſs the ſaid earl before this day ſevennight ſhew good cauſe to the contrary; and that henceforth the ſaid tenants do no more pay the ſaid fee-farm of £158. unto the ſaid earl or his officers, but unto her Majeſty's general receiver of that county. And no further proceſs to go out againſt the ſaid tenants; but that ſuch bonds as they are entered into for their appearance here in Court, and for the payment of the ſaid money, to be reſpited until this Court ſhall have taken further order therein upon the anſwer of the ſaid earl[8].

March 29, 1606, it was found that ſir Henry Beaumont, knt. died ſeiſed of certain lands and tenements in Belton; and John Beaumont, eſq. of Gracedieu, was his brother and next heir[9].

---

[1] Rymer, vol. IX. p. 194.

[2] Bailiffs Accompts in the Augmentation Office.

[3] 7 Pars Original. 30 Hen. VI. Rot. 187.

[4] Pat. 4 Edw. VI. p. 6.

[5] Harl. MSS. 3381; & 4 Pars Original. 7 Edw. VI. Rot. 85.

[6] Mich. Rec. 9 Eliz. Rot. 136.

[7] Eſch. 40 Eliz.

[8] From the original record in the Court of Exchequer.

[9] Eſch. 4 James I.

After ſir Henry's death, this lordſhip ſeems to have been alienated to the family of Eyre; whoſe pedigree (as given in p. 649) was entered here in 1619.

The freeholders here in 1630 were, Robert Rearſby, Thomas Mitchell, George Roulſton, John Errington, William Pickering, and John Criſpe.

"The manor of Belton," ſays Mr. Burton in 1641, now belongeth to Mr. William Eyre. The impropriation is the inheritance of ſir John Beaumont of Gracedieu, baronet[1]."

In 1655, 9*s*. 6*d*. was collected in Belton, for the relief of the poor Proteſtants in Piedmont.

"Jan. 13, 1663. I Nicholas Hill, clerk, miniſter of Belton, my caſe of difference (as I conceive) with John Roſe, clerk, miniſter of Oſgathorpe; both our livings being in the gift and patronage of the right honourable the earl and counteſs of Huntingdon.

About the year 1646, Mr. Parkes was ſequeſtered from the vicarage of Belton; and the ſame year one Mr. Watts was put into the ſaid vicarage, and held it about ſeven years; and in that time ſuffered the buildings to go very much out of repair, and then left it voluntarily. After Mr. Watts had left the ſaid vicarage, there was no ſettled miniſter at Belton by the ſpace of two years; and in that time the vicarage went ſtill more out of repair. Then, I being ſettled for my life, by the right honourable Ferdinando then earl of Huntingdon, in a living at Smithſby in the county of Derby, was earneſtly deſired by the pariſhioners of Belton to come to be their miniſter, they telling me that Mr. Parkes had accepted of, and was ſettled in, a living at Caſhalton beyond London, as good or better than Belton, and ſo not likely ever to trouble me or them again for fifths or any thing elſe. Hereupon, conceiving that I ſhould do Mr. Parkes no wrong if I ſhould come to Belton, I did get the conſent of the ſaid Ferdinando earl of Huntingdon, with the good liking of his lady the counteſs, ſo to do. And, in September 1655, I made a journey to London, about getting an order from the commiſſioners then in power for my ſettlement at Belton; and in that journey and buſineſs I was from home about ſix weeks, and laid out and ſpent above £9. And after I had gotten my order for Belton, which was in October 1655, I laid out above £30. before June next after following, in repairing the vicarage-houſe there, to make it habitable for me and my wife to come and live in; and the ſame year, after I was come to it and lived in it, I laid out £10. more in repairing it.—£40.

In the year 1660, I made two journeys to London; the one to agree with Mr. Parkes for moiety and fifths; the other to pay him; and in thoſe two journeys I ſpent (as near as I can remember) about £10. Alſo, in the ſaid year 1660, I paid to Mr. Parkes £20. for the moiety of the living at Belton for one year then paſt; and alſo £15. in money towards fifths for four years then paſt; and preached for him one quarter of a year, in further ſatisfaction for fifths, which Mr. Parkes did value to be worth £10.; and alſo paid 18*s*. for him for tenths, in further ſatisfaction for fifths. In toto, £45. 18*s*.

In Auguſt 1655, the pariſhioners of Belton, upon my conſent to come to them, did engage that I ſhould have all the dues and tithes which did belong to the vicarage of Belton that preſent year, or a reaſonable value in money in lieu thereof (except the tithe corn and peas growing on the twelve yard-lands in Long Whatton, which they did give to Mr. Watts, to keep him from coming to them again), which they did value to be worth about £16; and they valued all the reſt which I was to have that year to be worth about £25.; but I think it did not riſe to ſo much by a good deal. The ſaid pariſhioners at Belton did at the ſame time agree to give me all the arrears due, remaining in their hands unpaid; which they told me was the arrears for one quarter of the year, or thereabouts, next after the year that Mr. Watts went away in, except what ſhould be thought reaſonable for the ſatisfying of ſuch miniſters as had preached amongſt them: whereupon I expected (I am confident above the ſpace of a whole year) ſome conſiderable part of thoſe arrears to be paid me by ſome of the pariſhioners, but had not one penny of them in all that ſpace: and then I got Robert Leaveſley the elder to go with me to ſee what we ſhould gather up; and we got 6*s*. 8*d*. of William Pickering, and other 6*s*. 8*d*. of John Burrowes; and Robert Leaveſley himſelf paid me in toto £1. 3*s*. 4*d*.; and this was all that I had or could get of thoſe arrears; and what became of the reſt I cannot tell; and why they did not ſatisfy thoſe miniſters with them, which had preached amongſt them, I cannot tell neither.

Mr. Roſe ſaith, he preached divers ſermons at Belton in thoſe two years after Mr. Watts went away, and before I came thither; and is deſirous to be paid for the preaching of them; and upon Saturday laſt, being the 9th day of January, 1663, John Frier the apparitor came to Belton to me, and cited me to appear at the court to be holden at Leiceſter the 21ſt day of this inſtant January; and I aſking him what it did concern, he told me that it concerned Mr. Roſe; and that Mr. Roſe did ſay that I had money in my hand which belongs to him; and I conceive I have not any; for, if I did know I had any, I would give it him without ſuit.

Firſt, if Mr. Roſe does expect to be paid for thoſe ſermons he preached at Belton before I came thither, yet I conceive I have no reaſon to pay him, becauſe at my firſt coming I laid out (as aforeſaid) more money in repairing the vicarage, to make it habitable for me and my wife to live in, than I had for all tithes and arrears of tithes which had grown due from the time of Mr. Watts's going away to the time of my coming to Belton, which was two years, beſides the charge of my journey to London, which was above £9. as aforeſaid. Secondly, Becauſe there was one quarter of a year's arrears remaining in the pariſhioners hands unpaid, which they agreed that I ſhould have, excepting what ſhould be thought meet for the ſatisfying of ſuch miniſters as had preached amongſt them; and of that I never had above £1. 3*s*. 4*d*.; whereas I expected a good deal more; and thought I was wronged becauſe I had no more of it. Thirdly, I was made to believe that Mr. Parkes would not come again to trouble me; and yet he did come again, and troubled me; and his coming again and troubling of me as aforeſaid did coſt me above £50. Beſides, he did come again, and put me out of the living, and held it from me ſo long as he lived, which was above two years. I did take it unkindly from Mr. Roſe, that he ſhould cauſe me to be cited to the court at Leiceſter in the depth of winter, and not give me notice of it before he ſo did it, conſidering how friendly I ſhewed myſelf to him formerly in ſpeaking to my brother Sherfeild ſeveral times in his behalf; which he did then acknowledge a kindneſs to him from me, and did give me thanks for it[2]."

In 1722, 32 freeholders polled from this pariſh; and in 1775, we find 35 names.

Wedneſday, Feb. 23, 1774.
Leiceſterſhire. } Whereas Theophilus Henry Haſtings, clerk, plaintiff, did, in Hilary term, in the ſeventh year of the reign of his preſent Majeſty king George the Third, exhibit his bill of complaint in this honourable court, againſt William Toon, Thomas Gibbon, and John Sutton, defendants; which bill being afterwards amended, in purſuance of an order bearing date the 3d of June, 1769, and Anthony Keck, eſq. Tomlinſon Buſby, Hugh Platt, Mary Clerke, and Eliza Clerke, were made defendants thereto; and the ſaid bill ſo amended ſet forth, that the ſaid plaintiff was in 1763 duly inſtituted and inducted into the vicarage and pariſh church of Belton, in the county of Leiceſter, and had ever ſince duly performed the cure there; and as vicar was lawfully entitled, by endowment or preſcription, to all tithes of hay, wool, lamb, turnips, and all ſmall or vicarial tithes, ariſing, growing, renewing, and increaſing annually in the ſaid pariſh and titheable places thereof, and which had been paid and anſwered to any of his predeceſſors, vicars of the ſaid pariſh, and alſo to all ſuch cuſtomary payments or compoſitions due and payable by virtue of

---

[1] Burton, MS.

[2] Carte's MSS. in the Bodleian Library, EEEE. N° 16.

any antient cuſtom, uſage, or preſcription, in the ſaid pariſh, in lieu of tithes in kind: That, ever ſince the ſaid plaintiff's inſtitution and induction, the defendant John Sutton had been owner and occupier of divers cloſes or parcels of land, ſituate in ſaid pariſh, called The Two Middle Fields, the Two Sheep Fields, the Flatt, and the Two Goſſy and Muggiſton's Cloſes, and alſo ſeveral parcels of land lying in the foreſt of Charnwood, within the ſaid pariſh and the titheable places thereof: That the defendant William Toone had during all the ſaid time been owner and occupier of divers parcels of land lying in the ſaid pariſh, called the Hill Park, the Old Spring, the Dowell, the Calves Cloſe, the Clover Cloſe, Lockington Cloſe, Pool Head Meadow, and ſeveral other cloſes, the names whereof the ſaid plaintiff could not diſcover, and alſo ſeveral cloſes lying in the ſaid foreſt of Charnwood: That the ſaid defendant Thomas Gibbon had during all the ſaid time occupied three ſeveral cloſes or parcels of meadow and paſture land, lying in the ſaid pariſh, called The New Cloſes, and alſo ſeveral pieces of land lying in the ſaid foreſt of Charnwood: That, in each and every year ſince the plaintiff's inſtitution and induction to the ſaid vicarage, the ſaid defendants reſpectively had great quantities of hay growing upon the ſaid lands occupied by them as aforeſaid, and had alſo fed and depaſtured thereon reſpectively, in each of the ſaid years a great number of barren and unprofitable cattle, the tithes of which hay and of the agiſtment of ſuch barren and unprofitable cattle belonged to and ought to have been ſatisfied to the ſaid plaintiff; but that the ſaid defendants had mowed and carried away the ſaid hay, without ſetting out any tithes thereof, or making the plaintiff any ſatisfaction for the tithes of the agiſtment of the ſaid cattle: That the ſaid defendants had in each year during the ſaid time kept, fed, and depaſtured a great number of ſheep upon the ſaid lands, which had dropped or yeaned a great number of lambs in the ſaid pariſh, and produced great quantities of wool: That the ſaid defendants had ſeverally, from or upon the ſaid lands, in each year, large quantities of turnips, which were gathered by them; and alſo a great number of calves, cocks and hens, and other poultry; and alſo large quantities of milk, eggs, apples, and divers other titheable matters: That the ſaid defendants John Sutton and William Toone had dropped in each year upon their ſaid lands a great number of colts; and had alſo divers pigs farrowed; and a large number of pigeons, geeſe, and turkeys hatched; and a large ſtock of bees, and a great quantity of honey; the tithes of all which amounted to a large ſum of money: And the ſaid plaintiff had applied to the ſaid defendants, John Sutton, William Toone, and Thomas Gibbons, to account with him for the ſame; which they had refuſed to do; the ſaid defendants, John Sutton and William Toone, pretending that the lands occupied by them reſpectively, or the greateſt part thereof, were and had been for time immemorial parcel of an antient grange, called Meriel Grange, which belonged to, or was parcel of, an antient monaſtery, or priory, called Gracedieu, in the county of Leiceſter, and was diſſolved in the reign of king Henry the Eighth, and became veſted by act of parliament in the crown; and that the ſaid Grange, with all the lands thereto belonging, were long before and alſo at the time of the diſſolution of the ſaid monaſtery or priory, and alſo from time whereof the memory of man was not to the contrary, exempt from and diſcharged of and from the payment of any tithes whatſoever; whereas the ſaid plaintiff by his ſaid bill charged, that, admitting the ſaid lands occupied by the ſaid defendants were parcel of the ſaid antient Grange, yet that they were not exempt from the payment of tithes, becauſe the ſaid monaſtery was one of the leſſer monaſteries, and therefore could not legally be entitled to any ſuch exemption: And they alſo pretended that the defendants, Anthony Keck, Anthony-James Keck, Tomlinſon Buſhby, Hugh Platt, Mary Clerke, and Eliza Clerke, as owners of the ſaid impropriate rectory of Belton, were intitled to all tithes in kind ariſing and payable within the ſaid pariſh, and particularly to tithes claimed by the ſaid plaintiff; whereas the plaintiff inſiſted they, as owners of the ſaid rectory impropriate, were duly entitled to the tithes of corn and grain yearly ariſing within the ſaid pariſh: And the ſaid defendant Gibbons pretended that no tithes were due and payable for the three new cloſes occupied by him in the ſaid pariſh; whereas the ſaid bill charged, that the ſaid three new cloſes were formerly wood-land, and that, they being now cleared, tithes were due to the ſaid plaintiff for the ſame; and that the plaintiff had received tithes in kind of a cloſe of land in the ſaid pariſh, called The Rotherys, formerly wood-land, but lately cleared: Therefore, that the ſeveral defendants might anſwer the premiſſes, and that the defendants, John Sutton, William Toone, and Thomas Gibbons, might be decreed to come to a juſt and fair account with the plaintiff for the ſingle value of the tithes ſo by them ſeverally ſubtracted; the plaintiff waiving all penalties incurred by them for not ſetting out their ſaid tithes, and for general relief was the end of the bill. To which bill the ſaid defendants, being ſerved with proceſs of ſubpœna to appear and anſwer, appeared, and filed their ſeveral anſwers: And the ſaid defendants William Toon and John Sutton, by their anſwers to the plaintiff's ſaid original bill, ſaid, they believed the ſaid plaintiff, in July 1763, became, and ſtill was, vicar of the ſaid pariſh of Belton; believed he was not entitled, either by endowment or preſcription, to all tithes of hay, wool, lambs, turnips, and all ſmall or vicarial tithes annually ariſing, growing, renewing, and increaſing within the ſaid pariſh, nor to any cuſtomary payments or compoſitions in lieu thereof, nor to any tithes in kind of the ſeveral titheable matters and things, and from the lands and grounds in the bill mentioned: The defendants ſaid the rectory of Belton was an impropriate rectory; and that Anthony Keck, eſq. Hugh Platt, Mary Clerke, and Eliza Clerke, or ſome of them, were the impropriate rectors or owners thereof, and as ſuch entitled to all the tithes ariſing within the ſaid pariſh, except as to ſuch parts thereof as were exempt from the payment of tithes: The defendant William Toone admitted he then was, and for ſeven years paſt had been, owner and occupier of ſeveral cloſes of land, ſituate in the ſaid pariſh, called Lockington's Cloſe, Wellfield's Great Pool's Head, The Great Park, Dowell Cloſe, the Old Spring, and Little Parks: And the defendant John Sutton admitted he then was, and for eighteen years paſt had been, owner and occupier of ſeveral cloſes of land, called The Middle Fields, Sheep Fields, the Flatt, and Goſſy, and Muggiſton's Cloſes; and alſo ſeveral parcels of land lying in the ſaid foreſt of Charnwood, and in the open fields of the ſaid pariſh of Belton: The ſaid defendants William Toone and John Sutton ſaid, they had been informed, and doubted not to prove, that the monaſtery, or religious houſe or priory of Gracedieu, in the county of Leiceſter, was an antient monaſtery, religious houſe, or priory, and was one of the religious houſes diſſolved in the reign of king Henry the Eighth: That the ſaid monaſtery, religious houſe, or priory, and the ſite thereof, and all the poſſeſſions, lands, tenements, and hereditaments thereto belonging, were by act of parliament given to, or veſted in, the ſaid king Henry the Eighth, in as full and ample manner as the prioreſs or convent had held and enjoyed the ſame: That there was, and for time immemorial had been, in the ſaid pariſh, an antient Grange, called Meriel Grange, conſiſting of many paſture grounds and other hereditaments there; and that the ſaid Grange, with its appurtenances, long before, and alſo at the time of the diſſolution of the ſaid monaſtery, religious houſe, or priory, was parcel of the poſſeſſions thereof, and as ſuch became veſted in the ſaid king Henry the Eighth, in ſuch manner and by ſuch means, as the aforeſaid: The ſaid defendants believed, and doubted not to prove, that the ſaid Grange, with all the lands and grounds thereto belonging, or parcel thereof, were long before, and alſo at the time of the diſſolution of the ſaid monaſtery, and alſo from time whereof the memory of man was not to the contrary, by ſome legal and ſufficient ways and means exempt, free, and diſcharged, and held and enjoyed free and diſcharged from the payment of any tithes whatſoever, of or ariſing from the ſaid Grange, or any of the lands, tenements, or grounds thereto belonging; and that the ſame had been all along held and enjoyed accordingly: Severally ſaid, they did not know or believe, or ever heard, till by the plaintiff's ſaid bill or his preſent demand, that any tithes of or ariſing from the ſaid Grange, or the lands or grounds thereto belonging, or any part thereof, were ever ſet out or paid, or any compoſition or ſatisfaction made for the ſame, to the vicar of the ſaid pariſh, or ever demanded till lately by the ſaid plaintiff, ſave that in the years 1760 and 1761 the defendant William Toone admitted he occupied part of the ſaid Grange, to wit, one cloſe called Welfield, then containing 46 acres, now divided into ſix cloſes, and, not knowing the ſame was exempt or diſcharged from the payment of tithes, the late and preſent vicar of the ſaid pariſh applied to him for payment of a rate or compoſition tithe of 6*s.* 8*d. per annum* for the ſaid cloſe called Welfield, and aſſured the defendant it had been always paid by the former occupiers of the ſaid cloſe; and he was prevailed upon, for peace ſake, and as it was a ſmall ſum, to pay the ſame for ſix or ſeven years; and the ſaid defendant inſiſted he was impoſed upon, becauſe the ſaid rate or compoſition tithe was not due or payable to the ſaid vicar: The defendants had been informed and believed that the ſaid Grange heretofore conſiſted, among other things, of divers large parcels of open grounds and paſtures, which had ſince been incloſed, whereby the names had been altered, and new names given, but they believed that the boundaries thereof were well known; inſiſted, that all the lands and grounds ſo occupied by them were, and for time immemorial had been, parcel of the ſaid antient Grange, except about 10 acres, which the ſaid defendant John Sutton admitted lay in the open fields of the ſaid pariſh; and the ſaid defendants inſiſted, that all the lands and grounds ſo occupied by them in Meriel Grange were exempt and diſcharged from the payment of any tithes in kind to the vicar of the ſaid pariſh, and that no tithes had ever been paid for the produce thereof, or of any part thereof: The ſaid defendants ſet forth in their ſaid anſwers an account of the number of acres the lands and grounds by them reſpectively occupied contained, and of the quantities of hay and other titheable matters and things, which (as they believed, they having kept no particular account thereof) had ariſen, grown, or increaſed on the ſaid lands and grounds ſince the ſaid plaintiff had become vicar thereof; admitted they had not ſet out any tithes of the ſaid hay, or of the other titheable matters and things, or made the plaintiff any ſatisfaction for the ſame, becauſe they never believed the plaintiff was entitled thereto: And the ſaid William Toone, by his anſwer to the ſaid plaintiff's amended bill, ſaid he did not know, nor could ſet forth, whether the monaſtery, religious houſe, or priory, called Gracedieu, was or was not one of the leſſer monaſteries that were diſſolved in the reign of king Henry the Eighth; and therefore referred to the acts of parliament made for the diſſolution of monaſteries: And the defendant Thomas Gibbons, by his anſwer to the ſaid plaintiff's original bill, admitted the ſaid plaintiff was duly preſented, inſtituted, and inducted into the vicarage of the pariſh of Belton at the time in the bill mentioned, and had ever ſince performed the cure there; admitted, ever ſince the plaintiff's inſtitution, he had occupied three cloſes of land in the ſaid pariſh, called The New Cloſe, Far New Cloſe, and Nether New Cloſe, each containing 10 acres; and denied he had occupied any land in the foreſt of Charnwood; believed, and doubted not to prove, that the ſame was an extra-parochial place, commonable at all times of the year to the inhabitants of the ſeveral pariſhes that lie contiguous; ſaid that the Nether Cloſe, for many years, and particularly during the time in the plaintiff's bill mentioned, had been fed and depaſtured with his horſes uſed for huſbandry, and ſcarcely, if at all, with other cattle; that the Far New Cloſe, during the years 1764, 1765, 1766, and 1767, was uſed in tillage; but, between the times of ſowing the ſame with corn, and getting the crops thereof, calves and ſheep were depaſtured thereon; and about three or four acres of very poor land, part thereof, were in the ſaid years mowed and made into hay: That in the years 1766 and 1767 he grew clover on the ſaid New Cloſe, and admitted he mowed and carried away the ſame without ſetting out the tithes thereof; did not know or believe that any tithes in kind were ever paid for the ſaid cloſes within time of memory, or that the ſame had ever been demanded, except by the plaintiff; ſaid he alſo rented in the ſaid pariſh 20 acres, which lie diſperſedly in the open fields, and not known by any particular names, and three pieces of incloſed land, called reſpectively The Homeſtead, Great Meadow, and Little Meadow, together with the ſaid three cloſes; which land and cloſes had been occupied together as long as any perſon remembered; had heard and believed the occupier of the ſaid 20 acres of land of the ſaid Homeſtead, Great Meadow, and Little Meadow, and of the ſaid three cloſes called The New Cloſes, had for time immemorial paid to the vicar of Belton 6*s.* 8*d.* yearly at Chriſtmas, for and in lieu of the tithe of hay of the ſaid lands and cloſes, in every year in which they had produced hay: the defendant ſet forth an account of the lambs and wool he had from his ſheep depaſtured on the ſaid lands in the years 1764, 1766, and 1767; ſaid, that in the winter part of the ſaid years the ſheep were fed in the ſaid cloſes, and in the ſummer part in the ſaid foreſt; that part of the ſaid lambs were yeaned, and the whole of the ſaid wool ſhorn, upon the ſaid foreſt; but believed the greateſt part of the lambs were yeaned in the ſaid New Cloſes. The defendant ſaid there had been within the ſaid pariſh, for time immemorial, a conſtant cuſtomary uſage to pay to the vicar of the ſaid pariſh for ſheep ſo depaſtured and ſhorn, on behalf, the tithe of the wool in kind, or one twentieth part of the money ariſing from the ſale of ſuch wool, at the election of the vicar of the ſaid pariſh; and for the lambs ſo yeaned, one twentieth part of the value of ſuch lambs, in full for the tithes thereof to the ſaid vicar in each year: And the ſaid defendant ſet forth an account of the number of cows and calves, hens and cocks, he had in the ſaid year 1764, 1765, 1766, and 1767; ſaid there had been within the ſaid pariſh an immemorial cuſtom of 1½*d.* paid annually for each cow having a calf, for and in lieu of the tithe milk and calf of each cow; and two eggs had cuſtomarily been paid at Eaſter for every hen, and three eggs for every cock yearly, in lieu of tithes of cocks and hens; and denied he had, during the ſaid years, any other poultry: Said he had paid the plaintiff, as due for 1763, the ſaid modus of 6*s.* 8*d.* and alſo the tithes for the wool, lambs, milk and calves, and cocks and hens, after the rates aforeſaid; but did not take any receipt for the ſame, nor ever ſaw nor did believe it had been uſual to give any, had been always ready and willing, and had offered to pay the plaintiff, after the ſaid rates, for 1764, 1765, 1766, and 1767; but that the ſaid plaintiff had refuſed to accept the ſame; and inſiſted to have the ſaid tithes in kind, except with reſpect to cocks and hens, the cuſtomary payment for which he had paid the plaintiff up to Eaſter laſt incluſive: And the ſaid defendant Thomas Gibbons, by his anſwer to the ſaid plaintiff's amended bill, ſaid he never heard that the ſaid three cloſes, called the New Cloſes, of which he was occupier, ever were wood-land; had heard that the plaintiff, from the time of his marriage with the daughter of Eliza Brooks, widow, deceaſed, tenant for life of the cloſe in the bill mentioned, called The Botherys, had received tithes for the ſaid cloſe; never knew or heard that any tithes for the ſaid cloſe were ever paid to, or demanded by, any former vicars of the ſaid pariſh; and therefore apprehended that ſuch payment to the plaintiff was ſubmitted to on account of his relationſhip, or in proſpect of his ſaid marriage: And the ſaid defendants, Hugh Platt, Mary Clerke, and Elizabeth Clerke, by their anſwer, claimed to be entitled to one undivided moiety or half part of the rectory or parſonage impropriate of Belton, and of all tithes of corn and grain, and all other great or predial tithes, yearly ariſing, growing, or renewing within the ſaid pariſh: And the ſaid defendants, Anthony Keck, eſq. Anthony-James Keck, eſq. and Tomlinſon Buſhby, an infant, by the ſaid Anthony-James Keck, his guardian, by their anſwer, claim alſo to be entitled to the other moiety or half part of the ſaid rectory or parſonage impropriate of the ſaid pariſh of Belton, and as ſuch entitled, by ſome antient uſage, endowment, or preſcription, to the tithes of hay, wool, lambs, and all the vicarial and ſmall tithes ariſing within the ſaid pariſh, except in reſpect to the ſeveral parcels of arable land lying diſperſedly in the open fields, containing 10 acres, which the defendants, Anthony Keck, eſq. and Anthony-James Keck, eſq. ſaid they had been informed and believed had never paid any vicarial or ſmall tithes whatſoever; and denied they knew, or ever heard, ſave by the plaintiff's bill, that ſuch of the lands in the ſaid pariſh as were parcel of an antient Grange, formerly part of the poſſeſſions of a monaſtery, religious houſe, or priory, called Gracedieu, in the ſaid county of Leiceſter, were by any means diſcharged and exempt from the payment of all tithes; and therefore claimed to be entitled to a moiety of all great tithes whatſoever yearly ariſing on the ſaid lands and grounds, in like manner as they claimed the ſaid tithes from the other lands and grounds in the ſaid pariſh: And all the ſaid defendants, Hugh Platt, Mary Clerke, Elizabeth Clerke, Anthony Keck, Anthony-James Keck, and Tomlinſon Buſby, in their ſaid anſwers, denied they ſet up or claimed any right or title to the vicarial or ſmall tithes claimed by the plaintiff: And whereas the ſaid John Sutton having, ſince the putting in of his ſaid anſwer to the ſaid plaintiff's bill, departed this life, the ſaid ſuit and proceedings as to him abated; whereupon the ſaid plaintiff, in Michaelmas Term, 10 George III. exhibited his bill of revivor in this court againſt the ſaid William Toone, and alſo Thomas Warner, Thomas Jones, and Mary Sutton, the executors of the laſt will and teſtament of the ſaid John Sutton, deceaſed, to have the ſaid ſuit and proceedings revived; to which bill the ſaid defendants, being ſerved with proceſs of ſubpœna, appeared, and put in their anſwer; and thereby admitted that John Sutton was dead, and that he had duly made and publiſhed his laſt will, and appointed them executors thereof; ſaid that the ſaid Thomas Warner had alone proved the ſaid will; and the ſaid Thomas Warner admitted he had poſſeſſed himſelf of the perſonal eſtate and effects of the ſaid John Sutton, ſufficient to anſwer his debts and plaintiff's demand; and ſubmitted to have the ſaid ſuit and proceedings revived; and the ſaid ſuit and proceedings were accordingly revived, by an order of this Court, dated Feb. 1, 1770; and all the ſaid defendants concluded their ſeveral anſwers with the general traverſe: To which ſeveral anſwers of the ſaid defendants, John Sutton, Thomas Gibbons, William Toone, Thomas Warner, Thomas Jones, and Mary Sutton, the ſaid plaintiff replied; and the ſaid defendants thereupon rejoined; and this cauſe being at iſſue, divers witneſſes were examined, as well on the part of the plaintiff as on the part and behalf of the ſaid defendants; whoſe depoſitions being duly publiſhed, and this cauſe, being put into the paper of cauſes, came on to be heard on Thurſday the 10th of February inſtant, in the Exchequer chamber at Weſtminſter, before the barons and hearing counſel; And reading an exhibit, marked (A), being an appropriation in the time of Robert Biſhop of Lincoln, by conſent of William . . . . . rector of the church of Belton, and the nuns of the monaſtery of Gracedieu, and of lady Roeſia de Verdon, patroneſs of the ſaid monaſtery and church; and an exhibit, marked (B), being an endowment of the vicarage of Belton, dated the 17th of the calends of October, 1274; and a copy of a record in the Augmentation Office, proved in court by William Lane, being the account of John Beaumont and John Boſom, collectors of the rents of the late priory of Gracedieu, in the ſaid county of Leiceſter, from Michaelmas in the 30th year of king Henry the Eighth, to the Michaelmas following: And reading by conſent a copy of a record in the Augmentation Office, dated Oct. 27, in the 30th year of the reign of king Henry the Eighth, being the ſurrender to his Majeſty of the monaſtery of Gracedieu, in the county of Leiceſter; and a copy of another record in the ſaid office, dated the 13th of March, in the 30th year of the reign of king Henry the Eighth, being a grant from the ſaid king to ſir Humphry Forſter of the ſite of the ſaid monaſtery of Gracedieu, with Meriel Grange, and other the lands and poſſeſſions thereto belonging: The further hearing was adjourned to this day: It is ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the Court, that the plaintiff's bill, ſo far as the ſame ſeeks a ſatisfaction from the ſaid defendants William Toone and the repreſentatives of John Sutton, deceaſed, for the tithes ariſing on all the lands in the occupation of the ſaid William Toone and John Sutton, deceaſed, which were parcel of Meriel Grange, in the pleadings of this cauſe mentioned, be, and the ſame is hereby, diſmiſſed out of this Court with coſts, to be taxed for the ſaid defendants: And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the Court, that ſo much of the plaintiff's bill as ſeeks a ſatisfaction from the ſaid defendants, the repreſentatives of the ſaid defendant John Sutton, deceaſed, for the tithes ariſing from the ten acres of land occupied by the ſaid John Sutton, lying in the open fields of the pariſh of Belton, be, and the ſame is hereby, diſmiſſed out of this court without Coſts, the ſaid plaintiff waiving any account of the ſaid tithes: And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the Court, that the ſaid plaintiff's bill be, and the ſame is hereby, diſmiſſed out of this Court, as againſt the ſaid defendants, Anthony Keck, eſq. Anthony-James Keck, eſq. Tomlinſon Buſby, Hugh Platt, Mary Clerke, and Elizabeth Clerke, with coſts, according to the courſe of the Court: And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the Court, that it be, and it is hereby, referred to the ſaid deputy-remembrancer, to take an account of what is due to the plaintiff from the ſaid defendant Thomas Gibbons, for the value of the tithes of the ſeveral titheable matters demanded by the ſaid plaintiff in his ſaid bill; in taking of which account, the ſaid deputy is to make to all parties all juſt allowances: And it is further ordered and decreed, that the ſaid defendant Thomas Gibbons do pay the ſaid plaintiff his coſts of this ſuit to this time, ſo far as the ſame relates to the ſaid defendant, to be taxed by the ſaid deputy-remembrancer.

The Rev. Edward Lilley, M. A. rector of Glenfield (having ſurvived his wife but a few weeks[1]) died March 27, 1793, at an advanced age, poſſeſſed of this manor, which had been in his family for more than a century. By him it was given to Meſſrs. Barratt and Hurſt; and in the Leiceſter Journal, Nov. 1, 1793, the manor of Belton was advertiſed for ſale, with the rights, royalties, fiſhery, tolls of the great annual fair there, and other appurtenances. The manor was then deſcribed very extenſive, ſpreading over a conſiderable part of Charnwood Foreſt, and abounding with game. The fiſhery was alſo well ſtocked with fiſh. At the ſame time a valuable freehold eſtate was to be ſold, conſiſting of a large manor or farm-houſe, with about 60 acres of rich incloſed land, and about 20 acres in the open fields. An unlimited right of common upon Charnwood Foreſt is attached to the eſtate, which is in excellent condition, and little more than a mile from the lime-works at Gracedieu. The whole was ſoon after diſpoſed of, by private contract, to Mr. Smith; who bought it for his nephew, the preſent Edward Dawſon, eſq. of Long Whatton, who was then in his minority, and is now lord of this manor.

Belton lordſhip is not generally incloſed; but there are ſome old incloſures about the town. The open fields contain 700 acres, or little more.

A conſiderable part of Long Whatton (twelve yardlands) is within the pariſh of Belton[2].

Fee-farm rents are paid to ſir Charles Aſgill, bart. for eſtates in the ſeveral lordſhips of Belton, Long

---

[1] Gent. Mag. vol. LXIII. pp. 188. 377.

[2] See before, p. 643; and hereafter, under Long Whatton.

Whatton, Hathern, Thringſton, Sheepſhead, Oſgathorpe, Cole Orton, Gracedieu, Wilſton, Iſley Walton, Caſtle Donington, Coſſington, and Belgrave.

	£.	s.	d.
Money raiſed for the poor within the year ending at Eaſter 1776,	55	5	8
Expended in county rates, &c.	3	7	6
——— on the poor, —	52	5	4
Rent of workhouſe and habitations,	7	8	0
Expended in litigations, —	1	18	6
Money raiſed for 1783, —	85	5	10
——— 1784, —	95	17	8
——— 1785, —	87	4	6
Medium of theſe three years,	89	9	4
——— of county expences, —	0	0	0
Medium expences not relating to the poor; repairs of the church, roads, &c.	0	0	0
——— of nett annual expences,	89	9	4
——— of attending on magiſtrates,	0	12	5
——— of entertainments at meetings,	0	1	2
——— of law expences, —	0	8	4
——— of ſetting the poor to work,	0	0	0

The return made to the houſe of commons in 1786, in anſwer to an enquiry reſpecting the charitable donations in this pariſh, may be ſeen in vol. I. p. 61.

The amount of £10. 9*s.* is veſted in thirteen truſtees, for repairing a bridge called Homſon-bridge, or the cauſeways and pavements within the town of Belton, or other neceſſary charges[1].

The CHURCH (ſee Plate LXXXVI.)

dedicated to St. John the Baptiſt, conſiſts of a tower, in which are three bells, and on it a ſpire; a chancel, nave, and two ailes, ſeparated by four arches, with clereſtory windows over them.

Mr. Burton deſcribes theſe coats, fig. 1—3.

In a North window in the church:

Gules, three lions paſſant guardant Or, England.

Quarterly, 1. and 4. Gules, three lions paſſant guardant Or; 2. and 3. Azure, ſemé of fleurs de lis Or, England and France antient.

Gules, three lions paſſant guardant Or, a bordure of France. Holland earl of Huntingdon.

In another window, fig. 4—6.

Or, an eagle diſplayed Sable, King of the Romans.

Gules, three lions paſſant guardant Or, a bordure Argent, Holland earl of Kent.

Argent, a maunch Sable, Haſtings.

On the South ſide of the chancel is a piſcina, under three ſmall arches, as ſhewn in fig. 7.

There is alſo a ſmall locker, fig. 8.

Fig. 9. is from the ſupporters of a beam.

Fig. 10. ſhews the fragment of the old font; and fig. 11. the ſmall modern font.

In the Matriculus of 1220[2], Belton is ſtated to be under the patronage of Nicholas de Verdon.

In 1344, the vicarage was taxed at ſeven marks; and the rectory paid 11*s.* for Peter-pence. The prioreſs of Gracedieu had the rectory in proprios uſus.

In 1534-5, the rectory was valued at £9.; and a penſion from it of £2. 13*s.* 4*d.* was then payable to Robert Prowdept.

"Aug. 12, 1646. Whereas it appeareth, by certificate from the committee of parliament for the county of Leiceſter, the lady Eliza Beaumont, recuſant, hath produced a deed before them, claiming, as her jointure, the impropriate rectories of Belton and Sheepſhed in the ſaid county, ſequeſtered for the delinquency of ſir John and ſir Thomas Beaumont, her ſons; and ſhe deſiring a third part to be ſet forth unto her out of the ſaid rectories in ſpecie; but in regard this committee have made ſeveral ſupplies and grants out of the ſaid rectories, for increaſing of ſmall livings, this committee's direction is therefore by the ſaid committee deſired: It is ordered, that the augmentations granted out of the ſaid rectories ſhall be allowed and paid out of ſuch parts of the ſaid rectories only as ſhall ſtand ſequeſtered to the uſe of the State; and not out of the proportion that ſhall be aſſigned to the ſaid lady's uſe, which the ſaid committee are deſired to ſee paid.

"Jan. 19, 1646-7. Whereas it appeareth, by certificate from the committee of parliament for the county of Leiceſter, that the vicarage of Belton in the ſaid county is long ſince by them ſequeſtered from Mr. William Park, for his delinquency: It is therefore ordered, that the former orders of this committee, as to his poſſeſſion and enjoyment of the profits of the ſaid vicarage till the cauſe concerning him upon the articles and examinations tranſmitted againſt him from the ſaid committee be heard, be diſcharged: And it is further ordered, that the ſaid vicarage ſhall ſtand ſequeſtered to the uſe of Mr. John Watts, unleſs good cauſe be ſhewn by him the ſaid Mr. Park to the contrary on the 5th day of November next.

July 13, 1648. Whereas this committee have, the 19th of January, 1646, granted two parts of the profits of the impropriate rectory of Belton, in the county of Leiceſter, which are ſequeſtered from the lady Beaumont, recuſant, not exceeding £40. a year, unto the miniſter of Belton aforeſaid, the vicarage whereof is worth about £30. a year: For that this committee are informed by the committee of the ſaid county, that the whole impropriation of Belton aforeſaid is under ſequeſtration; it is therefore ordered, that all the tithes and profits of the ſaid impropriate rectory which are ſequeſtered from the ſaid lady Beaumont, not exceeding £50. a year, be allowed and paid to and for increaſe of the maintenance of John Watts, the preſent miniſter of the church of Belton aforeſaid; and the ſequeſtrators of the premiſſes are required to allow and pay the ſame accordingly, at ſuch times and ſeaſons of the year as the ſaid tithes and profits ſhall grow due and payable[3]."

In 1650, Belton was returned as an impropriation; the rectory worth £26; the vicarage £40.; and the incumbent as "weak and negligent."

In the king's books, it is entered as a diſcharged living; worth, in great and ſmall tithes, manſe, and other profits, £8. 18*s.* 4*d.*; clear yearly value £47. 15*s.* 0*d.*; and the ſum of £8. was payable out of the rectory for the repair of bridges and highways[4].

The epiſcopal procurations are 2*s.* 7½*d.* for the rectory; and 2*s.* for the vicarage.

RECTORS.	PATRONS.
William de Wadeton, 1229.	Nicholas de Verdon.
. . . .	Roeſia de Verdon.
Alexander the chaplain, 1269.	Prioreſs and convent of Gracedieu.
Thomas Pratt, 15 . .; living 1534.
John Burrows, died 1600.	Henry earl of Huntingdon.
Daniel King, M. A. inducted 1600; died 1639.	George earl of Huntingdon.
William Parks, 1638; ſequeſtered 1646.	Henry earl of Huntingdon.
John Watts, 1646—1655.	Commiſſioners of Sequeſtration.
Nicholas Hill, October 1655.	Lucy counteſs of Huntingdon, pleno jure.
Nicholas Hill regularly preſented Nov. 26, 1662.
Samuel Willis, Sept. 13, 1664.	Theophilus earl of Huntingdon.
Cadwallader Vaughan[5], May 12, 1671; reſigned 1679.
Samuel Sturges, March 8, 1679.
Gabriel Haſtings, Sept. 17, 1684.
Theophilus Brookes, May 17, 1690.
Joſeph Harryman, Dec. 21, 1699.

---

[1] See the Introductory Volume, p. 61.

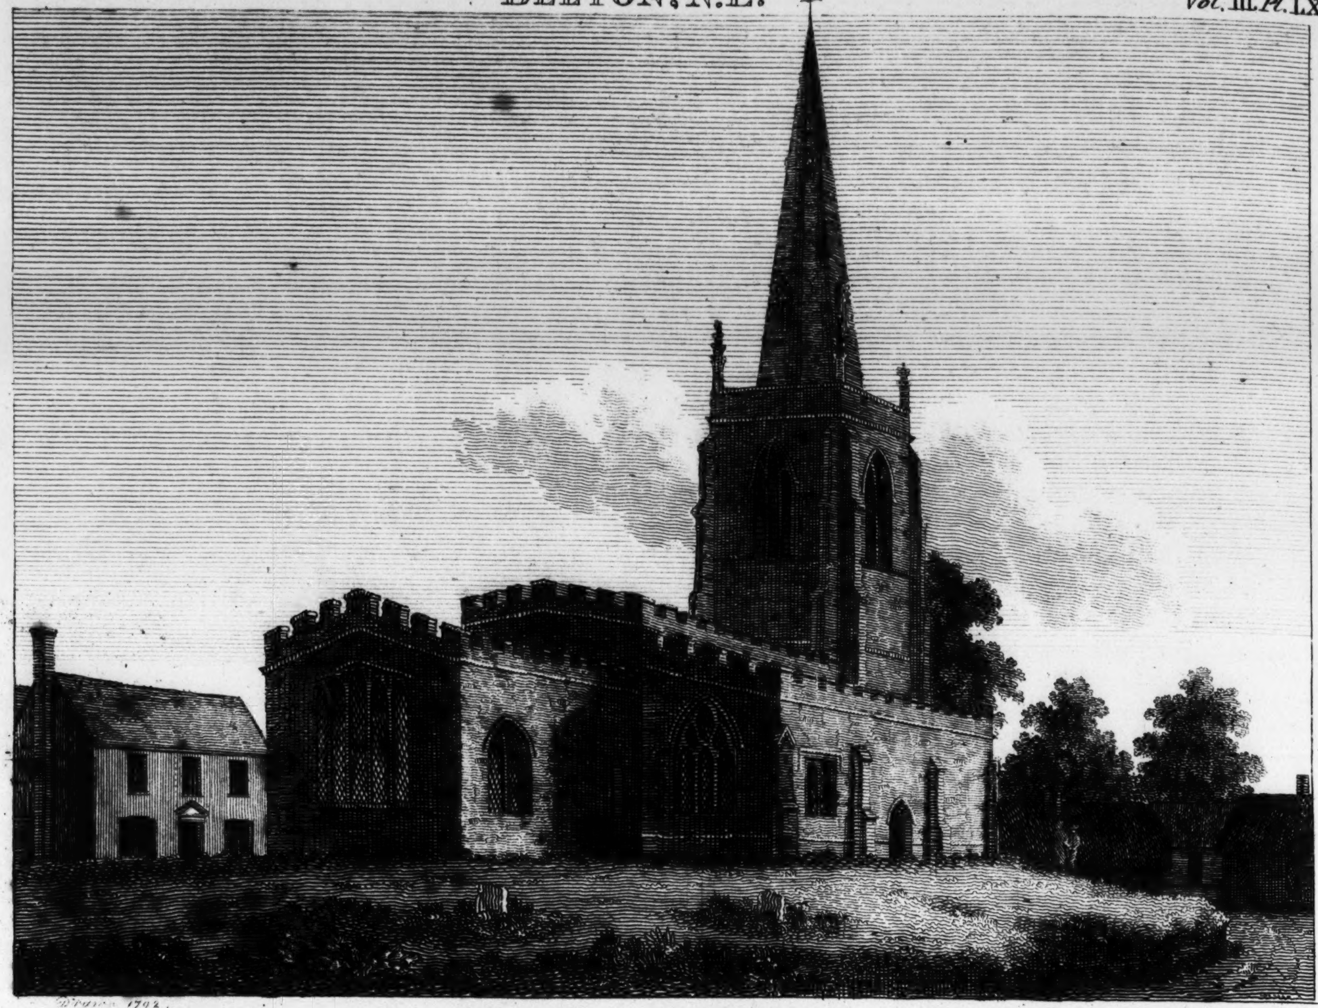
[2] Ibid. p. lviii.

[3] Bacon's Liber Regis, p. 534.

[4] From the original minute-books of the Committee of Sequeſtrations, preſerved in the Bodleian Library.

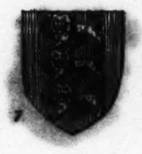
[5] Preſented in 1679 to the rectory of Oſgathorpe.

BELTON, N.E.

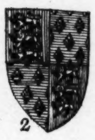


Drawn 1792.

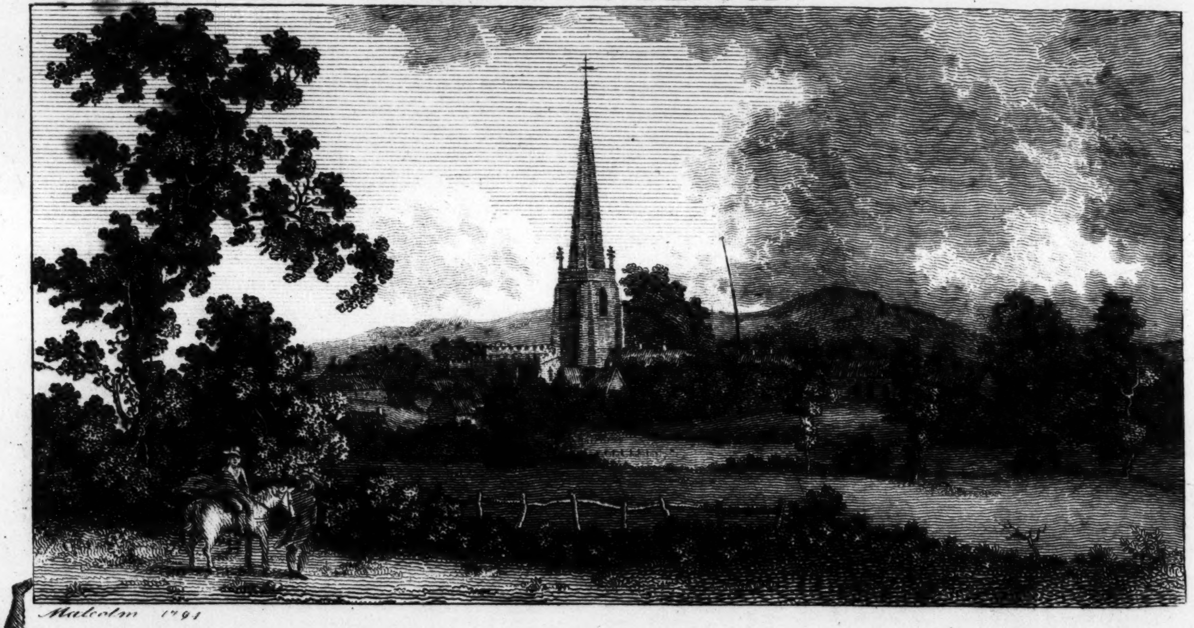
Distant View of BELTON.



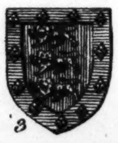
1



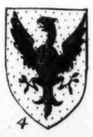
2



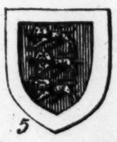
Malcolm 1791



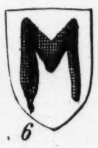
3



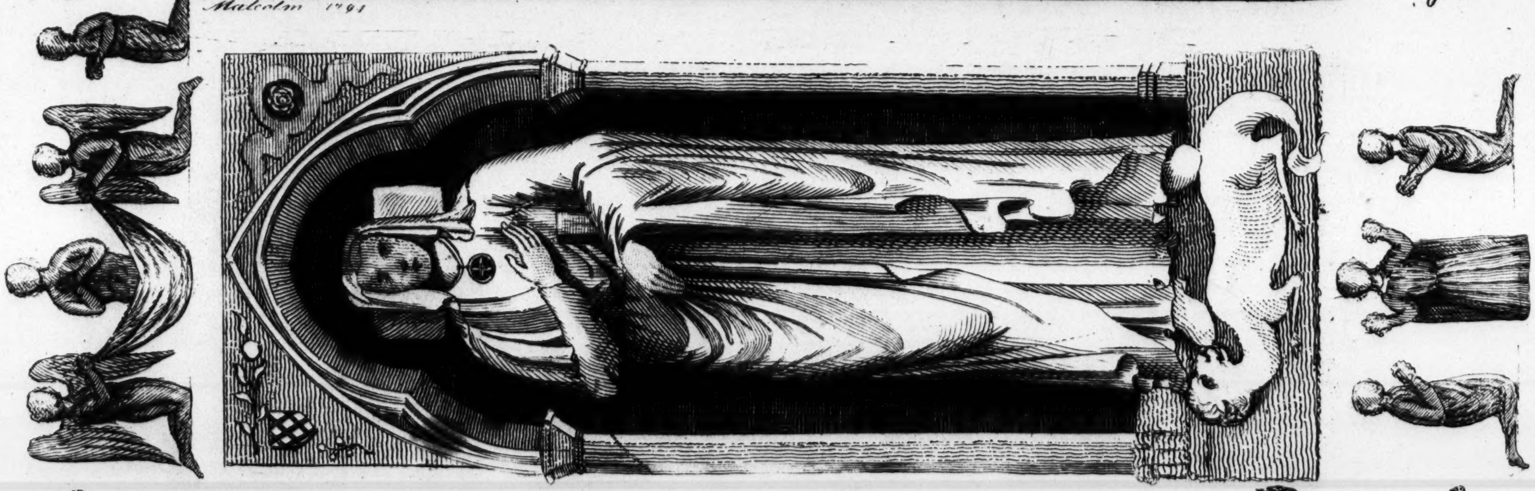
4

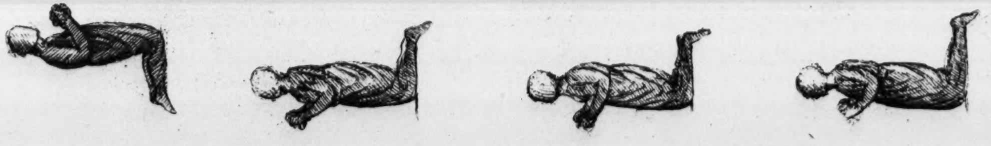


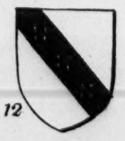
5



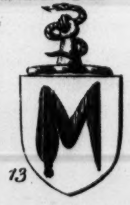
6



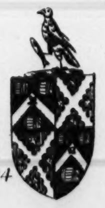




12

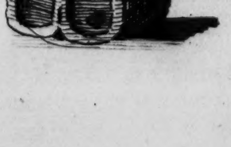


13



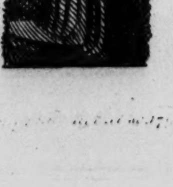
14

10. a



7

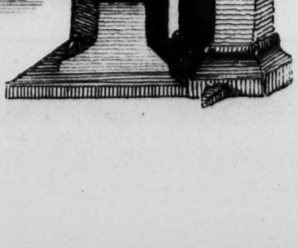
11



9

8

10 b



[illegible]

RECTORS.	PATRONS.
John Vaughan, Jan. 29, 1712.	Theophilus earl of Huntingdon.
Francis Gibbes[1], M. A. June 6, 1744; died 1763.
Theophilus Henry Haſtings[2], June 8, 1763; reſigned 1795.	Francis earl of Huntingdon.
James Glazebrook, Feb. 11, 1796.	Francis earl of Moira.

MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.

On the North ſide of the altar is a beautiful alabaſter figure of a lady in a cloſe veil head-dreſs, wimple, cloſe plaited gown girt round her waiſt, and over it an elegantly folded mantle, gathered up below in graceful folds by her left hand, which holds a book: her right hand is laid on her breaſt; and at her feet is a griffin, looking upward; ſee Plate LXXXVI. Her head is on a cuſhion. On the ſpandrils of the arch cluſtered columns round her head. On the left ſpandril a kind of ſcroll on a round charged with a roſe; on the right ſpandril the coat of Verdon, Or, fretty Gules. On the ſide of the tomb, three elegant figures kneel, one of them holding a book. At the foot of the tomb is alſo a ſingle figure kneeling, fig. 11. Againſt the lady's feet a figure with the arms extended; and a female ſtanding with her hands elevated at his right hand, a prieſt with the albe kneeling at his left. At the head two angels carry up in a ſheet a figure whoſe ribs and navel are expreſſed; and at the corners two figures, ſeeming prieſts, with albes; one of them with a book praying.

This figure, placed at preſent on a clumſy altar-tomb of coarſe workmanſhip, repreſents the lady Roeſia de Verdon, the foundreſs of the nunnery at Gracedieu; and was removed hither from its chapel at the diſſolution. It is certainly in too good a ſtyle for an ordinary pariſh church [3].

Of this monument Mr. Burton ſays, "In the North ſide of the church ſtandeth a very antient monument of ſtone raiſed, with a proportion of a woman neatly carved and painted; which was erected for Roiſe de Verdon, founder of Gracedieu nunnery, and at the diſſolution of the abbeys in the time of king Henry the Eighth, was tranſlated from thence, and here placed [4]."

Mr. Burton adds, "In this church alſo lieth buried that worthy judge Francis Beaumont, of Gracedieu, eſq. one of the juſtices of the Common Pleas; a man, for integrity, wiſdom, and learning, inferior to none of his bench. He departed this life the 22d of April, 1598."—This tomb no longer remains.

Within the rails of the chancel:

1. "Here reſteth the body of Katharine Toone, wife to Matthew Toone, gent. of Belton, and daughter to ſir Robert Markham, of Sedgbrooke in Lincolnſhire, baronet, who departed this life the 3d day of July, 1716,
in the 56th year of her age."

2. "Here lieth the body of Matthew Toone, gent.
of Belton, near Katharine his wife,
who departed this life the 9th day of February, 1717,
in the 45th year of his age.
He had by Katharine his wife three daughters and two ſons;
the two ſons and one daughter died very young; and left only Elizabeth and Sarah now living.
Here lieth alſo the body of Elizabeth Clerke, daughter to Matthew Toone.
She married the Rev. Cha. Clerke, late of Oſgathorpe, by whom ſhe had three daughters,
Catharine, Mary, and Elizabeth, now living.
Obiit 3d of Auguſt, 1745, ætat. 49."

On the North wall, on a neat tablet of white marble:

"Sacred to the memory of Hugh Platt, gent.
who died Aug. 25, 1780.

John Platt, an infant;
Mary Clerke and Elizabeth Clerke.

This monument was erected by Catharine Platt, widow of the above Hugh Platt, in grateful teſtimony of her regard for the many virtues of her huſband, her infant ſon, and her two ſiſters."

On flat ſtones in the floor:

1. "Here lies interred the body of ſir Tho. Beaumont, ſon of ſir John Beaumont, of Gracedieu, baronet, who married Vere, daughter of ſir William Tufton, of Vintners in Kent, baronet; who left iſſue five daughters:

Cicely,	married	Robert Beaumont, eſq.
Vere,		ſir John Reyner, knt.
Mary,		George Morton, eſq.
Jane,		Charles Byerly, eſq.
Anne,		Robert Pawley, eſq.

He died the 7th of July, anno Dom. 1686,
ætatis ſuæ 66."

2. "Here lieth interred the body of Robert Pawley, eſq.
who deceaſed the 1ſt of December, anno Domini 1690,
in the 30th year of his age."

3. "Here lieth the body of Frances Leake, daughter of William and Anne Leake, of Wimſold, and grand-daughter of Matthew and Catharine Toone,

---

[1] By Mr. Gibbes, who had in 1758 a diſpenſation to hold the rectory of Appleby with the vicarage of Belton.

[2] Rector alſo of Oſgathorpe; but reſigned both preferments in 1795, on being preſented by the earl of Moira to the united rectories of Eaſt and Weſt Leke, in the county of Nottingham. He publiſhed, "Nine Sermons, upon the Sixteenth Chapter of the Revelation of St. John, preached in the conſolidated churches of Weſt and Eaſt Leke, to confute the Methodiſts, Jacobins, and Atheiſts there, and confirm the Members of the Eſtabliſhed Church in the Doctrines and Duties of Chriſtianity. By the Rev. Theophilus Henry Haſtings, M. A. Rector; and now ſent for the good of the Publick. In Veritate Victoria. To which are added an exact Copy of a Letter, under the Nottingham Poſt-mark, from a perſon unknown, who, as he ſays of himſelf, is illiturate, or inſane; and a Libel ſtuck on the Gate of his Stable-yard; for the Diſcovery of the Writer or Publiſher of which, Five Guineas Reward will be given; 1800;" 8vo. Another ſingle Sermon, preached at Eaſt and Weſt Leke on the ſecond Sunday in Advent (on John v. 34. "Search the Scriptures,") 8vo. was printed in 1800; not for the purpoſe of ſale, but ſo many copies only as there were heads of families in his two pariſhes, to each of whom, without exception, a copy was diſtributed gratis on New-year's day; "which, ſure I am," ſays Mr. Haſtings, "may be of more utility, than the erection and endowment of a ſchool, for the inſtruction of children in reading, writing, and accounts (though that was a noble benefaction, and worthy to be had in remembrance of all who have been partakers of it, and the imitation of the opulent, in this and every pariſh, becauſe preparatory to the knowledge of the Scriptures), if you read, mark, learn, and inwardly digeſt them."—Having been informed that Mr. Haſtings, during the American war, had engaged with much force and ſpirit in a controverſy with my late learned friend the rector of Sadington, I have received the following authentic information, in anſwer to an enquiry on that ſubject. "The ſhort paper-war between me and Mr. Ruſſel muſt be ſoon after the war between England and America, which I believe happened in the year 1775. It originated from the late lord Effingham Howard being appointed to go thither, and his refuſing to obey orders. On that account I wrote to him; and incloſed the chaplainſhip, which, by the intereſt of the late Francis earl of Huntingdon, I had received from him. That letter was inſerted both in the Leiceſter and Nottingham papers. Mr. Ruſſel wrote an anſwer; to which I wrote a reply immediately; which was ſeen by many, and reported to lord Huntingdon; who immediately likewiſe, and before it could be publiſhed, requeſted me not to do it; for what reaſon I did not know; but I complied with the requeſt: or, perhaps, the altercation between me and Mr. Ruſſel might have laſted as long as the American war. I was perſuaded that the cauſe in which I was engaged was a good one; and would never have given it up, but with death, &c. T. H. Hastings."

[3] Gough's Sepulchral Monuments, vol. II. pp. cxxi. cxxii.

[4] Mr. Wyrley, who viſited this church about 1590, calls this "a fair monument emboſſed in marble;" and adds, "There is wrought in the ſhoulder a little eſcocheon; which is, Or, a fret, within a border Gules."

who departed this life Oct. 5, anno Domini 1724, in the 21ſt year of her age."

In a croſs aile to the North ſide, on a large white ſlab, nearly hid by a pew:

" Hic iacet corpus Will'mi Benyngton, armigeri. obiit quarto decĩo die menſis Januarii, anno Dñi mill'o . . ."

In the nave:

1. Round the ledge of a flat ſtone:

" Here lies the body of Elizabeth Toone, wife to Mr. Hamlet Toone, of Belton in the county of Leiceſter. She lived . . . years, and had iſſue . . . ſons and eight daughters; and departed this life the laſt day of April, 1653."

On the middle of the ſame ſtone:

" Reader, fix here thine eyes. When thou ſhalt know
What loſſe, and who lies here interr'd below,
Thou ſhalt be forc'd to weep; for ſtones do ſweat,
And marbles drop, yet both want native heat.
Believe but her example, thou ſhalt ſee
. . . . too true practiſioner of pietie.
She was a virgin purely chaſte and rare,
To ſhew thoſe two not inconſiſtent are;
And when a wife, thoſe dear and ſacred ties
So faithfully ſhe kept, no . . . . . . de could riſe
. . . . . . her glory to relie . . . . all
Her vertues here this . . . . too ſmall.
Let this ſuffice . . . . . . this laſt . . . . . .
Of that good . . . . ler . . . . .
Here lies a ſaint, who . . . . name
Of ſaints on earth, Heaven . . . . . the ſame."

2. On another flat ſtone:

" H ere lies the body that in youth began
A virtuous life; ſo liv'd, ſo died old man.
M aiſter to many ſervants, who yet find
L ove may be lived by, be it of his kind;
E ach child him father found in love, in care,
T hruſton's was; Hamlet, Henry, William, are
T he ſonns he had; one daughter Katharine,
O f his own harmleſs temper, all whoſe line
O reworne with age, and ready to decline:
N ew broods of children and their children fill
E ven to wander, and all honeſt ſtill.

Stone then be ſtill; let not your graven verſe
Attempt the praiſe of any mortal herſe;
Old Toon is dead! his virtues live anew;
And new Toons now prove the old Toon true.

Here lieth the body of Hamlet Toone, buried the 20th of May, 1638, being of age 84.

Here alſo lieth the body of Hamlet Toone, ſon of the abovesaid Hamlet Toone, who was buried May 4, 1658.

Here alſo lieth the body of John Toone, ſon of the later Hamlet,
who was buried June 17, 1677."

Round the ledge of a flat ſtone:

" HERE LIES INTERRED THE BODY OF JOHN CRISPE, LATE OF BELTON,
WHO DEPARTED THIS LIFE THE LAST DAY OF MAY,
IN THE YEAR OF OUR LORD 1630,
BEING OF THE AGE OF 70 YEARS."

On the middle of the ſame ſtone:

" HERE LIES THE BODY OF A SAINT ON EARTH,
A CHRISTIAN IN HIS BIRTH, HIS LIFE AND DEATH.
HIS PIETIE WAS RARE, WHOSE GODLY LIFE
ADORN'D WAS DAILY IN COMPOSING STRIFE;
CLOATHING THE NAKED, FEEDING OF THE PORE,
FROM WHICH HE NOW ENJOYS ETERNAL STORE.
SUCH HATH HIS LIFE AND DEATH BOTH ALWAYS BEEN,
WHOSE CORPS THE EARTH HATH NOW FIRST CLOSED IN.
THOUGH 'S BODY MUST IN TIME BE TURN'D TO CLAY,
HIS SOUL IN GLORY SHALL REMAINE ALWAY.
HEAVEN NOW THOU HAST; WHAT CAN BE WISH'D FOR MORE?
THOU 'RT CROWN'D WITH THAT WHICH THOU SCARE SAW'ST BEFORE."

At the lower end of the ſame ſtone:

" Here lieth the body of Mary Shaw,
the wife of William Shaw, who departed this life Auguſt . . 1692."

At the Weſt end, in the ſingers' pew:

" Here lieth interred the body of Daniel King, clerk, who,
after he had been vicar of Belton 38 years, departed this life the 4th day of December, in the 67th year of his age, anno Domini 1639."

On another flat ſtone:

1. " Here lieth the body of Anne Thorpe, daughter of Edward Thorpe and Ellen lately his wife, who came into the world the laſt day of March, 1642; and left the ſame again the 8th day of November next after following."

2. " Here lieth the body of Frances Gibbes, late wife of the Rev. Francis Gibbes, clerk, rector of Huiſh in the county of Wilts.
She died April 11, 1758, aged 76 years."

3. " Francis Gibbes, vicar of this church, departed this life on the 8th of March, 1763,
in the 46th year of his age."

4. " Sarah, the wife of the Vicar[1] of this pariſh, departed this life February 22, 1775,
in the 57th year of her age."

(A large blank is here left.)

At the bottom of the tomb,
" This is a beaten track."

On a pillar in the nave:

" In memory of Edmund Brooks, M. B. and Elizabeth his wife,
whoſe remains are depoſited beneath.
This ſtone was affixed by the Vicar of this pariſh,
Aug. 15, 1775."

On a ſtone faſtened to the ſame pillar:

" This by Jane Shaw, in memory of her dear huſband William Shaw, yeoman, interred here the 9th day of Auguſt, 1704; who, in charity and love to this his native town, by his laſt will, left his Barnfield cloſe, after the deceaſe of the ſaid Jane his wife, for the yearly coating four of its pooreſt men for ever."

In the North aile:

Round the ledge of a flat ſtone:

" HERE LIETH THE BODY OF
THOMAS KING[2], MASTER OF ARTS;
A SACRED DIVINE; A FAITHFUL MINISTER OF JESUS CHRIST, WHO DEPARTED THIS LIFE AT BELTON
THE 12TH DAY OF MAY, 1638,
HIS AGE 27."

On other flat ſtones:

" Here are depoſited the earthly remains of Sarah,
late wife of William Toone, of Merril Grange.
She departed this life May 20, 1766,
aged 38 years.
Alſo here lie the bodies of Mary and Sarah, daughters of the above William and Sarah Toone.
Mary died May the 3d, 1766,
aged 3 years and 5 months;
Sarah died May 1, 1766, aged 1 year and 7 months."

" In memory of Mr. William Toone, who departed this life the 28th day of February,
1780, aged 46."

" Here are depoſited the earthly remains of Thomas Burrows,
who departed this life May 21, 1775,
in the 75th year of his age.

Alſo here are depoſited the earthly remains of Ellen Burrows, wife of the abovesaid Thomas Burrows.

---

[1] Mr. Haſtings was at that period the vicar.

[2] A ſon, probably of Mr. Daniel King, then vicar; who died in the following year.

She departed this life February 17, 1771,
in the 74th year of her age."

On a ſtone againſt the North wall:

"Beneath lie the remains of Thomas Burrows, ſon of Thomas and Eleanor Burrows.
He departed this life the 28th of March, 1789,
in the 62d year of his age."

On a braſs plate on the North wall:

"Mrs. Margaret Mead, of Oſgathorpe, bequeathed, amongſt other legacies, £5. yearly for ever, iſſuing from the profits of her lands in Oſgathorpe and Belton, to buy two ſhillings worth of bread every week, the two weeks in Chriſtmas excepted. One ſhilling's worth of which to be given every Sunday to ſuch poor of Oſgathorpe as ſhall attend Divine Service that day; the other ſhilling's worth to be given every Friday, between the hours of 10 and 12, to ſuch old people of the adjacent pariſhes as ſhall come to the church of Oſgathorpe for the ſame.

"She likewiſe gave £10. yearly for ever to the pariſhes of Oſgathorpe and Belton, and village of Thrinkſton, ariſing out of the profits of the aforeſaid lands, to be paid alternately to each pariſh or village, in order to put out one poor boy, to be bound an apprentice to ſome good trade in London, or within the weekly bills of mortality; but, by a decree in chancery ſince made, to be within any other city, town, or place in the kingdom of England.

"The qualifications of the boys may be read in her will without fail, which is in the cuſtody of the miniſter of this pariſh."

On the South ſide of the church-yard:

"Beneath lie interred the remains of John and Sarah Rose,
late of this pariſh.
Alſo of Robert their ſon,
late of Oſgathorpe,
(who by his will directed this ſtone to be erected to their memory for a teſtimony of their many virtues).
He departed this life
the 16th day of March, A. D. 1785, aged 61.
This ſtone informs you that their cold remains
Sleep here in earth, and reſt ſecure from pains.
But, Reader, ſhould thy curious mind enquire Where live their Souls? Warm'd by ſeraphic fire,
Panting for Heaven, they ſought eternal joys,
And fled to kindred ſouls in kindred ſkies."

On upright ſtones:

"Here lie the remains of

Mary Sutton, eldeſt daughter of Samuel Sutton and Elizabeth his wife. She departed this life June 30, 1785, in the 85th year of her age.	Sarah Warner, niece of Mary Sutton, She departed this life July 20, 1774, in the 24th year of her age.

This ſtone was erected by Thomas Warner, ſurgeon, nephew to the abovenamed Mary Sutton,
and brother of Sarah Warner."

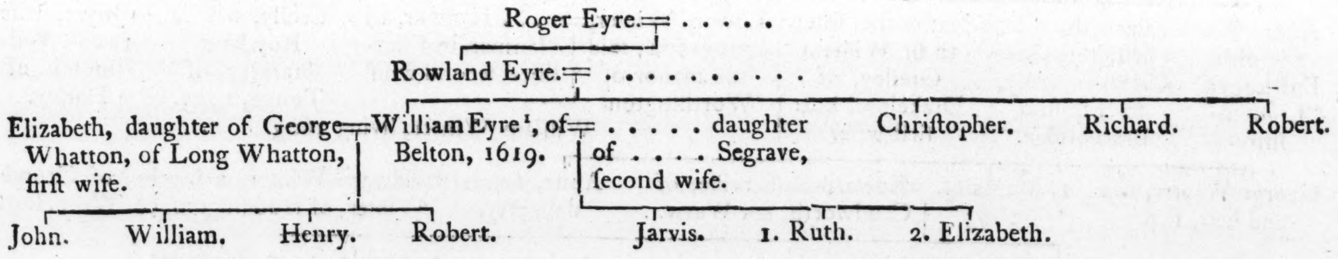
{Thomas Coulton died Sept. 21, 1782, aged 63.
{Elizabeth Coulton died Sept. 19, 1788, aged 79.
Sarah Coulton died June 23, 1780, aged 65.
Anne Coulton died April 14, 1780, aged 69.

In 1552, the commiſſioners reported that Belton church contained,

"In primis, on chalice.
It̃m, thre veſtments, and one cope.
It̃m, tow belles and a ſaunce bell.
⁂ It̃m, two belles, ſould anño R. R. Edwardi Sexti ſecũdi, all the peryſhe beinge of counſayll."

Pedigree of EYRE, of Belton. (From the Viſitation of 1619.)

Arms: Argent, on a bend Sable three quatrefoils of the firſt; Plate LXXXVI. fig. 12.



Roger Eyre.=. . . . .
Rowland Eyre.=. . . . .
Elizabeth, daughter of George Whatton, of Long Whatton, firſt wife.
William Eyre[1], of Belton, 1619.
. . . . . daughter of . . . . Segrave, ſecond wife.
Chriſtopher.
Richard.
Robert.
John.
William.
Henry.
Robert.
Jarvis.
1. Ruth.
2. Elizabeth.

[1] In a ſubſidy of 1627 is entered, "William Eyre, of Belton, gent. 3*l*."

MERILL GRANGE

was originally a part of the lordſhip of Belton; and was given, with it, by Roeſia de Verdun, to the nunnery of Gracedieu, at its foundation[1]. The nuns converted it to a grange, and had a little park adjoining to it.

A curious inventory of their farming ſtock and utenſils here may be ſeen in a future page[2].

After the ſuppreſſion of the religious houſes, this grange was in 1539 granted by the king in fee to ſir Humphrey Foſter, knight[3], together with the demeſne lands of Gracedieu, then or late being of the yearly value of £15. 4*s*. 10½*d*. by the ſervice of the fourth part of a knight's fee, and the rent of 50*s*. a year; from whom in the ſame year it was transferred, with Gracedieu, to John Beaumont, gent.[4]

June 8, 1598, ſir Francis Beaumont, knt. died ſeiſed of a certain grange, called Merill Grange[5]; which paſſed to his ſon Henry, with the ſite of Gracedieu. Henry Beaumont, eſq. dying without iſſue, this grange deſcended to his brother and heir, and continued in the family till the death of ſir Thomas Beaumont, the laſt heir-male of the Gracedieu branch, in 1686[6]; whoſe widow was remarried to Mr. George Lane, a dancing-maſter, and had this grange in dower in 1693.

Merill Grange conſiſts of four farms, about 500 acres; and in 1775, Thomas Cooper and William Toone held freeholds there.

The preſent owners are, Thomas March Phillipps, eſq. William Toone, Scevington Dickenſon Cowliſhaw, and Thomas Warner.

Though the lordſhips of Belton and Oſgathorpe are both ſituated between Merill Grange and Gracedieu, yet Merill Grange is within the liberty and parcel of Gracedieu.

---

[1] MS. Burton.
[2] See hereafter, under Gracedieu, p. 653.
[3] 7 Pars Original. 30 Hen. VIII. Rot. 187.
[4] Bailiffs Accompts in the Augmentation Office.
[5] Eſch. 40 Eliz.
[6] See hereafter, under Gracedieu, p. 658.

Pedigree of TOONE, of Belton and Oſgathorpe[1].

Arms: Argent, a maunch Gules. Creſt, a dexter-hand and arm couped, graſping a ſnake Proper; fig. 13.

William Toone, of Oſgathorpe, deſcended from the Toones of Burton on Trent. = ...

Robert Toone, of Oſgathorpe. = ... Smith.

Hamlet Toone, of Oſgathorpe; buried May 20, 1638, æt. 84. = ... Neele, of Oſgathorpe.

Hamlet Toone, of Oſgathorpe; buried May 4, 1658, æt. 81. = Elizabeth, dau. of John Hurſt, of Holwell, co. Leiceſter, died April 30, 1653.

1. Hamlet Toone, of Belton, died young.
2. John Toone, of Belton, died June 6, 1677. = Bridget, dau. and coheir of Thomas Leeſon, of Boothorpe, co. Leic.
3. Ralph Toone, of Hungerton, living 1681, aged about 60. = ... Lowe, of Hungerton.
4. William Toone, of Normanton. = ... Gardiner, of Normanton.
5. Hamlet Toone, died at Loughborough, ſ. p. aged about 35.

1. Elizabeth, married to Robert Roo, of Packington; died 1673, aged about 60.
2. Judith, d. about 1641, æt. 30.
3. Mary, died young.
4. Frances, marr. Will. Kemp, of Hungerton; died about 1665, æt. 40.
5. Mary, died young.

Hamlet Toone, aged 9, 1681.

1. Hamlet Toone, living in London 1681, aged about 37.
2. William Toone, of Thruſſington, 1681, aged about 30; married, and had three daughters.

1. Hamlet Toone, of Belton, born June 3, 1641; living 1681. = Elizabeth, dau. of Matthew Abel, of Atherſton.
2. John died an infant.
3. Thomas Toone, of Cole Orton, born Sept. 13, 1637. = Mary, dau. of Tho. Brett.

1. Jane, aged about 30, married Edward Ledwood, of Bredon.
2. Elizabeth, born in December 1655.
3. Bridget, born in June 1658.
4. Frances, born in June 1662.
5. Judith, born in June 1664.

1. Hamlet Toone, died June 6, 1676, æt. 6.
2. Matthew Toone, of Belton, gent. born 1672. = Catharine, dau. of ſir Robert Markham, of Sedgbrooke, co. Lincoln, died July 3, 1716, æt. 56.

Two ſons and one daughter, died young.

Elizabeth. = Rev. Charles Clarke, of Oſgathorpe, died Sept. 16, æt. 44.

1. Catharine.
2. Mary.
3. Elizabeth.

Pedigree of WINTER, of Worthington. (See hereafter, under Bredon.)

Arms: Quarterly, 1. and 4. Sable, on a chevron between three tuns Argent, a millrind Azure, Winter; 2. and 3. Gules, a ſaltire engrailed Argent, between four mullets Or, Hardwicke. Creſt, a bird Argent, holding in his claw a fiſh Or; fig. 14.

Henry Winter, of Worthington, co. Leiceſter, died Aug. 10, 1494; buried at Bredon. = ...

Robert Winter, of Worthington, died 1540. = ... dau. of . . . . Engliſhe.

George Winter, of Worthington. = Anne, dau. and coheir of John Hardwicke, of Lindley, by Anne his ſecond wife, dau. of Robert Langham, of Gopſal, born 1494; buried at Bredon.

Anne, wife to John Bowles, of Lincolnſhire.

Elizabeth, wife, firſt, to John Crewker; 2dly, to Thomas Bracebridge.

Katharine, ſiſter to ſir William Greſley, of Drakelow, knt. firſt wife. = Edward Winter, living 1604; ſold the manor of Worthington. = ... Hanmer, of Hanmer, in Flintſhire, ſecond wife.

Cecily, wife to Rowland Starkley, of Tonge, 1535.

Joyce, wife to . . . Willington, of Harley.

William Winter, living 1603.

George Winter, ſon and heir, ſ. p.

1. Margaret. 1603. = Edward Baſkerville, of Crudworth, co. Warw.

Anne, ſecond daughter. = Edward Winter, a brother of George Winter, of Huddington, co. Worc. ſ. p.

1. Edward Baſkerville, died 1631. = ...
2. John.
1. Urſula.
2. Margaret.

George Baſkerville.

Pedigree of PILKINGTON, of Worthington. (From the MSS. of Peter Le Neve, Eſq.)

George Pilkington. = ...

Edward Pilkington, of Worthington in Leiceſterſhire, and Staunton le Dale in Derbyſhire, living in 1621; was in the royal navy. = Mildred[2], daughter and heir of Walter Vaughan, or Morgan, of Low Leyton, Eſſex[3].

Edward.
Samuel.

George Pilkington, 5th ſon, of Staunton le Dale; died in 1658. = Elizabeth, dau. and coheir of Thomas Haſilwood, of Belton, Rutland[5].

Leake Pilkington, of . . . . . died before his father. = Barbara, dau. and heir of ſir Henry Mathews, of Radnor, Wales[4].

Thomas, died ſ. p.

Elizabeth.
Mary.

Elizabeth, married to . . . .

Mary, wife of ſir William St. Andrew, of Gotham, Nott.

Edward Pilkington, of Worthington. = Elizabeth, dau. of Rich. Qui, of London.

Barbara, dau. and ſole heir, married to Robert Hervey, of Stockton, co. Warwick.

1. Thomas Pilkington, of Market Overton, Rutland. = Mary, dau. of Collingham Smith, of Wytham, co. Lincoln.

2. Henry Pilkington, of Staunton. = Sarah, dau. of Robert Midlemore, of Staunton, died Dec. 3, 1702, aged 62.

1. Haſelwood Pilkington, died ſ. p.
3. Benjamin, d. unmarr.
4. George, 1717.
2. Tho. Pilkington, of Worthington, ſecond ſon, but heir. = Sarah, dau. of Henry Pilkington, his uncle.

Hannah, dau. of Matt. Smith, of Denghely, co. Derby. She died Aug. 9, 1706. = Midlemore Pilkington of Staunton by Dale, co. Derby. = Mary, dau. of Edw. James, of Kinverſton, co. Stafford.

1. Henry Pilkington, died young.
2. George Pilkington, died young.
3 Thomas Pilkington.

1. Jane.
2. Sarah.

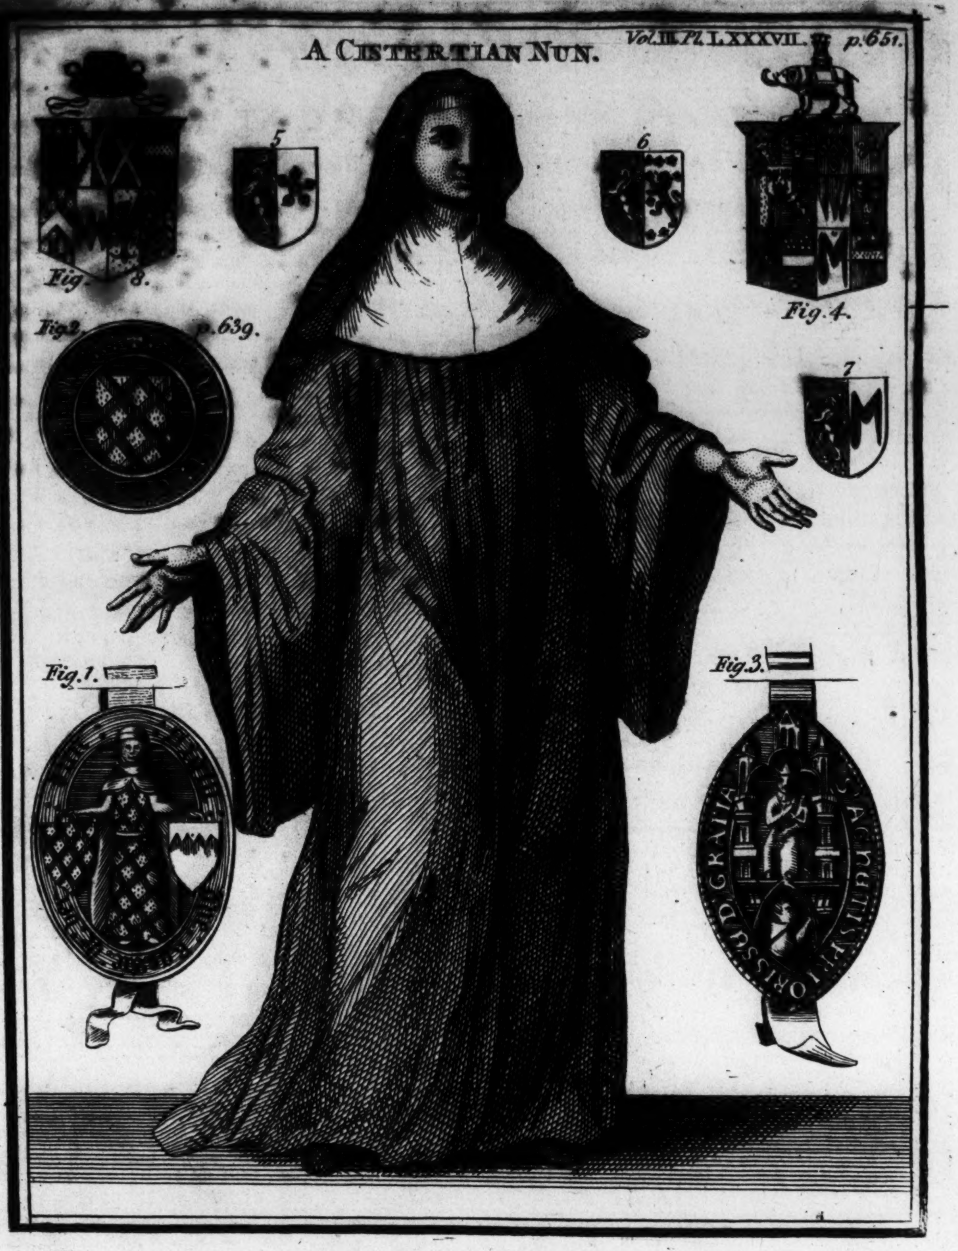
Sarah, Barbara, Anne, Sarah, } all died young.

1. Matthew Pilkington, bapt. May 25, 1705; living 1717.

2. Midlemore Pilkington, born April 10, 1709.

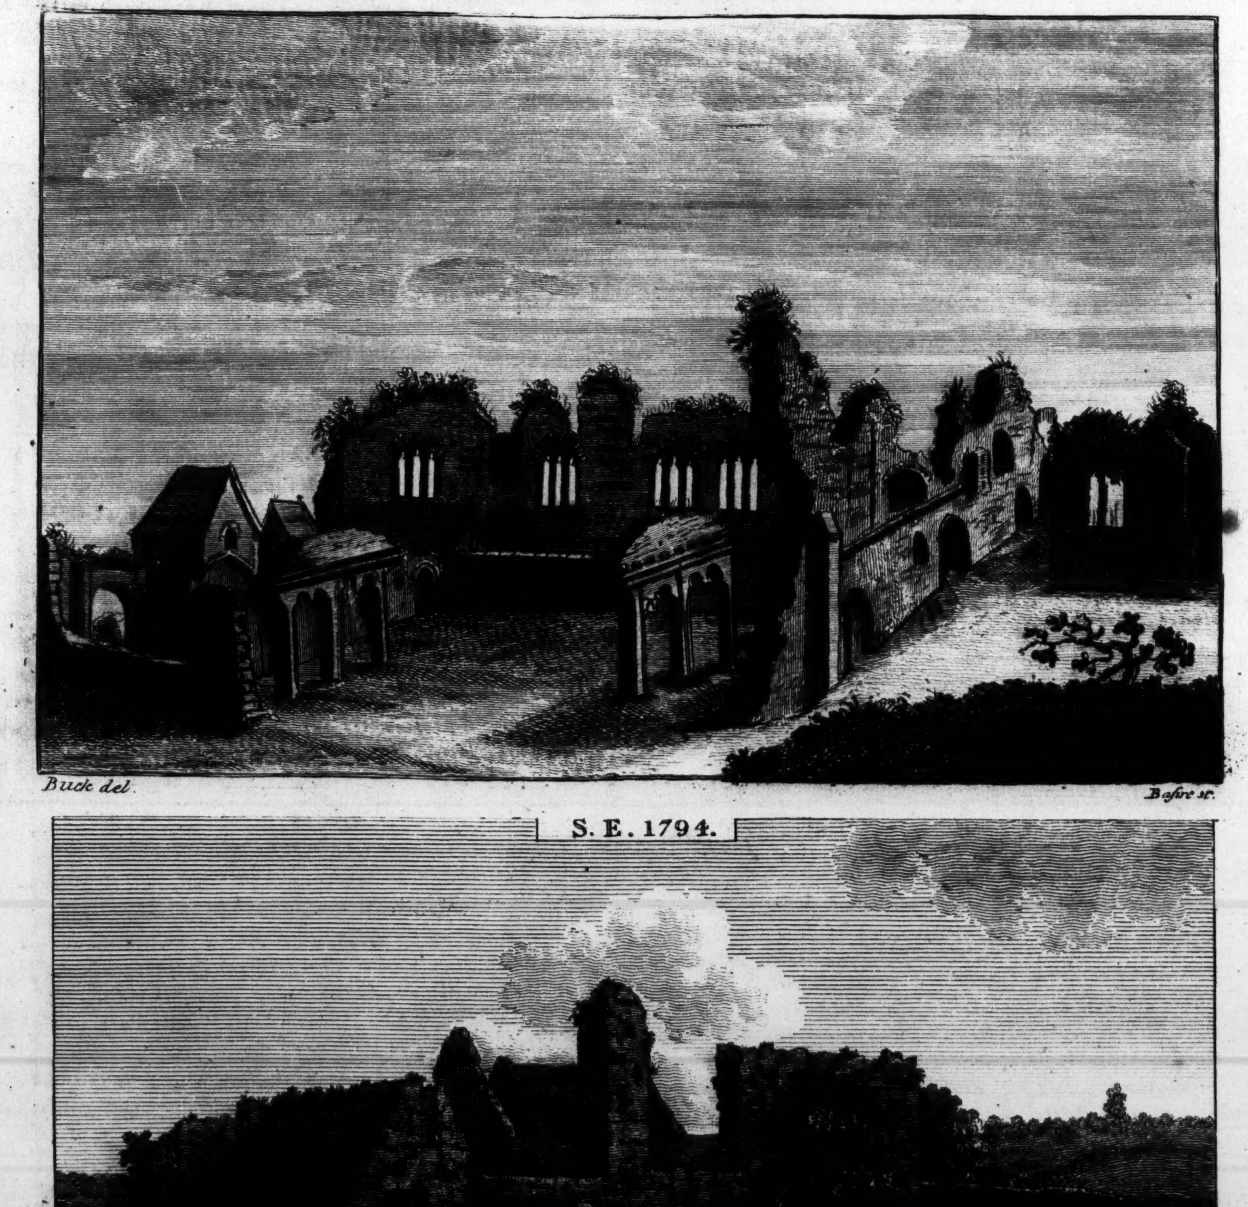
---

[1] Entered at Leiceſter, 23 March, 1681-2, by Hamlet Toone.
[2] Proved by an original deed.
[3] Viſitation of Herts.
[4] Other pedigrees ſay in Glamorganſhire.
[5] Wright's Rutland.



A CISTERTIAN NUN.
Vol.III.Pl.LXXXVII. p.651.
Fig. 8.
5
6
Fig.4.
Fig.2 p.639.
7
Fig.1.
Fig.3.

GRACEDIEU PRIORY, 1730.



Buck del. Basire sc.

S.E. 1794.

[illegible] del. et sc. 1794.

GRACEDIEU,

beautifully ſituated in what was formerly one of the moſt recluſe ſpots in the centre of Charnwood Foreſt, is now remarkable only for a noble fragment of its ruins. It is very little diſtant from the turnpike road which leads from Aſhby to Loughborough, being about 6 miles from each of thoſe towns. Locally it is within the pariſh of Belton; but it is of courſe extraparochial, and, in the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county, is within the deanry of Akeley.

Gracedieu [in Latin, de gratiâ Dei] is a French word, ſignifying the grace of God, a name given to this nunnery by Roeſia de Verdun [1], daughter and coheir to Nicholas lord Verdon, grand-daughter of Bertram lord Verdon, and ſome time the wife of Theobald de Butiller (a branch of the noble family of the Butillers of Ireland) who founded, between the years 1236 and 1242, within the lordſhip of Belton, a monaſtery of nuns, of the order of St. Auſtin [2], to the honour of St. Mary and the Holy Trinity, and plentifully endowed the ſame [3].

Of this noble lady and her family, ſee before, p. 638. She was buried in the church of this nunnery; whence a beautiful figure from her tomb, at the ſuppreſſion of the houſe, was removed to the neighbouring church of Belton; where it is engraved, Plate LXXXVI; and her ſeal, Plate LXXXVII. fig. 1.

This foundation was confirmed by king Henry III. from whoſe exemplification of the Carta de Fundatione, we find that the foundreſs thus expreſſed herſelf in 1242: "Know, preſent and future people, that I, Roeſia de Verdun, have granted, and by this my charter confirmed, to God and St. Mary, and to the church of the Holy Trinity of The Grace of God at Belton, and to the ſervants of Chriſt, the nuns in the ſame church ſerving God, in pure and perpetual alms, for me and my heirs, and for the ſouls of my parents, and of all my anceſtors, and of my huſband's, all my manor of Belton, with the advowſon of the church of the ſame place, and all other the appurtenances and liberties which I and my anceſtors ever uſed to have in the ſaid manor; to have and to hold, of me and my heirs, in pure and perpetual alms, freely, quietly, peaceably, and entirely, in demeſnes, villanages, meadows, paſtures, woods, the park, warren, mills, men, rents, ſervices, ſequels, and all other things to the ſame manor belonging, without all exaction, ſervice, and peculiar demand. And I Roeſia and my heirs will for ever acquit the afore-named nuns of the royal ſervice which belongs to the ſaid manor; and we will for ever warrant the aforeſaid manor, with the appurtenances aboveſaid, to the ſame nuns in the aforeſaid church ſerving God, againſt all nations. And that this my gift, grant, confirmation, and warrantization may obtain perpetual firmneſs, I have thought fit to corroborate this my preſent writing with the putting to of my ſeal. Witneſſes; ſir Richard de Harecourt, ſir Ernald de Bois, ſir Ralph Baſſet of Sapcote, ſir Richard of Normanville, ſir Adam of Quatermars, ſir Miles de Verdun, Roger Gernun, ſir Adam de Newport, maſter Thomas de Verdun, then rector of the church of Iveſtoke, Henry de Hertſhorn, and others [4]."

The nuns of Beleton being bound by their order not to go forth of the limits of the nunnery; the King, by his royal prerogative and charter, notwithſtanding their conſtitution, gave the Abbeſs liberty to conſtitute an attorney, in all caſes wherein they had cauſe to ſue or be ſued, by this patent [5]:

"Quia moniales de la Grace de Dieu de Beleton, de conſtitutione ordinis ſui, ita incluſe ſunt, quod nunquam cœpta domûs ſue exibunt [6]: conceſſit dominus rex prioriſſe & monialibus ibidem, quod ſi contingat ipſam prioriſſam ab aliquo vel aliquibus implacitari, vel neceſſe habeat alios implacitare, predicta prioriſſa, non obſtante contrariâ conſtitutione regni, regis liberam habeat poteſtatem attornatum tum ſuum inde faciendum, per literas ſuas patentes. Et mandatum eſt juſticiariis, vicecomitibus, & omnibus ballivis & fidelibus regis, quod attornatos predicte prioriſſe taliter admittant. In cujus, &c. Teſte Rege, apud Porteſm', 7 die Maii [7]."

Agnes de Greſley, who was probably the firſt prioreſs, held that office in 1242, when biſhop Groſſeteſte confirmed the foundation of the priory; and in 1243 occurs, "Conventio cum Gilberto de Preſton & aliis juſticiariis regis apud Derby itinerantibus, inter Agnetam de Greſley, prioriſſam de Gratiâ Dei, & ejus loci conventum, ex unâ parte, & Mattheum de Kniveton ex alterâ [8]." In this year, Agnes either died or reſigned; for Mary de Stretton was elected prioreſs, with the full approbation of Roeſia de Verdun, the patroneſs [9]; and the prioreſs and convent obtained permiſſion for a market and fair at Belton [10].

John Comin earl of Buchan (ſon of Alexander earl of Buchan and Alice his wife, daughter and coheir of Roger de Quincy earl of Winton), who was ſeiſed of the manor of Whitwick near adjoining, and had a caſtle there, was a great benefactor to this houſe, and gave certain lands thereto [11].

In 1277, the church of Belton was appropriated to this nunnery by Robert Kilwardby archbiſhop of Canterbury [12].

Sir William de Waſtneis, lord of the manor of Oſgathorpe, was a benefactor in 1279 [13].

Amicia the widow of Ancher de Freſchenville gave them certain lands and villans at Staveley Woodthorp, in the county of Derby:

"Omnibus Chriſti fidelibus hoc preſens ſcriptum viſuris vel audituris, Amicia quondam uxor Ancheri de Freſchenville ſalutem in Domino ſempiternam. Noveritis me, charitatis intuitu, in legitimâ viduitate meâ, dediſſe, conceſſiſſe, & hâc preſenti chartâ meâ confirmâſſe, in liberam, puram, & perpetuam eleemoſinam, Deo & eccleſie Sancte Trinitatis de Gratiâ Dei, & ſanctimonialibus ibidem Deo ſervientibus, & in perpetuum pro animâ meâ ſervituris, & animabus Ankeri de Freſchenvill quondam viri mei, & patris & matris mee, & omnium fidelium defunctorum, partem terre in Staveleie Wodethorpe, ſcilicet, totam terram illam quam Rogerus filius Lecie, Robertus filius Radi Coci, & Walterus filius Ricardi, tenuerunt de me, infra villam de Staveleie Wodethorp & extra, cum domibus, edificiis, libertatibus, & omnibus pertinentiis ad predictam terram pertinentibus, infra villam de Staveleie Wodetrop & extra, inſimul cum predicto Rogero predicto, Roberto filio Radi Coci, & predicto Waltero, cum omnibus eorum ſequelis & catallis, tenendam & habendam Deo & eccleſie Sancte Trinitatis predicte, & ſanctimonialibus ibidem Deo ſervientibus, in ſubſidium indumentorum predictarum ſanctimonialium, pro vivis & pro mortuis nominatis, in liberam, puram, & perpetuam eleemoſinam: & ita liberè, purè, quietè, benè, & in pace & plenariè, ſicut predicta tenementa liberiùs & quietiùs, meliùs ac pleniùs habui & tenui. Et ego predicta Amicia & heredes mei hanc predictam eleemoſinam predictis ſanctimonialibus collatam in perpetuum, de òmnibus ſervitiis ſecularibus, wardis, releviis, conſuetudinibus, ſectis curiarum, forinſecis, & demandis, que ad me, vel ad aliquem heredum meorum ſive aſſignatorum, pertinent vel pertinere poterunt, contra omnes homines warrantizabimus, & in perpetuum defendemus; & ut hec donatio & conceſſio obtineant, hanc chartam meam ſigillo meo roboravi. Hiis teſtibus; dño Theobaldo de Verdon, dño Nicholao Muſard, dño Malcolmo fratre ejus, dño Nicholao de Verdon, Ricardo de Wodecote, Willielmo de Wodecote, Willielmo de Leke, clerico, & aliis [1]."

---

[1] It appears, from Pip. Rot. 1209, that ſhe was a widow at that time; and as biſhop Groſſeteſte, who did not enjoy the ſee of Lincoln till before 1235, confirmed and conſented to her foundation here in 1242, ſhe lived a widow 33 years.

[2] So Mr. Burton rightly, as is undeniable from the ſurrender, (ſee p. 653); not of the Ciſtertian order, as in Dugdale, Mon Angl. I. 933. and Baron. vol. I. p. 472. Theſe white monks had indeed an abbey of that name in Monmouthſhire.

[3] Burton, p. 119. The dreſs of a nun of the order of St. Auſtin has been already given in vol. II. under Kirkby Beler. The habit of a Ciſtertian nun, therefore, ſhall here be given in the ſtead of it. See Plate LXXVII.

[4] See the original grant (from which this is tranſlated by Mr. Peck) in Dugdale, Mon. Angl. vol. I. p. 933.

[5] Prynne's "Exact Hiſtory of the Pope's intolerable Uſurpations," &c. vol. III. p. 100.

[6] "Yet others entered them." Prynne.

[7] Rot. Pat. 26 Hen. III. m. 2, intûs.

[8] Plac. 27 Hen III. in Greſley MSS. ex chartis apud Bradley.

[9] Reg. Groſſeteſte, an. 9.

[10] Cart. 28 Hen. III. m. 4.

[11] Burton, p. 119.

[12] Ibid. p. 129.

[13] Pat. 7 Edw. I. de communâ paſture in Oſgathorpe.

In 1289, the prioreſs and convent had a ſuit concerning their villans in Staveley [2].

In 1293, it was found to be of no prejudice, if Henry de Nottingham gave 7*s*. rent, with the appurtenances, in Radclive ſuper Wretheck, to the nuns of Gracedieu; and that the ſaid Henry held Thurſtanton and Radclive of Alice Rivell by homage, and the ſervice of five marks a year, and ſcutage when required [3].

In 1306, "Juratores dicunt, quod non eſt ad dampnum domini regis, nec aliorum, ſi dominus rex concedat Johanni Comyn comiti de Boghan, quod ipſe centum acras de vaſto ſuo in Whitewyke & Shepeſheved, in com' Leic', dare poſſit & aſſignare prioriſſe de Gratiâ Dei, in com' predicto, foſſato & muro includere, & parcum inde facere; & quod predicte centum acre terre tenentur de domino rege in capite, & pertinent ad manerium de Wytewyke; & quod predictum manerium tenetur de domino rege in capite per ſervicium tertii partis unius feodi militis [4]."—"Juratores dicunt etiam, quod non eſt ad dampnum domini regis, nec aliorum, ſi dominus rex concedat prioriſſe de Gratiâ Dei, quod ipſa quatuor acras terre, unam acram prati, & unam acram boſci & dimidiam, cum pertinentiis, in Belton (quas ſibi de Eliâ de la Grene & Johanne Morell de Belton), & duas acras terre cum pertinentiis in Threngeſton (quas ſibi de Waltero de Rougheved adquiſivit in feodo poſt publicationem ſtatuti) ſibi & ſucceſſoribus ſuis habeat in perpetuum (ſtatuto, &c. non obſtante); & quod predicte quatuor acre terre, una acra prati, & una acra boſci & dimidia, cum pertinentiis, in Belton, tenebantur immediatè de prioriſſâ & monialibus predictis per ſervicium xvī. per annum, faciendo ſectam ad curiam prioriſſe; & quod predicte due acre terre, cum pertinentiis, in Threngaſton tenentur de quodam Alano de Threngaſton, per ſervicium unius oboli per annum. Et predictus Alanus tenet tenementa illa & manerium de Threngeſton de Chalk [5]."

In 1356, it was found to be of no damage to the king or any other, if the king give leave to ſir John de Cropbull, knt. and Margaret his wife, to enfeoff Ralph de Cropbull, parſon of Cottingham, and Richard de Makkeley, clerk, in the advowſon of the priory de la Gracedieu [6].

In 1391, "Juratores dicunt, quod non eſt ad dampnum domini regis, nec aliorum, ſi dominus rex concedat Ivoni Jeke, quod ipſe tria meſſuagia, LX acras terre, & VI acras prati, cum pertinentiis, in Threngeſton, in com' Leic', dare poſſit prioriſſe de Grace Dieu. Item, quod predicta tria meſſuagia & LX acre terre tenentur de Henrico Tebbe de Threngeſton, per ſervicium militare, & ſectam curie ſue de tribus in tres, & redditum II s̄. VI d̄. per annum; & ipſe immediatè de priore de Repingdon, per quod ſervicium ignorant. Et remanebunt eidem Ivoni, ultra donationem predictam, in conſuetudine, ſervicio, &c. certa terre & tenementa in Preſtwold [7]."

In 1403, the prioreſs and convent obtained a confirmation of their market and fair at Belton [8].

In 1435, Agnes, wife of John Merbury, eſq. died ſeiſed of the advowſon of the priory of Gracedieu [9].

The following undated grant from Agnes prioreſs of Gracedieu and the nuns of that convent is copied from the original, and preſerves the ſeal of the convent; Plate LXXXVII. fig. 2.

"Omnibus Chriſti fidelibus ad quos preſens ſcriptum pervenerit, Agnes miſeratione divinâ prioriſſa de Gratiâ Dei & ejuſdem loci conventus ſalutem in Domino. Noveritis nos dediſſe & conceſſiſſe, & hoc preſenti ſcripto noſtro confirmâſſe, Ricardo filio Herberti & Roheſe uxori ſue, & eorum heredibus, illam virgatam terre, cum pertinentiis, quam Alanus filius Roberti quondam tenuit in Staunton Harold, exceptâ illâ parte terre & tofti quam Radulfus de Bredon inde tenet; habend' & tenend' ſibi vel aſſignatis liberè & quietè, in feodo & hereditate, cum omnibus pertinentiis, in pratis, locis, hayis, ad dictam terram ſpectantibus, infra villam vel extra; reddendo inde annuatim nobis & ſanctimonialibus ibidem nobis ſuccedentibus quatuor ſolidos argenti, ad Purificationem beate Marie, ad tumbam domine Roſe de Verdun, in eccleſiâ de Gratiâ Dei; & capitali domino feodi unam libram piperis, pro omni ſervicio ſeculari; ſalvo tamen forinſeco ſervicio. In cujus rei teſtimonium, ſigillum noſtrum commune preſenti ſcripto appoſuimus. Hiis teſtibus; domino Willielmo de Wateneis, Stefano fratre ſuo, Alano de Cirangeſton, Willielmo fratre ſuo, Thomâ de Worſnillâ, Simone de Ceſtr', Henrico Pakeman, & aliis [10]."

John Beaumont, eſq. of Thringſton (who afterwards obtained a grant of the ſite of this priory) was appointed by the king's writ, Jan. 30, 1534-5, to take the eccleſiaſtical ſurvey of the county of Leiceſter [11].

In the "Compendium Compertorum [12]," being the return made by the king's viſitors of religious houſes, Dr. Leigh and Dr. Layton, (with whom John Beaumont was joined in the commiſſion) we find the following entry:

"Grace Dieu monialium.

Incontinentia. Elizabeth Hall, Catharina Ekeſildena, pepererunt.

Superſtitio. Habent in veneratione zonam & partem tunicæ Sancti Franciſci [13]; quæ (ut creditur) parturientibus conducunt.

Fundator dominus Ferys.

Redditus annuus centum & novem marcæ [14].

Debet domus xx lī."

"This houſe ſtandeth low in a valley upon a little brook, in a ſolitary place, compaſſed round with an high and ſtrong ſtone wall, within which the nuns had made a garden, in reſemblance of that upon Mount Olivet Gethſame, whither Chriſt, with Peter, James, and John (a little before he was betrayed) went up to pray; as formerly had been done by the abbot of Burton upon Trent [15], in the county of Stafford, who, having a vaſt rough hilly ground about a mile diſtant from the abbey, called it Sinai, for the likeneſs it had to that rough wilderneſs of Sinai, where in a mount God appeared unto Moſes; which ground to this day retaineth the name, and is now called Sinai Park [16] (commonly and corruptly Siney Park)."

The whole of Gracedieu was a park, and is ſtill ſo denominated. The outer wall of the garden ſtill remains, and in many parts of it is perfect. It originally included a ſpace of about two acres; and a piece of ground within the incloſure is to this day called Paradiſe.

---

[1] Ex Collectionibus St. Lo Kniveton.

[2] Placita in Banco, 27 Edw. I. Rot. 105.

[3] Eſch. 21 Edw. I. N° 115. Leic.

[4] Eſch. 34 Edw. I. N° 180. Leic.

[5] Eſch. 34 Edw. I. N° 220. Leic.

[6] Ad quod dampnum 30 Edw. III. N° 12. Leic.

[7] Eſch. 15 Ric. II. pars 2. N° 47.

[8] Pat. 4 Hen. IV. p. 1. m. 25.

[9] Eſch. 14 Hen. VI. N° 32. Leic.

[10] From the original deed, with the ſeal well preſerved, in the poſſeſſion of earl Ferrers.

[11] Bacon's Liber Regis, p. 532.

[12] Annexed by the late Rev. Dr. Pegge to his edition of the Annals of Elias de Trickingham in 1789, p. 79.

[13] The girdle of St. Francis muſt have been a ſignal and moſt valuable relick. Had Maſter Prynne known this circumſtance, it would have afforded him ſome addition to the ridicule he has thrown on the pretended miracles of St. Francis, in "A Pleaſant Purge for a Roman Catholick, &c. 1642;" being a Century of Epigrams diſcovering the Corruptions of the Romiſh Church.

[14] This ſum (£72. 13*s*. 4*d*.) is much leſs than any other valuation. See p. 653.

[15] For this Mr. Burton cites "an old MS."

[16] "And lately in the year 1600, by Nicolas Zebrizdowiſkie, count Palatine and general of Cracow in Poland, who, at a place four miles diſtant from Cracow, did aſſimilate a hill like to Mount Calvary in Jeruſalem, making it reſemble the ſame in all things remarkable: as with the three croſſes together, with the holy ſepulchre, the court of guard, adorning it with chapels, hermitage,

As one of the ſmaller monaſteries, Gracedieu was included in the ſuppreſſion which took place in 1536; and, on the 20th of September in that year, John Bellowe and John Broxholme paid £1823. 2*s*. 7½*d*. in part of £3338. 13*s*. 3*d*. due to the king for (among other lands) two meſſuages and two cloſes, with the appurtenances, in Kyrhielethorpe, in the county of Lincoln, parcel of Gracedieu, co. Leiceſter, in the ſeveral tenures of Agnes Kaye and John Payre; and for all the lands and tenements in Northmerſhefield, co. Leiceſter, parcel of the late commandery of Dalby and Rothley in the ſame county [1].

Notwithſtanding the ſuppreſſion, however, this priory had (with Ulveſcroft, Bitleſdon, and 28 others) the king's licence to continue ſome time longer [2].

Agnes Litherland was the laſt prioreſs, and Anne Greſley ſub-prioreſs; beſides whom, here were 14 nuns [3]. They finally ſurrendered the convent Oct. 27, 1539.

"Omnibus Chriſti fidelibus, &c. Agnes prioriſſa monaſterii Sancte Trinitatis de Gratiâ Dei, & ejuſdem loci conventus, ordinis Sancti Auguſtini, Lincoln' dioc', alias dicta Agnes prioriſſa monaſterii Sancti Trinitatis de Grace Dieu, & ejuſdem loci conventus, ordinis Sancti Auguſtini, in com' Leyc', Lincoln' dioc', ſalutem in Auctore ſalutis. Noveritis, &c. In quorum teſtimonium nos prefati prioriſſa & conventus ſigillum noſtrum commune preſentibus appoſuimus. Dat' 27 die° menſis Octobris, anno regni regis Henrici VIII. 31°. Et memorandum quod, die & anno predictis, venerunt predicti prioriſſa & conventus coram Thomâ Legh, legum doctore, in domo ſuâ capitulari, & recognoverunt ſcriptum predictum, ac omnia & ſingula in eadem contenta, in formâ predictâ [4]."

This priory was returned by the commiſſioners to be worth, in ſpiritualities and temporalities, the clear annual ſum of £92. 3*s*. [5]; and was valued to diſpend yearly £101. 8*s*. 2½*d*. [6]

A meadow in Emſcote, co. Warwick, paid a mark a year to the prioreſs and convent of Gracedieu [7].

They had alſo conſiderable poſſeſſions in Belgrave at the time of its diſſolution; and ſome property in Langley [8] and at Diſeworth [9].

The ſite of the priory, with the demeſne lands, and the grange of Meriell, of the yearly value of £15. 4*s*. 10¼*d*. were granted in 1539 to ſir Humphrey Foſter, knight, by the ſervice of the fourth part of one knight's fee, and the rent of 50*s*. a year [10].

From ſir Humphrey it was immediately conveyed in fee to John Beaumont, eſq. and Elizabeth his wife, and to their heirs; and that Mr. Beaumont poſſeſſed it the very next day after the ſurrender, is evident from the following curious and authentic inventory [11]:

"The late monaſtery of Gracedieu in the county of Lecceter.

"Herafter folowyth all ſuch parcells of implements or howſhold ſtuffe, corne, catell, ornaments of the churche, and ſuch other lyke, founde wyth the late priory there at the diſſolucion therof, ſould by the kyng's commiſſioners to John Bewman, gent. the 28th day of October, in the 30 yere of our ſoveraigne lorde kyng Henry the VIIIth.

The churche.

Fyrſt, one table of wode; over the hygh alter certein images, two laten candleſtyks, one lampe of laten; certein oulde formes in our Lady chappell, certein ould images, one particion of tymber, one lampe, and ould formes in the nunnes quere, one rode, certein images, one particion of wode, and the nunnes ſtalls, in the belhowſe one cloke, certein ould images, ould ſtoles of woode, one oulde cheſt, one ould holy-water ſtole of braſſe, and the roffe, glaſſe, ieron, and pavement in the churche, and the glaſſe and iron in the ſteple, as ſould for £15.

The veſtry.

Item, ther three ould copes, one ſute of ould blake ſaye, one ſute of blue ſylk, one ſute of yelow ſarſnett and blue, one ſute of grene ſay, two tynacles of whyte buſtiann, and a veſtment; three ſyngle veſtments, one of counterfeit baudkyn, gould alter clothes, two fruntes for alters of counterfeit baudkynn, and one preſſe, ſould for 43*s*.

The dorter.

Item, ther three nunnes ſelles, whyche as ſould for 30*s*.

The cloyſter.

Item, the ieron, pavement, and the cundeth ther, as ſould for 66*s*. 8*d*.

The chapter.

Item, one table of alabaſter, the glaſſe, ieron, and pavement, as ſould for 15*s*.

The frater.

Item, ther five tables, the ſelyng over the table, one bell, the glaſſe and the ieron, as ſoulde for 40*s*.

The knyghtes chamber.

Item, one whyte teſter of lynyon clothe, one ould table, and one chayre, ſould for 2*s*.

The inner chamber.

Item, ther two matreſs, two coverletts, two boulſters, and two blanketts, ſould for 10*s*.

The next chamber.

Item, one fether-bedd, one boulſter, one blankett, one coverlett, a teſter of lynyon cloth, one chayre, and a table, ſould for 13*s*. 4*d*.

The inner chamber.

Item, two matreſys, two coverletts, one boulſter, and one ould teſter of lynyon cloth, ſould for 5*s*.

The chapell chamber.

Item, ther one fether-bedd, one matres, one boulſter, two coverletts, one blankett, and one old teſter of blew lynyon cloth, ſoulde for 6*s*.

The dynyng chamber.

Item, ther two tables, two formes, two chayres, ſould for 3*s*.

The halle.

Item, three oulde tables, two formes, one pece of hangyng of redd ſay, ſould for 2*s*.

The buttery.

Item, ſix table clothes, four towells, three napkyns, eight candleſtyks, four baſons, one ewer, one chaffyng diſſh, 9 tables, and one ould table, 30*s*.

The larder houſe.

Item, ther one virgin's barrell, and one grat troſſe, 12*d*.

The kechyn.

Item, ſeven braſſe potts, four kettulls, and four ould polines very nygh voorne, one grydyronn, two dryppyng pannes, two ſpytts, one payre of roſtyng ieronns, certein pott henges, and 20 peces of pewter veſſell, ſould for 40*s*.

The candell houſe.

Item, certein ould bordes, one virgin's barrell, and candell moulde, ſoulde for 6*d*.

---

hermitages, croſſes, crucifixes, ſtatues of ſaints, and with a ſtately monaſtery for Friers Minors of St. Francis de Obſervantiâ; which place, thus contrived and built, was hallowed by pope Paul the Fifth, and enriched with many indulgences; the plot whereof is in Brune's ſixth part of his Theatre of Cities, Tab. 45." Burton, p. 119.

[1] Stephens, Monaſticon, Appendix, p. 6.

[2] See a liſt of theſe 31 houſes in Tanner, Not. Mon. ed. Naſmith, Preface, p. xxiii.

[3] See their names, p. 655; and Willis, Mitred Abbeys, vol. I. p. 110.

[4] Rymer, vol. XIV. p. 628.

[5] The particulars of theſe poſſeſſions may be ſeen in the original ſurvey at the Firſt Fruits office.

[6] Burton, p. 120.

[7] Dugdale's Warwickſhire, p. 187.

[8] Bailiffs Accompts in the Augmentation office.

[9] See hereafter, under the hiſtory of thoſe places.

[10] 7 Pars Original. 30 Hen. VIII. Rot. 187; Bailiffs Accompts, 31 Hen. VIII. in the Augmentation office.

[11] From a MS. in the reign of king Henry VIII. remaining in the Augmentation office.

The brew-houſe.

Item, ther two leads, one maſhfatt, two ould arkes, and certein ould tubbes, ſould for 60*s*.

The yele-houſe.

Item, ther ſeven kelyng leads, two yelyng flattes, 20*s*.

The laundrye.

Item, one panne in a furneſhe and two lytell leads, ſould for 15*s*.

The ſaulte-houſe.

Item, ther one ſalte arke and one buſhell of ſaulte, ſould for 14*s*.

The bake-houſe.

Item, ther two knedyng troſtes and one mouldyng boarde, ſoulde for 12*d*.

The kyll-houſe.

Item, ther one chayre, one kyll, and four quarters of maulte, 20*s*.

The ſmythe's forge.

Item, ther two hammers, one anvyle, two payre of tonges, one payre of pincers, and one pair of belows, ſoulde for 40*s*.

Shetes of lynyon.

Item, 20 payre of ſhetes, ſould for 30*s*.

Catell at the Priory, and in the Foreſt ther.

Item, 12 oxen £10.; eight kyne and a bull-calf 66*s*. 8*d*.; 24 beſts in the Foreſt £7.; ſeven calves 15*s*.; ſix horſes 66*s*. 8*d*.; 34 ſwyne, prayſed at 26*s*. 8*d*. Sum of the whole £25. 15*s*.

Catell at Merell Grange.

Item, 12 drawing oxen and ſteres for the plowe and wayne £8. 9*s*.; 10 kyne and a bull £4. 10*s*.; one hefford 6*s*. 8*d*.; five yerlyng calves 20*s*.; five wenyng calves 13*s*. 4*d*.; five mares and one fole 40*s*.; 30 ſwyne and pigges, ſould for 33*s*. 4*d*.; ſum of the hole £18. 13*s*. 4*d*.

Waynes at the ſeyd graunge, with other thynges apperteyning to them.

Item, waynes, yokes, temes, plowes, and harrowes ther ar ſould for 20*s*.

Waynes at the priory with other.

Item, ther one ieron bound wayn, two ieron bound cartes, three ieron bound temes, ſeven yokes, one payre of clynes for a wayne, two plowes with their appurtenances, one ox-harrowe, and three other harrowes wyth ieron teeth, cart-geres for five horſes, and five lether collers, four ſythes geryd, five peſe hokes, three pycheforkes, five ſykells, two mukforks, one axe, one hatchet, two wymbulls, 46*s*. 8*d*.

Grayne at the late priory, in the Eſt and Weſt barnes.

Fyrſt, in the Weſt barne, halfe a bay of whete, wherin ther ys eſtemyd to be ſeven quarters at 6*s*. the quarter, 42*s*.; item, two bays of barly in the ſame barne, containing 24 quarters, at 3*s*. 4*d*. the quarter, £4.; item, in the ſame barne, one bay of otts, containing eight quarters, at 2*s*. 4*d*. the quarter, 18*s*. 8*d*.; item, one bay of peſe, containing four quarters, at 2*s*. 8*d*. the quarter, 9*s*. 8*d*.; item, in the Weſt barne, half a bay of whete, containing 15 quarters, at 6*s*. the quarter, £4. 10*s*.; item, one bay of rye, containing four quarters, at 6*s*. the quarter, 24*s*.; item, 10 quarters of barly in the ſame barne, at 3*s*. 4*d*. the quarter, 33*s*. 4*d*.; item, one bay of peſe, containing 10 quarters, at 2*s*. 8*d*. the quarter, 26*s*. 8*d*.; item, hay ther 52 lodes, at 2*s*. 8*d*. the lode, whyche amountyth to the ſum of £6. 18*s*. 8*d*.; item, in the ſeyd barne, 15 quarters of peſe, at 2*s*. 8*d*. the quarter, 40*s*.—£25. 4*s*.

Grayne at Merell Grange.

Item, 30 quarters barly, at 3*s*. 4*d*. the quarter, £5.; item, 20 quarters of peſe, at 2*s*. 8*d*. the quarter, 53*s*. 4*d*.; item, 20 quarters otts, at 2*s*. 4*d*. the quarter, 46*s*. 8*d*.; item, 20 lodes of hay, at 2*s*. 8*d*. the lode, 53*s*. 4*d*.—£12. 13*s*. 4*d*.

The ſumme total of all the guddes ſould, late apperteynyng to the ſeid priory, £125. 7*s*. 4*d*.

Rewardes gyven to the prioreſſe and covent of the ſeid priory:

Fyrſt, to Annes Lytherland, prioreſſe, 60*s*.

To Anne Graſley, to Kataryne Cheſeldyne, Annes Coſbye, Elizabeth Hall, Dorothye Engliſhe, Margaret Kneteford, Amye Gellott, Margaret Powtrell, Anne Aſshbye, Emma Michell, Elizabeth Preſtbury, Johan Barwell, Elizabeth Ferneham, Kateryne Baker, 30*s*. each.

Cecill Bagnell, ſerv̄nte to the ſeid late priory, 20*s*.

Iſabell Seyton lykewiſe 20*s*.

Elizabeth Slate alſo 20*s*.

Rewardes gyven to the ſervants ther at their departure.

To William Oſborn 7*s*. 6*d*.
John Copland the elder 3*s*. 4*d*.
John Memtill 5*s*.
Peter Helyſon, 5*s*.
Thomas Kyllingleye, 5*s*.
John Toplady the younger 3*s*. 4*d*.
Hugh Cocks 3*s*. 4*d*.
Hugh Kyear 2*s*.
John Bygyn 5*s*.
William Glover 5*s*.
Richard Fyſhar 5*s*.
Humfrey Hawmes 20*d*.
Eliz. Paryſh 3*s*. 4*d*.
Agnes Lokyngton 2*s*.
Margaret Aſſer 2*s*.
Margaret Kyear 2*s*.
Annes Bygge 3*s*. 4*d*.
Thomas Harey 2*s*.
William Oſborn 3*s*. 4*d*.
Robert Oſborne 3*s*. 4*d*.
Thomas Feſſand 2*s*.
Richard Haley clerk 10*s*.
Thomas Sherdley 7*s*. 6*d*.
Elizabeth Sherdley 2*s*.
William Tomlynſon 3*s*. 4*d*.
Nicholas Copland 3*s*. 4*d*.
John Paryſh 20*d*.
John Burbag 2*s*.
John Bygyn 2*s*.
Thomas Kyllyngley 20*d*.
Mary Forde 20*d*.
Thomas Oſborne 20*d*.
Thomas Oſborne 20*d*.
J. Imes 20*d*.
Annes Rolſten 20*s*.

Money payed to ſundry poor folke havyng corodys.

Fyrſt, to Robert Prowdefote for hys mete to the cumming of kyng's furneyers 20*s*.

Item, to Richard Claybroke and hys wyffe 20*s*.

Item, to John Bayford 7*s*. 6*d*.—£2. 7*s*. 6*d*.

Cates bought.

Item, in cates bought and ſpent at the tyme of the commiſſioners beyng ther for to diſſolve the ſeid priory, and for the ſalfe kepyng of the guddes and catell to yt appertenyng duryng the tyme beforſeid, £6. 19*s*.

The ſumme of the payments aforſeid is £41. 19*s*. 10*d*.

Mem. Ther remayneth a ſpecyalty of £90. 6*s*. 6*d*. upon John Bewmann, gent. for money by hym due for the guddes and catell of the ſeid late priory by hym bought, payable at the feaſt of the Nativite of our Lord God, whych ſhall be in the yere of our ſeid Lord God 1539, £90. 6*s*. 6*d*.

And ſo remayneth in the ſeid commiſſioners handes nil; for they have payed more then they have receyvyd for the guddes of the ſeid late priory by £6. 19*s*.

Certein guddes or ſtuffe, late apperteyning to the ſeid late priory, whych remayneth unſould.

Whyte plate.

Fyrſt, four ſpones, one chalice, all whyte, waying 20 ounces.

Belles remaynyng.

Item, ther remayneth three bells, by eſtimac̄on waying 9 Ct. at . . . . Ct.

Leade remaynyng.

Item, ther remayneth, by eſtimac̄on, 10 fothers of lead, at . . . . the fother.

Mem. Ther remayneth all the howſes edyfyed upon the ſcite of the ſeid late priory; the roffe glaſſe, ieron, and pavement in the churche, the glaſſe and ieron in the ſtepull, the ieron and pavement in the cloyſter, the glaſſe, ieron, and pavement in the chapter-howſe ſould, and only exceptyd.

Mem. that the ſeid John Bewman was put in poſſeſſion of the ſcite of the ſeid late priory, with the demaynes to yt apperteining, to our ſovereign lorde the kynges uſe, the 28 day of October, in the 30 yere of our ſeid ſoveraigne Lord kyng Henry VIII.

Pencions aſſigned and allottyd to the late prioreſe and covent of the forſeid late priory by the forſeid commiſſioners.

Fyrſt, to Annes Lytherland late priores.	£.	s.	d.
Anne Graſley, ſub-priores	2	0	0
Kateryn Cheſyleyn	2	0	0
Margaret Powtrell	2	0	0
Kateryn Baker	2	0	0
Elizabeth Hall	1	13	4
Dorethy Englyſhe	1	13	4
Margaret Knottford	1	13	4
Amy Gyllott	1	13	4
Amy Aſhby	1	13	4
Emme Michell	1	13	4
Elizabeth Preſtbury	1	13	4
Johan Barwell	1	13	4
Elizabeth Farnham	1	13	4
Agnes Coſby	1	6	8
Elizabeth Trotther	2	0	0

Fees and annuities granted owt by Covent ſealle befor the diſſolucon of the ſeid late priory.

Fyrſt, to the balyff of Great Lymber	£.0	13	4
To the baylyffe of Kyrkbye Lenthropp	0	13	4
To the baylyff of Harby	0	6	8
To the baylyff of Belton	0	16	8
To Adam Langley	2	0	0
To Richard Sharpe	2	13	4
To Nicholas Powtrell	1	6	8
To John Byggyng	1	0	0
To Alice Hoo	2	13	4
Summa	12	3	4

Detts owing by the late priores and covent of the ſeid late priory.

Fyrſt, to Robert Prott, of Aſhby de la Zouch,	£.1	5	0
To Robert Smyth, late vicar of Whytwyk,	3	6	8
To Margaret Powtrell, late kychener,	7	10	7
Summa	12	2	3

Mr. Beaumont ſeems to have been interrupted in the poſſeſſion of his newly acquired property by a claim of the earl of Huntingdon; which induced him to addreſs the following epiſtle to the lord Cromwell.

"My dutye unto your ryght honourable lordeſhyp in moſt humble forme remembred; pleyſeth hyt the ſame to be by thes advertyſed that I have cauſed xx*l.* to be delyvered unto my fellow Thomas Avery to the uſe of your good lordeſhyp, humbly beſeeching your lordſhipp's favour and goodnes, that, as ſhall ſtand with the king's pleſure, I may either purchaſe or have in ferm the demeſnes of Gracedewe abbey, whych I am in poſſeſſion of and my fellowe Whalley together by your honorable letters; which ſeyd abbey the erle of Huntyngdon doth labor to take from me, which have no truſte but of your lordſhipp's goodnes, wythout whych I am undoyn; for I do feyre the ſeyd erle and his ſonns do ſeke my lyfe, and all for the truthe ſake; for I have ſecret warnyng by on of hys counſell to wayre a privy coate; whych is not ſuffycient for me, his power being envyron my poore howſe. Beſeechyng God that your lordeſhyp wyll take in good parte my inornate collectyon of the kyng's ſupremycy, wherin ys no thyng apte to be preſented unto your lordſhyp but the appearance of a trewe herte, wyth whych I ſhall contenewally pray and labor to ſend your lordſhyp your moſte noble hert's deſyre. From Whelleſborough, the xxviith daye of Decembre. Your humble ſervant, John Beaumont [1]."

In 1541, John Beaumont, eſq. was cited, to ſhew by what title he held the ſite of the priory of Gracedieu[2]; and, in 1548, North Wingfield chantry was purchaſed from him by ſir Francis Leke[3].

Mr. John Beaumont was elected recorder of Leiceſter in 1550; and, in the ſame year, Dec. 3, was conſtituted maſter of the Rolls[4].

In 1551, a fine with proclamations was levied of this lordſhip, by John Beaumont, eſq. to the uſe of king Edward VI. and his ſucceſſors; and, in 1552, Francis earl of Huntingdon, by the king's letters patent, obtained a grant in fee-farm of the ſite of the capital manſion of the manor-houſe of Gracedieu, with the whole manor of Gracedieu, and grange called Myral Grange, and ſeveral other lands, all lately part of the poſſeſſions of John Beaumont, maſter of the Rolls[5].

In 1553, John Beaumont enjoyed an annual fee of 40*s.* in right of the office, which had been granted to him for life, of ſteward of all the poſſeſſions of Ulveſcroft priory.

At the ſame time there remained in charge, from the nunnery of Gracedieu, the following annuities[6]:

To Nicholas Powtrell	£.1	6	8
— Alice Howe, alias Lymeley	2	13	4
— Richard Sharpe	2	13	4

And the following penſions to ſeveral of the nuns, turned out at the ſuppreſſion by their own ſurrendry:

To Cecilie Bagnall	£.2	0	0
— Katharine Baker	2	0	0
— Elizabeth Trowter	2	0	0
— Dorothie Englyſhe	1	13	4
— Elizabeth Preſbery	1	13	4
— Elizabeth Halle	1	13	4
— Anne Ayſheley	1	13	4
— Johanne Bradwell	1	13	4

Very ſoon after the acceſſion of queen Mary, John Beaumont, who was at that time ſurveyor of Leiceſterſhire, with a fee of £13. 6*s.* 8*d.* and "riding charges by the diſcretion of the court," was deprived of his office[7]; an event which he did not long ſurvive; though the exact date of his death does not appear.

He was twice married. His firſt wife was Iſabel, daughter to Lawrence Dutton, of Dutton, co. Cheſter, by whom he had iſſue only two daughters; Dorothy, married to John Hall, of the county of Warwick; and Anne, to Thomas Aſhby, of Loſeby. His ſecond lady was Elizabeth, eldeſt daughter and coheir to ſir William Haſtings, younger brother to George earl of Huntingdon, by whom he had iſſue, Elizabeth, married to William lord Vaux of Harrowden; Jane, to Robert Brokeſby, of Shouldby; Francis, his ſucceſſor; and Henry, who died unmarried, and lies buried in the Temple church, London, with this epitaph:

"Hic jacet Henricus Beaumont, armiger, Interioris Templi Socius, filius junior Joannis Beaumont, armigeri, quondam magiſtri rotulorum, & Elizabethæ uxoris ejus, filiæ & hæredis Willielmi Haſtings, armigeri, filii junioris Willielmi domini Haſtings; qui quidem Henricus obiit anno ætatis ſuæ 42°."

In 1559, Francis earl of Huntingdon was diſcharged of £24. 13*s.* 4½*d.* annual rent, of the ſite of Gracedieu, and other lands[8].

In 1565, Henry earl of Huntingdon was diſcharged from the fee-farm rent of Gracedieu[9].

Within five years after the death of her huſband, Elizabeth Beaumont claimed and obtained poſſeſſion of Gracedieu; and, by an indenture dated in 1574, Henry earl of Huntingdon, reciting the conveyance of ſir Humphrey Foſter to John and Elizabeth Beaumont and their heirs, and that the ſaid Elizabeth was then ſeiſed of the ſame in fee, ratified and confirmed the ſame to her and her heirs. She accordingly poſſeſſed this lordſhip till her death; and was ſucceeded in it by her eldeſt ſon, Francis Beaumont, eſq. who had been educated in the ſtudy of the law. In a letter to the earl of Shrewſbury, dated Normanton by Derby, July 3, 1589, he apologizes for omitting to pay £100. on a certain day; and requeſts the earl's permiſſion to name him as his chief patron in his introductory ſpeech in the court of common pleas as a ſerjeant at law, ſuch being the cuſtom on thoſe occaſions. In a letter from Gracedieu, Sept. 23, he requeſts ſome does for the ſerjeants' feaſt; Dec. 15, deſires his lordſhip's acceptance of a ſerjeant's ring, and deſcribes the tenure of land called The Caſtle Orchard in Melbourne; and, Dec. 7, 1590, writes a letter to the new earl, of congratulations and condolance[10].

---

[1] Cotton MSS. Cleopatra IV. 132.
[2] Mich. Rec. 32 Hen. VIII. Rot. 19.
[3] Sutton Chartulary, p. 117.
[4] Pat. 4 Edw. VI. p. 6.
[5] See before, pp. 580. 649.
[6] Communicated by Mr. T. Sharpe of Coventry, from the original Act, conſiſting of 77 ſheets of parchment, with the ſignatures of queen Mary and the biſhop of Wincheſter.
[7] From an original Book of Fees and Offices, anno 1° Mariæ, in the Library of Dulwich College, F. 7. 1. abſtracted in the Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica, N° VII. p. 231.
[8] Hil. Rec. 2 Eliz. Rot. 19.
[9] Paſch. Rec. 8 Eliz. Rot. 45.
[10] Unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, vol. G. 472. 505. 529. vol. K. 207.

Jan. 25, 1593, he was advanced to be one of the juſtices of the Common Pleas [1]; and was afterwards knighted. He is ſtyled by Mr. Burton, “ that grave, learned, and reverend judge, Francis Beaumont, eſq.”

He married Anne, daughter to ſir George Pierpoint, of Holme; and had iſſue a daughter Elizabeth, married to Thomas Hilyard, of Kent, and three ſons, Henry, John, and Francis; of each of whom ſome account will be found hereafter. He died at Gracedieu, April 22, 1598; and the inquiſition, taken June 8 following, informs us, that he was ſeiſed of the houſe and ſite of Gracedieu aforeſaid, of divers lands in the pariſh of Belton, Gracedieu, Meriel, Shepeſhed, Oſgathorpe, Thringſton, and Swannington; and that in 1596 he had granted to Thomas Villers, of Loughborough, a certain annuity or annual rent of £28. for five years, out of the diſſolved monaſtery of Gracedieu.

His arms were, Quarterly, 1. Azure, ſemé of fleurs de lis, and a lion rampant Or, Beaumont. 2. Gules, three garbs Gules, bandaged Or, Comin earl of Bouquan. 3. Gules, ſeven maſcles voided and conjoined Or; Quincy. 4. Gules, a cinquefoil Ermine; Blanchmaines earl of Leiceſter. 5. Gules, a pale Or; Grenteſmainell. 6. Azure, a lion rampant Argent, crowned Or; Fergus earl of Galloway. 7. Or, three piles in point Gules; Baſſet. 8. Azure, three garbs Or; Blondeville earl of Cheſter. 9. Gules; a lion rampant Vaire; Everingham. 10. Azure, a feſs Argent, between three cinquefoils Or; Maureward. 11. Argent, a maunch Sable, a creſcent for difference, Haſtings. 12. Gules, a feſs Or, between three ſhovelers proper; Herle. On the centre of the firſt four quarterings this eſcutcheon of pretence; Argent, three bats erect, and wings diſplayed, Gules. Creſt, an elephant Argent; on his back a tower triple-towered Argent, garniſhed Or [2]; Plate LXXVII. fig. 4.

“ One Judge Beaumont living at Gracedieu, two men came before him for juſtice; and one of the men prayed the ground might open, and he might ſink, if what he atteſted in his own cauſe was not true; and the ground immediately opened; but the judge, by pointing with his finger, ordered them to go off, and it cloſed again; and that place will now found, being ſtruck on, as Robert Beaumont of Barrow on Trent, eſq. (who married one of ſir Thomas Beaumont's coheirs, and had his part of the eſtate) affirmeth [3].”

Henry, the eldeſt ſon and heir, was aged 16 years upon the feaſt of St. Thomas the Apoſtle preceding his father's death. He was knighted at Worſopp, April 23, 1603; and, having had in marriage Barbara, daughter and coheir of Anthony Faunt, of Foſton, eſq. departed this life July 13, 1605, leaving his lady then pregnant of a poſthumous daughter called Barbara (married afterward to John Harpur, eſq.; and ſecondly to ſir Wolſtan Dixie, bart.) as appears by an inquiſition taken at Leiceſter, March 29, 1606 [4]; wherein he is ſaid to die ſeiſed of the ſite of Gracedieu, and divers lands, &c. in Belton, Oſgathorpe, Thringſton, Swannington grange in Swannington, which grange formerly belonged to the monaſtery of Gracedieu, the rectory of Shepeſhed, and the manor of Gracedieu, all in the county of Leiceſter, Chadeſton in the county of Derby, and divers lands and tenements, and the tithes of wheat, grain, and hay, in Worthington, Newbold, and Wilſton, in the pariſh of Bredon, co. Leiceſter, late parcel of the cell of Bredon. By indenture, dated Oct. 1, 1604, he had enfeoffed ſir Andrew Noell and ſir Henry Haſtings, knt. with all his lands, in conſideration of his intended marriage with his ſaid wife, entailing the ſame upon his heirs male by the ſaid Barbara; and, in default, to his brothers John and Francis, though the inquiſition taken at Derby, Feb. 11, 1606-7 [5], mentions the ſettlement as in tail general; and in default of iſſue to his brothers; and that ſir Henry died ſeiſed of the Grange of Meriel, &c. within the pariſh of Belton, and of lands in Swinfen, Newton, and Aſton.

John Beaumont, eſq. as next brother and heir-male to ſir Henry, ſucceeded at Gracedieu; and is noticed by Mr. Burton, as “ a gentleman of great learning, gravity, and worthineſs; the remembrance of whom,” he adds, “ for many worthy reſpects I may not here omit.” In his printed Preface alſo we are told that he was “ encouraged by many his good friends of worth; among whom I cannot let paſs (unremembered without a thankful acknowledgement) the kind aſſiſtance and good directions of my antient and much-reſpected friend and kinſman, John Beaumont, of Gracedieu, in the county of Leiceſter, eſq.”

This maſter Beaumont, at the age of 14, was admitted gentleman commoner of Broadgate's Hall, Oxford, in Lent term 1596 (with his brethren Henry and Francis [6].) Having ſtudied here about three years, he went to one of the Inns of Court; but ſoon quitted that ſituation, and returned to the place of his nativity, where he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Forteſcue [7], eſq. ſon of Anthony Forteſcue, eſq. and Katharine his wife, daughter of ſir Geoffrey Pole, of Lordington, in the county of Suſſex, knt. ſon of ſir Richard Pole, knight of the Garter, and Margaret his wife, daughter and heir of George duke of Clarence (brother to king Edward IV.) a gentlewoman of great deſert, equalizing the height of her blood with the worthineſs of her parts.

In 1611, he held the ſite of the late priory of Gracedieu of the king in capite; the church of Shepeſhed, by what ſervice was not known; and the great tithes of Belton in fee-farm by the rent of £10. a year; and, “ in the 10th of king James, was impleaded in the court of wards by the heir-general of this manor, by colour of the before-mentioned fine with proclamations levied by his grandfather John Beaumont unto king Edward VI; but the judgement of the court paſſed with maſter Beaumont [8].”

In his youth he was a ſucceſsful poet, but in his later years applied himſelf to more ſerious ſtudies; and as he was endowed with great abilities, they probably would have been exerted in the ſervice of his country had his life been of longer continuance; but Death, who ſeems generally to direct his deſtructive ſcythe at the faireſt flowers, deprived his country of a uſeful and worthy member, in the middle of his age. He was created a baronet June 29, 1626; but did not ſurvive the winter of 1628. He is ſaid by Wood to have been buried at Gracedieu; but this is a miſtake for Belton, as the priory church was not then exiſting.

Michael Drayton has dropped an obſcure hint at the cauſe of his death, which is not eaſily to be underſtood:

“ Thy care for that which was not worth thy breath
Brought on too ſoon thy much-lamented death.
But Heaven was kind, and would not let thee ſee
The plagues that muſt upon this nation be,
By whom the Muſes have neglected been,
Which ſhall add weight and meaſure to their ſin [9].”

Soon after was publiſhed a Miſcellany of ſir John Beaumont's poems, intituled, “ Boſworth Field; with a Taſte of the Variety of other Poems, left by Sir John Beaumont, Baronet, deceaſed: Set forth by his Sonne, Sir John Beaumont, Baronet; and dedicated to the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty. London, 1629.” The Editor addreſſes king Charles I. in this manner:

“ I

---

[1] His law preferments are not noticed in Dugdale's Origines Juridiciales.

[2] Harl. MSS. 1113. p. 5.

[3] This paragraph is taken from the margin of a copy of Burton, formerly belonging to William Inge, eſq. of Thorpe in Staffordſhire, who adds, “ This ſtory was written, I believe, by a writing-maſter, who lived at Shepeſhed, and diſobliged by ſir Ambroſe Phillipps; but whether with truth related or no, I know not. He was a drunken idle fellow, his name Yarrow; who, I fancy, might write this when he taught to write at Thorpe. W. Inge.”

[4] Inq. at Leiceſter, 4 Jac. I.; and again, Aug. 10, 7 Jac. I.; Cole's Eſcheats, vol. IV. (Harl. MSS. 759.) p. 224.

[5] Inq. Derb. de eodem anno.

[6] Wood's Athen. Oxon. vol. II. p. 524. But ſee hereafter, p. 659.

[7] Among the commendatory praiſes prefixed to ſir John Beaumont's Poems, are the following lines by Mr. George Forteſcue, one of this family, in which the thought turns on the nearneſs of their relationſhip:

“ When lines are drawn greater than Nature, Art
Commands the object and the eye to part,
Bids them to keep at diſtance, know their place,
Where to receive, and where to give their grace.
I am too near thee, Beaumont, to define
Which of thoſe lineaments is moſt divine;
And to ſtand farther off from thee, I chuſe
In ſilence rather to applaud thy Muſe,
And loſe my cenſure; 'tis enough for me
To joy, my pen was taught to move by thee.”

[8] Burton, p. 120. The caſe is at large ſet down, with the arguments, in lord Coke's Reports, Part IX. fol. 138. b.

[9] “ To the dear remembrance of his noble friend ſir John Beaumont, baronet.”

"I have endeavoured without art to ſet this jewel, and render it apt for your Majeſty's acceptance; to which boldneſs I am led by a filial duty, in performing the will of my father, who, whilſt he lived, did ever intend to your Majeſty theſe Poems: Poems, in which no obſcene ſport can be found (the contrary being too frequent a crime among Poets); while theſe (if not too bold I ſpeak) will challenge your Majeſty for their Patron; ſince it is moſt convenient that the pureſt of poems ſhould be directed to you, the virtuouſeſt and moſt untouched, of Princes, the delight of Britain, and the wonder of Europe; at the altar of whoſe judgment bright erected flames, not troubled fumes, dare approach."—The commendatory verſes prefixed are, "An Elegy to the loving memory of his deceaſed friend ſir John Beaumont, knight baronet, by Thomas Nevill;" "An Elegy, dedicated to the memory of his much honoured friend," and "To the worthy Muſe of his noble friend," both ſigned Thomas Hawkins[1]; "A Congratulation to the Muſes, for the immortalizing of his dear Father, by the ſacred Virtue of Poetry," by John Beaumont[2]: "Upon the Poems of my dear Father," by Francis Beaumont[3]; "Upon the Poems of his deareſt Brother," by George Forteſcue[4]; "On the honoured Poems of his honoured Friend," by Ben Jonſon; "To the dear Remembrance of his noble Friend," by Michael Drayton; "Ad poſthumum opus D. Jo. Bellomontis, equitis aurati & baronetti, viri nobiliſſimi, Hendecaſyllabon," by Ph. Kin.; and "On the honoured Poems of his unknown Friend," by Ja. Cl." Extracts from ſome of theſe Poems will be found in the notes below; and thoſe of Ben Jonſon, on the honoured Poems of his honoured friend, being highly to his advantage, ſhall be given at large:

"This book will live; it hath a genius: this Above his reader, or his praiſer, is.
Hence, then, profane: here needs no words expence
In bulwarks, rav'lins, ramparts, for defence;
Such, as the creeping common pioneers uſe,
When they do ſweat to fortify a Muſe.
Though I confeſs a Beaumont's book to be
The bound and frontier of our Poetry;
And doth deſerve all muniments of praiſe,
That art, or engine, on the ſtrength can raiſe.
Yet, who dares offer a redoubt to rear,
To cut a dike, or ſtick a ſtake up, here,
Before this work, where Envy hath not caſt
A trench againſt it, nor a batt'ry plac'd?
Stay, till ſhe make her vain approaches; then,
If maimed ſhe come off, 'tis not of men
This fort of ſo impregnable acceſs,
But higher pow'r, as ſpight could not make leſs,
Nor flattery, but, ſecur'd by th' author's name,
Defies what's croſs to piety or good fame,
And like a hallow'd temple, free from taint
Of ethniciſm, makes his Muſe a ſaint."

Michael Drayton has alſo elſewhere borne honourable teſtimony of ſir John and his brother Francis:

"Then the two Beaumonts and one Browne aroſe,
My dear companions, whom I freely choſe
My boſom friends; and, in their ſeveral ways,
Rightly born poets[5]."

"Boſworth Field" is a deſcription of the famous battle fought there between king Richard III. and the earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII.; and "merits republication for the eaſy flow of its numbers, and the ſpirit with which it is written[6]." There is great harmony in the verſification, and it is much above the general caſt of the age. The author had right notions, likewiſe, with regard to the accuracy of rhimes.

"Sir John Beaumont was one who drank as deep draughts of Helicon as any of that age; and though not many of his works are extant, yet thoſe we have be ſuch as are diſplayed on the flags of higheſt invention, and may juſtly ſtyle him to be one of thoſe great ſouls of numbers[7]." His Poems contain the following tranſlations from the Latin poets; Virgil's 4th Eclogue, Horace's 6th Satire of the ſecond book, his 29th Ode of the third book, and his ſecond Epode; Juvenal's 10th Satire, and Perſius's 2d Satire; Auſonius's 16th Idyll; Claudian's Epigram of the Old Man of Verona; and a Funeral Hymn out of Prudentius. Among the other pieces are, "An Epigram concerning man's life, compoſed by Crates, or Poſidippus," with "The Anſwer of Metrodorus;" ſeveral poems on religious ſubjects (on moſt of the great Feſtivals, on the Bleſſed Trinity, &c.); many of a moral kind (as the Dialogue between the World, a Pilgrim, and Virtue, of the miſerable State of Man, of Sickneſs, &c.); ſome of a political kind; many complimentary to his patron the marquis (afterwards duke) of Buckingham; and others to King James I. and his ſucceſſor. Among theſe are, "A Thankſgiving for the deliverance of our Sovereign king James from a dangerous ſickneſs, Jan. 8;" "To King James, concerning the true form of Engliſh Poetry," in which the Rules of Verſification are judiciouſly laid down and well expreſſed; "To the glorious Memory of our late Sovereign King James;" ſeveral on the Prince's Journey to Spain and moſt happy Return; "To the moſt illuſtrious Prince Charles, on the excellent Uſe of Poems;" "A Panegyric at the Coronation of our Sovereign Lord King Charles;" "An Epithalamium upon the happy Marriage of King Charles and Queen Mary;" "Sonnets at the end of the firſt and ſecond years of his Majeſty's Reign;" &c. Thoſe to his noble patron are, "An Epithalamium, to my lord marqueſſe of Buckingham, and to his fair and virtuous lady[8]" [1620]; "Of his Majeſty's vow for the felicity of the marqueſſe of Buckingham;" "My Lord of Buckingham's Welcome to the King at Burley[9] [1621];" "A Congratulation to my lord marqueſſe on the birth of his daughter [lady Mary Villiers];" "Of true Greatneſs, to my lord marqueſſe of Buckingham;" "Upon my lord of Buckingham's Arms;" "Upon my lord of Buckingham's Shield at a Tilting, his Impreſe being a Bird of Paradiſe" [1621]; "To the duke of Buckingham, on his Return from Spain" [1623]; "To the duke of Buckingham;" "To my gracious lord the duke of Buckingham, upon the birth of his firſt Son." This ſon was Charles lord Villiers, earl of Coventry, who died an infant March 17, 1626-7; and whoſe death produced from ſir John Beaumont the following lines, "Upon the Earl of Coventry's departure from us to the Angels:

"Sweet Babe, whoſe birth inſpir'd me with a ſong,
And call'd my Muſe to trace thy days along;
Attending riper years, with hope to find
Such brave endeavours of thy noble mind,
As might deſerve triumphant lines, and make
My forehead bold a laurel crown to take:
How haſt thou left us, and this earthly ſtage,
(Not acting many months), in tender age!

---

[1] Probably ſir Thomas Hawkins, of Naſh in Kent, one of the earlieſt tranſlators of Horace's Odes.

[2] To whom we are obliged for the edition of his father's poems, and who was himſelf no mean poet, as appears by theſe lines:

"Here lives his better part; here ſhines that flame,
Which lights the entrance to eternal fame:
Theſe are his triumphs over Death, this ſpring
From Aganippe's fountains he could bring
Clear from all droſs, thro' pure intentions drain'd;
His draughts no ſenſual waters ever ſtain'd.
Behold, he doth on ev'ry paper ſtrow
The loyal thoughts he did his Sovereign owe:
Here reſt affections to each neareſt friend,
And pious ſighs, which noble thoughts attend."

[3] From this ſon's tribute of verſe to his father's memory, take the following ſtanzas as a ſpecimen:

"For, ſhould I ſtrive to deck the virtues high,
Which in theſe Poems like fair gems appear,
I might as well add brightneſs to the ſky,
Or with new ſplendor make the ſun more clear,
Since ev'ry line is with ſuch beauties grac'd,
That nothing farther can their praiſes ſound;
And that dear name, which on the front is plac'd,
Declares what ornaments within are found:
That name, I ſay, in whom the Muſes meet,
And with ſuch heat his noble ſpirit raiſe,
That kings admire his verſe; whilſt at his feet
Orpheus his harp, and Phœbus caſts his bays"

[4] See theſe lines in p. 656.

[5] Of Poets and Poeſy.

[6] Headley, vol. I. p. xxxv. It ſhall be given at large, under the Hiſtory of Market Boſworth.

[7] Winſtanley.

[8] Lady Catharine Manners, daughter of Francis earl of Rutland; whom ſir John Beaumont takes delicately an opportunity of complimenting, in a poem called "The Shepherdeſs," which ſhall be given at length hereafter under Garendon.

[9] See before, p. 213.

Thou cam'ſt into this world a little ſpy,
Where all things that could pleaſe the ear and eye
Were ſet before thee; but thou found'ſt them toys,
And flew'ſt with ſcornful ſmiles t'eternal joys;
No viſage of grim Death is ſent t'affright
Thy ſpotleſs ſoul, nor darkneſs blinds thy ſight;
But lightſome Angels with their golden wings
O'erſpread thy cradle; and each ſpirit brings
Some precious balm, for heav'nly phyſick meet,
To make the ſeparation ſoft and ſweet.
The ſpark infus'd by God departs away,
And bids the earthly weak companion ſtay
With patience in that nurs'ry of the ground,
Where firſt the ſeeds of Adam's limbs were found:
For time ſhall come, when theſe divided friends
Shall join again, and know no ſev'ral ends;
But change this ſhort and momentary kiſs,
To ſtrict embraces of celeſtial bliſs."

The other poems of this ſort are, "To my lord viſcount Purbeck [1], a congratulation for his health;" "To the memory of the fair and thrice virtuous gentlewoman, Miſtreſs Elizabeth Nevill;" and, "Of the truly noble and excellent lady, the lady marqueſſe of Wincheſter [2];" beginning thus:

"Can my poore lines no better office have,
But lie like ſcritch-owls ſtill about the grave?
When ſhall I take ſome pleaſure for my paine,
Commending them that can commend againe?
When ſhall my Muſe in love-ſick lines recite
Some Lady's worth, which ſhe of whom I write
With thankfull ſmiles may read in her own daies?
Or when ſhall I a breathing woman praiſe?
O, never; mine are too ambitious ſtrings;
They will not ſound but of eternall things,
Such are freed ſoules; but, had I thought it fit
To exalt a ſpirit to a body knit;
I would confeſſe, I ſpent my time amiſſe,
When I was ſlow to give due praiſe to this.
Now when all weepe, my time it is to ſing,
And from her aſhes muſt my Poem ſpring;
Though in the race I ſee ſome ſwiftly runne,
I will not crown them till the goale be won. . . . .
"I could thy huſband's higheſt ſtyles relate,
Thy father's earldom, and that England's ſtate
Was wholly manag'd by thy grandſire's brow:
But thoſe that love thee beſt, will beſt allow
That I omit to praiſe thy match and line,
And ſpeak of things that were more truly thine," &c.

Thus much is given of this Elegy; as, in the collected Poems of Mr. Francis Beaumont, a mutilated copy of it is printed as the production of the younger brother, beginning as this does, and ending thus:

"They that have fought, not they that are to fight,
May claime the glorious garland as their right."

Epitaph on my dear brother Francis Beaumont:

"On Death thy Murd'rer this revenge I take:
I ſlight his terror; and juſt queſtion make,
Which of us two the beſt precedence have,
Mine to this wretched world, thine to the grave.
Thou ſhouldſt have follow'd me; but Death, to blame,
Miſcounted years, and meaſur'd age by fame.
So dearly haſt thou bought thy precious lines;
Their praiſe grew ſwiftly; ſo thy life declines.
Thy Muſe, the hearer's queen, the reader's love,
All ears, all hearts (but Death's) could pleaſe and move."

"Upon his noble friend ſir William Skipwith [3];" "On my dear ſon, Gervaſe Beaumont [4];" "Tears for the death of the truly honourable the lord Chandos [5]," 1621; "Upon the untimely death of the honourable, hopeful young gentleman, Edward Stafford, ſon and heir to lord Stafford [6]."

"Dead is the hope of Stafford, in whoſe line
So many dukes, and earls, and barons ſhine:
And from this Edward's death his kindred draws
More grief than mighty Edward's fall could cauſe:
For to this Houſe his virtue promis'd more
Than all thoſe great ones that had gone before.
No lofty titles can ſecurely frame
The happineſs and glory of a name:
Bright honours at the point of noon decay,
And feel a ſad declining like the day.
But he that from the race of Kings is born,
And can their mem'ries with his worth adorn,
Is far more bleſt than thoſe of whom he ſprings;
He from above the ſoul of goodneſs brings,
T' inſpire the body of his noble birth;
This makes it move, before but lifeleſs earth.
Of ſuch I write, who ſhow'd he would have been Complete in action, but we loſt him green.
We only ſaw him crown'd with flowers of hope,
O that the fruits had given me larger ſcope!
And yet the bloom which in his herſe we ſhow
Surpaſs the cherries and the grapes that grow
In other gardens. Here freſh roſes lie,
Whoſe ruddy bluſhes modeſt thoughts deſcry.
In flower-de-luces dyed with azure hue,
His conſtant love to heav'nly things we view:
The ſpotleſs lilies ſhew his pure intent,
The flaming marigolds his zeal preſent;
The purple violets his noble mind,
Degen'rate never from his princely kind;
And laſt of all the hyacinths we throw,
In which are writ the letters of our woe."

"To the memory of the learned and religious Ferdinando Pulton, eſquire:

"His books were his rich purchaſes; his fees,
That praiſe which Fame to painful works decrees,
His memory hath a ſurer ground than theirs,
Who truſt in ſtately tombs or wealthy heirs."

"To the moſt immortal memory of the faireſt and moſt virtuous lady the lady Clifton [7];" "Upon the death of the moſt noble lord Henry earl of Southampton, Nov. 10 [1624];" and "An Epitaph upon that hopeful young gentleman the lord Wriotheſley [8]:

"Here lies a Souldier, who in youth deſir'd
His valiant Father's noble ſteps to tread,
And ſwiftly from his friends and country fled:
While to the height of glory he aſpir'd,
The cruell Fates, with bitter envy fir'd,
To ſee Warres prudence in ſo young a head,
Sent from their duſky caves, to ſtrike him dead,
A ſtrong diſeaſe in peacefull robes attir'd.
This Murd'rer kills him with a ſilent dart:
And, having drawne it bloody from the Sonne,
Throwes it againe into the Father's heart,
And to his Lady boaſts what he hath done.
What helpe can men againſt pale Death provide,
When twice within few dayes Southampton died [9]!"

Sir John Beaumont wrote alſo "The Crown of Thorns [10];" a work which we have not ſeen, but which is thus celebrated by ſir Thomas Hawkins [11]:

"Like to the Bee, thou didſt thoſe flow'rs ſelect,
That moſt the taſteful palate might affect
With pious reliſhes of things divine,
And diſcompoſed ſenſe with peace combine:

---

[1] Sir John Villiers, elder brother to the duke of Buckingham, created baron of Stoke, and viſcount Purbeck, 19 June, 1620.

[2] Lucy, daughter to Thomas earl of Exeter. This appears by the lines which mention her father's earldom, and "that England's ſtate was wholly manag'd by her grandſire's brow."

[3] Theſe lines were engraven on ſir William's tomb; ſee p. 359.

[4] See theſe in p. 659.

[5] Grey Brugges lord Chandos died at the Spaw, in July 1621.

[6] Edward Stafford, the third duke of Buckingham of that name, was beheaded May 17, 1521. His wife was Eleanor, daughter to Henry duke of Northumberland. Henry his eldeſt ſon was in 1524 reſtored in blood, but not to his honours. His lands were in the ſame year reſtored; and we find him ſitting in parliament as a baron in 1546. He had a ſon and grandſon, both named Edward; the former of whom, the young man here honoured, died in his father's life time, and was buried at St. Andrew's, Holborn. He left a ſon Henry; who dying unmarried in 1657, his only ſiſter Mary became the wife of ſir William Howard, K. B. created viſcount Stafford in 1640, and beheaded Dec. 29, 1680.

[7] Lady Penelope Clifton; ſee p. 657*.

[8] James lord Wriotheſley, eldeſt ſon of the earl of Southampton, died in the Netherlands, a few days before his father.

[9] A leaf which originally followed this (p. 181.) is wanting in all the copies of ſir John Beaumont's Poems (and they have been many) which either my intelligent friend Mr. Reed or myſelf have ever ſeen. One of theſe (now Mr. Beloe's) belonged to Mrs. E. Cooper, editor of "The Muſes' Library," and has her autograph.

[10] A poem in eight books, inſcribed to Henry earl of Southampton. This appears by the Elegy above noticed.

[11] In one of the commendatory poems prefixed to Boſworth Field.

Which in thy Crown of Thorns we may diſcern,
Fram'd as a model for the beſt to learn,
That verſe may virtue teach, as well as proſe,
And minds with native force to good diſpoſe,
Devotion ſtir, and quicken cold deſires,
To entertain the warmth of holy fires.
There may we ſee thy ſoul expatiate,
And with true fervour ſweetly meditate
Upon our Saviour's ſufferings, that, while Thou ſeek'ſt his painful torments to beguile
With well-tun'd accents of thy zealous ſong,
Breath'd from a ſoul transfix'd, a paſſion ſtrong,
We better knowledge of his woes attain,
Fall into tears with thee, and then again
Riſe with thy verſe, to celebrate the flood
Of thoſe eternal torrents of his blood."

Sir John Beaumont had ſeven ſons and four daughters. The ſons were, 1. ſir John, his ſucceſſor; 2. Francis, whoſe verſes on his father have been already noticed, and who became a Jeſuit; 3. Henry; 4. Gervaſe[1]; 5. George; 6. Thomas; 7. Charles[2]; all of whom (except ſir Thomas, of whom hereafter) died unmarried. The daughters were, 1. Helen, 2. Anne; who both died unmarried; 3. Catharine, born July 31, 1635; 4. Mary, married firſt to ſir Edmund Williamſon, and after to John Taſborough, of Flixton and Gedney.

In 1615, ſir James Simple, knt. and others, appear to have had a leaſe of the ſite of Gracedieu nunnery[3].

Thomas Bancroft, in his "Two books of Epigrams and Epitaphs, 1639," thus apoſtrophizes this houſe:

"Gracedieu, that under Charnwood ſtand'ſt alone,
As a grand rélicke of Religion,
I reverence thine old (but fruitfull) worth,
That lately brought ſuch noble Beaumonts forth,
Whoſe brave heroic Muſes muſt aſpire,
To match the anthems of the heavenly quire.
The mountaines crown'd with rocky fortreſſes,
And ſheltering woods, ſecure thy happineſſe,
That highly favour'd art (though lowly plac'd)
Of Heaven, and with free Nature's bounty grac'd,
Herein grow happier; and that bliſſe of thine
Nor, Pride o'er top, nor Envy undermine!"

And he thus addreſſes the ſurrounding Foreſt:

"Charnwood, if all thy ſtones were turn'd to bread,
(As once the Fiend did ſuch a motion make)
It would be more than Zerxes fed,
Or Tenariffe and Ætna both could bake;
And hungry Churles (that rail at ſouldiers)
Would rend up rock-bread, and turne pioners."

Sir John Beaumont, who ſucceeded his father, was of ſuch uncommon ſtrength, that it was reputed by old men who knew him, that he did leap 16 feet at one leap, and would commonly, at a ſtand leap, jump over a high long table in the hall, light on the ſettle beyond the table, and raiſe himſelf ſtraight up[4]. He was the editor of his father's poems in 1629; and in 1644 was ſlain at the ſiege of Glouceſter. Among the ſuffering Loyaliſts are noticed "ſir John Beaumont, of Gracedieu, a colonel in the king's army (who died in the ſervice); and who, with the lord Beaumont, ſir Thomas Beaumont, Thomas Beaumont of York, and George Beaumont, paid £5000. compoſition[5]."

Sir Thomas Beaumont, ſixth ſon of the firſt baronet, ſucceeded to the title on the death of his brother; and his name occurs in the liſt of compounders for £1190.

There remained at Gracedieu in 1645 an entire court of cloiſters, hall, &c.; and theſe arms (fig. 5—7) were then recently painted in one of the chambers[6].

"Beaumont; impaling, Argent, a cinquefoil pierced Azure; Moton.

Beaumont; impaling, Argent, ſemé of cinquefoils Gules, a lion rampant Sable, Pierpoint.

Beaumont; impaling Haſtings."

Sir Thomas Beaumont married Vere, only daughter of ſir William Tufton, of Vintners near Maidſtone, knt. brother to Nicholas earl of Thanet; and at the Heraldic Viſitation, March 16, 1681-2, the pedigree of this branch of the family was ſigned by "Vere Beaumont, in behalf of ſir Thomas Beaumont." Dying July 7, 1686, aged 66, without iſſue male, the title became extinct; but he left four daughters; Cecily, Vere, Mary, and Jane. His lady was re-married to Mr. George Lane, a dancing maſter; and was living in 1693[7].

At that time there remained here a portrait of Cardinal Pole, under which were theſe arms:

1. Quarterly, France and England, a label of three points Argent, Plantagenet duke of Clarence. 2. Per pale Or and Sable, a ſaltire engrailed counterchanged; Pole. 3. Gules, a ſaltire Argent, a label of three points gobony Argent and Azure; Nevile earl of Saliſbury and Warwick. 4. Gules, a feſs between ſix croſs croſslets Or; Beauchamp. 5. Chequé Or and Azure, a chevron Ermine; Newburgh earl of Warwick. 6. Argent, three lozenges in feſs Gules; Montacute. 7. Or, an eagle diſplayed Vert, armed Gules; Monthermer. 8. Quarterly, 1. and 4. Or, three chevrons Gules, Clare; 2. and 3. Quarterly, Argent and Gules, in the ſecond and third quarter a fret Or, over all a bend Sable; Spencer. Creſt, a cardinal's cap; fig. 8.

By Cecily, the eldeſt daughter, the ſite of the priory at Gracedieu was brought in marriage to Robert Beaumont, of Barrow upon Trent, co. Derby, eſq. (a collateral branch of the family); from whom it was purchaſed by ſir Ambroſe Phillipps, knight, then of Garendon, and king's ſerjeant; under whoſe direction a conſiderable part of the priory church was pulled down in 1696; but the foundation was not ſuffered to be demoliſhed, nor the coffins to be diſturbed[8].

From ſir Ambroſe Phillipps, who died in 1706, the ſite of this priory deſcended to his ſecond ſon William, and grandſon Samuel; and is now the property of Thomas March-Phillipps, eſq.[9]

In Plate LXXXVII. are given two views of the remains of the priory; one taken by Mr. Buck in 1730, in which many conſiderable parts of the building are eaſily traceable; the other by Mr. Malcolm in 1792, from an oppoſite point of view.

The lime for manure is chiefly burnt at Gracedieu[10]; but the lime of this place is not in very high repute, being ſuppoſed to fill the land with couch graſs.

---

[1] Who died at ſeven years of age, as we learn from ſome pathetic verſes of ſir John's on the death of his "dear ſon."

"Can I, who have for others oft compil'd
The ſongs of Death, forget my ſweeteſt child;
Which, like a flow'r cruſh'd with a blaſt, is dead,
And ere full time hangs down his ſmiling head;
Expecting with clear hope to live anew,
Among the angels fed with heavenly dew?
We have this ſign of joy, that many days,
While on the earth his ſtruggling ſpirit ſtays,
The name of Jeſus in his mouth contains
His only food, his ſleep, his eaſe from pains.
O may that ſound be rooted in my mind
Of which in him ſuch ſtrong effect I find!
Dear Lord, receive my ſon, whoſe winning love
To me was like a friendſhip, far above
The courſe of nature, or his tender age;
Whoſe looks could all my bitter griefs aſſuage;
Let his pure ſoul, ordain'd ſeven years to be
In that frail body, which was part of me,
Remain my pledge in Heaven, as ſent to ſhow
How to this port at ev'ry ſtep I go!"

[2] Who died of a conſumption. See his uncle's verſes, p. 657*.

[3] Paſch. Rec. 13 Jac. I. Rot. 141.

[4] This circumſtance is noticed in the margin of Mr. Inge's copy of Burton, already cited in p. 654.

[5] Memoirs of the Royaliſts, pp. 563. 673. "In this rubrick," Lloyd adds, "Mr. Beaumont, an orthodox miniſter of Pontefract, noted for his loyal, reſolute, and conſtant adherence to the royal cauſe, and for ſettling at his houſe the deſign for ſurprizing Pontefract, and keeping intelligence, ſtating and regulating contributions, bringing in relief, ſpying the enemies lines and advantages, and going out in ſeveral parties to ſecure it when it was taken; murdered by a council of war, who took, ſentenced, and executed him in two hours, Feb. 15, 1648, deſerves to have one name, being an inſtance of an extraordinary cruelty in one reſpect, that, with a fanatic reſpect to the law, Deut. xiii. 6. his neareſt relation was forced to have a hand in his execution, contrary to the civil law among Heathens. Filius non torquetur in caput parentis."—Mr. Beaumont was executed for correſponding with the garriſon in characters; and choſe to dye, rather than diſcover the characters. Whitelock, p. 377

[6] Simmonds's Diary, in Harl. MSS. 911.

[7] See before, under Merill Grange, p. 649.

[8] From the margin of Mr. Inge's copy of Burton.

[9] See hereafter, under Garendon.

[10] Bray's Tour, p. 99.—See before, p. 81; and hereafter, p. 687.—On this ſubject, Mr. Marſhall adds, "In July 1784, I made, on a turnep fallow, a comparative experiment with Bredon lime. The piece in general is limed with about five quarters an acre. Part of one land had double that quantity; part of another none. The turnep crop received no obvious advan-

FRANCIS BEAUMONT, the celebrated Dramatic Poet, third ſon of Francis the Judge, was born at Gracedieu in 1586; and in the beginning of Lent Term 1596 was admitted (with his two brothers Henry and John) a gentleman commoner of Broadgate hall, in the univerſity of Oxford, at that period the principal nurſery for ſtudents in the civil and common law; and on the ſite of which a new college (now called Pembroke) was founded in 1624. At this ſeminary Mr. Francis Beaumont imbibed thoſe rudiments of ſound learning by which he was afterward ſo eminently diſtinguiſhed. I am aware that it has been generally underſtood that he was educated at Cambridge; but this is an error, ariſing from a ſimilarity of name, and a blunder of Anthony Wood; who, after expreſsly ſtating that he was admitted at Oxford, adds, "As for Francis Beaumont, who with his elder brother ſir John came to Broadgate hall in 1596, as I have before told you, he muſt not be underſtood to be the ſame with Francis Beaumont the eminent Poet and Comedian; for, though he were of the ſame family, and moſt of his name ſtudied in Oxon, yet he was educated in Cambridge[1]."—It is certain, however, that the younger brother of ſir John and the Dramatic Poet were the ſame perſon; and that the Francis Beaumont of Cambridge[2] was his nameſake and relation of the Charterhouſe, where he died in 1624[3].—Our Poet was for ſome time a ſtudent in the Inner Temple; and his "Maſk of the Inner Temple and Gray's Inn[4]" was acted and printed in 1612-13. But it does not appear that he made any great proficiency in the Law; that being a ſtudy probably too dry and unentertaining to be attended to by a man of his fertile and ſprightly genius. We ſhould ſcarcely indeed be ſurprized to find that he had given no application to any ſtudy but Poetry, nor attended on any court but that of the Muſes; but, on the contrary, our admiration might fix itſelf in the oppoſite extreme, and fill us with aſtoniſhment at the greatneſs of his genius and rapidity of his pen, when we look back on the voluminouſneſs of his works, and then enquire into the time allowed him for them; works that might well have taken up a long life to have executed; for although, out of fifty-three plays which are collected together as the labours of two united authors, Mr. Beaumont was concerned in much the greateſt part of them, yet he did not live to complete his 30th year.

Beaumont and Fletcher generally wrote in conjunction. The former was remarkable for the accuracy of his judgement; the latter for the force of his imagination. Their works reſemble thoſe of Moliere, in the variety and juſtneſs of their characters.

"There was a wonderful confimility of fancy between Mr. Francis Beaumont and Mr. John Fletcher, which cauſed that dearneſs of friendſhip between them. I have heard Dr. John Earl, ſince biſhop of Sarum, ſay, who knew them, that his main buſineſs was to correct the ſuper-overflowings of Mr. Fletcher's wit. They lived together on the Bank ſide, not far from the play-houſe, both bachelors, lay together[5], had one bench in the houſe between them, which they did ſo admire, the ſame cloaths, cloak, &c. between them[6]."

Beaumont ſtudied and followed Jonſon's manner; perſonized the paſſions, and drew Nature in her extremes. Fletcher followed Shakeſpeare and Nature in her uſual dreſs. Beaumont, as appears by various teſtimonies, was a hard ſtudent, and had a ſurpriſing compaſs of literature. He never condeſcended to tranſlate, and rarely to imitate; however largely he was ſupplied with claſſic ſtreams, from his own urn all flows pure and untinctured.

Mr. Beaumont addreſſed "A Letter to Ben Jonſon[7]," written during a temporary retirement at Gracedieu (where he calls the ſun their "beſt haymaker;" and, recollecting their ſeveral meetings at the Mermaid, their flaſhes of wit and merriment, and "the full Mermaid wine," complains that, in the country, he can only get "water mix'd with claret lees);" and expreſſes for him the higheſt eſteem and friendſhip:

"Baniſh'd unto this home, Fate once again
Bring me to thee, who canſt make ſmooth and plaine
The way of knowledge for me; and then I,
Who have no good but in thy company,
Proteſt it will my grateful comfort be
T' acknowledge all I have to flow from thee.
But, when theſe ſcenes are perfect, we'll taſte wine;
I'll drink thy Muſe's health, thou ſhalt quaff mine."

Verſes alſo by Francis Beaumont are prefixed to three different plays of Ben Jonſon; "The Fox;" "The Silent Woman;" and "Catiline."

---

tage from the lime. But its effects on the barley are evident. The part not limed is evidently the worſt crop; nearly in the proportion, I apprehend, of four to three. In this caſe, therefore, the barley alone will nearly pay for the lime. But, what is ſtill more intereſting, the part limed with 10 quarters an acre is the beſt crop in the piece! Therefore, the notion that a quantity of Bredon lime greater that five quarters an acre is ruinous to crops appears, by this experiment, to be entirely ill founded. Upon foul pinfallow it may be injurious, by encouraging (not breeding) couch: but on a clean turnep fallow it has, in this inſtance, ſpent its ſtrength on the crop." Rural Oeconomy of the Midland Couuties, vol. II. p. 229.

[1] Wood, Athen. Oxon. vol. I. p. 524. Miſled by the mention of Cambridge in the Preface to Chaucer, and following the blunder of Wood, Mr. Aubrey ſuppoſed him to have been bred at Cambridge; and obſerves that he hath a very good prefatory letter before Mr. Speght's edition of Chaucer.—In Oldys's interleaved copy of Langbaine, bought by Mr. Brydges at Mr. Steevens's ſale, is this note: "Beaumont died in the beginning of March 1615, and was buried in Weſtminſter Abbey, aged, as ſome write, about 30 years, which muſt be too young, for he has an epiſtle before Speght's Chaucer in 1598; and it is not likely the judgement of a boy of 13 would be on that occaſion ſo preferred. Indeed, ſir Aſton Cokayne ſays, he was eclipſed in the height of his noon; but that is no very improper expreſſion for a man of 40 or upwards. His poem of Salmacis and Hermaphroditus was publiſhed in 1602; and it is likely he was more than 17 years of age at the publication of it."—But the difficulty reſpecting the Preface to Chaucer is here removed (ſee p. 733); and the poem is evidently that of a very young man.

[2] There was a Francis Beaumont of Peter houſe, Cambridge, and another of St. John's; but I know not their dates.

[3] See before, under Cole Orton.

[4] Mr. Chamberlain, in a letter to ſir Ralph Winwood, dated London, Feb. 23, 1612, thus notices this Maſk: "The lord's Maſke, on the marriage-night, though it were very rich and ſumptuous, yet it was long and tedious: and with many devices, more like a play than a maſke. But the Middle Templers and Lincoln's Inn gave great contentment on Munday night [Feb. 15], as well by their graceful coming on horſeback, as in all the reſt of their apt invention, apparel, and faſhion, and eſpecially their excellent dancing; wherewith the king was ſo much delighted, that he gave them many thanks and much commendation, as well to their faces as behind their backs. But the next day our Gray's Inn men and the Inner Temple had not the ſame fortune, though they deſerved no leſs; for, ſtriving to vary from their competitors (and their device being the marrying of the Thames to the Rhine) they made choice to go by water from Wincheſter-houſe in Southwark with their boats and barges, exceedingly trimmed and furniſhed with ſtore of lights that made a glorious ſhew, and three peale of ordnance, at their taking water, at their paſſing by the Temple, and at their landing; which paſſage by water coſt them better than £300. But, when they were landed at the Court, by what miſchance I know not, they were feign to return as they went, without doing any thing; the reaſon whereof, ſome ſay, was becauſe the hall was ſo full that it could not be avoided, nor room made for them, and moſt of the principal ladies that were in the galleries to ſee them land excluded. But the moſt probable is, that the king was ſo ſatiated and over-wearied with watching, that he could hold out no longer; and ſo was driven to put it off till Saturday [Feb. 20], when it was very well performed in the new Banqueting-houſe; which, for a kind of amends, was granted to them, though with much repining and contradiction of their emulators. The next day the king made them all a ſolemn ſupper in the new marriage-room; and uſed them ſo well and graciouſly, that he ſent both parties away well pleaſed with this great ſolemnity *."

[5] From ſir James Hales, &c.

[6] From Aubrey; printed in the Oxford Cabinet, 1797; N° I.

[7] In the Stationers Books, Nov. 6, 1639, is entered, "An Addition of ſome excellent Poems to Shakeſpeare's Poems, by other gentlemen;" among which this "Epiſtle to Ben Jonſon by Francis Beaumont" is particularly ſpecified.

* Winwood's Memorials, vol. III. p. 435.—Theſe Maſques were contrived for the celebration of the nuptials of the Count Palatine of the Rhine with the Princeſs Elizabeth. The machinery and decorations for that of the Middle Temple and Lincoln's Inn were by Inigo Jones; the words by George Chapman; and the expence to Lincoln's Inn not leſs than 2400*l*.—That of the Inner Temple and Gray's Inn was alſo repreſented with the utmoſt ſplendour and magnificence, and at a great expence to the Societies; as appears by Dugdale's "Origines Juridiciales."

Jonſon (who is ſaid conſtantly to have conſulted Beaumont, and to have paid the greateſt deference to his judgement) treats him not, in his anſwer, as a mere critic, and judge of others works only; but as an eminent poet, whom he loved with a zeal enough to kindle a love to his memory, as long as poetry delights the underſtanding, or friendſhip warms the heart.

“ How do I love thee, Beaumont, and thy Muſe,
That unto me doſt ſuch Religion uſe!
How do I fear my ſelfe, that am not worth
The leaſt indulgent thought thy pen drops forth!
At once thou mak’ſt me happie, and unmak’ſt;
And, giving largely to me, more thou tak’ſt.
What fate is mine, that ſo itſelf bereaves?
What art is thine, that ſo thy friend deceives?
When, even there where moſt thou praiſeſt me,
For writing better, I muſt envy thee [1]!”

Of Mr. Beaumont’s epitaphs take a ſingle ſpecimen, which is extremely in the ſpirit of thoſe of Milton and Shakſpeare; and ſhews that Beaumont excelled in every ſpecies of writing which he attempted:

“ Here ſhe lies, whoſe ſpotleſs fame
Invites a Stone to learne her name.
The rigid Spartan, that denied
An Epitaph to all that died,
Unleſſe for war, on charity,
Would here vouchſafe an Elegie:
She died a wife; but yet her mind,
Beyond virginity refin’d,
From lawleſſe fire remain’d as free,
As nowe from heat her aſhes be:
Her huſband, yet without a ſin,
Was not a ſtranger, but her kin;
That her chaſte love might ſeem no other
To her huſband than a brother.
Keep well this pawn, thou Marble Cheſt;
Till it be call’d for, let it reſt:
For, while this Jewell here is ſet,
The grave is like a Cabinet.”

Several of his Elegies have great merit. That on Lady Penelope Clifton [2] is long; and the point of it turns on an apoſtrophe to Death.

“ I would thou hadſt had eyes, or not a dart,
That yet at leaſt the cloathing of that heart
Thou ſtrook’ſt ſo ſpightfully might have appear’d
To thee, and with a reverence have been fear’d.
But, ſince thou art ſo blind, receive from me
Who ’twas on whom thou wrought’ſt this Tragedy.
She was a Lady, who for publique fame,
Never (ſince ſhe in thy protection came
Who ſett’ſt all living tongues at large) receiv’d
A blemiſh; with her beauty ſhe deceiv’d
No man: when taken with it, they agree
’Twas Nature’s fault; when from ’em, ’twas in thee,
And ſuch her vertue was, that although ſhe
Receive as much joy, having paſs’d through thee,
As ever any did; yet hath thy hate
Made her as little better in her ſtate,
As ever it did any being here.
Shee liv’d with us as if ſhe had been there.”

One on Lady Markham concludes with recommending to the worms to make holes through her ear-tips;

“ —— which, as the moiſt incloſed aire
Turnes into water, may the cleane drops take,
And in her eares a paire of jewels make.
Have ye not yet enough of that white ſkin,
The touch whereof, in times paſt, would have been Enough t’have ranſom’d many a thouſand ſoule
Captive to Love? If not, then upward roale
Your little bodies, where I would you have
This Epitaph upon her forehead grave:
Living, ſhe was young, faire, and full of wit;
Dead, all her faults are in her forehead writ.”

The following lines were written on his nephew [3], Mr. Charles Beaumont, who died of a conſumption:

“ While others drop their teares upon thy hearſe,
Sweet Charles, and ſigh t’encreaſe the wind; my verſe,
Pious in naming thee, cannot complain
Of Death or Fate, for they were lately ſlaine
By thy own conflict; and ſince good men know
What Heaven to ſuch a Virgin Saint doth owe;
Though ſome will ſay they ſaw thee dead, yet I Congratulate thy life and victory:
Thy fleſh an upper garment, that it might
Aide thy eternall progreſſe, firſt grew light;
Nothing but Angel now, which thou wert neare,
Almoſt reduc’d to thy firſt ſpirit heere:
But fly, faire ſoule, while our complaints are juſt,
That cannot follow for our chains of duſt.”

An Elegy on a nameleſs lady ſeems to breathe the ſentiments of ſincere affection [4]:

“ Heaven knows my love to thee, fed on deſires
So hallow’d and unmixt with vulgar fires,
As are the pureſt beames ſhot from the ſun
At his full height; and the devotion
Of dying Martyrs could not burne more cleare,
Nor Innocence in her firſt robes appeare
Whiter than our affections; they did ſhow
Like froſt forc’d out of flames, and fire from ſnow;” &c.

On the death of Elizabeth, widow of Roger fifth earl of Rutland [5], daughter of ſir Philip Sidney, which happened in Auguſt 1612, Mr. Beaumont publiſhed the following epiſtle and elegy, which were afterwards prefixed to ſir Thomas Overbury’s “Characters [6]:”

Ad Comitiſſam Rutlandiæ.

“ Madam, ſo may my verſes pleaſing be,
So you may laugh at them, and not at me!
’Tis ſomething to you gladly I would ſay;
But how to do, I cannot find the way.
I would avoid the common beaten ways
To woman uſed, which are love or praiſe.
As for the firſt, the little wit I have
Is not yet grown ſo near unto the grave,
But that I can, by that dim fading light,
Perceive of what, and unto whom I write.
Let ſuch as in a hopeleſs witleſs rage
Can ſigh a quire, and read it to a page;
Such as do backs of books and windows fill,
With their too furious diamond or quill;
Such as were well reſolv’d to end their days
With a loud laughter blown beyond the ſeas;
Who are ſo mortified that they can live
Contemn’d of all the world, and yet forgive.
Write love to you: I would not willingly
Be pointed at in every company;
As was that little taylor, who till death
Was not in love with queen Elizabeth:
And, for the laſt, in all my idle days
I never yet did living woman praiſe
In proſe or verſe: and when I do begin
I’ll pick ſome woman out as full of ſin
As you are full of virtue; with a ſoul
As black as you are white; a face as foul
As yours is beautiful: for it ſhall be
Out of the rules of phyſiognomy
So far, that I do fear I muſt diſplace
The art a little, to let in her face.
It ſhall at leaſt four faces be below
The Devil’s; and her parched corps ſhall ſhow
In her looſe ſkin as if ſome ſprite ſhe were,
Kept in a bag by ſome great conjurer.
Her breath ſhall be as horrible and wild,
As every word you ſpeak is ſweet and mild:
It ſhall be ſuch an one as will not be
Cover’d with any art or policy.
But let her take all powders, fumes, and drink,
She ſhall make nothing but a dearer ſtink.
She ſhall have ſuch a foot and ſuch a noſe,
She ſhall not ſtand in any thing but proſe:

---

[1] See his Works, London, 1716, 8vo, vol. III. p. 133.

[2] Daughter to Robert Rich earl of Warwick, and firſt wife of ſir Gervaſe Clifton, bart. She died Oct. 26, 1613. Sir John Beaumont has alſo an elegy on the death of this lady. See p. 658.

[3] Theſe lines have been aſcribed to James Shirley, in whoſe Poems they are printed, p. 65, ed. 1646.

[4] Theſe lines are alſo inſerted among Randolph’s Poems.

[5] “ The widow counteſs of Rutland died lately; and was buried in St. Paul’s by her father, ſir Philip Sidney, and ſecretary Walſingham. Sir Walter Raleigh is ſuppoſed to have given her certain pills that diſpatched her.” Winwood, vol. III. p 385.

[6] Printed before “Overbury’s Wife,” 1616, but without Beaumont’s name. In the ſame collection is biſhop Corbet’s Elegy on William Lord Howard of Effingham.

If I beſtow my praiſes upon ſuch,
'Tis charity, and I ſhall merit much.
My praiſe will come to her like a full bowl,
Beſtow'd at moſt need on a thirſty ſoul;
Where, if I ſing your praiſes in my rhyme,
I loſe my ink, my paper, and my time;
And nothing add to your o'erflowing ſtore,
And tell you nought but what you knew before.
Nor do the virtuous-minded (which I ſwear, Madam, I think you are) endure to hear
Their own perfections into queſtions brought,
But ſtop their ears at them; for if I thought
You took a pride to have your virtues known,
Pardon me, madam, I ſhould think them none.
To what a length is this ſtrange letter grown,
In ſeeking of a ſubject, yet finds none!
But your brave thoughts, which I ſo much reſpect
Above your glorious titles, ſhall accept Theſe harſh diſorder'd lines. I ſhall ere long Dreſs up your virtues new, in a new ſong:
Yet, far from all baſe praiſe and flattery,
Although I know whate'er my verſes be,
They will like the moſt ſervile flattery ſhow,
If I write truth, and make the ſubject you."

An Elegy on the death of the virtuous Lady Elizabeth countеſs of Rutland.

"I may forget to drink, to eat, to ſleep,
Rememb'ring thee; but when I do, to weep
In well-weigh'd lines, that men ſhall at thy hearſe
Envy, the ſorrow which brought forth my verſe;
May my dull underſtanding have the might
Only to know her laſt was yeſternight?
Rutland, the Fair, is dead! and if to hear
The name of Sydney will more force a tear,
'Tis ſhe that is ſo dead! and yet there be
Some more alive profeſs not poetry;
The ſtateſmen and the lawyers of our time
Have buſineſs ſtill, yet do it not in rhyme.
Can ſhe be dead, and can there be of thoſe
That are ſo dull to ſay their prayers in proſe?
It is three days ſince ſhe did feel Death's hand;
And yet this Iſle not feel the Poet's land?
Hath this no new ones made? and are the old
At ſuch a needful time as this grown cold?
They all ſay they would feign; but yet they plead
They cannot write, becauſe their Muſe is dead.
Hear me then ſpeak, which will take no excuſe;
Sorrow can make a verſe without a Muſe.
Why didſt thou die ſo ſoon? O, pardon me,
I know it was the longeſt life to thee,
That e'er with modeſty was call'd a ſpan,
Since the Almighty left to ſtrive with man;
Mankind is ſent to ſorrow; and thou haſt
More of the buſineſs which thou cam'ſt for paſt,
Than all thoſe aged women, which yet quick
Have quite out-liv'd their own arithmetick.
As ſoon as thou couldſt apprehend a grief,
There were enough to meet thee; and the chief
Bleſſing of women, marriage, was to thee
Nought but a ſacrament of miſery;
For whom thou hadſt, if we may truſt to fame,
Could nothing change about thee, but thy name:
A name, which who (that were again to do't)
Would change without a thouſand joys to boot?
In all things elſe thou rather ledſt a life
Like a betrothed virgin than a wife.
But yet I would have call'd thy fortune kind,
If it had only tried the ſettled mind
With preſent croſſes: not the loathed thought
Of worſe to come, or paſt, than might have wrought
Thy beſt remembrance to have caſt an eye
Back with delight upon thine infancy.
But thou hadſt, ere thou knew'ſt, the uſe of tears,
Sorrow laid up againſt thou com'ſt to years;
Ere thou wert able, who thou wert to tell
By a ſad war thy noble father fell,
In a dull clime, which did not underſtand
What 'twas to venture him to ſave a land.
He left two children, who for virtue, wit,
Beauty, were lov'd of all; thee and his wit.
Two was too few; yet Death hath from us took Thee, a more faultleſs iſſue than his book,
Which now the only living thing we have
From him, we'll ſee, ſhall never find a grave
As thou haſt done. Alas! would it might be
That books their ſexes had, as well as we;
That we might ſee this married to the worth,
And many poems like itſelf bring forth!
But this vain wiſh Divinity controuls;
For neither to the angels, nor to ſouls,
Nor any thing he meant ſhould ever live,
Did the wiſe God of Nature ſexes give.
Then with his everlaſting work alone
We muſt content ourſelves, ſince ſhe is gone;
Gone, like the day thou diedſt upon; and we
May call that back again as ſoon as thee.
Who ſhould have look'd to this? Where were you all,
That do yourſelves the helps of Nature call,
Phyſicians? I acknowledge you were there
To ſell ſuch words as one in health would hear!
So died ſhe. Curſt be he who ſhall defend
Your art of haſt'ning Nature to its end!
In this you ſhew'd that phyſic can but be
At beſt an art to cure your poverty.
Y'are many of you impoſtors, and do give
To ſick men potions that yourſelves may live.
He that hath ſurfeited, and cannot eat,
Muſt have a medicine to procure you meat;
And that's the deepeſt ground of all your ſkill,
Unleſs it be ſome knowledge how to kill.
Sorrow and madneſs make my verſes flow
Croſs to my underſtanding; for I know
You can do wonders: Every day I meet
The looſer ſort of people in the ſtreet
From deſperate diſeaſes freed; and why
Reſtore you them, and ſuffer her to die?
Why ſhould the ſtate allow you colleges,
Penſions for lectures, and anatomies?
If all your potions, vomits, letting blood,
Can only cure the bad, and not the good,
Which only they can do, and I will ſhew
The hidden reaſon, why you did not know
The way to cure her. You believ'd her blood
Ran in ſuch courſes as you underſtood;
By lectures you believ'd her arteries
Grew as they do in your anatomies;
Forgetting that the ſtate allows you none
But only whores and thieves to practiſe on:
And every paſſage 'bout them I am ſure
You underſtood, and only them can cure;
Which is the cauſe that both ——
Are noted for enjoying ſo long lives.
But noble blood treads in too ſtrange a path
For your ill-got experience; and hath
Another way of cure. If you have ſeen
Penelope diſſected, or the queen
Of Sheba; then you might have found a way
To have preſerv'd her from that fatal day.
As 'tis, you have but made her ſooner bleſt,
By ſending her to heaven, where let her reſt.
I will not hurt the peace which ſhe ſhould have,
By longer looking in her quiet grave."

Mr. Francis Beaumont married Urſula, daughter and coheir to Henry Iſley, of Sundridge in Kent, by whom he had only two daughters; one of whom, Frances, was living, at a great age, in Leiceſterſhire in the year 1700, and then enjoyed a penſion of £100. a year from the duke of Ormond, in whoſe family ſhe had ſome time reſided[1]. She had once in her poſſeſſion ſeveral poems of her father's writing; but they were loſt at ſea in her voyage from Ireland. Our poet died early in March 1615-16; and was buried, on the 9th, at the entrance of St. Benedict's chapel, near the earl of Middleſex's monument, in the collegiate church of St. Peter at Weſtminſter, without any inſcription; but we have two epitaphs to his memory, one by his elder brother ſir John Beaumont[2], the other by biſhop Corbet, which was originally thus:

"He that had youth, and friends, and ſo much wit,
As would aſke five good Wits to huſband it;
He that hath wrote ſo well, that no man dare
Refuſe it for the beſt, let him beware:
Beaumont is dead, by which our art appeares,
Wit's a diſeaſe conſumes one in few yeares."

---

[1] Preface prefixed to the works of Beaumont and Fletcher, printed for Jacob Tonſon, 1711, 8vo.

[2] Printed in p. 658.

Which the right reverend Bard thus altered:
"On Mr. Francis Beaumont (then newly dead):
"He that hath ſuch acuteneſs, and ſuch wit,
As would aſk ten good heads to huſband it;
He that can write ſo well, that no man dare
Refuſe it for the beſt, let him beware:
Beaumont is dead, by whoſe ſole death appears,
Wit's a diſeaſe conſumes men in few years[1]."

Elegies on his death were alſo written by G. Lacy, Thomas Peſtell[2], T. G. &c. To which may be added, "The Hermaphrodite, made after Mr. Beaumont's Death, by Thomas Randolph, M. A. ſometime fellow of Trinity College in Cambridge;" and "On the Hermaphrodite, written ſince by Mr. J. Cleaveland."

Wood, in his account of Mr. (afterwards Bp.) Earle[3], mentions "An Elegy upon Mr. Francis Beaumont; afterwards printed at the end of a ſmall collection of Mr. Beaumont's detached pieces, 1640, 4to; put out with a Poetical Epiſtle before them, ſubſcribed by Laurence Blacklock, a Preſbyterian bookbinder near Temple Bar, afterwards an informer to the committee of ſequeſtration at Haberdaſhers and Goldſmiths Hall, and a beggar defunct in priſon." This poem of the Biſhop, which, in 1647, is ſaid to "have been written 30 years ſince, preſently after Beaumont's death," viz. 1617, ſeems to aſcribe the plays of "Philaſter, or Love lies a bleeding, 1610," and "The Maid's Tragedy," excluſively to Beaumont.

"Beaumont lies here; and where now ſhall we have
A Muſe like his to ſigh upon his grave?
Ah, none to weep this with a worthy teare,
But he that cannot, Beaumont that lies here!
Who now ſhall pay this tombe with ſuch a verſe
As thou that Lady's didſt, fair Rutland's hearſe;
A monument that will then laſting be,
When all her marble is more duſt than ſhe?
In thee all's loſte; a ſudden dearth and want
Hath ſeiz'd on Wit; good Epitaphs are ſcant.
We dare not write thy Elegy; for each feares
He ne'er ſhall match a copy of thy teares.
Scarce yet in age a Poet, and yet he Scarce lives the third part of his age to ſee;
But quickly taken off, and only known;
Is in a minute ſhut as ſoon as blown....
Beaumont dies young, ſo Sydney died before;
There was not Poetry, he could live no more.....
Why ſhould not Beaumont in the morning pleaſe,
As well as Plautus, Ariſtophanes?
Who, if my pen may as my thoughts be free,
Were ſcurril wits and buffoons both to thee;
Yet thoſe our learned of ſevereſt brow
Will deign to look on, and to note them too;
That will defy our own; 'tis Engliſh ſtuff,
And the author is not rotten long enough.
Alas! how ill are they, compared to thee,
In thy Philaſter or Maid's Tragedy?"

The above-mentioned collection was re-publiſhed in 8vo, 1653[4]; under the title of "Poems by Francis Beaumont, Gent. viz. Salmacis Hermaphroditus; the Remedy of Love and Elegies; Sonnets; with other Poems[5]."

Jacob ſays, "The Poems written by this great young man are, for performances of that time, very entertaining, and carry with them a ſtrength of judgement as well as wit;" and the following lines ſhew the eſteem in which he was held by his contemporaries.

"On William Shakeſpeare, 1616.
Renowned Spenſer, lye a thought more nigh
To learned Chaucer; and, rare Beaumont, lye
A little nearer Spenſer; to make roome
For Shakeſpeare in your threefold, fourfold tombe.
To lodge all foure in one bed make a ſhift,
Until Doom's day; for hardly will a fifth
Between this day and that by Fates be ſlaine,
For whom your curtaines may be drawn againe."

Mr. Whalley preſerves a copy of verſes "on Mr. Francis Beaumont, on his Imitation of Ovid, ſigned J. F.; which, he ſays, is undoubtedly by John Fletcher; and it is pleaſing to find that Fletcher's Muſe was animated with friendſhip as well as Beaumont's," who addreſſes "Verſes to his Friend and Maſter John Fletcher upon his Faithful Sheperdeſs."

Humphrey Moſeley, in his addreſs to the reader, folio edition, 1647, tells us, "he ſhould ſcarce have adventured on ſuch a work, if knowing perſons had not generally aſſured him, that theſe authors were the moſt unqueſtionable wits this kingdom hath afforded. Mr. Beaumont was ever acknowledged a man of a moſt ſtrong and ſearching brain; and (his years conſidered) the moſt judicious wit theſe later ages have produced. He died young; for (which was an invaluable loſs to this nation) he left the world when he was not full thirty years old. Mr. Fletcher ſurvived, and lived till almoſt fifty. Theſe authors had not only high inexpreſſible gifts of Nature, but alſo excellent acquired parts, being furniſhed with arts and ſciences by that liberal education they had at the Univerſity, which is the beſt place to make a great wit underſtand itſelf."

Langbaine ſays, "Mr. Beaumont was a maſter of a good wit, and a better judgement; that Mr. Jonſon himſelf thought it no diſparagement to ſubmit his writings to his correction. Mr. Fletcher's wit was equal to Mr. Beaumont's judgement; and was ſo luxuriant, that, like ſuperfluous branches, it was frequently pruned by his judicious partner."

To the foregoing citations, my friend Mr. Brydges, an elegant poet, who has diſtinguiſhed himſelf as an able inveſtigator of poetical biography, enables me to ſubjoin the following remarks:

"I ſuſpect that great injuſtice has been generally done to Beaumont, by the ſuppoſition that his merit was principally confined to lopping the redundancies of Fletcher. Indeed, the judicious authors of the Biographia Dramatica are not guilty of this fault; for they ſay, 'It is probable that the forming the plots and contriving the conduct of the fable, the writing of more ſerious and pathetic parts, and lopping the redundant branches of Fletcher's wit, whoſe luxuriance we are told frequently ſtood in need of caſtigation, might be in general Beaumont's portion of the work." This is to afford him very high praiſe; and the following authorities induce me to believe it juſt.

"Sir John Birkenhead, in his verſes on Fletcher, has the following lines, which prove at leaſt his opinion, that Beaumont was better employed than in lopping luxuriancies:

"Some think your wit's of two complexions fram'd,
That one the ſock, th' other the buſkin claim'd;
That, ſhould the ſtage embattle all its force,
Fletcher would lead the foot; Beaumont the horſe;

---

[1] Biſhop Corbet's Poems, London. 1672, p. 68. The ſame, in its original ſtate, is in Beaumont's Poems, 1653.

[2] See hereafter, under Packington.

[3] Athen. Oxon. vol. II. p. 365.

[4] To this volume, which is inſcribed, "To the true Patroneſſe of all Poetry, Calliope," are prefixed the two following ſonnets:

1. "In laudem Authoris.
"Like to the weake eſtate of a poor friend,
To whom ſweet Fortune hath been ever ſlow,
Which daily doth that happy houre attend,
When his poore ſtate may his affections ſhow:
So fares my love, not able as the reſt
To chant thy praiſes in a lofty vaine;
Yet my poore Muſe doth vow to do her beſt,
And, wanting wings, ſhe'll tread an humble ſtraine.
I thought at firſt her homely ſteps to raiſe,
And for ſome blazing epithets to look;
But then I fear'd that, by ſuch wondrous praiſe,
Some men would grow ſuſpicious of thy book:
For he that doth thy due deſerts rehearſe,
Derives that glory from thy worthy verſe. W. B."

2. "To the Author:
"Either the Goddeſs draws her troopes of Loves
From Paphos, where ſhe erſt was held divine,
And doth unyoke here tender-necked doves,
Placing her ſeat in this ſmall pap'ry ſhrine;
Or the ſweet Graces through th' Idalian grove
Led the beſt Author in their danced rings;
Or wanton Nymphs in wat'ry bowers have wove,
With faire Myleſian threads, the verſe he ſings;
Or curious Pallas once againe doth ſtrive
With proud Arachne for illuſtrious glory;
And once againe doth loves of Gods revive,
Spinning in ſilver twiſts a laſting ſtory:
If none of theſe, then Venus choſe his ſight,
To lead the ſteps of her blind ſon aright. J. B."

[5] This ſhould rather have been intituled, "Miſcellaneous Pieces by different Authors;" as ſome are by Shirley, others by Waller, &c.—This does not, however, apply to the edition of 1640; and the whole is a curious collection.

But you were both for both; not ſemi-wits;
Each piece is wholly two, yet never ſplits:
Y'are not two faculties (and one ſoul ſtill),
He the underſtanding, thou the quick, free will;
But as two voices in one ſong embrace
Fletcher's keen treble and deep Beaumont's baſe:
Two full congenial ſouls; ſtill both prevail'd;
His Muſe and thine were quarter'd, not impal'd:
Both brought your ingots; both toil'd at the mint,
Beat, melted, ſifted, till no droſs ſtuck in't;
Then in each other's ſcales weigh'd ev'ry grain;
Then ſmooth'd and burniſh'd, then weigh'd all again:
Stamp'd both your names upon't, at one bold hit,
Then, then 'twas coin, as well as bullion-wit."

Theſe lines of Jaſper Mayne are worth attention:

"Great pair of Authors, whom one equal ſtar Begot ſo like in genius, that you are
In fame, as well as writings, both ſo knit,
That no man knows where to divide your wit,
Much leſs your praiſe: you, who had equal fire,
And did each other mutually inſpire:
Whether one did contrive, the other write,
Or one fram'd the plot, the other did indite:
Whether one found the matter, th' other the dreſs;
Or th' one diſpos'd what th' other did expreſs:
Where'er your part between yourſelves lay, we,
In all things which you did, but one thing ſee:
So evenly drawn out, ſo gently ſpun,
That Art with Nature ne'er did ſmoother run.
Where ſhall I fix my praiſe then?"———

The following one alſo of ſir George Liſle:

"To the memory of my moſt honoured kinſman.
"I'll not pronounce how ſtrong and clear thou writ'ſt,
Nor by what new hard rules thou took'ſt thy flights,
Nor how much Greek and Latin ſome refine,
Before they can make up ſix words of thine:
But this I'll ſay, thou ſtrik'ſt our ſenſe ſo deep,
At once thou mak'ſt us bluſh, rejoice, and weep.
Great father Jonſon bow'd himſelf, when he (Thou writ'ſt ſo nobly) vow'd, he envy'd thee.
Were thy Mardonius arm'd, there would be more
Strife for his ſword than all Achilles wore,
Such wiſe juſt rage, had he been lately try'd,
My life on't, he had been o' th' better ſide;
And where he found falſe odds (through gold or ſloth)
There brave Mardonius would have beat them both.
Behold, here's Fletcher too! the world ne'er knew
Two potent Wits co-operate, till you;
For ſtill your fancies are ſo wov'n and knit,
'Twas Francis Fletcher, or John Beaumont writ.
Yet neither borrow'd, nor were ſo put to't
To call poor gods and goddeſſes to do't;
Nor made nine girls your Muſes (you ſuppoſe,
Women ne'er write, ſave love-letters in proſe)
But are your own inſpirers, and have made
Such pow'rful ſcenes, as, when they pleaſe, invade
Your plot, ſcene, language, all's ſo pure and fit,
He's bold, not valiant, dare diſpute your wit."

Phillips's character is, "Francis Beaumont, an inſeparable aſſociate and coadjutor to Fletcher in the making of many of his plays, beſides what he made ſolely himſelf." (P. 42. modern.)

A fine character of Beaumont and Fletcher, in Webſter's poem on the Stage, 8vo. 1713, has been over-looked by the late writers of their lives in the General Dictionary, and Biographia Britannica.

Davies, in his Scourge of Folly, 1611, p. 215, thus addreſſes the moſt ingenious Mr. Francis Beaumont:

"Some, that thy name abbreviate, call thee Franck:
So may they well, if they reſpect thy witt:
For, like rich corne, that ſome fools call too ranck,
All cleane witt-reapers ſtill are griping it:
And, could I ſow for thee to reap and uſe,
I ſhould eſteeme it manna for the Muſe."

Settle reviſed Philaſter in 1695; and the two laſt acts are new written. Bellario's confeſſing all in the cataſtrophe of this play has been much admired. It was new written by the duke of Buckingham, under the title of "The Reſtoration;" and revived in 1763 by Mr. Colman, the ingenious author of "The Jealous Wife," with many judicious alterations:

"Beaumont and Fletcher! thoſe twin ſtars, that run
Their glorious race round Shakeſpeare's glorious ſun;
Or when Philaſter Hamlet's place ſupplied,
Or Beſſus walked the ſtage by Falſtaff's ſide;
Their ſouls, well pair'd, ſhot fire in mingled rays,
Their heads together twin'd the ſocial bays;
Till Faſhion drove, in a refining age,
Virtue from Court, and Nature from the Stage."

"The firſt edition of Beaumont's Poems was in 1640. But many of theſe being ſongs, &c. taken from the plays, how are we to know they are excluſively Beaumont's? Beſides, in moſt of the poetical publications of that day, the bookſellers heaped every thing together, without nicely diſcriminating their authors[1]: for inſtance, the Elegy beginning 'Heaven knows my love,' is alſo in Randolph's Poems; and, if I recollect, ſome of the poems in biſhop Corbet's are alſo among thoſe of biſhop Henry King.

"Among theſe poems, there is one taken from the play of Nice Valour, which, whether Beaumont's or Fletcher's (and I am inclined to aſcribe it to the former) is of exquiſite beauty, and undoubtedly is among the prima ſtamina of the Il Penſeroſo; I mean the third ſong, ſignature K. 4. (for the book is not paged), 'Hence all your vain delights.' See it alſo in Ellis's Specimens of Early Poetry, vol. III. p. 48; and in Todd's Milton, vol. V. p. 66, with Neve's ingenious remarks. There is in truth a vein of elegance, harmony, ſimple expreſſion, and poetical imagery, through the whole of theſe ſongs, far above the taſte of the age; which, had Beaumont (for I take them to be his) attended to the finiſhing and minuter graces of compoſition, inſtead of the careleſs merits of extended dialogue, might have raiſed him high among the writers of Odes. His verſes are free from thoſe metaphyſical abſurdities, which are as unlike true poetry, as a Dutch garden is to the beautiful ſcenery of Nature. I recommend the ſong beginning, "Say, lovely dream, where couldſt thou find," (ſignature G.) for its ſimplicity, purity, and elegance.

"As to this great poet's portrait, Humphry Moſeley ſays, 'I was very ambitious to have got Mr. Beaumont's picture, but could not poſſibly, though I ſpared no enquiry in thoſe noble families whence he was deſcended; as alſo among thoſe gentlemen that were of his acquaintance when he was of the Inner Temple.'—Vertue's portrait of him was engraved from an original in the poſſeſſion of the duke of Dorſet; and there is a metzotinto of him by J. Simon.—I have a good miniature in water colours; which at the back is written, in a modern hand, 'Francis Beaumont, the poet, by William Baur.' But it is much too old for a man of 30. Were it of him, it would be very curious. It has a very fine countenance; but the hair ſeems grey[2]. S. E. BRYDGES."

This long article ſhall be cloſed with Beaumont's lines "on the tombes in Weſtminſter:"

"Mortality, behold, and feare:
What a change of fleſh is here!
Thinke how many Royall bones
Sleep within theſe heap of ſtones;
Here they lye, had realmes and lands,
Who now want ſtrength to ſtir their hands;
Where, from their pulpits ſeal'd with duſt,
They preach, "In Greatneſſe is no truſt!"
Here's an acre ſown indeed
With the richeſt, royall'ſt ſeed,
That the earth did e'er ſuck in,
Since the firſt man dy'd for ſin:
Here the bones of birth have cry'd;
Though Gods they were, as men they dy'd.
Here are ſands, ignoble things,
Dropt from the ruin'd ſides of kings.
Here's a world of pomp and ſtate Buried in duſt, once dead by Fate."

---

[1] Several inſtances of this occur in the little volume of Francis Beaumont, now before us. One inſtance has been noticed in p. 658; and epitaphs on Shakeſpear, Jonſon, and Drayton, who all ſurvived him, are there given. See alſo p. *659. note 5.

[2] "John William Baur was born in 1610, and could be only five years old at Beaumont's death. He does not appear ever to have been in England. Nor could Beaumont be much more than 30 at his death, by the inquiſition on his father's death, which mentions his elder brother's age, as ſtated in this Hiſtory, p. 656." B.—There were four Francis Beaumonts of this family, all liviug in 1615. Bnt this miniature is probably the portrait of Francis Beaumont the Jeſuit, nephew of the Dramatic Writer, and himſelf a poet (ſee p. 657.) It is engraved, contraſted with a copy from Vertue's portrait, in Plate LXXVII p. *662.

Pedigree of BEAUMONT, of GRACEDIEU. (Enlarged from the Visitation of 1681-2[1].)

Thomas Beaumont, of Thringſton, ſecond ſon of ſir Thomas Beaumont, of Cole Orton, by Philippa, daughter and heir of Thomas Maureward (ſee p. 743.) = ...

Thomas Beaumont, of Thringſton. = Mary, daughter of Robert Moton, of Peckleton.

Iſabella, dau. of Laurence Dutton, of Dutton, co. Cheſter; firſt wife. = 1. John Beaumont, eſq. purchaſed the ſite of the priory of Gracedieu 1539; ſurveyor of Leiceſterſhire for the Crown, 154..; maſter of the Rolls 1550; reſigned his employments in 1552[2]; and died ſoon after. = Elizabeth, eldeſt dau. and coheir of ſir Will. Haſtings, knt. younger brother of George earl of Huntingdon; living 1574.

Mary, married Richard Stoney of Braunſton, co. Leiceſter.

Dorothy, married ...... Rigmaiden.

2. Edward Beaumont, of Barrow on Trent, co. Derby. gent. = Anne Milgate. (See p. *663.)

.... Dutton, firſt huſband. = Anne. = Thomas Aſhby, of Loſeby, co. Leiceſter, died 1604; ſecond huſband.

Sir Francis Beaumont[3], of Gracedieu, juſtice of the Common pleas; died at Gracedieu, April 22, 1598. = Anne, dau. of ſir George Pierpoint, of Holme Pierpoint, co. Nott. knt.; and relict of Thomas Thorold[4], of Marſton, co. Lincoln, eſq.

William[5] lord Vaux of Harrowden, died 1595. = Elizabeth, firſt wife.

Robert Brokeſby, of Shouldby. = ...

2. Henry Beaumont[6], eſq. of the Inner Temple, apprentice of the law, died unmarried Aug. 9, 1585, æt. 42, leaving Francis his brother and heir.

Henry, ob. ſ. p. 1. Eleanor, married to Edward Brokeſby, ſon of Robert. 2. Elizabeth, a nun at Rouen. 3. Anne, ob. ſ. p.

1. Sir Henry Beaumont, of Gracedieu, knight, ſon and heir, died 13 July, 1605[7], æt. 24; firſt huſband. = Barbara, dau. of Anthony Faunt, of Foſton. = Sir Henry Harpur, of Calke, bart. ſecond huſband; died 1638.

2. John Beaumont, eſq. of Gracedieu 1605; created a baronet June 29, 1626; died at Gracedieu 1628, æt. 44. = Elizabeth, dau. of John Forteſcue, eſq. and great grand-daughter of ſir Richard Pole, K. G. by Margaret, daughter and heir of George duke of Clarence, brother to king Edw. IV.[8]

Thomas Seyliard, eſq. = Elizabeth, born 1589.

3. Francis Beaumont, of the Inner Temple, the celebrated Dramatic Writer; died March 9, 1615-16, æt. 30; buried at Weſtminſter. = Urſula, dau. and coheir of Henry Iſley, of Sundridge, Kent.

John Harpur, eſq. ſon of Richard Harpur, ſon and heir apparent of ſir John Harpur, bart. of Swarkſton, co. Derby; firſt huſband; died 1627, ſ. p. = Barbara, dau. and heir, born Sept. 1605, after the death of her father; a ward of the king's in 1612. = Sir Wolſtan Dixie, bart. 2d huſband; died Feb. 13, 1682, æt. 80.

1. Elizabeth, married to a Scotch colonel, and reſident in that kingdom in 1682.

2. Frances, a poſthumous child, reſident in the family of the duke of Ormond 1682; and living in 1700, with a penſion of £100. a year from that nobleman.

Sir Beaumont Dixie, bart. Five other ſons and eight daughters. (See hereafter, under Market Boſworth.)

1. Sir John Beaumont, bart. born 1607; a colonel in the king's army; and was ſlain at the ſiege of Glouceſter 1644.

2. Francis, a Jeſuit, 3. Henry, 4. Gervaſe, 5. George, 7. Charles, all died unmarried.

6. Sir Thomas Beaumont, bart. born 1620; living at Garendon 1682; died July 7, 1686, aged 66; buried at Belton. = Vere, only dau. of ſir William Tufton, of Vintners, near Maidſtone, baronet of Ireland, and governor of Barbados, brother to Nicholas earl of Thanet; re-married to Mr. George Lane, a dancing-maſter; living 1693; jointured in Merill Grange.

1. Helen, died unmarried.
2. Anne, died young.
3. Catharine, born July 31, 1625.

4. Mary, married to ſir Edmund Williams; after to John Taſborough, of Flixton and Gedney, co. Suffolk and Norfolk.

1. Cecily. = Robert Beaumont, eſq. of Barrow on Trent, co. Derby; died Jan. 2, 1726-7. (See p. *663.)

2. Mary, 3. Elizabeth, 4. Marina, 7. Catharine, died young.

5. Vere, firſt wife; died Dec. 7, 1697. = Sir John Rayney, of Kent, bart. died 1705. = Jane, eldeſt dau. of Tho. Manley, of Rocheſter, eſq. ſecond wife; died Feb. 14, 1700. = Jane, dau. of ſir Demetrius James, of Ightham, knt. third wife; died Feb. 27, 1714, æt. 53.

1. John-Beaumont Rayney. 2. Thomas. 1. Vere. 2. Mary.

6. Mary. = George Morton, of Sileby.

8. Jane, died Feb. 21, 1738, aged 84. = Charles Byerley, eſq. of Belgrave, died 1738, aged 74.

9. Anne. = Robert Pawley.

John Beaumont Byerley, eſq. died May 28, 1742, aged 50. = Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Bickley, of Spetchley, co. Worceſter. erli

1. Thomas, died an infant, 1711.

2. John Beaumont Byerley, eſq. died Nov. 8, 1760, aged 45, ſ. p. = Eſther, youngeſt daughter of Thomas Boothby, of Tooley Park, eſq. died Jan. 14, 1760, aged 50.

---

[1] Signed by Vere Beaumont, in behalf of ſir Thomas Beaumont, March 16, 1681-2.

[2] When I mentioned, in p. 655, Mr. Beaumont's being deprived of his office of "ſurveyor of Leiceſterſhire," his having been previouſly under the neceſſity of reſigning the high employment of maſter of the Rolls had eſcaped my obſervation; a circumſtance which will be attended to hereafter, when his poſſeſſions at Thringſton and Swannington come under conſideration.

[3] The preſent Mr. Beaumont of Barrow, has a half length portrait of ſir Francis Beaumont, chief juſtice of the Common pleas, in his robes (ſcarlet bordered with fur), the ruff round the neck, collar of SS. and ſerjeant's coif; a full length portrait of Barbara, daughter of Robert and Cecily Beaumont, who was abbeſs to a convent in Flanders, in her religious dreſs, taken in 1706, æt. 23; both in oils; with ſeveral other family portraits, but whom they repreſent is not exactly known.

[4] By whom ſhe had two daughters, coheireſſes, Iſabel and Anne.

[5] Married, ſecondly, to Mary Treſham; by whom he had George, who died 31 July, 1594, vitâ patris. The grandſon, Edward lord Vaux, died in 1661, when the title became extinct.

[6] Henry Beaumont, eſq. died ſeiſed of various lands and tenements in Derby, Normanton juxta Derby, Oſmaſton, Chaddeſdon, and other places, in the county of Derby; and of Aſhby Parva in Leiceſterſhire.

[7] Inq. 10 Aug. 7 Jac. I.

[8] MS. in Le Neve's copy of Burton, in the Britiſh Muſeum, p. 121.

Pedigree of BEAUMONT, of WHITLEY[1] near WAKEFIELD, co. EBOR.

1. William Beaumont, of Whitley, in the pariſh of Kirkleaton, Ebor, living 1286. = ...
2. John de Beaumont, or Bellamonte, brother to William, 1286.

Sir Robert Beaumont, of Whitley, knt. = Grace, dau. and heir of ſir Edward Croſsland, of Croſsland, Ebor.

1. Sir Roger de Beaumont, living 1329.
2. Sir Thomas de Beaumont, was at the ſiege of Calais.
3. Sir John de Beaumont, ſucceſſor to his father at Whitley. = Alice, dau. of John Southill, eſq.

Robert Beaumont, of Whitley, eſq. grandſon of ſir John, living 1478. = ...

Richard Beaumont, of Whitley. = ...

Richard Beaumont, of Whitley. = ...

Richard Beaumont, of Whitley, the third of his name in lineal ſucceſſion, 1503. = ...

Richard Beaumont, of Whitley, eſq. = Catharine, daughter and heir of ſir Robert Nevile, of Leverſedge, knt.

Richard Beaumont, of Whitley, eſq. died March 11, 1575. = Jane, dau. of Arthur Pilkington, of Bradley, Ebor, eſq.

1. Roſamund. = William Beaumont, of Laſſell hall, Kirkleaton, Ebor.

2. Alice, wife of Robert Gargrave, eſq.

Edward Beaumont, of Whitley, born 1551. = Elizabeth, dau. of John Ramſden, of Langley, Ebor.

Jane, married to Alveray Copley, of Batley, eſq.

Richard Beaumont. = ...

Sir Richard Beaumont, of Whitley, knight; created a baronet Aug. 19, 1628. He was in the commiſſion of the peace, and treaſurer for the lame ſoldiers, in the Weſt Riding of the county of York; and, dying unmarried, with him the honour expired.

1. Grace, married to Tho. Pilkington, eſq.
2. Margaret, marr. to Chriſtopher Wray, of Cuſworth, Ebor.

Sir Thomas Beaumont, governor of Sheffield caſtle during the civil war, and ſerved as a lieutenant-colonel under ſir George Savile, bart. for which he ſuffered much. He inherited Whitley on the death of his couſin the baronet; and was living in 1666. = . . .

Adam Beaumont. = ...

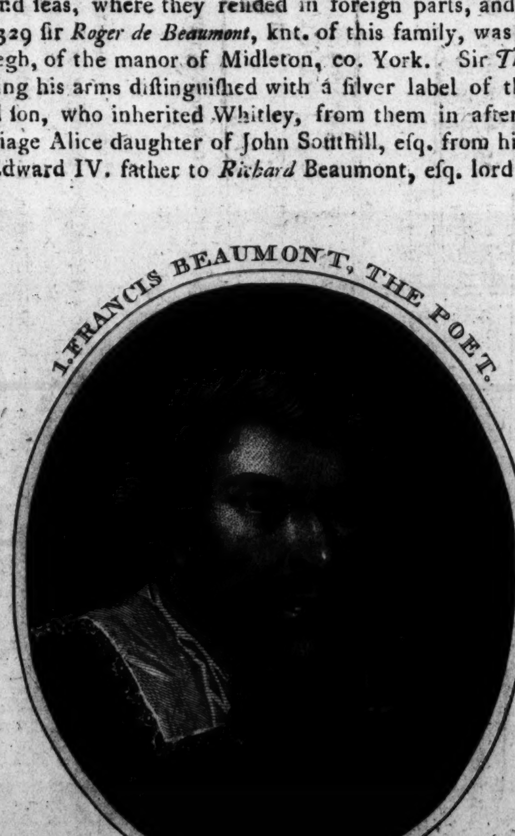
Richard Beaumont, eſq. of Whitley. = Frances, dau. of ſir William Lowther, bart. of Swillington, Ebor.

Richard Beaumont, of Whitley, eſq. = Catharine, dau. of Charles Stringer, eſq. of Charlton (married, ſecondly, to Thomas earl of Weſtmoreland, by whom ſhe had no iſſue) and died Feb. 4, 1764.

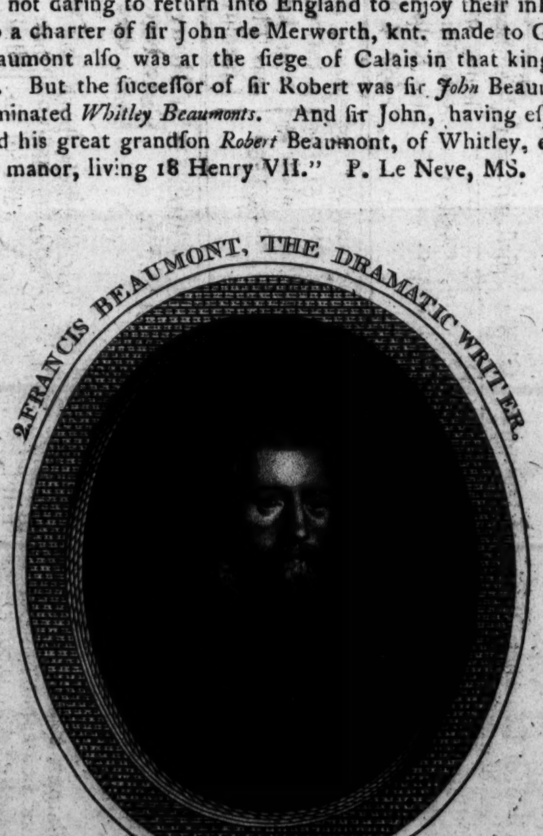
Richard Beaumont, of Whitley, eſq. died Sept. 17, 1764.

---

[1] "By the analogous ſimilitude of arms, the original of the family of Beaumont of Whitley might be ſuppoſed the ſame as the Beaumonts of Cole Orton, Stoughton, and Gracedieu, baronets. But, conceding thoſe of the blood of France, this cannot be of that line, unleſs we commit anachroniſms and miſcalculations; for Whitley Beaumont appears in a deed of John de Lacy earl of Lincoln (who died before the reign of king Edward I.) and conſtable of Cheſter; wherein (ſo ſtyled) the ſaid Lacy grants and confirms to John Montbegon and his heirs and aſſigns, that William de Bellomonte might, if he pleaſed, aſſign him for homage and ſervice all his lands he had of Thomas de Dranfield, in the town of Whitley, with the capital meſſuage, all liberties and eaſements in and out of the town, with all ſervices, rents, wards, eſcheats, and reliefs of freemen and ruſticks to the ſame land belonging or appertaining; to have and to hold to him and his heirs or his aſſigns, to wit, the ſaid William de Bellomonte, of him and his heirs for ever; rendering for the ſame, to him and his heirs, a pair of white gloves yearly at Eaſter: and the ſaid John and his heirs thereby acquit themſelves againſt Peter de Birthwait of 10s. payable yearly upon the feaſt of St. Martin; and againſt William de Dranfield and their heirs of £1. of money, payable upon the ſaid feaſt day; and the ſaid John will do the foreign ſervice which belongs to the ſaid land; to which is annexed the uſual clauſe of warranty, teſtified by his ſeal. "Teſtibus; domino Adâ de Hartford, domino Roberto de Stapelton, domino Ricardo Gramaticâ, domino Willielmo de Swillington, domino Adâ de Preſtona, domino Johanne de Wridlesford, & aliis." About the time of Henry III. were two brothers; William Beaumont of Witteley, alias Whitley, in the pariſh of Kirkeaton near Almonbury; and John de Beaumont, or Bellomonte, the younger of the two; both being witneſſes to a deed of Hugh, ſon of Richard le Butler, of Sandal, whereby the ſaid Hugh gave to ſir John Heton the homage and ſervice of Peter de Sayville, which Peter was diſtracted and childiſh in 14 Edward I. This William Beaumont had iſſue ſir Robert Beaumont, knt. of the ſame place; which ſir Robert married Grace, daughter and heir of ſir Edward Croſsland, of Croſsland, co. York, knt. about 20 Edward II. and is ſaid to have been killed by ſir John Eland, of Eland, in his own houſe at Croſsland; whereupon his two eldeſt ſons, Adam and Thomas, contrived the death of the ſaid ſir John Eland and his ſon Thomas, and retaliated the murder upon them both: but they were forced to flee beyond ſeas, where they reſided in foreign parts, and died there, not daring to return into England to enjoy their inheritance. In 1329 ſir Roger de Beaumont, knt. of this family, was a witneſs to a charter of ſir John de Merworth, knt. made to Gilbert de la Legh, of the manor of Midleton, co. York. Sir Thomas de Beaumont alſo was at the ſiege of Calais in that king's reign, bearing his arms diſtinguiſhed with a ſilver label of three points. But the ſucceſſor of ſir Robert was ſir John Beaumont, his third ſon, who inherited Whitley, from them in after-ages denominated Whitley Beaumonts. And ſir John, having eſpouſed in marriage Alice daughter of John Southill, eſq. from him deſcended his great grandſon Robert Beaumont, of Whitley, eſq. living 18 Edward IV. father to Richard Beaumont, eſq. lord of the ſaid manor, living 18 Henry VII." P. Le Neve, MS.



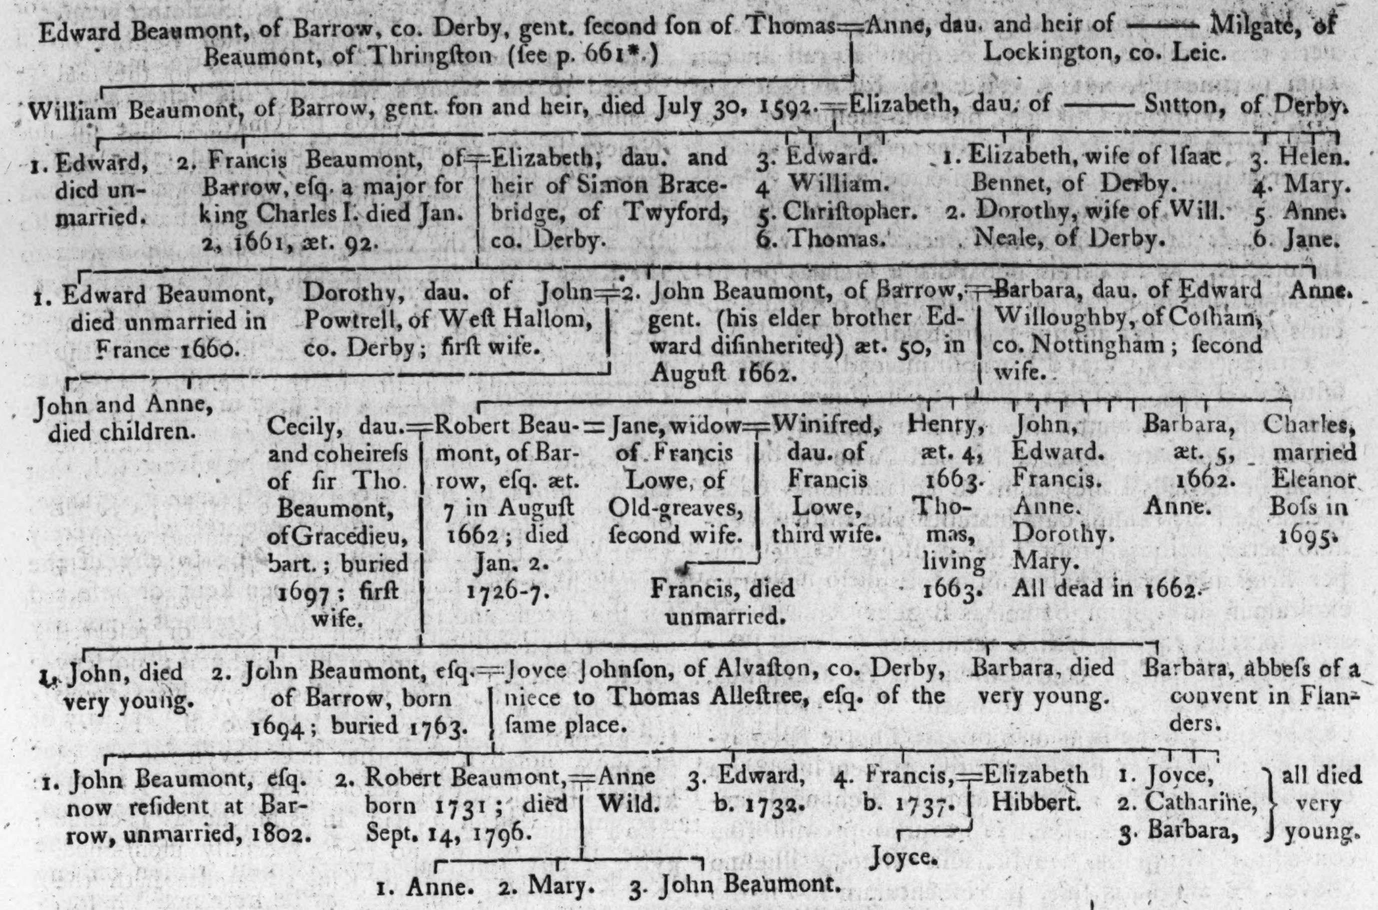
1. FRANCIS BEAUMONT, THE POET.



2. FRANCIS BEAUMONT, THE DRAMATIC WRITER.

W. Baur, pinxᵗ. Pl. LXXVII. p. *662. Copied from Vertue. Jaˢ. Basire sc.

Pedigree of BEAUMONT, of Barrow, co. Derby.



Edward Beaumont, of Barrow, co. Derby, gent. ſecond ſon of Thomas Beaumont, of Thringſton (ſee p. 661*.) = Anne, dau. and heir of —— Milgate, of Lockington, co. Leic.

William Beaumont, of Barrow, gent. ſon and heir, died July 30, 1592. = Elizabeth, dau. of —— Sutton, of Derby.

1. Edward, died unmarried.
2. Francis Beaumont, of Barrow, eſq. a major for king Charles I. died Jan. 2, 1661, æt. 92. = Elizabeth, dau. and heir of Simon Bracebridge, of Twyford, co. Derby.
3. Edward.
4. William.
5. Chriſtopher.
6. Thomas.
1. Elizabeth, wife of Iſaac Bennet, of Derby.
2. Dorothy, wife of Will. Neale, of Derby.
3. Helen.
4. Mary.
5. Anne.
6. Jane.

1. Edward Beaumont, died unmarried in France 1660.
Dorothy, dau. of John Powtrell, of Weſt Hallom, co. Derby; firſt wife. = 2. John Beaumont, of Barrow, gent. (his elder brother Edward diſinherited) æt. 50, in Auguſt 1662. = Barbara, dau. of Edward Willoughby, of Coſham, co. Nottingham; ſecond wife.
Anne.

John and Anne, died children.
Cecily, dau. and coheireſs of ſir Tho. Beaumont, of Gracedieu, bart.; buried 1697; firſt wife. = Robert Beaumont, of Barrow, eſq. æt. 7 in Auguſt 1662; died Jan. 2. 1726-7. = Jane, widow of Francis Lowe, of Old-greaves, ſecond wife. = Winifred, dau. of Francis Lowe, third wife.
Francis, died unmarried.
Henry, æt. 4, 1663. Thomas, living 1663.
John. Edward. Francis. Anne. Dorothy. Mary. All dead in 1662.
Barbara, æt. 5, 1662. Anne.
Charles, married Eleanor Boſs in 1695.

1. John, died very young.
2. John Beaumont, eſq. of Barrow, born 1694; buried 1763. = Joyce Johnſon, of Alvaſton, co. Derby, niece to Thomas Alleſtree, eſq. of the ſame place.
Barbara, died very young.
Barbara, abbeſs of a convent in Flanders.

1. John Beaumont, eſq. now reſident at Barrow, unmarried, 1802.
2. Robert Beaumont, born 1731; died Sept. 14, 1796. = Anne Wild.
3. Edward, b. 1732.
4. Francis, b. 1737. = Elizabeth Hibbert.
1. Joyce, 2. Catharine, 3. Barbara, } all died very young.

1. Anne. 2. Mary. 3. John Beaumont.

Joyce.

Copy of the particular for a grant to John Beaumont, eſq. 36 Henry VIII. as preſerved in the Augmentation office.

John Beamont dothe deſyre to bye of the King's Majeſtie the manors, lands, tenements, ꝑſonags, and other heredytaments, which be conteyned in the ꝑtyculers hereunto annexed, and be of the clere yerely valew of fortye-nyne pounds tenne ſhillinges and too pence, and not above, the tenthes thereof deductyd. In wytneſs whereof, unto thys bill annexed unto the ꝑtyculers of the ſame lands, the ſaid John Beamounte hath ſet hys ſealle, and ſubſcrybit hys name, the xxvth day of June, in the ſyx-and-thyrtythe yere of the raigne of our moſt drad ſoveraigne lord Kyng Henry theight, by the grace of God, of England, Fraunce, and Ireland, Kyng, deffendor of the faythe, and in earthe ſup̃me head of the Churche of England, and alſo of Ireland.

By me John Beaumont.

Parcell' poſſeſſionum nuꝑ mo^{rii} ſive prioratûs de Gracedewe, in com' Leiceſtr', nuper ſurſū redd' & lib' reſignat'.

Manerium de Belton, in com' Leiceſtrie, valet in Redditu aſſiſe liberorum tenencium ibidem; viz. de libero redditu Johannis Collyer, pro terris ſuis ibidem, iiiis̃. ixđ. Johannis Cryſpe, pro duobus tenementis & ii bovatis terre ibidem, vis̃. vđ.; ejuſdem Johannis, pro terris nuper Rogeri Ratclyff, cum viiiđ. precio unius libre piperis, iiiis̃; ejuſdem Johannis, pro terris ſuis ibidem, ut in precio unius libere cumini, iiiiđ.; in toto, ut patet per parcell' predict', per annum xvs̃. viđ.

Redditu diverſ' tenencium ad voluntatem domini ibidem; viz. de redditu Willielmi Oſborne, pro uno cotagio cum gardino nuper in tenurâ Johannis Byddell, iiiis.; Willielmi Lyng, pro meſſuagio, cum ii croftis, xvi acris terre arabilis, & ii acris prati & paſcue ibidem, xiiiis̃. viiiđ.; Margarete Lytherland, vidue, pro cotagio cum pomerio ibidem, iiis̃.; Dorothee Inglyſhe & Alicie Pyllyſworth, pro uno cotagio cum gardino, iis̃. viiiđ.; Amicie Homes, vidue, pro uno cotagio cum gardino ibidem adjacente, nuper Humfridi Homes, iiiis̃.; Margerie Kyghtley, pro alio cotagio cum gardino adjacente, nuper in tenurâ Emmotte Holte, iis̃. viiiđ.; Henrici More, pro alio cotagio cum gardino adjacente, iiis̃. iiiiđ.; Willielmi Coxſon, pro uno meſſuagio cum gardino & pomerio, ac uno crofto & xvii acris terre arabilis, & i acrâ & dimidiâ prati, nuper in tenurâ Johannis Riggemedon, xviiiđ.; Johannis Burrowes, pro uno cotagio cum gardino, iiis̃. iiiiđ.; Willielmi Shepparde, pro uno cotagio cum crofto adjacente, nuper in tenurâ Johannis Fourde, vs̃.; Johannis Boſon, pro uno meſſuagio cum xlviii acris terre arabilis, & viii acris prati, & iii croftis cum pertinentiis, xls̃. iiiiđ.; Willielmi Tanner, pro uno meſſuagio cum gardino, uno crofto, xxiii acris terre arabilis, & ii acris prati ibidem, xxiiiis̃.; Roberti Garſett, pro alio meſſuagio, uno crofto, xxvi acris terre arabilis, & ii acris i rode prati & paſcue ibidem, xxis̃.; Roberti Feſaunte, pro uno cotagio cum gardino & uno crofto, iiiis̃.; Thome Oſborne, pro alio cotagio cum gardino ibidem, vs̃.; Willielmi Jerome ſenioris, pro uno cotagio cum gardino adjacente, iiiis̃.; Willielmi Payne, pro cotagio cum gardino ibidem, iiiis̃.; Willielmi Rowleſton, pro uno meſſuagio, uno gardino & crofto, xxv acris terre arabilis, & iii acris dim' prati & paſcue xxiis̃. viiiđ.; Johannis Reddyman, pro uno cotagio, nuper Alicie Coke vidue, xviđ.; Johannis Copland, pro uno cotagio cum crofto, vs̃.; Hugonis Letherland, pro uno cotagio cum gardino, nuper Johannis Mantell, iiiis̃.; Willielmi Pykkering, pro uno meſſuagio, ii croftis, xxiiii acris terre arabilis, & ii acris prati, xxiiis̃.; Agnetis Care, pro uno cotagio cum gardino adjacente, iiis̃.; Radulphi Skryven, alias Shereman, pro uno meſſuagio, uno gardino, xv acr' terre arabilis, & i acrâ prati, xciiiis̃.; Thome Wodſhawe, pro uno meſſuagio, uno crofto, xxi acris terre arabilis, ii acris prati, cum pertinentiis, xxis̃.; Ricardi Longe, pro uno cotagio cum crofto adjacente, nuper in tenurâ Johannis Robynſon, iiiis̃.; Rogeri Letherland, pro uno meſſuagio, cum gardino & crofto adjacente, ii clauſuris, dim' acre terre, vi acris terre arabilis, & i acrâ prati, nuper in tenurâ Margarete Litherlande, cum viiiđ. pro tertiâ parte unius libre piperis, xs̃. viiiđ.; Johannis Garſett, pro uno meſſuagio, uno crofto, xvi acris terre arabilis, i acrâ prati, xviiiis̃.; Willielmi Jerman, pro uno meſſuagio, x acris terre arabilis, iii rodis prati, & uno crofto, cum pertinentiis, xiis̃. xđ.; Laurencii Litherland, pro uno meſſuagio, ii croftis, xxviii acris terre arabilis, & ii acris prati, xxis̃. viiiđ.; Willielmi Freman, pro uno meſſuagio, ii croftis, xvi acris terre arabilis, i acrâ & dimid' prati & paſcue, xvs̃.; Johannis Letherland clerici, vicarii de Belton, pro uno tofto ibidem, iiiiđ.; & Johannis Criſpe, pro uno tofto, iiis̃. In toto, ut patet per parcellas predictas, ultra certas denariorum ſummas ſolvendas annuatim pro certis tenementis predictis, pro operibus eorum vocatis Benereps, per annum xvil. xviiis̃. viđ.

Redditu tenencium per copiam curie, ſecundum conſuetudinem manerii ibidem; viz. de redditu Ricardi Hill, pro uno meſſuagio, cotagio, & crofto, xx acris terre arabilis, xxi acris & dimidiâ prati ibidem, cum pertinentiis, xxii s. vi d.; Ricardi Whalley, ut aſſignati Willielmi Oſborne, pro alio meſſuagio, omnibus terris, pratis, & croftis, cum pertinentiis ibidem, nuper in tenurâ Agnetis Roberts vidue, xxvii s.; Willielmi Bennett, pro uno cotagio cum uno crofto adjacente, & uno puteo vocato Breyche Pytt, v s. v d. In toto, &c. ultra certas denariorum ſummas per ipſos annuatim ſolvendas pro conſimilibus operibus vocatis Benereps, per annum lix s. xi d.

Firmâ (cxvi s. viii d.) unius molendini aquatici ſcituati vel jacentis infra villam & parochiam de Belton predictâ, cum omnibus aquis & le dame dicto molendino pertinente uſque le Middell Dyke exiſten' ad finem de le Balls Lane, & ſic in ac uſque les hades vocatas le Pole Hades, cum omnibus aliis dicto molendino pertinentibus, prout Thomas Riggemayden nuper firmarius ibidem habuit & tenuit per indenturam expiratam ad feſtum Sancti Michaelis Archangelis anno xxxiiii regis predicti; necnon de (xxvii s.) firmâ unius meſſuagii, cum omnibus terris arabilibus, pratis, & paſturis, cum pertinentiis, dicto meſſuagio pertinentibus, nunc in tenurâ prefati Thome Rigmayden, per indenturam predictam; que quidem indentura expiravit ad feſtum Sancti Michaelis Archangeli anno xxxv^{to} regis predicti; & reverſio premiſſorum conceditur Willielmo Smyth, aliis dicto Willielmo Glover, & aſſignatis ſuis, per indenturam ſub ſigillo conventuali nuper monaſterii ſive prioratûs predicti, dat' v^{to} die Junii, anno xxxix^{no} regis predicti; habend' & tenend' dictum molendinum, &c. ac premiſſa prefato Willielmo & aſſignatis ſuis, a feſto Sancti Michaelis Archangeli proximè futuro poſt expirationem termini annorum quem prefatus Thomas Rigmayden habet in premiſſis pro termino xli l. annorum extunc proxime ſequentium & plenariè complendarum; reddendo inde per annum iiii l. xiii s. viii d.

Firmâ unius meſſuagii, cum omnibus & ſingulis pertinentiis ſuis, infra villam & campos de Belton predictos, dimiſſis Ricardo Raugell, de Belton, in comitatu Leiceſtrie, huſbondeman, & aſſignatis ſuis, per indenturam ſub ſigillo conventuali predicto, data viii^{vo} die Septembris, anno xxv^{to} regni regis Henrici, pro termino xliii annorum. Et dictus firmarius tenetur edificare de novo unum horreum ſuper meſſuagium predictum ad cuſtus & expenſas ſuas proprias, vice & loco finis, &c. per annum xli s. iiii d.

Firmâ (xxxiiii s.) unius meſſuagii ibidem vocati Fynes Place, cum omnibus terris, pratis, paſcuis, & leſuris, dicto meſſuagio pertinentibus, eiſdem modo & formâ prout Willielmus Wanton nuper eadem tenuit; preter quod Willielmus Robynſon de Belton, modò firmarius ibidem, habet duntaxat iii lez lands dicto meſſuagio pertinentes in Horſcrofte.

Ac eciam (viii s.) de firmâ unius clauſure ibidem vocat' Rotherhawe & ($^{xx}_{xx}$d.) lez lands & le Mote cloſe in Barnefeld, dimiſſ' prefato Willielmo Robynſon & Johanni Robynſon, filio ejus, per indenturam ſub ſigillo conventuali predicto, dat' iiii^{to} die Februarii, anno iiii regni regis Henricus VIII. pro termino xl annorum & dimidie, per annum x l. ii s. viii d.

Redditu mobilium ibidem; viz. ut in precio li gallinarum, pretium gallini i d. ob. recept' de tenentibus ibidem pro vi s. viii d. ob.

Perquiſitis curie ibidem, communibus annis, xiii s. iiii d. xxx l. xi s. ii d. ob.

Inde feoda ſive vadia ballivi ibidem, per annum vi s. viii d.

Et valet clarè, ultra repriſas predictas, per annum xxx l. iiii s. ii d. ob.

Memorandum, yt is requiſite and neceſſarie that all the wodds groyng upon the waſte or common within the Foreſte of Charnewode, which doth extend or lye within the precincte off Gracedewe, Belton, or elſewher in the ſame Foreſte, belongyng to the ſaid late monaſterie or priorie of Gracedewe, may be reſerved to the Kyng's Majeſtie, his heires and ſucceſſors, for and towards the mayntenance off his Gracys lands, tenements, milnes, and other poſſeſſions, belonging to divers the late monaſteries and priories in the counties of Leiceſter diſſolved. Alſo the advouſon of the vicarage of Belton belongyth to the Kyng's Majeſtie, by reaſon of the late priorie of Gracedewe foreſaid; but whether his Grace hathe the gyfte thereoff by reaſon of the premiſſes, or by reaſon of the parſonage then impropriated to the ſaid late priorie, which is not here in value, I knowe not.

Pleaſith yt your maſterſhipp to be advertyſed, that the premiſſes be no parcell of eny manor, grange, or parſonage, wyche doth excede the clere yerely value of xl l.; neither dothe adjoyne to eny of the Kyng's Majeſties houſes which ben kept or reſerved for the acceſſe and repayre of his Highneſs; nor eny of them byn within v or vi miles of eny his Grace's foreſts, chaces, or parks, that I knowe off. Ferder, there have not byn eny other fines gevyn for eny of the premiſſes then ben before mencioned. And for the town of Belton forſeid, in as muche as I canne knowe, there will be no fynes ſpecially mentioned. Alſo I knowe nott that the King's Majeſtie hath the gyfte of eny ſpirituall promotion by reaſon off eny of the premiſſes, but ſuch as be here noted before; nother that eny of the fermors or occupyers of eny of the premiſſes, or eny other perſon adjoynyng, have deſired to purchaſe the ſame; but that one Doctor Weſton, another of the prebendaries of the Kyng's College called The Newarke in Leiceſter, hath deſired to buy the parcell of xii s. in Burton Noverey above mentioned. Ferther, I have not to my remembraunce delivered eny values of eny of the premiſſes to eny perſon but to John Beaumound, eſquyere, who brought me your warrant for the ſame.

Per me, ROB'TUM BURGOYN.

The manor of Belton, in the countie of Leiceſtre, parcell of the poſſeſſion of the late priorye of Gracedew.

Belton Oute Wood conteynith cccc acres, whereof is waſte c acres growing by parcells of c yeres growith, reſerved for tymber for thyrtie tenantz holdyng of the ſeid manor by copye and at wyll of the lorde, to repayre their tenements, which they have had in the ſeid wood by cuſtome of old tyme uſed, therefore not valued; which ccc acres are to be ſolde to John Beamond, eſquyer, togyther with the foreſeid manor, and cciiii acres reſydue, beyng all tymber, lyeng togyther; and abuttyth uppon a cloſe called The Lees on the Weſt, and uppon a cloſe called Rotherhawe on the North, and uppon a lyttle dyke which departeth the lordeſhypp of Shyppeſhed and the ſeid wood on the Eſt, and uppon a hyghwey ledyng throug the ſame wood next above Loughborough highwey on the South, reſerved to the Kynge's Highnes by the advyce of Syr Rycherd Ryche, Knyght, Chauncellor of his Grace's Courte of Augmentations, and the Councell of the ſame, for to repayre the Kynge's Highnes landes in the countie of Leiceſtre aforeſeid, or ellſwher.

In a cloſe called Rotherhawe is by percells x acres of xxx yeres growith, valewed at xiii s. iii d. the acre; which is in the hoole vi l. iii s. iiii d.

Per me, WILL'M COWPER.

July, anno regni regis Hen. VIII. xxxvi^{o}, pro Johanne Beamounte.

Lands parcell of the late monaſterie of Gracedewe, in com' Leyc', xxx l. iiii s. vi d. ob.

BRADGATE,

BRADGATE,

where ſtill ſtand the venerable remains of a magnificent old manſion, is ſituated on the edge of Charnwood foreſt, about two miles from Groby caſtle, two miles from Mountſorell, and four from Leiceſter. In the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the county it is a member of the noble owner's manor and peculiar of Groby[1]. As parcel of that manor, Bradgate antiently belonged to Hugh Grenteſmainell, as a member of the manor of Groby; paſſed with it by marriage to Robert Blanchmaines earl of Leiceſter; and afterwards (by marriage alſo) to Saber de Quincy earl of Winton.

The park here hath been of long continuance; as appeareth by the following agreement, made April 5, 1247, between Roger de Quincy earl of Leiceſter and Roger de Somery baron of Dudley, about their mutual hunting in Leiceſter Foreſt and Bradgate Park.

"This is the agreement made at Leiceſter, on the day of St. Vincent the Martyr [Apr. 5], in the 31ſt year of the reign of king Henry ſon of king John (before ſir Roger de Turkilby, maſter Simon de Walton, ſir Gilbert de Preſton, and ſir John de Cobham, juſtices then there itinerant), between Roger de Quincy earl of Winton and Roger Somery: To wit; that the aforeſaid Roger de Somery hath granted for him and his heirs, that the aforeſaid earl and his heirs may have and hold his park of Bradgate ſo incloſed as it was incloſed in the Octaves of St. Hilary, in the 31ſt year of the aforeſaid king Henry, with the deer-leaps [ſaltatoriis] then in it made. And for this agreement and grant, the ſame earl hath granted, for him and his heirs, that the ſame Roger de Somery and his heirs may enter at any hour on the foreſt of him the earl, to chace in it [ad berſandum] with nine bows and ſix hounds, according to the form of a cyrograph before made, between the aforeſaid Roger earl of Winton and Hugh de Albaniaco earl of Arundel, in the court of the lord the king at Leiceſter. And if any wild beaſt, wounded by any of the aforeſaid bows, ſhall enter the aforeſaid park by any deer-leap or otherwiſe, it ſhall be lawful for the aforeſaid Roger de Somery and his heirs to ſend one man or two of his, who ſhall follow the aforeſaid wild beaſt, with the dogs purſuing that wild beaſt, within the aforeſaid park, without bow and arrows, and may take it on that day whereon it was wounded, without hurt of other wild beaſts in the aforeſaid park abiding; ſo that, if they be footmen, they ſhall enter by ſome deer-leap or hedge; and if they be horſemen, they ſhall enter by the gate, if it ſhall be open; and otherwiſe ſhall not enter, before they wind their horn for the keeper, if he will come. And farther the ſame earl hath granted for him and his heirs, that they for the future ſhall every year cauſe to be taken a brace of bucks in the buck-ſeaſon, and a brace of does in the doe-ſeaſon, and them cauſe to be delivered at the gate of the aforeſaid park to any one of the men of the aforeſaid Roger de Somery and his heirs, bringing their letters patents for the aforeſaid deer. The aforeſaid earl hath alſo granted for him and his heirs, that they for the future ſhall make no park, nor augment the park beyond the bounds of the hunting ground of the aforeſaid Roger and his heirs, beſides the antient encloſures of the aforeſaid foreſt. And the aforeſaid Roger de Somery hath granted for him and his heirs, that they for the future ſhall never enter the aforeſaid foreſt to chace, ſave with nine bows and ſix hounds; and that their foreſters ſhall not carry in the wood of the aforeſaid Roger de Somery and their heirs, barbed arrows, but [ſagittas barbatas, ſed pilettas[2]]. And that his men of Barwe[3] and foreſters, within the Octaves of St. Michael, at the Park ford, ſhall do fealty every year to the bailiffs of the aforeſaid earl and his heirs, and other things which to the ſaid foreſt belong, according to the purport of the cyrograph between the aforeſaid earls of Wincheſter and Arundel before made. And this agreement is made between the aforeſaid earl and the aforeſaid Roger de Somery, ſaving to the ſame earl and his heirs, and to the aforeſaid Roger de Somery and his heirs, all the articles in the aforeſaid cyrograph made between the aforeſaid earls of Winton and Arundel contained. And farther, the ſaid earl hath granted for him and his heirs, that the one or two of the men of the aforeſaid Roger de Somery and his heirs, who ſhall follow the aforeſaid wild beaſt wounded, with the dogs purſuing it, into the aforeſaid park, with the aforeſaid wild beaſt, whether they ſhall have taken it or not, may, with the aforeſaid dogs, freely and without hindrance, go out through the gate of the aforeſaid park. And the aforeſaid earl and his heirs ſhall cauſe ſome one of their ſervants to give notice to the aforeſaid Roger de Somery and his heirs at Barwe[3], on what day he ſhall ſend for the aboveſaid deer to the aforeſaid place at the aforeſaid times; and this notice they ſhall cauſe to be given to them ſix days before the aforeſaid day. In witneſs whereof each to the other's writing hath put to his ſeal. And it is to be obſerved, that the time of buck-ſeaſon [tempus pinguedinis] here is computed between the feaſt of St. Peter ad Vincula [Aug. 1.] and the Exaltation of the Holy Croſs [Sept. 14.]; and the time of doe-ſeaſon [tempus firmationis] between the feaſt of St. Martin and the Purification of the Bleſſed Virgin[4]."

In the reign of king Edward I. Bradgate park, as parcel of the manor of Groby, became the property of William de Ferrers (ſecond ſon of William de Ferrers earl of Derby, who married Margaret daughter and coheir of Roger de Quincy earl of Winton), of the gift of Margaret his mother; to whom it had come on the partition of the inheritance of the family.

To this William, who died in 1288, ſucceeded his ſon and heir William, who in 1293 was ſummoned to parliament as baron Ferrers of Groby; and, dying in 1297, was ſucceeded by his ſon Henry, who married Iſabel, youngeſt daughter and one of the coheirs of ſir Theobald de Verdon; and, dying Sept. 15, 1343, was ſucceeded by his ſon William, who died in 1371; grandſon William, who died in 1388; and great grandſon William, who died in 1444, leaving no iſſue male, his only ſon Henry having died before him[5].

In a book of fifteenths and tenths granted by the laity in 1416, Bradgate was rated with Cropſton at £1. 11*s*. 0*d*.; and in 1445 at the ſame ſum, but 3*s*. was then abated.

In 1444, on the death of the laſt William lord Ferrers of Groby, Bradgate deſcended to ſir Edward Grey, knight; eldeſt ſon by the ſecond wife, Joan daughter and heir of William lord Aſtley, of Broughton Aſtley[6] in this county, to Reginald de Grey lord Haſtings[7].

Sir John Grey, the ſecond ſon by this marriage, was ſeated at Barwell in Leiceſterſhire, where an account of his family will be given; and Robert, the youngeſt ſon, ſettled at Envile in Staffordſhire, which is now one of the principal manſions of the preſent earl of Stamford.

The above-mentioned ſir Edward Grey, having been in the commiſſion for the peace for Warwickſhire 1442—1444[8], married Elizabeth ſole daughter of Henry ſon to William lord Ferrers of Groby[9]; and, by reaſon of the ſaid Henry's death in the life-time of William his father, became next heir to the ſame lord Ferrers: whereupon, doing his homage (having then iſſue[1] by her) he had livery of the lands of her inheritance, and bore the title of lord Ferrers of Groby, as appeareth by that ſpecial diſpenſation which he obtained from John Stafford then archbiſhop of Canterbury, bearing date at Lambeth, Nov. 8, 1446[2]; whereby, in reſpect of the great diſtance of his manor-houſe of Groby from the pariſh-church, and foulneſs of the ways thereto, he had licence to chriſten that child therein, by the vicar of his chapel, wherewith Elizabeth his lady was then great, and near the time of her delivery; and which was directed "Nobili viro Edmundo[3] domino de Ferrers de Groby." In the ſame year, Dec. 14, he was ſummoned to parliament[4] by the title of ſir Edward Grey, knt. lord Ferrers of Groby, to diſtinguiſh him from the lord Grey of Ruthin, and the lord Ferrers of Chartley; and, in 1449, was appointed, with others, to treat with the people for a loan of money to the king[5]. He died Dec. 18, 1458[6]; leaving ſir John Grey, knt. his ſon and heir; and Edward, a ſecond ſon, created lord Liſle by Edward IV. in 1475, in right of his wife, daughter to John Talbot viſcount Liſle[7]; and advanced, June 28, 1483, by king Richard III. to the title of viſcount Liſle[8].

---

[1] See the ſeal of this peculiar juriſdiction in Plate XCI.

[2] Sagitta piletta is an arrow that has a round knob (pila) in the ſhank of it, ſome two inches above the head, to hinder the arrow's going too far into the deer's body.

[3] Barrow upon Soar.

[4] Blount's Tenures (ex codice MS. penes Eliam Aſhmole, arm.) p. 126.

[5] Of this branch of the family of Ferrers an account will be given hereafter, under Groby.

[6] "Stemmata præclaræ familiæ de Aſtley, antiquitùs ab Eſtlegh nuncupata;" Harl. MSS. 6160. f. 1.

[7] Eſch. 29 Hen. VI.

[8] Pat. de iiſdem annis in dorſo.

[9] Eſch. 23 Hen. VI. n. 33.

Sir John Grey married Elizabeth daughter of ſir Richard Widvile; and was ſlain, in the battle of St. Alban's, Feb. 17, 1460; leaving iſſue two ſons, ſir Thomas Grey and ſir Richard, both knights; Elizabeth their mother ſtill ſurviving; with whoſe beauty king Edward IV. being captivated, he made her his queen[9]. This king, ſoon after his coronation, propoſed a marriage with a daughter of Lewis duke of Savoy, ſiſter to the queen of France; for which purpoſe the earl of Warwick was ſent to France; but, in the mean time, hunting in Wakefield foreſt, and coming to the manor-houſe of Grafton[10], at which place this lady attended him as a petitioner on behalf of herſelf and ſons, he fell paſſionately in love, and married her, at the above manor, May 1, 1464. On the 26th of May in the year following, ſhe was ſolemnly crowned at Weſtminſter; and in 1466 obtained the king's licence to complete the foundation of Queen's college, Cambridge, begun by Henry the Sixth's queen. In that year alſo her father was elevated to the dignity of earl Rivers, and had the offices of lord treaſurer and lord conſtable conferred on him. She was wife to the king nearly 19 years; during which her father and fourth brother were beheaded in his cauſe by the Northamptonſhire men, 1468, and herſelf forced to take ſanctuary at Weſtminſter, 1470, where her eldeſt ſon Edward was born. The king her huſband died of a quartane ague, at his palace at Weſtminſter, April 9, 1483, in the 42d year of his age, and 22d of his reign, juſt on the eve of a war with France; and lies buried at Windſor, on the North ſide of the altar in St. George's chapel, oppoſite to Henry VI. under a large ſlab or tomb, without inſcription, over which is erected, on a ſlab of black marble, a rich ſcreen of archwork grating, with hexagon pillars of the ſame, all of copper gilt, ſaid to have been the work of Quintin Matſis, the blackſmith painter of Antwerp. The trophies over it, richly embroidered with gold, pearls, and rubies, were carried off in the civil war. There does not appear to have been any epitaph or inſcription on this tomb; nor any made for him, except that in the College of Arms[11]. The execution of his will having been declined by his executors, archbiſhop Bourchier ſequeſtered his effects and jewels into the cuſtody of three perſons, May 8, 1483; and, on the 23d following, iſſued a commiſſion to the executors and others to ſell the ſame; and, with the produce, pay the expences of the royal funeral, amounting to £1486. 17*s.* 2*d.*[12]

After the death of the king, her elder brother Anthony Widvile, and ſir Richard Grey her ſon by her firſt huſband, being beheaded at Pontefract by Richard III. in 1483; ſhe took refuge a ſecond time at Weſtminſter, which ſhe quitted not till after the new king's death; when, having been condemned in a præmunire by Henry VII. and all her poſſeſſions ſeized, ſhe was confined to the monaſtery of Bermondſey; where, not long after, ſhe left the troubles of this life [1492], and enjoyed a quiet portion or burying-place by her laſt huſband king Edward at Windſor[13].

Her laſt will here follows: "In Dei nomine, Amen. The xth daie of Aprill, the yere of our Lord Gode MCCCCLXXXXII. I Eliſabeth, by the grace of God quene of England, late wif to the moſt victoroiuſe prince of bleſſed memorie Edward the Fourth, being of hole mynde, ſeying the worlde ſo tranſitorie, and no creature certayne whanne they ſhall departe frome hence, havyng Almyghty Gode freſsh in mynde, in whome is all mercy and grace, bequeith my ſowle into his handes; beſeechyng him, of the ſame mercy, to accept it graciouſly, and oure bleſſed Lady quene of comforte, and all the holy company of hevyn, to be good meanes for me. It'm, I bequeith my body to be buried with the bodie of my lord at Windeſſore, according to the will of my ſaide lorde and myne, without pompes entreing or coſtlie expenſis donne thereabought. It'm, where I have no wordely goodes to do the quene's grace, my dereſt doughter, a pleaſer with, nether to reward any of my children, according to my hart and mynde, I beſech Almyghty Gode to bliſſe here grace, with all her noble iſſue; and, with as good hart and mynde as is to me poſſible, I geve her grace my bleſſing, and all the forſaide my children. It'm, I will that ſuche ſmale ſtufe and goodes that I have be diſpoſed truly in the contentac̄on of my dettes and for the helth of my ſowle, as farre as they will extende. It'm, yf any of my bloode wille any of my ſaide ſtufe or goodes to me perteyning, I will that they have the prefermente before any other. And of this my preſent teſtament I make and ordeyn myne executors, that is to ſey, John Ingilby, priour of the Chartour-houſe of Shene, William Sutton and Thõmas Brente, doctors. And I beſech my ſaid dereſt doughter, the quene's grace, and my ſone Thomas marquis Dorſett, to putte there good wills and help for the performans of this my teſtamente. In witneſſe whereof, to this my preſent teſtament I have ſett my ſeale; theſe witneſſes, John Abbot of the monaſtry of Sainte Saviour of Bermondeſley, and Benedictus Cun, doctor of fyſyk. Yeven the day and yere aboveſaid[14]."

The viciſſitudes in the life of this illuſtrious lady were ſo remarkable, that I am happy in being enabled to preſent in Plate LXXXVIII. her portrait, with that of her royal conſort, from very accurate drawings by Mr. Schnebbelie. Among the admirable ornaments of the cathedral of Canterbury have always been reckoned the beautiful painted windows. That in the chapel called the Martyrdom contains the portraits and memorials of king Edward IV. and his family. In the upper part or point of the arch are ſhields of arms, and under them 10 figures of Prophets; under them 12 Apoſtles;

---

[1] Rot. Fin. 23 Hen. VI. m. 11.

[2] "Diſpenſatio domini archiep'i conceſſa nobili viro Edmundo domino de Ferers de Groby, Lync. dioc. ut filium ſeu filiam in capellâ infra manerium predict', per vicarium ibidem, ſeu ejus deputatum, ſacramentum baptiſmi de ſacro fonte ſuſcipere poſſet. Dat. apud Lamehith, 8 die Nov. A. D. 1446." Reg. Stafford & Kempe, f. 25. a.

[3] The miſtake of Edmund for Edward ſeems to have ariſen from confounding him with Edmund lord Grey of Ruthin.

[4] Clauſ. de eodem anno in dorſo. [5] Pat. 28 Hen. VI. pars 1. m. 17. [6] Eſch. 30 Hen. VI.

[7] Cart. 15—22 Edw. IV. [8] Cart. 1 Ric. III. m. 3. [9] Eſch. 1 Ric. III. Eſſex; and Polydore Vergil, 513, n. 10.

[10] A ſmall town near Towceſter in Northamptonſhire. This manor-houſe was the antient reſidence of the Widviles, and was given by the laſt of that family to the marquis of Dorſet; ſee p. 667.

[11] Printed by Sandford, p. 392. The order of his funeral may be ſeen in Archæologia, vol. I. pp. 349—355; a curious account of the opening of this tomb, 1789, in Mr. Gough's Sepulchral Monuments, vol. II. p. 278; and a repreſentation of the vault, coffin, and ſkeleton, in the Vetuſta Monumenta of the Society of Antiquaries, vol. III. Plate VII.

[12] Reg. Morton, Dene, Bourchier, and Courtney, fol. 175; Royal and Noble Wills, 1780, p. 345.

[13] Explanation of Plate VII. of the Vetuſta Monumenta, by Dr. Douglas, then Biſhop of Carliſle, now Biſhop of Saliſbury.

[14] Printed in Royal and Noble Wills, p. 350; from Doggett 9. fol. 74. a.

the Portraits of Edward IV, & his Queen Elizabeth, at Canterbury.

the fourth ſtage has 14 biſhops. The ſeven compartments of the three ranges below theſe are larger and very deep, fit to contain figures little leſs than life; thoſe in the uppermoſt range are deſtroyed, except ſhields of arms. In the next range angels hold other ſhields; and under theſe is the family of Edward IV, the donor of the window[1]. The middle compartment probably contained the large crucifix, which Richard Culmer tells us was broken Dec. 13, 1643, with the other idolatrous paintings of this beautiful performance. The three compartments on the Weſt ſide contain the king, prince of Wales, and duke of York, each kneeling before a deſk, and turning Eaſtward to the crucifix. On the Eaſt ſide are the queen and five princeſſes kneeling, and turning Weſtward to the ſame. The figures are large, and the back-ground repreſents rich hangings under a cornice finely carved and gilt, and fringed with ſilver. The hangings behind the king are paned with a purple and blue ſilk embroidered with ſilver roſes on a golden ſun; which devices he took in memory of the battle of Mortimer Croſs, where three ſuns were ſeen immediately conjoined in one. He kneels before a deſk under a rich canopy of crimſon velvet, holding in his right hand a ſceptre, which reſts on his right ſhoulder. The face is well preſerved, although the glaſs has been cracked; and he wears on his head an arched crown. He has on a rich white ſattin robe embroidered with gold; over which flows a beautiful crimſon mantle ermined about the ſhoulders. That ſide of the deſk before which he kneels, which preſents itſelf to the ſpectators, is adorned with a fine relievo of St. George in armour, trampling on the dragon, and piercing him with his ſpear. The queen kneels with her hands joined over an open book on a deſk. Her face has been cracked, but is, however, preſerved. On her head is a crown of gold, compoſed of croſſes patée and fleurs de lis. Her dreſs is of white ſattin embroidered with gold, and comes down cloſe to the wriſt; over which ſhe has on a rich crimſon mantle, with an ermined collar over the ſhoulders. The canopy is crimſon, and the back-ground azure, embroidered with green broom-ſtalks bearing red flowers. The deſk has been broken, and ill-patched up, as alſo the queen's neck and hair, which have been ridiculouſly filled up with an arm and up-lifted hand placed ſo as to touch her left cheek.

The only remnant of inſcription under the king is,

. . . . ſſimus et
. . . . us Edw . .
. . . . Anglie.

Under the queen,

Regina An . . .
. . . or Edwardi . .

Behind the king are portraits of his two ſons.

Behind the queen thoſe of his five daughters[2]; three in the firſt, and two in the ſecond:

1. Elizabeth, afterwards married to Henry VII.
2. Cecilia, married to John lord Wells.
3. Anne, married to Thomas duke of Norfolk.
5. Mary of York, promiſed to the king of Denmark, but died 1482.
7. Catharine, married to William Courtney earl of Devon.

Bridget the fourth became a nun at Dartford, and is therefore probably omitted; and Margaret the ſixth, becauſe ſhe died an infant.

Sir Thomas Grey, who had been a privy counſellor to king Henry VI. ſucceeded as lord Ferrers of Groby in 1460; and, on the 24th of Auguſt, 1471, was, on his mother's account, in ſuch favour with the king, that he was created earl of Huntingdon; and on the 18th of April, 1475, advanced to the dignity of marquis of Dorſet[3], only per cincturam gladii, & capæ honoris & dignitatis impoſitionem, the coronet being omitted[4]; on which day he ſate[5] in his habit, at the upper end of the table, among the knights in St. Edward's chamber; and the king gave him livery of his lands without making proof of his age[6].

In 1483, from his near relation and affection to the young king (murdered by Richard duke of Glouceſter, his unnatural uncle), the marquis was attainted of treaſon[7]; but, having taken ſanctuary, he got privily away, and fled into Brittany, to the aid of Henry earl of Richmond, who there had an army of 5000 men, with ſhips ready to tranſport them for England; and finding the earl gone thence, went to Venice; but, hearing of his return, haſted back. The new king, meantime, granted his ſeveral eſtates to the abovementioned Edward viſcount Liſle[8]. After this, being invited by the queen his mother (whom Richard by flattery had abuſed) to return into England, and deſpairing of the earl of Richmond's ſucceſs, he left Paris by night; which being made known to Richmond, he ſent after him, and prevailed on him to return. The ſcene ſoon changed by the deſtruction of Richard in Boſworth field, 1485; when king Henry VII. ſent for him from Paris (where he had been left in pledge for moneys borrowed); reſtored him to his honour and eſtates[9]; and made him a privy counſellor. Nevertheleſs, in a fit of jealouſy, he was ſome time after committed to the Tower by the king; but releaſed in a very ſhort time, again received into familiarity, and honoured with the Garter. In 1492, he was diſpatched into France, with the army under the duke of Bedford and the earl of Oxford, to the aid of Maximilian the emperor, againſt the French; and in 1496 was one of the principal leaders of the forces againſt lord Audley and the rebels at Blackheath.

This nobleman began ſome new buildings both at Groby and Bradgate[10]; and died Sept. 20, 1501[11]. By his laſt will, which is undated, he bequeathed his body to be buried in the collegiate church at Aſtley[12], before the image of the Bleſſed Trinity (in the midſt of his cloſet within the ſame college, on the South ſide); and appointed that his executors ſhould cauſe to be ſaid for his ſoul, in every of the four orders of friers in London, 100 maſſes by the friers in each place, with as much haſte as might be after his deceaſe; and that 100 marks ſhould be diſpoſed in alms to poor people at his burial; likewiſe that the hoſpital at Lutterworth, in his patronage, ſhould be appropriated to the college of Aſtley, if the dean and his brethren, or their ſucceſſors, could obtain ſuch appropriation to be lawfully made within three months after his deceaſe; to the intent that they ſhould eſpecially pray for the ſoul of king Edward IV. and queen Elizabeth his conſort (mother to this marquis), and alſo for his father's, his own and his wife's ſoul, and all Chriſtian ſouls. He alſo willed, that his ſon and heir apparent ſhould, after his deceaſe, have and enjoy his manors of Groby, Bradgate, Ratby, Newton, Anſtey, Coventre, Glenfield, with all the members to them appertaining; as alſo the manor of Higham, co. Leiceſter, with Wincheſter fee; and the manors of Grafton, Hertwell, Aſhehenne, Roode, Wyke Hamund, Wyke Dive, Stoke upon Learne, Wutton under Wyvor, Broughton Aſtley, the Lee Shrofold, and the Lee Bancors, and Leviſham; with all his lands in Calais. And that Cecilie his wife ſhould have the manor of Aſtley, with its appurtenances. Likewiſe, for the performacce of his legacies, and that every of his daughters unmarried might have £1000.; the revenues and profits of his manors of Lutterworth, Creke, Clay Coton, Willoughby Waterleſs, Wedyngton, Trelawne, Tregewell, Trewardreth, Colrige, Weſt Rington, and Leyſthorp, ſhould be received by his executors. And that if the lord Ferrers, who had then married Mary his daughter, ſhould die before carnal copulation, or diſagree to the marriage, then that [1] It is much to be regretted, that an exact drawing of this window, or at leaſt of theſe portraits, has not been taken on a larger ſcale. A fuller deſcription of it may be ſeen in Mr. Goſtling's Walk in and about Canterbury, ed. 1777, pp. 328—344.

---

[2] The faces of the firſt and fourth are ſupplied with others.

[3] Cart. 15 Edw. IV. n. 14.

[4] Selden's Titles of Honour, p. 761.

[5] Stow's Annals.

[6] Pat. 22 Edw. IV. p. 2. m. 16.

[7] Eſch. 1 Ric. III. virtute officii.

[8] Pat. 2 Ric. III. p. 1. m. 10.

[9] Rot. Parl. 1 Hen. VII. n. 32.

[10] See p. 664.

[11] Eſch. 17 Hen. VII.

[12] "A good parte of the landes of the Verdounes be cum in proceſſe now to the lord marquiſe of Dorſete; and the college of Aſſcheley in Warwickſhire by Nunneaton, where the lorde Thomas marquiſe of Dorſete was buried, was of the foundation of Thomas lord Aſteley. And al the landes in a maner that the lorde marquiſe of Dorſete hath in that egge of Leirceſterſhire or Warwickſhire, were longging ſumtyme to the Verdounes and Aſtleis." Leland's Itinerary, vol. I. p. 19.

£1000. to return. And all covenants betwixt the lord Dudley and him, for the marriage of his ſon and heir to Cecilie his daughter, to be fully performed[1].

By the lady Cecily his wife, daughter and heir to William Bonvile lord Harrington, he had ſeven ſons; Edward and Anthony, who died young; Thomas, who ſucceeded him in his honours; Richard, John, Leonard (deputy of Ireland 1536, beheaded 1541[2]); and George, a clergyman; and eight daughters. The marchioneſs was remarried to Henry earl of Wiltſhire; but in her laſt will, dated March 6, 1527-8, bequeathed her body to be buried in the chapel at Aſtley, in the tomb where the late lord marquis her huſband lay; and appointed that, ſoon after her death, 1000 maſſes ſhould be ſaid for her ſoul in as convenient haſte as might be. Moreover, that a goodly tomb ſhould be made in the chapel of Aſtley, over the lord marquis her huſband; and another over herſelf: and that her executors ſhould provide two prieſts, daily to ſing in the ſaid chapel of Aſtley, by the ſpace of 80 years, to pray for the ſoul of the ſaid lord marquis and her own ſoul; each of them to have £8. yearly ſtipend for their pains[3].

In the midſt of Aſtley church was a fair raiſed monument for the marquis and his lady; on which their ſtatues were excellently cut; and under the ſame a vault, adorned with the pictures of biſhops, cardinals, and monks, on which their bodies lay; but, by the fall of the ſteeple in 1600, it was totally broken[4].

Thomas, the third ſon, ſucceeded in 1501 as ſecond marquis of Dorſet; and made many conſiderable improvements at Aſtley, particularly by enlarging the Great park with 90 acres of land, and wholly making the Little park by impaling 30 acres of wood and paſture[5]; but afterwards, preferring the ſituation of Bradgate, he built there (early in the reign of king Henry VIII.) a very fair, large, and beautiful houſe, from materials bought principally from the manor-houſe of the earl of Warwick at Sutton Coldfield[6]; and filled up the caſtle-ditch at Groby, intending to make there an herbare[7]. In May, 1511, he was general of an army ſent into Spain, of 10,000 men, of whom 5000 were archers (who, beſides their bows and arrows, carried halberds, which they pitched in the ground till their arrows were ſhot, and then took up again to do execution on the enemy); wherein were alſo his three brothers, with the lord Thomas Howard, ſon and heir to the earl of Surrey, the lords Brooke, Willoughby, and Ferrers; which army arrived at Paſſage a Port in Guipuſcoa; and though deſigned to join with the forces of Ferdinand the emperor to invade Guienne, a territory belonging to the king of France, yet being landed, and the emperor propoſing other actings from it than were conſonant to the commiſſion and inſtructions which the king had given, after many of the ſoldiers by ill diet loſt, and the general himſelf ſick, returned for England about the end of November following, without performing any thing of moment. In 1513, this Thomas and four of his brothers, together with the duke of Suffolk and ſome other gallant Engliſhmen, on proclamation of a juſts at St. Dennis in France, which Francis de Valois, next heir to the crown of France (having married Claude, eldeſt daughter to Lewis XII. by Anne inheritrix of Bretaigne) to give ſome proof of his valour, had obtained leave of the king to be performed, went thither, and behaved himſelf ſo bravely therein, that he returned home with ſingular honour. Sept. 12, 1519, he granted a leaſe for 99 years of a paſture and croft at Shepeſhed to the abbot and convent of Garendon, in lieu of a leaſe from them, for the like term, of all their lands, tenements, reverſions, and ſervices, at Bradgate, except a yearly rent paid by them to the prior of Ulveſcroft[8]. In the ſame year he demiſed to Ralph Swillington and Elizabeth his wife, for their lives, the manor of Boſworth, with the advowſon of the chapel of St. Thomas of Aquine and of St. Anne, to the ſaid manor belonging[9]; and in 1520, at the famous meeting of king Henry and Francis the Firſt of France, between Ardres and Guiſnes in Picardy, he carried the ſword of ſtate before the king of England naked, as the duke of Bourbon did before the king of France; and after that, was one of the aiders in thoſe renowned juſts and tournaments which were held at that time there betwixt the Engliſh and French. In 1522 he was ſent to Calais to attend the emperor Charles V. into England; which was the time that the emperor was ſo magnificently entertained by king Henry, being himſelf lodged in Black Friars; and his train in the king's (then new-beautified) palace at Bridewell. And in 1523, was (together with ſir Thomas Lovel, knight) conſtituted chief juſtice-itinerant of all the king's foreſts[10]; and then had a grant from that king, to himſelf, and the heirs-male of his body, of the manors of Wawen Wotton, Sheldon, and Lalleford, in the county of Warwick, part of the poſſeſſions of Edward duke of Buckingham, lately attainted; and in 1527, in exchange from the king, the manors of Loughborough and Shepeſheved, co. Leiceſter, with the advowſons of the churches thereto belonging, which came to the crown by the attainder of Francis lord Lovel, in conſideration of the lordſhips of Grafton[11] and Hartwell, co. Northampton, of his own inheritance; and, by another grant, obtained the inheritance of Bardon Park. co. Leiceſter[12].

In 1523, proviſion was made in an act for ſecuring the counteſs of Oxford's dower, that it ſhould not affect any grant made ſeverally or jointly to Thomas lord marquis of Dorſet, or his brothers, John Grey, Richard Grey, and Leonard Grey, knights[13].

In 1529, this marquis was a witneſs in the cauſe of divorce between king Henry and queen Katharine his firſt wife, as to the age of prince Arthur, &c. In the ſame year he was one of the lords who ſubſcribed and preſented to the king that ſharp complaint contained in forty-four articles againſt the then great and potent cardinal Wolſey; and in 1530, one of the Engliſh lords that ſubſcribed a letter to pope Clement VII. importuning his allowance of the king's divorce.

On the 2d of June, 1530, he thus declared his will:

"Fyrſt, I bequeth my ſoule to God and his mother St. Mary, and my body to be buried in the church of Aſteley, com' Warwick, nigh unto my father. I will that no pompe or ſolemnity be uſed at my buriall; and that mine executors cauſe three prieſts to ſing and praye at Aſteley by the ſpace of three years, geving to every of them 10 markes by the yeare. I give to every one of my ſervantes one whole yeere's wages above their tyme, and meate and drinke for halfe an yeare in my houſe. To Jo. Hutting an houſe in Groby, and 66*s.* 8*d.* during his life; and that Jo. Dooſecourt keepe the ſame office he now hath for his lyſe. To William Hill of Sheldon his office for life. To Thomas Cornwall the bailiwik of Stebbing in Eſſex, and the keeping of the parke there for life. To Anthony Boggad the keeping of Wiſheconbe, com. Devon. And that every officer or ſervant hould for his life the office which he now hath. I will that Robert Brock, ſchoolmaſter to my ſonne Henry, have £20. yearly. I will that every of my ſonnes, Thomas, Edward, and John, have yearly £10. toward their fynding, untill they come to 15 years; and after to have £20. yearly till they come to 21. I will that each of my daughters unmarried have yearly £20. till they be married. I will that my daughter Mary have £1000.; and to each other of my daughters unmarried each £1000 I will that my wife have the rule and providing of all my children ..... (Deſunt plurima.) ...... And in like manner a goodly tombe to be made over my lord my father, and my lady my mother; and then my tombe to be made at Aſtley in the corner of the chancell. Which done, I will that mine executors make an almeſhouſe for 13 poore men, who yearly ſhall have each 12*d.* and a livery of black cotton, pret' 4*s*.[1] I will to my ſiſter Ceceley Dudley my mannor of Much Glen for her lyfe; and her mete and drinke for her man-ſervant and maide with my lady my wife, or elſe £20. yearly. I will that my executors receive the profittes of the mannour of Boſworth towards the performance of my will to my ſiſter Anne Grey, and ſir Richard Clement, now her huſband. I give unto my ſoveraigne lord the king on of my beſt geldinges, and £100. in ſoveraignes to buy his grace a ſaddle; I bequeth alſo to his grace a couple of my beſt houndes. I will and bequeth unto . . . . . Anne Bolein £20.; to Thomas duke of Norfolk £40.; to Charles duke of Suffolk £40.; to John earl of Oxford . . . .; to ſir William Fitzwilliams, chancellor of the duchy, £20.; to ſir Henry Guldeford, controuler of the king's houſe, £20.; to Doctor . . . . now ſecretary to the king, £20.; to Mary Copley £10. to her mariage; to Anne Elmer £10. to her mariage; to Cecely Wharwood £10. to her mariage; to Eleanor Palmer £10. to her mariage; to Elizabeth Chard £10.; to Hugh Whitherlie 40*s*. yearly for his lyfe; and to John Worthington the like. Towards the building of Tiltey church in Eſſex yearly 20 marks, till 200 marks be fully paid, &c."[2]

---

[1] Blaymr. Q. Z.

[2] See p. 666.

[3] Jankyn, Qu. 22.

[4] Dugdale, Warwickſhire, vol. I. p. 117.

[5] Ibid.

[6] "After that the earldome of Warwike was attainted and came to the kinge, the towne of Sutton ſtandinge in a barren ſoyle fell daily to decaye, and the market was cleane forſaken. Wingſton, by authority of his office, ſould the tymbre of the mannour-place, and had part of it himſelfe. The hall ſelfe was after ſett up at Bradgate, the marques of Dorſett's houſe at Leiceſter, and there yet ſtandeth." Leland's Itinerary, vol. IV. p. 187 See alſo Dugdale's Warwickſhire, vol. II. p 913.

[7] See p. 663.

[8] See the leaſe hereafter, under Garendon.

[9] Burton, MS.

[10] Pat. 15 Hen. VIII. p. 1.

[11] See p. 667.

[12] Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1.

[13] See vol. II. p. 143.

The marquis died on the 10th of October following; and in 1532 the following inquiſition was taken:

Inquiſitio capta apud Leiceſt', 23 Sept' 24 Hen. VIII. coram Thomâ Trye armigero, eſcheatore, virtute brevis de Mandamus, poſt mortem Thome nuper marchionis Dorſet, per ſacramentum Jacobi Burton, gen', Willielmi Seivile gen', Willielmi Chambers gen', Roberti Vincent de Shepey, &c. Qui dicunt ſuper ſacramentum, quod Henricus VIII, anno regni 19°, dedit prefato Thome marchioni Dorſet, & heredibus, paſturam de Bardon parke, cum gen' warret', tenend' per quartam partem feodi militis: Et quod idem rex Henricus VIII. (anno regni 19°) dedit dicto Thome reverſionem maneriorum de Loughborough & Shepeſhead cum membris, cum advocationibus eccleſiarum de Loughborough & Shepeſhead, poſt mortem Elizabethe[3] nuper comitiſſe Oxon', nuper uxoris Willielmi nuper vicecomitis Beaumont, que venerunt dicto regi ratione attincture Franciſci domini Lovel; habend' dicto Thome & Margarete uxori, & heredibus dicti Thome; tenend' per ſervicium unius feodi militis, in conſideratione quod dictus Thomas marchio dedit domino regi & heredibus maneria de Grafton & Hardwell, com' Northampton': Et quod Thomas Parre miles, Robertus Throgmorton miles, Anth' Fitzherbert tunc ſerviens ad legem, Willielmus Aſhby armiger, Jo. Spenſer armiger, Jo. Fitzherbert armiger, Henricus Smith armiger, & Petrus Beke clericus, per breve de Ingreſſu, 4 Hen. VIII. coram Roberto Rede & ſociis, juſticiariis de communi banco, recuperaverunt verſus prefatum Thomam marchionem maneria de Lutterworth & Boſworth: Et quod dictus Thomas marchio, ſeiſitus de maneriis de Groby & Whitwike, cum membris & pertinentiis, & tertie partis honoris Winton', 14° Oct', 14 Hen. VIII, dedit Anth' Fitzherbert, uni juſticiariorum communis banci, Willielmo Aſhby de Louſeby, Johanni Fitzherbert de Norbury, armigeris, & Petro Beke clerico, predicta maneria de Groby & Whitwik, cum omnibus membris & pertinentiis, necnon omnia terras & tenementa, & omnes redditus, reverſiones, ſervicia, & hereditamenta, in Groby, Whitwik, Ratby, Anſty, Glenfield, Swithland, Thurcaſton, Cropſton, Bradgate, Newtowne Linford, Newtowne Unthanke, Bocheſton, Markefeild, Hugleſcote, Swanington, & Stanton, ſeu alibi infra com' Leic'; habend' ipſis & heredibus, ad uſum dicti marchioni & heredum ſuorum, & ad perimplend' ultimam voluntatem ſuam: Et poſtea, per indenturum datam inter eos & dictum marchionem, & Willielmum comitem Arundell, concordatum fuit, &c. that Henry lord Grey, ſon of the ſaid marquis, ſhould marry Katharine Arundell, one of the daughters of the ſaid earl of Arundell, &c. Et predictus Henricus de Grey diſagreavit dicto maritagio, & dictam Katherinam recuſavit. Et inſuper juratores dicunt, quod dictus Thomas marchio Dorſet dedit, 22 Hen. VIII. Carolo duci Suffolke, Johanni comiti Oxon', Willielmo comiti Arundell, Walter Devereux domino Ferrers de Chartley, Leonardo Grey militi, domino Georgio Grey clerico, Henrico de Matrevers, Edwardo Willoughby militi, Johanni Danet militi, Johanni Arundell armigero, Thome Arundell armigero, Henrico Willoughby armigero, Thome Seton, Chriſtophero Wren, Willielmo Preſgrave, & Thome Philips, generoſis, maneria de Whittington, Leeſthorpe, Morebarne, & Willoughby Waterles, cum pertin', com' Leic', habend' & tenend' ipſis & heredibus, ad opus & uſum dicti marchionis & heredum, & ad performationem ultime voluntatis. Et ulterius dicunt juratores, quod dictus Thomas marchio Dorſet, in recompenſationem legatie de 1000*l*. date per Thomam marchionem Dorſet, patrem dicti Thome marchionis, Cecilie uxori Jo. Dudley militis, & ſorori dicti Thome junioris, dedit Caroli duci Suff', Johanni comiti Oxon', Willielmo comiti Arundell, Georgio Pedley armigero, & Georgio Brabazon generoſo, manerium de Glen Magna, com' Leic', habend' ad uſum dicte Cecilie pro termine vite; rem' dicte Thome marchioni & heredibus. Et ulterius juratores dicunt, quod dictus Thomas marchio Dorſet, dedit, 22 Hen. VIII. Henrico de Matrevers, Henrico Guldeford militi, Willielmo Shelley juſticiario de communi banco, Edwardo Wootton militi, Edwardo Ferrers militi, Johanni Danet militi, Georgio Pedley armigero, & Johanni Kempe generoſo, maneria de Broughton Aſtley & Higham, com' Leic', habend' ad opus & uſum dicte Margarete tunc uxoris prefati Thome nuper marchionis, pro termino vite; rem' dicto Thome & heredibus, ac ad performationem ultime voluntatis. Et ulterius juratores dicunt, quod dictus Thomas marchio Dorſet, 22 Hen. VIII, dedit manerium de Bradgate, cum pertinentiis, Henrico de Matrevers & Henrico Guldeford militi, ad uſum Margarete tunc uxoris dicti Thome marchionis, pro termino vite; rem' dicte Thome & heredibus, ac in performationem ultime voluntatis. Et dicunt juratores predicti, quod dictus Thomas marchio Dorſet, compos mentis, 2 Junii 1530 (22 Hen. VIII.) declaravit teſtamentum & ultimam voluntatem.

"Et ulterius juratores dicunt, quod paſtura dicta Bardon parke tenetur per quartam partem unius feodi militis, & valet per annum, ultra repriſ', 70*l*.—Et quod maneria de Loughborough & Shepeſhead tenentur de rege per unum feodum militis.—Et quod manerium de Lutterworth tenetur de hered' Hamorus Manſer, per qua ſervicia ignoratur; & volet per annum 76*l*.—Et quod manerium de Boſworth tenetur de honore Winton', ſed per que ſervicia ignoratur; valet, ultra repriſ', 40*l*. 22½*d*.—Et quod manerium de Groby cum membris tenetur de rege, ut de honore de Tutbury, per ſervicium feodi militis; valet, ultra repriſ', 45*l*. 16*s*.—Et quod manerium de Whitwick cum pertinentiis tenetur de rege in ſocagio per ſervicium 5*l*. 4*s*. 4*d*.; & valet per annum, ultra repriſ', 70*l*.—Et quod manerium de Leeſthorpe tenetur de Thomâ domino Berkely, ut de manerio ſuo de Melton, per que ſervicia ignoratur; valet per annum 20*l*.—Et quod manerium de Morebarne tenetur de hered' Hum' Manſer, per que ſervicia ignoratur; & valet per annum, ultra repriſ', 37*l*.—Et quod manerium de Willoughby Waterleſe tenetur de hered' Radi Baſſet per ſervicium unius feodi militis; & valet per annum, ultra repriſ', 12*l*. 9*s*.—Et quod manerium de Glen Magna tenetur de honore Winton', per fidelitatem tantùm; & valet per annum, ultra repriſ', 25*l*.—Et quod manerium de Broughton Aſtley tenetur de honore de Hinkley, per fidelitatem tantùm, & valet per annum, ultra repriſ', 38*l*.—Et quod manerium de Higham tenetur de honore Leiceſtr' per fidelitatem tantùm; & valet per annum, ultra repriſ', 12*l*.—Et quod predictum manerium de Bradgate, cum parco ibidem, eſt parcella dicti manerii de Groby.—Et ulterius juratores dicunt, quod dictus Thomas marchio Dorſet obiit 10° Octobris, 22 Hen. VIII; & quod

---

[1] Theſe payments he appointed to be made out of the rents and profits of his manors of Bedworth and Packington, and all ſuch lands and tenements as were in the occupation of the lord Liſle, reputed or taken as parcel of the ſaid lordſhips; the ſurpluſage to be beſtowed in repairing the almſhouſe, and keeping his obit yearly. Dugdale, Warwickſhire, vol. I. p. 112.

[2] Thaver, Qu. 10.

[3] Daughter to ſir Richard Scrope, and widow of William viſcount Beaumont.

Henricus Grey nunc marchio Dorſet eſt ejus filius & heres propinquior; & fuit etatis, dicto tempore mortis dicti Thome marchionis patris ejus, 13 ann', 3 quarten' ann', 12 ſeptiman', 4 dierum, & amplius.—Provided that nothing here found be hurtful to Mr. Kendall, or his heyres, for any manors, lands, or tenements in Swithland, Lutterworth, Bitteſwell, and Froleſworth, late Edmund Shepeies; nor to George earl of Huntingdon, for the advowſon of the church of Markefeilde; nor to ſir John Villers, knight, for 30 acres of more in Swannington; nor to William Wygſton the younger, for lands in Swannington [1]."

The marquis, agreeably to the directions in his will, was buried in the chapel on the South ſide of the choir at Aſtley. By his firſt wife Eleanor, daughter of Oliver St. John, eſq. he had no iſſue; by the ſecond, Margaret, daughter of ſir Robert Wotton, of Bocton, Kent (widow of William Medley), he had four ſons; Henry lord Grey (who ſucceeded him), Thomas, Leonard, and John Grey, who ſettled at Pirgo in Eſſex.

Margaret marchioneſs of Dorſet, widow of the ſecond marquis, obtained in 1534, from archbiſhop Cranmer, permiſſion that any prieſt ſhe choſe might adminiſter the ſacraments, and marry and baptize, during her life, in the chapel or oratory of any manor-houſe in which ſhe ſhould be reſident [2]; and in 1557 obtained a grant of the manors of Loughborough, Shepeſhed, &c. [3] The date of this lady's death does not appear, nor where ſhe was buried [4]; but in the chapel at Aſtley, till the year 1607, ſtood two fair monuments; the one of Thomas the ſecond marquis and his lady (probably the firſt wife), with their ſtatues, having coronets on their heads, in alabaſter, excellently cut; the other of Edward Grey viſcount Liſle and his lady, on the ſides whereof were 16 perſons, 8 of them in religious habits. Both theſe monuments, at the removal of the ſaid chapel to the end of the choir, where it now ſerveth for a chancel, were pulled down and utterly defaced [5]. In making theſe alterations, the body of the marquis was found, at the diſtance of 78 years, "the fleſh being neither periſhed nor hardened [6]; which might ſeem," ſays Mr. Burton, "to be thus preſerved by the ſtrong embalming thereof; for, as St. Gregory, writing upon the Canticles, ſaith, Mortuorum corpora myrrha condita fuiſſe perhibentur ne putreſcerent; the bodies of the dead were embalmed with myrrh, that they ſhould not putrify [7]."

The next owner of Bradgate was Henry the third marquis of Dorſet; who, on New-year's day 1539-40, preſented to king Henry VIII. a brace of greyhounds; as did the old lady marquis Dorſet, a garter, the bucle and pendant of gold; the young lady marquis Dorſet, a lynnen and two collors, the turrets gilte; the lord Richard Grey, a ſhirt of camericke, wrought with ſilk (with the king's grace); the lord Leonard Grey [8], an Iriſh hobby awmbling (to the ſtable); and the lady Margaret Grey, 12 handkerchiefs edged with gold. In return, the marquis had a gilt glaſs with a cover, 31 ounces; the dowager lady a gilt cruſe, with a cover, 30½ ounces; the young lady marquis, a gilt cup with a cover, 30½ ounces; the lord Richard Grey, a gilt cruſe with a cover, 16½ ounces; the lord Leonard Grey, a gilt jug with a cover, 19¾ ounces; and the lady Margaret Grey, a gilt cover, 13¾ di. ounces.

About this period, Bradgate and Groby were viſited by Leland; who ſays, "From Leirceſter to Brodegate, by ground welle wooddid, 3 miles. At Brodegate is a fair parke, and a lodge lately buildid there by the lorde Thomas Gray, marquiſe of Dorſete, father to Henry that is now marquiſe. There is a fair and plentiful ſpring of water brought by Maſter Brok, as a man wold juge, agayne the hille thoroug the lodge, and thereby it dryvith a mylle. This parke was parte of the olde erles of Leiceſter's landes, and ſins by heires generales it cam to the lorde Ferrares of Groby, and ſo to the Grayes. From Brodegate to Groby a mile and an half much by woddenlande. There remayne few tokens of the old caſtelle more then that yet is the hille that the kepe of the caſtelle ſtoode on very notable, but ther is now no ſtone work upon it [9]. And the late Thom[as marqueſh filled] up the diche of it [with earth, entending] to make an he[rbare there. The ould] parte of the wo[rke that now is at] Groby was made [by the Ferrares.] But newer workes and buildinges there at Bradgate [10] were erectid by the lorde Thomas firſt marquiſe of Dorſet:

---

[1] From a copy of the inquiſition in the hand-writing of Mr. Burton.

[2] Licentia cuicunque preſbytero ad miniſtrand' euchariſtiam, matrimonium ſolemniſand', et baptiſand', conceſſa Margarete marchioneſſe Dorſet, relicte prenobilis viri Thome marchionis Dorſet, & aliis de ſuâ familiâ, in quacunque capellâ, ſive oratorio, infra maneria ubi ſe reſidere contigerint, durante vitâ dicte Margarete. Dat. apud Lambeth, 13 die Feb. 1534. Reg. Cranmer, fol. 15. a.

[3] Mich. Recorda, 29 Hen. VIII. Rot. 2. & 31.

[4] Perhaps, with her father's family, at Bocton in Kent.

[5] Dugdale, Warwickſhire, vol. I. pp. 113. 117.

[6] For further particulars of this curious diſcovery, ſee before, under Beaumanor, p. 143.

[7] "Aimonius ſaith, that dead corpſes were accuſtomed to be annointed with rare ointments, coſtly ſpices, and exquiſite confections, and ſo laid in the monument: The reaſon St. Origen delivers in his fifth book againſt Celſus, "Humana corpora ut animæ domicilia & ſanctioris præcipuæ, haudquaquam ſunt rejicienda, quippe quæ ex optimarum legum permiſſu cum honoribus qui his haberi poſſunt ſepultura ſolemni dignantur." In all countries, Greek, Hebrew, Ægyptian, Roman, and Barbarian, this curious and ſolemn manner of burial hath ever been accuſtomed; but the moſt coſtly and exquiſite were the Ægyptians, where the bodies that are now digged up about Alexandria, but chiefly about Cairo, are brought into Europe, and ſold for the beſt mummy. The Ægyptians (ſaith Peter Bellon, in his Obſervations, in the ſecond book, and 24th chapter), expecting the reſurrection of the dead, did hold it a great misfortune to ſuffer the dead bodies to be conſumed by the four elements, and therefore did embalm them in the beſt manner they could; which Pomponius Mela called "Funera medicata *," and Pliny, "ſervata corpora †." Thoſe which had the greater wealth, beſtowed the more ſumptuous funerals. The chiefeſt thing which they uſed for the preſervation of them was a drug called Cedria. And whoſo is deſirous to know the funeral manners and faſhions of the funerals of each country, may read Lilius Gregorius de ſepulturis, Hieronymus Magius; Innocentio Cibo; Tho. Porcacchi ‡; Peter Meriot, who hath ſet down the pictures and proportions of them finely cut, and printed at Lyons, 1556; and Onuphrius Panvinius, who hath written of the manner of burials amongſt the antient Chriſtians, printed at the end of Platina de Vitis Pontificum Romanorum §." Burton, p. 52; corrected by his own MS.

[8] This lord Leonard, ſon to the firſt marquis, was appointed the king's deputy in Ireland 1534; and created lord Garny in that kingdom Jan. 1, 1534-5. He paſſed an act for the king's ſupremacy over the church of Ireland, in which he was aſſiſted by Brown, the firſt Proteſtant biſhop. In 1540 he was recalled, and committed priſoner to the Tower, on a charge of high-treaſon, for permitting his infant nephew Gerald Fitzgerald (whoſe brother Thomas had been executed, and his family attainted) to eſcape out of the kingdom; and for having cauſed certain Iriſhmen to invade the lands of the king's friends, whom he favoured not. "He was arraigned in the King's bench at Weſtminſter June 25, 1541; and appointed to be tried by knights, becauſe he was a lord by name, and no lord of the parliament; but he diſcharged the jury, and confeſſed the indictment; whereupon he had judgement; and, on St. Peter's eve, June 28, was beheaded at Tower-hill, where he ended his life very quietly and godly. This nobleman, as he was come of high lineage, ſo was he a right valiant and hardy perſonage, having in his time done his prince and country good ſervice, both in Ireland, France, and other places, greatly to his commendation, although now his hap was thus to loſe his head, as convicted by law, and his renown (overcaſt with a cloud of diſgrace) vaniſhed, as future chances befell, to the aboliſhing of the preſent honour which ſometime he enjoyed. Howbeit, his eſtimation he might have preſerved unblemiſhed, had provident circumſpection undertaken the direction of his doings, and that he had borne his eyes in his forehead, to foreſee all afterclaps, which a wiſe man will in no caſe neglect." Holinſhed, vol. III. p. 953.

[9] Mr. Wyrley, about 1590, ſays, the ruins of the caſtle ſhew it to have been large and ſtately. He alſo mentions "the park."

[10] The two words in Italics are a variation taken from Mr. Burton's tranſcript of Leland, given by Thomas Allen, eſq. lord of Finchley, to Dr. Stukeley, in 1758, and purchaſed by Mr. Gough at the ſale of the Doctor's library 1766; and in another tranſcript, purchaſed by the ſame gentleman at the ſale of Mr. Thomas the architect's library by Mr. King, March 3, 1801.

* "Mortuos arte medicatos intra penetralia collocant," are the words of Melas, I. c. 9.

† "In Ægypto corpora hominum defunctorum eo (cedrio) perfuſa ſerventur." Nat. Hiſt. vol. XVI. c. 11.

‡ Funerali antichi di diverſi popoli, forma, ordine, e pompo di ſepultore, diſſeriti in Dialogo con le figure, de Tho. Porcacchi de Caſtiglione. In Vinegia, 1591, fol.

§ Magnificenza delle Eſſequie antiche e moderne, diviſa in cinque ragionamenti; autore Innocentio Cibo Geneveſe. In Vinegia, 1600.

The

ſet: emong the which workes he began and erectid the fundation and waulles of a greate gate-houſe of brike, and a tour, but that was leſte halfe on finiſhid of hym, and ſo it ſtondith yet. This lorde Thomas erectid alſo and almoſte finiſhid ij toures of brike in the fronte of the houſe, as reſpondent on eche ſide to the gate-houſe. There is a faire large parke by the place a vi miles in cumpaſe[1]. There is alſo a poore village[2] by the place, and a litle broke by it. And a quarter of a mile from the place in the botom there is as faire and large a pole as lightely is in Leyrceſterſhire. There iſſuith a broket out of this lake, that after cummith by Groby, and [there] dryvith a mylle, and after [reſort]ith to Sore river. From Brodegate to Lughborow about a v miles. Firſt I cam oute of Bradgate parke into the foreſt of Charley, commonely called The Waſt. This foreſt is a xx miles or more in cumpace, having plenty of woode; and the moſt parte of it at this tyme longgeth to the marquiſe of Dorſete; the reſedew to the king and erle of Huntingdune. In this foreſt is no good toune, nor ſcant a village."

"Riding almoſt in the entering of this foreſt, I ſaw 2 or 3 quarres in hilles of ſlate ſtone, longging to the marquiſe of Dorſete. And riding a little farther I left the parke of Bewmanor, cloſed with a ſtone walle and a pratie logge yn it, longging alate to Beaumont."

"This parke cam to the marquiſe of Dorſete by exchange of landes with the king. Thens a little way of to Burley parke, now longging alſo to the marquiſe of Dorſete. Thens ſcant a mile to Loughborow. The ruins of Whitewik caſtell long now by permutation [3] to the marquiſe of Dorſete.

"From Brodegate to Bellegreve village a 4 miles by woddy and paſture grounde. This village is about a mile lower on Sore river then Leirceſter is; and I cam over a great ſtone bridge or I enterid into it. There dewellith a gentilman by the name of Bellegreve, a man of a 50li. of poſſeſſions by the yere. There is alſo a nother mene gentilman of the Bellegreves yn Leirceſterſhire[4]."

In 1542, Henry marquis of Dorſet obtained from the king[5] a leaſe for 21 years, and in 1544 a new grant, of Beaumanor with its members[6]; and, in February 1546-7, was appointed lord high conſtable of England, for three days only, on the ſolemnity of the king's coronation[7]; in 1550, juſtice-itinerant[8] of all the king's foreſts[9]; in 1551 warden of the Weſt and Middle Marches towards Scotland[10]. In compliment to his lady, he was created duke of Suffolk, Oct. 11, 1551[11]; and was alſo elected knight of the Garter. Two letters of his, after this creation, dated from Beaumanor, in 1552, have been already printed[12]. He married, firſt, Catharine, daughter of William Fitz Alan earl of Arundel; by whom he had no iſſue; and, ſecondly, Frances daughter and coheir of Charles Brandon[13] the gay duke of Suffolk by his third wife Mary, daughter of king Henry VII, and widow of Louis XII. king of France.

On New-year's day 1552-3, the lady Frances ducheſs of Suffolk preſented to king Edward VI. in a purſe of ſilver and gold, knit, £40. in half ſovereigns (left with the king's majeſty); and received in return three gilt bowls with covers, 61¾ ounces.

In the following ſummer, the duke of Suffolk was unfortunately allured to countenance a project which involved himſelf and family in ruin.

Mr. Burton, in his additions to Bradgate, ſays, "At this place was born that moſt noble and admired princeſs, Jane Grey; who being but young, at the age of 17 years (as John Bale[14] writeth) attainted to ſuch excellent learning, both in the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin tongues, and alſo in the ſtudy of divinity (by the inſtruction of Dr. Aylmer[15]), as appeared by her many writings, viz. her conference with Dr. John Feckenham abbot of Weſtminſter, in the chiefeſt points of religion[16]; her admonition to Mr. Harding[17], late chaplain to her father, for his revolting from the true religion; her letters to her father and ſiſters; and divers other tracts; that (as Mr. Fox[18] ſaith of her) had her fortune been anſwerable to her bringing up, undoubtedly ſhe might have been comparable to the houſe of Veſpaſians, Sempronians, and Cornelia[19] mother of the Gracchi in Rome, and in theſe days the chiefeſt men in the univerſities. King Edward the Sixth was ſo affectionate to her, for the rareneſs and worthineſs of herſelf both in parts and perſonage, that (as I have heard by ſome of credit that lived in court, and were officers to the ſaid king Edward) he had intended to have made her his queen; but, being prevented thereof by death, yet willing to advance her to the ſaid dignity, he, in the time of his ſickneſs,

The printed editions, and Leland's own MS. have only the ſingle word there, implying that the "brick towers" were at Groby: and thus ſir William Dugdale underſtood the paſſage. But, from perſonal inſpection of the ruins at both places, I have little doubt but that the reading here adopted is correct. The words diſtinguiſhed by brackets are now loſt, by crumbling, from Leland's original manuſcript.

[1] This deſcription of the park is repeated as a marginal reading in Stowe, and Burton's copy of Leland.

[2] Newtown Linford.

[3] This was in exchange with king Henry VIII. for the manor of Grafton in Northamptonſhire, the antient reſidence of the Widviles (ſee p. 662.) Richard the third earl Rivers of that family, by his will, dated Feb. 20, 1490, bequeathed his body to be buried in the abbey of St. James at Northampton, in a place made ready for the ſame; and gave to the pariſh church of Grafton all ſuch cattle as he then had at Grafton, viz. two oxen, five kine, and two bullocks; to the intent that they ſhould yearly keep an obit for his ſoul (viz. Dirige and Maſſe of Requiem) with the curate, four prieſts and four clerks, as alſo an herſe and four tapers; every prieſt taking for his wages 5*d.* and every clerk 3*d.*; appointing, that the lord Thomas marquis Dorſet ſhould be his heir; to whom he thereby gave all his lands whereſoever; deſiring him that there might be as much underwood ſold in the woods at Grafton as would buy a bell, to be a tenor, at Grafton, to the bells then there, for the remembrance of the laſt of the blood. He died on the 6th of March next following, without iſſue. Dugdale, Bar. Angl. vol. II. p. 233. —A palace was afterwards built by king Henry VIII. at Grafton; which was deſtroyed in the civil wars; and its demeſne is now poſſeſſed by the duke of Grafton.

[4] Itinerary, vol. I. pp. 19. 21.

[5] See the royal ſignature (with thoſe of king Edward, queen Mary and king Philip, and queen Elizabeth) in Plate LXXVI.

[6] 4 Pars Original. 35 Hen. VIII. Rot. 36.

[7] Pat. 1 Edw. VI. p. 6.

[8] In the unpubliſhed Talbot Papers (B. 217.) is a letter from the marquis of Dorſet to the earl of Shrewſbury, dated Mansfield, April 22, 1550, with apologies for not waiting on him; and with the names of commiſſioners on both ſides to treat of a peace with the Scots.

[9] Pat. 4 Edw. VI. m. 9.

[10] Pat. 5 Edw. VI. p. 4.

[11] Trin. Rec. 6 Edw. VI. m. 9.

[12] See before, p. 144; where his ſignature is given, both as marquis of Dorſet and duke of Suffolk, in Plate XXIV.

[13] See the ſignatures of Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk and Frances his ducheſs in Plate XCI.—"Such was the capricious cruelty of Henry VIII. that though he fell ſo unmercifully on the houſe of Norfolk, out of which he had married two wives, Anne Boleyn and Catharine Howard, and had married his natural ſon the duke of Richmond to a third female of that family; yet the earl of Anjou and the duke of Suffolk, who married his two ſiſters, though dowager queens of Scotland and France, without his leave, were ſpared; and the firſt kept his head, and the latter his majeſty's favour." Lord Orford's Remarks on a portrait of Charles Brandon.

[14] Cent. 2. part 109.

[15] This eminent divine had for his patrons, firſt, Henry marquis of Dorſet (who ſent him to ſchool, maintained him at the univerſity, and made him tutor to his children) and afterwards Francis earl of Huntingdon.—Of Aylmer's reſidence at Bradgate we have ſome account in an old book, intituled, "The Jewel of Joy," written by Thomas Becon in king Edward's reign. That author, being an old friend and profeſſor of the Goſpel, and on that account in danger of his life under king Henry VIII. reſolved for his ſafety, in the latter end of that king's reign, to conceal himſelf, by travelling from theſe parts Northwards: and, coming into Leiceſterſhire, where the marquis of Dorſet's ſeat was, he met with Mr. Aylmer, then a young man, that nobleman's domeſtick; of whom he was kindly received: and in the ſaid book gave him this character, 'That he was excellently well learned both in Latin and Greek; and added, that with him alone in that county he had familiarity;' there being, 'tis probable, not one elſe that he dared to truſt, leſt he might be betrayed by them. He was for ſome time the only preacher in Leiceſterſhire; where he ſo effectually fixed the Proteſtant religion, that neither force nor fraud could blot it out; the Goſpel being there retained without contention, which can be ſaid but of few other places. Strype's Life of Aylmer, p. 9.

[16] Fox, Acts and Monuments, 1684, vol. III. p. 25.

[17] "An Epiſtle of a right vertuowes Wooman to a lerned man of late fallen from the truth of God's Word, for feare of the Worlde;" preſerved in Harl. MSS. 416. 15. p. 25; and printed in Fox's Acts, &c. p. 27.

[18] Fox, p. 11.

[19] Daughter of Scipio Africanus.

ſickneſs, married her to Guilford Dudley, fourth ſon of John duke of Northumberland; and by his letters patent, bearing date June 21, in the laſt year of his reign, granted the crown of England to the ſaid lady Jane, and to the heirs male of her body begotten, by the counſel and conſent of all his counſellors of ſtate, and beſt lawyers of the realm, to which they ſubſcribed their names, and were ſworn to obſerve. Which was performed for theſe cauſes[1]; Firſt, for that Mary and Elizabeth, the king's ſiſters, were before by parliament held illegitimate; which act was not repealed[2]. Next, for that by the laws of this land, theſe his two ſiſters could not be heirs to king Edward, for that they were but of the half blood unto him[3]. Laſtly, for that king Henry VIII. had, by his laſt will, appointed this lady Jane to ſucceed king Edward, in caſe he died without iſſue; leſt that, if ſo be the ſaid Mary and Elizabeth ſhould marry foreign princes, they might alter the religion, and bring in again the authority of the pope, now quite thruſt out and ſuppreſſed." Upon July 10 next after the death of king Edward (who died July 6, 1553) this lady Jane was accordingly proclaimed queen; which title within 20 days after vaniſhed; for the lady Mary, by the love of the Commons and many of the nobility, prevailing[4], was after proclaimed and advanced queen; and impriſoned the ſaid lady Jane and her huſband in the Tower; who ſhortly after were both beheaded, Feb. 12, 1553; whoſe behaviour, confeſſion, and manner of death, is ſet down by Mr. Fox[5]. The hiſtory of her life and death was penned by an Italian gentleman, and printed in Venice 1555; and ſince reprinted at Amſterdam[6], 1607, 8vo. And ſo I leave this rare phœnix, whom I may ſo juſtly call, as well for that herſelf could not be paralleled by any in her time living, as for that ſucceeded her the mirror and miracle of her time, queen Elizabeth of famous memory; who, for her rare learning and knowledge in many tongues and arts, her wiſdom, piety, juſtice, and worthy government, was of all men, even of Pagans, admired; and is for ever by fame eternized[7]."

It is impoſſible to think on the ſweet diſpoſition and wonderful accompliſhments of this excellent lady, without having the heart elated by the ſublimeſt, as well as melted with the tendereſt feelings. How intereſted muſt we feel about Bradgate, when we recollect it was not only the birth-place, but the ſcene of the happy childhood and the early ſtudies of this incomparable heroine! Here (to uſe the quaint but emphatical language of Dr. Fuller) "ſhe was bred by her parents, according to her high birth, in religion and learning. They were no whit indulgent to her in childhood, but extremely ſevere, more than needed to ſo ſweet a temper; for what need iron inſtruments to bow wax? But, as the ſharpeſt winters (correcting the rankneſs of the earth) cauſe the more healthful and fruitful ſummers; ſo the harſhneſs of her breeding, compacted her ſoul to the greater patience and piety, ſo that afterwards ſhe proved the mirror of her age, and attained to be an excellent ſcholar, through the teaching of Mr. Aylmer her maſter[8]."

Of her ſtrong affection to learning, there is a remarkable teſtimony given by Mr. Aſcham[9], which, as it does honour to herſelf and learned preceptor, we cannot paſs by in ſilence. "One example," ſaith he, "whether love or fear doth more in a child for virtue and learning, I will gladly report; which may be heard with ſome pleaſure, and followed with more profit. Before I went into Germany, I came to Brodegate, in Leiceſterſhire, to take my leave of that noble lady, Jane Grey, to whom I was exceeding much beholden[10]. Her parents, the duke and the ducheſs, with all the houſhold gentlemen and gentlewomen, were hunting in the park: I found her in her chamber reading Phædon Platonis in Greek, and that with as much delight as ſome gentlemen would read a merry tale in Boccace. After ſalutation and duty done, with ſome other talk, I aſked her, why ſhe would loſe ſuch paſtime in the park? Smiling, ſhe anſwered me, 'I wiſſe all their ſport in the parke is but a ſhadow to that pleaſure that I find in Plato. Alas, good folk, they never felt what true pleaſure meant!'—'And how came you, Madam,' quoth I, 'to this deep knowledge of pleaſure? and what did chiefly allure you unto it, ſeeing not many women, but very few men, have attained thereunto?'—'I will tell you,' ſaith ſhe, 'and tell you a troth, which perchance ye will marvel at. One of the greateſt benefits that ever God gave me is, that he ſent me ſo ſharp and ſevere parents, and ſo gentle a ſchoolmaſter; for, when I am in preſence either of father or mother, whether I ſpeak, keep ſilence, ſit, ſtand, or go, eat, drink, be merry, or ſad, be ſewing, playing, dancing, or doing any thing elſe, I muſt do it, as it were, in ſuch weight, meaſure, and number, even ſo perfectly as God made the world; or elſe I am ſo ſharply taunted, ſo cruelly threatened, yea, preſently ſometimes with pinches, nips, and bobs, and other ways (which I will not name for the honour I bear them) ſo without meaſure miſordered, that I think myſelf in hell till the time come that I muſt go to Mr. Elmer, who teacheth me ſo gently, ſo pleaſantly, with ſuch fair allurements to learning, that I think all the time nothing whiles I am with him. And when I am called from him, I fall on weeping; becauſe whatſoever I do elſe but learning, is full of grief, trouble, fear, and whole miſliking unto me: and thus my book hath been ſo much my pleaſure, and bringeth daily to me more pleaſure and more; that, in reſpect of it, all other pleaſures, in very deed be but trifles and troubles unto me.—I remember this talk gladly (ſaith Mr. Aſcham) both becauſe it is ſo worthy of memory, and becauſe it was the laſt talk that ever I had, and the laſt time that ever I ſaw that noble and worthy lady."

"When proclaimed queen of England," adds Dr. Fuller," ſhe lifted up not the leaſt finger to put the diadem upon herſelf; but was only contented to ſit ſtill, whilſt others endeavoured to crown her; or rather was ſo far from biting at the bait of ſovereignty, that unwillingly ſhe opened her mouth to receive it. When brought from a queen to a priſoner, and committed to the Tower, ſhe made miſery itſelf amiable by her pious and patient behaviour: Adverſity, her night-cloaths, bearing her as well as her day-dreſſing, by reaſon of her pious diſpoſition. During her impriſonment, many moved her to alter her religion, and eſpecially Mr. Feckenham; but how wiſely and religiouſly ſhe anſwered him, I refer the reader to Mr. Fox's "Acts and Monuments [1]." Though queen Mary of her own diſpoſition was inclined finally to pardon her, yet neceſſity of ſtate was ſuch as ſhe muſt be put to death. Some report her to have been with child when ſhe was beheaded (cruelty to cut down the tree with bloſſoms on it); and that that which hath ſaved the life of many women, haſtened her death; but God only knows the truth hereof. On Tower-hill ſhe moſt patiently, chriſtianly, and conſtantly yielded to God her ſoul, which by a bad way went to the beſt end. On whom the aforeſaid author (whence the reſt of her life may be ſupplied) beſtows theſe verſes:

---

[1] Which are thus expreſſed in the proclamation of Lady Jane, by the name of "Queen Jane;" printed by Rich. Grafton, 1553.

[2] Camdeni Aſparat. Annal. fol. 9.

[3] But it appeareth by the Lord Coke, in the firſt part of his Inſtitutes, fol. 15, that neither half-blood nor poſſeſſio fratris doth hold of lands of the crown, or of lands purchaſed by the preceding king.

[4] "The duke of Northumberland was made general of an army, and ſent into Suffolk to ſuppreſs the lady Mary, who there gathered men to claim the crown. This duke was appointed out of the policy of his friend-ſeeming enemies for that employment: for thoſe who before could not endure the ſcorching heat of his diſpleaſure at the council-table, durſt afterwards oppoſe him, having gotten the ſkreen of London-walls betwixt him and them. They alſo ſtinted his journeys every day (thereby appointing the ſteps by which he was to go down to his own grave) that he ſhould march on very ſlowly, which cauſed his confuſion: for lingering doth tire out treacherous deſigns, which are to be done all on a ſudden, and gives breath to loyalty to recover itſelf. His army, like a ſheep, left part of a fleece on every buſh it came by; at every ſtage and corner ſome conveying themſelves from him, till his ſoldiers were waſhed away, before any ſtorm of war fell upon them. Only ſome few, who were chained to the duke by their particular engagements, and ſome great perſons hopeleſs to conceal themſelves, as being too big for a cover, ſtuck faſt unto him. Thus thoſe enterprizes need a ſtrong hand, which are thrown againſt the bias of peoples' hearts and conſciences. And not long after, the Norfolk and Suffolk Proteſtant gentry (Loyalty always lodgeth in the ſame breaſt with true Religion) proclaimed and ſet up queen Mary, who got the crown by Our Father, and held it by Pater Noſter." Fuller's Holy State, p. 296.

[5] Acts and Monuments, vol. III. p. 229.

[6] Hiſtoria de la vita & de la morte del illuſtriſſima Seig. Giovanna Graia, gia Regina eletta, & publicata d'Inghiltierra. A Amſteldamo, per Com. Nicolas, 1607.

[7] Burton, MS.

[8] Holy State, p. 294.

[9] See his "Schoolmaſter," p. 11; and Biog. Brit. art. Aylmer.

[10] Mr. Aſcham had been employed by the marquis her father to teach his children to write.

Neſcio tu quibus es, Lector, lecturus ocellis:
Hoc ſcio, quod ſiccis ſcribere non potui.
What eyes thou read'ſt with, Reader, I know not:
Mine eyes wern't dry when I this ſtory wrote.

She had the innocency of childhood, the beauty of youth, the ſolidity of middle, the gravity of old age, and all at eighteen: the birth of a princeſs, the learning of a clerk, the life of a ſaint, yet the death of a malefactor for her parents' offences. I confeſs, I never read of any canonized ſaint of her name; a thing whereof ſome Papiſts are ſo ſcrupulous, that they count it an unclean and unhallowed thing to be of a name whereof never any ſaint was: which made that great Jeſuit Arthur Faunt (as his kinſman tells us) change his Chriſtian name to Laurence. But let this worthy lady paſs for a ſaint; and let all great ladies, which bear her name, imitate her virtues, to whom I wiſh her inward holineſs, but far more outward happineſs [2]."—"No lady," ſays Dr. Fuller in a ſubſequent work, "which led ſo many pious, lived ſo few pleaſant days, whoſe ſoul was never out of the non-age of afflictions, till death made her of full years to inherit happineſs; ſo ſevere her education. Whilſt a child, her father's was to her an houſe of correction; nor did ſhe write Woman ſooner than ſhe did ſubſcribe Wife; and, in obedience to her parents, was unfortunately matched to the lord Guilford Dudley; yet he was a goodly, and (for aught I find to the contrary) a godly gentleman, whoſe worſt fault was, that he was ſon to an ambitious father. She was proclaimed, but never crowned queen; living in the Tower; which place, though it hath a double capacity of a palace and a priſon, yet appeared to her chiefly in the latter relation. For ſhe was longer a captive than a queen therein; taking no contentment all the time, ſave what ſhe found in God, and a clear conſcience. Her family, by ſnatching at a crown which was not, loſt a coronet which was, their own; much degraded in degree, and more in eſtate. I would give in an inventory of the vaſt wealth they then poſſeſſed; but am lothe to grieve her ſurviving relations with a liſt of the lands loſt by her father's attainture [3]."

To the inordinate ambition of John Dudley duke of Northumberland may be aſcribed the downfall of this illuſtrious family, and the calamitous events experienced by the kingdom at large. Through his intereſt, the marquis of Dorſet had obtained the title of duke of Suffolk; and by this and other favours, he prevailed on that nobleman and his lady to give their daughter, the lady Jane, in marriage to his fourth ſon, the lord Guilford Dudley; and, to fortify himſelf by farther alliances, he negotiated a marriage between the lady Catharine Grey, the duke's ſecond daughter, and lord Herbert, eldeſt ſon to the earl of Pembroke; and married his own daughter to lord Haſtings, eldeſt ſon to the earl of Huntingdon. Theſe marriages were ſolemnized with great pomp and feſtivity in May 1553; and on the 21ſt of June, by a ſolemn teſtament, ſubſcribed by the lords of the council, the chief of the nobility, the mayor and corporation of London, and almoſt all the judges and chief lawyers of the realm, the lady Jane, as eldeſt daughter to the French queen, was declared to be the rightful inheritrix of the crown.

On the death of the king, the duke of Northumberland went to Sion-houſe, accompanied with the duke of Suffolk, the earl of Pembroke, and others of the nobility; and approached the lady Jane, who reſided there, with all the reſpect uſually paid to the ſovereign. Jane was, in a great meaſure, ignorant of all theſe tranſactions; and it was with equal grief and ſurpriſe that ſhe received intelligence of them. Her heart, full of paſſion for literature and the elegant arts, and of tenderneſs towards her huſband, who was deſerving of her affection, had never opened itſelf to the flattering allurements of ambition; and the information of her advancement to the throne was by no means agreeable to her. She even refuſed to accept of the preſent; pleaded the preferable right of the two princeſſes; expreſſed her dread of the conſequences attending an enterprize ſo dangerous, not to ſay ſo criminal; and deſired to remain in that private ſtation in which ſhe was born. Overcome at laſt with the entreaties, rather than reaſons, of her father and father-in-law, and above all of her huſband, ſhe ſubmitted to their will, and was prevailed on to relinquiſh her own judgement. It was then uſual for the kings of England, after their acceſſion, to paſs the firſt days in the Tower; and Northumberland immediately conveyed thither the new ſovereign. All the counſellors were obliged to attend her to that fortreſs; and by this means became, in ſome meaſure, priſoners in the hands of Northumberland, whoſe will they were neceſſitated to obey.

On the 8th of July, Edward lord Clinton and Say, lord admiral, took the oath of office and the charge of the Tower as conſtable; and on the 9th all the head-officers and the guard were ſworn to queen Jane, at Greenwich, as queen of England. The ſame day a ſermon was preached at Paul's Croſs by Ridley, biſhop of London, ſtating the danger the nation would have been in had Mary ſucceeded (which after roſe up in judgement againſt him). On the 10th, lady Jane publicly took on her the royal ſtate and government of the kingdom; and made her entry into the Tower that day between 4 and 5 of the clock in the afternoon, with a great company of lords and nobles, the ducheſs of Suffolk her mother bearing up her train, with many great ladies, and ſuch a volley-ſhot of guns and chambers as had rarely been heard before; and by 6 o'clock ſet forth her proclamation [4], to declare her title to the people, and to require their allegiance; which was performed by two heralds and a trumpet blowing, in Cheapſide firſt, and then in Fleet-ſtreet; and, to keep the counties ſecure to her againſt the lady Mary, ſhe confirmed the reſpective lords lieutenants in the ſame authority they were inveſted with before by commiſſion from king Edward. The ſame day ſhe ſigned an order to ſir Ambroſe Dudley, knight of the order, and keeper of her palace at Weſtminſter, for "20 yards of velvet, 25 ells of holland cloth, and 30½ ells of coarſer holland cloth."

July 12, a circular letter was ſent, by the new queen, to the Engliſh ambaſſadors at the ſeveral foreign courts [5]; and on the 16th another ſermon was preached at Paul's Croſs, by Mr. Rogers, the learned reader of St. Paul's; who was more wary than biſhop

---

[1] "Becauſe I have mentioned that book, wherein this lady's virtues are ſo highly commended, I am not ignorant that of late great diſgrace hath been thrown on that author and his worthy work, as being guilty of much falſehood; chiefly, becauſe ſometimes he makes Popiſh doctors, well known to be rich in learning, to reaſon very poorly; and the beſt fencers of their ſchools worſted and put out of their play by ſome country poor Proteſtants. But let the cavillers hereat know, that it is a great matter to have the odds of the weapon, God's word, on their ſide; not to ſay any thing of ſupernatural aſſiſtance given them. Sure for the main his book is a worthy work (wherein the reader may rather leave than lack); and ſeems to me, like Ætna, always burning, whilſt the ſmoke hath almoſt put out the eyes of the adverſe party; and theſe fox's firebrands have brought much annoyance to the Romiſh Philiſtines. But it were a miracle, if, in ſo voluminous a work, there were nothing to be juſtly reproved: ſo great a pomegranate, not having any rotten kernel, muſt only grow in Paradiſe. And though perchance he held the beam at the beſt advantage for the Proteſtant party to weigh down, yet, generally, he is a true writer, and never wilfully deceiveth, though he may ſometimes be unwillingly deceived." Fuller.

[2] Fuller's Holy State, p. 298.

[3] Fuller's Worthies, Leiceſterſhire, p. 127.

[4] See it in Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation, vol. II. Collect. p. 239.

[5] See this letter in Strype's Memorials, vol. III. p. 5.

Ridley had been, preaching only on the Goſpel of the day. But both were burnt after queen Mary became poſſeſſed of the crown.

July 14, "in the fyrſt yere of her Highneſs reign," the following Jewels, &c. were delivered to the Quene's Highneſs by . . . . . . Sturton, eſquier.

"Item, a fyſhe of golde, being a toothe pyk.

Item, a like pendant, having one great perle, and iii litle perles at it.

Item, one dewbery [1] of golde.

Item, a colet [2] wth v perles, and a counterfet ſtone.

Item, a newte [3] of ſilver, white.

Item, a tablet wth a white ſaphiere and a blewe, and balleſſe, and a perle pendaunt.

Item, a tablet of golde, hanged by a chaine, with a Sainct Jones heade, and viii flots [4] perles.

Item, a tablet of a picture of our Lady of Piti in a blewe ſtone.

Item, a paire of beads of white purſlayn [5], with viii gawdes of golde, &c.

Item, viii gawdes of golde, and a taſſell of Venice golde.

Item, &c. beads of golde crymery worke.

Item, buttons of golde, of crymery worke.

Item, ſix purſſes hangers of ſilver and gilt.

Item, v ſmall agathes, with ſtars graven in them.

Item, perles in rondels of golde between knots of perles, pipes of gold.

Item, a paire of braſſelets of flagon chayne with jacinths; buttons of gold crymery worke, in every button vi perles.

Item, xxx ſmall turkeſis, litle worthe.

Item, xiiii table diamonds ſet in colletts of golde.

Item, an abillyment of goldeſmithes worke.

Item, another abillyament with xii table diamonds ſet in golde, &c.

Item, another billement, &c.

Item, xliii damaſkin buttons.

Item, a clock of damaſked worke, booke faſhion."

The following warrant is copied from the original:

"Jane the Quene.

"Truſty and welbeloved, we grete y^{u} well. Becauſe we doubt not but by this o^{r} moſt lawfull poſſeſſion of the crowne, w^{t} the free conſent of the nobilitie of our realm, and other the ſtates of the ſame, is bothe playnely knowen, and accepted of you, as o^{r} moſt lovinge ſubjects; therfore we do not reiterate the ſame: but now moſt earneſtly will and require, and by authoritie herof warrant you, to aſſemble, muſter, and levie all the pouere that ye can poſſible make, either of yor ſerṽntes, tеn̄nts, officers, or freends, as well horſemen as footmen (reſerving to o^{r} right truſty and right welbeloved couſins the erls of Arundell and Pembroke their ten̄nts, ſerṽnts, and officers); and w^{t} the ſame to repaire w^{t} all poſſible ſpeed towards Buckinghamſhire [6], for the repreſſion and ſubdewing of certain tumults and rebellions moved there againſt us and o^{r} crowne by certain ſeditious men. For the repreſſion whereof, we have given ordre to diṽs others, our good ſubjects and gentlemen of ſuche degree as you ar, to repaire in like manner to the ſame partes; ſo as we nothing doubt but, upon the acceſſe of ſuche o^{r} loving ſubjects as be appointed for that purpoſe, to the place where thies ſeditious people yet remayne, the ſame ſhall either lack harts to abyde in theire malitious purpoſe, or ells receyve ſuche puniſhment and execuc̄on as they deſerve; ſeking the deſtruc̄on of their native countrie, and the ſubṽſion of all men in their degrees, by rebellion of the baſe multitude: whos rage being ſtirred, as of late yeres hath byn ſeen, muſt nedes be the confuſion of th'ole com̄onweale. Wherefor o^{r} ſpec̄all truſt is in yor courage, wiſedome, and fidelities in this matter, to advaunce yo^{r}ſelves bothe w^{t} poure and ſpeed to this enterpriſe, in ſuch ſorte as by o^{r} nobilitie and counſaill ſhalbe alſo preſcribed unto you. And for the ſuſtentation of y^{r} chardge in this behalfe, o^{r} ſaid counſaill, by our com̄aundement, do further give ordre to yor ſatisfaction as by their ltres alſo ſhall appere unto you. And beſide that, we do aſſure you of o^{r} ſpeciall conſiderac̄on of this yor ſervice to us, o^{r} crowne, and expreſsly to the p̃ſervac̄on of this o^{r} realm and com̄onweale. Yeven under our ſignet, at o^{r} Toure of London, the xviiith day of July, the firſt yere of our reign.

"To our truſtie and welbeloved ſir John Bridges and ſir Nicholas Poyntz, knights [7]."

A fac-ſimile of the ſignature is given in Plate XCI. from the above-cited warrant. In the ſame plate is copied a repetition, taken from different ſides of the room in the Tower, of the royal title of this unfortunate princeſs, who is ſuppoſed by Mr. Brand "to have had a latent meaning in the repetition of her ſignature Jane, by which ſhe at once ſtyled herſelf a queen, and intimated that not even the horrors of a priſon could force her to relinquiſh that title [8]." Yet, with ſubmiſſion to the learned Secretary, though we have copied the ſuppoſed autographs, it is not at all likely that they were placed on the walls by the royal priſoner; but more probably aroſe from the oſtentation of the duke of Northumberland her father in law, whoſe autograph the letters ſtrongly reſemble.

On the 19th of July, queen Mary was ſolemnly proclaimed; the people expreſſing their approbation by ſhouts of applauſe; and even Suffolk, who commanded in the Tower, finding reſiſtance fruitleſs, opened the gates, and declared for the queen; and the lady Jane, after wearing the vain pageantry of a crown during ten days, returned to a private life with more ſatisfaction than ſhe felt when royalty was tendered to her.

To the duke of Northumberland this raſh project very ſoon proved fatal. On the 25th of July, he and his three ſons were brought priſoners to the Tower; as were alſo the earl of Huntingdon and his ſon the lord Haſtings. On the 27th, the duke of Suffolk was committed to the ſame priſon; but, on the 31ſt, at the interceſſion of his ducheſs, was wholly releaſed from reſtraint. The duke of Northumberland was arraigned on the 18th of Auguſt 1553, and executed on the 22d.

Sentence was pronounced againſt the lady Jane and lord Guilford; but without any preſent intention of putting it in execution. The youth and innocence of the perſons, neither of whom had reached their ſeventeenth year, pleaded ſufficiently in their behalf.

The duke of Suffolk, within a few months, unmindful of the clemency he had ſo recently received, was ſo infatuated as to take an active part in the rebellion ſet afloat by ſir Thomas Wyat, on pretence of danger apprehended from queen Mary's projected marriage with Philip of Spain [9]. On the 25th of January, 1553-4. with his two brothers, the lords Thomas and John Grey, he departed ſecretly one evening from Sheen, and rode with all ſpeed into Leiceſterſhire; where, in the town of Leiceſter and other places, he, by public proclamations, incited the people to take up arms againſt the Spaniard; but, finding little encouragement in that county, haſtened to Coventry, being perſuaded that the city would be opened unto him: but here again he found himſelf unſupported; for, when with ſix or ſeven ſcore well-appointed horſemen he appeared before that place, in hope of being received, he was kept out; the citizens, encouraged by the earl of Huntingdon, who had been ſent down by the queen, being armed againſt him; whereupon, ſays Holinſhed, "perceiving himſelfe deſtitute of all ſuch aid as he looked for among his friends in the two ſhires of Leiceſter and Warwike, he got him to his manor of Aſtleie, diſtant from Coventrie five miles, where, appointing his companie to diſperſe themſelves, and to make the beſt ſhift each one for his owne ſafegard that he might, and diſtributing to everie of them a portion of monie, according to their qualities, and his ſtore at that preſent, he and the lord John Greie his brother beſtowed themſelves in ſecret places there within Aſtleie parke; but through the untruſtineſſe of them to whoſe truſt they did commit themſelves (as hath been crediblie reported), they were bewraied to the earl of Huntingdon[1], that then was come to Coventrie, and ſo apprebended they were by the ſaid earle, and afterwards brought up to London. The duke had meant at firſt to have rid awaie (as I have crediblie heard), if promiſe had beene kept by one of his ſervants [Underwood, his keeper], appointed to come to him to be his guide; but when he, either feining himſelfe ſicke, or being ſicke indeed, came not, the duke was conſtreined to remaine in the parke there at Aſtleie, hoping yet to get awaie after that the ſearch had beene paſſed over, and the countrie once in quiet. Howſoever it was, there he was taken, as is ſaid, togither with his brother the lord John Greie; but his brother the lord Thomas got awaie indeed at that time, meaning to have fled into Wales, and there to have got to the ſea ſide, ſo to tranſport himſelfe over into France, or into ſome other forren part. But in the borders of Wales he was likewiſe apprehended through his great miſhap, and follie of his man that had forgot his capcaſe with monie behinde him in his chamber one morning at his inne; and, comming for it againe, upon examination what he ſhould be, it was miſtruſted that his maiſter ſhould be ſome ſuch man as he was indeed, and ſo was ſtaied, taken, and brought up to London[2]."—Feb. 1, "Proclamation was made by an herald, to ſignifie that the duke of Suffolke's companie of horſſemen were ſcattered, and that he himſelfe and his brethren were fled[3]." A letter from lord Wharton to the earl of Shrewſbury, dated Helaugh, Feb. 4, contains precautions for the apprehenſion of the duke of Suffolk and others in the North[4]. On the 10th, "the earle of Huntingdon and other gentlemen, to the number of three hundred horſſemen, brought to the Tower as priſoners the duke of Suffolke and the lord John Greie his brother from Coventrie, where the duke had remained three daies after his taking in the houſe and cuſtodie of Chriſtopher Warren, alderman there; and next day came in Thomas Rampton, the duke of Suſolke's ſecretarie[5]."

---

[1] "Feed him with apricots and Dewberries [Rubus cæſius,]
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries." Shakespeare.

[2] The ſtud of a ring.

[3] Newt or lizard. "The gilded newt and eyeleſs venomed worm." Shakespeare.

[4] Of no weight.

[5] Porcelain.

[6] In Strype's Memorials, vol. III. Appendix, N^{o} I. is a letter from queen Mary to ſir Edward Haſtings (who had been one of the band of penſioners to king Edward VI.) dated Kenningale [Kenninghall], June 9, to aſſiſt her in obtaining the crown, Sir Edward, having received a commiſſion from the council to make levies for the lady Jane in Buckinghamſhire, carried over his troops, which amounted to 4000 men, and joined queen Mary; who rewarded him with the office of maſter of the horſe July 31, 1553; and gave him in 1555 a licence for "100 retainers."

[7] Harl. MSS. 416. p. 30. A ſimilar letter, of the ſame date, to ſir John St. Lowe and ſir Anthony Kingſton, knights, is printed in Strype's Memorials, vol. III. Appendix N^{o} I.

[8] See the Archæologia, vol. XIII. p. 70; where the device of her father, taken from the ſame ſtate priſon, is alſo engraved.

[9] "When two ſuch ſanguinary hands were joined, it was lucky for mankind that no iſſue was the conſequence. The intrepidity of the Tudors, united with the unprincipled policy of Charles V. and Philip, might have depopulated Europe, and formed as deſolate a waſte of empire as that of the Ottomans." This remark is Lord Orford's.

This rebellion proved fatal to the lady Jane and her huſband. The duke of Suffolk's guilt was imputed to her; and though the rebels and malecontents ſeemed chiefly to reſt their hopes on the lady Elizabeth and the earl of Devonſhire, the queen, incapable of generoſity or clemency, determined to remove every perſon from whom the leaſt danger could be apprehended. Warning was given the lady Jane to prepare for death; a doom which ſhe had long expected, and which the innocence of her life, as well as the misfortunes to which ſhe had been expoſed, rendered no unwelcome news to her. The queen's bigoted zeal, under colour of tender mercy to the priſoner's ſoul, induced her to ſend divines, who moleſted her with perpetual diſputation; and even a reprieve of three days was granted her, in hopes that ſhe would be perſuaded, during that time, to pay, by a timely converſion, ſome regard to her eternal welfare. The lady Jane had preſence of mind, in thoſe melancholy circumſtances, not only to defend her religion by all the topics then in uſe, but alſo to write the following letter to the duke of Suffolk:

"Father, although it hath pleaſed God to haſten my death by you, by whom my life ſhould rather have been lengthened; yet can I ſo patiently take it, as I yield God more hearty thanks for ſhortening my woeful days, than if all the world had been given unto my poſſeſſions with life lengthened at my own will. And albeit I am well aſſured of your impatient dolors, redoubled manifold ways, both in bewailing your own woe, and eſpecially (as I hear) my unfortunate ſtate; yet, my dear Father (if I may without offence rejoice in my own miſhaps) me ſeems in this I may account myſelf bleſſed, that, waſhing my hands with the innocency of my fact, my guiltleſs blood may cry before the Lord, Mercy to the Innocent. And yet, though I muſt needs acknowledge that, being conſtrained, and, as you wot well enough, continually aſſayed, in taking upon me I ſeemed to conſent, and therein grievouſly offended the queen and her laws; yet do I aſſuredly truſt, that this my offence towards God is ſo much the leſs, in that, being in ſo royal eſtate as I was, mine inforced honour blended never with mine innocent heart. And thus, good Father, I have opened unto you the ſtate wherein I at preſent ſtand: whoſe death at hand, although to you perhaps it may ſeem right woeful, to me there is nothing that can be more welcome, than from this vale of miſery to aſpire to that heavenly throne of all joy and pleaſure with Chriſt our Saviour; in whoſe ſtedfaſt faith (if it may be lawful for the daughter ſo to write to the father), the Lord that hitherto hath ſtrengthened you, ſo continue you, that at the laſt we may meet in Heaven with the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt[6]."

The following "Exhortation" was alſo written by the lady Jane, the night before ſhe ſuffered, in the end of a Greek Teſtament, which ſhe ſent to her ſiſter:

"I have here ſent you, good ſiſter Katharine, a Book, which, although it be not outwardly trimmed with gold, yet inwardly it is more worth than precious ſtones. It is the Book, dear ſiſter, of the Law of the Lord: it is his Teſtament and Laſt Will, which he bequeathed unto us wretches; which ſhall lead you to the path of eternal joy; and if you with a good mind read it, and with an earneſt mind do purpoſe to follow it, it ſhall bring you to an immortal and everlaſting life. It ſhall teach you to live, and learn you to die: it ſhall win you more than you ſhould have gained by the poſſeſſion of your woeful father's lands. For as, if God had proſpered him, you ſhould have inherited his lands; ſo if you apply diligently this Book, ſeeking to direct your life after it, you ſhall be an inheritor of ſuch riches, as neither the covetous ſhall withdraw from you, neither thief ſhall ſteal, neither yet the moths corrupt. Deſire with David, good ſiſter, to underſtand the Law of the Lord God. Live ſtill to die, that you by death may purchaſe eternal life. And truſt not that the tenderneſs of your age ſhall lengthen your life; for as ſoon (if God call) goeth the young as the old; and labour always to learn to die. Defy the world, deny the devil, and deſpiſe the fleſh; and delight yourſelf only in the Lord. Be penitent for your ſins, and yet deſpair not. Be ſtrong in faith, and yet preſume not; and deſire with St. Paul to be diſſolved and to be with Chriſt, with whom even in death there is life. Be like the good ſervant, and even at midnight be waking; leſt, when death cometh and ſtealeth upon you as a thief in the night, you be, with the evil ſervant, found ſleeping, and leſt, for lack of oil, you be found like the five fooliſh women, and like him that had not on the wedding garment, and then ye be caſt out from the marriage. Rejoice in Chriſt, as I do. Follow the ſteps of your maſter Chriſt, and take up your croſs: lay your ſins on his back, and always embrace him. And as touching my death, rejoice as I do, good ſiſter, that I ſhall be delivered of this corruption, and put on incorruption. For I am aſſured that I ſhall, for loſing of a mortal life, win an immortal life; the which I pray God grant you, and ſend you of his grace to live in his fear, and to die in the true Chriſtian faith; from the which, in God's name, I exhort you, that you never ſwerve, neither for hope of life, nor for fear of death. For, if you will deny his truth for to lengthen your life, God will deny you, and yet ſhorten your days. And if you will cleave unto him, he will prolong your days to your comfort and his glory: To the which glory God bring me now, and you hereafter, when it pleaſeth him to call you. Fare you well, good ſiſter; and put your only truſt in God, who only muſt help you[1]."

---

[1] In "The Hiſtorie of Wyatt's Rebellion, with the Order and Manner of reſiſting the ſame, and Conference with the degenerate and ſeditious Rebelles, by John Proctor, 1554," 12mo, black letter, it is obſerved "that the duke of Suffolk, being hardly purſued by the earl of Huutingdon, was by him apprehended in Leiceſterſhire; whereby he declared himſelf as well in honour and unſpotted loyalty, as in parentage and patrimony, to ſucceed his great grandfather the lord Haſtings; whoſe fidelity and ſtedfaſt honour toward king Edward the Fourth and his children the Chronicles report, to his immortal honour."

[2] Holinſhed, vol. III. p. 1095.

[3] Ibid. p. 1096.

[4] Unpubliſhed Talbot Papers, C. 15.

[5] Holinſhed, vol. III. p. 1099.

[6] Harl. MSS. 2194. 13. p. 23. b.

On the day of her execution, her huſband, the lord Guilford, deſired permiſſion to ſee her; but ſhe refuſed her conſent, and ſent him word, that the tenderneſs of their parting would overcome the fortitude of both, and would too much unbend their minds from that conſtancy, which their approaching end required of them. Their ſeparation, ſhe ſaid, would be only for a moment; and they would ſoon rejoin each other in a ſcene, where their affections would be for ever united, and where death, diſappointment, and misfortunes, could no longer have acceſs to them, or diſturb their eternal felicity. It had been intended to execute the lady Jane and lord Guilford together on the ſame ſcaffold at Tower-hill; but the council, dreading the compaſſion of the people for their youth, beauty, innocence, and noble birth, changed their orders, and gave directions that ſhe ſhould be beheaded within the verge of the Tower. She ſaw her huſband led to execution; and, having given him from the window ſome token of her remembrance, ſhe waited with tranquillity till her own appointed hour ſhould bring her to a like fate. She even ſaw his headleſs body carried back in a cart; and found herſelf more confirmed by the report which ſhe heard of the conſtancy of his end, than ſhaken by ſo tender and melancholy a ſpectacle. Sir John Gage, conſtable of the Tower, when he led her to execution, deſired her to beſtow on him ſome ſmall preſent, which he might keep as a perpetual memorial of her: ſhe gave him her table-book, where ſhe had juſt wrote three ſentences on ſeeing her huſband's dead body; one in Greek, another in Latin, a third in Engliſh. The purport of them was, that human juſtice was againſt his body, but the divine mercy would be favourable to his ſoul; and that, if her fault deſerved puniſhment, her youth, at leaſt, and her imprudence, were worthy of excuſe; and that God and poſterity, ſhe truſted, would ſhow her favour.

The conduct of this ill-fated lady and her huſband in their laſt moments[2] is thus related by our hiſtorians:

"The twelfe of Februarie, being Mondaie, about ten of the clocke, there went out of the Tower to the ſcaffold on the Tower-hill, the lord Gilford Dudleie, ſonne to the duke of Northumberland, huſband to the ladie Jane Greie, daughter to the duke of Suffolke; and without the bulworke-gate, maiſter Thomas Offleie, one of the ſhiriffes of London, received him, and brought him to the ſcaffold; where, after a ſmall declaration, he kneeled downe, and ſaid his praiers. Then, holding up his eies and hands to heaven with teares, at the laſt he deſired the people to praie for him; and after he was beheaded. His bodie being laid in a cart, and his head in a cloth, was brought into the chappell within the Tower, where the ladie Jane, whoſe lodging was in maiſter Partridge's houſe, did ſee his dead carcaſſe taken out of the cart, as well as ſhe did ſee him before alive going to his death; a ſight, as might be ſuppoſed, to hir worſe than death. By this time was there a ſcaffold made upon the greene over againſt the White Tower, for the ladie Jane to die upon; who, being nothing at all abaſhed, neither with fear of hir own death, which then approched, neither with the ſight of the dead carcaſſe of hir huſband when he was brought into the chapel, came forth, the lieutenant leading hir, with countenance nothing abaſhed, neither her eies anie thing moiſtened with teares, with a booke in hir hand, wherein ſhe praied untill ſhe came to the ſaid ſcaffold. Whereon when ſhe was mounted, this noble young ladie, as ſhe was indued with ſingular gifts both of learning and knowledge, ſo was ſhe as patient and mild as anie lamb at hir execution; and a little before hir death uttered theſe words: 'Good people, I com hether to die, and by a lawe I am condemned to the ſame[3]. The facte, indede, againſt the queene's highnes was unlawful, and the conſenting thereunto by me; but touching the procurement and deſyre therof by me, or on my halfe, I doo waſh my hands thereof in innocencie, before God and the face of you good Chriſtian people this day;' and therwith ſhe wrong hir handes in which ſhe had her booke. Then ſhe ſayd, 'I pray you all good chriſtian people to bere me wytnes that I dye a true chriſtian woman, and that I looke to be ſaved by none other mene but only by the mercy of God, in the merites of the bloud of his onlye ſonne Jeſus Chriſte; and I confeſſe when I dyd know the word of God, I neglected the ſame and loved myſelfe and the world, and therefore this plage and punyſhment is happely and worthely happened unto me for my ſinnes. And yet I thanke God of his goodnes that he hath thus geven me a tyme and reſpet to repent. And now, good people, while I am alyve, I pray you to aſſyſt me with your prayers.' And then ſhe knelyng downe, ſhe turned to Fecknam, ſaying, 'Shall I ſay this Pſalm?' and he ſaid, 'Yea.' Then ſhe ſaid the Pſalm of Miſerere mei Deus in Engliſh in moſt devout maner to thende. Then ſhe ſtode up, and gave her mayde miſtres Tylney her gloves and handkercher; and her booke to maiſtre Thomas Brydges, the lyvetenantes brother. Forthwith ſhe untyed hyr gowne. The hangman went to her to have helped her of therwith; then ſhe deſyred him to let her alone, turning towardes her two jentlewomen, who helped her of therwith, and alſo her Froſe paſte and neckecher, geving to her a fayre handkercher to knytte about her eyes. Then the hangman kneeled downe, and aſked her forgevenes, whome ſhe forgave moſt willingly. Then he willed her to ſtand upon the ſtrawe, which doing ſhe ſawe the blocke. Then ſhe ſayd, 'I pray you diſpatche me quickly.' Then ſhe kneeled downe, ſaying, 'Wil you take it of before I lay me downe?' And the hangman anſwered her, 'No, madame.' She tyed the kercher about her eies. Than feeling for the blocke, ſaide, 'What ſhall I do? where is it?' One of the ſtanders-by guyding her therunto, ſhe layde her head downe upon the block, and ſtretched forth her body, and ſayd, Lorde, into thy handes I commend my ſpirite. And ſo ſhe ended[4].—"This," ſays Holinſhed, "was the end of the lord Gilford and the ladie Jane, whoſe deaths were the more haſtened for feare of further troubles and ſtires for her title, like as hir father had attempted.—Touching this ladie Jane, in the high commendation of hir godlie minde, I find this report in maiſter Fox's Appendix to his Acts and Monuments: namelie, that being on a time, when ſhe was verie young, at Newhall in Eſſex, at the ladie Marie's, was by one ladie Anne Wharton deſired to walke; and they paſſing by the chapell, the ladie Wharton made low curtſie to the popiſh ſacrament hanging on the altar; which, when the ladie Jane ſaw, marvelled why ſhe did ſo; and aſked hir whether the ladie Marie were there or not? Unto whome the ladie Wharton anſwered, No; but ſhe ſaid that ſhe made hir curtſie to Him that made us all. Why, quoth the ladie Jane, how can he be there that made us all, and the baker made him? This hir anſwer comming to the lady Marie's eare, ſhe did never love hir after, as is crediblie reported, but eſteemed hir as the reſt of that Chriſtian profeſſion. In further witneſſe of which good ladie's diſpoſition (both to God and the world), beſides the verſes of certeine learned men extant to hir praiſe, theſe following were found written by hir owne hand with a pin:

"Non aliena putes homini, quæ obtingere poſſunt:
Sors hodierna mihi, tunc erit illa tibi.

JANE DUDLEY."

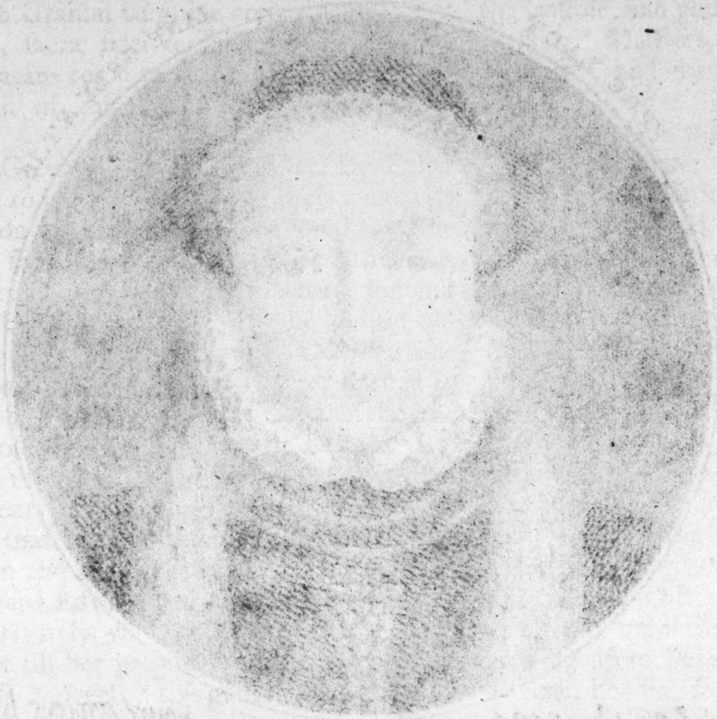
---

[1] Harl. MSS. 416. 16. p. 28.

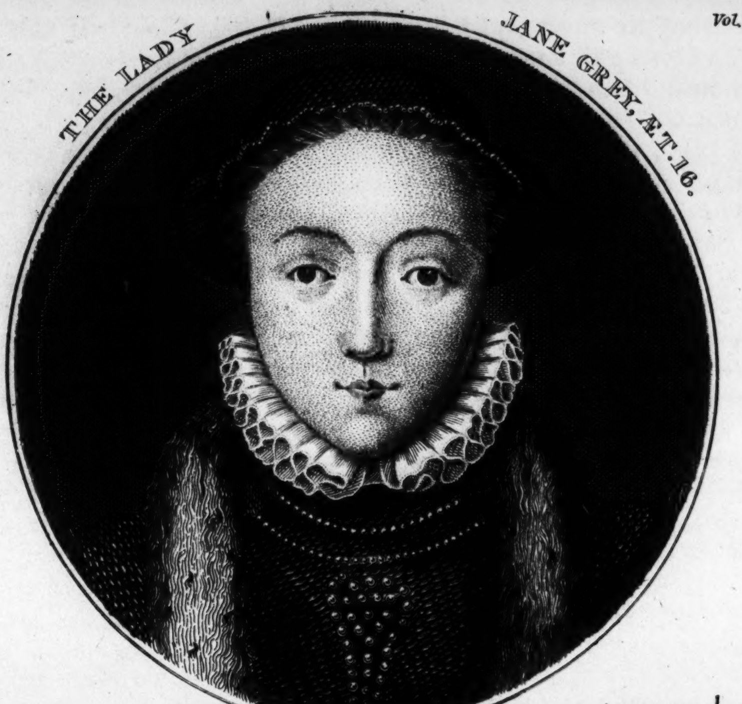
[2] An excellent prayer, by this princeſs, may be ſeen in Fox's Acts and Monuments, vol. III. p. 29.

[3] After theſe words, Holinſhed adds, "My offenſe againſt the queene's highnes was onelie in conſent to the device of other, which now is deemed treaſon; but it was never of my ſeeking, but by counſell of thoſe who ſhould ſeeme to have further underſtanding of things than I, which knew little of the law, and much leſſe of the titles to the crowne."

[4] Theſe curious particulars are extracted from a ſcarce tract, not noticed either by Ames or Herbert, intituled, "The Ende of the Lady Jane Dudley, daughter to the Duke of Suffolk, upon the Scaffolde, at the Houre of her Death."



Vol. III. Pl. LXXXIX. p. 673.



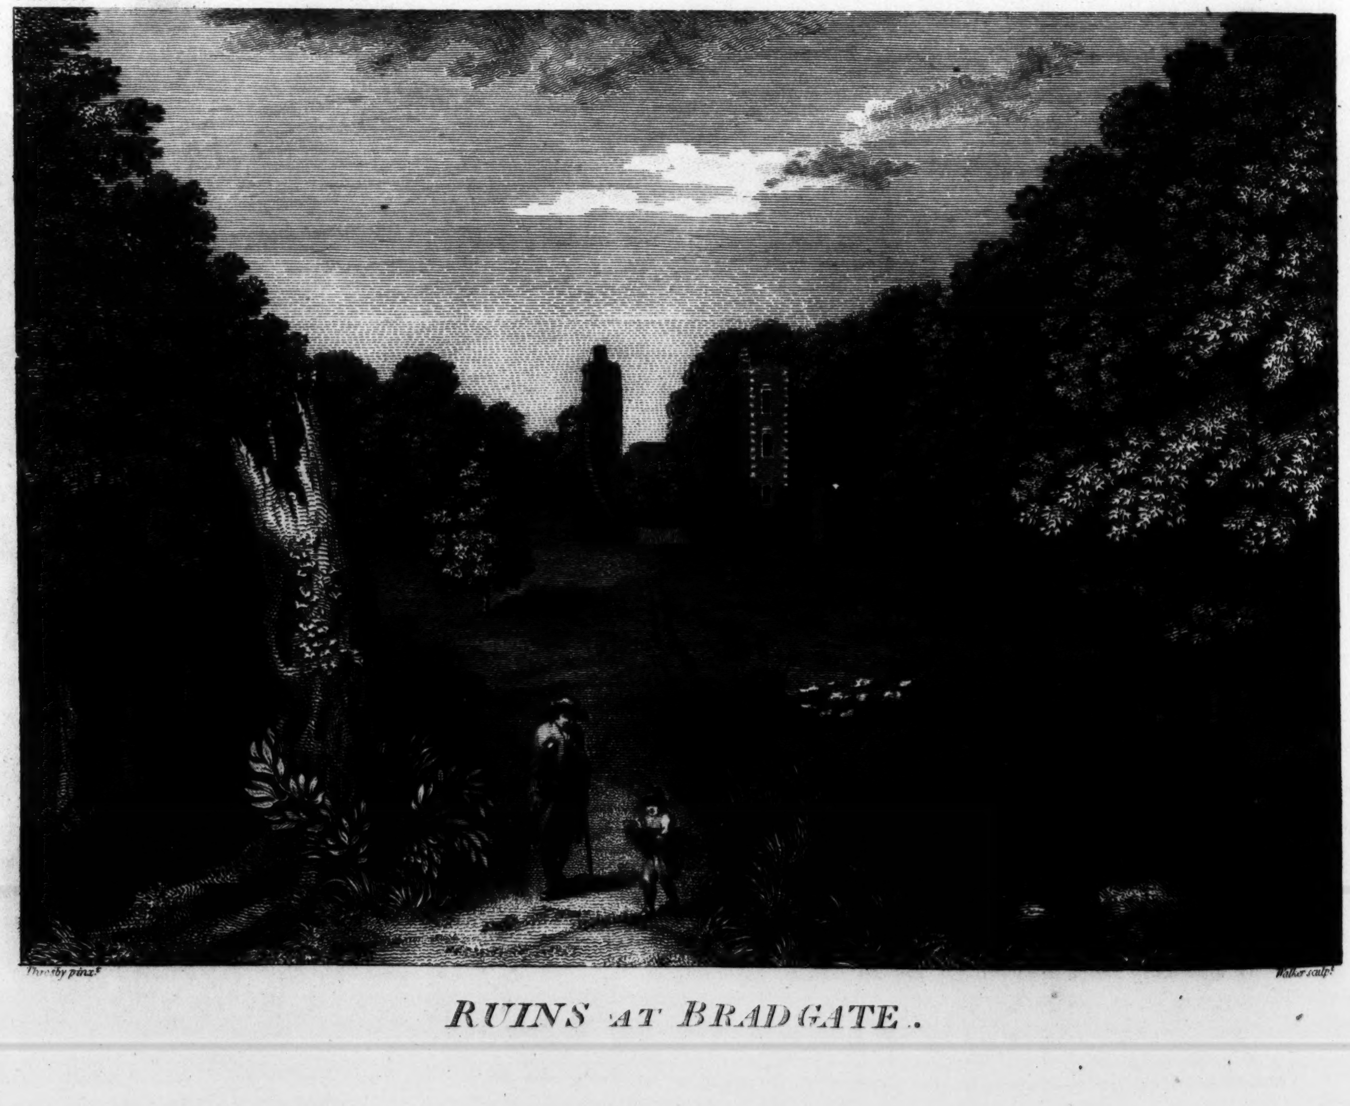
THE LADY JANE GREY, ÆT. 16.

your most humble son [illegible]
[illegible] Dudley

Copied from Vertue, by J. Basire.

youre graces humble daughter
Jane Duddley

Pl. IV.



Throsby pinx.t Walker sculp.t

RUINS AT BRADGATE.

"Deo juvante, nil nocet livor malus,
Et non juvante, nil juvat labor gravis.
Poſt tenebras ſpero lucem [1]."

"Of the lady Jane," ſays Mr. Burton in MS. "was this epitaph made by Lawrence Humphrey, D. D.

"Jana jacet ſævo non æquæ vulnere mortis,
Nobilis ingenio, ſanguine, martyrio.
Ingenium Latiis ornavit fœmina Muſis,
Fœmina virgineo tota dicata choro.
Sanguine clara fuit, regali ſtirpe creata,
Ipſaque Reginæ nobilitata throno:
Bis Graia eſt, pulchrè Graiis nutrita Camœnis,
Et priſco Graiûm ſanguine creta ducum.
Bis Martyr, ſacræ fidei veriſſima teſtis;
Atque vacans regni crimine, Jana jacet."

See a portrait of this illuſtrious Princeſs, Plate LXXXIX.

Of Katharine Grey, the ſecond daughter, Dr. Fuller ſays, "'Tis pity to part the ſiſters, that their memories may mutually condole and comfort one another. She was born in the ſame place, and (when her father was in heighth) married to Henry lord Herbert, ſon and heir to the earl of Pembroke; but the politic old earl, perceiving the caſe altered, and what was the high way to honour, turned into the ready road to ruin, got pardon from queen Mary, and brake the marriage quite off. This Heraclita, or Lady of Lamentation, thus repudiated, was ſeldom ſeen with dry eyes for ſome years together, ſighing out her ſorrowful condition; ſo that though the roſes in her cheeks looked very wan and pale, it was not for want of watering. Afterward Edward Seymour earl of Hertford married her privately without the queen's licence, and concealed it till her pregnancy diſcovered it. Indeed our Engliſh Proverb, 'It is good to be near a-kin to land,' holdeth in private patrimonies, not titles to crowns, where ſuch alliance hath created to many much moleſtation. Queen Elizabeth beheld her with a jealous eye, unwilling ſhe ſhould match either foreign prince or Engliſh peer, but follow the pattern ſhe ſet her of conſtant virginity. For their preſumption this earl was fined £15,000. impriſoned with his lady in the Tower, and ſeverely forbidden her company; but love and money will find or force a paſſage. By bribing the keeper he bought (what was his own) his wife's embraces, and had by her a ſurviving ſon, Edward [2], anceſtor to the duke of Somerſet. She died Jan. 26, 1567, a priſoner in the Tower, after nine years durance therein.

"Mary Grey, the youngeſt daughter, frighted with the infelicity of her two elder ſiſters, Jane and Katharine, forgot her honour to remember her ſafety, and married one whom ſhe could love, and none need fear; Martin Keys [3], of Kent, eſq. who was ſerjeant-porter to queen Elizabeth, and died, without iſſue, April 20, 1578."

On the 17th of February 1553-4, "the duke of Suffolk was arraigned at Weſtminſter, and there condemned to die by his peeres, the earle of Arundell being that daie chiefe judge. Where ſome have written that he ſhould, at his laſt going downe into the countrie, make proclamation in his daughter's name, that is not ſo: for, whereas he ſtood by in Leiceſter, when, at his commandement, the proclamation was there made againſt the queene's marriage with the prince of Spaine, &c. major Damport, then major of that towne, ſaid to him, 'My lord, I truſt your grace meaneth no hurt to the queene's majeſtie.' 'No,' ſaith he, 'maſter major' (laieng his hand on his ſword), 'he that would hir anie hurt, I would this ſword were through his hart; for ſhe is the mercifulleſt prince, as I have trulie found hir, that ever reigned; in whoſe defenſe I am and will be readie to die at hir foot." On the 21ſt, "the lord Thomas Graie, that had beene taken in Wales, was brought through London to the Tower, by a number of horſſemen;" and on the 24th, "about nine of the clocke, the duke of Suffolke was brought foorth of the Tower unto the ſcaffold on Tower-hill; and, in his comming thither, there accompanied him doctor Weſton as his ghoſtly-father; notwithſtanding (as it ſhould ſeeme) againſt the will of the ſaid duke. For, when the duke went up the ſcaffold, the ſaid Weſton, being on his left hand, preſſed to go up with him. The duke with his hand put him downe againe off the ſtaires; and Weſton, taking hold of the duke, forced him downe likewiſe; and as they aſcended the ſecond time, the duke againe put him downe. Then Weſton ſaid, that it was the queene's pleaſure he ſhould ſo doo: wherewith the duke, caſting his hands abrode, aſcended up the ſcaffold, and pauſed a prettie while after, and then he ſaid, 'Maiſters, I have offended the queene and hir lawes, and thereby am juſtlie condemned to die, and am willing to die, deſiring all men to be obedient; and I praie God that this my death maie be an example to all men: beſeeching you all to beare mee witneſſe that I die in the faith of Chriſt, truſting to be ſaved by his bloud onelie (and by none other trumperie); the which died for me, and for all them that doo trulie repent, and ſtedfaſtlie truſt in him. And I do repent, deſiring you all to pray to God for me, that when ye ſee my breath depart from me, you will praie to God that he maie receive my ſoule.' And then he deſired all men to forgive him, ſaieng that the queene had forgiven him. Then maiſter Weſton declared with a lowd voice, 'that the queene's majeſtie had forgiven him.' Then divers of the ſtanders-by ſaid, with audible voice, 'Such forgivenes God ſend thee,' meaning doctor Weſton. Then the duke kneeled upon his knees, and ſaid the Pſalm, Miſerere mei Deus, unto the end, holding up his hands, and looking up to heaven. And when he had ended the Pſalme, he ſaid, In manus tuas, Domine, commendo ſpiritum meum. Then he aroſe and ſtood up, and delivered his cap and ſcarffe to the executioner; and therewith the executioner kneeled downe, and aſked the duke forgiveneſſe; and the duke ſaid, 'God forgive thee, and I doo: and when thou dooſt thine office, I praie thee doo it quicklie, and God have mercie to thee.' Then ſtood there a man and ſaid, 'My lord, how ſhall I doo for the monie that you doo owe me?' And the duke ſaid, 'Alas, good fellow, 'I praie thee trouble me not now, but go thy waie to my officers.' Then he knit a kercher about his face, and kneeled downe and ſaid, Our Father, which art in heaven, &c. unto the end: and then he ſaid, Chriſt, have mercie upon me, and laid downe his head on the blocke; and the executioner tooke the axe, and, at the firſt chop, ſtroke off his head, and held it up to the people, according to the common cuſtome of execution. Such was the end of this duke of Suffolke, a man of high nobilitie by birth, and of nature to his friend gentle and courteous; more eaſie indeed to be led than was thought expedient; of ſtomach nevertheleſſe ſtout and hardie; haſtie and ſoone kindled, but pacified ſtreight againe, and ſorie if in his heat aught had paſſed him otherwiſe than reaſon might ſeeme to beare; upright and plaine in his privat dealings, no diſſembler, but well able to bear injuries, but yet forgiving and forgetting the ſame, if the partie would ſeeme but to acknowledge his fault, and ſeeke reconcilement. Bountifull he was, and verie liberall; ſomewhat learned himſelfe, and a great favourer of thoſe that were learned, ſo that to manie he ſhewed himſelfe a verie Mæcenas; as free from covetouſneſſe, as voide of pride and diſdainefull hautineſſe of mind, more regarding plaine-meaning men, than clawbacke flatterers. And this virtue he had, he could patientlie beare his faults told him by thoſe whome he had in credit for their wiſdome and faithfull meaning toward him, although ſometime he had the hap to reforme himſelfe thereafter. Concerning his laſt offenſe for the which he died, it is to be ſuppoſed, he rather tooke in hand that unlawfull enterpriſe through other perſuaſions, than of his owne motion for any malitious ambition in himſelf [4]."

---

[1] Holinſhed, vol. III. pp. 1099, 1100. To the ſame purport alſo ſee Stowe's Chronicle, p. 622.

[2] This Edward died in his father's life-time in Auguſt 1618; and was buried in St. Bride's, London. His eldeſt ſon, Edward, being alſo dead, ſir William Seymour, knt. on the death of the grand-father in 1621, became earl of Hertford; in 1621 was raiſed to the title of marquis and Hertford; and in 1660 was created duke of Somerſet.

[3] Some relation, probably, of Richard Keys, of Folkſtone, eſq. who had from Henry VIII. in the 29th year of his reign, a leaſe of the houſe and ſite of St. Radegund's monaſtery. Haſted, vol. III. p. 362.

[4] Holinſhed, vol. III. p. 1096.

Frances ducheſs of Suffolk became afterwards wife of Adrian Stokes, eſq. (who in her right was poſſeſſed of Beaumanor).

On the 28th of April, " the lord Thomas Greie was beheaded at the Tower-hill; a proper gentleman, and one that had ſerved right valiantlie both in France and Scotland in the daies of the late kings Henry and Edward [1]."

The lord John Grey (who, ſoon after his being firſt apprehended, had been arraigned, Feb. 20, and found guilty) was on the 10th of June brought to the King's bench at Weſtminſter, where his condemnation paſſed; but yet, through the painful travail and diligent ſuit of the lady Mary Grey his wife (who, as a ſiſter of Anthony viſcount Montacute, had peculiar intereſt with the then ruling powers) his pardon was obtained.

Oct. 30, 1554, he was delivered out of the Tower [2]; and, as a further mark of the queen's benevolence, he obtained, in that and the following year, for himſelf and the lady Mary his wife, a grant of the herbage of Bardon park, &c. and two other conſiderable grants of land in various parts of the kingdom [3].

On New-year's day 1558-9, the ducheſs of Suffolk [4] preſented to queen Elizabeth " oone faire cuſhion, all over richley embrauderid and ſett with pearles, and oone booke, coverid with purple vellat garniſhed and claſped with ſilver and gilt, of Eccleſiaſtes (the cuſhon delivered to David Vincent, keeper of the ſtanding guarderobe at Hampton courte; the booke with the quene)." The lord John Grey alſo preſented a cup of mother of pearl, garniſhed with ſilver and gilt; and the lady Anne Grey, in a purſe of red ſilk and gold knit, in gold and ſilver, £56. In return, the ducheſs received a gilt cup with a cover, 30¼ ounces; the lord John Grey, a gilt bowl, 35 ounces; and the lady Anne Grey, a gilt cruſe, 10¼ di. ounces.

In a few months after (April 4, 1559) the lord John Grey had a more ſubſtantial proof of the royal favour; a grant of the ſite of a capital meſſuage called Pergore, alias Pergoe [5], &c. in Eſſex, with Pigges grange; and a park; which was part of the antient and royal manor of Havering at Bowre, and ſeems to have always been the houſe of a queen conſort and her jointure [6].

Frances ducheſs of Suffolk died Nov. 21, 1559; and was buried in Weſtminſter Abbey [7]; and, after her death, we find the following return to an inquiſition:

" Maneria, terre, & tenementa, de quibus Henricus Grey dux Suffolk ſeiſitus fuit in com' Leic', anno 1553; ex Inquiſitione facta 2 Elizabethe, per Nicholaum Beaumont, Georgium Turpin, & Thomam Farnham, virtute commiſſionis.

Bradgate parke [8].

Groby maner', cum membris.
- Newtowne Linford.
- Ratby.
- Swithland.
- Anſtye.
- Cropiſton.

Whitwick man', cum membris.
- Huglescote.
- Donington.
- Bocheſton.
- Newtowne Unthanke.
- Ratby.
- Staunton ſubter Bardon.
- Markefeilde.
- Bardon parke.

Loughborough.

Cherley, Ulleſcroft } prioratʼ.

Whittington, Horſpoole } grange.

Shepeſhead manerium.

Broughton Aſtley man'

Higham manerium.

Glen Magna manerium.

Lutterworth manerium.

Beaumanor manerium, cum membris.
- Mountſorell.
- Quorndon.
- Woodthorpe.
- Woodhouſe.

Willoughby Waterles manerium [9].

The lord John Grey [10], on the death of his ſecond brother lord Thomas in April 1554 (lord Leonard the third brother being then alſo dead) became the head of the family; and appears to have been ſoon after a favourite at Court; for, in 1556-7, among the New-year's gifts preſented to queen Mary, we find, " By the lord John Grey ſix handkerchiefs wrought with gold and ſilver; by the lady Grey, the lord John Grey's wife, two pair of working gloves of ſilk, knit; by the lady Anne Grey, in a ſilver purſe, three old royals; and by the lady Grey of the Moate, a ſacrament cloth, fringed and taſſelled richly with gold and pearls." In return was given, " to the lord John Grey, a gilt cruſe 12¾ ounces; to lady Grey his wife another, 18¾ ounces; to lady Anne Grey another, 13¾ ounces; and to lady Grey of the Moate another, 10¼ ounces."

On New-year's day 1561-2, the lord John Grey preſented to the queen " a haunce pott of allablaſter, garniſhed with ſilver gilt;" and received in return a gilt cup and cover, of 26¼ ounces. After this, being involved in a ſuſpicion of being connected with John Hales in the publication of an obnoxious pamphlet, he was ſome time kept in confinement at the Court; which he did not long ſurvive. His will bears date 17 Nov. 1564; and he died on the 19th [11], as appears from a tomb in the chapel of the manſion-houſe at Pirgo; on which was a knight kneeling, with four ſons, his lady kneeling with four daughters, and many coats and quarterings; and bearing on the verge this inſcription:

" Here under lyeth buried the lorde John Grey, knyght, [fourth ſon of] the lorde Thomas Grey marques Dorcet, who dyed the xix daye of November 1564; and dame Mary his wyfe, daughter of ſir Anthony Browne, knyght of the Garter, m^{r} of the horſe, and cou'ſeler to kynge Henry ye VIII.
Dame Mary dyed

Three of the ſons and two daughters died young. The ſurvivors were, ſir Henry his ſucceſſor, then 17 years old; Margaret, married to ſir Henry Capel, of Hadham, knt.; and Frances, married to ſir William Cook, of Gidea Hall, Eſſex, knt.

On New-year's day 1577-8, the ducheſs of Suffolk [12] gave " a feyer cuſhyn of purple vellat, very feyerly embrawdered of the ſtory of Truth . . . . ſet with garnetts and ſede perle, the backſyde purple ſatten frynged, and taſſells of Venice gold and ſylke (delivered to Richard Tod, keeper of the wardrobe);" and received in return a double bowl of ſilver and gilt, 39¾ di. ounces. The lady Mary Grey alſo gave two pair of ſweet gloves, with four dozen buttons of gold, on every one a ſeed pearl; and received a cup with a cover, 18 ounces.

Sir Henry Grey, who had the advantage of being ſome time a pupil to Eraſmus [13], married Anne daughter to William lord Windſor of Bradenham; by whom he had four ſons[1] and two daughters; and continued to reſide at Pirgo till the beginning of the reign of James I; when, being already (by failure of iſſue to the daughters of his uncle Henry Grey duke of Suffolk) lord Bonvile and Harrington by deſcent, he was created baron of Groby, by letters patent July 21, 1603.

---

[1] Holinſhed, vol. III. p. 1117.

[2] Ibid. p. 1121.

[3] 5 Pars Original. 1 & 2 Phil. & Mary, Rot. 84; 1 Pars Original. 2 & 3 Phil. & Mary, Rot. 110; & 2 Pars Original. ejuſdem anni, Rot. 66.

[4] Catharine, daughter and heireſs of William lord Willoughby of Ereſby, fourth wife (and widow) of Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk. She was afterwards re-married to Thomas Bertie, eſq. of Berſted in Kent; and by him was mother to Peregrine, ſo called from being born in a foreign country; who, after the death of his mother, Sept. 19, 1580, was ſummoned to parliament as lord Willoughby of Ereſby. A very intereſting account of the difficulties and adventures of the ducheſs and her ſecond huſband, during the reign of queen Mary, may be ſeen in Dugdale's Baronage, vol. II. p. 408; by which it appears that to this lady, and not to Frances, the anecdote of biſhop Gardner and the church porch (ſee vol. III. p. 144.) has reference. It is extraordinary, that Dugdale ſhould ſpell this Bartre and Bertre. Philipot (Survey of Kent) derives the name of Berſted from the family ſettled there in the Saxon times; q. d. Bertie ſtad. Haſted, vol. II. p. 488. Collins's Peerage, vol. II. p. 1.

[5] The duke of Suffolk never had Pirgo, as Dr. Knight miſapprehended.

[6] Joan of Navarre, widow of Henry IV. died here 1437. Stowe's Annals, p. 376.

[7] See her epitaph, under Beaumanor, p. 145.

[8] Mr. Wyrley, 1590, ſays, " Bradgate is a fair houſe near unto Newton, with a park, belonging to the late duke of Suffolk, who in this county was a man of great poſſeſſions."

[9] From the MS. of Mr. Burton.

[10] See p. 581; where for " April 12, 1554," read " Feb. 12, 1553-4;" and, a few lines lower, for " 1553-4," read " 1552-3."

[11] Strype's Annals, vol. I. p. 411; and ſee before, p. 583. note 9.—The inquiſition taken at Stratford, 7 Feb. 7 Eliz. ſtates that he died 19 Nov. 7 Eliz. ſeiſed of the manor of Pirgo, &c. worth £10. held of the king in capite by the 40th part of a knight's fee; and £20. 8*s*. 8*d*. of rent, entailed; the remainder in the crown. Cole's Eſcheats, vol. VII. (Harl. MSS. 411.) p. 56.

[12] Catharine; ſee note 4.

[13] Knight's Life of Eraſmus, p. 273.

Mr. Camden, ſpeaking of Groby, calls it "opimum & amplum hæredium, ſive ut noſtri vocant manerium, quod ab Hugone Grentiſmainill, quem magnis proventibus ditaverat Gulielmus primus, per Leiceſtrenſes comites, & Quincios, ad Ferrariorum familiam devenit; e quâ domini Ferrarii de Groby baronum honore diu floruerint, demumque relictâ unicâ filiâ Iſabellâ in Greiorum nomen matrimonio intulit; à quo rurſus proſcriptione in patrimonium regium tandem recedit. Sed, dum hæc reviſimus, Jacobus dominus & rex noſter potentiſſimus in hunc avitum honorem clariſſimum equitem Henricum Grey reſtituit, cùm ante inaugurationem illum baronem Grey de Groby creaverit[2]."

This Henry lord Grey of Groby, having ſold his property in Eſſex[3], fixed his abode in the family manſion at Bradgate. His lady died in 1605, and was buried at Broughton Aſtley, as appears by the following entry in the Regiſter of that pariſh:

"1605. Nobilis domina Anna Graia, uxor honorabilis domini Henrici Gray baronis de Grobie, ſepulta fuit in capellâ ſeptentrionali noſtræ eccleſiæ, 28° die Junii."

On New-year's day 1605-6, the lord Grey of Groby preſented to king James £10. in gold; and received in return 10½ ounces of gilt plate.

His eldeſt ſon, ſir John Grey, married Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Nevil lord Abergavenny; by whom he had two ſons; Henry, who afterwards ſucceeded his grand-father; and Philip. He died in 1611[4], and was buried at Broughton Aſtley; where the following entry occurs in the Regiſter:

"Sir John Gray, knight, ſon and heir to the lord Gray baron of Grobye, was buried in the chappel of this church, the ſeventh day of October; and his bodye lyeth upon the North ſyde of the lady Anne Gray his mother, who was ſix yeares ſithence and upward buryed in the ſame place or chappell."

The following quarterings of the arms of ſir John Grey of Bradgate and Groby are taken from the Harleian Collection[5]:

1. Barry of ſix, Argent and Azure, in chief three torteauxes, and a label of three points Ermine; Grey.
2. Azure, three cinquefoils Or; Bardolph.
3. Argent, a chief dancetté Azure; Glanvile.
4. Azure, three chevrons interlaced Or; Fitzhugh.
5. Or, three creſcents Gules, on each a mullet Argent; Lunechamp.
6. Argent, a maunch Sable; Haſtings.
7. Or, three piles in points Gules; David earl of Huntingdon.
8. Azure, three garbs Or; Blondeville earl of Cheſter.
9. Azure, a wolf's head eraſed Argent; Lupus earl of Cheſter.
10. Gules, three leopards' faces reverſed, jeſſant of fleurs de lis Or; Cantelupe.
11. Barry of ſix Vaire, Gules and Ermine, and Argent; Bruiz.
12. Gules, two bends Or and Argent; Milo earl of Hereford.
13. Gules, two bends wavy Or; Brewer.
14. Per pale Or and Vert, a lion rampant Gules; Marſhall.
15. Argent, on a chief Azure, three croſſes patée fitché Argent; Strongbow.
16. Sable, three garbs Argent; Macmurgh.
17. Barry of ten, Argent and Azure, an orle of martlets Gules; Valence.
18. Or, three eſcutcheons Vaire, charged with two bars Gules; Montchenſy.
19. Azure, a cinquefoil Ermine; Aſtley.
20. Gules, ſeven maſcles voided and conjoined Or; Ferrers of Groby.
21. Gules, a cinquefoil Ermine; Beaumont earl of Leiceſter.
22. Gules, a pale Or; Grenteſmainell.
23. Azure, a lion rampant Argent crowned Or; Alan earl of Galloway.
24. Sable, ſix mullets Argent, round pierced Gules; Bonvile.
25. Sable, a fret Argent; Harrington.

Creſt. On a wreath, an unicorn erect Ermine, armed, creſted, and hoofed, Or; a full ſun behind it, whoſe rays are reſplendent all round him, proper.

I have now before me the original of the following friendly letter from Henry lord Grey to his neighbour ſir William Herrick.

"Bradgate, April 25, 1614. Good Sir William; Underſtanding that you are purpoſed to return towardes London towardes the latter end of this week; which yf you doe, I would entreat you to pay 50*l*. for mee att London, betweene this and the 5th of Maye next; and you ſhall receive ytt here in the countrey preſentlie; or att London ſo ſoone as poſſible I can gett it returned up. And in ſo doynge I ſhall think you doe a kinde pleaſure, which I ſhalbee readye to requite you, the like occaſion offred. I hope to ſee you at Bradgatt before your returne, where you ſhalbe welcome, yf yt pleaſe you to come. Soe I reſt your loveing frend, HENRY GREYE."

His lordſhip died on the 26th of July following;

---

[1] Of the ſons honourable mention is made by Thomas Newton, the poet of Cheſhire, who inſcribed "Ad eximiæ ſpei pueros Joamem, Henricum, Ambroſium, Georgium, ſplendidiſſimi viri domini Henrici Graii equitis aurati Pyrgoienſis filios," his "Illuſtrium aliquot virorum encomia Lond. 1559," 4to. Knight, ubi ſupra. Salmon's Eſſex, p. 241.

[2] Britannia, ed. 1607, p. 388.

[3] Henry Lord Grey ſold the houſe at Pirgo, with its demeſne lands, to ſir Thomas (grandſon of the learned ſir John) Cheke, whoſe grand-daughter, relict of ſir Thomas Tipping, bart. dying in 1727-8, it came to be divided between her two daughters; Catharine, married to Thomas Archer, of Umberſlade, eſq. who was created lord Archer of Umberſlade, and died at Pirgo in 1754. In 1768 his executor, by the expreſs injunction of his will, ſold it, with about eight or ten acres, to a bricklayer at Ilford, who pulled it down in 1773. The houſe ſtood on a gentle eminence fronting the South at the top of the park, which was pleaſantly diſpoſed. It was chiefly a building of the 17th century, except the Eaſt wing and the offices. It conſiſted of a centre and two wings joined in front by a colonade, ſo as to form a kind of quadrangle. In the Eaſt wing was the chapel, a ſmall ſquare building, with a broad Eaſt window. To this adjoined a large hall, built of ſtone, with ſome antient tracery in the door-poſts; and at the end of this way was a hexagon turret for a bell. In the Weſt wing was a long gallery, with a coved ſtucco roof, in which, the vulgar tradition of the neighbourhood pretended, one of the Chekes or Archers walked himſelf to death. In a ſmall room adjoining was twice repeated the Cheke creſt, a demi-lion rampant Gules or Azure; on a cap of maintenance Azure or Gules. In an Eaſt ground-room was a wooden chimney-piece, &c. In the chapel, under the gallery at entering, were two inſcriptions; one round the verge of a ſlab, in the centre of which was a croſs flory, and on its top the buſt of a prieſt, for "Sir Water de Bounſtede channine;" the other for "Anne, wife of George Lewekin, clerk of the ſtable to king Henry VIII. died 13 June, 1513." Theſe braſſes were preſerved by the late George Scott, of Wolſton-hall, Chingford, eſq.; but what became of them after his death is not known. On the North ſide of the communion table was the altar-tomb of the Grey family above-mentioned, ſtripped of its braſſes, and only four rondeaux remaining, with the creſt of Grey. Out of his mouth, Goddis wrouthe is pacyfide. Out of her's, Throughe Chriſt crucified. Over the ſons, Thomas, John, Edward, Henry. Over the daughters, Fraunci, Elizabeth, Anne, Margaret. Over him the ſame eight quarterings of Grey, which are on the ſeal of the Peculiar of Groby, engraved in Plate XCI. Over her, in a lozenge, 14 quarterings. 1. On a bend cottized a lion rampant. 2. A fret, quartering a lion rampant. 3. A ſaltire under a file of three. 4. as 2. 5. as 1. 6. A ſpread eagle. 7. as 3. 8. Three lions paſſant guardant. 9. A ſaltire engrailed. 10. A croſs engrailed. 11. In a canton a roſe. 12. as 9. 13. A lion rampant; Q. Marſhall. 14. A feſs. Under all, the laſt of theſe two coats quartered by the firſt. The engraving of this plate was given to Dr. Knight by Dr. R. Bridges, vicar of South Weald, near the chapel where this monument was; and the original was afterwards preſented to Dr. Morell for the Society of Antiquaries, but never appears to have reached them. R. G.

[4] See a ſlight mention of his illneſs, in a letter from the counteſs of Huntingdon, p. 592.

[5] Harl. MSS. 1113.

and was buried at Bradgate; where his funeral, however, was not ſolemnized till the 7th of November[1].

He was ſucceeded by his eldeſt grandſon Henry, who married Anne daughter and coheir of William Cecil earl of Exeter, in whole right he became poſſeſſed of the caſtle, borough, and manor of Stamford; whence he took the title of the earldom with which he was honoured, March 26, 1628; and in 1629 obtained from king Charles I. a grant, to himſelf and Daniel Britton, of certain lands in Charnwood foreſt, adjoining to his park of Bradgate[2]; in which delightful retirement he continued to enjoy the comforts of domeſtic felicity, till the fatal diſturbances of the laſt century called forth his exertions in far different ſcenes. At an early period of the diſpute between the King and the Parliament, the earl of Stamford, having taken a decided part, was recommended by the Commons, May 6, 1641, to be governor of the Iſle of Jerſey[3].

March 5, 1641-2, he was appointed lord-lieutenant of Leiceſterſhire, the militia of that county having been previouſly placed under his immediate care[4]; and on the 5th of July, the following order occurs: "Whereas Henry earl of Stamford was, by ordinance of both Houſes of Parliament, appointed lord-lieutenant of the county of Leiceſter; and, by the order of both the ſaid Houſes, the magazine of the ſaid county was delivered into his hands, to be removed or diſpoſed of as he ſhould think fit, for the ſafety and defence of his Majeſty and the country: in obedience whereunto, the ſaid earl did take the ſaid magazine, and did place a great part thereof at his houſe at Bradgate, under ſafe guard; and the reſidue thereof at a place in the Newark, near the town of Leiceſter: for the doing whereof, the ſaid earl, and alſo William Sherman, William Stanley, John Norris, and William Rayner, upon pretence of being aſſiſtants to the ſaid earl, and all other his adherents, were, without all colour of law, and againſt the right and liberty of the ſubject, proclaimed traitors; which, as concerning the ſaid earl being a member of the Houſe of Peers, is a high breach of privilege of Parliament: Be it therefore declared, by the ſaid Lords and Commons, that the ſaid earl, William Sherman, William Stanley, John Norris, William Rayner, nor any other of the perſons which were aſſiſting to the ſaid earl in the premiſes, have done any thing therein but according to their duties, and in obedience to the commands of both Houſes of Parliament; and that therefore the ſaid earl, and all other the ſaid perſons his aſſiſtants, and every of them, ſhall and ought to be protected by the power and authority of both Houſes of Parliament[5]." July 22, the king went from Nottingham to Leiceſter, where he was received with great expreſſions of duty and loyalty, by the appearance of the trained bands and full acclamations of the people. The earl of Stamford and his aſſiſtants had quitted Leiceſter, on their road to Northampton, before his majeſty's entrance; and had left the magazine of the county in a little ſtore-houſe at the end of the town, guarded by ſome inferior officers, whom they had brought down to train and exerciſe the militia, and other zealous and devoted men of the county, in all to the number of 25, who had barricadoed the door of the houſe, and profeſſed to keep it againſt all demanders, having proviſions within it of all ſorts. This circumſtance the king was unwilling to notice; yet it was an act of too great inſolence to be ſuffered. At length the gentlemen of the county, finding that the king would not leave the town till the nuiſance was removed, ſo prevailed, that as his majeſty was contented to paſs it over, ſo they within the houſe, on aſſurance of ſafety, and liberty to go whither they would, removed in the night. Some of the king's ſervants, hearing that the earl of Stamford and others of the militia had newly left the town, had of themſelves, coming thither before the king, galloped after them, intending to have apprehended them; and, though the earl was too fleet for them, had, in the way, overtaken Dr. Baſtwick, a man well known, and who had been one of his lordſhip's principal officers. Him they brought back, and committed to Leiceſter gaol; whence he was for more ſafety removed to Nottingham, and afterwards to York[6]."

In May 1642, the earl of Stamford marched with a ſtrong force into Cornwall; where, on the 16th, his army received a ſevere check from the king's forces at Stratton. His lordſhip next repaired to Exeter, where he had a ſtrong garriſon under his care; and placed the city of Glouceſter under the command of Maſſey, his lieutenant-general. On the 4th of September, the city of Exeter was delivered up to prince Maurice on articles[7]; and in the next month, the Mercurius Ruſticus[8] exhibits a long detail of the earl's ſending captain Kirle to the vicar of Goodrich in Herefordſhire, grand-father of Dean Swift, and who was ſuppoſed to have been plundered oftener than any other perſon during the civil war[9]. For three letters of his lordſhip from Hereford, Oct. 29, Nov. 7. and 12, (which are entered on the Journals[10]) he received the thanks of both Houſes; and on the 16th of December was appointed, by the lord general, commander in chief of all South Wales, and of the counties of Glouceſter, Worceſter, Hereford, and Cheſter. His eldeſt ſon, Thomas lord Grey of Groby, was at the ſame time nominated lord-general of the counties of Leiceſter, Nottingham, Derby, Rutland, and Lincoln; and was particularly active in the ſervice[11]; though at the ſame time one of the earl's younger ſons was not leſs zealous in the cauſe of his Royal Maſter[12].

It having been ſtated, Jan. 16, 1642-3, that the earl of Stamford's forces had forced their paſſage in Cornwall at Newbridge, and taken about 40 priſoners; his lordſhip was authorized to pardon ſuch gentlemen in Devonſhire and Cornwall as ſhould return to the protection and ſervice of the Parliament[13]. A letter from him to the Speaker of the Houſe of Peers, Feb. 6, ſtates, "That he was in Plymouth, but had not force enough to go abroad; that the enemy was too ſtrong as yet for him, becauſe he wanted money and arms; that there had been a treaty of peace between him and the lord Mohun, ſir Ralph Hopton, and colonel Godolphin; but they demanded the town and the fort: whereupon they broke off their treaty[14]."

In October, the earl of Stamford complained, "that he had been employed as general of the Weſtern forces for eleven months, and was colonel of a regiment of foot and a troop of horſe, without having received any money for his ſervices; that he had recruited his regiment and troop at conſiderable expence; been employed continually in hard duties and dangerous ſervice; and that his houſe at Bradgate had been plundered, his horſes and cattle driven away, and his tenants alſo ſo plundered that they were incapable of paying any rent[15]. May 9, 1644, his lordſhip requeſted "leave to travel to the Hot Bath in France, for the recovery of his health; and that he might be furniſhed with £1000. out of the remainder of the earl of Arundel's aſſeſſment for the twentieth part; and have ſome weekly allowance for his maintenance during his abode beyond the ſeas, out of the twentieth part as aforeſaid[16]." This was recommended to the Commons, the earl "having done good ſervice in the Weſt;" but, on the ſame day, a member of the Houſe of Commons was directed to bring in what information he had to give againſt the earl, concerning "the loſs of the Weſt[17]." This led to various diſcuſſions; and produced a letter from his lordſhip to the Speaker, deſiring of him the favour to repreſent his humble ſuit to the Houſe, that they would pleaſe to let him know what he was charged with; and to hear what he could ſay, and prove, for his juſtification, before any farther proceedings upon the informations ſhould be brought againſt him[1]. On the 21ſt of Auguſt the Lords reminded the Commons of the wants of the earl of Stamford, whoſe eſtate was at that time in the enemy's power[2]; and on the 25th, £1000. (which had been aſſeſſed on the lord Stanhope of Harrington) was aſſigned to him on accompt of his arrears[3].

---

[1] "This day is my lord Grey's funeral kept at Bradgate." Letter from Alderman Robert Heyrick to his brother ſir William, Nov. 7, 1614. See vol. III. p. 628.

[2] 6 Pars Original. 5 Car. Rot. 127.

[3] Journals of the Commons, vol. II. p. 137.

[4] See the Hiſtory of the Civil War in Leiceſterſhire, in the Appendix to this Volume, p. 17; and Dugdale's View, p. 101.

[5] Journals of the Commons, vol. II. p. 658.

[6] Clarendon, vol. I. p. 140.

[7] Ibid. vol. II. pp. 241, 242.

[8] P. 71. edit. 1646.

[9] Walker's Sufferings of the Clergy, p. 361.

[10] Journals of the Lords, pp. 424. 440. 444.

[11] Appendix, p. 31, 32.

[12] Ibid. p. 34.

[13] Journals of the Commons, vol. II. pp. 927. 930.

[14] Journals of the Lords, vol. V. p. 590.

[15] Ibid. vol. VI. p. 346.

[16] Ibid. p. 541.

[17] Journals of the Commons, vol. III. p. 489.

May 21, 1645, complaint was made to the Houſe of Commons, of an aſſault by the earl of Stamford upon ſir Arthur Heſilrige[4]; and on the 29th an order was made, that the counteſs of Stamford, being then at Bradgate, ſhould have the protection of the Houſe of Lords, that no ſoldiers or commanders ſhould be billeted or quartered in the houſe or park; but that ſhe ſhould be ſecured there from all diſturbance, and the Committee for Leiceſterſhire take care that the order be obſerved[5]. Dec. 10, the counteſs ſtated, that "her huſband's eſtates, in the counties of Lincoln, Rutland, Northampton, and Leiceſter, had been plundered and ſpoiled by the enemy, whereby ſhe was in great want; and requeſted ſome maintenance for herſelf and children." This was ſpecially recommended to the Houſe of Commons, in regard the earl of Stamford was one of the firſt that ſuffered, and the petitioner and her children in want[6]. The ſum of £500. a year was accordingly voted for their ſupport, out of the eſtate of ſir Henry Bedingfield[7]. Jan. 2, 1646-7, the earl of Stamford was appointed a commiſſioner into the North, to ſee due execution of the articles with the Scotch[8]; and, on a petition from his lordſhip, May 7, 1651, the arrears of £1500. a year, formerly ordered to be paid to him out of the ſequeſtered eſtates of ſir Charles Smyth, of Wotton Wawen in Warwickſhire, knight; Peter Gifford, of Chillington in Staffordſhire; and Richard Eyre, of Haſſop in Derbyſhire; were directed to be paid to him till the next Lady-day, and no longer[9].

The earl of Stamford, having long ſurvived his ſon, died Aug. 23, 1673; and was buried in the family-vault at Bradgate. Mr. Granger mentions two engraved portraits of him; one, a ſmall oval, by Hollar; the other, on horſeback, in 4to, by Stent; and ſays, there are alſo portraits of him and his counteſs (the latter by Lely[10]) at Dunham Maſſey, the ſeat of the preſent earl.

Of his ſon, Thomas lord Grey of Groby, who made ſo conſpicuous a figure in the civil war, ſome memoirs may naturally be expected. To him was intruſted by the Parliament the whole command of Leiceſterſhire, and of the aſſociated Midland counties; a ſervice of the more conſequence, as he was oppoſed to colonel Haſtings, an adverſary of conſiderable military ſkill[11]. By the lord Grey's zeal and activity, however, the town of Leiceſter[12] was garriſoned; and his exertions fully anſwered the expectation of his employers[13]. A ſpirited letter of his, concerning the aſſeſſment in Campden houſe, Feb. 28, 1642-3, may be ſeen in a future page[14]. Aug. 29, 1643, he ſhewed his attachment to the earl of Eſſex, the Parliamentarian general, by haſtening to that nobleman's rendezvous at Ayleſbury with a large body of foot belonging to the aſſociated counties, and a number of volunteers[15]; which enabled the general to reach Glouceſter in time to prevent its ſurrender; and, having ſtayed there three days, the troops returned to London, having in their march obtained a victory at Newbury over the royal army. In the thanks which were voted on this occaſion by the Houſe of Commons the lord Grey ſtands the foremoſt[16]. In July 1644, his lordſhip and ſir John Gell united their forces to reduce his majeſty's garriſon at Wilney-ferry in Derbyſhire, which had been very ſucceſsful in their ſallies; and they ſucceeded by a ſtratagem[17]. His lordſhip and his friend then obtained Wingfield and Shelford manors in the ſame county, whoſe manſions were garriſoned for the king; for which ſervice the Parliament ordered a letter of thanks. In September that year ſome miſunderſtanding which had ariſen, between the lord Grey's officers and the aſſociation for the county of Leiceſter, called forth the interference of the Parliament[18]; and in November, the lord Grey being abſent probably in London, a petition was preſented to the Parliament, requeſting that he might be ſent down to them, being then commander in chief; which was occaſioned by their fear of his Majeſty, who aimed at gaining Leiceſter; and the common danger made them ſuſpend all altercation, to withſtand the royal arms. Their fears were not groundleſs; for the place was taken by ſtorm by the King, who entered the town June 1, 1645[19]. On the 7th of that month, money was voted to the lord Grey by the Houſe of Commons, in part of his arrears; and in a few days after the Parliament forces recovered Leiceſter. We hear little more of this noble lord till 1648, when, without waiting for the authority of Parliament, he raiſed, with captain Temple, a conſiderable body of troops in Leiceſterſhire, which was afterwards approved of by the Houſe of Commons, who directed them to command their reſpective regiments, and diſpenſed with their ſervice in the Houſe[20]. A letter from lord Grey is here copied:

"Sir, being at my father's at Bradgate in this county, upon Sunday the 4th inſtant, the Committee ſent me word, that there was a party of cavaliers gathered into a body about Stamford; and deſired my preſent advice and aſſiſtance. I immediately repaired to them, and delivered a ſquadron of horſe to colonel Waite to go into Rutland; and we preſently ſent warrants to ſome few towns that we conceived to be the beſt affected. They coming in freely upon Monday in the evening, being there met, earneſtly deſired me to take the command upon me, and nominated two other gentlemen (Mr. Beaumont and colonel Hacker) to have command, and go along with me. I told them, when my country was in danger, I ſhould be ready to ſtand in the gap, but I had no authority. But, their deſires being earneſt, and leſt the ſervice ſhould be neglected, I preſumed rather to caſt myſelf upon you for your approbation, than to let my country be endangered for want of my undertaking the buſineſs. I likewiſe, at the deſire of the Committee, deſired the mayor of Leiceſter to call a hall; and there acquainted them with the riſing of the Cavaliers, and with the danger they were like to be in, if not prevented. They unanimouſly agreed to draw out the next day; and there appeared ſix full companies, all ready (if occaſion had been) to have ventured their lives, as they unanimouſly expreſſed. And likewiſe there was drawn up of the country to the number of 500 (whereof 300 were horſed and armed), who were all ready to have marched in this buſineſs; and expreſſed, that they hoped the rogues might have no quarter. But colonel Waite having appeaſed the buſineſs (as I doubt not but he has given you an account thereof before this time) I diſmiſſed them all home this morning; and doubt not but they, with many more, will be ready for the defence of the country, if any ſhall preſume to riſe upon the like occaſion. Having troubled you with a tedious relation, I remain, ſir, your moſt humble ſervant, THO. GREY.

Leiceſter, 7 Junii, 1648.

"To my much honoured friend William Lenthall, eſq. ſpeaker of the honourable Houſe of Commons, theis preſent."

A letter from the lord Grey and colonel-general Lambert, from Uttoxeter, relating to the taking of duke Hamilton and 3500 horſe with him, having been read in the Houſe of Commons, Aug. 28; thanks were ordered to be returned, and £1000. beſtowed on Mr. Edward Evans, his ſecretary; and, the next day, the government of Aſhby de la Zouch, was entruſted to his charge; with directions "to take care for the ſecuring and ſafe keeping duke Hamilton, a priſoner there, till farther order; to allow him two ſervants to attend him, and no more; to take care of the ſafe-keeping of the reſt of the officers and gentlemen that were priſoners; and that the other priſoners might be ſecured[1]." Mr. Noble, in ſtating this event, ſays, "The duke of Hamilton having ſurrendered upon articles, lord Grey came up, and ſhamefully took him out of the hands of Lambert, to whom his grace had ſigned the treaty, and then pretended that he was a priſoner without any ſtipulation for life or liberty; and the Parliament, to ſhew their ſanguinary diſpoſitions, in exact oppoſition to juſtice, adjudged the duke a priſoner to lord Grey, that they might have a pretence to deſtroy him; and, to effect this the better, they of the Houſe of Commons paſſed a vote of thanks to his lordſhip, for taking his grace a priſoner, and diſperſing a brigade of his horſe. And though the unfortunate duke applied to the honour of Grey to ſave him at his trial, it was to no purpoſe. His death had been decreed, as his royal maſter's, before he came to his trial, and he fell a ſacrifice to the ſhameleſs policy of the times. He mocked God by a day of thankſgiving for this victory over the Scots, and feaſted 150 of his officers for it at Leiceſter. The Scotch had begun the revolt againſt king Charles I; but in the end they paid very dear for it. His lordſhip, ſoon after this pretended ſervice, came to town, and aſſiſted at the call of ſerjeants at law; and, with others, eſpecially Henry Grey earl of Kent, was complimented with a ring, by one of the new ſerjeants, as his peculiar friend, in compliance with a very antient cuſtom[2]."

---

[1] Journals of the Commons, vol. III. p. 551. [2] Ibid. p. 601. [3] Ibid. p. 605. [4] Ibid. p. 645.

[5] Journals of the Lords, vol. VII. p. 399. [6] Ibid. vol. VIII. p. 32. [7] Journals of the Commons, vol. IV. p. 376.

[8] Journals of the Lords, vol. VIII. p. 641. [9] Journals of the Commons, vol. VI. p. 571.

[10] Mr. Granger mentions an engraved mezzotinto of "a counteſs of Stamford," by R. Tompſon, from a painting by Lely; which he ſuppoſes to be that of lady Anne Cecil. [11] See before, under Aſhby, p. 609. [12] Clarendon, vol. II. p. 113.

[13] See the Hiſtory of the Civil Wars in Leiceſterſhire, in the Appendix to this Volume, pp. 31—36.

[14] Appendix, p. 32. [15] Clarendon, vol. II. p. 265. [16] Journals of the Commons, vol. III. p. 256. [17] Appendix, p. 37.

[18] Journals of the Commons, vol. IV. p. 688; Whitlock, p. 105. [19] Appendix, pp. 40—44.

[20] Journals of the Commons, vol. V. p. 620.

Nov. 25, 1648, the lord Grey was nominated for the county of Leiceſter, to take care to bring in the aſſeſſments for the army[3]. He had always been an advocate for violent meaſures; and when colonel Thomas Pride, under the orders of the council of officers, undertook to garble the Houſe of Commons[4], Dec. 6, his lordſhip was the prime mover and agent in the tranſaction[5].

He ſat in the Painted-Chamber Jan. 1, 15, 17, 18, 20, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, and 29, and every day in Weſtminſter hall on the trial of the King; and ſigned the warrant for the execution[6].

As he had advanced conſiderable ſums, and much was owing to him in his military capacity; his diſburſements and arrears that he had preſented to the Houſe being taken into conſideration, June 25, 1649, they were referred to the committee of the army, to conſider how they might be ſatisfied; and on the 3d of July, Mr. Pury reported from the committee the expences of the lord Grey, diſburſed for the ſtate, in the late ſummer ſervice; and the reaſons of ſuch expences; viz. that, in the beginning of April 1648, the ſaid lord Grey repaired into the county of Leiceſter, where he uſed his endeavour to engage that county to the intereſt of the Parliament, making it his whole buſineſs to go into all parts thereof; to perſuade the people to an unanimous reſolution of forming themſelves into ſeveral regiments, for their own, and the defence of their neighbour counties and the whole nation; that this ſervice did occaſion a daily charge, public meetings being frequent, wherein he conſtantly kept a public table, to his very great expence; that he did conſtantly keep ten horſes extraordinary, to promote the ſervices aforeſaid; that he kept conſtant correſpondence with the armies and forces, as they ſtood then divided in the ſeveral parts of the Commonwealth; and that he continued upon the ſaid public charge from the 1ſt of April to the 30th of November 1648. Upon conſideration had of the premiſſes, the Committee were of opinion, that £1500. be reported to the Houſe for his lordſhip's expence during the ſaid ſervice, being for eight months, and for his good ſervice done within the time aforeſaid: and the ſaid £1500. or ſuch money as ſhould be allowed to his lordſhip for the ſaid ſervice, to be ſecured out of the King's lands and parks aſſigned for ſale, as ſecurity for the arrears of the army; and his lordſhip to be admitted a purchaſer accordingly[7].

Feb. 12, 1649-50, he was appointed one of the council of ſtate[8]; and, March 20, the cuſtody of Hyde Park was committed to him during the pleaſure of Parliament, the attorney-general being authorized to prepare a patent for that purpoſe[9].

July 31, 1650, it appeared, by an account preſented to Parliament, that the lord Grey (then a member of the council of ſtate) had received, from the rents of the earl of Cheſterfield's eſtates, £2929. 16*s.* 2*d.* in part of the firſt ſum of £5120. due to him from the publick; an order was made for paying the remainder[10].

A committee was named, Aug. 7, 1651, to conſider of the charges expended in his great ſervice done againſt the Scots when they laſt came, and ſervices for the publick; and how he might have ſatisfaction, and ſome mark of favour and reſpect, from the Parliament[11]; and it was voted, Dec. 8, "that Thomas lord Grey of Groby have ſettled upon him, and his heirs for ever, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, of the yearly value of £1000. in full ſatisfaction of all charges and demands, and as a mark of favour and reſpect from the Parliament to the ſaid lord Grey, for his great ſervices done to this Commonwealth; and that an act be brought in on that behalf; all which the ſaid Committee humbly leaves to the grave conſideration of the Parliament[12]."

His lordſhip was now in his meridian glory. He had got large ſums by the army; and, as one of the chief governors of the nation, gained far greater ſums, and more valuable acquiſitions. With part of the money he purchaſed, at a very eaſy rate, the largeſt portion of lord Craven's eſtate, particularly Comb abbey, worth at leaſt £3000. a year; and received a grant from his brethren of the queen's manor-houſe, park, and lands at Holdenby, where he made a great devaſtation in the woods. So far he had been truſted, courted, applauded, and gratified, chiefly by Cromwell; but, as this great man ſaw that Grey was as ambitious as himſelf, or at leaſt that he could not brook a ſuperior, he began to treat him with leſs confidence, and at length to watch him as a dangerous perſon; as inimical to thoſe great deſigns he was meditating. They probably moſt cordially hated each other: he feared Oliver, and regarded him as a revolter from the common intereſt; and the other knew that a man who had been untrue to his Sovereign could not be expected to be loyal to one whom he viewed as inferior to himſelf. Outwardly, however, they behaved with ſeeming attention to each other, whilſt each was watching for the favourable moment to ruin his enemy. Oliver dared not truſt him in London, the ſeat of government; he therefore kept him in his ſtation at Leiceſter: but, that being the central ſituation of the kingdom, and, in caſe of a revolt, a very dangerous one for a perſon of lord Grey's conſequence and turn of mind, he kept conſtant ſpies upon him; and, being ſatisfied of the truth of what he had ſuppoſed, ſent colonel Francis Hacker to ſeize his lordſhip, and convey him to Windſor. A better account of this cannot be given than what the colonel wrote to the protector, Feb. 12, 1654: "May it pleaſe your highneſs; according to your command, I have ſeized the lord Grey and captain Bodell. I have alſo, according to order, ſeized three horſes, and five caſe of piſtols, being all the arms I could find, and thoſe unfixed. My lord did inform me, that three of his beſt horſes was not yet come from Stamford, where a race was lately; but he expected them this night; and if I would ſend for them, they will be forthcoming. The lord Grey is much diſtempered with the gout, and was deſirous to know whither he was to go, which I concealed from him; and he, perceiving me not willing to declare, ſaid he was willing to ſubmit to go whither I pleaſed; but deſired to come to London. I have not acquainted him whither he is to go; but have preſumed, upon the advice and conſent of thoſe with me, in regard of his indiſpoſition of health, to let him reſt at Leiceſter, where will be three troops for his guard, until further order from his highneſs." The protector, however, did not chuſe to permit a man to remain a priſoner where he had been a governor; and therefore, notwithſtanding the ill ſtate of his health, ordered him to be brought up to Windſor caſtle, where he came the 27th of the ſame month. How long he remained in priſon, we do not learn; but, on his enlargement, he placed himſelf at the head of the fanatics called Fifth Monarchy men, in a plan to deſtroy the protector, ſeize Monk in Scotland, and erect the kingdom of Chriſt. Their meetings were held in a houſe near Shoreditch, where they had agreed to print vaſt numbers of declarations againſt the protector's government; 5000 of them were to be ſent into Leiceſterſhire, where his lordſhip's chief intereſt lay; and ſir Arthur Heſilrige, and other diſaffected perſons of various religious principles, were invited to join them. What raiſed their conſequence and made them more dangerous was, that the Spaniſh court was perſuaded that money lent to theſe Fifth Monarchy men would be better employed than if advanced to the Cavaliers, as more deſperate, and better calculated to the temper of thoſe who hated Oliver's perſon and government. Thurloe, to whom, as ſecretary, nothing was unknown, ſoon came to the information which detected all their ſchemes; but did not interrupt them till the very evening preceding the day they meant to declare themſelves; when, ſending a party of ſoldiers, they ſeized the chiefs, lord Grey, Venner, Gowley, Hopkins, Aſhton, and others, with all their apparatus ready prepared. Lord Grey was ſent to his former apartments at Windſor; and determined, if poſſible, to regain his liberty. To accompliſh this moſt deſirable event, he ſued for a habeas corpus, which the lord chief juſtice granted; but the governor of Windſor Caſtle refuſed to give obedience to it; nor did he obtain his freedom until he had given ſecurity, in the penalty of a large ſum of money, if he ever again acted againſt the government: "which he choſe," ſays Mr. Ludlow, "to do, rather than engage his parole, thereby hazarding only the loſs of ſo much money, and preſerving his honour and integrity." Happily for lord Grey, and for the noble family from which he derived his deſcent, he fell a victim to his own defeated ſchemes, which, with the gout, brought to a vaſt height by the violence of his paſſions, put a period to his exiſtence in this world in 1657. There is a very fine picture of him at Newnham Padox, the ſeat of the earl of Denbigh, whoſe anceſtor, Baſil viſcount Fielding (afterwards earl of Denbigh) enjoyed ſeveral places of profit under the Commonwealth.

---

[1] See before, p. 609; and Journals of the Commons, vol. V. pp. 688. 692.

[2] Noble's Lives of the Engliſh Regicides, vol. I. p. 266.

[3] Journals of the Commons, vol. VI. p. 87.

[4] Ibid. p. 93.

[5] On this occaſion, colonel Pride, being ſent with a ſtrong detachment to Weſtminſter, ſeized and impriſoned 41 of the members, as they were going to the houſe, and ſtopped above 160 more from going in; ſo that there were then not more than 150 that were permitted to ſit in the houſe, and theſe were moſt of them officers in the army.—Oct. 9, 1649, a petition of colonel Pride, and others well-affected to the ſtate, was preſented to the Houſe; Journals of the Commons, vol. VI. p. 304.

[6] His ſignature and ſeal, from that fatal inſtrument, are given in Plate XCI.

[7] Journals of the Commons, vol. VI. p. 248.

[8] Ibid. p. 361.

[9] Ibid. p. 382.

[10] Ibid. p. 449.

[11] Ibid. p. 618.

[12] Ibid. vol. VII. p. 53.

He married Dorothy, ſecond daughter and coheir of Edward Bourchier, fourth earl of Bath, who long ſurvived him, and married two other huſbands; Guſtavus Mackworth, eſq.; and, after his death, Charles Howden. The iſſue of Lord Grey by this lady was a ſon, Thomas, born in 1653 at Combe Abbey in Warwickſhire; and two daughters; Elizabeth, married to Henry Benſon, of Charlton in the county of Northampton, eſq.; and Anne, who married James Grove, ſerjeant-at-law, by whom ſhe had iſſue, James-Grey Grove, eſq. M. P. for Bewdley 1714.

Thomas lord Grey, who on the death of his grandfather in 1673 became the ſecond earl of Stamford, being a ſtrenuous oppoſer of Popery and arbitrary power, was one of the lords who in the firſt parliament of king James II. May 22, 1685, proteſted againſt reverſing the order for the impeachment of three lords[1] then in the Tower for the Popiſh plot; and alſo, June 5, againſt reverſing the attainder of William viſcount Stafford, beheaded for the ſaid plot[2]; which very probably drew on him the reſentment of the King; for, on the 11th of November, his lordſhip ſtated to the Houſe of Peers, by a petition, "That he had been taken into cuſtody, at his own houſe in Leiceſterſhire, by Mr. Atterbury, one of the meſſengers of his Majeſty's chamber; and, being brought to London, was, by the earl of Sunderland's warrant, committed priſoner to the Tower, for high treaſon, in conſpiring the death of the late King[3]; where he now is, and ever ſince hath remained a cloſe priſoner, and hath not had the uſe of pen, ink, or paper, except to ſign petitions in the gentleman porter's or warder's preſence; notwithſtanding all which, he takes leave to aſſert to your Lordſhips, that he is innocent of the crime laid to his charge, and, on the contrary, hath endeavoured to behave himſelf with all duty and loyalty to the King, and to his Royal Brother of glorious memory: nevertheleſs, he hears there is an indictment of high treaſon found againſt him; but where, when, or how, or upon what evidence, or for what matters, he knows not. The premiſſes conſidered; he moſt humbly prays, that your Lordſhips, according to the antient courſe of proceedings of this moſt honourable Houſe, will be pleaſed to order your petitioner to be brought before your Lordſhips in your Houſe of Parliament, there to hear the matters charged againſt him; and that thereupon ſuch further proceedings may be had, as are agreeable to juſtice, and the uſual courſe of parliamentary proceedings in caſes of the like nature[4]."

A bill of indictment was found againſt him at Hickes's Hall; the proceedings of which were returned by Certiorari into the Houſe of Peers; where he often inſiſted to know the charge againſt him, and upon what matters and evidence the ſaid bill was found; but could never learn[5], though a day was fixed for his trial. In the interim the Parliament was prorogued, Nov. 20, 1685; and the earl of Stamford, being admitted to bail, was included in the general pardon of March 10, 1685-6. His lordſhip married Elizabeth[6], daughter of ſir Daniel Harvey[7], of Combe houſe in Surrey, eſq. and continued in retirement at Bradgate (occaſionally acting in the commiſſion of the peace[8]) during the remainder of the ſhort reign of king James.

Being a zealous promoter of the Revolution, he was ſworn in 1694 of the privy council to king William; and about that period the houſe at Bradgate was purpoſely ſet on fire (according to oral tradition) by the then counteſs of Stamford. The fire began in the North-weſt tower, in which the noble earl then ſlept, and where the ends of the burnt beams are ſtill to be ſeen. Only a ſmall part of the houſe, however, was injured; there being a large reſervoir of water on that tower, ſupplied by leaden pipes acroſs the foreſt from a fine ſpring in Lea-wood, about two miles diſtant. The counteſs, with her infant daughter lady Diana, narrowly eſcaped with their lives. This lady, as appears by a print of her, engraved by Thompſon, from a painting by Lely, was a remarkably handſome woman; but, after ſo unpardonable an attempt, a ſeparation took place; and his lordſhip married, ſecondly, about 1695, Mary, daughter and coheir of Joſeph Maynard[9], eſq. On the 24th of April 1696, he was appointed lord lieutenant and cuſtos rotulorum of Derbyſhire; and in the ſummer of that year was honoured with a viſit from the Sovereign; preparatory to which, tradition ſays, a bridge was built over Anſtey-brook, for the more eaſy conducting of the royal gueſt to

---

[1] William earl of Powis, Henry lord Arundel of Wardour, and John lord Bellaſis.

[2] Journals of the Lords, vol. XIV. pp. 12. 30.

[3] On the 26th of July, the earl of Stamford, with the lords Delamere and Brandon, were committed to the Tower, on a charge of high treaſon. London Gazette, July 27, 1685.

[4] Journals of the Lords, vol. XIV. p. 77.

[5] Ibid. pp. 82, 83.

[6] Of this lady there is a mezzotinto by Becket from a painting by Wiſſing.

[7] Sir Daniel Harvey was, at the Reſtoration of king Charles II. appointed ranger of Richmond Park. Pat. 17 Aug. 12 Car. II.

[8] See a letter of his, in this capacity, to Mr. Staveley, in vol. II. p. 684.

[9] Son and heir of ſir John Maynard, knight, one of the commiſſioners of the great ſeal.

Bradgate-houſe; and a large room with a bow window at the end of it was fitted up for his reception[1]. His Majeſty was at the duke of Newcaſtle's at Welbeck, Monday Nov. 4; at the earl of Stamford's at Bradgate, Nov. 5; at the duke of Shrewſbury's at Egford, on the 6th; at Burford on the 7th; at Oxford on the 8th; at Windſor on the 9th; and returned to Kenſington on the 11th. The next year, April 28, the earl of Stamford was made chancellor of the dutchy of Lancaſter, and lord lieutenant and cuſtos rotulorum of Leiceſterſhire; and, at the funeral of queen Mary, he bore one of the banners. On the acceſſion of queen Anne, he was made a privy counſellor; and, in a work written about the year 1705, he is thus characterized: "His zeal for the publick led him from the care of his own private affairs; which he did not mend by his employment. On the queen's acceſſion to the throne, he was diſmiſſed from his employments. He doth not want ſenſe; but, by reaſon of a defect in his ſpeech, wants elocution; is a very honeſt man himſelf, but is very ſuſpicious of every body that is not of his party, for which he is very zealous; jealous of the power of the Clergy, who, he is afraid, may ſome time or other inflame our Civil Government. From a good eſtate he is become very poor, and much in debt. He is ſomething above the middle ſtature; turned of 50 years old[2]."

The earl of Stamford died, in the 67th year of his age, Jan. 31, 1719-20; being at that time lord-lieutenant of the counties of Somerſet and Devon; and was buried at Bradgate; as was his ſecond lady, who died Nov. 10, 1722. By the firſt marriage his lordſhip had two ſons and one daughter, who all died infants. By the ſecond he had one ſon, born Dec. 23, 1696; who alſo dying an infant, the family eſtates, together with the earldom of Stamford, deſcended to

Harry Grey, eldeſt ſon (by the ſecond wife) of John Grey, third ſon of Henry the firſt earl. This noble earl died in October 1739; and, by Dorothy daughter of ſir Nathan Wrighte, lord keeper of the great ſeal, left two ſurviving ſons; 1. Harry his ſucceſſor; and,

2. John Grey, eſq. who, April 6, 1754, was appointed one of the clerks comptrollers of the board of greencloth; repreſented the borough of Bridgenorth in two parliaments, 1754 and 1761, and Tregony in 1768; and was colonel of the Leiceſterſhire militia on its firſt eſtabliſhment. He married, May 26, 1748, Lucy, ſecond daughter of ſir John Danvers, of Swithland, bart.[3]; but died in 1777 without iſſue. His lady died at Bath, and was buried there.

Harry lord Grey, who ſucceeded his father as fourth earl of Stamford, had been elected knight of the ſhire for the county of Leiceſter (on the death of Ambroſe Philips, eſq.) in 1737-8. He married Mary, daughter and heir of George Booth earl of Warrington; and, dying in 1768, was buried in Enville church, where a marble monument in the South aile is thus inſcribed:

"To the memory of
Harry Grey earl of Stamford, who died May 30, 1768, aged 52.
He married Mary, daughter and ſole heir of George Booth earl of Warrington, by whom he left three ſons and one daughter.
He was a kind father,
an indulgent maſter, a warm friend;
in every relation of life truly benevolent."

George-Harry Grey, the preſent earl, was born Oct. 1, 1737, and admitted a nobleman of Queen's college, Cambridge, about 1755; his portrait being ſtill among the collection in the Lodge (where is likewiſe a full length of an earl of Huntingdon[4] in his robes, dated 1601.) His lordſhip was elected in 1761 a knight of the ſhire for the county of Stafford; and, on the 22d of September that year, at the coronation of their preſent Majeſties, was one of the ſix eldeſt ſons of peers who ſupported the King's train (at the ſame time his ſiſter lady Mary was one of the ſix earls daughters who aſſiſted the princeſs Auguſta in ſupporting the train of her Majeſty). He married, May 28, 1763, Henrietta Cavendiſhe Bentinck, ſecond daughter of William duke of Portland; by whom he has had four ſons and ſix daughters, as may be ſeen in the pedigree here annexed. He was again elected for Staffordſhire in the parliament which met in May 1768; and in the ſame month, on the death of his father, took his ſeat in the houſe of peers. He was appointed lord lieutenant and cuſtos rotulorum of the county of Cheſter, April 14, 1783; and, by patent, dated April 22, 1796, was created baron Delamere of Dunham Maſſey, and earl of Warrington. His lordſhip is alſo preſident of that truly-benevolent inſtitution, the Royal Humane Society. His principal ſeats are, Enville Hall[5] in Staffordſhire; Dunham Maſſey in Cheſhire; and Steward's Hay, a neat little houſe in the neighbourhood of Bradgate, of which an account and a view will be given hereafter under the hiſtory of Groby.

The honourable Booth Grey, brother of the preſent earl, was admitted a nobleman of Queen's college, Cambridge, in May 1758; and ſerved in three parliaments for the borough of Leiceſter, 1768, 1774, and 1780, with great honour to himſelf, and highly to the ſatisfaction of his conſtituents.

The manſion-houſe at Bradgate was built principally of brick. It was a ſquare, with four turrets, one at each corner. Four diſtinct views of it (one taken by Kyp in the laſt century, and another by Mr. Pridden in 1793 in exactly the ſame point of view,) are given in Plates XC. XCI.

The vaults, or cellars, are overgrown with nettles and alder; but veſtiges of the kitchen, with three ovens, may ſtill be traced. The garden-walls alſo are in great part remaining, as is the terrace within.

A little ſtream runs by the ſide of the garden; near which ſtand ſome beautiful old cheſnut-trees, which (particularly when in bloom) give the whole an air of grandeur. The pleaſure-grounds are eaſily diſtinguiſhable; and, though they have now ſomewhat the appearance of a wilderneſs, yet they ſtrongly indicate that once, where the nettle and the thiſtle now reign in peace, the roſe and the lily ſprang luxuriantly.

